At the outset the learned counsel, who appeared for the convicts belonging to the Darhal party, raised an objection that the trial in this case was conducted by the learned Sessions Judge in a manner which is not warranted by law and that in consequence his clients have been seriously prejudiced. What appears to have happened is this. Ostensibly two separate trials were held in respect of the accused of each party. The trial of the accused of the Darhal party was held first. After the entire evidence against them had been recorded by the learned Sessions Judge the assessors apparently desired that they would like to hear the evidence in the cross-case before giving their opinion in the case in which the evidence had been recorded. The Sessions Judge considered this request to be reasonable and directed that the case be put up with the cross-case and that the opinion of the assessors be recorded after the evidence in that case had been heard. He thereupon proceeded to record the evidence in the cross-case and then heard the arguments in both the cases, and thereafter recorded the opinion of the assessors and then proceeded to judgment. He wrote one judgment in both the cases and an examination thereof shows that he did not keep the evidence recorded in each case separate but made use of the evidence recorded in the cross-case in arriving at his conclusions about the matters in controversy between the parties in the first case. (The judgment then described the irregularities by quoting from Session Judge's judgment and proceeded.) It will thus be observed that the learned Sessions Judge has committed several irregularities. In deciding one case he has not only used the evidence led in the other case and which was not recorded in the presence of the accused, but has contravened the express provisions of 28. 16, Criminal P. C., which prohibit the use of the statements made before the Investigating Police Officers except in the limited purpose of contradicting the testimony of the prosecution witnesses produced at the trial: He has used the statements made during the investigation and proved in the cross case as substantive evidence in the first case. There is absolutely no sanction in law for such a procedure. The opinion of the assessors was influenced by material which could not be legally considered at all and the conclusions of the learned Sessions Judge are based on irrelevant and inadmissible evidence. The contention of the learned counsel, therefore, has force that his clients have been seriously prejudiced by the manner in which the learned Sessions Judge has dealt with the case.

In the present case there are graver irregularities than existed in Allu v. Emperor (1) where the trials of the accused in two cross-cases were held to be illegal and the cases remanded for fresh trial. What happened in these cases was that, after the prosecution evidence in one case had been finished, the accused and their counsel stated that they wanted the prosecution witnesses in the cross cases treated as defence witnesses in their case. Then the cross-case was taken up and after the prosecution evidence had been recorded the accused in that case were asked whether they wanted to call witnesses for defence, they said, no, but added that they wanted the evidence of three prosecution witnesses in the other case to be treated as defence evidence in their case. The arguments were then heard and after the opinions of the assessors had been recorded judgment was pronounced. Fforde, J., expressed himself as follows as to the manner in which those trials were conducted :

> In my opinion the procedure adopted in the cases before us is wholly unauthorized by law in several particulars. In the first place, though the two sets of accused were intended to have been tried separately—as in law they were bound to be—the mode in which they were actually tried was in substance a joint trial. Only prosecution evidence appears on each record ; speeches of counsel were reserved till the close of both cases, the assessors were not asked to give their findings until both cases had been closed, and only one set of findings was recorded in respect of both and, finally, one composite judgment was delivered.

(1) A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 104=4 Lah. 376.

In all penal matters the utmost strictness in procedure must be observed. Where the mode in which a criminal trial is to be conducted is, as it is in India, regulated by Statute, a departure from the authorized procedure can itself only be sanctioned by a statutory provision. There is no such sanction for any of the illegalities which have taken place in the course of the trial of these two cases.

Finally the learned Judge held that the trials being prohibited in the mode in which they were conducted were, therefore, illegal. These observations apply with greater force to the circumstances of the present case because a procedure somewhat similar to that in the reported case was adopted therein with this difference that in the present case there is not even the consent of the accused and the counsel to the unauthorized procedure and use has been made as substantive evidence of statements made before the Investigating Police Officers.

Reference may also be made to Madat Khan v. Emperor (2) in which their Lordships of the Privy Council advised His Majesty that special leave to appeal should be granted because of the apprehension that it might turn out that evidence which was given in one trial had been improperly imported into a quite separate trial. In that case there were two separate trials in two cross cases but they were dealt with in one judgment by the appellate Court. When the case was finally discussed before the Judicial Committee on its merits it turned out that the apprehension mentioned above was not well-founded because in spite of there being one judgment in two cases the appellate Court had kept the evidence in both separate and it did not appear that the evidence recorded in one case was used as evidence in the other. The appeal was finally dismissed by their Lordships but the reasons given for granting special leave to appeal show that if the apprehension alluded to above had turned out to be well-founded the convictions would probably have been set aside.

In my opinion, therefore, the manner in which the learned Sessions Judge has dealt with the two cases is not warranted by any sanction of law and the trials in these cases were illegal. I would, therefore, accept these appeals, set aside the convictions of the appellants in both cases and order a re-trial of the appellants in the manner provided by law.

I wish to make it clear that this order does not authorize the re-trial of those of the accused, who have been acquitted by the Sessions Judge.

Fforde, J.—I agree.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 133 of 1928, Decided on 13th April 1928, from order of First Class Magistrate, Lahore, D/- 6th January 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 342—Examination of accused after examination of some only of the prosecution witnesses is not illegal.

Where the Magistrate examined the accused at length after only some of the witnesses for the prosecution were examined, but it was not proved that any prejudice was caused to the accused.

Held : that the procedure though irregular was not illegal. [P 385 C 2]

* (b) Criminal P. C., S. 342—Non-compliance with second part of S. 342 (1) is serious illegality vitiating the trial.

Noncompliance with the mandatory provisions of the second part of Cl. (1), S. 342, requiring that the Magistrate shall question the accused generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called upon for his defence, is a serious illegality sufficient to vitiate the trial, at any rate from the stage at which the accused should have been so examined. [P 386 C 1]

* (c) Evidence Act, Ss. 14 and 15 — Evidence of collateral facts—Principles explained —Charge under S. 409, Penal Code for embezzling specific sums—Evidence of embezzling other sums is not admissible.

It is settled law that under neither of Ss. 14 and 15 can the evidence on facts similar to but not part of the same transaction as the main fact be received for the purpose of proving the occurrence of the main fact, which must be established by evidence directly bearing on it. But when the existence of that fact has been so established and a question arises as to the state of mind of the person who did it, or whether the act in question was done accidentially or with a particular knowledge or intention, evidence of similar acts may, under certain conditions, be admitted. S. 14 is wholly inapplicable to a case where the state of mind or feeling of the accused is not a fact in issue or a relevant fact, and the guilt or innocence depends on proof of actual facts : 6 Cal. 655 : 42 Cal. 957 ; 47 Cal. 671 (*F. Where the accused was charged under S. 409, Penal Code, for embezzling three specific sums,

Held : that evidence of collateral offences in respect of other sums was not admissible. [P 387 C 1]

(d) Criminal P. C., S. 423—Charge of criminal breach of trust—Altering the conviction on appeal to abetment of the offence is unfair.

If in the case of a breach of trust where proof of abetment differs from proof of substantive offence in material particulars, of the attention of the accused is not directed at the time of framing the charges or during the trial to the fact that he might have to meet a charge of abetment, it would be highly unfair for the High Court on appeal to alter the conviction to one of abetment. [P 390 C 1]

Where the offence of embezzlement was ex-hypothesi complete long before, anything done subsequently to help the real offender to conceal the embezzlement might be punishable under some other section but does not amount to abetment of the offence under S. 409 : A. I. R. 1921 Pat. 286, Ref. [P 390 C 2]

(f) Penal Code, S. 409—Criminal misappropriation—Prosecution must prove that money was paid in trust and that it was not so applied.

In cases of criminal misappropriation the onus lies on the prosecution to prove not only that money was paid to the accused in trust but also that he did not apply it for the purpose for which it was given : Ratan Lal, U. R. Cr. C. 872 and 860, Rel. on. [P 392 C 1]

(g) Evidence — Inculpatory facts must be shown to be incompatible with the innocence of the accussd in order to convict him on circumstantial evidence.

In order to infer guilt from the circumstantial evidence it must be shown that the inculpatory facts are incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. [P 392 C 2]

Judgment.—M. L. Pritchard, Deputy Assistant Engineer, who was the officer-in-charge of the Telegraph Stores Depot Mughalpura (Lahore) in 1924-26, Abdul Aziz, Store-Keeper, and Tirath Ram, Clerk in the same Depot, were tried at one joint trial by Mr. Phailbus, Magistrate, First Class (with enhanced powers) Lahore, under S. 409, I. P. C., for having committed criminal breach of trust in respect of the following three sums which, it was alleged, they had received for credit to Government Funds but which instead of depositing in the Imperial Bank of India in the account of the Depot, they had misappropriated :

(a) Rs. 162 received from Messrs. Pokhar Das & Sons, Lahore, on 18th October 1924 ;

(b) Rs. 1,745-9-0 received from Messrs. K. L. Wadi. Lahore, on 9th December 1924, and

(c) Rs. 846 received from Messrs. K. L. Wadhi, Lahore, on 12th August 1925.

The learned Magistrate has found all the charges proved against the three appellants and has sentenced each of them to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two years and pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 under each charge, the sentences of imprisonment to run consecutively. As every one of the convicts had been, in the aggregate, sentenced to imprisonment for six years and a fine of Rs. 3,000 he had a right of appeal direct to this Court. The three convicts have accordingly preferred separate appeals (Criminal Appeals Nos. 73,83 and 133 of 1928) but as they arise from the same judgment, I have heard them together and shall dispose of them in one judgment.

Before dealing with the merits of the case in respect of the three specific items for embezzling which the appellants have been found guilty, I propose to set out a few preliminary facts, and to discuss and decide certain legal points on which there has been much argument before me.

During the period with which we are concerned (October 1924 to April 1926) the staff of the Telegraph Stores Depot at Mughalpura consisted of Pritchard (appellant in Cr. A. No. 133 of 1928) as the officer-in-charge, Abdul Aziz (appellant in Cr. A. No. 83 of 1928) as Store keeper and three permanent Clerks, Tirath Ram (appellant in Cr. A. No. 73 of 1928), Mohammad Umar (P. W. 3) and Muhammad Qazim (P. W. 6) a Chaprasi Ghulam Dastgir and a few labourers. In addition to these persons Mohammad Munir (D. W. 7) also appears to have worked as a temporary clerk for some time. In the Depot there used to be kept a large quantity of Telegraph stores, as it was the distributing centre for the Punjab. Out of these stores serviceable articles could be bought by private individuals with the sanction of the higher authorities at Calcutta, payments for which were to be made to the officer in charge, who was also authorized to sell unserviceable stores by public auction under certain prescribed conditions. Elaborate rules had been framed and directions sent from the Head Office at Calcutta for maintaining the cash book and other registers and for submission of returns and it was provided that all moneys received were to be deposited in the Imperial Bank of India.

On 16th December 1926, the police challaned under S. 409, I. P. C., five persons namely, the three appellants, P. W. 2 Harsaran Das, son of Bhagwan Das, of Kucha Missar Beliram, and one Rahmat Ullah, son of Din Mohammad, of Mohalla Kundigaran, Lahore, on the allegation that the three appellants had received on behalf of Government Rs. 12,300-1-9 as the price of Government stores sold to private individuals directly or through public auctioneers but had misappropriated the same, and that Ramsaran Das and Rahmat Ullah aforesaid had abetted this unlawful act of the appellants. A list of 53 witnesses, whom the prosecution intended to produce at the trial, was attached to the challan. The five persons aforesaid were in due course produced before the Additional District Magistrate but he transferred the case for trial to the Court of Mr. Phailbus, Magistrate First Class. On 7th February 1927, the Public Prosecutor stated that he intended to proceed in this case against three persons only viz: Pritchard, Abdul Aziz and Tirath Ram appellants in respect of the sum of Rs. 11,309-13-6 alleged to have been misappropriated between 13th October 1924 and 5th April 1926, and that separate challans regarding the embezzlement of the remaining sum of Rs. 990-4-3 would be sent up against Ramsaran Das and Rahmat Ullah and certain other persons. Accordingly the Magistrate discharged Ramsaran Das and Rahmat Ullah and proceeded to try the case against Pritchard, Abdul Aziz and Tirath Ram. The sum of Rs. 11,309-13-6 which the Public Prosecutor proposed to prove in this trial as having been embezzled by the appellants, comprised thirteen items, alleged to have been received on different occasions as follows:

No.	Date.	Amount. Rs. a. p.	Person who paid the money.
1	13th October 1924	162 0 0	Puran Chand of Pokhar Das and sons.
2	10th December 1924	1,745 9 0	Wadhi.
3	12th August 1925	846 0 0	Wadhi.
4	12th November 1925	752 13 6	Wadhi.
5	17th December 1925	1,000 0 0	Pokhar Das.
6	25th May 1925	2,000 0 0	Wadhi.
7	1st June 1925	123 12 0	Wadhi.
8	28th July 1925	1,800 0 0	Wadhi.
9	21st December 1925	363 3 0	Wadhi.
10	5th April 1926	900 0 0	Wadhi.
11	19th January 1926	561 5 0	Ramsaran Das.
12	23rd January 1926	500 0 0	Ramsaran Das.
13	22nd February 1926	553 3 0	Kirpa Ram, Secretary M. C. Hoshiarpur.

After the evidence of only six witnesses for the prosecution had been recorded, the Magistrate on 7th March 1927, proceeded to examine the accused Pritchard and continued his examination for three days which covers 16 pages of closely typed matter. He then examined Abdul Aziz accused on the 10th, and Tirath Ram accused on the four succeeding days. Tirath' Ram's statement also extends over 14 typed pages of the record. At the next hearing the Public Prosecutor resumed the examination of the remaining witnesses for the prosecution and by the 22nd July the evidence of nine more witnesses (P. Ws. 7-15) was recorded. On that date the Magistrate noted that Asaf Ali Sub-Inspector whom the Public Prosecutor wanted to produce was absent. He accordingly put further questions to the accused in respect of the evidence which had been led till that time and after recording their answers adjourned the case to 15th August 1927. On that date also Asaf Ali did not appear again and the Public Prosecutor produced D. S. P. Morris (P. W. 16) at the conclusion of whose evidence the three accused were again questioned generally as to the evidence produced against them and they replied that they had nothing further to add to their former statements. Thereupon the Magistrate on 29th August 1927, framed three charges under S. 409, I. P. C., against the three appellants jointly for having received and misappropriated the sums of Rs. 162, 1,745-9-0 and 846 being the first three of the 13 items comprising Rs. 11,309-13-6 which were alleged by the prosecution at the commencement of the trial to have been embezzled.

The accused, having pleaded not guilty, recalled most of the prosecution witnesses for re-cross-examination, which continued till the 18th November 1927. On that date also Asaf Ali Sub-Inspector, was absent and the case was adjourned to 21st November 1927. Asaf Ali at last appeared on 21st and was examined and cross-examined on that and the following day and at the conclusion of his evidence the Magistrate recorded that the prosecution was closed and that the accused have nothing to add to their previous statements. They however, wish to produce defence.

After several witnesses for the defence had been examined and arguments heard, judgment was announced on 6th January 1928, the concluding portion of which runs as follows:

There is no evidence as to how the money was divided between themselves but the prosecution has proved that all three accused did embezzle not only the amounts of which they stand charged but ten other items also. I have no hesitation in finding them all guilty, and convict them of offences punishable under S. 409, I. P. C., as regards all three heads, and taking into consideration that about Rs. 12,000 have been embezzled I order that Pritchard, Abdul Aziz and Tirath Ram undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of two years each under each head The sentences to run consecutively. They shall also pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 each under each head making a total of Rs. 3,000 and in default shall undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of six months each under each head.

To the procedure followed at the trial exception has been taken by Mr. Moti Sagar, counsel for the appellant Pritchard on two grounds. Firstly it has been contended that the learned Magistrate ought not to have examined the accused at such great length after only six witnesses for the prosecution had been examined and a large part of the evidence still remained to be recorded. The learned counsel suggested that the lengthy examination of the accused Pritchard and Tirath Ram at that stage was in the nature of cross-examination and was intended to ascertain beforehand their defence so as to enable the prosecu- to mould the rest of their evidence in the light of the admissions made; and he argued that this procedure was wholly illegal being contrary to the letter and spirit of S. 342, Criminal P. C., and has materially prejudiced the accused. Sir Abdul Qadir and Mr. Ram Lal Anand, who appeared respectively for the other appellants Abdul Aziz and Tirath Ram, while agreeing that the Magistrate ought not to have examined the accused at the stage at and in the manner in which they were examined took up the position that this was an immaterial irregularity which cannot and does not vitiate the trial. Mr. Raj Krishna for the Crown strenuously urged, on the other hand, that the provisions of S. 342 had not been contravened in any way and that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was neither illegal nor irregular. After fully considering the arguments addressed to me by the learned counsel and carefully scrutinizing the relevant portions of the record I am of opinion that though the Magistrate would have been well-advised in not examining the accused at this stage, his procedure was not illegal and Mr. Moti Sagar's contention that the entire proceedings be quashed and a retrial ordered must be overruled. Of the first six witnesses, who had been examined for the prosecution before the examination of the accused on 7th March, Mohammad Umar (P. W. 4) had given evidence to prove a large number of entries in the cash book at the Depot showing receipt of the 13 items mentioned in the challan and had also deposed as to a large number of books and documents in the handwriting of one or the other of the accused and Tola Ram (P. W. 6) treasury clerk had stated that these sums were not entered as having been received in the books of the Treasury. In addition to this, other witnesses had given further evidence bearing on items alleged to have been embezzled.

In these circumstances the Magistrate was entitled under S. 342 to put such questions to the accused as he considered necessary for the purpose of enabling them to explain the circumstances which appeared against them in the evidence which had been led up to that time. It is no doubt true that the examination of the accused extended over several days and occupied a large number of closely typed pages of the record, but it appears that most, if not all, of the questions put by the Magistrate to each accused related to the documents with reference to which Mohammad Umar had given evidence and it was in answer to these questions that the accused Pritchard and Tirath Ram instead of admitting or denying their handwriting, gave lengthy answers and volunteered detailed explanations with regard to the subject-matter of each entry. The examination of the record indicates that it was not the nature of the questions but the length and prolixity of the answers given by these two accused which were responsible for the long duration of the examination. It is also significant that though the accused were represented by experienced counsel at the trial, no objection to this procedure was taken at the time and further this point was not raised in any of the memoranda of appeal filed in this Court. Indeed, Mr. Moti Sagar himself did not take up this point till the very close of his opening address and even at that time he argued it in a faint-hearted manner. It was only in his final reply that the learned counsel laid much stress on the point, and at that stage too, counsel for the other two appellants did not join with him in pressing it. As however, the objection if substantiated, would have vitiated the whole trial, I allowed it to be fully argued. It has not been indicated that the prosecution were able to take improper advantage of the statements made by the accused or that prejudice was actually caused to any of the appellants. In these circumstances I am of opinion that the objection is devoid of all force and I overrule it.

The second contention raised by Mr. Moti Sagar (in which again Sir Abdul Qadir and Mr. Ram Lal Anand did not join him) is that the mandatory provisions of the second part of Cl. (1), S. 342, requiring that the Magistrate shall question the accused generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called upon for his defence, were not complied with. This objection, if established, would disclose a serious illegality sufficient to vitiate the trial, at any rate from the stage at which the accused should have been so examined. The facts bearing on this point have been set out in detail above, from which it will appear that in addition to the statements which the accused made in answer to the questions put by the Court on 7th March 1927, they were examined on 22nd July 1927, and after the evidence of (P. W. 16) Morris, had been recorded on 15th August the Magistrate questioned them generally as to the evidence produced against them and they stated that they had nothing further to add to their former statements. Charges were then framed against them and after the prosecution witnesses had been re-cross-examined and the last witness Asaf Ali (P. W. 17) Sub-Inspector examined, the accused are recorded to have stated evidently in answer to questions put by the Magistrate, that they had nothing more to add to their previous statements, but wanted to produce evidence in defence. It is no doubt true that this answer is recorded in the indirect form of narration, but in my opinion this does not affect the question. I have no manner of doubt that after the prosecution witnesses had been cross-examined and the evidence of Asaf Ali concluded the Magistrate did ask the accused generally about the case and they replied that they had nothing more to add to the very lengthy and detailed statements which they had already made on three different occasions. The learned counsel for both parties have drawn my attention to a number of rulings, which disclose a serious conflict of judicial opinion on the question whether "examination" in this part of S. 342 means examination-in-chief, or it also includes the further cross-examination and re-examination of the witnesses. I do not, however, think it necessary to decide which of these rival views is sound, as I am of opinion, that even if the latter view is correct the provisions of this section were substantially complied within this case. The objection fails and must be overruled.

Mr. Moti Sagar's third point, which has been strongly pressed by counsel for the other appellants as well is, however, much more substantial. As already stated the appellants were charged with having embezzled three specific items of Rs. 162, Rs. 1,745-9-0 and 846 only but at the trial the prosecution led evidence relating to alleged embezzlements of 10 other items (No. 4-13 of the list given above). The learned Magistrate in his judgment has discussed this evidence and recorded definite findings that the appellants had committed criminal breach of trust in respect of these 10 items also and as will have been seen from the concluding portion of this judgment cited above, he has taken this fact into consideration in basing the conviction and in passing heavy sentences on them. Appellants' counsel have contended that this evidence was inadmissible and irrelevant and ought not to have been allowed to go on the record, and in any case it ought not to have been used against them in the manner in which it has been done by the Magistrate. Mr. Raj Krishna for the Crown, in the very able argument which he addressed to me on the point, has very fairly and properly conceded that he cannot defend the action of the learned Magistrate in definitely finding the appellants guilty in respect of the items which were not included in the indictment, or in taking these findings into consideration in passing the sentences. But he has argued that the evidence was admissible under Ss. 14 and 15, Evidence Act. It is however, settled law that under neither of these sections can the evidence of facts similar to but not part of the same transaction as the main fact be received for the purpose of proving the occurrence of the main fact, which must be established by evidence directly bearing on it. But when the existence of that fact has been so established and a question arises as to the state of mind of the person who did it, or whether the act in question was done accidentally or with a particular knowledge or intention that evidence of similar acts may, under certain conditions, be admitted. S. 14 provides that :

facts showing the existence of any state of mind * * * * are relevant, when the existence of any such state of mind * * * * * * is in issue or relevant.

As pointed out by Garth, C. J., in the leading case Empress v. Vyapuri Moodaliar (1) ;

Section 14 seems to me to apply to that class of cases where a particular act is more or less criminal according to the state of mind or feeling of the person who does it ; as for instance in actions for slander or false imprisonment or malicious prosecution, where malice is one of the main igredients in the wrong which is charged, evidence is admissible to show that the defendant was actuated by spite or enmity against the plaintiff. But I think we must be very careful not to extend the operation of the section to other cases where the question of the guilt or innocence depends on actual facts and not upon the state of a man's mind or feeling. We have no right to prove that a man committed theft or any other crime on one occasion by showing that he committed similar crimes on other occasions.

Applying this test, it must be held that S. 14 is wholly inapplicable to the present case, as here the state of mind or feeling of, any of the appellants is admittedly not a fact in issue or a relevant fact, and the guilt or innocence depends on proof of actual facts.

Let us now refer to S. 15 which runs as follows :

When there is a question whether an act was accidental or intentional or done with a particular knowledge or intention the fact that such act formed part of a series of similar occurrences in each of which the person doing the act was concerned is relevant.

It will be seen that under this section, the prosecution cannot use the evidence as to the commission of other acts of a similar nature in proof of the existence of the specific acts which form the subject matter of the charge. But when the existence of these acts has been established by evidence aliunde and the only question which remains to be decided is whether they were done accidentally or intentionally or with a particular knowledge or intention, then and then only could the evidence of other similar acts be let in, provided :

(a) it was shown that such acts were of the same specific kind, and

(b) they formed part of a series of occurrences in each of which the person committing the act was concerned. S. 15 embodies a well-established rule of the English law of evidence which has been thus enunciated by Lord Herschell, Lord Chancellor, in the well-known case of Makin v. Attorney General for New South Wales (2).

In their Lordships' opinion the principles which must govern the decision of the case are clear, though the application of them is by no means free from difficulty. It is undoubtedly not competent for the prosecution to adduce evidence tending to show that the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment, for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that the accused is a person likely from his criminal conduct or character to have committed the offence for which he is being tried. On the other hand, the mere fact that the evidence adduced tends to show the commission of other crimes does not render it inadmissible if it be relevant to an issue before the jury, and it may be so relevant if it bears upon the question whether the acts alleged to constitute the crime charged in the indictment were designed or accidental, or to rebut a defence which would otherwise be open to the accused.

The question has been considered at length by Mookerji, J. in Amrit Lal Hazra v. Emperor (3), and by a Full Bench of the same Court in Emperor v.

Panchu Das (4), in the former of which the rule is formulated in the following terms :

Facts similar to but not part of the same transaction as the main fact, are not, in general admissible to prove either the occurrence of the main fact or the identity of its author. But evidence of similar facts although in general inadmissible to prove the main fact or the connexion of the parties therewith, is receivable after evidence aliunde on these points has been given to show the state of mind of the parties with regard to such fact ; in other words, evidence of similar facts may be received to prove a party's knowledge of the nature of the main fact or transaction, or his intent with respect thereto. In general, whenever it is necessary to rebut even by anticipation, the defence of accident, mistake, or other innocent condition of mind, evidence that the defendant has been concerned in a systematic course of conduct of the same specific kind as that in question may be given. To admit evidence under this head, however, the other acts tendered must be of the same specific kind as that in question or not of a different character, and the acts tendered must also have been proximate in point of time to that in question.

An illustration of the kind of cases in which such evidence can be admitted is Girdhari Lal v. Crown (5), where the accused had been charged under S. 420, I. P. C., for having received from the two complainants certain sums of money on false pretences that he had been authorised to recruit unskilled labour for service in Africa and that on payment of certain fees he would be able to engage them for service in that country. The prosecution alleged that the accused had not been given any such authority to recruit and that the whole of his recruiting business was bogus and fraudulent. The accused admitted having received this sum of money but alleged that he had done so honestly and not with any fraudulent intention. To rebut this defence the prosecution was allowed to show that in the course of this sham business the accused had defrauded other persons from whom he had received sums of money on false pretences of a similar kind. It should be noted that this evidence was not admitted to prove the receipt of the money from the complainant which fact had indeed been admitted by the accused but to determine the sole question which required decision there whether he had received the money with an honest or a fraudulent intention. Another case of the same kind is Reg v. Richardson (6), in which the indictment charged the person with having embezzled three sums of £ 2 each, the money of his employer. After evidence had been given relating to these sums it was proposed to lead evidence of other items which were also alleged to have been embezzled, to show that if it should be contended that the sum charged in the indictment were the subject of a mistake in keeping of the account, there being many other sums unaccounted for, admission of evidence relating to these sums would assist the jury as to what value to attach to that suggestion. It is obvious that the facts of both these cases were wholly dissimilar from those of the present but it is important to note that in each of them it was held that the evidence of the alleged collateral offences could not be treated as substantive evidence of the offences charged in the indictment. In both of them the factum of the receipt of the money had been admitted by the accused ; and the sole question for determination in the former was whether the money had been received with a fraudulent or an innocent intention and in the latter whether money admittedly received and still in the possession of the accused had not been accounted for by mistake or oversight, and it was for this limited purpose that the evidence of collateral facts which formed part of a series of acts of the same specific kind was received.

It is conceded that in the present case the controversy centres round matters of fact as to receipt or retention of three specific sums, and no question of the kind mentioned in Ss. 14 and 15 arises or has been argued before me. I must, therefore, hold that the evidence of the alleged collateral offences, was erroneously admitted and ought to be left out of consideration.

Excluding the evidence which I have held to be inadmissible, let us now see if the prosecution have succeeded in establishing the guilt of one or more of the appellants in respect of the three sums in question. In determining this question it must again be borne in mind that the appellants were not indicted for conspiracy to commit criminal breach of trust nor for abetment of the acts of each other but each one of them was charged for and has been found guilty of having himself committed three substantive offences. Accordingly the prosecution must establish against each of them the essential ingredients of the offence, namely :

(i) that he was entrusted with each of the specific sums in question ;

(ii) that he misappropriated it or converted it to his own use ;

(iii) that such misappropriation or conversion was in violation of (a) any direction of law prescribing the mode in which such trust was to be discharged, or (b) any legal contract, express or implied which he had made touching the discharge of such trust, or that he wilfully suffered some other person to do as above.

After a careful scrutiny of the evidence I have no hesitation in saying that the prosecution have failed to establish the first of these essential points against both Abdul Aziz and Tirath Ram. It is admitted that under the rules as well as according to the "duty list" (Ex. P. 9) submitted by the officer in charge of the Depot to the Controller of Telegraph Stores, Alipore, on 15th May 1924, it was not the duty of either of these appellants to deal with cash. On the other hand, the amount received in cash, the cash book and the cheque book were to be kept by the officer in charge in an iron safe fixed in the wall of his room. All cash was to be received and payments made by him personally and he was responsible for depositing the amounts received in the Imperial Bank of India to the Credit of the Stores Depot. Abdul Aziz was store keeper and Tirath Ram dealt with the "general" and "account" correspondence and assisted the officer in charge in such work as was assigned to him. It was not, therefore, a part of the duties officially assigned to Abdul Aziz and Tirath Ram to receive cash or deposit it in Bank. So far as the three items in question are concerned, it was admitted by the learned counsel for the Crown before me that they are proved to have been received by Pritchard. The evidence on the point is conclusive and is to the effect that

(a) Rupees 162 was delivered to Pritchard on 13th October 1924, by a chaprasi sent by Puran Chand, Accountant of Messrs. Pokhar Das and Sons, who had purchased 18¾ poles from the Store at Mughalpura with the permission of the Calcutta authorities.

(b) Rupees 1745-9-0 had been brought on 9th December 1924, in cash by Tirath Ram from Messrs. Wadhi and Co. who had auctioned certain unserviceable stores on 20th October 1924, and that this sum was actually paid by Tirath Ram to Pritchard.

(c) Rupees 846 was actually paid by Wadhi to Pritchard in the office on 12th August 1925, as part-payment of the sale proceeds of unserviceable articles auctioned by him on 20th July 1925.

Pritchard's defence is that after receiving each of these sums he made it over to Tirath Ram to be deposited in the Bank and that he does not know what happened to the money thereafter.

Taking the case of Abdul Aziz first, it will be seen that there is no allegation much less proof that any of the sums in question was ever entrusted to him or he had any dominion over it. The learned Magistrate has mentioned four points as indicating his guilt.

(a) His failure to keep a certain register (Ex. P. L.) relating to sales of serviceable stores which he was directed to keep as far back as September 1923 It is conceded that this register had nothing to do with the receipt or disposal of cash and even if it had been properly maintained, it would not have thrown any light on the misappropriation of the sale price of the articles actually sold. Abdul Aziz's conduct might be punishable departmentally but this circumstance has no probative value as proving his guilt.

(b) Delay on his part in sending to Calcutta the "Store Voucher" (Ex. P. E. E.) relating to the first sale which he sent on 8th October 1924, instead of 4th. I fail to see how his omission to send the voucher till 8th October could prove his having misappropriated the money, which was actually received in the office by Pritchard five days later.

His writing the letter (Ex. P. A. 1) which was signed by Pritchard, to Pokhar Das and Sons, that the cheque for Rs. 162 formerly sent by them had been lost and that a new cheque be sent. In my opinion this latter indicates his innocence rather than guilty knowledge.

(d) His not preparing the sale accounts relating to 2nd and 3rd items. But it is admitted by D. W. 16 H. P. Catterji, Head Clerk, Telegraph Stores, Calcutta, and is proved by other evidence also that it was not Abdul Aziz's duty to do this.

Mr. Raj Krishna admitted his inability to support his conviction on the second and third charges. I find the evidence on the record insufficient to connect this appellant with the alleged embezzlement and I hold that he has been wrongly convicted and acquit him.

Coming now to the case against Tirath Ram the first question is whether he was entrusted with any one or more of of the sums in question (After considering evidence His Lordship proceeded). The result is that there is no reliable, direct or circumstantial evidence on the record from which it may be inferred that the appellant Tirath Ram was entrusted with any of the sums in question or that any portion thereof ever passed into his possession. The first element necessary to establish the charge against him is thus lacking and consequently it must be held that he had been erroneously convicted under S. 409.

Mr. Raj Krishna while practically conceding that Tirath Ram could not be held guilty of the substantive offence of criminal breach of trust has, however, argued that there are sufficient materials on the record to establish a charge of abetment against him and this Court must on appeal alter the conviction accordingly. I have fully considered this argument but find myself unable to accept it. In the first place it must be borne in mind that in a case like this, proof of abetment of the offence of criminal breach of trust must necessarily differ in several material particulars from proof of the substantive offence; and the attention of the appellant not having been directed at the time of framing the charges or during the trial to the fact that he might have to meet a charge of abetment it will be highly unfair for this Court on appeal to alter the conviction, as suggested. Secondly. I do not think that the circumstances on which counsel for the Crown relies are legally sufficient to bring the acts of the appellant within the definitlon of "abetment" as given in S. 107, I. P. C. There is no proof that he instigated Pritchard or any person to commit criminal breach of trust or that he engaged with any one in any conspiracy for doing so, or intentionally aided by any act or illegal omission the commission of such offence.

As regards the first item of Rs. 162, the mere fact that he is the scribe of the receipt for the amount, which was signed by Pritchard, or that he made an entry in the cash book, is no proof of his having abetted the offence, and Mr. Raj Krishna has frankly admitted that the suggestion of Prichard's counsel that it was Tirath Ram and not Pritchard who sent the telephonic message received by Puran Chand of Messrs. Pokhar Das and Sons to send the money in cash instead of by cheque, cannot be supported on the evidence It was, however, strenuously urged that several weeks after the receipt of the money by Pritchard this appellant prepared the Primary Abstract of sales (Ex. P. R. / 2) for submission to Calcutta from which the item of Rs. 162- was omitted, while it was included in the office copy (Ex. P. R. 2 / A.) These documents are in the handwriting of Tirath Ram but are signed and certified to be correct by Pritchard. At the trial Tirath Ram stated that he worte them at the dictation of Pritchard and declared that he was not responsible for the omission. On the other hand Pritchard stated that the documents had been written by Tirath Ram and he signed them without verifying their contents. It is not necessary for me to decide as to which of these versions is correct, for even if Tirath Ram's explanation be incorrect, there can be no doubt that the wrong entry made several weeks after the alleged embezzlement would not make Tirath Ram guilty of abetment of the offence of embezzlement. At worst, he would be an "accessory after the fact", and as such, not punishable under the Indian law. The offence of embezzlement was ex-hypothesi complete long before and anything done subsequently to help the real offender to conceal the embezzlement might be punishable under some other sections but does not amount to abetment of the effence under S. 409. Reference may in this connexion be made to a Division Bench decision of the Patna High Court in Hazari Lal v. Emperor (7) where the question is discussed in detail.

The same considerations apply mutatis mutandis to the second item of Rs.

(7) A. I. R. 1921 Patna 286.

1745-9-0 as the fact that Tirath Ram brought the sum of Rs. 1745-9-0 in cash from Wadhi and paid it to Pritchard does not in any way incriminate him. Nor does his subsequent conduct in not making correct entries in the sale-account (Ex. P. C. C.) dated 21st January 1925, and in the Primary Abstract dated 3rd January 1925, several weeks after the alleged embezzlement amount to abetment for reasons already given.

So also with regard to the third item of Rs. 846- which was received by Pritchard on 12th August 1925, no inference against Tirath Ram can be drawn from the fact that he is the scribe of the receipt which was duly signed by Pritchard as the officer in charge. In regard to the Primary Abstract (Ex. P. W.) and the office copy (P. W. 1) my attention was drawn to certain entries in them, which had been written over or scored out in such a manner that the figures subsequently entered appeared to be short of those originally written by Rs. 846- It was urged that these corrections were, made by Tirath Ram and are initialled by him. Of these documents, however, Tirath Ram only admitted one (Ex. P.W. 1) to be in his handwriting, but denied that the corrections were made by him or bear his initials. He did not admit Ex. P. W. to be in his handwriting. Both these documents seem to have been sent during the police investigation to the Government of India Expert for Questioned Documents and he was one of the persons included in the original list of 53 witnesses, whom it was intended to produce at the trial, but for some reasons which have not been explained, neither he nor any other expert was produced to prove that the entries denied by Tirath Ram were in his handwriting. The evidence of Mohammad Ummar (P. W. 3) on which the learned counsel for the Crown sought to rely is highly unsatisfactory. He did not claim to be an expert but gave evidence because of his alleged familiarity with the handwriting of Tirath Ram. This witness, however, appears to have been throughout biased against him, and in one case at least it has been proved that he wrongly stated that a document (Ex P. 01) was in Tirath Ram's handwriting whereas later on he himself admitted that it was not so but had really been written by Pritchard. I must, therefore hold that the circumstances relied upon by Mr. Raj Krishna are wholly insufficient to hold Tirath Ram guilty of abetment.

Coming now to the case against Pritchard, I may say at once that the evidence on the record fully establishes that he received the three sums in question for credit to Government Funds and that under the rules it was his duty to remit them to the Imperial Bank for credit to Government Funds. It has, therefore, been satisfactorily established that he was entrusted with the moneys. The evidence relating to this point has already been dircussed in detail above and it is not necessary to repeat it. The question, however, is whether the prosecution has succeeded in establishing the second point necessary to support a conviction for criminal breach of trust against him viz : that he misappropriated the moneys or converted them to his own use. In this connexion the first thing that was necessary to prove was that these items had not been paid into the Imperial Bank, as they should have been under the rules. But it is significant that though the list of witnesses attached to the challan included three persons from the Imperial Bank, namely, Mr. Isles, the Agent. Bhagat Ram, Clerk and the Cashier of the Bank, none of them was produced at the trial. The only Bank clerk produced was P. W. 15, Banwari Lal Saksena but he stated nothing as to the non-receipt of the sums in question by the Bank. His evidence related to the fact that the seals on four receipts, Exs. P. W. W. W., P. Z. Z, Z., P. 4 and P. 7 were not genuine. None of these receipts has anything to do with the items which were the subject-matter of the charge. The facts that the sums in question were not received in the Imperial Bank could have been easily proved by the examination of the books of the Bank, but no effort was made to send for them. Further Mr. Isles the Agent was examined as a defence witness (D. W. 15) on behalf of Pritchard when he deposed as to certain incidents which took place before him on 21st April 1926, in the presence of Pritchard and Tirath Ram, but as they relate to a matter which is said to be subject matter of another criminal prosecution against some of the appellants and do not seem to have any direct bearing on the present case I do not think it proper to discuss his evidence. It is sufficient to say that though an opportunity was thus afforded by the defence to enable the prosecution even at that late stage to prove the non-receipt of the moneys by the Bank by cross-examining Mr Isles on the point, the prosecution failed to avail themselves of it and did not put a single question to him in cross-examination. Thus a serious lacuna in the case for the prosecution has been left and Mr. Raj Krishna for the Crown was constrained to admit that he was unable to find any explanation for this omission. He has, however, contended that this defect is supplied by the evidence of P.W. 6, Tola Ram, Treasury Clerk, Lahore District, who deposed that the items in question were not entered as having been received in the books of the Treasury. The entries in these books are admittedly not made in the Bank but in the Treasury Office on receipt of the challans sent there, after the amount had been deposited in the Bank. They cannot, therefore, be considered as primary evidence of the transaction, which take place in the Bank and the fact that a particular item is not entered in these books does not necessarily indicate that it had not been received by the Bank It must be remembered that in cases of criminal misappropriation the onus lies on the prosecution to prove not only that money was paid to the accused in trust, but also that he did not apply it for the purpose for which it was given. As held by the Bombay High Court in Queen-Empress v. Hari Dagdu (8):

> In a trial for an offence under S. 403 where the accused admitted having received the money alleged to have been misappropriated by him but defended himself by saying that he made it over to the proper person the onus did not lie on him to prove payment, but on the prosecution to prove nonpayment, for it is only when the latter is proved that the presumption will arise of misappropriation or breach of trust.

See also the case of Queen-Empress v. Ramchandra Ganesh (9) As already stated the best evidence to prove non-payment was the books of the Bank, but for reasons best known to the prosecution, it was kept back.

This, however, does not settle the matter, for the circumstantial evidence on the record might be sufficient to establish misappropriation by Pritchard. But in inferring his guilt from this kind of evidence it must be shown that the inculpatory facts are incompatible with the innocence of the appellant and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt. As pointed out by Mr. Justice Wills in his great Work on circumstantial evidence:

> This is the fundamental rule, the experimentum crucis by which the relevancy and effect of circumstantial evidence must be estimated . . . . . It is not enough that a particular hypothesis will explain all the phenomena; nothing must be inferred merely because, if true, it would account for the facts, and if the circumstances are equally capable of solution upon any other reasonable hypothesis it is manifest that their true moral cause is not exclusively ascertained, but remains in uncertainty, and they must, therefore, be discarded as exclusive presumption of guilt. Every other reasonable supposition by which the facts may be explained consistently with the hypothesis of innocence must be rigorously examined and successively eliminated and only when no other supposition will account for all conditions of the case, can the conclusion of guilt be legitimately adopted.

The evidence relied upon in this connexion consists mainly of the omission of the items concerned from the returns sent to Calcutta, over this appellant's signatures, and the keeping of two receipt books, one of which is denounced as "bogus" by the prosecution. Reference to some of these documents has already been made while dealing with the case against Tirath Ram and I do not think it necessary to discuss them in detail again. It is sufficient to say that I have carefully examined the evidence bearing on the point and while I am not prepared to accept the explanation given by Pritchard that he blindly signed these documents, I cannot at the same time find, that, having regard to the principles enunciated above, the prosecution have succeeded in proving that it was Pritchard who misappropriated these sums. The utmost that can be said is that the evidence raises a strong suspicion against him. But in a case of this kind a conviction cannot be based on suspicions only, howsoever strong they might be. I am, therefore, constrained to give him the benefit of the doubt, and must hold that the case against this appellant also is not established.

The result is that I accept all the three appeals, set aside the conviction and sentences passed against each appellant, and direct that he be set at liberty forthwith. The fines if paid will be refunded.

It is unfortunate that the defalcations which were the subject-matter of enquiry at this trial should have remained unpunished, but there is no doubt that this is due mainly, if not entirely to the insufficient and careless manner in which the case for the Crown appears to have been conducted in the Court below. The whole course of the trial discloses a great disregard for the elementary rules of evidence and criminal procedure and a lamentable lack of discrimination between the essentials and the nonessentials. It is much to be regretted that the record of the case should have been allowed to be encumbered with such a large mass of inadmissible and irrelevant matter, with the inevitable result that the points, on proof of which depended the guilt or innocence of the appellants, were lost sight of and material evidence which was or could, without much difficulty, have been available was not placed on the record, and several documents which were in the possession of the prosecuting agency remained unproved. In their anxiety to lead evidence of collateral offences the prosecution omitted to prove the facts necessary to establish the substantive offences charged in the indictment, and the learned Magistrate, overpowered by the magnitude of the task, which he had unnecessarily set up for himself, of finding the appellants guilty of embezzling items not covered by the charges framed against them, lost himself in a hopeless maze of inadmissible and irrelevant evidence, mixed up conjecture with proof, and confused documents which had been duly proved with those which were not. The result was not only much avoidable waste of his own time and the time of this Court, but also an unsatisfactory and obscure finding in a judgment, which the counsel who appeared for the Crown before me felt great difficulty in supporting in spite of all the labour and ingenuity which he brought to bear on his task.

JAI LAL, J.

Kidar Nath—Plaintiff—Appellant.

v.

Municipal Committee, Delhi—Defendant—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 513 of 1928, Decided on 11th April 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Delhi, D/- 16th December 1927.

Punjab Municipal Act (3 of 1911), Ss. 190 and 193—"Building" means that part of the house in respect of which an application is made to the Committee—A bye-law of a Municipality prohibiting erection of any portion of any building abutting on street or lane within four feet of the centre of such street or lane cannot be invoked to put back an old outer wall which abutted a street.

The term "building" as used in Ss. 189, 190 and 193 means that part of the house in respect of which an application is made to the Commitee and it does not mean the whole of the house, a portion whereof is proposed to be erected or re-erected and, therefore, the conditions imposed by the Committee under S. 193 must be confined to that part of the house in respect of which an application to erect or re-erect is made to it. It also follows that the Committee is not entitled to invoke the aid of a bye-law which prohibits erection of any portion of any building abutting on a street or lane within four feet of the centre of such street or land, for putting back an old outer wall of the applicant's house which abutted a street, if the building proposed to be erected does not abut a street. [P 395 C 2]

Moti Sagar—for Appellant.

Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The Municipal Committee of Delhi has framed a bye-law which runs as follows:

No portion of any building abutting on any street or lane, to which from time to time the Committee may, by resolution, declare this rule to apply, shall be built within 7½ ft. of what was the centre of such street or lane at the time of the passing of these bye-laws, and no portion of any building abutting on any other street or lane shall be built within four feet of what was the centre of such street or lane at the time of the passing of these bye-laws, provided that when the Municipal Commitee has laid down a building line to regulate the frontage of buildings in any street or lane, the Municipal Committee may permit a building to be constructed up to that line irrespective of the distance of any portion of it from the centre of the existing street or lane.

On 26th May 1924 the appellant Kidar Nath applied to the Committee for sanction to build a portion of his house situate in a locality within the Municipal limits of Delhi to which the part of the bye-law prohibiting the erection of any portion of any building abutting on a street or lane within four feet of the centre of such street or lane applies. On 30th September 1924 the Municipal Committee sanctioned the building on condition that the outer wall of the appellant's house which abutted the street should be put back so as to be re-erected at a distance of four feet from the centre of the street in front thereof. The appellant erected his building in accordance with the plan submitted by him but did not put back the wall of his house as directed in the condition imposed by the Committee. Consequently a notice dated 16th September 1925 under S. 195, Punjab Municipal Act, was served upon him by the Committee to alter or to demolish the building erected in contravention of the sanction granted. The suit out of which this second appeal has arisen was then instituted by Kidar Nath for issue of perpetual injunction to the Municipal Committee of Delhi restraining the latter from demolishing the building erected by him or the wall abutting the lane. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court and the decree has been affirmed by the District Judge on appeal. The plaintiff has presented this second appeal.

It appears that a large portion of this house was burnt down by fire many years ago and some portions of it were re-erected immediately afterwards by the plaintiff with the permission of the Municipal Committee. The wall abutting the street, however, was not destroyed or damaged by the fire and has remained intact up to this time. The application of 26th May 1924 made by the plaintiff related to the re-erection of the remaining portion of the house but the outer wall abutting the street and the wall at right angle therewith was not proposed to be re-erected. It seems that in all probability the plaintiff fearing an order by the Committee to put back his building designedly applied for sanction to erect the inner portions of the house leaving the outer walls intact.

The only point discussed by counsel on both sides before me is whether the condition imposed by the Committee to set back the outer wall of the plaintiff's house abutting the street in the manner already described was or was not ultra vires.

Section 189, Punjab Municipal Act, provides that no person shall erect or re-erect or commence to erect or re-erect any building without the sanction of the Committee and that every person who intends to erect or re-erect any building shall give notice in writing to the committee of such intention. Power is also given by that section to the Committee by means of a bye-law to provide for the submission of the necessary plans of the building to accompany such notice describing inter alia free passage or way in front of the building and space to be left about the building to secure free circulation of air and facilitate scavenging and for the prevention of fire. Then S. 190, confers power on the Municipal Committee to regulate by bye-laws in respect of the erection or re-erection of any building inter alia of the following matters:

> The ventilation and the space to be left about the building to secure the free circulation of the air and for the prevention of fire.

Section 193 provides that within two months after the receipt of the notice mentioned in S. 189, the Committee may inter alia sanction the building either absolutely or subject to such conditions as it may deem fit in respect of all or any of the matters specified in S. 189.

It is on the correct interpretation of these sections that the decision of this case rests. The term "building" is defined in S. 3 (2), Municipal Act, as follows:

> Building means the whole or any part of any house, hut, outhouse, shed and stable whether used for the purpose of human habitation or otherwise and whether of masonry, bricks, wood, mud, thatch, metal or any other material whatever and includes a wall and a well.

The question, therefore, is whether on an application being made for sanction to erect or re-erect one portion of a house the Committee is competent by virtue of S. 193 of the Act to impose conditions in respect of another portion of that house which the applicant for sanction does not propose to demolish and re-erect. The case for the appellant is that the Committee can impose conditions under S. 193 only in respect of that portion of the house which it is proposed to erect or re-erect and that, therefore, any condition imposed relating to another portion which it is not proposed to touch in connexion with the scheme of erection or re-erection is outside the competence of the Committee and ultra vires. The contention of the learned counsel for the Municipal Committee on the other hand is that the expression 'building' as used in S. 193, includes the whole of the house a portion whereof is proposed to be re-erected.

Now having regard to the definition of the word 'building' in S. 3 (2) I have no doubt that the expression as used in Ss. 189, 190 and 193 does not include the whole of the house but only such part thereof as the applicant proposed to erect or re-erect. It must be deemed to have been used in all these sections in the same sense and as relating to the same subject-matter. It cannot be, as appeared to be the contention of the respondent's counsel, that building in S. 189 means part of a house which is proposed to be erected or re-erected, while the same terms as used in Ss. 190 and 193 means the whole house of which it is a part. It consequently follows that under S. 193 when sanctioning the application the Committee can impose conditions only with regard to such portion of the house which is proposed to be erected or re-erected In my opinion any other interpretation of the section would make the working of the Municipal Act unfair to the owners of the houses and may lead to absurd results.

As I put it to the learned counsel for the Committee, supposing a huge building covering an area of, say, an acre exists on a site within the municipal limits and the owner thereof applies for sanction to re-erect a room at one corner thereof, is the Municipal Committee entitled to impose conditions with regard to a room at the opposite corner of such a building? The learned counsel replied to this question in the affirmative but I am not prepared to hold that the Legislature ever intended to place such arbitrary powers in the hands of the Municipal Committee. I have, as I have already stated, merely to decide whether the action taken by the Committee in this case under Ss. 193 and 195 was within its competence. No other provision of law under which this action could be taken was relied upon before me, and it is not necessary for me to examine the question what was the proper procedure for the Committee to adopt to attain its object. It is, however, satisfactory to feel that the Committee was not without remedy and had ample power under the other provisions of the Municipal Act to carry out its object. It has, however, not chosen to take action thereunder and I have merely to decide the present case with regard to the provisions of law under which the Committee preferred to act.

I hold that the term 'building' as used in Ss. 189, 190 and 193 means that part of the house in respect of which an application is made to the Committee and that it does not mean as was contended by counsel for the Municipal Committee the whole of the house a portion whereof is proposed to be erected or re-erected and therefore the conditions imposed by the Committee under S. 193 must be confined to that part of the house in respect of which an application to erect or re-erect is made to it It also follows that the Committee was not entitled to invoke the aid of the bye-law quoted at the commencement of the judgment, because the building proposed to be erected did not abut a street.

Accepting this appeal I set aside the decrees of the Courts below and decree the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Judgment.—On 5th July 1926, four persons Pritam Singh, Bhag Singh, Sant Singh and Bali Singh presented a petition for compensation under S. 6, Sikh Gurdwaras Act, to the Local Government through the Secretary, Transferred Departments. In the petition, it was stated that Gurdwara at Khadar Sahib known as Sri Darbar Sahib belonged to the descendants of Guru Angad Dev Ji, that it was occupied and managed by the said descendants whose interest in the place as well as the income thereof was determined by the right of inheritance under their personal law, that the income of the Gurdwara was divided amongst them according to ancestral shares, that these descendants used to appoint, from amonst themselves representatives to act on their behalf for the management of all that belonged to them jointly and for the realization and distribution of the joint income and that the present representatives were the four applicants who had been recognized as such by the district authorities. They were accordingly "entitled" to present the petition on behalf of themselves and their principals, the descendants of Sri Guru Angad Dev, and they prayed that the > whole income of the Gurdwara or such part of it as might be deemed proper, be awarded to the descendants of Sri Guru Angad Dev at Khadar Sahib through the petitioners and that the jagir income might be adjudicated to belong entirely to the petitioners and their principals.

In this petition the names of the "principals" were not disclosed nor was it stated how many they were and where they were living. The petition was duly forwarded to the Tribunal and on 7th April 1927, Mr. Din Dayal, Advocate, appeared for the four applicants. He admitted that his clients, the four petitioners (whom alone he described as office-holder), did not hold any power of attorney for the other descendants of Guru Sahib on whose behalf they professed to act nor did he himself hold any vakalatnama from them. He expressed his inability to state their number even approximately and remarked that they might be one thousand. At the foot of his statement, there is a note recorded by the president that > Mr. Din Dayal asked repeatedly whether these one thousand people were office-holders of the Gurdwara, refused to give a direct answer repeating merely that they were owners of the Gurdwara.

On this the Tribunal passed an order, dated 7th April 1927, holding that the petitions as presented must be confined to the claim of the four persons mentioned in it, and that it was incompetent on behalf of the other descendants of the second Guru, whose number or names or other description had not been disclosed either in the petition or before the Tribunal. They accordingly framed issues relating to the claim of the four applicants only.

A few days later, on 19th April 1927, the appellants, who are 53 in number. presented an application to the Tribunal under O. 14, R. 5, Civil P. C., stating that they along with 70 other persons had filed a petition under S. 6 through their four representatives aforesaid, but that the Tribunal had decided on 7th April that the petition on their behalf was incompetent. They alleged that they were owners and office-holders of the Gurdwara and as such competent to apply. They accordingly claimed that the said order be discharged and they be given an opportunity to sign the original petition or the Tribunal might exercise its powers under S. 15 of the Act and join them as parties to the application. This application was rejected by the Tribunal on 7th May 1927.

The present appeal has been filed on behalf of these 53 persons attacking the orders passed on 7th April and 7th May 1927, respectively. Mr. Badri Das, who appeared on behalf of the appellants, addressed us on several points, but in our opinion the appeal must fail on the short ground that neither in the petition of 5th July 1926, nor in the statement made by counsel on 7th April 1927, was it claimed that the 53 appellants were "past or present hereditary office-holders" as defined in S. 2 (4), which lays down that unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, "office" means any office by virtue of which the holder thereof participates in the management or performance of public worship in a Gurdwara or in the management or performance of any rituals or ceremonies observed therein : and "office-holder" means any person who holds an office. An application for compensation under S. 6 can only be made on behalf of a "past or present hereditary office-holder" or the "presumptive successor" of such office-holder. The appellants could, therefore, succeed only if this status was claimed for them, but that application apart from the fact that it was not signed by the appellants or their duly authorized agents was entirely silent on that point. It nowhere stated that the appellants participated in the management or performance of public worship in the Gurdwara at Khadar Sahib or of any rituals or ceremonies observed therein.

It has been argued that this application ought not to be strictly construed, in view of the fact that the Sikh Gurdwaras Act was a novel piece of legislation and that there were no precedents to guide the claimants or their advisers. But we feel ourselve unable to accede to this contention in view of the fact that for nine months after the presentation of the petition the appellants took no steps whatsoever either to disclose their identity or to state that they held an "office" or were the "presumptive successor" of an "office holder" in the Gurdwara. Indeed on 7th April 1927, the learned counsel for the alleged agents of the appellants expressed his inability to define the status which the descendants of Guru Angad Dev, including the appellants, were supposed to have in the Gurdwara at Khadar Sahib, and he refused to give a direct answer to the question repeatedly put to him by the Tribunal whether these persons were "office-holders."

In these circumstances we must hold that the Tribunal came to a correct conclusion in confining the application of 5th July 1926, to the four applicants named therein, and in rejecting the application subsequently made on behalf of the appellants. This being our view, it is not necessary to decide the other points that arise in the case.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

First Appeal No. 1041 of 1924, Decided on 12th January 1928 from preliminary decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Lahore, D/- 21st January 1924.

(a) Hindu Law — Joint family — Nucleus very small—Presumption of joint family property does not arise.

Where the nucleus proved is very small no presumption of jointness of subsequently acquired property arises. In order to raise any presumption based on family nucleus it must be shown that it was possible to have incurred the cost of the property claimed as joint, from that family source : A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 333 ; 29 All. 244 ; A. I. R. 1923 All. 574 and A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 389, Foll. [P 405 C 1]

(b) Hindu Law—Joint family—Self acquisitions.

There is no presumption that the members of a joint Hindu family possess their self acquisitions as joint coparcenary property.

(c) Hindu Law—Joint family—Self acquisitions—Gains of science—Person asserting it to be not partible must prove that eduction was acquired without detriment to family property.

All acquisitions by members of a joint Hindu family are prima facie partible and the burden of proof lies on those who assert to the contrary. The gains of science are exempted from this rule only when the education which made such gains possible is affirmatively shown to have been acquired without detriment to the family estate : A. I. R. 1917 P. C. 105 and A. I. R. 1921 P. C. 35, Foll. [P 407 C 1]

(d) Evidence Act, S. 114—Account books not produced--Adverse inference should be drawn.

Failure by a party to produce account books raises a strong presumption that their evidence would confirm in a conclusive manner the other documentary evidence against him. [P 410 C 2]

* (e) Registration Act, S. 17 — Document referring to immovable property if not intended to be operative requires no registration.

A document not intended to be operative, though referring to rights and interests in immovable property does not require registration. [P 411 C 1]

(f) Benami — Hindu Law — Purchase by father in son's name should be presumed to be benami—Source for the acquisition is the criterion.

When a purchase of real estate is made by a Hindu in the name of one of his sons the presumption is in favour of its being a benami purchase and the burden of proof lies on the party in whose name it was purchased to prove that he was solely entitled to the legal and beneficial interest in the permanent estate. The source from which the acquisition is made, is the main criterion for deciding whether the person in whose name a benami purchase is made is or is not the real owner : 6 M. I. A. 53 (*P. Coldstream, J.—This judgment will dispose of five appeals Nos. 1041, 1042, 1211, 1287 and 1376 of 1924. The printed records are in four books : (1) one of 316 pages including the oral evidence produced at the trial, (2) one of 311 pages of documentary evidence, (3) one of 56 pages and (4) one of eight pages of miscellaneous records. These may conveniently be referred to as books A, B, C. and

D respectively. The circumstances from which the appeals arise are as follows :

R. B. Buta Mal, who had retired from Government service in 1902, died in June 1914, leaving four sons of whom the two elder, R. S. Mul Chand and R. S. Shankar Das, were officers in the Punjab Civil Service. The third L. Kanshi Ram, was a pleader practising in Ferozepore, and the fourth, L. Behari Lal was managing a factory and a cotton press at Kot Rai Buta Mal an estate close to Kot Radha Kishan R. S. These sons all had male descendants living ; a pedigree of the family will be found at the beginning of the judgment under appeal. For some time before Buta Mal died there had been friction between the head of the family and his sons. After his death dissensions became acute. L. Kanshi Ram was in possession of extensive immovable property in Ferozepore where he had built up a remunerative legal practice and Behari Lal claimed as his own separate property, a valuable area of land occupied by the factory and the press and their appurtenance at Kot Rai Buta Mal. It was round the claims of these two sons that the conflict centred. There was a conference in April 1915, resulting in a statement of her views on the matter by Buta Mal's widow but this failed to avoid the litigation threatening, and in June 1916, Shankar Das, his four sons and five grandsons instituted a suit for partition in Lahore against all the other male descendants of Buta Mal and one Har Charan Das, to whom Kanshi Ram had mortgaged land at Ferozepore. Subsequently Harcharan Das was struck off the list of defendants and Buta Mal's widow was added to the list with the approval of all the parties.

In their plaint as finally amended, after stating that the parties were members of a joint undivided Hindu family, descendants of the common ancestor Buta Mal, and describing in detail the property of which Buta Mal had died possessed, and all that property in possession of his descendants at the time of his death which was claimed to be joint of the family and partible between the parties as survivors of Buta Mal the plaintiffs prayed that the property described and any other property in possession of any other party discovered to be joint be partitioned so far as the Court could decree partition. As regards property partible only by a revenue Court they prayed for a declaration of title. Besides property about which there is no dispute, the plaintiffs list included a house and a stable occupied by Kanshi Ram in Ferozepore city, an area of 151-1/20 Kanals in Kot Rai Buta Mal including the factory and cotton press, 740-7/20 Kanals of land in Ferozepore in possession of Kanshi Ram, moveable property in possession of Behari Lal at Kot Rai Buta Mal worth Rs. 7,950, income amounting to Rs. 80,000 stated to have been withheld by Behari Lal, being rent and profit derived from the land, houses and the cotton press and Mill at Kot Rai Buta Mal and from land in Lyallpur District and houses at Amritsar, the income of Kanshi Ram derived from his practice as a preader and from land in his possession in Ferozepore, the professional income of Kanshi Ram's engineer son, Bashi Ram who, it was alleged, had been educated in England at the expense of the coparcenary and the nuptial gifts received from the family by Bashi Ram.

The defendants all admitted that they and the plaintiffs were a joint Hindu family. Mul Chand, the eldest son, who also pleaded for his minor son Mehr Chand, admitted further that all the immovable property listed was joint and partible and that he and Kanshi Ram had formerly been in the habit of handing over their surplus income to their father as head of the family ; it was objected that Shankar Das, the plaintiff, had withheld his own salary and part of the income from the lands at Lyallpur and should be held accountable to the coparceners for his savings and the income in Lyallpur ; provided that a sum of Rs. 10,000 was set aside for his son Radha Kishan in accordance with an alleged previous agreement between the parties to enable him to start a business of his own. Mul Chand agreed to a partition of the property in possession of the parties including the professional income of Lala Kanshi Ram and his son Bashi Ram, the land at Ferozepore which he declared had been purchased by Buta Mal " for the family," and the income from the property at Kot Rai Buta Mal and elsewhere withheld by Bihari Lal.

Kanshi Ram and Bashi Ram denied that the property possessed by Buta Mal's sons was all coparcenary property. To the property of Buta Mal, which had been acquired by him and had been his exclusively, his sons were entitled to succeed not as survivors but only as heirs. Kanshi Ram and his sons possessed no immovable property which was joint of the family and the house and lands in Ferozepore belonged to Kanshi Ram exclusively. Kanshi Ram's and Bashi Ram's income did not form part of the coparcenary family property because the expenses of their education had not been met from joint funds. Nor had Bashi Ram's marriage been paid for by the family as it ought to have been. As regards the factory and press at Kot Rai Buta Mal Kanshi Ram and Bashi Ram admitted it to be partible as property acquired by Buta Mal. After providing for the maintenance of a daughter of Buta Mal the property which the parties had inherited jointly should be partitioned, Mrs. Buta Mal being entitled to a fifth share. It was pointed out that the plaintiffs had not proposed to put their own income and salary and the joint property in their possession into the hotchpot.

Joint pleas (printed at page 23 of Book A and page 4 of Book D) were put in on behalf of Bihari Lal and his minor son Amrit Lal, Radha Kishen (Mul Chand's son) and Radha Kishan's two minor sons, denying the existence of any joint property of the family in the lifetime of Buta Mal, the whole of whose property had been self-acquired, but admitting that all property listed in the plaint was partible between the parties as Buta Mal's heirs and his widow with three exceptions, namely, (1) the factory and press at Kot Rai Buta Mal which, along with a garden and a bungalow and other buildings appurtenant thereto these defendants claimed to be their own separate property for the income of which they were not accountable to the family, (2) the savings of Kanshi Ram and Bashi Ram from their professional savings, and (3) the nuptial gifts received by Bashi Ram, the partibility of which last two items was neither contested nor denied. If, however, the property in dispute at Kot Rai Buta Mal was held by the Court to have been joint of the family, Behari Lal and Radha Kishen were entitled to remuneration for its management and improvement (further pleas put in by Bihari Lal and Radha Kishen on the 16th February 1918). As regards the Ferozepore property, Bihari Lal and Radha Kishen denied Kanshi Ram and Bashi Ram's claim, and admitted it to be partible. Bihari Lal submitted further pleas in June 1918 alleging that the plaintiffs were barred from suing for partition in view of the results of the conference of 1915 which had been recorded in a document purporting to be the " orders of the Lady mother". The arrangements recorded were by way of a family settlement and could not be impugned now by the plaintiffs.

Mrs. Buta Mal in pleas presented on the 15th January 1918, admitted that the property listed in the plaint with the exception of the property claimed by Bihari Lal, which she declared was his exclusively, was joint coparcenary estate partible between the parties as survivors of her husband along with herself. She claimed a 5th share as well as a sum of Rs. 8,000 which she alleged had been deposited by her at interest with her husband as her stridhana. She also pleaded for the reservation of a sum of Rs. 10,000 as provision for the maintenance of Mt. Ram Rakhi, Buta Mal's widowed daughter, who, it was alleged, was also entitled to a right of residence in the bungalow at Lahore.

An attempt made by the other sons of Buta Mal in December 1919 to settle the dispute by compromise so far as it did not affect the property in possession of Kanshi Ram and his son, was frustrated by Shankar Das and litigation proceeded. In April 1921, Amrit Lal, defendant 4, minor son of Bihari Lal, applied through his maternal grandfather to be allowed to submit fresh pleadings on the ground that his father, when acting as guardian ad litem had negligently failed to put forward the plea that Bihari Lal and his son were the sole survivors of the joint family to which Buta Mal belonged because Buta Mal's other sons had separated from family during his lifetime. The Court refused to re-open Amrit Lal's case on this plea.

The following issues were struck for trial by the Senior Subordinate Judge of Gurdaspur to whose Court the case had been transferred.

1. Whether the land and buldings in Ferozepore are the exclusive property of Lala Kanshi Ram ?

2. If so, is he estopped from asserting his rights of exclusive ownership over that property ?

3. Whether the plaintiffs cannot sue for a declaration as to the land in Ferozepore ?

4. Whether the stable at Ferozepore was gifted by R. B. Buta Mal to Lala Kanshi Ram ?

(5) If so, is the gift invalid ?

(6) Whether the factory and buildings connected therewith at Kot Rai Buta Mal are the exclusive property of Lala Bihari Lal and Radha Kishen ?

7. If not, are the plaintiffs and defendants 1 and 2 (Mul Chand and Kanshi Ram) estopped from disputing their ownership ?

8. Whether L. Bihari Lal and L. Radha Kishen are not liable to render complete accounts of all the income from rents and profits of factory, trade and produce of land, and if they are not liable to account for the income of any property what is that property ?

9. Whether L. Bihari Lal and Lala Radha Kishen are entitled to claim any remuneration for any services rendered by them, and if so to what amount ?

10. Whether the incomes of Shankar Das, Mul Chand, Kanshi Ram and Bashi Ram cannot be considered joint family property ?

11. Whether the nuptial gifts received by defendant 5 Lala Bashi Ram on his marriage can be considered joint family property available for partition ?

12. If so, are the nuptal gifts of any of the other parties not similarly liable to partition ?

13. Whether the widow of the late R. B. Buta Mal is not entitled to a share of the joint family property but only to suitable maintenance and what is the amount of the share or maintenance ?

14. What provision, if any, should be made for the maintenance and residence of Bibi Ram Rakhi widowed daughter of Rai Bahadur Buta Mal ?

15. Whether the widow of Rai Bahadur Buta Mal deposited the sum of Rs. 8,000 with her husband on interest, and, if so, when and at what rate of interest and can she claim that amount ?

16. Whether the plaintiffs have omitted any joint family property, and if so, what, and should their suit be dismissed ?

The learned Subordinate Judge of Gurdaspur decided the last issue (No. 16) on the 31st October 1919. He held that as Shankar Das had received only an ordinary education suitable to his position as a member of the family his earnings, as a Government servant must be considered to be his separate property and that in any case, as the plaint had been amended so as to allow the Court to partition any property not included in the plaint but found to be joint, the suit could proceed.

After this the case was re-transferred to Lahore where the lamentably protracted trial was concluded by the Senior Subordinate Judge on the 21st January 1924. His decision, wholly in favour of the plaintiffs, was that Rai Bahadur Buta Mal and his sons had formed a joint Hindu family possessed of a joint estate, that Kanshi Ram had irrevocably admitted the joint character of the property at Ferozepore, in respect of which the plaintiffs could sue for a declaration as Kanshi Ram's possession was merely that of a cosharer, that no gift of the stable at Ferozepore by Buta Mal in favour of Kanshi Ram was proved, that Bihari Lal and Radha Kishan had no exclusive rights in the press and factory and other property in Kot Rai Buta Mal, that the plaintiffs and the defendants Mul Chand and Kanshi Ram were not estopped from claiming a share in the factory and its appurtenances by the alleged family arrangement effected by their mother in April 1915, as this alleged settlement had not been seriously conceived and accepted but was merely a "family joke", that Bihari Lal and Radha Kishen were liable to be called upon to render accounts of their stewardship in respect of the press and mill, which were not their separate property, but had been managed by them for the family under Buta Mal's control and without establishing any right to remuneration for their services, that Mul Chand's income was joint of the family, as was that of Kanshi Ram and Banshi Ram, whose profits were gains of science resulting from special education at the family expense, that Banshi Ram's nuptial gifts received from the family as well as those of other members of the family (with the exception of those received by Shankar Das's third son Piare Lal whose marriage expenses were not defrayed from the common fund) must go into the hotchpot, that Mt. Ram Rakhi's right of residence and maintanance must be recognized, a sum of Rs. 10,000 being due to her in respect of maintenance, and that Mrs. Buta Mal was entitled to a fifth share in the partition but not to the sum of Rs. 8,000 claimed as her stridhana.

The learned Subordinate Judge accordingly passed a preliminary decree for partition and gave the plaintiffs the declaration for which they sued appointing the late Sir Ganga Ram to take accounts, carry out the partition and make the necessary adjusting payments. Bihari Lal and Radha Kishan were required to furnish accounts of the press and ginning business from the date of Buta Mal's death up to October 1915 when the family was disrupted. After this date they would only be liable to pay compensation for their use of the factory and press up to 1st January 1919 when Bihari Lal took a lease of these properties under an order of the Court. Similarly, Kanshi Ram was to account for the income of the immovable property at Ferozepore from October 1915 onwards and Shankar Das for the income of the Lyallpur lands from the same date until he handed over the property to a receiver under an order of the Court passed in January 1919. The plaintiffs were to get their costs in the suit from Kanshi Ram and Bihari Lal.

Against this judgment we have the following appeals :

(1) The plaintiffs in appeal No. 1042 have appealed in respect of the relief granted to Mt. Ram Rakhi who was at no time a party to the suit and to Mrs. Buta Mal who was eighty years old and was, it is alleged in collusion with Behari Lal, unable to manage the property herself, and entitled merely to maintenance by the family. It is also objected by the plaintiffs that Behari Lal should have been ordered to render accounts not only up to October 1915, but up to the date when he handed over the property in his possession to the receiver.

(2) Kanshi Ram and his son (Appeal 1041 of 1924) challenge the propriety of the order in favour of Mrs. Buta Mal and the finding that the property in their possession including the lands at Ferozepore is partible. It is urged that the Court took into consideration evidence that was inadmissible and documents that had not been properly proved, wrongly rejected evidence offered by the appellants and had been inconsistent in exempting Shankar Das' income and savings from partition.

(3) Appeal No. 1287 is preferred by Lala Bihari Lal who objected to the inclusion in the hotch-pot of the factory and cotton press, their appurtenances and the bungalow and the garden at Kot Rai Buta Mal which he claimed to have been made over to him by his father for his advancement. There was, he contends, no joint coparcenary property belonging to Buta Mal and his sons, and the settlement of 4th April 1915 was not a jest but a serious arrangement which was acted upon by Buta Mal's sons on whom it was binding. In any case the plaintiffs must bring their moneys into the common fund for partition. It is also protested that much evidence has been wrongly admitted, that evidence not even admitted to the record has been relied upon and that the appellants were wrongly refused opportunity to produce evidence. To this appeal Shankar Das has filed cross-objections.

(4) The fourth Appeal No. 1211 is by Amrit Lal who urges grounds similar to those preferred by his father in appeal No. 1287 and also protests that the decree is void against him for want of the proper appointment of a guardian ad litem, his father having colluded, while he was guardian, with his uncles to the appellants' detriment.

(5) In Appeal No. 1376 Mrs. Buta Mal claims her stridhana of Rs. 8,000 with interest. Mul Chand died after these appeals were filed and his representatives have been substituted in his place on the record.

I dispose of first this last mentioned appeal by Mrs. Buta Mal. The question is simply one of fact and was dealt with by the learned Sub-Judge summarily with the remark that no serious attempt had been made to prove that Mrs. Buta Mal had deposited Rs. 8,000 with her husband at interest. In support of his clients' appeal Mr. Kishen Dial relies on Cl. (9), of the "Orders of the mother" of 4th April 1915 which is :

> Bihari Lal knows about the money in cash of Bhabo Ji and Bibi Ji. At first that will be given.

Bhabo Ji was admittedly Mrs. Buta Mal. Mr. Kishen Dial contends that this evidence corroborated by that of a document printed at pp. 275-278 of paper book B, which Mr. Kishen Dial alleges to be the transliteration of an account, kept by Buta Mal between 1st March 1892 and 31st March 1912, recording sums credited to Mrs. Buta Mal during that period and interest accruing on them.

Neither the document nor the correctness of its contents had been proved. Mul Chand and Kanshi Ram admitted that the signature at the end of the original document and some initials thereon were those of their father but questioned the genuineness of the entries which were in a script not understood by them. Mrs. Buta Mal was not questioned about her claim when she went into the witness-box on 9th March 1917. It is obvious that Mrs. Buta Mal's claim is not established by this evidence, which is all that is put forward by Mr. Kishen Dial, and her appeal must, therefore, be dismissed.

Mr. Kishen Dial who appears for the appellant Amrit Lal does not press appeal No. 1211. There is no basis in the record for the supposition that Bihari Lal who contested the suit streneuously throughout did not act in the interests of his son to the best of his ability and Mr. Kishen Dial has acted wisely and properly in withdrawing this appeal which is accordingly also dismissed.

Before proceeding to deal with the remaining appeals it will be useful to note the following dates which are of importance in this case. Of Buta Mal's grandfather we know nothing certainly, except that his name was Karam Chand. His father Atma Ram is alleged by the plaintiffs to have belonged to Kasur in Lahore District and to have migrated to Amritsar where he carried on business and where Buta Mal, his only son, was born in 1844 or 1845. Buta Mal entered Government service and became a school master and subsequently a Naib-Tahsildar in Ferozepore in 1862 where he was joined by his father.

In 1866 a small area of 290 square yards (approximately 12 marlas) of land in Ferozepore was bought for Rs. 38, (with Buta Mal's money according to Kanshi Ram), and in 1868 and 1869 mortgage rights in two houses were secured, the deeds showing Atma Ram as purchaser and mortgagee. Atma Ram died in Ferozepore in 1872. In 1873 Buta Mal brought the two mortgaged houses. In 1884 Mul Chand entered Government service as a clerk being then 23 years old. In 1896 Buta Mal began to buy land near Kot Radha Kishen railway station, so laying the foundation of the estate containing the factory and cotton press. By 1893 the factory had been completed and in 1895 Bihari Lal then nineteen years old was sent there to work. Meanwhile in 1891 or 1992 Shankar Das, then about 29 years old had entered Government service and Kanshi Ram who was six years younger had started practising as a pleader in Ferozepore. In 1892 Buta Mal gave Kanshi Ram the houses in Ferozepore of which he had bought the equity of redemption in 1873. On this site Kanshi Ram built his house and stable. In 1895 Buta Mal made over the land, brought in Ferozepore in 1866 for Rs. 38, to Kanshi Ram who having been thus enabled to defeat pre-emptors purchased more land. In 1904 a cotton press was added to the factory. Shortly after Rai Buta Mal died in 1914, Kanshi Ram had the agricultural lands in Ferozepore recorded in the revenue records by mutation as the property of all four sons of Buta Mal in equal shares. On 4th April 1915 there took place the family concert resulting in the alleged settlement by Mrs. Buta Mal. These "orders" alloted the factory, press and their appurtenances to Bihari Lal who was, however, to admit Radha Kishen to a fourth share, but made no mention of the property at Ferozepore. The document was signed by all the four sons of Buta Mal.

I come now to deal with the appeal of Kanshi Ram (No. 1041). (The judgment then referred to the pleadings of the parties and proceeded.) From these pleadings it appears to be clear that the case set up by the plaintiffs, backed by the defendant Mul Chand, was that the property acquired by Buta Mal and his sons was joint family property of a coparcenary of which they were members because its acquisition was made possible by the existence of nucleus of ancestral property in the hands of Buta Mal; and that the mutation proceedings in respect of the Ferozepore lands were evidence, as proving an admission by Kanshi Ram, of the fact that those lands were not his separate property but had always been joint of the family.

In support of this case the plaintiffs attempted to prove that the sons of Buta Mal contributed part of their savings to a common fund and that they constituted a joint family holding all the property in the hands of its members as joint coparcenary estate. But, in coming to his finding that the plaintiff's case was established, the learned Subordinate Judge has made certain remarks which, it is now argued, indicate an opinion that whether there was or was never a nucleus of ancestral property in Buta Mal's possession, which was the germ of the alleged coparcenary estate, a joint co-parcenary came into existence by the blending of the incomes first of Atma Ram and Buta Mal and then of Buta Mal and his sons. He has for instance remarked :

> The important facts to remember are that R. B. Buta Mal blended his income with the income derived from the property left by Lala Atma Ram and thus created a joint family estate (p. 279 of Book A).
> If it is assumed that the nucleus of ancestral property in the hands of Rai Bahadur Buta Mal was negligible and that he was sole master of his own earnings, then it cannot be said that Lala Kanshi Ram received his education at the expense of any joint family funds. But it is clear beyond doubt that R. B. Buta Mal created a coparcenary body making all his sons bring all their savings into a common chest (p. 290) ;

> it has been held that there was considerable nucleus of ancestral property which R. B. Buta Mal blended with his own income and thereby created a joint family estate (p. 289).

It is on these remarks that Sir Muhammad Shafi, counsel for Kanshi Ram, bases his first attack upon the plaintiffs' case as it now stands, urging strenuously that, as there was no allegation in the plaintiffs' pleadings, substantive or alternative, that Buta Mal and his sons created the alleged coparcenary by contributing their incomes or blending their property, an allegation which would have been inconsistent with the plaintiff's pleadings that Atma Ram and his sons were already a joint Hindu family possessed only of joint property, that Buta Mal succeeded to ancestral joint property by survival, that Buta Mal's acquisitions were subsequently made with the help of the nucleus and that the expenses of his son's education and the money for Kanshi Ram's acquisitions came out of joint family funds, therefore, plaintiff's suit must fail, so far as Kanshi Ram is concerned, if the case described above as set up by the pleaders is not established, even if some proof be found of the creation of a joint coparcenary estate including the disputed property either by blending of property or income or the contribution of saving into a joint family fund.

Sir Muhammad Shafi has cited in this connexion an array of important rulings laying down the principles that the determination in a cause should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case made thereby. Eshen Chunder Singh v. Shamacharan Bhatto (1) cited in Mylapore Iyasawmy Vyapoory Moodaliar v. Yeo Kay (2) and by the Punjab Chief Court in Ali Gauhar Khan v. Muhammad Hussain (3) that a new case is not to be substituted for the one set up in the pleadings, Durga Bakhsh Singh v. Muhammad Ali Beg (4), and that a party is not entitled to rely on evidence supporting a case not consistent with the pleading, Ram Rakha Mal v. Devidas (5), although his pleadings may be amended, Pool v. Secretary of State (6). In reply Mr. Jagan Nath for the plaintiffs contends first that the plaintiffs' claim from the beginning until now has been that there was a joint family in Buta Mal's time whose members owned a joint coparcenary, that there was no necessity for them to give in detail the processes by which this coparcenary was created, that its creation by conduct of the sons was suggested in para. 2 (i) of the replication (at p. 31 of the Book A) where it was stated that Shankar Das did as a matter of fact give his savings after deduction of expenses to his father, and in the statement of 6th May 1918 before issues were struck, where Shankar Das stated that Buta Mal acquired the Ferozepore property "from joint family money" and that he, Shankar Das, used to make over his savings to his father as a member of the joint Hindu family (p. 56 of Book A). In the second place Mr Jagan Nath contends that there is ample authority for not enforcing the principles relied on by Sir Muhammad Shafi in cases like the present one where the defendants were certainly not taken by surprise or hampered, and evidence was fully taken. He has referred us to a number of rulings in which variation between pleadings and proof have not been regarded as fatal.

In Karson Das Dharamsay v. Gangabai (7) the Bombay Court overruled a somewhat similar objection in a case resembling this one (though the pleas raised originally appear to have been much more definite than those in the present case). In Ram Nand Chatterjee v. Kusum Kamini Debi (8) a suit for partition of ancestral joint property, the plaintiff had alleged that certain properties were acquired by his grandfather, who was also the grandfather of the defendants but the case as developed in the evidence was that the properties were acquired by the plaintiffs' father as karta with joint family funds. This variation was held not to justify a dismissal of the claim in respect of those properties. This ruling was followed in Kumudini Dassya v. Mukta Sundar Dassya (9). An interesting review of the case law on the point will be found in Ananda Chandra v. Braja Lal Singh (10).

The truth in this case appears to me to be that the plaintiffs came into Court with a very vague notion of the distinct facts on which they proposed to rely, and when pressed for elucidation they did not clearly put forward the case that the alleged coparcenary holding all its property jointly came into existence by an intentional blending of their property by the members of the family or the creation of a joint fund to which they contributed their savings. The questions whether the family formed a coparcenary, the members of which held their property in common and how it came into existence were not put expressly in issue, and there is no doubt that the plaintiffs did allege, in support of their claim to share in the properties in dispute, the fact that the members of the family did contribute some of their property—their savings—to a fund controlled by their father, and evidence relating to this allegation was produced by the parties. Such evidence was certainly relevant to prove the existence of the joint property of which partition was claimed. Having regard to these circumstances, the form in which issues were struck for trial and the principles laid down by the authorities cited by Mr. Jagan Nath, I have examined the whole of the evidence to decide whether the lower Court was correct in its conclusions that Buta Mal and his sons held the property in dispute as joint of the family. As I have found for reasons given in this judgment that no such blending or contribution took place as would make this property joint, the point taken by Sir Muhammad Shafi need not be considered further.

As it will now be necessary continuously to examine in detail the oral evidence in the case, a general observation as to its nature will not be out of place here. It consists for the most part of the depositions of the defendants from whose admissions the plaintiffs attempted to prove their case. It is, therefore, mostly tainted by self-interest. It is prevaricating, often unconvincing and to be accepted with caution except when corroborated by documentary, circumstantial or disinterested parol evidence. In considering it two important features have, however, to be borne in mind : one is that Shankar Das who conducted the suit never himself went into the witness-box and the other is that the evidence of Mul Chand, in consultation with whom the suit was launched, who was siding with the plaintiffs, supplied them with documents and appears to have been used as their mouthpiece in Court, carries, in view of these facts, considerable weight when it does not directly support the plaintiffs' case.

According to the case set up by the plaintiffs in their evidence the nucleus of ancestral property inherited by Buta Mal consisted of : (1) money earned by Atma Ram and Buta Mal in joint business in Amritsar and Ferozepore ; (2) two shops in Kasur and (3) a small plot of land and mortgagee rights in two houses in Ferozepore. (The judgment then discussed evidence and concluding that the only ancestral property proved to have been inherited by Buta Mal was a share in a small house in Amritsar and one shop or possibly two shops in Kasur, property incapable of yielding an income sufficient to maintain Atma Ram, proceeded.)

It may now be considered as settled law that it is necessary to establish the existence of a nucleous of joint family property before the property in the possession of any one member can be presumed to be joint property (Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th edition para. 290.)

But the proposition on which Mr. Jagan Nath here takes his stand is that if there is joint Hindu family with an ancestral nuclous of joint property, however small, the onus of proving that any particular item of property, alleged to be joint is separate, lies upon the person asserting that it is so, and this onus has not, he urges, been discharged. Reliance is placed on Mahadeo Kasaudham v. Gaya Din Kasandhan (11), Moti Lal v. Harji Mal (A. I. R. 1926 Nagpur 146) and Sukhnandan v. Brijnandan (A. I. R. 1923 All. 574.) The first of these judgments cited certainly laid down broadly the principle asserted by Mr. Jagan Nath and held that in that case the onus had not been discharged. The second dealt with a case upon grounds not to be found in the one before us now. In the third case the Allahabad Court, while remarking that property which was incapable of yielding any income might not be treated as a nucleus for the purpose of affecting the presumption as to subsequent acquisitions, held that there was in the case before it a nucleus consisting not only of an ancestral house but of an ancestral business and that the onus lay on the party who claimed as his own property acquired mainly by his exertions to prove his case.

It is urged by Sir Muhammad Shafi (and here Mr. Moti Sagar for Bihari Lal is with him) that the mere proof of the existence of some nucleus, however small, would raise no such presumption as that contended for by Mr. Jagan Nath and that until the plaintiffs could prove that the nucleus in this case was substantial, and such as could be used, and was used, for the acquisition of the property in dispute, the onus of proving that this property is partible was still upon them, that this onus has not been discharged and that in any case if the onus lay upon Kanshi Ram to show that the property he claims as his own is separate, he has discharged it.

The point of presumption was decided by this Court in Iqbal Singh v. Jang Bahadur Singh (12) in which case, after reference to Lal Bahadur v. Kanhaya Lal (13) and Sukhnandan v. Brij Narain (A. I. R. 1923 All. 574) it was held that as the nucleus proved was very small no presumption of jointness of subsequently acquired property arose. The onus of proof in such cases must depend upon the circumstances of that particular case : Trailakyanath Char v. Chintamony Dutt (14). The question of onus was considered at length by the Nagpur Judicial Commissioners in Birdi Chand Lal v. Popat Lal (15) which cited many of the rulings placed before us. The lower Court had in that case held that in order to raise any presumption based on family nucleus it must be shown that it was possible to have incurred the cost of the property claimed as joint from that family source. This view was confirmed by the Judicial Commissioner who remarked that where some nucleus has been established > the matter does not and could not rest there, and the lower Courts were legally entitled to take the smallness and the apparent insufficiency of the nucleus into consideration in deciding whether the presumption (in favour of jointness) was amply rebutted in view of the evidence read as a whole, and to come to the conclusion whether the cost could have come out of it and whether as a matter of fact the family nucleus was taken in making the new acquisition.

Adopting this view of the law my opinion is that the extent and value of the nucleus proved to have existed in this case were not such as to raise the presumption relied on by Mr. Jagan Nath, but on the contrary were such as to make it impossible that Buta Mal's acquisitions were made with its help. The ancestral property being incapable of being considered as the germ from which the estate possessed by Buta Mal expanded that estate must be deemed to have been acquired by Buta Mal by himself and for himself as full owner.

I come now to the question whether there was any such blending of property or income as created a common fund of property, monetary or other, of which the acquisitions of Buta Mal and his sons must be considered to have become a part. As regards blending of his property and business by Buta Ram and his father, proof that a common business was carried on with such blended funds has been found by the lower Court only in the account book which has now been excluded from the evidence. This part of the case, therefore, calls for no further consideration. It has been made sufficiently clear in this judgment that the plaintiffs never alleged clearly in their pleadings the creation of a joint coparcenary by blending of any kind between the members of the family. Nor has it at any time been alleged that any property was acquired jointly with the intention of making it joint of the members who acquired it or of all of the coparceners. This is not a case of an ancestral family firm or business or of a large immovable ancestral estate to which the presumption of the Hindu law of property would be clearly applicable. The family on the contrary was of the typical Punjab Hindu family, not joint in food or worship, described in the last paragraph on p. 356 in Rup Chand v. Basanta Mal (16) to which the presumptions of Hindu law are indeed applicable but with a force less general and rigid than in the other provinces : See also the remarks in Muharrim Ali Chishti v. Bansi Lal (17).

The learned Subordinate Judge's emphatic finding that Buta Mal and his sons constituted a joint Hindu family whose members held these properties in common is, so far as I understand his intention, based on the evidence, first, of the existence of the alleged germ in the form of a nucleus of ancestral property and, secondly, of the conduct of Buta Mal and his sons which in his opinion proved that this coparcenary existed throughout Buta Mal's life. "It is clear beyond doubt" he says, > that Rai Bahadur But Mal and his sons formed a joint estate and every one fully recognized the position and did what he could to enrich and agument the family estate (p 280).

Mr. Jagan Nath has not pointed to any evidence suggesting a deliberate creation at any particular time of a coparcenary holding all its property jointly. "The question," he says, "is not of blending but whether the parties kept their property separate".

There is no evidence of any mutual agreement by the members of the family to end a pre-existing state of affairs and to throw their separate acquisitions into a family hotchpot or create a new family fund by contributing the earnings. The lower Court has rightly found that as a matter of fact the plaintiff Shankar Das did not contribute his earnings to a common fund. There is no presumption that the members of a joint Hindu family possess their acquisitions as joint coparcenary property and in view of the finding I have come to on the matter of nucleus the question whether the parties were joint owners of the disputed property might, I think, be properly determined against the plaintiffs forthwith. But the case which Mr. Jagan Nath has adopted in support of the judgment before us appears, if I understand him rightly, to be that the evidence proves that, nucleus or no nucleus, the parties as a matter of fact did form a joint family with joint coparcenary property, however created, that they recognized and admitted the existence of this coparcenary and its joint property and did enrich it from time to time by contributions from their savings and additions to it of their separately acquired property. It is, therefore, necessary in view of the decision upon Sir Mohammad Shafi's preliminary objection on the pleadings to examine the whole evidence and decide whether it establishes the facts upon which Mr. Jagan Nath takes his stand. (The judgment then discussed the evidence and proceeded.) There are only four ways in which a joint Hindu family holding as joint coparcenary all the property possessed by its members can be proved to have come into being: (1) by showing that ancestral joint property existed in the hands of the karta and was used by him for further acquisitions for the family, (2) by showing that a joint family as such jointly acquired property, (3) by proving that the property acquired by a member was intentionally acquired for the family and (4) by the blending of their property by the members for the creation of a joint fund or a family hotchpot of property.

There is nothing in any of the authorities cited before us by Mr. Jagan Nath to warrant the supposition that a joint family holding all the property in the hands of its members as joint of the family can be created in any other way.

I have, I think, surveyedwith sufficient detail the evidence on which the lower Court appears to have decided that Buta Mal and his sons were a joint family holding all their acquisitions and earnings as joint family property. The plaintiffs on whom the onus lay of showing that a substantial nucleus of ancestral property or a joint fund or property joint of the family existed have not themselves faced the Court to rebut the direct evidence of Kanshi Ram and Bihari Lal. That evidence, cannot, as already remarked, be regarded as of the most reliable kind, but, after making all allowances for the taint of personal interest and bearing in mind the shifting attitude of the parties towards each other both before and after the suit was instituted, my conclusions are that the parties and their father neither inherited a germinal nucleus of ancestral property to which their acquisitions could be traced nor made any acquisitions for the joint benefit of the family nor intentionally at any time blended their property or earnings in order to create a joint family whose members held their acquisitions in common, and that Buta Mal was a self-made man who jealously and properly regarded the property acquired by him as his own.

Assuming, however, that the parties and their father did constitute a joint family posessing a joint fund, or some joint property traceable to an ancestral nucleus, or otherwise brought into being, it is clear, I think, that Kanshi Ram's acquisitions must be held to be his own separate property. These acquisitions were paid for out of Kanshi Ram's professional earnings with the help of money borrowed from outside the family.

The ordinary gains resulting from education at the expense of joint funds of a Hindu family are no doubt partible. The principles followed in the more recent cases decided by the Privy Council on the subject Metharam Ramrakhiaomal v. Rewa Chand Ramrakihiomal (18) and Amar Nath Gopal Chand v. Hukam Chand Nathu Mal (19) are discussed in paras. 283 and 284 of Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th Edition. In the latter case their Lordships after reviewing the whole case-law laid it down that all acquisitions by members of a joint family are prima facie partible and the burden of proof lies on those who assert to the contrary, and that the gains of science are exempted from this rule only when the education which made such gains possible is affirmatively shown to have been acquired without detriment to the family estate.

I have already referred to the statement made by Buta Mal in a civil Court in 1896 regarding Kanshi Ram's exclusive title in the lands at Ferozepore.

Kanshi Ram's own testimony (p. 100 of Book A) is that his school-fees were never more than Rs. 2-8-0 per mensem. When he passed his "Middle School Examination" he won a scholarship of Rs. 5/- per mensem which his father took from him. After passing the University Matriculation Examination he took a scholarship of Rs. 10/- p. m. As soon as he passed the Mukhtar's examination he began practising in the Lahore Court attending lectures at the same time and renting lodgings at Rs. 2-9-0 per month. He passed the Pleader's examination 11 months later and then started practice in February 1891 and maintained himself entirely having full control over his earnings. I do not find in this evidence justification for the learned Sub-Judge's finding that Kanshi Ram received a "special professional education, and that at the expenses of the family estate" but rather that his school education was ordinary and his professional education was not paid for either by his father or out of any family fund. The circumstances are obviously entirely different from those in Amar Nath Gokal Chand v. Hukam Chand Nathu Mal (19) where there was a joint ancestral business and the son who claimed the earnings to be his separate property failed to depose at the trial that his specialized education in England was obtained by his own self-taught efforts.

Bashi Ram's earnings must also be held to be impartible for it is proved that his education, though of a special kind, was paid for by his father and not out of any joint fund.

On all these findings, that there was no substantial nucleus of ancestral property by the aid of which Buta Mal's acquisitions were made, that, therefore, these were his own, that he and his family did not form a joint Hindu family holding all its property jointly as copercenary property, that Kanshi Ram's earnings and acquisitions were his own, that he never threw them into a family hotchpot but kept them separate, Kanshi Ram's and Bashi Ram's appeal must succeed and the property claimed by them as their separate property excluded from partition. Mr. Jagan Nath for the plaintiffs had stated that his clients do not ask for partition of the nuptial gifts received by Bashi Ram or any other member of the family and counsel for the appellants have agreed to the exclusion from partition of all such gifts.

I come now to the appeal by Bihari Lal, No. 1287, praying for the exclusion from partition of the factory and press, their appurtenances, and a bungalow and garden in Kot Rai Buta Mal revenue estate at Kot Radha Kishan Station.

Embarrassed as he was by the fractural manœuvering that preceded the litigation the choice of a defence to the plaintiffs' claim to a partition of this property appears to have perplexed Bihari Lal no less than the difficulty of stating their case troubled the plaintiffs.

His first claim set forth in his written pleas of 19th May 1917 (printed in Book D) was limited to the factory and press, the machinery, buildings and houses appurtenant thereto, a bungalow and a garden which were declared to belong to himself, his minor son Amrit Lal, Mul Chand's son Radha Kishen and Radha Kishen's two minor sons. In an affidavit put in on 17th November 1913 he affirmed that the factory and press were the exclusive property of himself and Radha Kishan. In her pleas of 16th February 1918 Mrs. Buta Mal who obviously favoured her youngest son declared Behari Lal to be the sole-owner of this property and the same declaration was made by Bihari Lal in a petition presented to the Court on 4th March 1918. It was not until he was examined with a view to the striking of issues on 6th May 1918 that Bihari Lal defined his share in the property as two-thirds, the remaining one-third being allotted to Radha Kishan. It was then he put forward the plea that the property had been made over to him in 1894 or 1895 by Buta Mal by way of advancement as a provision for his maintenance and that Radha Kishan "came in" later on. On 8th November 1922, after the plaintiffs had amended their plaint to correct an error of description, Bihari Lal took the opportunity to amend his pleas in order to claim a very much more extensive area of urban property than he did at first, and to claim it "in sole ownership" as his self-acquired property. When giving evidence on 4th May 1923 he claimed "all the urban property at Kot Radha Kishan" (much more, that is to say, than the factory press and their appurtenances).

The issue struck for trial was :

whether the factory and buildings connected therewith at Kot Radha Kishan are the exclusive property of Lala Bihari Lal and Lala Radha Kishan ?

In his appeal Bihari Lal has claimed as his own separate property the whole "urban area" at Kot Radha Kishan but Mr. Moti Sagar states that his clients' appeal relates only to the factory, the press and their appurtenances—the area claimed is marked by a surrounding red line in the plan Exhibit p. 11 covering an area of 7 ghamaons approximately—together with the garden and the bungalow, the bungalow being the residence of his client who was the manager, and the garden its compound.

Radha Kishan has not appealed. The obscurity surrounding the basis of his claim, one of the results of the uncertainty of Bihari Lal's position, Mr. Moti Sagar has not been able to dispel. He states, however, that Bihari Lal claims to be joint undivided owner of two-thirds and admits Radha Kishan's title to a share of one-third. He asks for a decree to that effect which it is in our power to grant under the provisions of O. 41, 33, Civil P. C. In this respect he is joined by Mr. Fakir Chand who appears for Radha Kishan as a respondent to all the appeals.

The case now put forward by Mr. Moti Sagar is that the evidence proves that Buta Mal bought the factory for his son as an advancement to provide him with an independent livelihood. If, however, this case is not found to be established Mr. Moti Sagar's contention is that in any case it is proved that there was a family settlement, or such conduct of the family as amounted virtually to a settlement, by which the property in dispute was made over to Bihari Lal—an arrangement which was acted upon and is irrevocable. This settlement he says, is evidenced by the recorded "orders of the lady mother" of 1915 and the parties' conduct at and about that time.

The site of the factory was acquired by Buta Mal in 1886. The superstructure was built in 1891-92 by a partnership, ostensibly between Bihari Lal and a Parsee, Bapuji, who mortgaged the factory to Mr. Awar Bai, on 15th July 1892, by registered-deed for Rs. 8,000. Bihari Lal was then 16 years old and his father still a District Judge in Government service. The factory was leased in 1893 to Asmat Ullah, Bihari Lal being disclosed as lessor. The partnership "fell through" and the factory was leased again ostensibly by Bihari Lal to Jahangir Jee Sorabjee. The mortgage was redeemed on 30th March 1895, with a cheque for Rs. 2,000/- drawn by Buta Mal, a hundi for the same amount and a bond for Rs. 4,000/-. Bihari Dal declares that he himself paid off the hundis (we do not know more about the bond). In 1895 Bihari Lal was removed from College being then in his second year, and sent to work in the factory. In the following year a partnership deed was drawn up between Bihari Lal and a number of "experienced business-men" (so styled by Kanshi Ram) Joti Mal and others, including, a Kanshi Ram, who was not the appellant. The factory was rebuilt. This partnership was dissolved, the other partners being bought out, according to Bihari Lal, by himself with help from his father who contributed Rs. 10,000 or Rs. 15,000 but, according to Kanshi Ram, by Buta Mal. This was in 1897. The factory continued to be run at a loss and was closed for two years. About this time Radha Kishan, who had failed to obtain a University degree was sent to join Bihari Lal at the factory. In 1904 the cotton press was added. Bihari Lal says he paid the cost of it, borrowing Rs. 20,000 from the Punjab Banking Company jointly with his father. Thenceforward Bihari Lal and Radha Kishan managed the factory, for themselves according to them, or for the joint family, according to plaintiffs, and for Buta Mal according to Kanshi Ram.

The principle of Hindu law laid down in 1854 in Gopeekist Gosain v. Gunga Pershad Gosain (20) and repeated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Parbat Devi v. Baikuntha Nath Das (21) that when a purchase of real estate is made by a Hindu in the name of one of his sons the presumption is in favour of its being a benami purchase and the burden of proof lies on the party in whose name it was purchased to prove that he was solely entitled to the legal and beneficial interest in the permananent estate, has never been definitely dissented from. It was applied in the Punjab by the Chief Court in Ghulam Dastgir v. Teja Singh (22). These and other important rulings approve the source from which acquisition was made as the main criterion for deciding whether the person in whose name a benami purchase is made is or is not the real owner. Mr. Moti Sagar, while conceding that the source of the purchase money which admittedly was in this case supplied by Buta Mal, is one of the criteria, urges that it is not the sole one (and this has frequently been expressed by the Courts) but that the surrounding circumstances in the present case afford evidence amply sufficient to rebut the presumption.

He cites Raj Kunwari v. Maharaj Kunwar (23), where in referring to the general rule as to the criterion laid in Gopeekrist Gosain v. Ganga Parsaud Gosain (20), the Oudh Judicial Commissioner's Court found an "important qualification" of the rule as quoted by the Privy Council in Bilas Kunwar v. Des Raj Ranit Singh (24), namely that the rule applied only in the absence of all other relevant circumstances. The Oudh judgment goes on to quote from Mahbub Ali Khan v. Bharat Indu (25).

> Benami transactions are very familiar in Indian practice, and as Lord Hobhouse said in Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh, even a slight quantity of evidence to show that it was a sham transaction will suffice for the purpose . . . . Such a (benami) transfer cannot be considered as nothing, the person who impugns its apparent character must show something or other to establish that it is a benami or sham transaction.

Mr. Moti Sagar has also referred us to Panton v. Administrator General, Bombay (26), but that was not decided according to Hindu Law, and Harihar Prasad Singh v. Kesheo Prasad Singh (27) where, however, the general rule of presumption in favour of the person who supplied the purchase price was accepted "But" as remarked by Miller, C. J., in that judgment, > apart from the fact that the presumption is rebutted its strength or weakness can only be guaged by reference to all the surrounding circumstances.

The question of initial presumption is not, however, of great importance in the present case. Both sides have produced evidence and we have to consider it in order to decide not merely how far the presumption is supported by the circumstances of the time but also whether the evidence as a whole proves that the factory, its appurtenances and business were made over to Bihari Lal, or as a fact remained Buta Mal's property until his death.

The circumstances to which Mr. Moti Sagar points as proving conclusively Buta Mal's intention to make over the property in dispute to the appellant were these.

Mul Chand had been safely launched upon an official career. In 1899 he was drawing Rs. 80 per mensem as a clerk in the Financial Commissioner's Office. Kanshi Ram had started practice as a pleader in 1891 and in 1892 Shankar Das obtained his first official appointment as overseer of Crown Land (Darogha Nazul) at Lahore. Bihari Lal alone remained unprovided with a career. Buta Mal was well off and passing middle age. It would have been natural enough and in accordance with custom for him to start his youngest son upon an independent business career and for this purpose make him a separate allotment of property. Bihari Lal was still at his studies. These were cut short to his own detriment so far as professional prospects were concerned, and he was sent to take charge of the property allotted to him before he was twenty years old. Where the evidence limited to that of these circumstances it might perhaps be held to have discharged the onus upon Behari Lal. But the mass of evidence through which we have been taken in detail by Mr. Moti Sagar and counsel for the plaintiffs appears to me to disprove the case of advancement and to show that while the other sons broke away from their father on their independent careers, although remaining members of the joint Hindu family, Bihari Lal, unfortunately as it turned out for himself, stayed along with his father and was employed by him to manage under his control the factory and press which belonged to and were financed by Buta Mal until the latter died.

These are in fact the conclusions at which the learned Subordinate Judge has, after reviewing the evidence at length, himself arrived. In his opinion it was proved beyond doubt that the factory was started by R. B. Buta Mal, was worked under his control and supervision by L. Bihari Lal and latterly by Bihari Lal and Radha Kishan, was financed by R. B. Buta Mal, as long as he lived

indicated clearly that R. B. Buta Mal was the master of the factory and not L. Bihari Lal.

(The judgment then discussed the evidence and proceeded). Now the best evidence that Behari Lal could have produced to prove that the factory and press were his own concern and property, as he claimed them to be, would have been forthcoming in the accounts of the business carried on there. In his pleadings he relied upon these account books, though he was, from the beginning, apparently, doubtful of the wisdom of producing them, for in the list of documehts put in on 21st June 1917, we find the words "except those which were burnt". These words were, however, deleted deliberately by his counsel whose signature is on the erasure in the original document. He was ordered by the Court to specify the books and on the application of the plaintiffs a notice for production of the factory accounts was passed under O. 11, R. (14), Civil P. C. He protested on the grounds that their production would be inconvenient for the business and that the application was vexatious and frivolous Subsequently, however, when questioned before the issues were struck, his pleader stated that he would rely on books relating to the factory and press. It is certain, therefore, that he possessed books and contemplated their production so late as 6th May 1918. Nevertheless he had not produced them in spite of the Court's orders, by 24th August 1918, when his refusal was adversely commented on in the Sub-Judge's order appointing a receiver to take over the property. On 10th March 1923 he declared on solemn affirmation that "all his books had been burnt in 1907-08 or 1909." This declaration has every appearance of falsehood in face of his previous reliance on his accounts. But even if it was true, Behari Lal must still have had in his possession the accounts for the years after 1907 or 1908 or 1909.

Bihari Lal's failure to produce these books raises a strong presumption that their evidence would confirm in a conclusive manner the documentary evidence referred to above.

It remains to deal with the second line of Mr. Moti Sagar's attack—the contention that the property in dispute was made over to Bihari Lal by a family settlement recorded as the "orders of the Lady mother" on 4th April 1915. Objection is taken to this document on plaintiff's behalf on the ground that it must fail of effect because it was not registered as required by S. 17 (1) (b), Registration Act. Much argument has centred round this objection. Several of the "orders" certainly refer to rights and interests in valuable immovable property and if the orders did by themselves create these rights or interests, were agreed to by the sons and were intended to operate as a final deed, their admission in evidence is precluded by that statute.

According to the plaintiffs this document did not and was not intended to be operative, and if this is true, it obviously did not require registration. Mr. Moti Sagar, avoiding the difficulty has not argued that by itself it created any title but relies upon it as merely a recital of a previously arranged family settlement in which recital his clients' claim was recognized and therefore a weighty piece of evidence in favour of his clients' claim. Such a document would not require registration: Bakhtawar v. Sundar Lal (28).

Admittedly no question of estoppel arises. The circumstances are in no way analogous to those in Mohomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (29) in which the Privy Council held effective, as having given rise to equities which had to be administered, a compromise which though defective for want of registration had been acted upon by the parties for more than thirty years. Nor in the present case was there any mutal settlement so carried into effect that nothing remained to be done as was there in Kunti v. Gajraj Tiwari (30) where the parties had for nine years been in undisputed enjoyment of property of which they had taken possession under their agreement.

Whatever the intentions of the parties were at the time it is certain that they did not wholly accept and give effect to the settlement of which the vague and inconsistent "orders" of their mother are alleged by the appellant to have been a recital. She herself was to get the rent of the Amritsar property and "as much as she wished to take of" the income of property in Lyallpur District. We do not know if she has received anything from these sources. It appears that Radha Kishen has not got the Rs. 10,000 proposed to be given by Cl. 4 for this is the sum his father is now asking for him, nor have the mother and her daughter, so far as we know, been given the money mentioned in Cl. 9. On the very day that the orders were recorded, Mul Chand and Kanshi Ram wrote to the Alliance Bank of Simla asking for their father's account to be entered in the names of all the four brothers as members of a joint Hindu family who had succeeded to their father's estate. Two days later all four brothers wrote to the Punjab National Bank asking the bank to continue to deal with their account in the same form as it was treated before the orders with Behari Lal operating on their account. Two months afterwards Kanshi Ram informed Behari Lal that he would retain his share in the press at Kot Radha Kishen and Mul Chand wrote a document giving up his rights "in the factory" as desired by his younger brother Behari Lal, but he reserved the rights of his sons, especially, Radha Kishen to take such action as they thought proper. Neither of these two letters express unreserved compliance with the orders but were obviously only negotiations with a view to compromise the disputes still pending in spite of them.

It is incredible that Kanshi Ram, Shankar Das and Mul Chand all men with practical legal experience could have ever regarded the document, worded as it was, to be an effective deed of contract or would have allowed it to remain as the only formal record of an enforceable mutual agreement seriously intended. Certainly it could not have been seriously contemplated that Shankar Das was to lose the whole of his inheritance if he failed to pay "the money" as he was enjoined to do by Cl. 10. A father can in certain circumstances bind his minor children by a bona fide compromise, but there is no ground for supposing that Mul Chand had authority to settle for Radha Kishen who at one time claimed the whole factory and press jointly with Behari Lal and still claims a third share but was allowed only a fourth share in its income by Cl. 4, and this only if his uncle approved his work. The Ferozepore property was in dispute at the time but the "orders" made no reference to it.

(28) A. I. R. 1926 All 173=48 All. 213.
(29) A. I. R. 1914 P. C. 27=42 Cal. 801=42 I. A. 1 (P. C.).
(30) A. I. R. 1924 All. 826=46 All. 847.

Having regard to all the evidence I think that the Subordinate Judge's view of the proceedings of the brothers connected with their mother's orders is correct. The document simply recorded Mrs. Buta Mal's own wishes and proposals and her sons' signatures attested not their assent to but their knowledge of them.

It follows that the orders of the mother have no such value as Mr. Moti Sagar would attach to them. They are not put forward as proof of any advancement and they do not, in my opinion, prove the fact of any valid settlement warranting Behari Lal's and Radha Kishen's claim that the factory and press with their appurtenances and the bungalow and garden at Kot Rai Buta Mal were their separate property and impartible.

Mr. Moti Sagar has not shown us any good grounds for differing from the lower Court's decision that Behari Lal is not entitled to remuneration for managing the factory before the institution of the suit.

Behari Lal flatly denied the other parties' rights in the property and refused to disclose the accounts of the business. He was operating on the Banking account when his father who supported him was alive and there is no evidence to show that he suffered financially in any way by being deprived of the manager's share of profits.

The lower Court's orders regarding the taking of accounts have been attacked in appeal by both Behari Lal and the plaintiffs. Behari Lal is not accountable to the other parties for the profits of the joint property in his possession (it became joint of Buta Mal's heirs on his death) before October 1915, the date of the family disruption, there being no allegation of fraud or other improper conduct on his part. The law on the subject is set forth clearly in p. 196 of Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, 5th Edition, where the case law is fully cited. The parties are not bound to accept Behari Lal's statement as to what the property consisted of, and the actually existing state of the property is to be seen : Pormeshwar Dube v. Gobind Dube (31).

Mr. Jagan Nath has stated that he does not press the points raised in the first four paragraphs of the plaintiff's appeal (No. 1047 of 1924) and counsel for all parties have expressed their consent with the orders referred to in them. He asks, however, for a modification in his client's favour of the orders relating to rendition of the accounts by Bihari Lal. The lower Court has ordered accounts to be taken from Behari Lal and Radha Kishen relating to the factory, the press and other business upto October 1915 only, remarking that after that date the brothers are merely entitled to compensation for the user of the factory by Behari Lal and Radha Kishen upto January 1919 when Behari Lal took a lease of the factory and press under the order of the Court.

I think it proper that the whole question of what the parties are entitled to should be settled here and the decree I propose to pass will provide for this.

The additional ground of appeal submitted by the plaintiffs dated 29th June 1926 (the petition submitting them will be found at p. 56 of the Book C) has not been argued. Nor has Mr. Jagan Nath pressed the cross-objections. See the printed paper book E, the two matters raised in which are disposed of by the order I propose to pass.

I have now dealt with all the five appeals before me. The case is a most unsatisfactory one from almost every point of view. By obstructive and dilatory tactics the parties dragged out over seven years a trial which might have been concluded in a 12 month. Their intrigues and the consequently unreliable and perplexing character of their evidence have already been noticed. The resulting difficulty in dealing with these appeals has been greatly augmented by the manner in which the parties threw their documents upon the record without regard to legal formalities. Important documents were produced or discovered upon the record years after the hearing had begun. The confusion was aggravated by the lax procedure of the Court itself, which allowed a mass of documents to be placed from time to time upon the record without strict proof, admission of parties or its own signed authority. Some of these were and are still relied upon by all parties. Others to which exception has been taken before us were apparently used at the trial without objection.

I have endeavoured to admit to consideration only those documents the genuineness of which was satisfactorily proved or obviously admitted or which ought, for the reasons I have given in my judgment, to have been allowed to come upon the record. The statements of the grounds in the appeals of Kanshi Ram (No. 1041) and Behari Lal are extremely prolix and the appeals were argued in great detail. I have, however, dealt with all the points raised before us by counsel in each appeal. My conclusions are embodied in the following order:

The appeals of Mrs. Buta Mal (No. 1376) and Amrit Lal (No. 1211) are dismissed.

The appeal of Kanshi Ram and Banshi Ram (No. 1041) is accepted.

The appeal of Behari Lal (No. 1287) is dismissed.

The appeal of the plaintiffs is accepted as regards the taking of accounts to the extent shown below.

The savings from their income and the property acquired out of such savings in possession of the parties and the immovable property in Ferozepore are declared impartible, as are also the nuptial gifts received by the parties. All the other property listed in the plaint is partible, the shares of R. S. Mul Chand, R. S. Shankar Das, Lala Kanshi Ram, Lala Behari Lal and Mrs. Buta Mal being one-fifth each, after deduction of a sum of Rs. 10,000 to be paid to Bibi Ram Rakhi who will also be entitled to maintenance, the amount to be fixed by the final decree and a right of residence. The property assessed to land revenue will be partitioned by the revenue authorities. The Commissioner will partition the other partible property. For this purpose he will examine the accounts as they stood on 31st October 1915, relating to the factory, press and business and the other property at Kot Radha Kishen and Rai Buta Mal and the accounts showing the income from the Lyallpur lands administered by R. S. Shankar Das and all other accounts showing the income accrued from partible property elsewhere in the possession of parties, so as to determine the shares of the parties in all these properties on 31st October 1915. The Commissioner will also in order to determine the share of each of the five shares take account from Lala Behari Lal, Lala Radha Kishen and R. S. Shankar Das of the accumulations and accretions of these properties from 1st November 1915 up to the times when they were taken in possession by a receiver or leased under the orders of the Court.

The directions of the lower Court regarding the propriety of keeping the factory and press and the other large integral bundles of property intact, of giving Lala Behari Lal the first choice of acquiring the factory and press, of making the parties bid for the properties which ought to be kept in tact and of equalizing shares by pecuniary adjustments should be followed by the Commissioner.

Having regard to the conduct of the parties before and during the litigation and the result of the case as a whole I think that Kanshi Ram should receive his costs in the lower Court and the costs of his appeal from Shankar Das who will be entitled to be paid by Behari Lal half of his costs in the suit and the whole of his costs in Behari Lal's appeal.

With these exceptions the parties will bear their own costs here and below.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal, Tara Singh Narola and Sheocharan Das—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by a judgment-debtor under O. 43, R. 1 (j), Civil P. C., against an order refusing to set aside a sale. The refusal was based on two grounds, viz., (1) that the judgment-debtor's application was not entertainable as he had failed to implead the auction-purchaser as a respondent, and (2) that he had failed to produce any evidence in proof of his objections. Both these grounds are untenable.

With regard to (1), the executing Court has relied on Ajuddin Ahamed v. Khoda Bux (1) which was followed by a Judge of the Patna High Court in Sumitra Kuer v. Damri Lall (2). In the former case a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that under the present Code of Civil Procedure, the auction-purchaser is a necessary party to a proceeding for setting aside an auction-sale and that, therefore, a Court has no jurisdiction to hear an application for setting aside a sale under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., to which one of the auction-purchasers is not added as a party until after the expiry of the period fixed by law for making him a party.

This view was expressly dissented from in Bibi Zainab v. Paras Nath (3), and contrary view was taken in Ganesh Bal Naik v. Vithal Vaman Mahalya (4), Raj Chandra Das v. Kali Kanta Das (5), Abdur Rahman v. Har Narayan Das (6), Ghazanfar Husain v. Ram Ratan (7) and Iswardas Marwari v. Biseswar Lal Marwari (8).

Now, the law which requires that the auction-purchaser should be heard before passing an order affecting him is contained in the proviso to Cl. (2), R. 92, O. 21, Civil P. C. That proviso runs thus:

Provided that no order shall be made unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby.

It is clear that the requirements of the above proviso are fulfilled if no final order affecting the auction-purchaser is passed unless notice of the application to set aside the sale is given to him. This proviso does not fix any period for giving that notice to the auction-purchaser, and there is no provision in the Indian Limitation Act for such notice. As no order affecting the auction-purchaser had yet been made the application could not have been thrown out on the ground No. (1).

As regards the second ground, the date fixed for evidence was 22nd November 1926. On that date eight out of the 15 witnesses summoned by the judgment-debtor were in attendance but they were not examined and the case was adjourned to the following day for hearing arguments on the petition filed by the auction-purchaser. No witnesses, however, appeared the next day, but even if the judgment-debtor was responsible for their non-appearance on that date, he was entitled to have his remaining witnesses summoned and examined. It cannot be said that he failed to produce any evidence.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the executing Court confirming the sale and direct that the judgment-debtor's application be enquired into and disposed of according to law. The respondents to pay the judgment-debtor's costs in this Court.

M. L. Puri—for Appellants.

Zafarullah Khan—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Kundan Lal, respondent 4, to whom a certain sum of money was due by Kishen Gir, deceased, Gosain of Mauza Jodhka in Sirsa Tahsil of the Hissar District, obtained a money decree against Kishen Gir's five sons, two of whom were majors and the other three were minors. The amount of the decree together with costs was Rs. 1561-14-0 which was recoverable only from the estate of the deceased. On the decree-holder's application, 539 bighas of land belonging to the deceased was attached and a proclamation for sale was issued, it being specifically provided that only so much of the land was to be sold as was sufficient to discharge the decretal amount.

On 17th July 1925 Mani Gir, Kanwal Gir and Bhur Gir, the three minor sons of Kishen Gir deceased, filed an application in the executing Court objecting to the attachment of the aforesaid property on the ground that they were governed by agricultural custom, that the land was ancestral, that the debts for the payment of which the decree had been passed had not been raised for necessity and were, in any case tainted with immorality. Before these objections could be disposed of the auction was held on 18th July 1925, and the bid for Rs. 16,000 by Khan Sahib Yakin-ud-Din, respondent 3, for the entire land was accepted. The Sub Divisional Officer, Sirsa, who conducted the sale, noted that a number of persons were present at the auction but Yakin-ud-Din was the only bidder. He also recorded that Hazari Gir and his party were present and had protested that the price offered was too low and had requested that the land be resold at Sirsa, or in the alternative, the judgment-debtors be allowed to effect a private sale with a view to raise the requisite money to pay off the decretal amount. There is also a note that the auction-purchaser had not paid 25 per cent of the sale price on the day on which the auction had taken place and that he had been asked to deposit the amount in the treasury on 20th July.

On 20th Hazari Gir judgment-debtor appeared before the Sub-Divisional Officer and actually produced the entire decretal amount Rs. 1,561-14-0 in cash and prayed that "the sale proceedings be stayed." On the same day the auction-purchaser Yakin-ud-Din also appeared with 25 per cent of the sale price. He was allowed by the Sub-Divisional Officer to deposit the amount into the treasury, but the judgment-debtors were directed to make their submissions to the executing Court, the Senior Subordinate Judge of Hissar.

On 21st July 1925, the judgment-debtors, Hazari Gir and Jugal Gir, filed an application in the executing Court alleging a number of irregularities in publishing and conducting the sale. This application is headed

In re execution case Kundan Lal, decree-holder v. Hazari Gir and others. judgment-debtors.

It may be noted that the auction-purchaser was not specifically mentioned as a party to these proceedings. The Court directed that this application should come up for disposal together with the report of the auctioneer on 24th July 1925. On that date the judgment-debtors produced in the executing Court a receipt purporting to have been executed by the decree-holder on 22nd July 1925 and to have been verified before the Tahsildar of Bhiwani, reciting that he had received the entire decretal amount from the judgment-debtors and that nothing more was due to him. The Court directed this receipt to be placed on the record and passed an order that as the auction-purchaser was not present, proceedings would be ex parte against him. An issue was struck as to whether there had been irregularities in publishing and conducting the sale which had caused any substantial loss to the judgment-debtors, and the hearing was adjourned to 18th August 1925, for evidence. In the meantime the auction-purchaser paid the remaining three-fourths of the sale price on 5th August 1925. On 18th August 1925, when the case came up for hearing before the Court the auction-purchaser appeared through counsel and enquiry into the objections filed by the minor judgment-debtors Mani Gir etc. on 17th July 1925 and those filed by the adult judgment-debtors, Hazari Gir and Jugal Gir, on 21st July 1925, proceeded. Eventually both sets of objections were dismissed by the Senior Subordinate Judge on 6th November 1925. They preferred separate appeals to the learned District Judge who dismissed the appeal preferred by Hazari Gir and Jugal Gir but accepted the one preferred by the minors, Mani Gir etc. and remanded the case to the executing Court for decision of certain points. Both sets of objectors have come up to this Court and have filed two separate appeals.

I will first take up the appeal by Hazari Gir and Jugal Gir. (Civil appeal No. 492 of 1927). The objections filed by these objectors on 21st July 1925, had been dismissed by the executing Court on the merits, but their appeal was dismissed by the learned District Judge without recording a finding as to the alleged irregularities in publishing and conducting the sale as he was of opinion that the executing Court was debarred from enquiring into these objections by reason of the fact that the auction-purchaser had not been impleaded as a party within 30 days of the sale which had taken place on 18th July 1925 Mr. Zafrullah Khan for the respondents has raised a preliminary objection that this appeal is incompetent. He argues, and in my opinion rightly, that though the memorandum of appeal by these appellants filed in the Court of the District Judge purported to be one under S. 96, O. 21, R. 92 and O. 43, R. 1 (j), Civil P. C., in reality the appeal lay only under the last provision, and that being the case, no second appeal lies under S. 104 (2), Civil P. C. This view is supported by Jiwan Singh v. Sawan Mal (1), Jaggan Nath v. Daud (2), Nihal Devi v. Kishore Chand (3). Mr. Mukand Lal Puri for the appellants made a feeble attempt to meet the position taken up by Mr. Zafrullah Khan but was unable to urge anything substantial in support of his contention. I allow the preliminary objection and I hold that no appeal lies.

Mr. Mukand Lal puri, prayed next that in the event of this Court holding that no second appeal lay, the memorandum of appeal be treated as a petition for revision. Mr. Zafrullah Khan objected to this prayer on the ground that even if it be assumed that the learned District Judge has taken an erroneous view of the law, a mere illegality is not a good ground for revision. Both the learned counsel have addressed me at length on this point, and after giving the matter careful consideration I am of opinion that the decision of the learned District Judge is open to revision and this Court may, if sufficient grounds are made out, interfere on the revision side. As already pointed out the learned District Judge has not decided the objections raised by the petitioners on their merits but has refused to give an adjudication thereon on the ground that the auction-purchaser had not been impleaded as a party within 30 days from the date of the sale. If it can be shown that the learned District Judge was in error in assuming that it was necessary for the objectors to implead the auction-purchaser within 30 days, it would follow that he had refused to exercise a jurisdiction which was vested in him by law, and it would certainly be a good ground for interference by this Court under S 115, Civil P. C., or the corresponding S. 44, Punjab Courts Act. Reference may in this connexion be made to a Single Bench decision of the Chief Court where the present Chief Justice interfered on the revision side under somewhat similar circumstances, Khairan v. Alliance Bank of Simla (4). Similarly the Calcutta High Court in Raj Chandra Das v. Kali Kanta Das (5) and Kedar Hura v.

Asutosh Roy (6) set aside on revision the orders of the lower appellate Courts rejecting objections to an auction sale on the ground that the auction-purchaser had not been brought on the record within 30 days. The point is covered by the principle of the recent Privy Council judgment in Umed Mal v. Chand Mal (7) where their Lordships upheld the action of the Chief Commissioner, Ajmer Merwara in interfering under S. 115, Civil P. C., with the order of the District Judge who had decided the case without joining a necessary party on an erroneous view of the law. I hold, therefore, that the order of the District Judge is open to revision.

As stated already the learned District Judge has rejected the appeal of the petitioners on the mere ground that the auction-purchaser had not been impleaded within 30 days of the sale. Now there is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code or the Limitation Act or any other Statute which makes it obligatory on a person who is objecting to a sale under Rr. 89, 90 or 91 of O. 21, to implead the auction-purchaser within a particular period. All that is laid down in R. 92 is > that no order on applications made under Rr. 89, 90 or 91 shall be made unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby.

To put the matter briefly this means that an order under R. 92 cannot be made until the auction-purchaser has had notice of these proceedings. It is nowhere stated that it is obligatory on the applicant to make the auction-purchaser a party to the application, nor is it necessary that the notice to the auction-purchaser must be served in a particular manner or within a particular period. The auction-purchaser may be summoned at the instance of the objector or he may intervene in the enquiry into the objections of his own accord or he may be brought before the Court under a precept issued by that Court suo moto. All that is required is that he must be heard before an order adverse to him is made. In the present case the learned District Judge has found as a fact that the auction-purchaser's counsel was present in Court on 18th August 1925 long before the objections were disposed of. It must, therefore, be held that the provisions of R. 92 have been fully complied with.

I am not unmindful of the fact that in Ajiuddin Ahmed v. Khodabux (8) and Sumitra Kuer v. Damri Lall (9) the Calcutta and the Patna High Courts have respectively ruled that the auction-purchaser was a necessary party to the proceedings for setting aside the auction sale and that he must be impleaded within the period of 30 days prescribed in Art. 166, Limitation Act. But the view taken in both these cases was not accepted in subsequent decisions of those Courts, vide Raj Chandra Das v. Kali Kanta Das (5) and Zainab Bibi v. Paras Nath (10). The Bombay High Court in Ganesh Bal Naik v. Vithal Waman (11) has also held that there is no period of limitation prescribed within which the auction-purchaser should be brought on the record in such proceedings. The same view has been taken in Ghazanfar Husain v. Ram Ratan (12), Abdur Rahman v. Har Narayan (13), Ishwardas Marwari v. Biseswar Lal Marwari (14), and also in a ruling of the Punjab Chief Court in Sewak Ram v. Kundan Lal (15). Mr. Justice Zafar Ali has discussed this question recently in Kirpa Ram v. Nand Lal (16) decided on 25th November 1927 and has arrived at the same conclusion. It must, therefore, be held that the decision by the lower Court on this point is erroneous and that the application of the petitioners under O. 21, R. 90 was not barred by reason of their failure to implead the auction-purchaser within 30 days of the sale.

This being my view on this point, it is not necessary to give a decision on the further question raised by Mr. Mukand Lal Puri that under Art. 166, Limitation Act, the terminus a quo for an application to have a sale set aside is not the date on which the auction is held but the date on which the 25 per cent of the purchase price is deposited. On this point there is a serious divergence of judicial authority, but on my decision above, the question does not arise and I need not discuss it any further.

For the foregoing reasons I accept the petition for revision, set aside the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge and remand the case to him for rehearing the appeal and disposal in accordance with law. Costs shall be costs in the cause.

I shall now deal with Civil Appeal No. 491 of 1927 filed by Manigir etc., minors against the order of remand passed by the learned District Judge. Mr. Zafrullah Khan for the respondents raises a preliminary objection to the maintainability of this appeal which has been preferred under O. 43, R. 1 (u) That Rule authorizes an appeal against an order of remand made under O. 41, R. 23. In this case the learned District Judge has not mentioned the section of the Code under which he ordered the remand, but both counsel are agreed that the remand was one under S. 151, Civil P. C. Orders under that section are admittedly not appealable. It follows, therefore, that this appeal is incompetent and must be dismissed with costs. I can find no ground for interference on the revision side.

Judgment.—Bakhshi Sain Das, judgment-debtor, appeals against an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Sargodha, dismissing an objection lodged by him against an auction sale in execution of a decree, or rather two auction sales by which his property in Sargodha and Bhera was disposed of. He has impleaded in his appeal the decree-holder Bank and also the successful auction-purchasers at the sale. I will first deal with the objection taken by some of these auction-purchasers in the trial Court and urged afresh in this Court by counsel for the purchaser of the Sargodha property, Lala Gobind Lal. This is that they were not made parties to the proceedings under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., although they had been made parties by counsel in this Court on appeal. He relies on Ajuddin Ahmed v. Khoda Bux (1), Sumitra Kuer v. Damri Lall (2) and Bapuji Krishna v. Janardhan Govind (3) these being respectively authorities of the Calcutta, Patna and Bombay High Courts. This point has been fully considered by Tek Chand, J., in Manigir v. Hazarigir (4), in which he has taken the opposite view, namely, that it is not necessary to implead, in the sense of showing as a party in the heading of the application, the successful auction-purchaser. The same view was taken by Jai Lal, J., in Haji Mahomed v. Ghulam Husain Khan (5), though the finding, as pointed out, was an obiter dictum and also in Kirpa Ram v. Nand Lal (6). In Raj Chandra Das v. Kala Kanta Das (7), the Calcutta High Court appears to have changed its view. I do not think it necessary to add anything to the reasoning contained in the judgment of Tek Chand, J., except to say that the very wording, or rather I should say the existence of the proviso to R. 92, leads me to a conclusion precisely contrary to the one deduced from the same premises in Ajuddin Ahmed v. Khoda Bux (1). The reasoning in that ruling appears to have been: because it is necessary to serve notice of the application on the auction-purchaser and because such notices are always served as a matter of course upon the parties to an application, the meaning of the rule or the proviso can only be that such auction-purchasers must previously have been made parties. The existence of the proviso points to my mind to precisely the contrary conclusion. If it were necessary to make the auction-purchasers parties, they would be served as a matter of course, for no proceedings and no appeal can proceed until the parties have been served There would, therefore, be no reason for the insertion of the proviso. The insertion of the proviso points to my mind to the conclusion that it was inserted just because it was not necessary to make the auction-purchaser a party and for no other reason. The ordinary law provides that all parties shall be served and if it be necessary to serve anybody over and above such parties it is necessary to make provision for such service. The existence of such provision requiring the service of any particular individuals can only mean as I read it that such individuals need not be parties to the proceeding. Agreeing, therefore, with the view taken in Manigir v. Hazarigir (4), I hold that it was unnecessary to make the auction-purchaser a party. Counsel then urged that they received no proper notice as they happened to have come to Court to deposit the auction price and were there informed by the Subordinate Judge and given ample time to reply to the application. This is notice in my opinion and quite sufficient notice.

The final point arises of whether the appeal is in proper form and whether counsel should or should not have added the auction-purchasers in this Court. Technically I think the appeal is not in proper form and the auction-purchasers not having been made parties in the trial Court could only be made parties in this Court by a proper order by a Judge. No such order was obtained. The right course I think would have been to institute an appeal against the decree-holder, who was respondent in the trial Court, and to serve a notice on the auction-purchasers on the analogy of the proviso in R. 92 (2). This is not a question of any importance to my mind and the real thing to be seen is whether they have had proper notice of the appeal.

This brings me to the subject-matter of the application which is so worded that two meanings or more can be formed from almost every sentence used from start to finish. An ingenious objection has been taken to the form of the notice attached to the Court-house—an objection which does not seem to have struck counsel in the trial Court. The person entrusted with this responsible work of drawing up and putting up notices was an unpaid candidate and his work does not appear to have been supervised in any way even by the Clerk of Court. He says that the form of notice was not the correct form as given on p. 1049 of Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, namely, form No. 29, but was form No 27. On the other hand, where he speaks of there being writing on both sides of the form, he would appear to be referring to form No 29 which is printed on both sides as opposed to form No. 27 which is only printed on one side, though in this case the necessary details were written on the back I do not think it necessary to go into this somewhat technical point, as the all important contention of the judgment-debtor is conceded by the other side, and this is that the proclamation posted on a conspicuous part of the property was so posted not more than five days before the auction sale and this refers equally to the property sold in Sargodha and the property sold in Bhera. Not only was this so, but the proclamation by beat of drum was made on the actual date of the auction. The property to be sold consisted of several lots of shops and houses. The auction at Bhera of the four lots is shown by the auctioneer to have taken place on 29th, 30th and 31st and that at Sargodha on 27th and 28th. Counsel for the judgment-debtor has urged that the bids began and ended at Bhera on 31st. The position is very much stronger than is stated by him, for while bidding actually lasted from 30th to 31st, the auction, in the sense that the auctioneer was asking for bids, continued from 29th to 31st, and on 29th there were no bids whatsoever. It is said that a large number of persons attended the auction, but there were only four bidders. These all bade for one piece of property, two only bade for two other lots, while three bade for the last lot. In Sargodha also there were four bidders only. Now the utter inadequacy of the notice given to the public generally by affixation on the property leads in my opinion to the inevitable inference that the fact of the sale not being sufficiently published the judgment-debtor was prejudiced and materially prejudiced. This inference could of course be rebutted but so far from the evidence of what actually happened on the dates fixed rebutting that inference, it confirms and strengthens it in every way. It appears to me, therefore, that a material irregularity or irregularities, did lead to substantial injury and it is, therefore, necessary to order a re-sale. Counsel for the auction purchasers have represented that their clients have lost the interest on their money for a considerable time and they ask to have restitution made by the decree-holder. The decree-holder, I should mention, does not resist the application for a fresh sale. This contention appears to me to be perfectly sound. The auction-purchasers are not to blame for the irregularities committed and I, therefore, order that the decree-holder refund the sums realized by him in consequence of these auction sales on or before 1st February 1928. He will also refund the difference between the sum and the sum actually deposited by the auction-purchasers without prejudice to any rights he may have to recover this difference or portion of it from the auctioneer. I do not adjudicate on the question of whether this order sets aside the order of confirmation, which must precede the payment of a fee to the auctioneer. Under the peculiar circumstances of the case I order that all parties bear their own costs,

N.K. Order accordingly.

Bhide, J.—The plaintiffs, who were commission agents, entered into certain transactions for sale of cotton bales on the instructions of the defendants as follows:

(1) 25 bales to Charat Singh-Attar Singh at Rs. 35-6-0 per maund;

(2) 25 bales to Dayal Singh-Chamba Singh at Rs. 35-6-0 per maund; and

(3) 50 bales to Bashi Lal-Tirath Das at Rs. 35-7-0 per maund.

The transactions were entered into in June and July 1917, but delivery was to be made in January 1918. The defendants failed to deliver the bales on the due date and as a result the plaintiffs had to pay to third parties the loss suffered by them, the market rate on the due date being much higher than the rate at which the sales had been effected. The plaintiffs claimed Rs. 5,028-8-3 on account of the amount so paid.

The defendants admitted having instructed the plaintiffs to enter into sale transactions as alleged but pleaded that the transactions were badni and denied that the plaintiffs had actually suffered any loss. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge, who tried the suit, held that the transactions were badni, but that this made no difference as the defendants were liable to recompense the plaintiffs for the loss incurred by them as their agents. Finding Rs. 3,378-6-0 as the losses actually so suffered, he passed a decree for that amount in favour of the plaintiffs. From this decree the defendants have appealed.

The main points urged on behalf of the appellants were the following :

(1) The plaintiffs had entered into transactions of sales and purchases of cotton on behalf of a number of persons and settlement was made by setting off the total transactions of sales and purchases against each other and adjusting the balance, if any. It has not been shown that any loss was actually incurred in respect of the particular transactions which were entered into on behalf of the defendants and hence the plaintiffs' suit must fail.

(2) The losses, if any, were not actually paid or adjusted before the institution of the present suit. The transactions being of a badni nature, the plaintiffs had incurred no liability enforceable in law. According to the principles laid down in Behari Lal v. Parbhu Lal (1), the plaintiffs had no cause of action.

(3) It has not been proved that the market rate of cotton on the due date was Rs. 45-11-0 per maund and hence the decree of the lower Court passed at this rate cannot, at any rate, be justified.

The first contention appears to me to be fallacious. It is clear from the evidence that, owing to the non-delivery of the cotton on the due date, the plaintiffs had become liable to pay to third parties losses on account of certain principals who had sold cotton, and had to realise profits from the same parties on account of certain other principals who had purchased the cotton. It was obviously convenient in the circumstances from a business point of view to set off the losses against the profits on the purchases and effect a settlement with the third parties. This is all that the plaintiffs are alleged to have done. As pointed out in Behari Lal v. Parbhu Lal (1), such a settlement does not in any way differ in substance from actual payment and repayment in cash. The sales made on behalf of the defendants along with others are said to have been taken into account in making the settlement and this seems to be tantamout to saying that the actual losses incurred on their behalf were adjusted or paid up in the settlement.

The third contention also appears to have no force. The defendant Bhagwan Das (P. W. 3) has himself admitted that the market rate was higher on the due date than the rates at which the sales had been effected and that the plaintiffs therefore suffered losses. He gives the market rate at Rs. 40 or Rs. 41 but no reliable evidence has been given in support of this figure. The plaintiffs' witnesses on the other hand including Lala Girdhari Lal, a member of the Karachi Merchants' Association, apparently a disinterested witness, have stated that the market rate on the due date was Rs. 59. The plaintiffs have only claimed at Rs. 45-11-0, the rate fixed by the Karachi Merchants' Association, which is much less than the actual rate.

The second contention requires consideration. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has found the transactions to be badni and has decided the suit on this basis. It is true that he has given no reasons in detail in support of the finding, but the very nature of the transactions including sales and purchases by the same dealers for a fixed date, coupled with the failure to deliver in practically all cases, leaves no room for doubt that the transactions were badni. The transactions of sales and purchases were entered into by the plaintiffs for different persons, but the names of the principals were not disclosed and the actual transactions took place as between the plaintiffs and third parties. There can be no badni or wagering transactions unless there is a common intention of wager, vide Bhagwan Das v.

Burjoji Rusttonji (2), and the finding that the transactions were badni means in this case that the plaintiffs and the third parties had the common intention to wager. The liabilities incurred by the plaintiffs on these wagering transactions would, therefore, be obviously unenforceable as between them and the third parties. It was urged that the liability was enforceable and the best proof of this consisted in the fact that two decrees were subsequently obtained by the plaintiffs against third parties on the basis of that liability. No copies of any decrees have been produced and it is not known on what basis the decrees were passed. The probability is that, although the transactions were of a wagering character, the plaintiffs did not raise the plea and hence the Court did not enter into the question. The mere fact that decrees were passed is, therefore, by no means conclusive evidence that the liabilities were legally enforceable.

According to the principles laid down in Behari Lal v. Parbhu Lal (1), if the plaintiffs made any payments or adjusted the accounts in the manner stated therein on the basis of a liability incurred on wagering transactions the plaintiffs would no doubt be entitled to recover the amount from their principals. In the present instance, it is admitted that the loss incurred on the defendants' transactions was not paid in cash, but only by adjustment in accounts. In two cases, however, even this adjustment in accounts had not been made before the institution of the present suit. I understand that in these two cases in which accounts were not adjusted, the accounts at the date of institution only showed that plaintiffs had become liable to pay losses on certain wagering transactions, while on others they had become entitled to realise profits. The parties had not yet decided to set off the transactions of sale and purchase against one another and no debit or credit entries had yet been made. Even the market rate had not been agreed on. In the circumstances it does not appear to me that the case could properly be treated to be at par with case No. 4, in Behari Lal v. Parbhu Lal (1), as urged on behalf of the respondents. Case No. 4 is stated as follows in Behari Lal v. Parbhu Lal (1):

> If in such a case the agent already has dealings with the third party and is owed money by him on accounts with which the principal has no concern and the sum lost, as aforesaid being less than the sum due to the agent is settled by a credit in the agent's books, and a debit in the third party's books, the amount so credited and debited is recoverable by the agent from the principal.

and the answer given, is in the affirmative. In the present case the plaintiffs became simultaneously liable to pay losses and entitled to realise profits on certain wagering transactions. The liability could be repudiated in law by either party and neither party had apparently taken any steps before the institution of the suit to adjust the accounts at least in two cases. It, therefore, seems to me that the plaintiffs had only incurred an unenforceable liability in these two cases and nothing further having happened before the institution of the suit the plaintiffs are not entitled to claim any thing from the defendants so far as these two cases are concerned. In the third case the accounts were settled before the institution of the suit in the manner shown at p. 27 of the printed record and this case appears to to be covered by Behari Lal v. Parbhu Lal (1).

It will appear from the judgment of of the learned Subordinate Judge that the amount due from the defendants in the two cases referred to above, namely Charat Singh, Attar Singh and Dayal Singh-Chamba Mal was Rs. 767-6-0 and Rs 165-4-9 respectively. The amount of loss decreed must, therefore, be reduced by these amounts with interest thereon, and the amount of the miscellaneous expenses must also be proportionately reduced.

The loss suffered by the plaintiffs on account of the debts, in connexion with the transactions with Bashi Mal-Tirath Ram was Rs. 2,357-8-0. The plaintiffs had already received an advance of Rs. 500. The balance due, was therefore Rs. 1,857-8-0.

The plaintiffs became entitled to realize the above sum only on adjustment of accounts with Bashi Mal-Tirath Ram on 26th June 1918 (vide p. 27 of the printed record). They are, therefore, entitled to claim interest at Re. 1 per cent per mensem from that date. This is not disputed. The amount of interest up to the date of institution of the suit works out to Rs. 287-14-6.

The plaintiffs claimed Rs. 162-12-6 on account of miscellaneous expenses incurred in connexion with the transactions with all the three firms. They may be allowed a proportionate sum for the transactions with Bashi Mal-Tirath Ram. This amount works out to Rs. 116-10-3.

Plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to a decree for the following amounts :

Rs.	a.	p.
1,857	8	0	on account of loss suffered.
287	14	6	interst.
116	10	3	miscellaneous expenses.
2,262	0	9	Total

I would, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Court award a decree for Rs. 2,262-0-9 only with proportionate costs throughout in favour of the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs will also get interest at Rs. 6 per cent per annum on the decretal amount from the date of institution to the date of realization.

Judgment. — One Amar Singh of Jullundur City authorized three gentlemen of that City to sell his property for the purpose of paying off his debts. These gentlemen who are described as trustees sold by auction a house of Amar Singh to Munshi Ram, appellant, for Rs. 5,200. A deed of sale was now to be executed by the trustees and registered. Munshi Ram deposited Rs. 5,200 with Lala Dwarka Das, Treasurer, to be paid to the trustees before the Sub-Registrar but no deed was executed because the trustees refused to enter therein an indemnity clause.

Long after that Amar Singh was adjudged an insolvent and the Official Receiver applied to the District Judge for orders about the money that was in the hands of Lala Dwarka Das. The District Judge endorsed the following order on that application :

All moneys in hand should be made over to the Official Receiver. 25th February 1927.

On 4th March 1927, Munshi Ram presented a petition to the District Judge stating that the money was his, and praying that it may not be handed over to the Official Receiver. But the District Judge ordered Lala Dwarka Das, who was with the petitioner at that time, to pay the money to the Official Receiver. This order is in vernacular and runs thus :

Munshi Ram wants to get back the money. For the reasons recorded in the order in English the money be made over to the Official Receiver.

The order in English referred to above was presumably the order of 25th February 1927, which, however, contains no reasons whatsoever.

Now it is clear that it was highly unsatisfactory to dispose of in this summary manner, without any enquiry a matter involving a question of title to a sum of Rs. 5,200. Before making any order the District Judge should have decided whether the money belonged to Munshi Ram or to the insolvent.

Counsel for the Official Receiver objects that the order of the District Judge is not appealable and that even if it is, the appeal must fail because the creditors of the insolvent have not been made respondents. Both these contentions are untenable. The order of the District Judge disposes of a question of title and hence falls under S. 4, Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 and is appealable under Cl. (2) of S. 75 of that Act. The creditors are not necessary parties to this appeal as held in East India Cigarette Manufacturing Co, Ltd. v. Ananda Mohan Basak (1). I accept the appeal, set aside the order of the learned District Judge and direct that the application of the appellant be disposed of in accordance with law after a proper enquiry.

Second Appeal No. 2066 of 1927, Decided on 19th January 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 18th June 1927.

(a) Contract Act, S. 62—Plaintiff acting as commission agent for the defendant—Final closing of account—Plaintiff taking hundi for the balance due—No liability remaining standing—Plaintiff suing to recover money due on the hundi—Hundi inadmissible being unstamped—Plaintiff cannot fall back upon original transaction.

No doubt in certain cases, where a suit on a hundi is not maintainable, the hundi being unstamped, the creditor can fall back on prior accounts between the parties. But each case has to be decided on its own facts, the question being whether a new contract was substitued or whether the hundi was given in course of performing the prior contract and on the latter case the creditor can fall back on the original transaction.

Plaintiff was acting as commission agent for the defendant. The sum due by the defendant to the plaintiff was settled by the plaintiff giving up a certain sum, by the defendent paying Rs. 100 in cash, and by the plaintiff taking a hundi for Rs. 500 from the defendant. A separate receipt was given to the defendant by the plaintiff on the same day. It recited that the account had been finally closed and that the only liability remaining was the hundi for Rs. 500 which was instamped. The hundi was not paid, and the plaintiff brought the suit.

Held: that as the hundi was inadmissible in evidence as it was unstamped and the plaintiff could not fall back upon the original tansaction: A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 396, Dist. [P 424 C 2]

(b) Limitation Act, Art. 82—Limitation in a suit brought by an agent to recover amount due from his client operates from the date of the payment on behalf of the principal.

A suit by an agent to recover the amount due from his client must be brought within the period of limitation prescribed by Act. 83 of Sch. 1, Limitation Act. Judgment.—The plaintiff firm sued the defendant-firm for the sum of Rs. 585 in the following circumstances:

The plaintiff-firm was acting as commission agents buying and selling for the defendant-firm. According to the plaint, the accounts were settled on 29th August 1924, when a sum of Rs. 834-3-3 was found to be due by the defendant firm to the plaintiff-firm. This sum was settled by the plaintiff-firm giving up Rs. 234-3-3, by the defendant-firm paying Rs. 100 in cash, and by the plaintiff firm taking a hundi for Rs. 500 from the defendant firm. In para. 2 of the plaint it is stated that the bahi account was finally closed on the day of this settlement. A separate receipt was given to the defendant-firm by the plaintiff-firm on the same day. It recited that the account has been finally closed and that the only liability remaining was the hundi for Rs. 500.

The hundi was not paid. and the plaintiff-firm brought the present suit on 19th March 1926. It is a suit on the hundi, i. e., for Rs. 500 together with Rs. 85 on account of interest at the customary rate of Re. 1 per cent per mensem. The trial Judge held that the hundi was inadmissible in evidence as it was unstamped, that the plaintiff-firm could not fall back upon the original transactions, that no interest had been agreed to, and that the suit was within time whether it was considered to be a suit on the hundi or a suit on the original cause of action, as in the latter case Art. 85, Lim. Act, would apply The District Judge on appeal held that the hundi was inadmissible in evidence, but he held further that it only operated as a conditional discharge of the old account, and that the plaintiff-firm could fall back upon the original transaction. He further held that the suit was within time on the original cause of action. as Art. 85, Lim. Act, applied. He allowed interest at the customary rate of 12 per cent. per annum and thus decreed the claim for Rs. 585. Against this decision this second appeal has been preferred. There is no doubt that there is a class of cases where it has been held that, if a hundi is insufficiently stamped and is given in renewal of a prior hundi, etc. and the suit on the hundi is not maintainable owing to its not being properly stamped, the creditor can fall back upon the prior hundi and in some cases upon the prior accounts. Each case has to be considered on its own merits. The real question is whether a new contract was substituted in fact under S. 62, Indian Contract Act, or whether the hundi was only given in the course of performing the former contract, i. e., the giving of the hundi was a conditional payment towards the original cause of action. It has been contended on behalf of the appellant before me that in the present case the original contract was not in the course of performance but that a new contract was entered into upon the hundi.

According to the accounts, on which is based the original cause of action, Rs. 834-3-3 were due on 29th August 1924. The plaintiff-firm gave up Rs. 234-3-0, the defendant paid Rs. 100 and an insufficiently stamped hundi was taken for Rs. 500. This certainly looks like entering into a new contract, because it was not a part of the performance of the old contract to give up part of what was due until the whole contract was closed. It seems to me that it was clearly intended that the old contract should be put an end to finally and that the hundi for Rs. 500 was given as a new contract owing to the giving up by the plaintiff-firm of so much and the defendant-firm paying so much. The old basis was intended to be done away with altogether. Besides, it is admitted in the plaint that the accounts were finally closed and the receipt given by the plaintiff-firm on the same date also stated that the old account was closed and that no liability remained except on this hundi. It would be sufficient to revive the old account in face of the terms of the receipt to the effect that the old account has been cancelled. In my opinion the lower appellate Court erred in holding that this was a case similar to that decided in Rahmat Ali v. Dewa Singh (1). That case was totally different, and I hold that the suit only lay upon the hundi, and that the plaintiff-firm was not entitled to fall back upon the original cause of action.

I further hold that, even if the plaintiff-firm can be allowed to fall back upon the original cause of action, the suit on the original cause of action is time barred. In a suit of this nature Art. 83 Lim. Act, applies and not Art. 85. It has been held in Manghi Ram v. Ram Suran (2), Surab Dial v. Devi Ditta (3) and Kadri Pershad v. Harbhagwan (4) A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 473, A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 152 and in Kirpa Ram Lachhman Das v. Sawan Mal Gopi Chand (5) that a suit by an agent to recover the amount due from his client must be brought within the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 83 Sch. 1, Lim. Act. Limitation in such a case operates from the date of the payment on behalf of the principal. In the present case the limitation has expired, therefore, on the original cause of action before the present suit was brought. The period of limitation under Art. 83 is three years from the date when the plaintiff is actually damnified, and it is clear from S. 222, Contract Act, that a person, who deals with a commission agent, is bound to indemnify him. In these circumstances the appeal must also succeed on the question of limitation, even if it were held that the plaintiff could fall back on the original cause of action.

I accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the trial Judge dismissing the suit with costs in the trial Court and in this Court.

Civil Revn. No. 270 of 1927, Decided on 13th December 1927, from order of Dist. Judge, Ferozepur, D/- 6th December 1926.

Civil P. C., O. 3, R. 5—Notice to duly appointed pleader conducting the case amounts to notice to the party.

The service of a notice on the duly appointed pleader of a party to a suit who had been conducting the case up to the last hearing of the case when the case was postponed to a further date and who had not intimated to the Court that he was no longer appearing in the case, nor had taken any steps to get his vakalatnama cancelled, is equivalent to service on the party and he can not withdraw merely by writing on the notice that service should be effected on the party's agent; 13 C. W. N. 142, Dist. [P 426 C 2]

Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Petitioner.

Kishan Dayal—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff Lal Singh instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, for a declaration that he was the owner of certain property. The suit was fixed for hearing for 25th May 1926, but on that date the Court was closed on account of the prevalence of plague. On 31st May 1926. separate notices were issued to the plaintiff and his pleader, Lala Khairati Ram, that the case would be heard on the 15th June 1926. The notice sent to the plaintiff could not be served on him as he had gone to China but was delivered to his minor son, aged 16. On the notice sent to Lala Khairati Ram he noted on the 11th June 1926, that the plaintiff's Mukhtar should be served. No steps were, however, taken to serve the plaintiff's Mukhtar. On 15th June 1926, there was no appearance on behalf of the plaintiff and the suit was dismissed under O. 9, R. 8, Civil P. C.

On 14th August 1926, the plaintiff's Mukhtar through the same pleader Lala Khairati Ram filed an application for having the dismissal in default set aside, stating that when the case was adjourned on 25th May he was informed that fresh notices would be sent informing the parties of the dates on which the case would be heard but that no such notice had been received by him and that on going to the Court on that morning he had discovered that the suit had been dismissed in default on 15th June 1926. This application was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge and his order was affirmed on appeal by the District Judge.

A petition for revision has been filed in this Court and Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan has argued that in this case there had been no proper service of the adjourned date of hearing and the lower Courts have acted illegally and with material irregularity in not restoring the suit. Mr. Kishen Dayal for the respondent has challenged the finding of the learned District Judge that service on the minor son of the plaintiff was not effective, but I see no force in his contention and uphold that finding.

Mr. Mehr Chand's main contention is that the learned District Judge is in error in holding that service on Lala Khairati Ram was good service on the petitioner under O. 3, R. 5, Civil P. C. He argues that O. 3, R. 5, Civil P. C., merely raises a presumption that notice to the pleader is notice to the party, but that this is a rebuttable presumption and in this particular case it had been rebutted by the endorsement of the pleader on the back of the notice that the plaintiff's mukhtar should be informed. In support of this contention the learned counsel has relied upon a decision of the Calcutta High Court reported as Sandya v. Upendra Chandra Sinha (1). After giving full consideration to his arguments, I am of opinion that they are devoid of all force. Even if the ruling lays down the law correctly a matter on which I wish to express no opinion in this judgment there is no doubt that in this case the circumstances are such that notice to the pleader must be considered to be notice to the party. Lala Khairati Ram was the duly appointed pleader of the plaintiff and had been conducting the case up to 25th May 1926. He had not intimated to the Court that he was no longer appearing in the case nor had he taken any steps to get his vakalatnama cancelled. On the other hand, we find that the application for restoration was signed and presented by him on 14th August 1926, and it was he who preferred the appeal against the order of dismissal in the Court of the District Judge. There can be no manner of doubt that in these circumstances service on him was equivalent to service on the plaintiff and he could not withdraw merely by writing on the notice that service should be effected on the muhtar.

I, therefore, hold that the decision of the learned District is right and accordingly I dismiss the petition for revision with costs.

Second Appeal No. 1063 of 1927, Decided on 10th November 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Sialkot, D/- 24th February 1927.

Balkishen Mehra—for Appellant.

Lal Chand and Hazara Singh — for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff instituted the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen, for ejectment of the defendant from two houses (Nos. 89 and 90) which he alleged the defendant had mortgaged to him with possession and in respect of which he had executed rent-deeds in his favour. The trial Court decreed the suit with regard to house No. 89 but dismissed it with regard to house No. 90, holding that the relationship of landlord and tenant was not proved in respect of that house. On appeal the learned District Judge reversed this finding and held that there was sufficient oral and documentary evidence on the record to prove that the deed (Ex. P. 2) relating to house No. 90 had been duly executed by the defendant. He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's suit in full.

On second appeal the only point urged is that the lower appellate Court has acted illegally in excluding from consideration the reports of experts from the Finger Print Bureau at Phillaur and Allahabad to the effect that the thumb-impression on the rent-deed in question did not tally with the admitted thumb-impression of the defendant. The learned District Judge held this evidence to be inadmissible because the experts were not examined in Court in respect of their reports.

After hearing both counsel I am of opinion that the learned District Judge acted rightly in excluding this evidence. It is obvious that the reports of the experts are not legal evidence unless they appear in Court as witnesses and are examined by both parties in respect of their opinions.

I, therefore, see no force in this appeal and dismiss it with costs.

Judgment—The Court below has set aside a decree that was passed in the absence of the defendant holding that it was an ex-parte decree under O. 17, R. 2, Civil P. C. The plaintiff applies for revision of this order on the ground that the Court below had no jurisdiction to set aside the decree as it was a decree on the merits passed under O. 17, R. 3, Civil P. C. Now there can be no manner of doubt that the Court had jurisdiction to determine the question whether the decree was passed under O. 17 R. 2, or under O. 17 R. 3, and having decided that question it cannot be said to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it even though it came to an erroneous conclusion. Their Lordships of the Judical Committee have laid down in Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1) that it is settled law that where a Court has jurisdiction to determine a question and does determine that question, it cannot be said to have committed a material irregularity because it has come to an erroneous decision. Muhammad Rafi—for Appellants.

Badri Das and Niaz Muhammad—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff in this case brought a suit in which they claimed the northern portion of a certain property as being their ancestal property, the middle portion as having been acquired by purchase, and an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with their building a wall between the point H and point K on the map Ex. P. 2, this being on the boundary of the third and southern portion which admittedly belonged to them. The wall will have the effect of blocking two windows in the defendants' house. In the trial Court the plaintiffs obtained a decree for both the northern and middle portions but their suit for injunction was dismissed. Both sides appealed and the District Judge accepted the appeal of the plaintiff, dismissed the appeal of the defendants and decreed the claim in full, i. e., all the three reliefs. The defendants have presented a second appeal as regards all the three reliefs.

As far as the middle portion is concerned the appellants wish to attack the finding of fact as being based on insufficient evidence and also on unsatisfactory evidence, and this more especially because they did not produce a certain witness, namely, their own vendor. I hold that this finding cannot be challenged on second appeal. It is based on evidence and it is a clear and definite finding.

As regards the injunction, counsel contends that the District Judge has failed to apply his mind and this is shown by the briefness of the passage in his judgment which deals with the oral evidence, namely, "the oral evidence produced is not convincing." He decided the case on documentary evidence, he has not believed the oral evidence and I cannot see any reason for making a presumption contrary to the usual presumption that all official acts are regularly performed and for supposing that the District Judge had not applied his mind before giving this tersely expressed conclusion. I find that this finding also cannot be challenged on second appeal.

As regards the northen portion, an important point of law has been raised and this is, that the District Judge has relied partly on inadmissible and irrelevant evidence consisting of recitals in certain documents regarding boundaries, those documents having been executed by third parties in favour of the plaintiffs. Counsel points out that not only are these admissions, but apart from this, as laid down in Lajpat Rai v. Faiz Ahmad (1), such recitals are wholly inadmissible. He further points out that it is impossible for a Court of second appeal to say what decision would have been come to had this evidence been excluded and, therefore, he is entitled to a remand for a fresh decision. He relies upon Lajpat Rai v. Faiz Ahmad (1), Srinivas Das v. Meher Bai (2), A. B. Miller v. Mahadeo Das (3) and Sabdi Bepari v. S. H. Budhai (4). Counsel for the respondents lays stress in his turn on the same ruling, namely, Lajpat Rai v. Faiz Ahmad (1) when read with a certain passage in Sabdi Bepari v. S. H. Budhai (4) and A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 230. The passage in Sabdi Bepari v. S. H. Budhai (4) which is relied on will be found at p. 951 and is as follows:

> As pointed out by the Judicial Committee in the case of Ram Kishan Das v. Babu Madho Das and by a number of decisions of this Court, when a question is raised whether a document is admissible or not on the ground of want of registration or on the ground that the document is irrelevant it can be raised at any stage of the case. It is such objections as can only be remedied if taken at the earliest stage that are not allowed to be raised at a later stage, e. g., the question of the admissibility of a copy in the absence of evidence that the original has been lost.

With this counsel reads the passage in I. L. R. 8 Lah., which says > as the executants were not produced in the present case nor were stated to be dead, the document were not shown to be admissible in evidence.

In A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 230 it was definitely laid down by a Division Bench that the evidence of the executant himself is admissible and is fortified by the contents of the document which he executed in the past. Counsel for the appellants contends that the Privy Council ruling, Srinivas Das v. Meher Bai (2) was not brought to the notice of the Judges, who decided that case. Even if I accept the view put forward by counsel for the respondents, it appears to me that in this case the test cannot be applied with success. A document can be objected to as irrelevant at any time; a document can be objected to as inadmissible as opposed to irrelevant at the first hearing only. Counsel contends that had an objection been raised and had he produced his witness, the executant, in answer to that objection, he could then have tendered his documents in support of the witness' oral evidence. Not only does the argument depend on many suppositions including the presumption that the witness, when produced, would have given evidence supporting the respondents, but it further treats the objection as a mere technicality, which has only to be disclosed to be put right. It is true that in the case of a copy evidence is necessary to prove the loss of the original, but the copy has in itself a certain potential value from the beginning and is neither irrelevant nor inadmissible but only conditionally inadmissible. This document is wholly valueless in itself, though, if several circumstances be presupposed, it does become relevant and admissible for a purpose wholly different from that claimed for it as its face value. The absence of the necessary circumstances cannot be made good at any later stage because they are essential antecedent conditions without whose presence the document may be said to have no reality as evidence. In my opinion, therefore, these two documents do not satisfy the ingenious test suggested by counsel for the respondents and are irrelevant and inadmissible and must be ignored.

I dismiss the appeal regarding the middle portion and the injunction. Regarding the remainder, I remand the case for fresh decision in view of what has been said above so far as this portion is concerned, costs will follow the result, but so far as the middle portion and the injunction are concerned, the appeal is dismissed with costs which may be taken as 2/3rds of the whole.

Second Appeal No. 1446 of 1927, Decided on 19th December 1927, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Jullundur, D/- 22nd March 1927.

(a) Cosharer—Plaintiff claiming to be exclusive owner but found to be joint owner—Suit should proceed on the basis of joint ownership.

If a plaintiff comes into Court claiming to be exclusive owner of certain property but he is found to be a joint owner with the defendant, the Courts should proceed to decide the case on the basis of joint ownership. [P 431 C 1]

(b) Cosharer—Party Wall—Exclusive ownership.

There may be cases in which a wall which is a party wall up to a certain height may above that be the separate property of one of the owners: Watson v. Arnold, (1872) 8 Ch. A. 1084, Foll. [P 432 C 1]

Ram Lal Anand—for Appellant.

Mehr Chand Mahajan for Jagan Nath Agarwal—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff-respondent Moti Ram and one Nathu Sheikh were the owners of two adjoining houses in Jullunder Cantonment, which were separated by a kacha wall 8 ft. high. Nathu died leaving him surviving a widow Mt. Manto and a brother Lal Mahammad. On 23rd August 1923 an agreement was executed between Lal Muhammad and the plaintiff whereby the plaintiff was allowed to raise the height of the aforesaid wall by building it in pucca brick work and it was stipulated that the part so built would be his exclusive property. It appears that in accordance with this agreement the plaintiff-respondent raised the height of the wall by 3 ft., building this additional portion pucca. About a year later, on 18th August 1924, Mt. Manto, widow of Nathu 2 sold the house to Makhan Lal, defendant-appellant. This sale-deed was attested by Lal Muhammad and his son Kallan but no mention was made in it of the agreement which Lal Mohammad had executed in favour of the plaintiff on 23rd August 1923. Soon after the defendant Makhan Lal began to rebuild portions of the house which he had bought and in doing so he placed his rafters on the pakka portion of the wall intervening between this house and the house of the plaintiff, which portion the plaintiff had built in pursuance of the aforesaid agreement. The plaintiff objected to the defendant placing his rafters in this portion of the wall and on the defendant's refusal to remove them the plaintiff, on 1st December 1925, instituted the present suit asking for a permanent injunction ordering the defendant to remove his rafters from the portion aforesaid and not to build any structure over it nor to open any ventilators in it. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court but has been decreed by the learned District Judge.

On second appeal the first point taken by Mr. Ram Lal Anand on behalf of the defendant-appellant is that the learned District Judge having found that the agreement entered into by Lal Muhammad in favour of the plaintiff was not authorized by Mt. Manto and was therefore not binding on her or her transferee, (the defendant-appellant) the learned District Judge ought to have dismissed the suit and not set up an entirely new case for the plaintiff respondent I have examined the pleadings in the case and carefully considered the reasoning of the learned District Judge and the arguments of both counsel and have reached the conclusion that the point on which the learned District Judge has decided the case against the appellant is fully covered by the pleadings of the parties. It is no doubt true that in the plaint the plaintiff relied largely on the aforesaid agreement but in para. 4 of the plaint he put forward an alternative claim independent of the agreement, and the pleas of the defendant and the evidence that he led leave no doubt that he was fully cognizant of this part of the plaintiff's claim. Moreover, grounds 6 and 7 of the plaintiff's memorandum of appeal to the District Judge fully set out this point, which was argued before him without any objection on the part of the defendant-appellant. I, therefore, see no force in this contention and hold that the decision of the learned District Judge is not vitiated by his having set up a case not covered by the pleadings of the parties.

It is next contended that the plaintiff had claimed the wall to be his exclusive property and as soon as the District Judge found that the kacha wall was joint he should have at once dismissed the suit. I see no force in this contention also, as it is settled law that if a plaintiff comes into Court claiming to be exclusive owner of certain property but he is found to be a joint-owner with the defendant, the Courts should proceed to decide the case on the basis of joint ownership.

The next question which has been debated before me is whether the defendant appellant is bound by agreement which had been executed by Lal Muhammad in favour of the plaintiff long before the defendant bought the house from Mt. Manto. As pointed out already the house belonged originally to Nathu, a Sheikh residing in the Jullunder Cantonment and presumably governed by Mahomedan Law, under which on Nathu's death ¾ths of the house vested in Lal Muhammad and 1/4th in his widow. It is not contended on behalf of the appellant, and indeed there is no evidence on this point on the record that Nathu was governed by customary law. The facts and the circumstances of the case clearly show that when the appellant bought the house in 1924 he was fully aware of the fact that Lal Muhammad had executed an agreement in favour of the plaintiff and in order to lay the foundation of future litigation with the plaintiff, he purposely got the sale-deed executed by Mt. Manto reciting that she was the sole owner of the house, but at the same time he took the precaution of having the deed attested by Lal Muhammad and his son Kalan. There is no doubt whatsoever that this was merely a device to get over the obligation which Lal Muhammad as the owner of the 3/4ths of the house had incurred in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the intervening wall by the agreement of the 23rd August 1923. The learned District Judge has held that Lal Muhammad had no right in the house simply because in the sale-deed by Mt. Manto in favour of the defendant it is stated that she was the sole owner. This admission, however, is not binding on the plaintiff, who was not a party to that deed. In these circumstances the presumption that the parties are governed by Muhammadan Law must prevail and it must be held that Lal Muhammad owned 3/4ths share in the house and the agreement executed by him in favour of the plaintiff was not wholly ineffectual. It must be borne in mind that the defendant-appellant purchased the house with his eyes open long after the agreement had been executed and the height of the wall raised by the plaintiff at his own expense in pursuance thereof. That the defendant was fixed with the knowledge of this agreement is proved not only by the device adopted by him in ostensibly buying from Mt. Manto and having the deed executed by Lal Muhammad and his son but also by the further fact that at the trial he asserted that he had placed his rafters in the pucca wall with the consent of the plaintiff's son Ganeshi Lal. This was, however, denied by Ganeshi Lal and has been held to be unproved by the learned District Judge. Then there is the point rightly emphasized by the District Judge, that in paras. 4 and 5 of the jawab dawa the defendant described the increased portion of the wall as "the property of the plaintiff" and rested his case mainly upon the consent obtained from the plaintiff's son for the insertion of the rafters. I must, therefore, hold that the plaintiff was the owner of the newly built portion of the wall and the defendant had no right to place his rafters in it, without his consent, which is not proved on the record.

In this view of the case it is not necessary to decide the legal point whether when one of the co-owners of a jointly-owned party-wall raises its height at his own expense, the increased portion is or is not owned exclusively by such owner or whether it becomes the joint property of both.

So far as the case-law in India is concerned the authorities on the point are not uniform. In Kanakayya v. Narasimulu (1), it was held by one of the Judges (Parker, J.) that where one of the two tenants-in-common of a party-wall raised its height with a view to build a superstructure on his own tenement the other tenant-in-common who had not consented to the addition to the wall but had suffered no inconvenience therefrom was entitled to sue for the removal of the newly erected portion. In support of this conclusion reliance was placed upon the well-known English authority: Watson v. Gray (2). The other Judge, Subramania Ayyar, J., was not inclined to support this view but ultimately agreed with his colleague. This decision was followed by the Allahabad High Court in Ikram Ullah Khan v. Md. Yunis Ali Khan (3). The Bombay High Court has, however, taken the contrary view and a Division Bench has held in I. L. R. 49 Bom. 586 that where one of the owners of a party-wall raises its height with the consent or acquiescence of the other owner such raised portion is also a party-wall and that neither owner is at liberty to open windows etc., in the portion so raised. In that case the Madras judgment above-cited was expressly dissented from. This ruling has been followed by the Bombay Court in Shivputrappa Parappa v. Shivrudrappa Kalappa (4) and in A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 545. It is, however, not necessary to decide which of these two rival views is correct as Mr. Ram Lal concedes that the point directly decided in Kanakayya v. Narasimhalu (1), does not arise here as the present is not a suit by Makhan Lal (defendant) for removal of the portion of the wall recently built. Similarly, before the appellant can get any support from the Bombay rulings he must establish that the party-wall was raised with his consent or acquiescence or with the consent or acquiescence of his vendor. Throughout the trial the defendant-appellant strenuously contended that no such consent or acquiescence had been given and he cannot now be allowed to turn round and seek relief on the assumption that such consent or acquiescence existed in fact.

Mr. Ram Lal finally argued that it was a legal impossibility that the lower portion of a wall be joint and the upper portion be exclusively owned by one of the co-owners alone, but he was unable to cite any authority in support of his assertion. For the proposition there may be cases in which a wall which is a party-wall up to a certain height may above that be the separate property of one of the owners, reference may be made to the leading English authority Watson v. Arnold (5), and the other authorities collected in the Peacock's Law of Easements in British India, 3rd edition, pp. 187 and 188.

For the forgoing reasons I uphold the conclusions of the learned District Judge and dismiss the appeal but having regard to all the circumstances of the case I direct that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

N.K. Appeal dismissed.

(a) Custom (Punjab)—Mahomedan Rajput of Garhshanker—Nearest reversioner can bring a declaratory suit.

The nearest reversionary heirs of a deceased Mahomedan Rajput of Garhshanker can bring a declaratory suit that a decree obtained by his widow and illegitimate sons is invalid. Johnstone, J.—The parties to this appeal are Muhammadan Rajputs of Garhshankar, a small town of about 5,000 inhabitants, in the Hoshiarpur District. Seven plaintiffs instituted the suit and were later on joined by an eighth, defendant 5, mentioned in the plaint. These eight persons claim to be, and it is not denied that they are, reversioners in the third degree of one Chaudhri Ghulam Jillani Khan, who died in 1912, leaving a widow Mt Basri (defendant 1) and three reputed sons (defendants 2 to 4) by Mt. Begam. There are also two daughters, one of whom was married but had no child when the suit was brought, while the other was at the date of institution an unmarried minor, but has since married and given birth to a son.

Defendants 2 to 4 claimed to be the legitimate sons of the Chaudhri by Mt. Begam, who was formarly a tawaif, i. e., dancing girl or prostitute by profession.

On the death of the Chaudhri mutation was effected in the revenue papers and with the consent of Mt. Basri defendants 2 to 4 succeeded to half the estate. Against this order the plaintiffs appealed to the Collector who held that defendants 2 to 4 were illegitimate and directed mutation to be made in the name of Mt. Basri only. An appeal to the Commissioner against the order of the Collector was unsuccessful.

The next step was taken by defendants 2 to 4, who instituted a declaratory suit against Mt. Basri only. The appellants obtained information of that suit and applied to be made parties. The Court refused to implead them and, on Mt. Basri's confessing judgment, a decree was passed in favour of defendants 2 to 4 to the effect that they were in possession of half the estate as sons and heirs of the deceased Chaudhri. A petition for revision filed by the Collector in the Chief Court was rejected.

The present suit was filed by the plaintiffs in January 1919. After explaining the previous history the plaintiffs prayed for a declaration (a) that defendants 2 to 4 are not the sons of the deceased Chaudhri and (b) that the decree obtained by defendants 2 to 4 in collusion with Mt. Basri is invalid and shall not affect their own rights as reversioners.

Various preliminary pleas were preferred by the defendants. Those relating to the status of the plaintiffs as reversioners of the deceased and to the question of limitation have been abandoned. The other main preliminary pleas were (a) that the plaintiffs had no locus standi to sue in the presence of daughters and particularly of the unmarried daughter, and (b) that while part of the property in suit is ancestral, the other part is self-acquired. On merits it was pleaded that defendants 2 to 4 were the legitimate sons of the Chaudhri, that they had been admitted by the brotherhood and even by some of the plaintiffs as sons of the Chaudhri and had been acknowledged by the Chaudhri himself as legitimate sons. It was denied that Mt. Begam was not the lawful wife of, and married to the Chaudhri.

On these pleadings issues were framed and the lower Court came to the following findings :

(a) That the plaintiffs had a locus standi to sue.

(b) That there was acknowledgment by the Chaudhri of paternity if not of legitimacy.

(c) That the alleged marriage between him and Mt. Begam was not proved, and was in fact disproved.

(d) That at the time when defendants 2 to 4 were born Mt. Begam was living at her own house as a prostitute, and

(e) That they, having been born out of wedlock in such circumstances could never have acquired the status of legitimate sons, even if acknowledgement of legitimacy had been proved.

On these findings the plaintiffs' suit was decreed with costs against defendants 2 to 4.

Since the passing of the decree and institution of the appeal Mt. Basri had died and her daughters have been brought on to the record as her legal representatives. The decision in this appeal will in no way affect their rights as heirs of Ghulam Jillani Khan.

The first question which calls for a decision is whether the plaintiffs had a locus standi to sue. There is, in my opinion, no difficulty in providing the answer to that question. The plaintiffs are the nearest reversionary heirs of the deceased Ghulam Jillani Khan. The daughters are not reversionary heirs and the fact that one of them has, since the passing of the decree, given birth to a son does not alter the situation. That son may have rights as against the plaintiffs, but a question of that kind will have to be raised, if ever, in a subsequent suit. Mr. Moti Sagar relied on Rani Anand Kaur v. Court of Wards (1). That was a case of an adoption by a Hindu widow. It was held that a suit to contest the adoption might, in certain circumstances, be brought by a contingent reversionary heir, but that as a rule a suit of that kind must be brought by the presumptive reversionary heir. The authority cited does not assist the defendants' case. The general rule is laid down for the Punjab in para 67, Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, which states that the proper person to contest an alienation is the nearest reversionary heir. For a similar case I would refer to Tek Chand v. Soman Singh (2). That rule is equally applicable to the facts of the present appeal.

The second preliminary contention was that no distinction had been made between the ancestral and self-acquired property left by the deceased. It is not denied that, in respect of the ancestral property in suit the plaintiffs have a right to sue, for, when the suit was brought they were the persons entitled to succeed to the ancestral land on the death of the widow, whose estate was a limited one. It is clear, too, that the plaintiffs have contingent rights in the self-acquired property. On the date of the suit only the widow and daughters were in existance, and not the daughters' sons. The females mentioned would take a mere life estate in the self-acquired property, though the daughters' sons, had they been in existence, would usually succeed in preference to the collaterals as absolute owners with respect to the self-acquired land. There is no bar, therefore, to the plaintiffs' suing for a declaration with regard to both kinds of property. It is unnecessary at this stage to determine what property is ancestral and what is not ancestral. The suit as brought by the plaintiffs cannot rightly be described as a speculative suit and I would hold that both of the preliminary contentions urged by the defendants' counsel must be overruled.

The question of onus with regard to proof of legitimacy or the contrary has not been argued at any length. The lower Court placed the onus on defendants 2 to 4 to prove that they were legitimate. It is contended before us that the onus in such matters is always on the person alleging illegitimacy. In the present case, however, after the plaintiff in their plaint had alleged illegitimacy. the defendants pleaded, para 2 of their written statement, that Ghulam Jillani Khan had admitted defendants 2 to 4 as his sons by words and acts. It was nowhere definitely stated in these pleas that Mt. Begam was the married wife of the deceased ; only the converse was denied, and then it was remarked that Mt. Begam and the deceased had all along been declaring themselves as husband and wife and treating each other as such. In view of the pleadings I consider that the burden of proof was not wrongly placed on the defendants. The parties having produced all their available evidence, the dispute on the point is now mainly of an academic nature.

Before discussing the evidence and the legal questions which arise in the appeal, I must advert for a moment to the manner in which documents were admitted on to the record. It appears that when the documents were filed, they were then and there stamped by the Judge as being "admitted in evidence" under O. 13, R. 4, Civil P. C. At that time none of the documents had been proved, and in the result a considerable number of documents of both parties was never proved during the trial of the suit. This practice is condemned as being entirely illegal. The position now is that all the documents have been formally admitted, though some are not proved. The Judge though asked by the defendants to do so, did not remove unproved documents from the record, and the question is whether we should consider all the documents to be admitted or only those which were proved at the trial. I would hold that the admittance under O. 13, R. 4, was wrong and was not binding on the parties, and that unproved documents cannot be regarded as proved merely because they were wrongly admitted by the Court I shall, therefore, when dealing with the documents, rely on only such as were proved at the trial.

The defendants made an attempt to prove that a formal marriage between the deceased and Mt. Begam had taken place about the year 1894. The attempt was, in my opinion, a complete failure. (After discussing evidence and concluding that no marriage took place before defendants 2 to 4 were born and that the defendants proved that the deceased had acknowledged them as his legitimate sons, proceeded.)

Advocate High Court
Jammu & Kashmir

It will, I think, be convenient at this stage, to examine the legal position which is established when a father acknowledges sons born out of wedlock as legitimate. A considerable body of authority has been brought to our notice, and I propose, as briefly as possible to discuss it.

The first case cited before us was Khajah Hidayat Oollah v. Rai Jan Khanum (3). At p. 318 the view taken by their Lordships was that, where a child has been born to a father, of a mother, where there has not been mere casual concubinage but a more permanent connexion, and where there is no insurmountable obstacle to such a marriage, then according to the Muhammadan Law the presumption is in favour of such a marriage having taken place. In that particular case it was found that the mother of the child had been taken into the father's house a year before the child's birth, that the child had been born under the father's roof and that there had been a consecutive course of treatment for seven or eight years. On those facts and the inferences drawn from them it was held that acknowledgment had been proved and that the child was legitimate. The difference between the facts just mentioned and the facts proved in the present appeal are at once apparent. It is evident, too, that in the authority cited, no attempt was made to establish the existence of any "insurmountable obstacle."

In Mahomed Banker Hossain Khan v. Shurfoon Nissa Begum (4), their Lordships affirmed the general proposition that, according to the Muhammadan Law the legitimation or legitimacy of a child of Muhammadan parents may properly be presumed or inferred from circumstances, without proof, or at least without any direct proof, either of a marriage between the parents or of any formal act of legitimation.

The position is succinctly stated in a passage taken from Ashruffoodowlah Ahmed Hossain v. Hyder Hussein Khan (5) to which reference has frequently been made in the case law of later years :

> An ante-nuptial child is illegitimate. A child born out of wedlock is illegitimate; if acknowledged by the father he acquires the status of legitimacy. When, therefore, a child really illegitimate by birth becomes legitimated it is by force of an acknowledgment express or implied, directly proved or presumed.

It is also laid down that the acknowledgment and recognition of children by a Muhammadan as sons, giving them the status of sons capable of inheriting as being of legitimate birth may, without proof of express acknowledgment of them, be inferred from his treatment of such children, provided that certain conditions negativing this relationship are absent. The concluding proviso to this later dictum is important and is repeated in a different way in Sadakat Hossein v. Mahomed Yusuf (6)

> The acknowledgment and recognition of a natural son by a Muhammadan as his son gives him the status of a son capable of inheriting as a legitimate son, unless certain conditions exist.

Another way of stating the case is found in Muhammad Allahdad Khan v. Muhammad Ismail Khan (7) where Mahmood, J. observed :

> A child whose illegitimacy is proved beyond doubt, by reason of the marriage of its parents being either disproved or found to be unlawful cannot be legitimatised by acknowledgment.

Again in Ghazanfar Ali v. Kamiz Fatima (8) it was held that there was no evidence of marriage between the parents, and that the presumption of marriage which might have arisen from their prolonged cohabitation did not apply because the mother, before she was brought to the father's house, was admittedly a prostitute.

There is thus a multiplicity of authority for the view taken that a presumption of marriage, derived from a long course of treatment and from acknowledgment, can be rebutted by positive disproof of marriage. The latest pronouncement on the subject is to be found in Habibur Rahman Chowdhuri v Altaf Ali Chowdhury (9). At p. 864-5 their Lordships of the Privy Council have summarized the law. Acknowledgment raises a presumption of marriage, but the presumption is capable of being set aside by contrary proof. Marriage will be held proved and legitimacy established, unless the marriage is disproved. The facts out of which that appeal arose are not similar to those which have been proved before us. There the woman in the case was definitely proved to have been employed as a mistress from time to time, being "dismissed" at intervals from the man's house.

So far it has been held that an acknowledgment is proved on the record, and therefore, according to the authorities, a presumption in favour of a marriage having taken place between Ghulam Jillani Khan and Mt. Begam has arisen. That presumption is, however, rebuttable and the only question which remains to be decided in this part of the appeal is whether or not the plaintiffs have positively disproved marriage.

Mt. Begam did not begin to reside in Ghulam Jillani's house until 1898 or thereabouts and before then she lived in patti Raike and was described as a tawaif. She admittedly had a paramour before she started relations with Ghulam Jillani and her first two sons by the latter were born out of wedlock. The initial presumption will be that that illicit connexion continued, as is laid down in All India Reporter 1927, Lahore,, p. 48. In support of the proposition that no change occurred subsequently, at least until 1898, the following points deserve notice :

1. Mt. Begam had private accounts long after the birth of the youngest of the defendants. The first document to which a reference has been made is exhibited as P. W. 1 (paper book, Part 3, pp. 164-5). The account is aginst the name of Mt. Begam, prostitute, daughter of Mt. Chando (admittedly a prostitute also). This account began in 1891 and continued till 1894. Then at p. 66 of Part 3 is another account with the same shopkeeper, and Mt. Begam is again described in the same way. It opens in 1899 and ends in September 1904. The documents are proved by Ghisu Mal (P. W. 3), the son of the shopkeeper Ganga Ram. In the middle of the period covering the above mentioned accounts, Mt. Begam executed two bonds (Part 3, p. 171), one of which (P. 5) is proved by Salamat Rai (P. W. 73). This bond is dated 11th December 1895 and Mt. Begam there also describes herself as a tawaif by caste.

2 In certain civil litigation Mt. Begam was a party. (a) The first case is Chando and Begam v. Gauri and others (part 3, p. 86). The plaintiffs describe themselves as nats (jats is a misprint). The appellate order in that case is at Part 3, p. 62 and Gauri's application for execution at pp. 56-7. This suit was followed up by one instituted by Ghulam Jillani Khan (Part 3, p. 155).

(b) Begam v. Prabbu and others—This litigation began in 1894. Mt. Begam again described herself as a tawaif (Part 3, p. 31) and impleaded Ghulam Jillani Khan as a defendant ; and he says in a statement appearing at p. 21 of Part 3, that he lives in the house of the plaintiff. No reliance need be placed on the heading of the pleas filed by Ghulam Jillani (Part 3, p. 175) since he had to repeat the heading of the plaint, but the litigation is produced to show that Ghulam Jillani Khan knew in 1894, after the birth of the youngest defendant, that Mt. Begam was still publicly admitting herself to be a tawaif and not the wife of any-one. It is proved too, by the evidence of several witnesses that Mt. Begam personally attended the Court in this suit—vide Sundar Das (P. W. 39) and Mangal Das (P. W. 60).

(c) The third litigation was between Mt. Tabi and Mt. Begam in 1896. Here also Mt. Begam is entered as a tawaif and no objection is made to that designation. In this suit Mt. Begam not only appeared in person but actually cross-examined witnesses, as appears from a reference to Part 3, pp. 30 and 38 and Part 4, pp. 10 and 11. Her personal attendance is deposed to by several witnesses.

(3) I would next refer to the statements of certain men, since dead, who described Mt. Begam in 1897 as the paramour of Ghulam Jillani. These statements are in Part 3, pp. 72, 74, 75 and 76, and there is another statement of a similar kind, made in 1893 at page 47.

(4) It is proved, further, by the clearest of evidence that Ghulam Jillani married twice long after his intimacy with Mt Begam began. I have already alluded to a marriage with Mt. Barkat, which took place not before 1893, and it is not denied that after the close of the century he married Mt. Basri. According to respectable witnesses for the plaintiffs, these marriages were made in order to enable Ghulam Jillani to beget legitimate children.

(5) A reference was also made by the plaintiffs' counsel to two other documents, in order to show that Ghulam Jillani did not have common interests with his son Firoze Din (defendant 2). These documents refer to mortgages by Ghulam Jilani in which Firoze Din tried to substitute himself in place of his father. That is a possible interpretation but not the most probable, since later on Ghulam Jillani married off Firoze Din and another defendant, and the more reasonable explanation is that the father instructed his son to take his place. The documents referred to are at Part 4, pp. 1—3, and Part 2, p. 152.

(6) Finally, the plaintiffs' counsel alluded to the previous history, as set out in the plaint and supported by some documents, which shows that officially the defendants were not regarded as legitimate sons, until the civil suit between these sons and Mt. Basri, in which, it is alleged, Mt. Basri colluded with them and confessed judgment.

In summing up this portion of the case I would remark that the facts set forth in the last few paragraphs are sufficient to disprove marriage. The most important factor is undoubtedly the manner in which the liaison began. That has already been described. It is apparent from various passages in the evidence that these illicit relations between men and women in that locality are exceedingly common, and that the parties to them are not regarded with reprobation on that account. There was, therefore, nothing unusual in Ghulam Jillani cohabiting with a prostitute. Indeed. he had already had a similar liaison with another woman of the same type. There is no doubt that Mt. Begam was an ordinary prostitute at the start. Her subsequent conduct in appearing in public, living among prostitutes, conducting her own litigation and other business and throughout describing herself as a tawaif constitute in my view, a positive disproof of marriage. The case is on all fours with that which I have cited above, namely, Ghazanfar Ali v. Kamiz Fatima (8).

It was further contended by the counsel for the plaintiffs that the parties are actually governed by the customary law of the Punjab and that the question of acknowledgment under the Muhammadan Law did not arise. There is some force in this contention per se, but the plea regarding custom was not taken at the outset of the suit. It is true the customary law does not as a rule recognize the principle of acknowledgment (vide the Punjab Chief Court judgment appearing at Part 3, p. 124), but in the absence of a definite pleading, I am not prepared to hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to rely on a position which they did not take when they instituted the suit.

The plea of estoppel, which the defendants perferred in their written statement, has not been argued before us. All that I need say is that the mere attestation, by one of the plaintiffs, of one or two deeds in which Feroze Din was described as the son of Ghulam Jillani cannot amount to an estoppel, since attestation does not fix an attesting witness with knowledge of the contents of a document.

In conclusion I hold that the marriage between Ghulam Jillani and Mt. Begam was not proved; that he did acknowledge his sons, but that marriage having been positively disproved the presumption arising from acknowledgment has been completely rebutted. I would accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 2244 of 1927, Decided on 2nd February 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Karnal, D/- 21st May 1927.

Hindu Law—Joint family — Alienation to purchase another property — Necessity not proved—Sale is not binding on the son.

A Hindu father is not entitled to sell joint ancestral property in order to get a better for himself in addition to one already possessed unless necessity for getting a new house is established. [P 438 C 1, 2]

Anant Ram Khosla—for Appellants.

Shuja-ud-Din—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of the usual declaratory suit brought by the sons of a Hindu father to set aside an alienation by way of sale made by their father. The area of the land sold is 55 bighas 11 biswas and it was sold for Rs. 500 on 19th June 1911. It has been held by the Courts below that the land was the ancestral property of defendant 1, the father of the present plaintiffs. It has also been held by the trial Court that only Rs. 300 consideration passed and no necessity had at all been established and, therefore, the sale was not binding, except as to part of the consideration, namely, Rs. 300. In appeal the learned District Judge held that all the consideration for the sale was proved and he further held that Rs. 190 were paid for bullocks which were necessary for the vendor who was carrying on agriculture at the time. He further held that as regards the remaining sum of Rs. 300 a house had been purchased by the vendor and this was done in order to better himself because he could not manage the house property that he acquired. Rs. 10 which is the rest of the consideration money, counsels on both sides before me agree, might well be put for expenses.

In second appeal here the items of Rs. 190 and Rs. 10, i. e., Rs 200 have not been contested and indeed it is a finding of fact that the bullocks were necessary and that the money passed. The argument has centred round the question whether a Hindu father is entitled to sell joint ancestral property in order to get a better house for himself in addition to the one that he already possessed. It is admitted and I have been through the record and seen that there is no evidence whatsoever, that the vendor could not manage the alienated property and was entitled to acquire house property. In these circumstances as it is proved on the record that the vendor had another house which he is occupying as a residential house and as he had only one son living at the time there is nothing whatever to show that there was any necessity for him to alienate for acquiring a fresh house. It is true that the vendor admits that his old house was only thatched house, but there is nothing whatever to show that this house was insufficient for his needs.

I, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the learned District Judge and give the plaintiffs a decree for possion of the land subject to payment of Rs. 200 to the vendee, defendant 2. I leave the parties, in the circumstances to bear their own costs throughout.

Agent, B. B. & C. I. Ry. Co., Bombay—Defendant—Respondent.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 552 of 1927, Decided on 15th March 1928, to revise decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Gujrat, D/- 7th June 1927.

Railways Act (9 of 1890), S. 77—Claim for damages for loss of goods—Notice given to one of the two railway companies and forwarded by it to the other—Latter company making enquiries in the matter and repudiating its liability—Absence of notice cannot be pleaded by the latter railway company—Evidence Act, S. 115.

Where a person whose goods were lost in transit sued the two railway companies by whom the goods were carried jointly, but gave notice to only one of them who forwarded the same to the other upon which the other railway company made enquiries into the matter and sent reply to the owner of the goods admitting that the loss took place on their line but repudiating their liability on the basis of risk-note.

Held: that as the other railway had taken notice of the plaintiff's claim, made enquiries, and sent him a definite reply repudiating their liability, it would have been futile for the plaintiff to send any separate notice to them and this clearly estopped the railway from pleading absence of notice as a bar to the plaintiff's suit as against them: A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 253; A. I. R. 1922 Mad. 362 (F. B.) and 26 Bom. 669, Dist. [P 440 C 1]

R. C. Manchanda—for Petitioner.
C. H. Garden Noad—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This was a suit for recovery of Rs. 210 as the costs of eight tins of vegetable oil and damages. The plaintiff alleged that defendant 1 sent him a consignment of 125 tins from Bombay, but at the time of delivery eight tins were missing. He sued jointly defendant 1, B. B. & C. I. Ry, and N. W. Ry. The trial Court passed a decree for

Rs. 210 against the B. B. & C. I. Ry. on which the loss was found to have occurred. On the appeal the learned Senior Subordinate Judge held that plaintiff had failed to prove that he gave any notice of his claim to the B. B. & C. I. Ry. as required by S. 77, Railways Act, and on this ground dismissed the suit. Plaintiff has filed an application for revision and seeks to set aside this order on the ground that the lower appellate Court acted with material irregularity in dismissing the suit on the aforesaid ground. The admitted facts are that no notice of the claim was given by the plaintiff direct to the B. B. & C. I. Ry. A notice was sent to the N. W. Ry. and was forwarded by them to the B. B. & C. I. Ry. The B. B. & C. I. Ry made inquiries into the matter and sent a reply to the plaintiff's counsel on 27th May 1926, admitting that the loss took place on their line between Sabarmati and Palampur, but repudiating their liability on the basis of the risk-note. The plaintiff then instituted his suit on 18th June 1926.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the B. B. & C. I. Ry. had notice of the claim through the N. W. Ry. and this was sufficient for the purposes of S. 77, Railways Act. Devi Ditta Mal v. Secy. of State (1) and Mahadeva Ayyar v. S. I. Ry. Co. (2) have been relied upon in support of the contention. On behalf of the respondent, on the other hand, reliance is placed chiefly on E. I. Ry. Co. v. Jethmull Ramanand (3).

In Devi Ditta Mal v. Secy. of State (1) the only question decided was that a notice addressed to the "Traffic Manager Claims" was sufficient when the latter had been authorized by the agent to receive applications in connexion with claims for compensation. In the present instance, it cannot be argued that the N. W. Ry to whom the notice was given had been authorized by the B. B. & C. I. Ry. to receive notices of claims on their behalf. In Mahadeva Ayyar v. S. I. Ry. Co. (2) it was held that it would be sufficient for the purposes of S. 77, Railways Act, if the agent or manager had notice of the claim within the specified time. But in that case the claim had been addressed to the District Traffic Superintendent of the Railway concerned and the facts were thus more or less similar to those in Devi Ditta Mal v. Secy. of State (1). The facts in E. I. Ry. Co. v. Jethmull Ramanand (3), however, were similar to those in the present case. In that case a notice which was originally sent to the B. B. & C. I. Ry. was communicated by the latter to the E. I. Ry., and the solicitors of the E. I. Ry. had addressed a letter to the plaintiff saying that they would look through the file of papers and write again. No further communication was, however, apparently addressed by the E. I. Ry. or their Solicitors to the plaintiff. In these circumstances it was held that the notice was not sufficient so far as the E. I. Ry. was concerned. The present case is distinguishable in so far as the B. B. & C. I. Ry. definitely treated the notice as though it were in respect of a claim made against themselves, made enquiries and sent a reply to the plaintiff repudiating the claim of the plaintiff. This will b clear from their letter dated 27th May 1926, which is reproduced below:

> With reference to your letter of 12th March 1926 to the address of the Agent, N. W. Ry., Lahore, written on behalf of your clients Messrs. Dhanpat Rai Labhoo Mal, merchants, Gujrat, I beg to inform you that I have had the matter carefully enquired into and find that the eight tins were stolen from a running train between Sabarmati and Palampur and the loss was not due to any misconduct on the part of the railway staff. Moreover, the sender has executed risk-note B which indemnifies the railway against all liability.
> Under the circumstances your clients' claim was correctly repudiated and I regret, it cannot be entertained.

The letter which was sent by the solicitors of the E. I. Ry. in the Bombay case referred to above did not commit them in any way. The following observations of the learned Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court at p. 685 of I. L. R. 26 Bom. with respect to that letter are significant:

> But is not this ascribing too much to this letter? It must be noted (1) that according to its own terms it was written at a time when Messrs. Morgan and Company had not read through the file of papers relating to the matter: (2) that the letter does not speak of the claim, or expressly treat it as one made on the E. I. Ry. Co.: (3) that the validity of the claim was not recognized then or in any subsequent correspondence brought to our notice: (4) that it is not shown that but for this letter the plaintiffs would have preferred a claim on the E. I. Ry. Co., as required by S. 77.

It seems to me from the above observations that if the letter in the Bombay case were of the type addressed by the B. B. & C. I. Ry. to the plaintiff in the present case, the decision in that case would very probably have been different. The above letter from the B. B. & C. I. Ry. was received by the plaintiff before the institution of his suit. When the railway had taken notice of the plaintiff's claim, made enquiries, and sent him a definite reply repudiating their liability, it would have been futile for the plaintiff to send any separate notice to them. It has not been contended before me that the General Traffic Manager had no authority to enquire into the matter or that the letter referred to above is not binding on the railway. The only contention put forward by the learned counsel for the railway in this respect was that no notice had been sent direct to the B. B. & C. I. Ry. and hence the letter from the General Traffic Manager was of no help to the plaintiff. For reasons given above, I think the letter clearly estops the railway from pleading absence of notice as a bar to the plaintiff's suit as against them.

I accept the application for revision, set aside the order of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge and remand the case to him for decision of the remaining issues. Stamp on application to be refunded. Costs to follow final decree.

First Appeal No. 339 of 1925, Decided on 10th January 1928, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Delhi, D/- 30th January 1925.

Deed — Construction — Award partitioning property between J and S—S to pay certain amount to J and not entitled to alienate his share till such amount is paid—No charge is created on S's share for the amount.

J and S had a dispute with each other and finally their property was partitioned by an award given by arbitrators. S was to pay Rs. 21,000 with interest at 0-9-6 % per mensem in three instalments of Rs. 7,000 to J and if he failed to pay any two instalments, J was at liberty to realize the whole sum due with interest by suit or otherwise. The award then proceeded to state as follows: "S shall not be competent to sell, mortgage, hypothecate or gift or make waqf in respect of the immovable property allotted to him till the said amount is not paid off by him to the first party." One instalment of Rs. 7,000 was paid and no further instalments were paid at all. It was contended that by the award a charge or a mortgage was created in favour of J.

Held: that the words in the award themselves did not create either a mortgage or a charge. So far as the mortgage is concerned the award not being an act of parties it is difficult to see how any mortgage could be created at all. A mere covenant not to alienate does not by itself create a charge on the property. The mere direction by the arbitrators not to alienate would not by itself be sufficient to create any charge in the property.

Dalip Singh, J.—A preliminary objection was taken in this appeal that certain orders which are printed at pp. 42 49 and 50 of the paper book form part of the judgment on which the decree was founded but were not filed along with the appeal and therefore the appeal was incompetent. As we decided to extend time and to dispense with the filing of the orders it became unnecessary to decide the question whether the appeal was or was not incompetent without these orders.

On the merits the facts of the case are as follows :

One Hari Ram had two sons, Jugal Kishore and Shadi Ram. The descendants of Jugal Kishore and the descendants of Shadi Ram had a dispute with each other and finally their property was partitioned by an award given by arbitrators, which is printed at pp. 3 and 8 of the paper book. The relevant clause in that award is at p. 6 and is Cl. 10. By that clause the sons of Shadi Ram were to pay Rs. 21,000 with interest at 0-9-6 % per mensem in three instalments of Rs. 7,000 to the sons of Jugal Kishore and if they failed to pay any two instalments the first party, i.e., the descendant of Jugal Kishore were at liberty to realize the whole sum due with interest by suit or otherwise. The award then proceeded to state as follows :

The second party (the sons of Shadi Ram) shall not be competent to sell, mortgage, hypothecate or gift or make waqf in respect of the immovable property allotted to it till the said amount is not paid off by it to the first party.

It appears that one instalment of Rs. 7,000 was paid and no further instalments were paid at all. Various alienations were made by the descendants of Shadi Ram, one to Niadar Mal-Rangi Lal by which they mortgaged a house and a shop and subsequently one to the firm of Paras Ram-Har Nand Rai. A money decree was also obtained against them by Lakhu Mal-Mittar Sen and this property (house and shop) was attached and sold in execution of their decree. The question now raised between the parties to the present suit is that by the award a charge or a mortgage was created in favour of the descendants of Jugal Kishore and, therefore, the descendants of Jugal Kishore have priority to Niadar Mal-Rangi Lal and Pars Ram-Har Nand Rai qua the sale proceeds of the shop about which alone the suit was brought. It appears that Niadar Mal-Rangi Lal recovered their dues from the sale proceeds of the house and though they were subsequently ordered to refund the money so realized it is admitted that they did not refund it. Their counsel urges that the order to refund was set aside by another order passed by the executing Court. But, be that as it may, it is clear to us that as the suit concerns itself only with the shop and as Niadar Mal-Rangi Lal are no longer contesting the position of the plaintiffs, the descendants of Jugal Kishore, qua this shop, there is no force in the appeal against them and it must fail and is dismissed with costs.

As regards the firm of Paras Ram-Har Nand Rai two main points have been argued by counsel for the appellants against the decree dismissing the suit of the plaintiffs. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge had held that there was no charge and no mortgage created by Cl. 10 of the award which has been given in extenso above. Counsel has contended that the question whether there was a charge or not is a question of intention which is to be judged from the words of the document and the surrounding circumstances and he has also referred to a subsequent conduct of the parties. So far as the surrounding circumstances are concerned there is some evidence to show that Sultan Singh and Rattan Lal, the descendants of Shadi Ram, were extravagant and of bad character. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge held that this evidence was not sufficient to show that Sultan Singh and Rattan Lal were extravagant and immoral. But it is unnecessary for us to decide this point as we are quite clear that the words in the award themselves do not create either a mortgage or a charge. So far as the mortgage is concerned the award not being an act of parties it is difficult to see how any mortgage could be created at all. The only question, therefore, is whether the words create a charge. Various rulings were cited to us but the rulings that appear to us to come nearest to the words used in the present case are the rulings cited by counsel for the respondents, that is, Bhupal v. Jag Ram (1), Gunoo Singh v. Latafat Hossain (2) and Najibulla Mulla v. Nasir Mistri (3). It was there held, and with all respect we agree, that a mere covenant not to alienate does not by itself create a charge on the property. Here also the mere direction by the arbitrators not to alienate would not by itself be sufficient to create any charge on the property, and we, therefore, hold that there is nothing to show and it is not proved that the award created any charge on the property.

The next point argued was that so far as Pars Ram-Har Nand Rai were concerned in their mortgage-deed the hypothecation of the property by the award was admitted by their predecessor-in-interest, the mortgagor. It was contended by counsel that this admission of their predecessor-in-interest created an estoppel against the present firm. On the other hand counsel for the respondents pointed out that the mortgagor himself could have raised the objection that this admission was a mistake and that at best being only an admission it could not amount to an estoppel because the plaintiffs had not in any way altered their position on the strength of this representation nor was the representation made to them. We are of opinion that at best this admission would only shift the onus and in this particular case as the matter resolves itself into a construction of the terms of the award the admission hardly makes any difference at all and can in no sense be considered to constitute an estoppel. It was next contended by counsel for the appellants that this admission was a term in the mortgage-deed and, therefore, the mortgage of Pars RamrHar Nand Rai was subject to the prior mortgage to Jugal Kishore's descendants. It is clear to us that this admission was not a term in the contract but was a recital only. Nor is there any force in the argument of counsel for the appellants that by this admission a charge was created at tbe time of the mortgage to Pars Ram-Har Nand Rai even if it had not been created originally by the award. The admission itself says that the hypothecation was created by the award and, therefore, if as we hold the award created no such hypthecation this admission was made under a mistake of fact and cannot in any way be held to estop the firm of Pars Ram-Har Nand Rai.

(3) [1881] 7 Cal. 196=8 C. L. R. 454.

Counsel for the appellants also faintly urged that at any rate the arbitrators had limited the power of the descendants of Shadi Ram not to alienate the property at all and therefore the alienations were void. But the suit was not so framed, the point was not raised in the grounds of appeal and was only finally taken up by counsel after he had concluded his main arguments. We, therefore, do not think that the point can be raised by him now and we do not express any opinion on it.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 586 of 1927, Decided on 3rd December 1927.

Limitation Act, Art. 115—Suit to recover damages caused by the breach of contract—Art. 115 applies.

Art. 115 is a general provision applying to all actions ex-contractu not specially provided for otherwise. The word "compensation" in that Article as well as in Art. 116 has the same meaning as it has in S. 73, Contract Act, and denotes a sum of money payable to a person on account of loss or damage caused to him by the breach of a contract: A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 198, (F.B.) Foll.

Plaintiff and defendant acquired a site from government for the purpose of building a shop and entered into a contract between themselves by which the plaintiff undertook to build a shop on the site and the defendant agreed to pay him one-third of the cost of construction thereof. Plaintiff's case was that the defendant had paid him Rs. 400 but refused to pay the balance of the one-third of the cost.

Held: that the case would be governed by Art. 115 and not Art. 61.

Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Appellants.

J. L Kapur—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The question of law involved in this second appeal is one of limitation.

The parties having jointly acquired a site from Government for the purpose of building a shop, entered into a contract beween themselves by which the plaintiff undertook to build a shop on the site and the defendant agreed to pay him one-third of the cost of construction thereof. The plaintiff's case was that the defendant had paid him Rs. 400 but refused to pay the balance of the one-third of the cost. On this alleged unpaid balance he claimed interest at I per cent. per mensem. The defendant pleaded inter alia that the suit was barred by time and that no interest was payable. The Court below ovarruled both these pleas.

As regards the plea of limitation they have held that the rule of limitation applicable to the suit was the one embodied in Art. 61, Sch. 1, Lim. Act of 1908. Under that Article the period of limitation is three years but it is enhanced to six years by the Punjab Limitation Act. It is clear that the plaintiff made no attempt to establish that his suit was within time even if the period of limitation were three years. It is further clear that if the suit should not fall within the purview of Art. 61 the only other Article that applied was Art. 115. Now Art. 61 applies where "money is payable to the plaintiff for money paid for the defendant". In the present case it cannot be said that the plaintiff had paid any money to any person on behalf of or for the defendant. As it was the plaintiff who constructed the building he and nobody else was primarily liable to pay for the labour and materials used. The masons, etc., and the persons who supplied the materials could hold the plaintiff responsible for payment and there being no contract between them and the defendant the latter incurred no liability to them. So he was not liable to pay any money to them which the plaintiff might have paid them for him. Art. 61, was, therefore, not applicable at all. As held in Mahomed Ghasita v. Siraj-ud-din

(1) the Article that applied was Art. 115. As decided in that case:

Article 115 is a general provision applying to all actions ex contractu not specially provided for otherwise. The word 'compensation' in that Article as well as in Art. 116 has the same meaning as it has in S. 73, Contract Act, and denotes a sum of money payable to a person on account of loss or damage caused to him by the breach of contract.

The defendant was guilty of the breach of the alleged contract, inasmuch as he refused to pay what he had agreed to do and thus caused loss to the plaintiff who had laid out money on the strength of the defendant's promise to re-imburse him. The suit was barred by limitation as it was not instituted within three years from the date of breach. I, therefore, accept the appeal and reversing the judgment of the Courts below, dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Limitation Act, Art. 182—Execution of a decree—Mere filing of receipts by a decree-holder for costs on account of maintenance of judgment-debtor in jail, does not amount to a step-in-aid.

Brij Lal—for Respondent.

Judgment. — The decree-holder obtained a money decree against the judgment-debtor on 27th June 1917. There were various applications for execution of which I need only mention the application dated 29th March 1923, which was within time. By it the decree-holder applied for the arrest and detention in jail of the judgment-debtor. The executing Court ordered him to be sent to jail on 29th May 1923. The judgment-debtor appealed to the Court of the District Judge. His appeal was accepted on 31st August 1923 and his immediate release was ordered.

On 1st December 1923, the mukhtar of the decree-holder appeared in the executing Court and put in certain receipts of expenditure incurred upon the judgment-debtor when he was in jail. There was no application along with these receipts. The executing Court passed an order as follows :

The decree-holder's mukhtar is present and has put in receipts relating to the expenditure upon the judgment-debtor. They will be attached to the record which will be consigned to the record room.

The present application for execution was put in on 21st October 1926. On 3rd December 1926 a warrant of attachment was ordered to be issued on this application. Thereupon the judgment-debtor instituted an appeal in the Court of the District Judge on the ground that the application for execution was barred by time. The District Judge dismissed the appeal, holding that the oral application of 1st December 1923, by the decree-holder asking for costs of maintenance of the judgment-debtor in jail to be added to his costs in the execution proceedings was an application to take a step-in-aid of execution and saved limitation. Against this decision this second appeal has been preferred. I am unable to hold that the appearance of the mukhtar of the decree-holder in the executing Court on a certain date, the 1st December 1923, and his putting into Court receipts on account of the maintenance of the judgment debtor in jail amounted to a step-in-aid of the execution. Nothing was done towards executing the decree. What was done was that the decree-holder put into Court certain receipts of his costs of maintaining the judgment-debtor in jail. He was safeguarding his own interests but he was not trying to execute the decree in any way, and it cannot, therefore, be said that his act of producing these receipts for the purpose stated amounted to a step-in-aid. For this reason alone the appeal must be accepted. In any case there is no proof of any oral application that the amounts mentioned in the receipts should be added to the costs of the execution proceedings. Nor did the Court order that these sums should be added to the costs. All that was said was that the receipts should be put on the record. Even if there was an oral application that these receipts should be put on the record that would not amount to a step-in-aid of execution of the decree.

There are no authorities in point, but it was held in Ananda Mohan v. Hira Sundari (1), that neither an application by a decree-holder to receive a poundage fee from the judgment-debtor in respect of the latter's property purchased by the decree-holder, nor an application by the decree-holder to be allowed to set off the purchase money against the decree, instead of paying it into Court was a step-in-aid of execution. To a similar effect is Aghore Kali v. Prasunno Coomar (2). These acts are analogous to the act in the present case of the decree-holder who put into Court certain receipts so that later he could add them to his decree.

I accept the appeal with costs throughout and set aside the orders of the Courts below on the ground that the application for execution was time barred and could not proceed.

Judgment.—In execution of a money-decree for Rs. 317-10-0 obtained by Sita Ram, respondent, against Bhagela Shah etc., appellants, a house belonging to the judgment-debtors was sold to the decree-holder. The sale was confirmed on 11th July 1924. More than a year after i. e., on 28th November 1925, one of the judgment-debtors, Sube Shah, applied under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. About a year later, i. e., on 16th November 1926, Bhagela Shah also joined in the application pointing out further irregularities in conducting the sale. The application was dismissed by the executing Court and a miscellaneous appeal was preferred to the Senior Subordinate Judge who dismissed it affirming the order of the lower Court. The judgment-debtors have preferred a second appeal to this Court.

I am of opinion that this second appeal is incompetent. The memorandum of appeal to the lower appellate Court against the order dismissing the judgment-debtor's application under O. 21, R. 90, was described as having been filed under S. 47, Civil P. C,, but in reality the appeal was under O. 43, R 1 (j), as that is the only section under which an appeal could lie. S. 104 (2), Civil P. C., lays down that orders passed on appeal under O. 43, are final and no second appeal lies therefrom. Reference may also be made to Sheo Prasad Singh v. Premma Kuar (1) and Mahadeo Singh v. Dhobi Singh (2).

Even if it be assumed that the appeal to the lower appellate Court was correctly filed under S. 47, Civil P, C., no second appeal lies to this Court as the execution proceedings in which the application was filed related to a decree which had been passed on a suit of small cause nature valued at Rs. 317. Under the Punjab Courts Act no second appeal lies to this Court against a decree passed on appeal in such a suit. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Mr. Shah Nawaz has asked me to interfere in revision urging that the lower Courts had erred in holding that the application under O. 21, R. 90 was barred by time and that the sale was vitiated by many irregularities Even if these contentions are correct I am not prepared to interfere on the revision side as the lower Courts have not acted without jurisdiction or with any material irregularity resulting in injustice to the judgment-debtor.

S. Jai Dev Singh—Defendant—Appellant.

S. Jai Singh and another—Plaintiffs—Respondents.

Misc. First Appeal No. 1698 of 1927, Decided on 18th November 1927, from order of Senior Sub-Judge, Rawalpindi, D/- 18th May 1927.

Civil P. C., O. 38, Rr. 5 and 6—Attachment before judgment — Unconditional order is under R. 6 though purported to be made under R. 5—Appeal from such order is competent.

An unconditional attachment can be ordered under R. 6 only and where attachment is unconditional it may be taken that the order is under R. 6 even though the Judge passing the order purports to have acted under R. 5 and such an order is appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (q), Civil P. C.

An unconditional attachment can only be ordered under R. 6 when the defendant fails to comply with an order made under R. 5.

Bhagat Govind Das—for Appellant.

Har Gopal—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a miscellaneous first appeal against the order for attachment before judgment made by the Senior Subordinate Judge of Rawalpindi. The order runs thus :

. . . . under the circumstances I think that it is necessary to attach the kothi before judgment under O. 38, R. 5, Civil P. C., and I order it accordingly.

Now, an order under the said R. 5 is not appealable while O. 43, R. 1 (q), Civil P. C., gives the right of appeal against an order under R. 6. In the present case, however, though the learned Senior Subordinate Judge purports to have acted under R. 5, that rule has no application. That rule contains three clauses and the Court while calling upon the defendant to furnish security etc., under Cl. (1) may also order conditional attachment of his property. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge having made an order under Cl. (1) could make none under Cl. (3).

the Court may also in the order [made under Cl. (1)] direct the conditional attachment . . . . .

But the attachment ordered by the Senior Subordinate Judge was not conditional. An unconditional attachment can only be ordered under R. 6 when the defendant fails to comply with an order made under R. 5.

Counsel for the respondent concedes that the order is irregular but contends that it is not appealable. He further urges that it cannot be revised. He contends that the order should be amended by this Court and should not be set aside. On the other hand, the counsel for the appellant argues that the order is irregular and illegal but all the same it is an order under R. 6 because there is no other provision in the Civil Procedure Code empowering a Court to order attachment before judgment.

As unconditional attachment could be ordered under R. 6 only and as the attachment was unconditional it may be taken that the order was under R. 6. But it was irregular and illegal because the circumstances under which it could be made did not exist. I, therefore, accept the appeal and set aside the order with costs.

Mohsin Shah—for Appellants.

Dev Raj Sawhney for the Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The four appellants in this case are :—

(1) Fateh Muhammad of village Anga, caste Awan ;

(2) Atta Muhammad of Khushab, caste Mallah (boatman) ;

(3) Ali of village Kund ; and

(4) Hakim of village Kufri, caste barber.

They were tried together—Nos. (1), (2) and (4) on a charge of dacoity and No. (3) for receiving property stolen in the commission of the dacoity and they have been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Mianwali and sentenced as below :—

Fateh Muhammad, Atta Muhammad, and Hakim } Rigorous imprisonment for seven years each under S. 395, I. P. C.

Ali. . . . Rigorous imprisonment for three years under S. 412, I. P. C.

It may be noted here that the joint trial of Ali and others was unlawful under Cl. (4), S. 239, Criminal P. C.

The four convicts have appealed jointly through Mr Mohsin Shah.

The convictions are based mainly on the testimony of an accomplice who turned King's evidence and the evidence about the recovery of some stolen articles from each appellant.

Mr. Mohsin Shah contends—

(1) that the offence committed was burglary punishable under S. 458, I. P. C., and not dacoity ;

(2) that the approver did not appear to have taken part in the burglary at all as the details of the occurrence given by him were found false in several respects ;

(3) that no stolen property was found in the possession of Ata Muhammad, Hakim or Ali ; and

(4) that Fateh Muhammad in whose possession some stolen property was found could be convicted under S. 412, and not under S. 395, I. P. C.

The scene of the occurrence was one of the four shops situated in a serai which is half a mile from the town of Khushab. There is a police station in the town which is also about half a mile from the serai. It is in evidence that the owners of the four shops employed four chaukidars or night watchmen to keep watch over the shops at night. It was on the night of the 28th December 1926, that the shop was broken into, and as the culprits were engaged in looting it one of the chaukidars, namely, Nur Muhammad, repaired to the residence of the owner thereof in the town and after informing him of what was happening he then went to the police station and gave information to the Sub-Inspector and the Inspector of Police who were there. These officers with some constables proceeded to the serai and met on the way the complainant Ganda Mal and one Isher Das who were firing guns to scare away the burglars. The latter had, however, decamped with the booty before the arrival of the police officers and others on the spot. It was found that the iron safe that was in the shop had been broken and a large quantity of piece goods was missing. One of the four chaukidars, namely Muhammad Azim, P. W. 11 and a tailor were sleeping in a kothri near there and the Inspector found the door of this room fastened from outside. He opened it and brought out the tailor and the chaukidar. After having done so he wrote a ruqqa to the clerk of the police station giving therein a description of the occurrence but in this ruqqa he did not mention that a chaukidar and a tailor were found locked up in a kothri. The chaukidars gave at the trial a graphic account of their encounter with the burglars and stated that they did not interfere with what they did because they threatened them with large knives and guns that they possessed. The learned Sessions Judge, however, found that they were all asleep when the robbers came and that the chaukidar Muhammad Azim and the tailor were also lying asleep when the door of their room was locked from outside. But he came to the conclusion that the offence committed was dacoity because the culprits had in order to commit the theft caused wrongful restraint to the chaukidar and the tailor by locking up the door of their room. This they cannot be said to have done. "Restraint" implies abridgement of the liberty of a person against his will. Where he is deprived of his will power by sleep or otherwise he cannot while in that condition be subjected to any restraint. In the present case therefore no restraint was caused to the chaukidar and the tailor when they were lying asleep. The learned Sessions Judge did not refer to any other act of the culprits to bring their offence under S. 391, I. P. C. I, would, therefore, hold that the offence fell under S. 458, I P. C.

Now as regards Fateh Muhammad, there is ample evidence to bring the offence home to him. He was caught on the ensuing morning on the road going from Khushab to the village Kuradi driving away a camel on which a large quantity of stolen goods were found laden. He confessed to his captors and others and mentioned the names of some of his accomplices. Therefore there can be no manner of doubt that he was one of the burglars.

As regards Hakim, Fateh Muhammad did not name him when he was arrested. On the other hand he named one Qaim Din. It was the next day that Fateh Muhammad substituted the name of Hakim for that of Qaim Din, and it was Fattu, brother of Qaim Din, who got Hakim arrested. It was urged that Fattu had to serve an object in implicating Hakim. He wanted to marry a niece of Hakim, but Hakim was opposed to the match. After his arrest Fattu succeeded in marrying the girl.

As regards the production of property by Hakim it was stated that he and the approver had deposited some stolen goods in the house of Yaru. But Yaru stated that he was blind and could not identify Hakim, accused, as the man who had come to him with the approver and given his name as Hakim. Therefore there is no conclusive evidence to show that the approver's campanion was Hakim when the stolen goods were deposited in the house of Yaru. Further it is stated that Hakim dug out from a zakhira or forest some goods that lay buried there underground in a tin box. But the zakhira was neither in his possession nor under his control, and the witnesses made discrepant statements with regard to the spot in the forest where the box lay buried. Further these witnesses deposed that the tin-box when dug out was quite clean and free f om dust. Counsel for the appellant, therefore, argues that the box must have been buried there underground just then in order to have it produced by Hakim because otherwise it must have been by lapse of time soiled by earth. It may be observed here that this recovery was made on 13th March, i. e., two and a half months after the theft. If the tin-box had been there for the whole or even half of this period it would certainly have soiled. The counsel's argument is therefore not devoid of force.

There remains the approver's testimony against Hakim, but with regard to it the learned Sessions Judge has found that history is false in several material particulars. His testimony is, therefore, not only tainted being that of a criminal but is also unreliable for the reason that he has proved himself to be unworthy of credit by making false statements.

I am, therefore, of opinion that as against Hakim there is no satisfactory evidence to justify his conviction Turning now to the case of Ata Muhammad, it may be observed that he was not named either by Fateh Muhammad or the approver. Fateh Muhammad, however, stated that one of his accomplices was a Mallah of Khushab. All the Mallahs of that town were, therefore, collected by the police and Siraj Din approver singled out Ata Muhammad from among them as one of his accomplices. This took place on 2nd January 1927. The same day Ata Muhammad produced a stolen piece of Japan silk and a lungi. The silk piece bore the complainant's signature. One of the culprits named by Fateh Muhammad as well as Siraj Din approver was Mian Muhammad who, however, could not be got hold of. Siraj Din stated that it was Mian Muhammad who introduced him to Ata Muhammad and that he (Siraj Din) had put up with Ata Muhammad in his house at Khushab for two days before the occurrence. After a careful consideration of the evidence against Ata Muhammad I come to the conclusion that he was undoubtedly one of the burglars.

As regards Ali who is the father of Mian Muhammad absconder, there can be no manner of doubt that he produced a heavy bundle of stolen goods—coupled with this fact is the evidence of approver that Ali received these goods from his son Mian Muhammad. He has, therefore, been rightly convicted under S. 412, I. P. C., and his sentence is not excessive. I therefore maintain his conviction as well as sentence.

The result is that I accept the appeal so far as Hakim is concerned and setting aside his conviction and sentence direct that he be released forthwith.

I alter the conviction of Fateh Muhammad as well as that of Ata Muhammad from that under S. 395 to one under S. 458, I. P. C., but maintain their sentences.

FFORDE AND AGA HAIDAR, JJ.

In the matter of F. K. Byrne, Bar-at-Law, Lahore.

Civil Misc. Case No. 601 of 1927, Decided on 22nd December 1927.

* Legal Practitioners Act (1879), S. 13—(Aga Haidar, J.) Pleader engaged in death appeal if unable to attend Court personally should spend whole fee received by him in procuring his substitute—(Fforde, J.) His absence can be excused on the ground of physical inability only.

Aga Haidar, J.—It may sometimes happen that a counsel may find himself in a position of unforeseen difficulty when with all the best intentions in the world it may become impossible for him to appear on behalf of his client in a case and he may be left no alternative except to hand over his brief to another counsel so that his client's interests may not suffer. But in a murder case when a counsel has reason to believe that he would not be available at the time when the case would be called on for hearing, because he has other engagements elsewhere, it is his duty to communicate with the person who had engaged him and to return the fee to him. If it is not possible for him to do so and the pressure of overriding circumstances is beyond his control, then he should try his very best and spend the whole of the fee that he has received in briefing a counsel who would do full justice to his client's case for the remuneration : 3 Bur. L. T. 131, Ref. [P 450 C 2]

Fforde, J.—It is not practicable or indeed desirable to lay down rigid rules of conduct for the Bar. The independence and sense of responsibility of the legal profession should be encouraged rather than the reverse. But when a practitioner has undertaken the duty of appearing to defend a man for his life, he should give exclusive attention to that case, and nothing should be deemed to exonerate him from that obligation except physical inability to attend at the hearing. [P 452 C 1]

C. H. Carden Noad—for the Crown.

C. Bevan Petman—for Mr. Byrne.

Agha Haidar, J.—The facts of this case are as follows :

Five persons were convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., and sentenced to death. They filed a joint appeal on the 25th May 1927, in this Court through Mr. Byrne, a Barrister-at-law and Advocate of this Court. The case came on the list for the week commencing from Monday, 26th September 1927, and stood sixth on the said list. The days on which criminal appeals and murder references are heard are only the first four days in the week and the last of these four days was Thursday, 29th September, 1927. The case, Criminal Appeal No. 559 of 1927, Gangi and others v. Crown was not put up on the daily list during that week. On Friday the 30th September, according to the practice of this Court, the list for the following week was prepared and it was open to Mr Byrne to have the list "adjusted", on a reference to the Deputy Registrar. The Court was closed for the Dusehra holidays from the 2nd to the 6th October, 1927, both days inclusive, and, therefore, the case remained on the week's list as heretofore. The Court reopened after the Dusehra holidays on Friday, the 7th October 1927, and, as the list for the following week was being prepared in the office on that day, it was again open to Mr. Byrne to get such an adjustment of the list as would have the effect of putting off the hearing of his appeal until he was able to argue it before the Court.

According to Mr. Byrne's own affidavit, the Punjab Government had engaged him to appear on behalf of the Crown in a certain forgery case at Pakpattan and the dates for the hearing of that case were originally fixed from the 10th to the 15th October 1917, both days inclusive. Inspite of his knowledge of these days, and although he had two Fridays, namely Friday, 30th September, and Friday, the 7th October 1927, on either of which he could have made suitable arrangements for the appeal, still Mr. Byrne took no steps to keep out the case out of the list for the dates on which he was to appear at Pakpattan. On Monday, the 10th October 1927, Mr. Byrne's case stood fifth in the weekly list but did not appear on the daily list. Mr. Byrne says that he was to be engaged in the case at Pakpattan from the 10th October onwards but that he obtained the permission of the Magistrate to leave Lahore a day later, i. e., on the 11th October. His point is that up till the 10th October he was waiting for his appeal to be taken up by the High Court and was anxious to conduct it personally. However, sometime on the 10th October 1927, Mr. Byrne handed over his brief in the murder appeal (Gangi and others v. Crown) to Mr. Muhammad Amin, a Barrister-at-law and Advocate of this Court, paying him a sum of Rs. 32. The case stood third on the day's list for the 11th October 1927, and it appears that it was called on for hearing almost at the end of the day, when the counsel who was holding Mr. Byrne's brief, opened the case on behalf of the appellants. Soon after the Court rose for the day. It appears that, as a result of a telegram despatched by Mr. Saunders, who was also representing one of the appellants in the case, the clients reached Lahore on the morning of the 12th and came to know from Mr. Byrne's clerk that, as Mr. Byrne was engaged on Government work, he had engaged another counsel for them and furthermore " that Mr. Byrne had told Sir Shadi Lal that he was sending another man in his place." On the following day the case, which had been left over as part heard on the previous day, was called on for hearing and, as Mr. Muhammad Amin opened the case, one of the clients, namely, Munshi, who had instructed Mr. Byrne and had paid him a sum of Rs. 1,000 as his fee and another Rs. 100 as his clerk's fee, stood up and addressed the Court in the following words :

We engaged Mr. Byrne to conduct our case. But he has not put in an appearance today. Another Barrister (pointing to Mr. Muhammad Amin Advocate) has appeared on his behalf. We do not want Mr. Muhammad Amin to conduct our case. The Court may either direct Mr. Byrne to appear or it may decide the case as it deems proper.

R. O. A. C.

Dated 12th October, 1927.

Sd/- Munshi.

A notice was issued to Mr. Byrne under the provisions of Cl. 8 of the Letters Patent of the Lahore High Court and S. 41, Legal Practitioners Act (Act 18 of 1879) to show cause why his name should not be removed from the Roll of Advocates of this Court. The charge against him was as follows :

That having accepted a fee of Rs. 1,000 on behalf of accused persons sentenced to death in Criminal Appeal No. 599 of 1927 (Murder Reference No. 85 of 1927) Crown versus Gangi etc. you wilfully neglected to appear on their behalf on the 12th October 1927, when the case was heard by a Division Bench of the High Court without any overriding pressure of circumstances beyond your control and without the consent of your client. That in acting as above you were guilty of grossly improper conduct in the discharge of your professional duty.

Mr. Byrne put in an affidavit in his defence and was represented by Mr. Bevan Petman at the hearing. The affidavit, which Mr. Byrne has filed, is a crude document, coached in very defective language and originally contained at least seven paragraphs which had to be deleted under the orders of the Court inasmuch as they contained allegations some of which were false and others were of a highly scandalous character. Some of the allegations in the deleted paragraphs did not give the source of Mr. Byrne's information as to the facts that he was swearing to and were apparently hearsay and could not form part of an affidavit which a Court of Justice would look into. I may observe that the paragraphs, which refer to a conversation which Mr. Byrne had with his Lordship the Hon'ble the Chief Justice in his chamber, are in very bad taste and contrary to all the recognized rules of etiquette in that they purport to reproduce part of a private conversation, and a distorted version of that conversation too.

Paragraph No 7 of Mr. Byrne's affidavit runs as follows :

That the Forged Notes Conspiracy case was fixed for hearing at Pakpattan from the 10th to the 15th October, 1927 and that I was ordered to proceed to Pakpattan as Public Prosecutor.

Paragraph No. 18 is to the following effect :

That the murder appeal was fifth on the weekly list and I did not except it to be heard before the 14th, by which time I expected to return from Pakpattan.

These two statements seem to be contradictory of each other, for if Mr. Byrne was to be engaged at Pakpattan from the 10th to the 15th it is not easily intelligible as to what he meant when he said that by the 14th October he expected to return from Pakpattan.

There is another matter in the affidavit which is important. Mr. Byrne in his affidavit says that, when he gave the brief to Mr. Muhammad Amin, he had discussed the case thoroughly with him, thus making out that he had prepared the case and imparted to Mr. Muhammad Amin, his substitute, the result of his preparation. Mr. Muhammad Amin was examined by the Registrar on 12th October 1927. In his statement before the Registrar, Mr. Muhammad Amin was perfectly clear and definite when he stated :

> He (Mr. Byrne) said he was going on Government work to Pakpattan or somewhere. He recommended that I should thoroughly prepare the case as it was a question of life and death for the accused. He gave me no instructions at all beyond giving me this paper book.

This statement was made on the 12th October 1927, immediately after the incident in the Court when the whole affair must have been fresh in Mr. Muhammad Amin's mind. Mr. Muhammad Amin has filed an affidavit which has been placed before us. In para. 2 of this affidavit he says that Mr. F. K. Byrne handed me the printed paper book relating to the said appeal and that Mr. F. K. Byrne and I discussed the case and decided on the course of argument for the defence. As already stated, Mr. Byrne too in his affidavit says that he had thoroughly discussed the case with Mr. Muhammad Amin. Mr. Muhammad Amin was sent for by the Court at the hearing and the statement which he made before the Registrar was read over to him and he admitted that it was correct. The contradictions in the two sets of his statements are too palpable and cannot possibly be reconciled. When asked by the Court as to how the two statements made by him could be reconciled, Mr. Muhammad Amin tried to explain them away by saying that what he stated before the Registrar merely meant that no written notes of arguments were handed over to him by Mr. Byrne when the brief was passed to him. This explanation does not appeal to me, and I regret to say that it is an afterthought. Nor do I accept the affidavit of Mr Byrne on this point. In my opinion Mr. Byrne simply gave the brief to Mr. Muhammad Amin sometime on the 10th October and a sum of Rs. 32 as his fee or compensation for the time and labour that he was to devote to the case.

At the hearing Sir Muhammad Shafi asked the Court if he could be allowed to raise the general question of the prevailing practice whereby a counsel can hand over his brief to another counsel when he himself is unable to look after a particular case in Court. The issue before the Court was a very narrow one, and I do not think that we are called upon to express any opinion upon the larger question of counsel's general rights and liabilities in the matter of handing over their briefs to others. The question before us for decision is simply this : whether in a murder case it is competent to a counsel, who has received a fee from his client for arguing his appeal, to hand over the case to another counsel at the eleventh hour, giving him a negligible portion of his fee simply because he was engaged elsewhere. As already pointed out, Mr. Byrne knew that the case was on the weekly list as long ago as the 26th September, 1927. He could have made arrangements with the Deputy Registrar e ther on the 30th September, 1927, or the 7th October 1927, but he took no steps. He had accepted the case on behalf of the clients in the murder case on the 5th May 1927, and had received a very substantial fee both for himself and for his clerk. Afterwards he accepted a criminal case from the Government in which he was to appear at Pakpattan sometime in the middle of October. Undoubtedly he could have communicated with the persons who had instructed him on behalf of the appellants and explained to them the situation as it stood. He could either have returned the fee or explained the circumstances to the clients and mentioned to them that it was just possible that he may not be available at the time when the case would come up for hearing.

In that case it would have been open to the persons who had engaged Mr. Byrne either to take back the fee and make their own arrangements or to ask Mr. Byrne to make some suitable arrangement about the case on payment of an adequate fee to a proper locum tenens. Anyhow the whole thing should have been done in a fair, frank and straightforward manner. Instead of this we find Mr. Byrne engaging a counsel on 10th and paying him a miserable sum of Rs. 32 which is less than one third of the fee which his clerk got from his unfortunate clients. While handing over the brief to Mr. Muhammad Amin and giving him Rs. 32 Mr. Byrne took care not to mention the total sum which he had received from the clients in the case. Even if it is assumed that Mr. Byrne had no time to communicate with his clients, the least that he could have done in common fairness in order to safeguard the interests of his clients, was to have engaged a counsel occupying the front rank on the criminal side of the Bar of this Court. This he could have easily managed with the sum of Rs. 1000 which the clients had put into his hand in order to have the appeal properly and thoroughly argued. As an English Barrister he ought to have lived up to the high traditions of the English Bar whose standard of honour is not inferior to that of any other profession or class of men in the world.

It was argued by Mr. Bevan Petman on behalf of Mr. Byrne that he is an inexperienced and junior member of the Bar. This sort of argument does not appeal to me. There might be cases when it is difficult for a man to understand his exact legal position but to act honestly and fairly in our dealings with our fellowmen does not require either experience or familiarity with any abstruse principles of law or rules of practice prevailing at the Bar. The ordinary moral equipment of a gentleman is quite sufficient to meet all contingencies which may arise in the practice of an advocate's profession. It may sometimes happen that a counsel may find himself in a position of unforeseen difficulty when with all the best intentions in the world it may become impossible for him to appear on behalf of his client in a case and he may be left no alternative except to hand over his brief to another counsel so that his client's interests may not suffer. Those cases would stand upon a different footing and would depend upon their special facts and circumstances. As a matter of ordinary practice, it may be laid once and for all that in a murder case when a counsel has reason to believe that he would not be available at the time when the case would be called on for hearing, because he has other engagements elsewhere it is his duty to communicate with the person who had engaged him and to return the fee to him. If it is not possible for him to do so and the pressure of overriding circumstances is beyond his control then he should try his very best and spend the whole of the fee that he has received in briefing a counsel who would do full justice to his client's case for the remuneration. If he finds some friend, who is prepared to do his client's case without any consideration then he must see to it that he is a counsel who would be able to conduct the case with as much thoroughness and industry as any other counsel would do on the receipt of the whole fee. In para. 31 of his affidavit Mr. Byrne says > that my engagement in the appeal was not made subject to any express condition that I should appear in person and not avail myself of instructing other counsel should the necessity arise.

The proper question that arises out of this allegation is whether his clients would have engaged him for the fee that he received if he had told them that it was possible that he may not appear on behalf of the appellants and that the appeal might be argued on behalf of the appellants by somebody else. The answer is perfectly clear. The clients would never have engaged him on such a condition.

I waited throughout the arguments to see if the counsel, who appeared on behalf of Mr. Byrne, would express regret before the Court on behalf of his client and admit that his client had made a mistake and did not exercise proper judgment in the matter; but I am sorry that this step was not taken, and in my opinion Mr. Byrne was badly advised in not adopting this course which would have been extremely proper. On the contrary Mr. Byrne's counsel up to the end tried to justify Mr. Byrne's conduct and merely said that he followed the prevailing practice. Well, if such a practice prevails as would countenance Mr. Byrne's conduct in the present case then all that I can say is that it is a dishonest practice and that the sooner it is put an end to the better would it be for the honour of the legal profession and the interests of the litigating public whose ignorance and helplessness in most cases is pathetic to a degree. In this connexion I may quote the remarks of a learned Judge who was hearing an appeal in a civil suit which was brought by a client for the refund of fee against his counsel who did not appear for him at the hearing but appointed a substitute for himself. The passage is to be found in a case reported in Maung Kyaw v. Maung Po Thiang (1), and is as follows:

> Defendant emphasizes that any third pleader could be appointed to conduct the case for him. It might be for the interests of the legal profession if the clients were induced to believe this rule was binding on them, but the interests and rights of the client appear to be curiously disregarded. A man is as much at liberty to choose his legal as his medical adviser. Instructions to an advocate often involve the reposing of trust in him and the disclosure of confidential matters. No authority is quoted for holding that either by law or custom the trust may be transferred to another advocate without the client's consent.

Having regard to what I have stated, I have no doubt in my mind, that Mr. Byrne had been guilty of grave dereliction of his professional duties towards his clients and his conduct in the present case did not bear the hallmark of that absolute good faith and rectitude which I expect of every member of the Bar. The question of punishment in a case like this is not an easy one to decide, but it is a case in which I should like to emphasize my strong disapproval of Mr. Byrne's conduct and the most lenient penalty that I can impose upon him is that he should be suspended from practice for a period of one month from today.

Fforde, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment just delivered by my learned brother, and have little to add beyond saying that I find myself in complete agreement with the conclusion arrived at by my learned brother and the reasons which he has given for coming to that conclusion.

It is not practicable or indeed desirable to lay down rigid rules of conduct for the Bar. The independence and sense of responsibility of the legal profession should be encouraged rather than the reverse.

But there is one rule which common fairness and common decency requires that the Bar should observe, and that is that when a practitioner has undertaken the duty of appearing to defend a man for his life he should give exclusive attention to that case, and nothing should be deemed to exonerate him from that obligation except physical inability to attend at the hearing I don't say that there may not be exceptional cases for instance, as Sir Muhammad Shafi has pointed out counsel may find that two murder appeals in which he has been engaged have simultaneously come into the list for hearing. Such cases are infrequent, and counsel faced with a difficulty of this kind can only make the best arrangement possible for his client but he must of course make the best possible arrangement for his client, and not as Mr. Byrne had done, the best possible arrangement for himself only. Mr. Byrne on finding that the murder appeal was to be heard on 11th October should have either tried to postpone the Pakpattan case or transferred his brief in that case. His first overriding duty was to the clients whose lives he had been engaged to defend.

In my judgment Mr. Byrne has acted with grave impropriety in the discharge of his professional obligations towards his clients, and it is both significant and regrettable that he appears to be unable to appreciate that his conduct has been in any way blameworthy.

Misc. First Appeal No 1902 of 1927, Decided on 9th February 1928, from order of Dist. Judge, Gujranwala, D/- 11th May 1927.

Provincial Insolvency Act, (5 of 1920), S. 10 (2)—Insolvency petition—Creditors not taking steps to receive rateable distribution out of the sale proceeds—Insolvent also not applying for discharge — Order annulling adjudication—Application for leave to present fresh insolvency petition should be granted.

Where a person was adjudicated an insolvent and was ordered to apply for an order of his discharge within six months and his assets were taken charge of by the Official Receiver, which were sold and the amount was deposited with him but none of the creditors appeared to receive the same, and so he suggested that as the insolvent also had not applied for his discharge as directed by the Court, the adjudication should be annulled, whereupon the District Judge, without giving any notice to the insolvent or to the other parties concerned annulled the adjudication and so the applicant presented an application for leave to present a fresh insolvency petition.

Held: that leave to present fresh petition of insolvency should be granted as the estate of the insolvent was still under administration by the Official Receiver and consequently the insolvent might have been under a reasonable impression that he need not apply till the assets held by the Official Receiver had been distributed to the creditors. [P 453 C 1]

Manohar Lal—for Appellant.

S. C. Chatterjee—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Beli Ram, appellant was adjudicated an insolvent on 2nd May 1925 and was ordered to apply for an order of his discharge six months after the date of his adjudication. His assets were taken charge of by the Official Receiver and it seems that none of the creditors took any steps to receive a rateable distribution out of the sale proceeds of such assets. The consequence was that on 20th March 1926 the Official Receiver reported to the District Judge that the entire assets of the insolvent had been sold and that Rs. 105-14-5 were in deposit with him but that none of the creditors had appeared to receive the same. He also suggested that as the insolvent had not applied for his discharge as directed by the Court the adjudication should be annulled. The District Judge thereupon without giving any notice to the insolvent or to the other parties concerned annulled the adjudication on 25th March 1926.

On 10th May 1927 Beli Ram presented an application under S. 10 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act, for leave to present a fresh insolvency petition. This petition was rejected by the District Judge on 11th May 1927. Beli Ram has consequently presented this appeal with the sanction of the District Judge.

After a careful consideration of the facts of this case I consider that this is a fit case in which the learned District Judge should have granted leave to present a fresh insolvency Petition. As I have stated the estate of the insolvent was still under administration by the Official Receiver and consequently the insolvent might have been under a reasonable impression that he need not apply till the assets held by the Official Receiver had been distributed to the creditors.

It appears, however, that during the pendency of this appeal the amount held by the Official Receiver was paid over to the, insolvent who has offered to refund the same if so ordered by this Court. I consider that under the circumstances the proper order should be that the appellant be allowed to present an insolvency petition provided he deposits the amount received by him from the Official Receiver in Court along with his insolvency petition. Consequently I accept this appeal and grant leave to Beli Ram to present a fresh insolvency petition on the condition specified above. Under the peculiar circumstances of the case I leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Anant Ram Khosla—for Appellants.

Fakir Chand—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Two brothers were adjudicated insolvents at the instance of a creditor. They did not apply within the time fixed for their discharge and accordingly the District Judge annulled the adjudications under the provisions of S. 43, Insolvency Act. After he had done so he, on 10th July 1926, acting under the provisions of S. 37, Insolvency Act, ordered the property of Bagi Ram, one of the insolvents which had vested in the Receiver to be restored to him. This decision was appealed against and, on 12th January 1927, I held, following Roop Narain v. King King & Co. (1), that with a view to protect the creditors the Court should have passed an order under S. 37 vesting the property of the debtor in a person appointed by it for the benefit of the creditors. I, therefore, accepted the appeal and directed that the property of the debtor Bagi Ram should vest in the old Receiver. I further directed that that order would continue for six months within which time the petitioning creditor or creditors should have been able to take further steps to protect their interests in the property.

Accordingly when the case went back the creditors applied to the Insolvency Court for the sale of the property vested in the Receiver and for the distribution of the proceeds amongst the scheduled creditors. The Insolvency Court sanctioned this on 8th June 1927, and the present appeal is from that order.

In the meantime the old Receiver in whom I vested the property under S. 37 of the Act has sold it, and distributed the proceeds proportionately amongst the scheduled creditors.

(1) A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 370.

It is contended before me that my order was not a complete vesting order but was only one vesting the property to a limited extent so as to allow the creditors to proceed against it by way of suit. No such words as these occur in my order. It is true that in the last sentence I said that the order would only continue for six months which I considered sufficient time for the creditors to take further steps. It might have been the case that they did not wish to have the property sold. The only question, therefore, is whether the person in whom I vested the property had power to sell it at the request of the creditors and to distribute the proceeds amongst the creditors.

It is quite clear that persons so vested with property under S. 37, or trustees under S. 39, Insolvency Act, have full power to deal with the property vested in them. This view was accepted in Motharam v Pahlajrai Gopaldas (2), a decision of the Court of the Sind Judicial Commissioners. The same view is taken in Rustomji's Insolvency and Bankruptcy, 2nd edn., p. 206.

It seems to me, therefore, that the orders that the property be sold and the proceeds distributed to the creditors is legal and correct and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Misc. First Appeal No. 1930 of 1927, Decided on 13th December 1927, from order of District Judge, Rawalpindi, D/- 18th May 1927.

Civil P. C., O. 9, R 9—Application for cancellation of letters of administration—Dismissal for default—Absence of one of the applicants for fetching counsel and of other due to blindness—Absence can be excused and application can be restored.

Where the applicants were present outside the Court on the date on which the case came for hearing, and when the case was called on, on of the applicants went off to fetch his counsel but by the time he had returned he found that the application had been dismissed, and where the other applicant was unable to go into the Court room when the case was called on for the reason that she was blind.

Held; that restoration might well have been ordered in this case. [P 454 C 2]

Shamair Chand—for Appellants.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from the order of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, refusing to restore an application for cancellation of letters of administration which had been dismissed in default. The facts are these:—Two persons Mt. Kirpi and Bodh Raj filed an application in the Court asking that certain letters of administration that had been issued by the Court should be cancelled on the ground that the said letters had been obtained by fraud. The 3rd March 1927 was fixed for hearing of this application but was dismissed for default.

On the same date an application under O. 9, R. 9, Civil P C, was filed by the applicants, the present appellants, in which it was stated that the applicants were, as a matter of fact, present outside the Court on the date in question and that when the case was called on for hearing one of the applicants, Bodh Raj went off to fetch his counsel but by the time he had returned with his counsel found that the application had been dismissed. It was further stated that Mt. Kirpi, the other applicant, was unable to go into the Court room when the case was called on for the reason that she was blind. A reference to the application shows that it was signed by both the petitioners, the advocate for the petitioners and certain witnesses who were present to give evidence for the petitioners in the application proceedings. From this it may be gathered that the absence of the petitioners in this case was by no means intentional. It certainly would have been better had Mt. Kirpi been able to enter the Court room when the case was called on, but the fact that she was blind and that her co-applicant had gone off to call his counsel is one that, I think, may be regarded as an excuse or reason for her failure to go into the Court room.

After a careful consideration of all the circumstances in this case, it seems to me that restoration might well have been ordered in this case, the applicants being made to pay such costs as the trial Court considered reasonable. I, therefore, accept this appeal and, setting aside the order dismissing the application in default direct the restoration of the said application which should now be disposed of in accordance with law. I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Second Appeal No. 3126 of 1925, Decided on 25th January 1928, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 26th August 1925.

(a) Landlord and tenant—Abandonment depends upon the intention of the party concerned.

Abandonment depends upon the intention of the party concerned. The mere fact that such party is residing in another village does not by itself amount to abandonment. It must be shown that he migrated to the other village with the intention of not returning to the former village and therefore that he intended to relinquish his rights there. [P 455 C 2]

(b) Landlord and tenant—A non-proprietor is not ordinarily entitled to sell a house built and occupied by him—Lease is not prohibited—Lease by a non-proprietor does not amount to an assertion of title adverse to the proprietors.

Ordinarily a non-proprietor is not entitled to sell a house built and occupied by him but nothing prohibits him from granting a lease of such a house to another person. It is possible that in the case of kamins who are given or permitted to build houses in consideration of their doing service to the proprietors, there is an implied covenant that the grantees shall occupy the houses personally.

Where it was not established that it was an essential condition, express or implied, of the permission granted by the proprietors to a non-proprietor that the latter shall occupy the house personally.

Held: that the act of a non-proprietor in renting the house to another person did not amount to a breach of the condition of his tenure and therefore to an assertion of title adverse to the proprietors, or that the possession of that person was adverse to the proprietors, [P 456 C 1]

Faqir Chand—for Appellants.

Judgment.—It is not without some hesitation that I have decided to accept this appeal, especially as the respondent did not appear before me.

The only question raised by the counsel for the appellant is of limitation. The plaintiffs who are some of the proprietors in the village, instituted the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen to eject defendants 1 to 3 from the house in suit. It was alleged that the land on which the house stands, was originally given to one Shadi, a Rawal, for purposes of residence, that subsequently Shadi built the house and lived therein, but after his death, his son Bhola rented the house to Ganda Ram, father of defendant 1, who resided in it as the tenant of the descendants of Shadi till about ten months before the suit when he sold the house to defendants 2 and 3. The descendants of Shadi were also impleaded as defendants. It appears that the descendants of Shadi have migrated to another village and in 1876 when the lease was granted by Bhola to Ganda Ram, the former was residing in that village.

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge on appeal has held that the plaintiffs' suit is barred by time. He holds that Bhola when he rented the house to Ganda Ram, had no interest in it as he had already abandoned the house which had consequently reverted to the owners of the site and, therefore, possession of Ganda Ram became adverse to the plaintiffs, the proprietors, from the date of his lease.

In the first instance the view of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge that the house was abandoned by Bhola does not appear to me correct. Abandonment depends upon the intention of the party concerned. The mere fact that such party is residing in another village does not by itself amount to abandonment. It must further be shown that he migrated to the other village with the intention of not returning to the former village and, therefore, that he intended to relinquish his rights there. The fact that Bhola rented the property in 1876 to Ganda Ram, shows that he never intended to relinquish it. The facts disclosed, therefore, do not amount to legal proof of abandonment and consequently must be assumed that in 1876 Bhola was owner of the house in its original tenure.

The question then is whether a non-proprietor is entitled to give on rent the house built and occupied by him. There can be no question that ordinarily he is not entitled to sell it (he can sell only the materials which must be removed by the purchaser), but I have not been able to discover any authority which prohibits him from granting a lease of such a house to another person. It is possible that in the case of kamins who are given or permitted to build houses in consideration of their doing service to the proprietors, there is an implied covenant that the grantees shall occuy the houses personally. But it has not been established in this case that it was an essential condition, express or implied of the permission granted by the proprietors to Shadi that the latter shall occupy the house personally. Under these circumstances I am unable to hold that the act of Bhola in renting the house to Ganda Ram in 1876 amounted to a breach of the condition of his tenure and, therefore, to an assertion of title adverse to the proprietors, or that the possession of Ganda Ram was adverse to the proprietors. That being so Ganda Ram's son, defendant 1, being a mere tenant, and no title in the house which he could sell to defendants 2 and 3, and the sale about ten months before the suit, was the first infringement of the plaintiffs' rights. It follows from this that the plaintiffs' cause of action arose about ten months before the suit and that their suit is not barred by time.

Another test to determine the question of limitation is, whether, in 1876 when Bhola put Ganda Ram in possession of his house as his tenant, the proprietors were entitled to put an end to the rights of Bhola and eject Ganda Ram, as a trespasser. I do not think they were entitled to do so, if my view is correct that Bhola by creating a tenancy in favour of Ganda Ram did not break any of the conditions under which his ancestors were granted the site on which the house stands.

The consequence is that this appeal must be accepted and the plaintiffs' suit decreed with costs throughout.

Muhammad Tufail—for Appellant.

Niaz Muhammad—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by Mt. Sakina Begam against the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Kangra, appointing the respondent Raja Muhammad Wali Ullah Khan as the guardian of the property of her son Farrakh Muhammad minor, aged nine years The proceedings which led to the appointment of the respondent as guardian are not described in the order under appeal. It is, therefore, necessary to give them in some detail in this judgment.

It appears that one Faiz Muhammad Khan of Rehlu died about eight years ago, leaving him surviving his widow Mt. Sakina Begam. appellant, and a minor son Farrakh Muhammad who was then about one year old. His property consisted of two squares of land in the Lyallpur District and some immovable property in the Kangra District, to which the minor succeeded. On 12th October 1926, Ali Muhammad, who was a first cousin of Faiz Muhammad Khan deceased applied to be appointed as the guardian of the property of the minor. It was alleged that the mother of the minor had not been managing the property satisfactorily. The mother opposed the application and contended that she had been managing the property in the best interests of the minor.

An issue was framed as to whether it was necessary to appoint a guardian at all, and, if so, whether the applicant Ali Muhammad was a fit person to be so appointed. Ali Muhammad, however, led no evidence to prove this issue but Mt. Sakina Begam produced two witnesses. On 21st December 1926, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge instead of proceeding to adjudicate upon the application of Ali Muhammad sent a robkar to Raja Muhammad Wali Ullah Khan, respondent, Honorary Magistrate, Rehlu, who is an uncle of the deceased father of the minor, asking him to make suggestions for the protection of the property of the minor. No reply having been received from the Raja a reminder was sent to him. On 21st February, the Raja replied saying that the lands of the minor were not being properly managed, that it was necessary to appoint a guardian for the protection of his property and that he was prepared to assist in the management of the estate if a "paid guardian" was appointed. He suggested that one Munir Ullah Khan was a fit person to be appointed the "paid guardian" on Rs. 15 per mensem. This reply was laid before the Court on 7th March 1927.

In the meantime the original applicant Ali Muhammad had died on 4th February 1927, and no application had been made either by Raja Muhammad Wali Ullah Khan or by any other person to be substituted on the record in his place with a view to continue the proceedings started at his instance. On 7th March, neither Raja Muhammad Wali Ullah Khan nor any agent on his behalf was present but the Court, on reading the reply received from him to the robkar sent by it, proceeded to appoint the Raja as guardian of the property of the minor. In the order it was stated that it was not necessary to take any security from the guardian, and that he could entertain a paid manager on a suitable salary.

Against this order the present appeal has been preferred by Mt. Sakina Begam and various objections have been taken on her behalf against the appointment of the respondent. The first point to be considered is whether the application made by Ali Muhammad for appointment as guardian of the property of the minor had or had not abated on the date that the order under appeal was passed.

As already pointed out, Ali Muhammad had died on 4th February 1927, and no application had been made to substitute any other person in his place. Mr. Muhammad Tufail for the appellant urges that the proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act are personal to the applicant and on his death the "right to sue" does not survive and the Court has no power to proceed with that application any further, but that it is open to any other person to apply for his own appointment as guardian on a fresh application. Mr. Niaz Muhammad for the respondent contends, on the other hand, that the "right to sue" in such a case survives and that the proceedings can be continued by any person interested in the minor. The rulings on the point as to whether the "right to sue" in such proceedings survives or not are not uniform. In Badr Bakhsh v. Jangbaz Khan (1) and Gangatai v. Khashabai (2) it was held that the right to sue does not survive, but a contrary view was taken in a Single Bench judgment of the Chief Court in Arjan Singh v. Gujri (3) which has been cited with approval by the Madras High Court in Sami Chetti v. Adaikalam Chetti (4). I do not think it necessary for the purposes of this case to decide which of this rival views is correct for, in my opinion, the procedure adopted by the lower Court is erroneous—according to either view. If the law was correctly laid down in Arjan Singh v. Gurji (3) and in the Madras case above cited and it be presumed that the "right to sue" survives, it would be necessary under O. 22, Rr. 1 and 3, Civil P. C., for some one to apply to be made a representative of the deceased applicant and the proceedings could be continued only after such application had been granted. In this case no such application was admittedly made. Indeed, as pointed out already, Raja Muhammad Wali Ullah Khan, the respondent, was not even present in Court personally or by agent, and of course, there was no representation on behalf of any of the heirs or legal representatives of the original applicant Ali Muhammad. In the absence of such substitution, there being no applicant before the Court, the proceedings had terminated and it had no jurisdiction to proceed further with the case. If, on the other hand, the contrary view be correct, that the "right to sue" was personal to the original applicant and did not survive after his death, the proceedings automatically abated on 4th February 1927, and should have been consigned to the record room. In this view also, it must be held that the proceedings had abated and the learned Senior Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to pass the order appealed against.

The appointment of the respondent is irregular for the additional reason that no application had been made on his behalf for his appointment as guardian. Under the leading authority of the Chief Court, Badr Bakhsh v. Jangbaz Khan (1) which has, so far as I am aware, not been doubted in any subsequent ruling of the Chief Court or of this Court, it was not open to the Senior Subordinate Judge acting proprio motu to appoint as guardian of the property of the minor a person who had not applied to be so appointed. The Calcutta High Court has also taken the same view in Jaiwanti Kumari v. Gajadhar Upadhya (5). I am not unmindful of the fact that a contrary view has been taken by the Judical Commissioners of Sind and Oudh in Haji Hirji v. Kasim Hirji (6) and Islaman v. Magbulan (7). But after giving the matter my fullest consideration, and having regard to the clear wording of Ss. 7 and 8, Guardians Wards Act, I venture to think, with all respect, that the sounder view is that taken in Badr Bakhsh v. Jangbaz Khan (1) I, therefore, hold that the appointment of the respondent was irregular for this reason also.

There is yet another ground on which the order of the lower Court cannot be sustained. The lower Court had of its own motion sent a robkar to the respondent, but he had not expressed his willingness to be appointed as guardian of the property of the minor and all that he had stated was that he would be prepared to assist the "paid" guardian (whatever that expresssion might mean) if one was appointed by the Court. In his reply the Raja had made allegations of mismanagement against the appellant and the Court seems to have accepted them as proved without even calling upon the mother to meet these allegations, if she could. It seems to me that the entire procedure followed by the learned Subordinate Judge in this matter was misconceived. It is hardly necessary to point out that it is objectionable for a Court to enter into correspondence of this kind, with regard to a matter pending judicially before it, and it is illegal to take notice of the statements made in such correspondence by a person, who has not chosen to substantiate them either by himself going into the witness-box or by leading other evidence. In these circumstances there were no materials on the record to justify the conclusion that the mother was incapable of managing the property and the appointment of a guardian was necessary. It may be noted that similar allegations had been made by the original applicant Ali Muhammad in his application but he had failed to support them by any evidence and had closed the case on 27th December 1926. Therefore, even if the Senior Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to proceed with the matter after the death of Ali Muhammad and to consider the respondent as eligible for appointment as guardian without any application by him, it was necessary to make a proper enquiry in accordance with law on the issue which arose in the proceedings.

For the foregoing reasons I accept the appeal and set aside the order appointing the respondent as guardian. As the respondent through counsel has strunously opposed this appeal, he must pay the appellant her costs in this Court.

I wish to make it clear that this order is not intended to indicate in any way that Raja Muhammad Ali Ullah Khan, respondent, is not a fit person to be appointed guardian of the property of the minor or to preclude him or any other person from applying to be appointed as such in proceedings instituted and conducted in accordance with law.

Second Appeal No. 1133 of 1927, Decided on 12th December 1927, from order of Dist. Judge, Ferozepur, D/- 1st February 1927.

Limitation Act, Art. 64—Accounts stated—Partnership—Defendant admitting in writing in plaintiffs' book a debit balance—Suit to recover the balance is governed by Art. 64 and not by Art. 106.

Plaintiffs and defendants were partners in certain transactions and all accounts relating to these transactions were entered either in the books of the commission agents or in those of defendants. After examining the accounts on 3rd August 1920 an entry was made in the books of the plaintiffs in two columns. On the credit side was shown the plaintiff's share of the profits. On the debit side was shown the plaintiff's share of loss incurred. This was followed by a writing in defendant's own hand to the effect that the above mentioned accounts were correct as having been arrived at as the plaintiff's share of the profit after division.

On 15th June 1925 the plaintiffs instituted a suit against the defendants for recovery of the sum due on foot of this entry.

The transactions were all conducted by the aforesaid firm of commission agents, and all accounts relating to these transactions were entered either in the books of the commission agents or in those of defendants. The partnership lasted from 5th April 1920 to 31st August 1920 and it appears that it comprised eight transactions in all. On 3rd August 1920 the parties and the commission agents met, accounts were gone into and profits and loss determined. It was discovered that there had been profit in seven transactions but loss in one. Accordingly on that date an entry was made in the books of the plaintiffs in two columns. On the credit side being shown the plaintiff's share of the profits of each of the seven transactions, the total of which was recorded as Rs. 451-15-3. To this Rs. 50 was added as interest at 1 per cent. from 5th April 1920, up-to-date. On the debit side the sum of Rs. 119 was shown as representing the plaintiff's share of loss incurred on 8th transaction. Below these columns it was written that the entire account of the dealings with Bhaga Ram Sri Ram, commission agents, had been examined, according to which the above mentioned items indicated the share of the plaintiffs. This was followed by a writing in Sardari Mal's own hand to the effect that Rs 501-15-3 above-mentioned were correct as having been arrived at as the plaintiff's share of the profit after division (Nafa wand kar lagaya). This entry is dated 6th Bhadon 1977 (31st August 1920).

On 15th June 1925 the plaintiffs instituted the present suit against the defendants for recovery of Rs. 600 due on foot of this entry, Rs. 382-15-3 being the principal and Rs. 117-0 9 interest at 1 per cent. The defendants denied the execution of the entry and raised various other defences including limitation. The learned Sub-Judge overruled all these objections and held that the execution was proved and the suit was within time under Art. 64. He accordingly passed a decree for the full sum claimed against the defendants.

On appeal the learned District Judge agreed with the Sub-Judge in holding that the defendants had executed the entry in question but dismissed the suit as barred by time, holding that it was governed by Art. 106 and not by Art. 64, Lim. Act. The learned District Judge also held that there was no proof of any oral agreement by the defendants to pay interest

The plaintiffs have come up in second appeal and it has been urged on their behalf that the entry in question is an account stated and the suit is within time under Art. 64. I have heard the case argued at length by the learned counsels of both parties and am of opinion that this appeal ought to succeed. The learned District Judge has held that the entry in question is not an account stated and that Art. 106 applies to the suit based on it. In coming to this conclusion the learned Judge has expressed the opinion that the account stated within the meaning of Art 64 implies cross demands and it is mutual surrender of those cross demands that creates a new contract between the parties when an account is stated between them. As in the present case there was no proof of any cross demands or of the creation of a new contract, the aforesaid article was held inapplicable. There is no doubt that conflicting views have been expressed by the various High Courts as to the meaning of the word "account stated," and both counsels have cited a number of rulings in support of their respective contentions. I do not, however, propose to discuss these rulings at length as I am of opinion that so far as this case is concerned the matter is concluded by the leading authority of this Court reported as Nand Lal v. Partap Singh (1) which was a case very similar to the present one. There, as here, the parties were partners in certain business, had gone into the account of the partnership and as a result of that scrutiny the defendants had admitted in writing in the plaintiffs' book a debit balance. It was held that considering that the parties were partners and consequently there must have been debit and credit entries between them and that the present balance was struck between them in supersession of the detailed debit and credit entries in the earlier account, the entry in question was an account rendered and that it adjusted the relations of the parties and was a promise to pay. The present case is, it seems to me much stronger inasmuch as here the previous accounts were entered either in the books of the commission agents or of the defendants, and the entry in suit was made by the defendants in the plaintiffs' book.

Mr. Mohsin Shah for the respondents argues that the net amount due to the plaintiffs had been stated in the entry in question, and only the credits and the debits are entered in separate columns. I cannot, however, see that this ought to make any difference, as the amount of the items on the credit side is clearly stated to be Rs. 501-15-3, while that on the debit side there is a single item of Rs. 119. The mere fact that Rs. 119 had not been deducted from the former item and that the balance specified does not, in my judgment, make any difference.

Article 106 on which the learned District Judge has relied relates to a suit for account and a share of the profits of a dissolved partnership. The present suit on the plaint or on the findings is not a suit of that kind. Article No. 106 does not, obviously apply and Mr. Moshin Shah has not really sought to support the judgment on that ground.

I must, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs' suit is within time and they are entitled to claim the principal sum Rs. 382-15-3 secured by the entry. I do not, however, see how they are entitled to interest in view of the fact that the entry in question does not state that the defendants had agreed to pay any interest and the plaintiffs had relied on a separate oral agreement which the learned District Judge has held to be unproved. For the foregoing reasons I accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the District Judge and pass a decree in favour of the plaintiffs for Rs. 382-15-3 with proportionate costs throughout.

Amar Nath—Accused—Petitioner.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Misc. Petition No. 219 of 1926, Decided on 10th February 1927, for transfer of the case from Court of Magistrate, First Class, Lahore.

Criminal P. C., S. 526—Bona fide apprehension by resonable man that accused will not receive fair trial is sufficient ground for transfer—Magistrate convicting other persons on similar evidence is no ground for transfer.

The policy of law is to inspire confidence in the minds of the accused persons in the administration of justice and in the integrity of the Magistracy. The superior Courts are expected to have due regard to the susceptibilities of the accused persons and if they are satisfied that there are reasonable grounds, that is, grounds which a reasonable person placed in the position of an accused person considers to be sufficient for entertaining apprehension that the accused will not have a fair trial in the Court of the Magistrate then an order for transfer should be made.

The mere fact that the Magistrate has on a previous occasion tried other cases against other accused on similar evidence and convicted them is no ground for transfer : A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 257 and 4 C. W. N. 824, Dist.; 33 All. 583; 31 Cal. 715 and 36 Cal. 104, Foll. [P 461 C 2]

Bhagat Ram Puri—for Petitioner.

Ram Lal—for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application under S. 526, Criminal P. C., for transfer of a case under S. 477-A, I. P. C. pending against the applicant in the Court of Lala Nand Lal Manchanda, Magistrate First Class, and is made on the ground that in a previous case against others under the same section and almost on identical facts the Magistrate convicted the accused then before him and sentenced them to various terms of imprisonment and, therefore, that the Magistrate having already expressed an opinion on the merits of the case the applicant does not expect an independent and unprejudiced expression of opinion in this case. This was the only ground urged before me, the other grounds of the application having been abandoned.

It appear that the applicant Amar Nath was a Director of the Amritsar National Bank Limited which has gone into liquidation. As a result of investigation held during the liquidation proceedings it was decided to prosecute the Directors and others connected with the management of the Bank under S. 477-A for preparing a false balance sheet and for making wrong entries in the statutory report. The applicant, it is alleged, absconded but the others were tried and convicted. He has now been apprehended and sent up for trial under S. 477-A for preparing a false balance sheet and for making wrong entries in the statutory report before the same Magistrate. The question that I have now to decide is whether by the mere fact that the Magistrate has in the case of other persons held on the evidence then produced before him that the balance sheet was false and that the entries in the statutory report were wrong debars him from trying the present applicant. It is not denied that evidence in this case will mainly be the same that was produced in the previous cases though it may be possible for the present accused to raise pleas in his defence which were not raised by the accused in the previous cases. My attention has not been drawn to any passage in which the Magistrate in his previous judgments directly dealt with the case of the applicant or expressed a definite opinion against him. It was at the same time inevitable that the name of Amar Nath should incidentally be mentioned in connexion with certain entries which were to be discussed in those cases. On the facts, therefore, I hold that the Magistrate has not expressed any definite opinion anywhere in the previous cases against Amar Nath directly, though there is no doubt that the facts of the previous cases and this case are practically identical and that case will have to be decided mainly on the same prosecution evidence. A large number of authorities were cited on both sides. So far as the principles underlying the transfer of criminal cases from the Courts of Magistrates are concerned there appears to be no controversy. The policy of the law is to inspire confidence in the minds of the accused persons in the administation of justice and in the integrity of the Magistracy. The superior Courts are expected to have due regard to the susceptibilites of the accused persons and if they are satisfied that there are reasonable grounds, that is, grounds, which a reasonable person placed in the position of an accused person considers to be sufficient, for entertaining an apprehension that the accused will not have a fair and impartial trial in the Court of Magistrate then an order for transfer should be made. It is the application of this principle that is the subject of controversy in the case before me. Counsel for the applicant cited the case of Dhanna Lal v. Crown (Criminal Miscellaneous No. 146 of 1925) in which Zafar Ali, J., transferred a case from the Court of a Magistrate under almost identical circumstances. The full facts of that case are not mentioned in the judgment of the learned Judge in view of the fact that the counsel for the Crown was unable to say that the apprehension on the part of the accused person was unreasonable. Moreover, in that case the Magistrate in his former judgment had expressed the opinion that there was ample evidence against the petitioner for transfer of the case. This by no means is the case in the present case. In Badan Singh v. Emperor (1) a case was transferred from the Court of the Magistrate as he had on a previous occasion expressed his opinion against the accused who was the petitioner for transfer and in Chandramani Sarma v. Kunja Rendi (2) the Magistrate had expressed an opinion on the defence evidence in another case and such evidence was prosecution evidence in the subsequent case between the same parties which was sought to be transferred from his Court. Order for transfer was made in this case also. The facts in both these cases are distinguishable from the present case.

(1) A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 257.
(2) [1900] 4 C. W. N. 824.

On the other hand Emperor v. Harigobind (3), Johoruddin Sarkar v. Emperor (4) and Rajani Kanta Dutta v. Emperor (5), appear to be authorities against the applicant. The first of these judgments related to two cross cases of riot, in which the Magistrate having disposed of one of the cases commenced the trial of the second. An application for transfer was made on the ground that in the first case the Magistrate having expressed an opinion unfavourable to the accused in the second case was not competent to try the latter case. The application for transfer was dismissed. In the second of the cases cited above the facts were identical with those of this case. It appears that some of the accused had already been convicted on the same evidence by the Sessions Judge before the remaining accused were placed before him for trial and convicted by him. An objection was taken before the appellate Court that the Judge having expressed an opinion on the evidence in a previous case was not competent to try the second case. The objection was overruled. The only distinction that it may be possible to draw between that case and the case now before me is that in that case there was no application for transfer made to the High Court but an objection to the competency of the Sessions Judge to take cognizance of the case was taken on appeal On p. 719 [of 31 Cal.] of the report, however, the learned Judges held that an application for transfer under the circumstances mentioned would have been rejected. In the last of the cases cited above it was held that the mere expression of opinion against the accused on other evidence in another case does not debar a Magistrate from trying a criminal case against the same accused. In my opinion I would not be exercising a sound discretion, if I were to transfer the present case merely because the Magistrate has an a previous occasion tried other cases against other accused on similar evidence and convicted them.

I must, therefore, dismiss this application.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 147 of 1927, Decided on 3rd April 1928, for review of order of Agha Haidar, J., D/- 8th February 1927.

* (a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 561-A and 369—There is no conflict between the two sections.

Section 561-A does not confer any new powers but merely declares that such inherent powers as the Court may possess shall not be deemed to be limited or affected by anything contained in the Code. There is no conflict between that section and S. 369. [P 463 C 2]

A petitioner was convicted by the trial Magistrate under S. 457, Penal Code. His appeal was rejected by the District Judge. He applied to the High Court in revision against the conviction. The application was rejected. He again made an application to the High Court to reconsider the case.

Mahtab Singh—for Petitioners.

C. H. Carden Noad—for the Crown.

Fforde, J.—This is a petition purporting to be brought under the provisions of S. 561-A, Criminal P. C., for revision of an order of my brother Agha Haidar made on 8th February 1927, rejecting an application in revision presented by the petitioners in which they asked to have their convictions altered and their sentences reduced. The facts of the case are shortly these :

The petitioners, Raju and Sadan, and three other persons, Waryami, Taju and Mohammad Bakhsh, were convicted by the trial Magistrate under the provisions of S. 457, I. P. C., and were sentenced to various terms of imprisonment and fines. They appealed to the Sessions Judge and their appeals were rejected on 15th January 1927. Two of the convicts, namely, the present petitioners, Raju and Sadan, then applied to the High Court in revision against their convictions and sentences. The application was rejected by my brother Agha Haidar, J., by the abovementioned order of 8th February 1927.

Two of the other convicts, Waryami and Taju, likewise applied at a later date to the High Court in revision. Their applications came before Zafar Ali, J., on 10th June 1927, and their petitions were accepted to the extent that their fines were reduced. The remaining convict, Mohammad Bakhsh, has not moved this Court. The petitioners Raju and Sadan, again came up to this Court asking my brother Agha Haidar, J., to reconsider his decision of 8th February, and the first question which my learned brother had to decide was whether he had power to reconsider a decision in which judgment has been pronounced and signed. As my brother Agha Haidar, J., was not satisfied that he had power to entertain the application he admitted it for the purpose of having that question argued. The case having come up for argument the attention of my brother was drawn to a case reported in one of the unauthorized reports, Mathra Das v. Emperor (1), in which Broadway, J., held that S. 561-A, Criminal P. C., was not in any way limited or governed by S. 369 of that Code, and that he had power to reconsider the question of sentence after he had already rejected an application in revision in that behalf.

It is urged on behalf of the petitioners that the High Court has inherent power to make any order it may think fit to secure the ends of justice, and that this power was expressly conferred by S.561-A, Criminal P. C. This section was added to the Code by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act (18 of 1923), and reads as follows :

> Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or affect the inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to give effect to any order under this Code, or to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice.

It seems to me clear that all that this section does is to declare that such inherent powers as the High Court may possess have not been taken away or abridged by any of the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It does not confer any new powers, but merely declares that such inherent powers as the Court may possess shall not be deemed to be limited or affected by anything contained in the Code. There is no conflict between that section and S. 369. The latter section provides that :

> Save as otherwise provided by the Code of Criminal Procedure or by any other law for the time being in force or, in the case of a High Court established by Royal Charter, by the Letters Patent of such High Court, no Court when it has signed its judgment shall alter or review the same, except to correct a clerical error.

This does not affect any powers inherent in the Court, as there never has been an inherent power in the High Court to alter or review its own judgment in a criminal case once it has been pronounced and signed except in cases where it was passed without jurisdiction or in default of appearance without an adjudication on the merits. With this view all the Courts in India are in accord, and it is not disputed that this was the law prior to the addition of S. 561-A to the Criminal Procedure Code by the Act of 1923. Mr. Mehtab Singh contends that the introduction of this section has altered the law and given to the High Court power to do something which it could not do before. As I have already pointed out this is not the case. The instances of inherent powers possessed by the High Court given in S. 561-A, namely, to make such orders as may be necessary to give effect to its decisions, or to prevent an abuse of the process of any Court, have always been assumed by Courts of record.

The first class of cases comes under the well-established principle that whenever anything is required to be done by law, and it is found impossible to do that thing unless something not authorized in express terms be also done, then that something else will be supplied by necessary intendment. This is a principle of the common law embodied in the maxim quando lex aliquid alicui concedit, concedere videtur id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest. An example of the application of this principle is to be found in Jagendra Chandra Sen v. Wazidunnissa Khatun (2) in which it was held that when a Court has made an order which it has jurisdiction to make, and there is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code which applies directly to the case, there is inherent power in the Court to have that order carried into effect.

As an instance of the exercise of the inherent power of the Court to prevent an abuse of its process, I may refer to Stephenson v. Garnett (3), where the Court of appeal stayed as frivolous and vexatious and an abuse of the process of the Court an action in the High Court which raised a question already decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction. The Lords Justices took care to observe that they did not rest their decision upon the ground that the matter was res judicata, but upon the principle that it would be an abuse of the process of the Court to allow a suitor to litigate over again the same question which has been already decided against him. The principle is, by S. 561-A, Criminal P. C., deemed to apply in criminal matters, and as an example of the application of this rule, I have no doubt that the High Court would, in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction, reject an application for the transfer of a criminal case, where such an application based upon the same facts had already been refused.

The concluding words of the section "or otherwise to secure the ends of justice", can only mean that such other inherent power as the Court possesses is likewise preserved. The High Court is not given nor did it ever possess, an unrestricted and undefined power to make any order which, it might please to consider, was in the interests of justice. Its inherent powers are as much controlled by principle and precedent as are its express powers by statute.

For these reasons I think that the order passed by my learned brother in revision cannot now be reviewed and I would accordingly dismiss the petition. I may add that I have consulted my brother Broadway, J., who has considered the matter further since his decision in Mathra Das v. Emperor (1), and he has authorized me to say that he is not satisfied with his judgment in that case and is inclined to the view which I have just expressed.

Agha Haidar, J.—I entirely agree.

Second Appeal No. 2309 of 1926, Decided on 14th February 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 1st July 1926.

(a) Custom (Punjab)—An ala malik has by custom no right of challenging an alienation by a sonless male adna malik.

An ala malik has by custom no right of challenging an alienation by a sonless male adna malik though he is entitled to succeed to the land left by such a person in the absence of heirs, near or remote; a male adna malik has full power of alienation which is not subject to the control of the ala malik: 9 P. R. 1898; 129 P. L. R. 1912; A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 34; A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 626; A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 11; 72 P. R. 1907; and A. I. R. 1932 Lah. 217, Ref. [P 467 C 2]

(b) Custom (Punjab)—Ala malik having right of reversion has a right to challenge an alienation made by the widow of an adna malik in order to protect his interest.

An ala malik, if he has the right of reversion in the absence of heirs, is entitled to challenge an alienation made by the widow of an adna malik in order to protect his interests, as the widow only holds a limited estate, while the fact that she has no heirs in the proper sense of that word, does not extend in any way her powers over her limited estate: A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 217 and 8 M. I. A. 529 (P. C.), Foll. [P 468 C 1]

Judgment.—There are four connected appeals in which a question of custom is involved. The Raja of Guler in the Dehra tahsil of Kangra District is the plaintiff in the four suits. He is the ala malik of the land while the defendants are either the adna maliks or the widows of adna maliks. In Appeal No. 2309 of 1926 the defendants are Rasilla, son of Jahla, and Kalu. The original adna malik was Piru. He mortgaged the land to Jahla and Kalu in 1897. He then sold it to Kalu and Rasilla, Jahla's son, in 1914. Piru died later. In January 1925, the Raja claiming as ala malik sued Rassilla and Kalu for possession of the land on the ground that Piru died without heirs and that the land for that reason reverted to him, i. e., that he was entitled to succeed and to ignore the alienation made by Piru. It was further alleged that adna maliks had no power to alienate in derogation of the ala malik's rights. The trial Court decreed possession of the land in favour of the Raja, holding (1) that the suit was within time, (2) that there was estoppel as mere receipts of the rent by the Raja from the defendants was not enough for this purpose, (3) that the ala malik had a locus standi to sue, (4) that the defendants had failed to prove that they were collaterals of Piru, and (5) that there was no necessity for the sale which appeared to be for a small amount.

The second appeal is No. 2310 of 1926. In it the defendants were Sohnu and two widows of deceased adna maliks who sold the land to the other defendants in 1922. The Raja in this case sued for a declaration that the sale should not affect his rights to succeed to the lane in suit on the death of defendants 1 to 3 who had no heirs. It was established that there were six previous unchallenged alienations of bits of the holding in which the land in suit was comprised. These took place in 1893, 1899, 1919, and 1920. I mention this to show that there have been many alienations by adna maliks which were never challenged by the ala maliks. The history of the land involved in the first appeal also shows the same. The trial Judge held: (1) that the Raja had a locus standi to sue, (2) that no collaterals were proved to be in existence and (3) that there had been acquiescence on the part of the ala malik, in that he had not challenged the previous alienations of part of the holding. It was also held that full consideration had passed but that there was no necessity for the sale. On the finding as to acquiescence the suit was dismissed.

The third appeal is No. 2311 of 1926. In this case Mt. Gulabi, the widow of an adna malik, was in possession. She gifted the land in 1922 to the other defendants who are the sons of her daughter and of her husband's sister. This was also a suit for a declaration The land was actually purchased without objection on the part of the Raja by the widow's husband in 1905, while before that he held the mortgage rights from 1894. These are again two instances of previous alienations not challenged by the ala malik. The trial Judge held: (1) that the plaintiff was estopped from suing as he did not object to the purchase of the land by the husband of defendant 1, (2) that the gift was valid as it was made to obtain the services of the donees and was thus for legal necessity, (3) that the sister's son and daughter's son were not heirs in jagir village, but that there were collaterals of the husband in existence and (4) that the Raja had still a right of suit though he had not impleaded these collaterals. He, however, dismissed this suit on his findings as to estoppel and the validity of the gift.

The fourth appeal is No. 2312 of 1926. In this case Mt. Lahasanun, widow of Suba, an adna malik, gifted the land to her daughter's son. Suba had himself purchased the land from other adna maliks in 1892, a fact which should again be noted. This also was a suit for a declaration. The trial Judge held: (1) that the daughter's son was not the legal heir, (2) that there were no collaterals of Suba and (3) that the plaintiff had a locus standi to sue, but he dismissed the suit on the fourth finding that the land was gifted so that the donee should provide for the widow and that this was a necessary purpose.

On appeal the District Judge held that adna maliks could alienate without control of the ala maliks as the Raja was a mere taluqdar and not the real owner of the soil. Towards the end of his judgment he fortified himself in his conclusion in the case of the third and fourth appeals by stating that daughter and daughter's son were certainly within the line of heirs, this being the general rule under custom. This, however, is not a finding of the District Judge who in fact did not discuss this question and neglected to see that the trial Judge had quoted the riwaj i-am of the district which is to the effect that in jagir villages daughters and daughter's sons are not heirs. On his finding that adna maliks could alienate without the control of the ala malik, he dismissed the appeals from the declaratory suits which had been dismissed and accepted the appeal in the suit for possession which had been decreed in favour of the Raja. He granted certificates for second appeal on the question whether an adna malik or a sonless adna malik had a right of alienation in the presence of ala malik. On the certificates granted these four second appeals have been admitted.

In 9 P. R. 1898 two classes of ala maliks were defined. In some parts they are the real proprietors and the adna malik is little more than a tenant with a right of occupancy. In other parts, the adna maliks are the real proprietors and the ala malik is merely a taluqdar receiving a certain percentage on the revenue. In the case then before the Chief Court it was held that the ala malik was a mere taluqdar and that the estate did not revert to the ala malik on the death of an adna malik without issue but to the collaterals of the deceased and where there were no collaterals to the pattidars of his patti.

The same distinction was noted in Hira v. Changa (1), in which it was held that where the ala maliks were the original proprietors of the soil and called in outsiders and settled them on the land they were entitled to succeed on the death of an adna malik without issue, the collaterals of the adna malik having no right of succession when the land was not held by the common ancestor of the deceased. It must be noted, however, that in that case the wajib-ul-arz was against the collaterals so that the case was decided on its own special facts. Khurshid Alam v. Phangu (2) was a case where the ala malik was held to be merely a taluqdar and it was held that he did not succeed to the adna malkiat when the line of the adna malik became extinct in the absence of a provision to that effect in the wajib-ul-arz or other evidence in proof of such a custom. Dal Singh v. Pluiman (3) and Labh Singh v. Ahmad Shah (4) are cases of a similar nature. In Gurditta v. Jaisingh (5), where the Jagirdar of Dada Siba in the Kangra District was the plaintiff, it was held that the defendant had failed to establish a custom whereby a sister's son inherited in preference to the ala malik. This was in accordance with the general rule of custom that a sister or her son does not come within the category of heirs and this authority does not help in the decision of the present appeal.

The trial Judge and the District Judge have discussed at length certain remarks of various Settlement Officers when dealing with the settlement of ordinary jagirs of the Kangra District. Most of these remarks seem to me to be beside the point as they with one exception do not concern the jagir in question which was not settled till 1891-92. They are also mere expressions of opinion.

The first wajib-ul-arz dealing with this jagir was drawn up in 1891-92, and the second wajib-ul-arz, which is practically to the same effect as the first, was prepared in 1911-12. Para. 12 of the wajib-ul-arz is as follows :

> The Raja Sahib is the ala malik and the other owners are the adna maliks of their holdings. The Raja Sahib realizes taluqdar dues on the whole of the land included in the ownership of the adna maliks at the rate of 25 per cent upon the land revenue (in addition to the land revenue which he gets as jagirdar). In this percentage all the rights of the Raja Sahib whatsoever have been included, such as ban waziri, gadiana etc., and the Raja Sahib has received full compensation with regard to these rights. The adna maliks have full power of sale and mortgage of their lands.

Again, according to para. 16 of both the wajib-ul-arzes it is said that should any owner of land (the reference is to the adna malik) die without heirs, either near or distant, then the ala malik will succeed.

It is clear from these provisions of the wajab-ul-arz that it has been recognised for a long time that adna maliks have full power to sell or mortgage their lands, while the ala malik has the right to succed an adna malik who dies without leaving an heir, either near or distant. The ala malik is, therefore, entitled to a right of reversion in certain circumstances and is not a mere taluqdar. This is in accordance with the customary law of the Kangra District (riwaj-i-am) prepared by the Settlement Officer in 1914—18. According to question 54 of this riwaj-i-am, which is applicable to the whole of the Kangra District, if a man dies without male lineal descendants and leaving no widow, daughter or descendants through a daughter, then the following persons are entitled to succeed :

(1) Donees by will.
(2) Collaterals.
(3) Persons from whom the deceased received the land in gift.

(4) Ala maliks
(5) Descendants of the founders of the tika.

This rule, however, is subject to the reply given in question 49, according to which daughters and their sons are given the right of succession in certain circumstances, but the last sentence of this answer is as follows: "In jagir villages daughters are not allowed to succeed at all." It was on account of this statement of custom in the riwaj-i-am which the District Judge neglected to notice, that the Subordinate Judge held that daughters' sons were not heirs.

It follows from what has been said above that the Raja is entitled to succeed a sonless adna malik dying without heirs, near or remote, but that widows and collaterals certainly succeed before him. Whether daughters or their sons succeed before him has not yet been decided by the District Judge, while the rights of the other persons mentioned in question 54 of the riwaj-i-am do not arise in these appeals. It does not however, follow (and this has been frequently held) that he has the right to challenge or control the alienations of a male adna malik who has no sons, heirs or collaterals. This was pointed out, inter alia, at the end of para. 1 on p. 453 in Gobinda v. Nandu (6). It was, therefore, necessary for the plaintiff ala malik to establish that he had a right to control the alienations of a heirless male adna malik who, according to the wajib-ul-arz has full powers of sale and mortgage. In this connexion the only evidence he produced was to summon three judicial cases. Two were from his own jagir of Goler. Both were decided in 1919. The first was a case of mortgage and the Raja's rights were admitted by the mortgagee who stated that as the debt due was very small he had no wish to contest the suit. The other was also decided upon an admission. These two cases, therefore, are of little value. The third case was from the Dada Siba jagir and it was decided in 1916. There a widow gifted the land to a person who set up a claim that he was the son of the widow's husband. It was held that he was not the son and that the ala malik had the right to contest the alienation in question. It must be noted that the alienor was the widow of an adna malik and not the adna malik proper. The case came to the Chief Court where it was pointed out that the wajib-ul-arz allowed a alienation by sale or mortgage by an adna malik but, if he died lawaris, the estate reverted to the ala malik. The case of a widow was distinguished as she was only in possession of the estate for life. This instance, therefore, is not in favour of the view that the Raja has any control over an alienation by a male adna malik but does seem to be an authority for the view that he can challenge an alienation made by a widow, at least, in the absence of heirs.

On the evidence I have no hesitation in holding that the ala malik, the Raja of Goler, has not been able to prove that he has by custom the right of challenging an alienation by a sonless male adna malik though he is entitled to succeed to the land left by such a person in the absence of heirs, near or remote, and that a male adna malik has full power of alienation, which is not subject to the control of the ala malik. This disposes of appeal No. 2309 of 1926 which is dismissed with costs.

As regards appeal No. 2310 of 1926, Sohnu, the near collateral of Mt. Nazko and Mt. Devko's husbands, jointly owned the land with the widows; this may, therefore, be looked upon as a sale by a male adna malik. In these circumstances this case is not distinguishable from the first and I dismiss this appeal also with costs.

There remain appeals 2311 and 2312 in which widows made gifts to their daughters' sons and in one of the cases also to a husband's sister's son along with a daughter's son. It has now to be decided whether the Raja has power to challenge these alienations. An authority very much in point as regards this question is Gobinda v. Nandu (6) where it was held that a daughter's son was competent to challenge an alienation made by a female, holding the estate of his maternal grandfather. In that case no custom was proved enabling the plaintiffs to challenge alienations by their maternal grandfather's mother, and their mother's sister, there being no instance either way, and they were allowed to fall back upon their personal law, i. e., upon Hindu law. This was so held on the ground that the estate of a widow under customary law was subject to the same restrictions as that of a widow under Hindu law. The decision of the Privy Council in Collector of Masulipatam v. Venkata Narainappa (7) was relied upon, especially the following remarks :

> The restrictions on a Hindu widow's power of alienation are inseparable from her estate, and their existence does not depend on that of heirs capable of taking on her death. It follows that if, for want of heirs, the right to the property so far as it has not been lawfully disposed of by her, passes to the Crown, the Crown must have the same power which an heir would have of protecting its interests by impeaching any unauthorized alienation by the widow.

It is also noted in Rattigan's Customary Law, tenth edition, remark 6, at p. 167, that the next reversioner, however remote, is generally entitled to object to an alienation by a female and numerous rulings are given of this power. On a proper construction of the wajib-ul-arz and the riwaj-i-am the plaintiff would be the person entitled to succeed in these appeals provided there are no heirs, near or remote, in existence. Following the above authorities I hold that, though the present case is governed by customary Law, the ala malik if he has the right of reversion in the absence of heirs, is certainly entitled to challenge an alienation made by the widow of an adna malik in order to protect his interests, as the widow only holds a limited estate, while the fact that she has no heirs in the proper sense of that word, does not extend in any way her powers over her limited estate. It still remains to be decided if he has this right of challenge in the presence of heirs. It follows that the general finding of the learned District Judge that the plaintiff cannot challenge in any circumstances alienations of the widows of adna maliks is wrong and appeals 2311 and 2312 must be partly accepted.

In the case of appeal 2311 there is finding by the trial Judge that two branches of collaterals are in existence, while the e is another question not yet decided by the District Judge, namely, whether the daughter's son is an heir, one of the donees being a daughter's son. These questions have not been gone into by the District Judge in appeal. Appeal 2311 must, therefore, be accepted and the case remanded to the District Judge under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., to decide whether there are two branches of collaterals in existence and whether the daughter's son who is one of the donees, is an heir and, if so, whether the Raja has the right to challenge the alienation in question as there are heirs in existence who would be entitled to succeed and who have not objected or been impleaded. Of course, if this point is decided in favour of the Raja the other points which arise in the appeal and which have been mentioned by me at the commencement of this judgment must also be decided by the District Judge. Court-fee in this Court will be refunded and other costs will abide the event.

Appeal 2312 is also accepted on the same ground and the case remanded under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., to the District Judge to deal with the other points necessary to be decided. In this case the trial Judge held that there was no collateral in existence, but that finding can be challenged before the District Judge. If collaterals are found to be in existence, or if it is held that the daughter's son, who is the donee, is the heir, it will also have to be decided in this case whether the ala malik can sue in their presence, seeing that they are heirs entitled to succeed to the land and his right of succession or escheat has not opened out. If, however, it is held that there are no collaterals in existence and that the daughter's son is not an heir, the plaintiff Raja has certainly a right of suit in this and the preceding appeal on the strength of Collector of Masulipatam v. Venkata Narainappa (7) and Gobinda v. Nandu (6). I have already mentioned at the commencement of this judgment the other points which arise if it is decided that the plaintiff can challenge the alienation. Court fee on appeal will be refunded ; other costs will abide the event.

I desire to note that the learned counsel who appeared on behalf of the appellant before me conceded that the Raja would have no power of challenging an alienation made by an adna malik with male lineal descendants and that he only contended that he had this power in the case of a sonless adna malik or in the case of the widow of an adna malik.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1771 of 1927, Decided on 22nd February 1928, from order of Dist. Judge, Amritsar, D/- 1st August 1927.

A was summoned as a witness on 7th March 1927 for 7th April 1927. He was duly served and reported that he could not attend for some reason. The case was adjourned to 4th May 1927, and fresh summonses were issued. An intermediate date for report of service of summons was fixed, namely, 22nd April 1927. On 15th April 1927 the process-server reported that A had refused to accept the service of summons. Bailable warrants were issued against him and he appeared on 4th May 1927, the date fixed, in obedience to them. Notice was issued to him to show cause why he should not be dealt with under O. 16, R. 12, for wilfully refusing to accept summons and he was fined Rs. 50.

Held: that though the Court had issued no proclamation and made no attachment of property, still the order imposing a fine under O. 16, R. 12, was within jurisdiction: *A. I. Order 16, R. 10 only comes into play where a person has failed to attend to give evidence or to produce a document which has been summoned from him. If a person refuses to accept a summons, but attends the Court on the date fixed, R. 10 does not apply. [P 469 C 2]

Durga Das—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—The petitioner in this case has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50 under O. 16, R. 12, Civil P. C. The facts are that the petitioner was summoned as a witness on 7th March 1927, for 7th April 1927. He was duly served and reported that he had a civil case at Lahore and could not attend The case was adjourned to 4th May 1927 and fresh summonses were issued. An intermediate date for report of service of summonses was fixed, namely, 22nd April 1927. On 15th April 1927 the process-server reported that Sunder Singh had refused to accept the service of summons. Bailable warrants were issued against Sunder Singh and Sunder Singh appeared on 4th May 1927, the date fixed in obedience to them. Notice was issued to him to show cause why he should not be dealt with under O. 16, R. 12 for wilfully refusing to accept summons. Sunder Singh raised various pleas, but it is sufficient for me to say that I agree with the judgments of the Courts below that his pleas are false and that the story of the process-server is correct. The Court therefore fined him Rs. 50. On appeal Ram Gopal v Secretary of State (1) and Ashutosh Mullick v. Secretary of State (2) which are single Bench rulinges of the Calcutta High Court were cited on behalf of the appellant to show that as the Court had issued no proclamation and made no attachment of property the order was without jurisdiction. These rulings have been dissented from in Nagayya Peta, In re (3) as pointed out by the learned District Judge, and with all respect I agree with the interpretation given in the Madras ruling and disagree with the interpretation given in the Calcutta rulings. It has, however, been contended before me by counsel that O. 16, R. 10 only comes into play where a person has failed to attend to give evidence or to produce a document which has been summoned from him and as the date fixed for the hearing and for the evidence of the petitioner was 4th May 1927 and on that date the petitioner did appear, therefore, the order of the Court under O. 16, R. 12 was without jurisdiction. This contention seems, to me to have force and, however reluctant I may be to allow the petitioner to take advantage of this technical defect, the section seems to me to be too clear to allow of any other interpretation I, therefore, accept the revision and set aside the sentence of fine. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Misc. First Appeal No. 3176 of 1927, Decided on 30th March 1928, from order of Dist. Judge, Delhi, D/- 29th November 1927.

(a) Succession Act (1925), S. 229—Citation issued—Absence of executor does not amount to renunciation—English law is different.

Mere failure of an executor to appear in Court in pursuance of the citation issued to him does not amount to his renunciation of the executorship. If he fails to appear, his conduct may amount to renunciation in England, but not in India. [P 471 C 2]

(b) Succession Act (1925), S. 230—Intermeddling with estate by an executor does not amount to acceptance of office.

The liability to account for interference with the estate stands on a different footing to the right to obtain probate when the application for grant is opposed on the ground of renunciation. The English practice of allowing retraction of renouncement by an executor need not be followed in India and renunciation by a person who has intermeddled with the estate of the deceased is not invalid in law : *A. * (c) Succession Act (1925), S. 230—The meanino of "Judge" explained.

The "Judge" referred to in S. 230 means the Judge of the probate Court who is seised of probate or administration proceedings. It does not mean any other Judge. [P 471 C 2]

* (d) Succession Act, S. 230—"By a writing signed by the person"—Statement written by Court and signed by executor is covered.

The expression "by a writing signed by the person renouncing" used in S. 230 does not mean that the writing should be in the handwriting of such person or that it should be addressed to any particular person. Moti Sagar and Bishen Narain—for Appellant.

Badri Das and Lok Nath — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against the order, dated 29th November 1927, of the District Judge of Delhi, granting probate of the will of the late Seth Radha Kishen of Delhi to the respondent, Lachhmi Narain Gadodia. The appellant is Raghbar Dial who also is an executor of the will and has already obtained probate thereof.

Radha Kishen died on 2nd December 1924, leaving a will dated 23rd June 1924, whereby he appointed four men including the appellant and the respondent as his executors. The deceased used to carry on business, and under the will he left it to the discretion of the executors either to continue it or to wind it up. The legatees were his widow, Mt. Inchi, and a daughter and two minor sons. It appears that no application for grant of probate was made by any of the executors mentioned in the will during the lifetime of Mt Inchi, who, on 28th January 1926, made an application for her being appointed guardian of the person and the property of the minors, and alleged that the respondent had misappropriated certain funds which formed part of the estate of her deceased husband. Lachhmi Narain Gadodia was duly notified of these proceedings and, having appeared in Court, made a statement on 6th August 1926 in which he definitely stated that he was not prepared to act as a "trustee," presumably he meant as an "executor," and alleged that whatever money belonging to the estate was in his possession had been deposited with him in trust by the appellant Raghbar Dial who had actually realized the same. He ascribed his unwillingness to act as an executor to his inability to work with Raghbar Dial. In this statement he was supported by another executor Lachhmi Narain of Bhawani.

Thereupon Mt. Inchi presented an application on 16th August 1926, for grant of letters of administration of the estate of her deceased husband to her and on an application being made by her the respondent was directed to deposit in Court all the monys in his possession which belonged to the estate of the deceased. This he did on 20th October.

Mt. Inchi died on 22nd October and thereupon an application was made by Raghbar Dial on 4th November 1926 for grant of probate of the will of the deceased Radha Kishen to him. In pursuance of this application a citation was issued to the respondent on 20th January 1927, but he did not appear in Court though he was served, and consequently the probate of the will was granted to Raghbar Dial on 22nd March 1927. On 10th May 1927, Lachhmi Narain Gadodia applied for grant of probate to him. This application was opposed by Raghbar Dial on various grounds, the principal of which is that he had disabled himself from obtaining the grant because he had already renounced his executorship. The District Judge, however, granted the probate to the respondent and consequently this appeal has been presented by Raghbar Dial.

Before me it is contended by Mr. Moti Sagar on behalf of the appellant that the failure of the respondent to appear in Court in pursuance of the citation issued to him on the application for probate made by Raghbar Dial amounted to renunciation of the executorship, and secondly that he expressly renounced the executorship by virtue of the statement made by him on 6th August 1926. With regard to the first contention reliance was placed on S. 283, Succession Act, That section merely confers on the District Judge the power to issue citations calling on all persons claiming to have any interest in the estate of the deceased to come and see the proceedings before the grant of probate or letters of administration. It does not provide for any penalty against the person so interested if he does not attend the Court in pursuance of the citation Reliance was also placed on paras. 262 and 301 of Halsburys Laws of England, Vol. 14, and also on Williams on Executors, Vol. 1, p. 222. In my opinion no support can properly be sought by the learned counsel from the English authorities on this point, because the manner of renunciation of the executorship is expressly provided for in S. 230, Succession Act, which lays down a law which appears to be different to the English law and provides that the renunciation may be made orally in the presence of the Judge or by a writing signed by the person renouncing and when made shall preclude him ever thereafter from applying for probate of the will appointing him an executor. The provisions of English law that the absence of a person entitled to probate to whom citation has been issued to attend the Court in pursuance of an application for grant of probate or letters of administration made by another person amounts to renunciation is not, therefore, applicable to this country. The object of citation is to give a chance to the executor to appear in Court and either to obtain probate or to renounce his executorship. If he fails to appear his conduct may amount to renunciation in England, but not in India by virtue of the express provisions of S, 230, Succession Act. I am, therefore unable to hold that the mere failure of the respondent to appear in Court in pursuance of the citation issued to him on 20th January 1927 amounted to renunciation.

The next question is whether the statement made by the respondent on 6th August 1926, amounted to renunciation. The appellant's counsel contended that this statement having been made before a Judge though made orally was a sufficient compliance with the terms of S. 230. In my opinion, however, the Judge referred to in that section means the Judge of the probate Court who is seised of probate or administration proceedings. It does not mean any Judge as contended by the learned counsel. I, however, agree that the statement dated 6th August 1926, made by the respondent amounted to renunciation because that statement was signed by him. The expression "by a writing signed by the person renouncing" used in S 230 does not mean that the writing should be in the handwriting of such person or that it should be addressed to any particular person. No form of such writing is provided by the law of this country and consequently a statement written by the Court and signed by the executor comes within the purview of S. 230 I hold, therefore, that the respondent did renounce his executorship on 6th August 1926. It is, however, contended by Mr. Badri Das, counsel for the respondent, that his client having intermeddled with the estate before he made his statement of 6th August 1926, was not entitled to renounce the executorship. In support of this contention the learned counsel relied on A. I. R. 1924 Lah. p. 543, Ayeshabai v. Ibrahim Haji (1), and para 261 of Halsbury's Laws of England. In the Lahore case the question was whether a decree obtained against the heir of the deceased testator without impleading the executor was binding on the estate. It was found that the executor had actually intermeddled with the estate and had thereby accepted the executorship, and was therefore held accountable as such ; and with reference to a further plea that he had renounced it was held that he could not renounce his executorship so as to escape liability and must, therefore, be deemed to be the proper person to represent the estate and therefore the decree obtained in his absence was not binding on the estate. In Ayeshabai v. Ibrahim Haji (1) also the question was of the liability of the executor to account to the heirs of the deceased, it having been found that he had actually intermeddled with the estate, a conduct which amounted to acceptance of the office. In my opinion both these cases do not help the learned counsel. The liability to account for interference with the estate stands on a different footing to the right to obtain probate when the application for grant is opposed on the ground of renunciation. There is no provision of law in this country under which the Court can compel an executor who has once accepted office, to take out probate whatever may be the effect of such acceptance with regard to his liability to account. With regard to the quotation from para 261 of Halsbury's Laws of England it is again to be observed that there is no analogy between the English law and the Indian law on this subject. It may be that the Court has the power to allow an executor to withdraw his renunciation in England, but that is not so in India because S. 230 expressly provides that > the renunciation when made shall preclude the person renouncing from ever thereafter applying for probate of the will appointing him executor.

Manick Lal Seal, In re (2), also cited by the respondent's learned counsel, does not help him. In that case it was held that an intention to renounce is not the same thing as actual renunciation. In the present case there is no question of a mere intention, as in my opinion the statement already referred to amounted to absolute renunciation by the respondent. Similarly A I.R 1923 Mad. p 605, has no bearing on the present case. There it was held that the Court must respect the choice of the testator and cannot refuse to grant probate to an executor appointed by the testator on any such ground as the unsuitability of the person concerned for the office of an executor. Here the question is whether the respondent has precluded himself from obtaining grant by virtue of renunciation.

I may here mention that the learned District Judge has not held that the respondent had actually accepted office during the lifetime of Mt. Inchi and with that finding I agree. There is no allegation that he intermeddled with the estate after her death. Only three instances of the respondent's interference with the estate during her lifetime have been given by his counsel. It is alleged: (a) that he signed a compromise in a dispute between Mt Inchi and certain debtors of the estate but a reference to the compromise shows that he signed as a witness and not as an executor; (b) that he invested a large amount of money belonging to the estate in the form of a fixed deposit in the bank. It is, however, explained that the respondent himself was a banker and the money was given to him not as an executor but as a banker; it is no doubt true that Mt. Inchi at one time made allegations against him that he had misappropriated the funds of the estate but then the respondent when examined cleared his position by stating that he had not acted as an executor but as a banker and (c) that some difficulties arose as to the manner in which this money should be invested in the bank and the respondent consulted a counsel in the matter. The matter has not been made clear but it seems that this act of the respondent also was connected with his functions as a banker. I am unable to hold that the above acts of the respondent amount to intermeddling with the estate as an executor signifying an intention to accept the office. On the other hand it appears to me that so long as Mt. Inchi was alive it was decided by all the executors mentioned in the will not to interfere with the administration of the estate and to let her do the needful. They as friends of the family assisted her by advice and actual co-operation in several ways but they never asserted their rights as executors, but by common consent refrained from acting as such. The statement dated 6th August 1926 and the conduct of the respondent in not appearing in pursuance of the citation issued to him and his signing the compromise as a witness are all indications of this.

I hold, therefore, that there has been no intermeddling with the estate by the respondent and that he was not in any way precluded from renouncing the executorship.

In Brojo Lal Banerjee v. Sarajubala Debi (3), it was held that an executor having once renounced the executorship cannot thereafter apply for probate the retraction of such renunciation being precluded under the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act. It was also held that the English practice of allowing retraction of renouncement by an executor need not be followed in India and further that renunciation by a person who has intermeddled with the estate of the deceased is not invalid in law. This authority practically covers all the legal points involved in the case and I feel no hesitation in following it. I find that there had been an effective renunciation by the respondent of his executorship in this case and consequently he was precluded from applying for grant of the probate. In view of the above findings it is not really necessary to decide whether the respondent was by virtue of his conduct an undesirable person to be appointed an executor but I do not think that any case has been made out for refusal of the application on that ground and the observations made in A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 605 apply to this part of the appellant's contention.

The result is that I accept this appeal and setting aside the order of the District Judge dismiss the application of Lachmi Narain Gadodia for grant of probate of the will of the deceased Radha Kishen to him. I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Judgment.—This case has been unsatisfactorily dealt with by all concerned. The necessary facts are that in a civil case one Amir Chand was named as a witness and an application was made for him to be summoned with his books for 7th April 1927. On 6th April 1927, he refused to accept service for 7th, he being a resident of the place, in which the case was to be heard. On 7th a warrant for his arrest was issued and an order was passed, but never carried out, that a proclamation under O. 16, R. 10, should be issued along with a notice to him to show cause why he should not be fined. On 4th May 1927, Amir Chand appeared, but he did not bring any books. An order was first written in English to the effect that he stated that the books were not in his possession, but that the Subordinate Judge held this to be prevarication and gave him three hours in which to produce them from his shop. Three hours later the proceedings continued Under S 175, I. P. C., Amir Chand was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20 or in default to suffer simple imprisonment for two days. He is then shown as having stated that he would produce his partner Kesho Das, who had the books, the following day. The sentence was suspended by the Subordinate Judge. On the following day Kesho Das appeared with some but not all the books and the Subordinate Judge revived the sentence, and said that it would be enforced. He then proceeded to take action under O. 16, R, 12, on account of the failure of Amir Chand to appear on 7th April and fined him Rs. 30 From both orders he appealed to the Sessions and District Judge respectively. Both appeals were dismissed and revisions have been admitted in this Court.

I first take the conviction under S. 175. The trouble with this conviction is that, neither in the record of the trial Court nor in that of the Sessions Court, can I discover a finding or a reason of any sort or kind for finding as a positive fact that Amir Chand was in possession of any of books. He is convicted of refusing to produce the books and the Sessions

Judge, who has complicated the case still further by signing as "District Judge," says that the conviction is under S. 175 read with S. 480, Criminal P. C. S. 480, deals with contempts of Court committed in the view or presence of the Court. Even if there were a finding, which there is not, that Amir Chand was in possession of the books the offence would not have been committed in the view of the Court. What happened was that Amir Chand, when he did appear, said that he had not got the books, but that he would produce Kesho Das who had. Next day Kesho Das appeared and did not produce the books. There would, therefore, have been this much evidence against Kesho Das, had he been on his trial, that his partner Amir Chand said that he had the books. Against Amir Chand there was nothing beyond the fact that he is a partner, and both the Subordinate Judge and the Sessions Judge have argued that, because he was in close touch—to use the expression of the Sessions Judge—with Kesho Das, they do not believe that Kesho Das refused to let him have them, i. e., that Kesho Das had them and not Amir Chand. Therefore, by a process of reasoning, which I cannot follow, and without an express finding that Amir Chand had the books he has been punished for Kesho Das's contumacy. No sort of case has been established against him. I accept the application for revision and acquit him.

I next take up the case under O. 16, R. 12. The process-server states that he tried to serve Amir Chand, who refused to accept the summons. This statement has been held to be true and Amir Chand has been convicted and fined under O. 16, R. 12. The question which has to be decided is whether on these facts the order can stand or whether the words "such person" used in the rule refer to the person regarding whom Rr. 10 and 11 are framed Three authorities have been quoted: Ram Gopal v. Secy of State (1), Ashutosh Mullick v. Secy. of State (2), and Nagayya Peta, In re (3). In the last a Division Bench of the Madras High Court took a different view from that taken in the two Single Bench Calcutta cases. It cannot be said to "overrule" the decision of the other Court as stated by the District Judge. Now, it appears to me that the words "such person" can only mean the person described immedately above. O. 16, R. 10, lays down the procedure where a witness fails to comply with the summons: "Where a person to whom a summons has been issued etc." That person is described during the whole of the rule and during the whole of the next two rules as "such person," and the consequences are explained and the procedure given for punishing him. If he fails to obey the order a proclamation, and, in lieu of proclamation or in addition to it, a warrant of attachment, may be issued. The attachment may be withdrawn and if, in addition to disobeying the first summons, he also fails to obey the proclamation, he will be fined unless he shows that he did not receive notice. There are, therefore two alternative methods of proceeding. A proclamation or a warrant or both may issue. In addition there may, but need not, be an order for attachment. If a proclamation issues and the witness fails to obey it and fails to show, the burden being on him, that he did not receive notice, a fine may be imposed. But as I read the rule the fine may not be imposed in the first instance under this order for failure to obey the original summons. This is the view taken by the Calcutta High Court, though at the conclusion of Ram Gopal v. Secy. of State (1) it is stated that there can be no fine, except where there has been an attachment. This, in my opinion, goes beyond the rules and would have the effect of making it impossible to punish a recalcitrant witness who has no property to attach. With all respect to the decision of the Madras High Court, for the reasons given above, I hold that "such person," described in O. 16, R. 12, is the person referred to throughout the two preceding rules and that person cannot be fined unless and until there has been proclamation which he has disobeyed.

This being my view on the legal aspect I accept the application for revision and remit the fine.

Judgment.—In execution of a decree the decree-holder applied for the attachment and sale of the judgment-debtor's land. The Court, acting apparently under S. 141, Land Revenue Act, asked the Collector to sell the land, the attachment thereof having been effected by the Court itself. The Collector thereupon directed the Tahsildar to sell the land. In the meantime an application was made to the Collector by the judgment-debtor, on 2nd November 1926, stating that no notice had been issued to him of the intended sale and that he should be given time to arrange for the deposit of the decretal amount in Court. The sale, it may be mentioned, was fixed for 3rd November 1926. The Collector sent this application to the Tahsildar for report, but apparently it was received by him after the sale had taken place. Therefore, on 4th November 1926, this application was returned by the Tahsildar to the Collector with the report that the sale had already taken place. On 13th November 1926, the Collector passed an order that proceedings be returned to the Court; but, on 10th December 1926, an objection was filed before the Collector by the judgment-debtor objecting to the sale on the ground of irregularity in publishing and conducting it and consequent loss to the applicant. This application was sent by the Collector to the Tahsildar for report and the latter submitted a report on 21st January 1927, stating that there was no ground for objection. Thereupon the Collector passed an order on 19th February 1927, to the effect that he had already disposed of the case and that the judgment debtor could file an application setting forth his objections in the Court concerned and that, therefore, it would be better to send back the record to the Court concerned. He directed that the objector be informed that if he had any objection he should present the same in the Court concerned. The sale was confirmed by the executing Court, on 28th February 1927, and in the order of that date the following sentence appears:

> No objections regarding irregularity of auction sale form part of the present objections.

It seems to me that if the executing Court was referring to the objections sent to it by the Collector on 19th February 1927, then the learned Judge was wrong, because there is an objection to the sale on the ground of irregularity of auction proceedings. On the other hand it is quite possible that the objection presented by the judgment-debtor to the Collector had not been received by the Court when the order confirming the sale was passed by it. I have no material before me to ascertain this fact.

It is quite clear that objections with regard to proceedings connected with the sale of land, which have taken place in pursuance of an order of a civil Court under S. 141, Land Revenue Act, must be made to the Court and not to the Collector, because the Collector in such cases is acting merely as a ministerial officer of the Court and does not perform any judicial functions. This is apparent from the wording of S. 141, which lays down that orders by any civil Court for the attachment, sale or delivery of land shall be addressed to the Collector and be executed by him in accordance with the provisions of the law applicable to the Court issuing the orders and with any rules consistent therewith made by the Financial Commissioner with the concurrence of the High Court and the previous sanction of the Local Government.

Paragraph 64 of the instructions of this Court, Vol. 1, also is to the same effect. This will be found at p. 111 of the Rules and Orders, Vol. 1, published in 1927. That rule provided that in such cases the decree-holder or any person whose property has been sold may apply to the executing Court to set aside the sale on the ground of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting it.

Counsel for the respondent contends that it is para. 74 printed at p. 113 which is applicable to this case. But that paragraph applies to cases, which are governed by S 72, Civil P. C., and that section applies to cases where the Collector represents to the Court that the public sale of the land attached is objectionable and that satisfaction of the decree may be made within a reasonable period by a temporary alienation of the land and the Court agrees with the representation of the Collector and authorizes him to provide for such satisfaction in the manner recommended by him. It is to such cases that para. 74 applies. No doubt, under sub-S. (2) of S. 72, read with S. 71, the Collector is to be deemed to be acting judicially in such cases and, therefore all objections relating to the proceedings before him must be disposed of by him.

The learned counsel then contended that the sale could take place only under Ss. 68 to 71, Civil P. C. But these sections have no application to this province as no notification by the Local Government has been issued such as is contemplated by S. 68. That section provides that the Local Government may declare, by notification in the local official Gazette, that in any local area the execution of decrees in cases in which a Court has ordered any immovable property to be sold, or the execution of any particular kind of such decree, or the execution of decrees ordering the sale of any particular kind of, or interest in, immovable property, shall be transferred to the Collector. No notification having been issued by the Local Government, no question of transferring the application for execution arises in this case. Therefore, as I have already stated, the proceedings by the Collector were under S. 141, Land Revenue Act, and to such proceedings paras. 58 to 69 of the instructions of this Court relating to the execution of decrees as contained in the Rules and Orders above referred to apply.

In the present case an application was made by the judgment-debtor on 10th December 1927, but it was presented to the Collector and presumably forwarded by him to the executing Court. This application was on the face of it barred by time, but it is alleged on behalf of the petitioner that he had no notice of the proceedings before the Collector or of the fact that his property was being sold by that officer. In view of the above allegations it will be best under the cirumstances to remand the case to the executing Court to determine the following issues:

1. Whether there was any reasonable cause for the judgment-debtor for not presenting his application to set aside the sale till 10th December 1926 and whether such application was forwarded by the Collector to the Court.
2. Whether there was any irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale and, if so, whether it has resulted in loss to the judgment debtor.

Accepting this appeal I remand the case accordingly. The Court below will hear evidence of the parties and then decide the issues remanded to it. The costs of these proceedings will abide the result.

Addison, J.—Bulaqi and Sultan have been sentenced to transportation for life under S. 302, I. P C., for the murder of Ramzan on the night of 21st/22nd April 1927, and have appealed.

Sultan is the brother of Ghulam, and it is said that it was rumoured in the village that the deceased had an intrigue with Ghulam's wife, Mt. Malkani. Ghulam was absent from the village that night according to the evidence of the lambardar Sajawal. Mt Malkani is the sister of Bulaqi. The deceased went out in the evening and had not returned when his wife awoke at midnight. Search was made for him The lambardar was told next day. He called in Gahna, tracker, on the afternoon of the 22nd. This tracker did not know Ramzan's tracks before but he picked them up near the tobacco field in Ramzan's square. He was able to follow the tracks, with some directions from certain villagers who had seen Ramzan the evening before, to the ahata of the brothers, Sultan and Ghulam, to which they led after making a detour. Later when certain shoes were recovered from the canal at the instance of Bulaqi, the tracker was able to say that the tracks must have been those of the owner of the shoes which have been identified by the deceased's wife to be his. Ramzan's tracks leaving the ahata could not be discovered but where his tracks had entered the tracker found the tracks of the two appellants, which he knew before, leaving. He thought that they must have been carrying something heavy and they stopped twice on the way to the square of Bulaqi and Massu to which they were traced. In fact the tracker had definitely said that they led up to the place where the body was later found buried. The tracker and the lambardar further stated that they heard another relative, Rahman, telling Ghulam's wife to sweep away the tracks in the ahata when they reached there.

Next morning, i. e., on 23rd April 1927, Sajawal, lambardar, went to the police station and reported the above story including the rumour as to the alleged intimacy which the witness however, had not heard about till the disappearance of the deceased. The Sub-Inspector was not at the police station and the information reached him on 24th when he went to the village. Apparently he discovered nothing on 24th and 25th. One Baqra told the Sub-Inspector at about 10 p. m on 25th that the appellants had confessed. This witness belongs to another village and has had a somewhat chequered career. He is the sort of person likely to be made use of by the police for their own purposes. He said that he was called by both parties but this cannot be believed. It is clear that he was called by the Sub-Inspector and this has been found also by the learned Sessions Judge. His evidence is that immediately after he joined the panchayat of villagers, which was sitting to help the police in the investigation of the crime, the two appellants told him that they were the culprits and that he should ask the Sub-Inspector to deal lightly with them. No one also was present when this confession was made to Baqra. Baqra then went to the Sub-Inspector who said that if they pointed outthe corpse he would see what he could do for the appellants later. Sultan then took the witness and another person to the spot where the body was buried and later Bulaqi did the same. The whole party then went to the spot which had been pointed out, some time in the early morning of 26th when the corpse was dug up from where it was buried near the entrance of the bhaini in the square of Bulaqi and Massu. Baqra admitted that he knew at the time that Bulaqi, Sultan and Rahman were then suspected by the police and had been sent for by them.

They were not under formal arrest then, but they were, it is clear, shamil taftish i. e, to all intents and purposes, under detention The witness further admitted that the Sub-Inspector was only 40 or 50 karams away when the appellants made their admission to him. It is, therefore, difficult to escape from the conclusion that this witness was in reality an agent of the police and professing to act as such. Besides, a lambardar Lal Khan throws grave doubts on the independence of Baqra. He stated that Baqra arrived at 10 a. m. on 25th to join the panchayat which was helping the police. The lambardar then left and on his return at 5 p. m. did not see Baqra there. He next saw Baqra when the corpse was being dug up. This witness further stated that the Sub-Inspector told Baqra to join the panchayat and recover the corpse.

When the body was dug up it had reached an advanced stage of decomposition and the evidence of the doctor is that death could have been due to natural causes. Death in his opinion might have been due to strangulation as the tongue was protruding—a result which follows from decomposition as well. Death might also have been due to snakebite. This evidence, therefore, is not conclusive as to the cause of death. The body was naked except for a shirt. The other clothes have not been discovered, but Bulaqi told the police that he had thrown the shoes of the deceased into the canal and they were found near the place indicated by him in the canal. This part of the evidence has already been touched upon by me.

I have mentioned before that the tracker, who appears to be a good witness, stated that the tracks of the appellants led up to the spot where the body was ultimately found buried. It is curious that no attempt was made to dig there. If this had been done in time the cause of death might have been discovered at the post-mortem examination with certainty. It is quite possible, however, that this was not thought of at the time, and in any case the police arrived late. There seems to me to be no reason to doubt that Sultan did show the place where the body was found buried and that he had been told before that the Sub-Inspector would attempt to do something for him if he did so. If there had been no such inducement it is clear that this circumstance would have been relevant under S. 27, Evidence Act, but it is urged that it is excluded by S 24 because of the inducement. This subject is discussed at length at pp. 279 and 280 of Amir Ali and Woodroffe's Evidence Act, 8th edition, where numerous authorities are given to the effect that S. 27 qualifies S. 24 as well as Ss. 25 and 26. The broad ground for not admitting confessions made under inducement or to a police officer is the danger of admitting false confessions, but the necessity for the exclusion disappears in a case provided for by S. 27 when the truth of the confession is guaranteed by the discovery of facts in consequence of the information given. I would, therefore, hold that the discovery of the buried body at the instance of Sultan is admissible against him. It is clear, however, that the pointing out of the same spot by Bulaqi is inadmissible in evidence as the place was already known before he did so and was not discovered as a result of his pointing it out.

I would accept the tracker's evidence and that of the lambardar as to the tracks being traced at once a circumstance mentioned by the lambardar in the first information report which he made to the police. Bulaqi did show where the shoes were in the canal and Sultan showed the place where the corpse was buried, both these discoveries being relevant and admissible in evidence. The tracks of both appellants went to the square where the body was buried. It has been proved that Ramzan's tracks went to Ghulam and Sultan's ahata, while no tracks of his leaving it were discovered. It has been established that the rumour about the intimacy with Mt. Malkani, Ghulam's wife, was, at any rate, in common circulation immediately after he disappeared. The fact that he was buried only in his shirt is also not without significance.

I would, however, reject the confession alleged to have been made to Baqra by the appellants as being irrelevant under S. 24, Evidence Act. It appears to me from the circumstances that it was caused by Baqra holding out an inducement as from the Sub-Inspector whose man he undoubtedly was. It is true that the direct evidence as to the inducement being offered by the Sub-Inspector is subsequent to the confession and prior to the discovery of the corpse, but the circumstances all point to the fact that the inducement was offered prior to the confession. I would hold that Baqra was sent in order to make the appellants confess by an inducement than the Sub-Inspector would treat them leniently if they confessed. That is an inducement proceeding from a person in authority and the confession is, therefore, irrelevant.

Without the confession the evidence is not sufficient to establish that the two appellants murdered the deceased. Without the confession, however, the evidence appears to me to be ample to establish an offence under S. 201, I. P. C. The medical evidence, though not conclusive as to the cause of death, is to the effect that it might have been by strangulation. Had the deceased not been murdered he would not have been buried secretly in the field of Bulaqi and Massu. It is the only possible inference that he was murdered by somebody in the ahata but it cannot be said that he was murdered by the two appellants as other relatives reside there. I would hold that the two appellants are guilty under S. 201, I. P. C., i. e., of causing the disappearance of evidence of the offence of murder of the deceased.

I would, therefore, accept the appeals so as to set aside the convictions of the appellants under S. 302, I. P. C., but I would confirm their convictions under S. 201, I. P. C.

I would sentence them under that section to five years' rigorous imprisonment which in my opinion, is sufficient in the circumstances of this case.

Bhagat Ram Puri—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—Jawala Singh has petitioned on the revision side for the setting aside of his conviction under S. 61 (1) (c), Punjab Excise Act, and sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment together with a fine of Rs. 500. One Mehr Singh, an admitted enemy of the petitioner, stated that he saw the petitioner go at night to his sugarcane field in order to work a still. He went and informed the Excise Sub-Inspector, but when the excise party reached the spot they found nobody present though there was a still working in the sugarcane field of the petitioner. Lahan and some illicit liquor were also found there. The learned Sessions Judge recognized that the evidence of Mehr Singh had to be received with caution, but he considered that it could not be entirely ignored as Mehr Singh told the Excise Sub-Inspector before the party went to the spot that Jawala Singh was in his fields. It seems to me that this does not amount to corroboration of Mehr Singh's statement as nobody else saw Jawala Singh in the field. I must, therefore, reject completely the evidence of Mehr Singh who is undoubtedly inimical to the petitioner. This leaves us with the solitary fact that an excise raiding party found a still working at night in the sugarcane field of Jawala Singh. Obviously this in itself is not sufficient for the conviction of the petitioner as any enemy can set up such a still without difficulty.

The learned Sessions Judge, however, has relied upon the inspection of the spot made by the Magistrate. The still was discovered on the night of 19th September 1927. The Magistrate went to the spot after recording the prosecution evidence on 11th November 1927. He did not, however, record any memorandum of the relevant facts observed by him at his inspection as he was bound to do in accordance with the provisions of S. 539-B, Criminal P. C., which states that a Magistrate can view the place for the purpose of properly appreciating the evidence given at the enquiry or trial, but that if he does so he shall without unnecessary delay record the memorandum referred to. This memorandum shall form part of the record and the accused is entitled to be furnished with a copy free of cost.

More than that, the petitioner applied to the Magistrate that he should record the memorandum in question so that he could see how the visit of the spot had affected the mind of the Magistrate and so that he might be in a position to rebut any impression caused in the mind of the Magistrate by his inspection. The Magistrate refused to record any memorandum. In his judgment dated 12th December 1927 the Magistrate, however, used a circumstance observed by him on 11th November when inspecting the spot against the petitioner. He noted in his judgment that the still appeared to him to have been in operation for a considerable time as the clay of chulah, etc., had turned red with use. The learned Sessions Judge appears to have principally relied on this circumstance in coming to the conclusion that the petitioner was guilty. It certainly is a most important circumstance; for if the still had been in operation for a long time there would be a presumption of the guilt of the petitioner to whom the field belonged. Not one witness mentions this circumstance and there is no evidence on the record to the effect.

It is argued before me that the failure of the Magistrate to record a memorandum of his local inspection and to supply the petitioner with a copy was an illegality vitiating the proceeding and, in any case, an irregularity by which the defence was prejudiced. It is the case that the appellant has been convicted upon the result of the local inspection which was kept from his knowledge. That certainly is an irregularity by which the petitioner was prejudiced in his defence and it may be even an illegality. In Forbes v. Ali Haider Khan (1) an admission of this nature was held to be an irregularity but in Hriday Govinda v. Emperor (2) it was held to be an illegality. In the present case it is not important to decide whether it is an irregularity or illegality as clearly the petitioner has been prejudiced in his defence by the memorandum not having been recorded by the Magistrate. The Magistrate only went to the spot two months after the still was found there, and the chulah may have been used for other purposes in the interval. In any case, there is no evidence that the clay of the chulah was red from use on 19th September. It has frequently been held that it is very desirable that a judicial officer conducting a local investigation should place upon record the result of his inspection at once so that the parties may have an opportunity of seeing what the facts are which the judicial officer considered to be established by the local investigation. It was laid down in Babbon Sheik v. Emperor (3) that a Magistrate should not after making a local investigation deliver his judgment relying upon that investigation without giving an opportunity to the parties to rebut his opinion. S. 539-B, Criminal P C., shows that the object of a local inspection is to allow the Magistrate properly to appreciate the evidence given at the enquiry or trial and not for the purpose of the Magistrate becoming the principal witness in the case on a question of fact. It may be the case that the Evidence Act does not prohibit the use of facts observed by the Judge, but it is clearly illegal for the Judge to become the principal witness in the case, to keep all knowledge of the facts that he had noted to himself and then to convict the accused upon such knowledge.

For the reasons given I have no hesitation in rejecting the result of the Magistrate's local inspection in the present case. This means that against the petitioner the only evidence is that in the middle of the night in September an illicit still was found working in his sugarcane field. That is not enough for his conviction. I accept the petition, set aside the conviction of the petitioner and direct that he be released forthwith.

Gauri Mal-Narain Das — Plaintiff — Respondent.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 285 of 1925, Decided on 5th April 1928, from decree of Jai Lal, J., D/- 20th July 1925, in Civil Appeal No. 717 of 1924.

* Contract Act, S. 86—Theft of goods from railway goods shed before its delivery to buyer—Buyer is not responsible for the loss.

The plaintiff agreed to purchase and the defendant to sell ten bales of cloth, of which nine bales were delivered and paid for at Amritsar, and on 15th November 1920 the Berar Manufacturing Company at Badnera consigned one bale from that place to Amritsar and the railway receipt, which was in favour of the consignors, was endorsed by them to the Chartered Bank of India at Amritsar who were to deliver the receipt to the purchaser on payment of the price by him. It appeared that the bale arrived at Amritsar on 7th January 1921 and was stolen from the goods shed at Amritsar on 10th January, and on 13th January the plaintiff paid the money to the bank and obtained the railway receipt, but when he went to the railway station he found that the bale had been stolen. It was then contended that by a special agreement the buyer became responsible for the risk as soon as the goods left the premises of the mills at Badnera.

Held: that, on 10th January 1921, when the goods were lost, they had not become the property of the buyer and he could not, therefore, bear the loss. [P 481 C 2]

Held: further, that though the parties are at perfect liberty to agree, if they please, that the risk shall pass to the buyer before the passing of the property, still it is necessary that the property must first be appropriated to the contract. [P 481 C 2]

Fakir Chand—for Appellant.

Badri Das—for Respondent.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—The facts of this case are simple and do not admit of any dispute. On 2nd October 1920, the plaintiff agreed to purchase, and the defendant Billimoria agreed to sell, ten bales of cloth at a certain specified price. The terms of the contract, which was made at Amritsar, were embodied in a document which is called an "indent." It is common ground that nine bales of cloth were delivered and paid for at Amritsar; and the dispute now is confined to the tenth bale. On 15th November 1920, the Berar Manufacturing Company at Badnera consigned one bale from that place to Amritsar; and the railway receipt which was in favour of the consignors, was endorsed by them to the Chartered Bank of India at Amritsar who were to deliver the receipt to the purchaser on payment of the price by him. It appears that the bale arrived at Amritsar on 7th January 1921, and that it was stolen from the goods shed at Amritsar on 10th January. On 13th January the plaintiff paid the money to the bank and obtained the railway receipt; but when he went to the railway station he found that the goods had been stolen.

The question for determination is whether the loss arising from the theft of the goods should be borne by the seller or the buyer. Now S. 86, Contract Act, lays down that when goods have become the property of the buyer he must bear any loss arising from their destruction or injury. It is, however, clear that, on 10th January 1921, when the goods were lost, they had not become the property of the buyer; and he could not, therefore, bear the loss.

Our attention has, however, been invited to Cl. 10 of the contract by which the buyer promised not to hold the seller responsible for loss or damage to goods in transit or otherwise after they have left the Mills' premises.

It is contended that, in view of this special agreement the buyer became responsible for the risk as soon as the goods left the premises of the Mills at Badnera. There is no doubt that the parties are at perfect liberty to agree, if they please, that the risk shall pass to the buyer before the passing of the property; but it is necessary that the property must be appropriated to the contract. There is not a scintilla of evidence on the record to show that this bale was appropriated to the contract of the plaintiff when it left the premises of the Mills. As pointed out above, the Berar Manufacturing Company, who sent the goods in pursuance of the instructions from the seller, were not only the consignors of the goods, but also the consignees, and until the 13th January 1921, there was nothing to show that the goods in question were meant for the plaintiff or any other trader. I accordingly affirm the judgment of the single Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

First Appeal No. 2310 of 1923, Decided on 25th January 1928, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Shahpur D/- 1st May 1923.

Custom (Punjab)—Entries in Riwaj-i-am—Initiative presumption in favour of, should be made—Custom recorded opposed to rules generally prevailing — Presumption becomes weak—Custom recorded affecting adversely the right of females—Presumption becomes still weaker.

The Courts in the Punjab are bound to make an initial presumption in favour of the entries of the Riwaj-i-am, irrespective of the fact whether the custom, as recorded, is in accord with the general custom or not. Where the Riwaj-i-am lays down a custom, which is in consonance with the agricultural custom of the Punjab, very strong proof will have to be produced to displace this presumption, but where this is not the case and the custom recorded in the Riwaj-i-am is opposed to the rules generally prevailing, the presumption will be considerably weak. Where the Riwaj-i-am affects adversely the rights of females who have had no opportunity whatever of appearing before the revenue authorities, the presumption will be weaker still and only a few instances might suffice to rebut it : *A. Nanak Chand—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—One Jahan Khan, an Awan of Mauza Mardwal in the Khushab tahsil of the Shahpur District, died sonless many years ago, leaving him surviving two widows, Mt. Fateh Khatun and Mt. Jawai, and daughters from each of them. On his death his property was taken possession of by Mt. Fateh Khatun and Mt. Jawai jointly. Subsequently they partitioned it among themselves and effect was given to this partition in the revenue papers.

On 9th November 1921, Mt. Fateh Khatun gifted her entire estate to her married daughter Mt. Bhag Bhari by a registered deed. The plaintiffs, who are the collaterals of Jahan Khan in the sixth degree, instituted a suit alleging that the land was ancestral and claiming a declaration that the gift shall not affect their reversionary rights after the death of Mt. Fateh Khatun. The defendants denied that the land was ancestral and contended that the gift by the widow to the daughter was in the nature of acceleration of succession and that the plaintiffs had no locus standi to maintain the suit. The trial Court dismissed the suit and the plaintiffs have appealed (C. A. No. 2310 of 1923).

On 6th June 1923 the other widow Mt. Jawai also gifted the entire land held by her to her married daughters, Mt. Nek Bakht, Mt. Mughlani and Mt. Bakht Bhari. The collaterals instituted another suit to contest this gift, which was resisted by Mt. Jawai and the donees on pleas similar to those which had been put forward by the defendants in the first case. This suit was also dismissed by the same Subordinate Judge and the plaintiffs have preferred a first appeal to this Court (C. A. No. 902 of 1924). As the points involved in both the appeals are the same, they have been heard together.

The first question to be decided is, whether the land in dispute was ancestral of Jahan Khan deceased and the plaintiffs. In support of his contention Mr. Badri Das has largely relied on the remarks in the pedigree table of the village prepared in the settlement of 1865, where it is stated that 16 or 17 generations back one Murdo Awan founded a village on a hillock in the jungle to the north of the present village Abadi, but that it was afterwards abandoned. Subsequently the ancestors of the present proprietors founded the present village and gave it its old name Mardwal, after the name of the original founder, and that since then it had remained abad and had never been deserted. Counsel suggests that Shah Alam was among the persons who refounded the village and that it must be presumed that the land in dispute has descended from him. But there is nothing on the record to show when Shah Alam lived. It is conceded that only a small part of the land in dispute descended to Jahan Khan from his father Nawab and the remainder was acquired subsequently. We, therefore, agree with the learned Subordinate Judge's finding on this point and hold that the land has not been proved to be ancestral of the plaintiffs and Jahan Khan.

The next question for decision is whether the plaintiffs have a locus standi to contest the gifts. As the donees in each case are the daughters of the donors, the decision of this question will be determined by the rule of succession to non-ancestral property prevailing in the tribe. The onus of issue 3 which covered this point was placed on the plaintiffs. In the case relating to the gift by Mt. Fateh Khatun no oral evidence was led by the parties at all and the only documentary evidence produced by the plaintiffs consisted of an extract from the Wajib-ul-arz of 1865, while the defendants relied on a decision of Lala Sakhir Chand, Munsif Frst Class, dated 11th October 1920, in a suit instituted by these very collaterals against the two widows of Jahan Khan, who had sold a portion of his property to one Mir Abdulla. The Munsif had decided against the collaterals and the decision was upheld on appeal by Mr. Tapp, District Judge.

In the suit relating to the gift by Mt. Jawai, the plaintiffs produced 16 witnesses, who made bald statements that according to the custom prevailing among the Mahomedans of the Sun tract generally married daughters were excluded by collaterals irrespective of the fact whether the property was ancestral or not. The testimony of these witnesses was rejected by the Subordinate Judge as worthless as none of them was able to cite a single instance in which the collaterals had succeeded in preference to daughters in respect of non-ancestral property. The plaintiffs, however, mainly relied on answers to questions 16 and 17 printed at pp. 48 and 49 of the General Code of the Tribal Custom in the Shahpur District compiled by Mr. (afterwards Sir) James Wilson in 1896 and argued that, having regard to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Beg v. Allah Ditta (1), these entries were presumptive proof of the custom being in their favour. The defendants, on the other hand, urged that the entries in the riwaj-i-am were unsupported by any instances and being opposed to the general custom of the province, according to which daughters are preferential heirs to collaterals in respect of non-ancestral property, no presumption of correctness attached to them. The learned Subordinate Judge accepted the defendants' contention and relying upon the interpretation of the aforesaid decision of the Privy Council as given in Wazira v. Maryam (2), he decided the issue against the plaintiffs.

On appeal it has been strenuously argued that in view of the statement of the tribal custom in the riwaj-i-am, the onus of issue 3 was wrongly placed on the plaintiffs and it has been urged that the view taken in Wazira v. Maryam (2) is no longer regarded as sound in this Court. Reliance has been placed on two recent Division Bench decisions in Labh Singh v. Mt. Mango (3) and Kahan Singh v. Gopal Singh (4) in the former of which the question has been discussed at great length. The respondents on the other hand have strongly relied on Wazira v. Maryam (2), Mangal Singh v. Budho (5), Budha v. Fatima Bibi (6), Gurdit Singh v. Malan (7) and Pohlo v. Naurdhan (8), and contend that the remarks of their Lordships in Beg v. Allah Ditta (1) must be confined to the facts of that particular case. There can be no doubt that there exists a serious conflict of judicial opinion on the point and the question shall have some day to be decided by a larger Bench. As at present advised, I am inclined to the view that the Courts in this province are bound to make an initial presumption in favour of the entries in the riwaj-i-am, irrespective of the fact whether the custom, as recorded, is in accord with the general custom or not. The quantum of evidence necessary to rebut this presumption will, however, vary with the facts and circumstances of each case. Where the riwaj-i-am lays down a custom, which is in consonance with the general agricultural custom of the province, very strong proof will have to be produced to displace this presumption, but where this is not the case and the custom recorded in the riwaj-i-am is opposed to the rules generally prevailing, the presumption will be considerably weak. Again where the Riwaj-i-am affects adversely the rights of females who have had no opportunity whatever of appearing before the revenue authorities, the presumption will be weaker still and only a few instances might suffice to rebut it.

In the present case we find that a general answer is given to questions 16 and 17 as governing all the Mussalman tribes of a predominantly Mussalman district like Shahpur and yet it is significant that not a single instance has been cited either in the riwaj-i-am or proved at the trial where married daughters have been excluded from succession to non-ancestral property. The respondents, on the other hand, had referred us to at least three instances in which the riwaj-i-am was not followed :

(1) In Ghulam Mahomed v. Guahar Bibi (9), which was a case among Sipras of Tahsil Bhera, a Division Bench of this Court held that daughters excluded nephews in succession to non-ancestral property.

(2) In that case reference was made to C. A. No. 665 of 1905, which was a case among majokas of this district. We sent for the record of that case and found that the Wajib-ul-arz entry of 1865 (which was relied upon in the present case also) was held to be applicable to succession to ancestral property only and the daughters, though married, were allowed to succeed to non-ancestral property.

(3) The judgment of Mr. Sakhir Chand Munsif, affirmed on appeal by Mr. Tapp, District Judge, printed in the supplementary paper-book in respect of the estate of Jahan Khan deceased, where the decision was contrary to the entry in the Riwaj-i-am.

It is contended that these instances sufficiently rebut the initial presumption arising from the riwaji-i-am. I am, however, of opinion that in view of the fact that the issue as framed had placed the onus on the plaintiffs and at the time when the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was delivered, the trend of rulings in this Court was in favour of limiting the effect of the Privy Council decision in Beg v. Allah Ditta (1) to those cases only, in which the Riwaj-i-am was in consonance with the general agricultural custom, it is fair to the parties that the issue be re-framed and they be given further opportunity to lead fresh evidence. I would accordingly re-frame the issue in the following terms and under O. 41, R. 25, Civil P. C., remit it to the lower Court for enquiry and report:

Whether according to custom, collaterals of the last male holder have no locus standi to contest the gift of non-ancestral property by his widow to her daughter ?

An effort should be made to place on the record the relevant entries in the Riwaj-i-am of this particular village and tribe and to place copies of as many decided cases and mutations, which might throw light on the question, as may be possible.

The return will be made in three months.

First Appeal No. 2230 of 1922, Decided on 29th February 1928, from decree of 1st Class Sub-Judge, Amritsar, D/- 8th July 1922.

(a) Punjab Courts Act, S. 34—Judge receiving plaints for distribution is acting not as Court but ministerially—His discretion overrides the provisions of Civil P. C., S. 15.

Where a Judge receives plaints for distributing to proper Courts, he is acting not in the capacity of a Court but ministerially for the convenience of the litigants. His discretion overrides the provisions of S. 15, Civil P. C., in so far as he can direct a suit which might be tried by a Court of lower jurisdiction to be tried by a Court of higher jurisdiction, but no such discretion is conferred on the suitor who remains bound by the provisions of the Code. [P 486 C 1]

(b) Punjab Courts Act, S. 34—Presentation for purposes of limitation and kindred matters is the date on which plaint is presented to distributing officer—But presentation is not the same as institution.

When the plaint distributed under S. 34 has reached the Court of the Judge who will dispose of it, the date of presentation for purposes of limitation and kindred matters is taken to be that on which it was presented to the distributing officer in the first instance. But this is not the same as saying that it is instituted in the Court of such distributing officer, for once he or any other Court takes cognizance of a plaint and makes the necessary entries in the register he remains seized with that plaint and cannot send it elsewhere unless and until it is transferred by competent authority. [P 486 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C., O. 7, R. 10—R. 10 has not been overridden by Punjab Courts Act.

There is nothing in the Punjab Courts Act to show that O. 7, R. 10, Civil P. C., has been overridden or made of no effect in the Punjab. [P 486 C 1]

* (d) Civil P. C., O. 7, R. 10—Plaint presented—Valuation amended—Plaint returned—Plaintiff cannot be considered agent of Court while presenting it to the proper Court.

Where the plaint was presented and on objection by defendant, the plaintiff amended the valuation of the plaint and the plaint was then returned to plaintiff for presentation to proper Court:

Held: that the plaintiff was not acting as agent of the Court: 18 P. W. R. 1916, Dist. [P 486 C 2]

(e) Civil P. C., O. 7, R. 10—Court having jurisdiction originally discovering at the time of passing decree that it has no jurisdiction to pass it—R. 10 does not apply.

Order 7, R. 10 does not apply to cases where a Court originally had jurisdiction to try the suit but discovers at the time of passing a decree that it is incompetent to pass the decree because of the pecuniary valuation: 18 P. W. R. 1916, Dist. [P 486 C 2]

* (f) Hindu Law—Joint family—Father, joint with minor son—Father major at the time adverse possession began against him—Time runs even against minor son—Limitation Act, S. 7.

There is no valid reason for drawing a distinction between the powers of a manager to sue on behalf of the joint Hindu family for a debt due to the family in his own name alone without impleading the other members and to sue for possession of immovable property belonging to the joint Hindu family without impleading the other coparceners. At any rate, especially in the case of a father of a joint Hindu family, the consideration is even a stronger in favour of holding that he could sue both on behalf of himself and his minor sons without impleading the minor sons. The position will be different where coparceners other than the father or the manager are suing, and, therefore, limitation runs even against a minor member of a joint Hindu family as regards adverse possession if his father who was joint with him was a major at the time that the adverse possession began: *A. Moti Sagar and Faqir Chand—for Appellant.

Badri Das, Jagan Nath Aggarwal, Mehr Chand Mahajan and Hem Raj—for Respondent.

Dalip Singh, J.—The plaintiff in this case sued his brother for possession of a shop No. 1253 situate at Amritsar Katra Nimak Mandi on the ground that the defendant had given up his right in the shop under a registered deed of lease dated 11th July 1907 and had become separate thereafter. Various pleas were raised by the defendant in which it is quite unnecessary to enter because the learned Subordinate Judge who tried the case states in his judgment that the counsel for the plaintiff has admitted that the adverse possession of the defendant began on the date he executed the deed of release, namely, the 11th July 1907. There is no affidavit against the statement, and not even a ground of appeal that no such admission was made. The plaintiff had sued alleging possession and dispossession. The only question, therefore, to be decided is whether the suit is within time, having regard to the admission of the counsel for the plaintiff that the defendant had been in exclusive possession of the property since the 11th July 1907.

The plaint was presented in the Court of the senior Subordinate Judge on 11th July 1919. The valuation of the suit as originally brought made it triable by a Subordinate Judge of the Second Class, and the senior Subordinate Judge accordingly sent it to the Subordinate Judge, Second Class for disposal who proceeded to register the suit in his Court. On objection taken by the defendant that the suit was improperly valued a local commissioner was appointed and he valued the property at Rs. 12,000 odd. The plaintiff himself admitted that it was worth over Rs. 5,000. Upon this the Second Class Subordinate Judge returned the plaint to the plaintiff for the presentation to the competent Court, presumably acting under O. 7, R. 10. The order of the Subordinate Judge is dated 6th January 1920. The plaintiff made up the deficiency in the Court-fee and altered the valuation of the plaint, and represented it in the Court of the senior Subordinate Judge on 5th February 1920. It is obvious that if the suit is taken to have been instituted in the Court of the senior Subordinate Judge at the time when the plaint was first presented to him, namely, on 11th July 1919, then the first plaintiff's suit is within time, and equally if the plaintiff's suit is taken to be instituted in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge on 5th February 1920, the suit would not be within time unless the plaintiff could establish any plea of disability.

Now, it seems to us perfectly clear on reading the provisions of S. 15, Civil P. C. and Rr. 1 and 2, O. 4 of that Code together with the provisions of Ss. 34 and 37, Punjab Courts Act, that plaints are presented to the senior Subordinate Judge as he is the person appointed to receive plaints because he distributes plaints to the proper Courts. His discretion overrides the provisions of S. 15, Civil P. C. in so far as he can direct a suit which might be tried by a Court of lower jurisdiction to be tried by a Court of higher jurisdiction, but no such discretion is conferred on the suitor who remains bound by the provisions of the Code.

The senior Subordinate Judge in receiving plaint is, therefore, acting not in the capacity of a Court but ministerially for the convenience of the litigants, who otherwise would be put to the trouble of first presenting a plaint in a competent Court, then finding that that Court had sent it to the senior Subordinate Judge for distribution, and then discovering to what Court the senior Subordinate Judge had sent that case for disposal. From all this, however, it does not follow that all suits can be said to be instituted in the Court of the senior Subordinate Judge. It is true that when the plaint has reached the Court of the Judge who will dispose of it the date of presentation for purposes of limitation and kindred matters is taken to be that on which it was presented to the distributing officer in the first instance. But this is not the same as saying that it is instituted in the Court of such distributing officer, for once he or any other Court takes cognizance of a plaint and makes the necessary entries in the register he remains seised with that plaint and cannot send it elsewhere unless and until it is transferred by competent authority. The argument, therefore, of counsel for the appellant that the suit must be taken to have been instituted in the Court of the senior Subordinate Judge on 11th July 1919 and that, therefore, the Court of the Subordinate Judge Second Class, erred in handing the plaint back to the plaintiff for presentation to a competent Court whereas he should have sent it himself to the Court of the senior Subordinate Judge has no force whatsoever. There is nothing in the Punjab Courts Act to show that O. 7, R. 10, Civil P. C., has been overridden or made of no effect in the Punjab, and we do not consider that this was ever the intention of that Act. We, therefore, consider that the Subordinate Judge was correct in handing back the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation and the date of the institution of the suit must be taken to be the 5th February 1920.

Further in this particular case the plaintiff proceeded to alter the Court-fee and to amend the valuation of the plaint. The argument, therefore, that the plaintiff was acting as the agent of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, which is based on Azam Ali v. Akhtar Hussain (1) would not apply in the circumstances of the present case, the plaintiff having by his own act terminated the agency if ever there was one. Moreover Azam Ali v. Akhtar Husain (1) relates to a different class of cases to which O. 7, R. 10 does not apply, namely where a Court originally has jurisdiction to try the suit but discovers at the time of passing a decree that it is incompetent to pass the decree because of the pecuniary valuation. To such class of suits O. 7, R. 10 on its wording does not apply. Therefore, Azam Ali v. Akhtar Husain (1) has no application to this case for this reason also.

The next point urged by counsel for the appellant is that no limitation can run against a minor member of a joint Hindu family as regards adverse possession even though his father who was joint with him was a major at the time that the adverse possession began. For this argument counsel relies on Jawahir Singh v. Udai Parkash (2), a Privy Council ruling, in which it was held that in order to set aside an alienation of joint family property by the father of two minor sons it was immaterial for the purposes of limitation that the elder son had not sued within three years of attaining majority. This case seems to us to be altogether on a different footing from the present class of case. The right to set aside an alienation made by a member of a joint Hindu family is a right personal to all the members of the family and it cannot affect the rights of any one member of that family that some other member of the family has chosen to acquiesce in that alienation. Totally different considerations arise where the question is of adverse possession against the joint Hindu family treated as a legal persona. If the argument of counsel for the appellant is correct then, provided a joint Hindu family kept on having fresh members added within an interval of thirty years or thereabouts, whether by birth or by adoption, there never could be adverse possession of immovable property against such joint Hindu family. The proposition so stated is so startling that it would need considerable authority to compel this Court to come to that conclusion. On the contrary, however, no authority has been cited in support of such a proposition. Assuming, therefore, for the purposes of argument that the plaintiff and his father were joint, the adverse possession against the joint Hindu family commenced on 11th July 1907 and as the father was a major at the time, time ran against the whole joint Hindu family from that date and the minority of the plaintiff could not prevent the running of time. Of course the case might be different if the so-called adverse possession was really a disguised form of a gift or an alienation by the adult members of the joint Hindu family in which case the principles of Jawahir Singh v. Udai Parkash (2) might apply. But even at its best, if Jawahir Singh v. Udai Parkash (2) were taken to apply to this case then, on the reasoning which was approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council contained in Ganga Dayal v. Mani Ram (3), the test as to whether time ran or did not run would be whether the managing member of the family could or could not sue on behalf of the whole family without joining all the members of the family. There is a conflict of rulings on this point as noted by Mulla in his book on Hindu law. It seems to us that the better opinion is that contained in the rulings reported in Mahomed Sadiq v. Khedan Lal (4) and Ammachal v. Vythialinga (5), which was approved by the Privy Council in Kishen Prasad v. Har Narain Singh (6). There seems to be no valid reason for drawing a distinction between the powers of a manager to sue on behalf of the joint Hindu family for a debt due to the family in his own name alone without impleading the other members and to sue for possession of immovable property belonging to the joint Hindu family without impleading the other coparceners. At any rate especially in the case of a father of a joint Hindu family it seems that the consideration is even stronger in favour of holding that he could sue both on behalf of himself and his minor sons without impleading the minor sons. The position, of course, will be different where coparceners other than the father or the manager were suing, but into that point we need not enter. We, therefore, consider that time ran against the plaintiff from 11th July 1907 and the suit is, therefore, barred by limitation.

It is next contended by counsel for the appellant that it should be held that the father of the plaintiff and the plaintiff were no longer members of a joint Hindu family after the defendant had been separated by the deed of release on 11th July 1907. Various rulings have been cited on the question as to what the presumption is in the absence of any evidence as to the separation of all the members of a joint Hindu family when admittedly one has been separated. It is unnecessary to consider all the rulings in detail because the plaintiff is out of Court on the short ground that he never pleaded that he was separate from his father. On the contrary his suit was based on the assumption that he was joint with his father and, therefore, was entitled to the whole of the property as against the defendant. In the trial Court, it was distinctly so stated as found by the trial Court at p. 58 of the paper book, and there was no ground of appeal in this Court challenging that finding or admission before him. We, therefore, do not consider that the plaintiff is entitled to raise this point now before us. The plaintiff's appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

The connected appeal (C. A. 1044 of 1924) is really disposed of by the findings of fact arrived at above. The plaintiff in this case sued certain persons who had executed a mortgage in favour of his father. The plaintiff's brother, alleging that he also was an heir of his father applied to be impleaded as a party also. The case was compromised by the plaintiff, and his brother, who had been impleaded as a defendant, urged that the compromise could not bind him.

(5) [1883] 6 Mad. 27.
(6) [1911] 33 All. 272=9 I. C. 739=38 I. A. 45 (P. C.).

The trial Court held that the brother had been separated from the family by the deed of release dated 11th July 1907. This is correct and cannot seriously be contested. The only question, therefore, that remains is whether the plaintiff was also separated at the same time from his father.

Now, bearing in mind the fact that the plaintiff was a minor of some six or seven years of age, at the most, at the time, and bearing in mind that the deed of release specifies no shares of the parties and obviously was drawn up only with the object of getting rid of one member of the family who was having disputes with the others, it seems to us fairly clear that the inference in the circumstances of this case should be that the plaintiff remained joint with his father even after the disruption of his brother. We must not be taken as laying down any proposition or any general rule on this point. What we hold is that under the peculiar circumstances of this case the only reasonable inference from the fact is that the plaintiff remained joined with his father.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge Montgomery, appointing the respondent a guardian of the property of two minors. The order of the senior Subordinate Judge is dated 27th July 1927. The appeal was filed on 28th October 1927. The learned counsel made a note under the grounds of appeal that, excluding the time spent in obtaining the copies, the appeal was within the time, as 27th October 1927 was a holiday. It appears, however, that only one day was admissible for the copy and the last day for filing the appeal was 26th October 1927. The learned counsel for the appellant conceded that his note referred to above was wrong and that the appeal would be time barred if the period of limitation were 90 days. He, however, raised a new point, viz, that there is no period of limitation prescribed by the law for an appeal under the Guardians and Wards Act. His contention was that the present appeal is filed under S. 47, Guardians and Wards Act, and that there is no period of limitation prescribed for it either in that Act or in the Indian Limitation Act. As regards Art. 156, Sch. 1, Lim. Act, on which the learned counsel for the respondent relied, he urged that that article applied only to appeals under the Civil Procedure Code, and secondly even if the later expression were to be interpreted to mean appeals, the procedure with respect to which is governed by the Civil Procedure Code, there is nothing in the Guardians and Wards Act or the Civil Procedure Code to show that the procedure in the case of the present appeal is governed by the latter Code

There seems prima facie some force in the above contentions, but I do not think they are sound. It is true the present appeal is filed under S. 47, Guardians and Wards Act, and the Act appears to be silent both as regards the procedure to be followed in respect of appeals and the period of limitation for the same. There are, however, various allusions to the Civil Procedure Code in the Guardians and Wards Act, which suggest that the procedure laid down in that Code was intended to be followed: see e, g., S. 43 and 48). It was held by Sir Charles Roe, Chief Judge of the Punjab Chief Court in Muhammad v. Muhammad (1), that the general provisions of the Civil Procedure Code as regards procedure are applicable to cases under the Guardians and Wards Act.

Moreover S. 141, Civil P.C., lays down that the procedure provided by the code in regard to suits shall be followed as far as it can be made applicable in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction. It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakur Prasad v. Fakirullah (2) (at p. 3), that the proceedings to which this section applies are " matters " in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates, guardianship and so forth, etc. It seems thus clear that the procedure with respect to suits will apply to the proceedings in guardianship cases. It was urged that S. 141, Civil P. C., only refers to the procedure in respect of suits. But it seems to me that the word " suit " is used here in a comprehensive sense, so as to include appeals, which are only continuations of suits: cf. V. Atchayya v. Venkata Seetarama Chandra (3), and the procedure in respect of appeals in the Code must be taken to govern appeals arising out of any proceedings in a Court of civil jurisdiction, in the absence of any statutory provision to the contrary,

I hold, therefore, that the procedure in respect of appeals under S. 47, Guardians and Wards Act, must be taken to be governed by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. It has been held in Ramaswami Pillai v. Tahsildar of Madura (4), that Art. 156, Sch. 1, Lim. Act, applies to appeals under special Acts the procedure in respect of which is governed by the Civil Procedure Code. The period of limitation in respect of the appeal under S. 47, Guardians and Wards Act, would, therefore, seem to be 90 days from the date of the order under appeal.

The learned counsel for the appellant has filed an affidavit of his clerk owing to whose mistake the counsel is said to have been misled. But mistake on the part of counsel's clerk cannot be considered a sufficient ground for extension of time under S. 5, Lim. Act: vide Shahadat v. Hukum Singh (5), and the learned counsel also did not press this point. He, however, urged in the end that extension may be granted on the ground that the interests of a minor are concerned. The present dispute is, however, between two persons who want to be appointed guardians. In every appeal under the Guardians and Wards Act, the interests of a minor will usually be involved and I do not think this fact by itself can be considered to be an adequate ground for extension of time. I am unable to see that there are any other special circumstances justifying extension of time in this case. I dismiss the appeal, but leave the parties to bear their costs.

Second Appeal No. 1571 of 1926, Decided on 14th March 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Jhelum, D/- 8th March 1926.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 11 (4)—Daughter's minor son inheriting property bequeathed to his mother Testator's brother suing for possession on the ground of invalidity of will—Minor's guardian compromising the suit by giving up property in the brother's favour—Minor successfully suing to set aside the compromise—Brother instituting suit for the land left by the testator on the same allegations as in his first suit—The last suit was held not barred on the principle of res judicata.

A sonless Gakkhar of Jhelum tahsil made a will bequeathing his land in favour of his daughter. She was succeeded by her son. The testator's brother instituted a suit against his minor grandson for possession of the land on the ground that the will was not executed when the testator was of a disposing mind and that he had no power to make a will under custom. The guardian ad litem of the minor compromised the suit and gave up the land in favour of the brother. The brother accordingly obtained a compromise decree for possession of the land in question. Later, the minor's suit to set aside this compromise was decreed in his favour. Thereupon, the brother instituted a suit for the land left by the brother on the same allegation as in his first suit :

Held : that the suit by the brother for the land was not barred on the principle of res judicata. [P 491 C 1]

Judgment.—Allah Ditta, a sonless Gakkhar of Badlot, Jhelum tahsil, made a will bequeathing his land in favour of his daughter Mt. Daulat Begam on 17th August 1921. He died shortly afterwards and the land was mutated in favour of his daughter. She died and was succeeded by her son Anwar, mutation being effected in his favour on 15th June 1922. On 5th July 1922, Fazal Khan, the brother of Allah Ditta, instituted a suit against Anwar through his father Bahadur Khan, as his guardian ad litem for possession of the land on the ground that the will was not executed when Allah Ditta was of a disposing mind and that he had no power to make a will under custom. On 18th July 1922, the guardian ad litem of the minor Anwar compromised the suit and gave up the land in favour of Fazal Khan. Fazal Khan accordingly obtained a compromise decree for possession of the land in question. On 8th December 1922, Anwar, by his next friend Dasaundhi Khan, instituted a suit against Fazal Khan for a declaration to the effect that the compromise decree for possession against Fazal Khan was not binding upon the minor and had no effect on his rights as it was obtained by the collusion of his father and Fazal Khan. It would appear that the minor's father, who was his guardian ad litem, obtained a daughter of Fazal Khan in marriage, and on appeal to the Court of the District Judge the minor's suit was decreed.

Fazal Khan thereupon, on 22nd October 1924, instituted the present suit for the land left by Allah Ditta, his brother, on the same allegations as in his first suit. Both the Courts below held that the will by Allah Ditta was duly made in favour of his daughter and that he had power to make it under custom. The learned District Judge, however, granted a certificate under S. 41, Punjab Courts Act, on the question as to whether a sonless Gakkhar of Baldot, Tahsil Jhelum, could make a will of his ancestral property in favour of his daughter in the presence of his brother. On this certificate Fazal Khan has preferred this second appeal.

A preliminary objection was taken that the suit was barred on the principle of res judicata. What was argued was that, in the minor's suit for a declaration that the compromise decree was not binding on him by reason of his father's collusion, the defendant Fazal Khan could have pleaded that in any case the will was not duly made and that it was invalid by custom and in this way have resisted the suit. As he did not do so, it was claimed that under Expln. 4, S. 11, Civil P. C., the matter had become res judicata as these matters might and ought to have been made grounds of defence in the former suit. It seems to me, however, that the objection must fail. The minor's suit was only to the effect that the decree in Fazal Khan's first suit should be set aside because it was obtained against him through the collusion of his father. If collusion was proved he was entitled to his decree. It might have been better if it had been ordered that the first suit by Fazal Khan should be reopened when the minor obtained his decree, and that the first suit should then have been proceeded with and decided on the merits. This has sometimes been done. As it was not done in the present case, Fazal Khan was certainly entitled to bring the present suit which is in effect the same as his first suit. I am unable to hold that the merits should have been fought out in the minority suit.

It was held by a Full Bench in Mt. Bano v. Fateh Khan (1), that the distinction under Punjab customary law between the power of gift inter vivos and the power of testation is a matter of degree and form only, and where the power to gift is shown to exist an initial presumption arises that there is a co-extensive power of testation. This Court, in Mt. Rakhi v. Baza (2), accepted this principle, but allowed the presumption which arose to be rebutted by an express entry in the riwaj-i-am. It was also stated in Taj Muhammad v. Sayad Muhammad (3) that it is a well-recognized principle of law that the power of alienation inter vivos and the power of testation go together, and that if the former is proved to be governed by custom the latter is presumed to follow the same rule. This principle is embodied in para. 56 (b) of the tenth edition of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law. For this reason, if there is proof of the power to gift, it can be relied upon to prove the power of testation.

The learned counsel for the appellant relied on Muhammad Khan v. Dulla (4), in which it was held that a sonless Gakkhar of the Jhelum District could not make a gift of the whole of his ancestral land in favour of his sister's son in the presence of his near collateral. He also referred to Muhammad Beg v. Bahadur (5), where it was held that a sonless Mughal of the Jhelum tahsil could not gift the whole of his ancestral property under custom to his daughter's son in the presence of a nephew. A more recent ruling which requires examination is Sher Jang v. Ghulam Mohi-ud-din (6). It was held in it that a sonless Mahomedan Mair Rajput of the Chakwal tahsil of the Jhelum District could gift half of his ancestral land in favour of his daughter's son in presence of his collaterals. It was laid down that, although the initial presumption throughout the province is against the power of alienation in respect of ancestral land and the burden of proof at the outset rests on the person asserting such a power, yet in cases of Mahomedan tribes of the Jhelum District the presumption against the validity of a gift by a sonless proprietor to a daughter or daughter's son is not of great weight and may be easily shifted. In my opinion this is the correct view. It was held by a Full Bench in Gujar v. Sham Das (7) that the onus probandi generally lies on the person asserting the existence of the power of a sonless proprietor to alienate ancestral land. By reason, however, of the principle laid down in 22 P. R. 1904 the onus is very light upon Mahomedans in the tract I am dealing with, especially when the gift is in favour of a daughter or her son. I shall quote what was said at p. 92 of the 1904 judgment :

> Our conclusion, therefore, is that the power of gift in favour of a daughter's son is one very commonly exercised among the Mussalman tribes of the Jhelum District, and is rarely successfully contested except in some cases in which the entire ancestral holding has been so gifted, and that the burden laid upon the person setting up the validity of such a gift by the Full Bench ruling is of the lightest and one which may be very easily shifted.

The principle laid down in Sher Jang v. Ghulam Mohi-ud-din (6) was approved in Fazal v. Khan Muhammad (8) : see para. 1 at p. 313 of the Report). The case of Mughals of got Phaprah of Chakwal and Pind Dadan Khan tahsils arose in Hassan v. Jahana (9) and it was held that among them a gift by a sonless proprietor of the whole of his ancestral immovable property to his relations in the female line is valid in the presence and without the consent of his male agnates. The same view was taken in this case also. The case Muhammad Beg v. Bahadur (5) was distinguished.

There are numerous authorities to the effect that the Mahomedan tribes of this tract have power to make wills or gifts, disposing of their ancestral property in favour of daughters or their sons. In Allah Bakhsh v. Muhammad Bakhsh (10) it was held that Mughals.

got Phapra of the Pind Dadan Khan tahsil of the Jhelum District could bequeath all their ancestral property in favour of a daughter's son in the absence of male issue.

In Charagh v. Chamman (11) it was held that a sonless Mahomedan Rajput of Jhelum could make a gift of his ancestral land in favour of his son's daughter. In Sabalam v. Surfaraz (12), it was held that a sonless proprietor amongst Janjuas of Jhelum tahsil could bequeath ancestral land in favour of his daughter. In Fazal v. Mt. Bhagbari (13) it was held that a sonless Mahomedan Rajput of the Chakwal tahsil could make a will in favour of his daughter and in Karm Baksh v. Fatta (14) it was held that Chuhan Rajputs of Jhelum could make gifts of ancestral land in favour of sons-in-law in the presence of nephews. Feroze Khan v. Amir Muhammad (15) is an important decision. It was held by a Division Bench that a gift by a sonless proprietor of his ancestral land to his daughters and their husbands in the presence of first cousins was valid by the custom of Gakkhars in village Domeli in the district of Jhelum. This case is on all fours with the present except that the village is different. Muhammad Khan v. Dulla (4) which I have already referred to was distinguished. It was held in the 1896 cases that the power to gift to a sister's son did not obtain among Gakkhars in Jhelum and it was said in the 1902 case that the matter was not very fully discussed in the judgment of that case, which was also not on all fours with the case being decided. Another instance among Mahomedan tribes of this tract is afforded by Muhammad Khan v. Mt. Kesran (16), where it was held that by custom among Kahuts of tahsil Chakwal of the Jhelum District a sonless proprietor could make a free disposition of his ancestral land to a daughter in the presence of brothers. The case of Gakkhars in the adjoining district of Rawalpindi is discussed in Sardar Khanam v. Amir Zaman (17) and it was held that a sonless Gakkhar could gift the whole of his ancestral property without the consent of his near male kindred.

I have discussed the authorities nearest to the present case. According to the answer to question 78 of the customary law of Jhelum District Gakkhars said that there was a difference of opinion as to whether a proprietor could dispose of his property by will. The right to make wills, it is stated, was not generally recognized, but a large minority said that it might be done even in the presence of sons who could not, however, be excluded altogether. The cases cited were chiefly gifts and not wills.

In fact wills were practically unknown everywhere in the Punjab until after the Sikh times. In view, however, of the authorities that I have discussed instances of gifts are effective in establishing the power to make wills. Janjuas gave practically the same reply as Gakkhars. The Jhelum Janjuas went further and said that there was no custom empowering a proprietor to make a will. Yet it was held by the Punjab Chief Court in Sabalam v. Mt. Sarfaraz (11) that they had power to make a will in favour of daughters. As regards gifts the Gakkhar's reply to question 89 shows that there was no dispute as to self-acquired and moveable property being gifted. That was recognized by all, but it was added that the decisions were conflicting as regards their power to make gifts of ancestral property. The riwaj-i-am, therefore, leaves the matter doubtful, but it shows that a large minority of Gakkhars was in favour of the power of gifting ancestral property and of making wills. The burden is, therefore, very light upon the minor defendant to establish the custom.

The first witness for the defendant gave an instance where his maternal uncle Fateh Ali Khan made a gift of his ancestral land in favour of his daughter. The suit of the reversioners failed. He also cited an instance of the plaintiff's own family. The father and paternal uncle of the plaintiff gifted some land in favour of their sister and the plaintiff was unsuccessful in recovering the land though the suit ultimately came to the High Court. The fourth witness for the defendant, a lambardar, cited an instance of a gift of 64 kanals of land in favour of his own wife by her father. A suit was brought to set aside the gift and was contested up to the Chief Court, but it failed. The other case given by him was that of his paternal uncles Nur Khan and Amir Khan. They made a will bequeathing their land in favour of Mt. Muhammad Bi, daughter of Nur Khan. A civil suit was brought by one of the reversioners and failed. He also gave an instance of Khuda Dad Khan having made a will in favour of his daughter Mt. Nawab Begum. Another instance given by him was that of Pir Bakhsh who made a will in favour of his daughters. No suits were brought in the case of the last two instances.

The sixth witness for the defendant gave another instance. His father married a Gakkhar woman and her father, who was a Gakkhar, made a gift of land in her favour. That land was still with the witness though the heirs brought a suit to contest the gift. All the witnesses examined on behalf of the defendant stated that there was a custom among Gakkhars by which they could make wills, in the absence of male issue, in favour of daughters.

As against the above evidence the plaintiff only examined three witnesses, one of whom is nearly related to him. They do not belong to the parties' village but to the village of the plaintiff's wife. They stated that there was no custom amongst Gakkhars to make wills disposing of ancestral property, but could give no instances where wills or gifts were set aside. The evidence, therefore, is entirely in favour of the defendant and against the plaintiff's contention that a sonless Gakkhar has no power to make a will in favour of his daughter.

After a careful consideration of the authorities, the customary law of the Jhelum District, and of the evidence, I am of opinion that a sonless Gakkhar of tahsil Jhelum can make a will disposing of his ancestral property in favour of his daughter in the presence of his brother. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 3099 of 1927, Decided on 2nd April 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 12th July 1927.

Civil P. C., S. 11—A finding against a pro forma defendant against whom no relief is claimed does not operate as res judicata.

A finding against a defendant who was joined only as a pro forma party ann against whom no relief was claimed cannot operate as res judicata. [P 494 C 2]

One R sold some of his land to one G. S as R's reversioner sued for possession of the land after the death of R on the allegation that the sale was without necessity and consideration. S also claimed possession on the ground that D, widow of R's son, had remarried. D was joined as a pro forma defendant. The Court held that as a matter of fact no remarriage had taken place. Later D, in whose name R's lands were mutated, got notices of ejectment issued to S. S, failing in suits to contest the notices, instituted a suit for possession of property left by R against D who, it was alleged, had remarried and thereafter executed deed of relinquishment in S's favour with respect to property left by R. D contended that question of remarriage in the previous suit was decided against S and could not therefore be reopened.

Judgment.—Civil Appeals Nos. 3099 and 3100 of 1927 are connected and will be disposed of together. The plaintiffs in both the suits are reversioners of one Ram Singh. On the death of Ram Singh his lands were mutated in the name of his son's widow, Mt. Dhanti. According to the plaintiffs' allegations Mt. Dhanti remarried and thereafter executed a deed of relinquishment in their favour with respect to the property left by Ram Singh. The plaintiffs were put in possession of the property accordingly. The entries in the revenue records with respect to the lands remained unchanged. The defendant taking advantage of those entries got notices of ejectment issued to the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs instituted suits to contest the notices but failed. Thereafter they instituted the present suits in a civil Court for possession of the lands left by Ram Singh.

The defendant denied the plaintiffs' allegations and pleaded inter alia that the question of remarriage raised in a previous suit between the parties was decided against the plaintiffs and could not, therefore, be reopened. The trial Court held that the decision of the question as regards remarriage was not barred by the rule of res judicata but dismissed the suits on merits. On appeal the learned District Judge was of opinion that the decision in the previous suit on the question of remarriage operated as res judicata and without going into any other issue dismissed the appeals on that point. The plaintiffs have filed second appeals and the sole point for decision in both the appeals is whether the lower appellate Court's decision that the issue as to remarriage is barred by the rule of res judicata is correct.

The facts as regards the previous litigation in which the question of remarriage arose were briefly as follows : Ram Singh had sold some of his land to one Gurdit Singh and the plaintiffs as his reversioners sued for possession of the land after the death of Ram Singh on the allegation that the sale was without necessity and consideration. The plaintiffs claimed possession on the ground that Mt. Dhanti, widow of Ram Singh's son, had remarried. Mt. Dhanti was joined as a pro forma defendant. She first stated that no remarriage had taken place but subsequently, when examined as a witness, deposed that remarriage had taken place as alleged by the plaintiffs. The Court, however, held that, her statement was collusive and that as a matter of of fact no remarriage and taken place. The finding was also affirmed by the District Judge on appeal in that case. The learned District Judge has held that this decision in the previous case operates as res judicata for the purposes of the present suits.

On behalf of the appellants it is urged that the decisions in the previous case cannot operate as res judicata because Mt. Dhanti was only a pro forma defendant in that case and no relief was claimed against her and the matter cannot be said to have been directly and substantially in issue as between the plaintiffs and Mt. Dhanti. Brojo Behari v. Kedar Nath (1), Malhi Kunvar v. Immuddin (2) and Ramdas v. Wajir Sahib (3) are cited as authorities and appear to support the contention. On behalf of the respondent reliance is placed on Cheria Kottavan Karan v. Korath Ammalu (4), Rajendra Nath v. Bhabini Dasi (5), P. K. V. Kalandar v. K. V. P. Kalendar (6) and Kedar Nath v. Sheo Shankar (7). None of these latter rulings seem to be in point, as the question whether a finding can operate as res judicata against a defendant, who was only a pro forma party and against whom no relief was claimed, does not seem to have been raised in any of the cases. In the present instance the question as to remarriage of Mt. Dhanti arose in the previous suit only because the plaintiffs were asking for immediate possession. The land had been sold by Ram Singh in his lifetime and Mt. Dhanti, as the widow of his predeceased son, had no right to challenge the sale. She was joined only as a pro forma defendant and had no right to appeal in respect of the finding arrived at by the Court on the question of remarriage. In such circumstances it seems clear that she could not be held to be bound by the decision in the previous case: cf. Malhi Kumdar v. Imamuddin (2).

It was urged an behalf of the respondent that the question of remarriage was important in the previous suit, but this fact by itself is not sufficient. It is clear from the wording of S. 11 that in order that a finding may operate as res judicata the matter must be directly and substantially in issue between the same parties. This condition was, I think, not fulfilled in the present instance.

I, therefore, accept these appeals and, setting aside the order of the learned District Judge, remand the cases to him for redecision of the appeals on merits. Stamps on appeals to be refunded. Costs to follow final decision.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 114 of 1925, Decided on 13th April 1928, from order of Campbell, J., D/- 18th March 1925, in Civil Appeal No. 2153 of 1924.

The words "any cause" in S. 41 (3), Guardians and Wards Act are not restricted to the causes mentioned in sub-Ss. (1) and (2) of S. 41. [P 496 C 2]

Just as the death of the guardian puts an end to his guardianship, so does the death of the ward himself. The death of tho ward does not put an end to the jurisdiction of the Court over the guardian, and the property can be recovered from the latter without having recourse to a regular suit : (1918) *M. Badri Das and Jiwan Lal Kapur—for Appellant.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal — for Respondents.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—The facts relevant to the question of law debated before us may be shortly stated : One Thakur Das was appointed a guardian of the property of the minor Barkat Ram. The minor suspected the guardian of having misappropriated his property, and, in October 1920, he applied to the Court that the guardian be called upon to render accounts. The minor died in August 1921, and after his death Thakur Das rendered accounts to the Court which found him liable to pay a large sum of money to the minor's estate. He was accordingly directed to deposit in Court the amount due from him ; and, as he did not deposit the money, the Court imposed upon him a fine for non-compliance with its order.

The question arises whether the summary jurisdiction of the Court could be invoked against Thakur Das for the recovery of the money belonging to the deceased ward, or whether a regular suit was the only remedy available against him.

Now, S. 41, sub-S. (3), Guardians and Wards Act, 8 of 1890, lays down that when for any cause the powers of a guardian cease, the Court may require him or, if he is dead, his representative, to deliver, as it directs, any property in his possession or control belonging to the ward or any accounts in his possession or control relating to any past or present property of the ward.

It is beyond dispute that when the powers of a guardian of the property cease in the manner contemplated by the sub-section, the Court is entitled to call upon him to render an account of his stewardship and to deliver the property or money belonging to the ward to such person as the Court directs. There can be no doubt that, just as the death of the guardian puts an end to his guardianship so does the death of the ward himself. The death of the ward is one of the causes for which the powers of a guardian cease, and I consider that it comes within the ambit of the phrase "for any cause" mentioned in the aforesaid sub-section.

It is, however, argued that the scope of the phrase is limited by sub-Ss. (1) and (2) of S. 41, which enumerate the causes that determine the powers of a guardian of the person or the property of a minor and, as the death of the ward is not one of the causes mentioned in those sub-sections, the remedy prescribed by sub-S. (3) cannot be used against the quondam guardian after the death of the ward. I am not prepared to place this narrow construction upon the words "for any cause" used by the legislature. The words when used in their ordinary dictionary meaning are wide enough to include all causes which terminate the guardianship, and it is an established canon of the interpretation of statutes that words should be taken to have been used in their ordinary sense.

There is no valid ground for holding that the scope of the phrase "for any cause" should be curtained by a reference to the provisions of sub-Ss. (1) and (2) of S. 41. The adoption of such construction would imply that we should read, in the sub-section, words "for any of the foregoing causes," or some other words to that effect, instead of the phrase actually used by the legislature.

It will be observed that S. 34 of the Act invests the Court with certain summary powers for the protection of the property of the minor during the period of guardianship and authorizes it to require the guardian of the property to exhibit accounts and to pay money due on those accounts in the manner directed by it. It is also conceded that these powers can be exercised when the guardianship of the property is determined by any of the causes specified in S. 41 (2). Why should the Court become functus officio, if the cause determining the guardianship is the death of the ward? Is there any reason for making this differentiation? Surely, the Court, which has appointed the guardian and is acquainted with his dealings with the property is in a much better position than any other Court to settle various matters relating to his stewardship of the property. This method of deciding disputes about the nature and the extent of the property and the liability of the guardian with respect to that property provides not only an efficacious but a cheap and expeditious remedy. There is no reason why the Court should be deprived of this jurisdiction when the guardianship is determined by the death of the ward.

Neither the language of the statute nor general principles furnish any convincing argument to sustain the contention that the death of the ward puts an end to the jurisdiction of the Court over the guardian, and that the property cannot be recovered from the latter without having recourse to a regular suit. It was no doubt laid down by the Allahabad High Court in Chandra Bhukhan Singh v. Sujan Kuar (1), that on the death of the minor the Court has no power to call upon the guardian to deliver up the minor's property; but the contrary view was taken by the Madras High Court in Nataraja Pillai v. Subaraya Pillai (2), in which the decision of a single Judge was confirmed on appeal by a Division Bench. The same view has been adopted by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind in Fateh Chand v. Parbatibai (3). The judgment of the Bombay High Court in Murlidhar Nathu v. Vallabh Das Murlidhar (4) also proceeds upon the assumption that the Court has jurisdiction to pass orders against a guardian whose powers have ceased by reason of the minor's death.

Apart from the judicial authorities, I am of opinion that the words "any cause" are not restricted to the causes mentioned in sub-Ss. (1) and (2) of S. 41; and that the death of the ward, which ex concesso puts an end to the powers of the guardian of the property, is a cause within the meaning of that expression. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs,

DALIP SINGH, J.

Valina Rama—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 1079 of 1927, Decided on 14th December 1927, from order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Delhi, D/- 1st December 1927.

Punjab Borstal Act (11 of 1926)—Accused, a minor, associating with habitual criminals—Benefit of the Act can still be given to him.

A minor boy cannot be denied the benefit of the provisions of the Punjab Borstal Act simply because he associated with habitual criminals. [P 497 C 2]

Judgment.—These four appeals will be disposed of in one judgment. Bhoja, accused, has been convicted by the learned Magistrate under S. 243, I. P. C. and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment. Mt. Kalli has been convicted under S. 243, I. P. C., and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. Vaina Ram has been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment under Ss. 232/235 and 243, I. P. C. Mt. Sonhi has been sentenced under S. 232 to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

The facts as shown by the prosecution evidence are as follows; Bhairo Singh alias Baina (P. W. No. 8) is a boy of eight years who lives with the four accused above named who are related as follows: Vaina Ram is the husband of Mt. Sonhi, Mt. Kalli is his paternal aunt and Bhoja is the son of Mt. Kalli. Bhairo has given evidence showing that all the four accused used to take part in counterfeiting King's coin. He further informed the police that the day before the arrest, which took place on 1st June 1927, Mt. Kalli had sold eight rupees four-annas worth of counterfeit four-anna and two-anna bits to one Gulzari Lal. Gulzari Lal has appeared in evidence and has corroborated the statement, and he further produced a box containing four anna and two anna bits which the treasurer, also a prosecution witness, declares to be counterfeit coin. The learned Magistrate also finds that they are counterfeit coin and that it is apparent to the eye. Bhairo Singh further deposes that on the day of the arrest Bhoja was given Rs. 3 by Vaina Ram accused to be taken to Shahzad (P. W. No. 2).

The Inspector deposes that Shahzad came to him on 31st of May and told him that there was a gang of coiners about the place who were making counterfeit four anna bits. That same day Shahzad showed him two counterfeit four anna pieces. According to Shahzad these had been obtained from Bhoja. The Inspector told Shahzad to get some more counterfeit coin and the Inspector and some constables went and waited on the 1st June morning at the shop of Shahzad who is a pan seller and who told the Inspector that the coiners would appear at his shop for the purpose of selling counterfeit coin. No coiner appeared and finally Shahzad went off to see what the matter was and returned with Bhoja and Bhairo Singh. On the person of Bhoja being searched Rs. 3 were found and these have been declared by the treasurer to be counterfeit coin. Bhairo Singh proceeded to make a statement which has already been related. The police then proceeded to Gulzari Lal's shop where they got counterfeit four anna pieces, etc., from him. The police then raided the house accompanied by some witnesses and Mt. Sohni and Vaina Ram were actually found making counterfeit coin, and mould together with some metal and other instruments for counterfeiting coin were found in their possession.

I see no reason to disbelieve this evidence against Vaina Ram and Mt. Sohni, and Vaina Ram admits a previous conviction under S. 232/235. I, therefore, consider the case against Vaina Ram and Mt. Sohni fully proved under S. 243, and it is also fully proved against Vaina Ram under S. 232/235. The sentences are by no means severe and I dismiss their appeals.

As regards Mt. Kalli the evidence of Bhairo Singh and of Gulzari Lal shows that she actually passed counterfeit coin and I do not consider that the sentence is severe in her case and I, therefore, dismiss her appeal also. She might have been convicted under S. 240, I. P. C. but the sentence is anyhow adequate.

Against Bhoja the evidence of the Inspector Nur Muhammad shows that he was in possession of Rs. 3 counterfeit coin. The evidence of Bhairo shows that he used to assist in making these counterfeit coins and, therefore, he knew that these coins were counterfeit and were to be passed on to Shahzad. I therefore, consider that he has been rightly convicted under S. 243. The learned Magistrate has refused to send him to a reformatory school though Bhoja gives his age as thirteen and the doctor who examined him states that his age is between fourteen and fifteen. The reason given by the learned Magistrate is that the statement of Bhoja shows that he is an habitual criminal and a liar. It is rather hard that a boy between thirteen and fifteen should be called a liar because he did not immediately proceed to confess his guilt and implicate his mother and his other relatives. That he is associated with habitual criminals is hardly his fault and I should think that this was a fit case for applying the provisions of the Punjab Borstal Act 11 of 1926. I, therefore, while maintaining the conviction, alter the sentence of three years rigorous imprisonment passed to one of three years detention under this Act in a Borstal institution. Otherwise the appeal is dismissed.

Broadway, J.—One Kalwa owned certain property in Delhi. In 1919 this property was partitioned at the instance of one Rupa, a grandson of Kalwa, who was entitled to a 1/5th share. The property, which consisted of certain buildings with a courtyard in the middle, was situate in a slight slope, the upper level being about 18 inches to 2 feet higher than the lower. Rupa was allotted the buildings and part of the courtyard which existed on the upper level. He sold his property to one Thakar Das in 1920. Thakar Das, however, lost this property as a result of a pre-emption suit brought by Lala Bala Pershad and others, and in August 1922 these pre-emptors as plaintiffs instituted a suit against the owners of the property on the lower level claiming an easement entitling them to discharge their rain-water and water for daily use through the courtyard of the defendants and an injunction prohibiting the defendants from interfering with this easement. It appears that a wall had been erected by the defendants across the courtyard which interfered with the flow of water, rain or for daily use, from the property of the plaintiffs. The trial Court decreed the plaintiffs' suit which was however dismissed by the learned District Judge on appeal. The plaintiffs thereupon came up to this Court in second appeal when Mr. Justice Dalip Singh maintained the order of the learned District Judge so far as the water for daily use was concerned but granted the plaintiffs a decree for an injunction restraining the defendants from preventing the rain-water from the plaintiffs' property passing into the courtyard of the defendants and discharging itself at a certain point X marked in the plan into the municipal drain. The defendants thereupon preferred an appeal under Cl. 10, Letters Patent, through Mr. Kishen Dayal. Mr. Jagan Nath Aggarval appeared for the plaintiffs-respondents.

Now the easement claimed by the plaintiffs was one of those, termed quasi easements and may be described as conveniences to which an owner subjects one part of his property for the benefit of another. Whenever such parts are separated by grant or devise on the part of the owner of what is called the quasi dominant heritage, these conveniences, in the absence of a stipulation to the contrary, are taken as easements by the grantee or devisee.

It was contended by Mr. Kishen Dayal that in this case it had not been shown that the easement claimed was an "apparent" one although he admitted that it was "continuous." He further contended that in order to make an easement "apparent" it was necessary that some drain or outlet should be visible either on the dominant or servient tenement, and that an easement could not be acquired for a flow of water over the surface of a servient tenement, without a definite channel for its carriage. This latter contention is however opposed to Munshi Missar v. Bhim Rajman (1).

It having been admitted that the right to drainage which has been decreed was a continuous easement the question for determination is whether it was an "apparent" one. Now having regard to the fact that before partition the entire property stood on a slope there can be no doubt that before partition all the rain-water which fell on the property was allowed to pass over the courtyard in its entirety and thence into the municipal drain through the outlet at point X referred to above. On partition, inasmuch as there was no stipulation to the contrary, I think it reasonable to hold that the person to whom the quasi dominant portion of the premises was allotted (in this case Rupa) was given the right to continue to drain his water on to the courtyard which still remained in possession of the defendants, and I agree in the view taken by the learned Sardha Ram, Bishen Narain and M. L. Puri—for Appellant.

G. C. Narang and C. Rai—for Respondent No. 1.

Dalip Singh, J.—These three appeals can be disposed of in one judgment as the facts of all three are similar. One Ganpat Rai had two sons, the elder Nathu and the younger son Ram Saran. Mohan Lal is the son of Ram Saran. It is conceded on both sides that Ganpat Rai and his two sons at one time formed a joint Hindu family. On 23rd March 1904, Ganpat Rai executed a will which is printed at p. 23 in First Appeal No. 756 of 1924 (Harjas Rai and Shiv Ram v. Ram Saran and others). In this wil Ganpat Rai stated that he was owner, and in possession of certain property, some of which was ancestral and some of which was self acquired. He also stated that his son Nathu was not a good character and was disobedient and, therefore, would not be able to keep the ancestral property intact or pay the debts due by Ganpat Rai and perform the death ceremonies according to Hindu law. Therefore, he made a will declaring that after his death his son Ram Saran would be entitled to the whole of the property left by him. Nathu was to get Rs. 1,000 in cash only. Ganpat Rai died on 29th November 1908 Nathu made the following alienations to Tara Singh :

1. Mortgage-deed dated 25th July 1909, for Rs. 4,500 with interest, of shops Nos. 5 and 6 shops Nos. 263 and 264.
2. Mortgage-deed dated 30th September 1909, for Rs. 2,000 with interest, of shops Nos. 8 and 9.
3. Mortgage-deed dated 6th October 1909, for Rs. 1,000 with interest of shop No. 10.
4. Mortgage-deed dated 26th November 1909, for Rs. 3,000 with interest of shops Nos. 332, 11 and 12.

All these mortgage-deeds were with possession.

The mortgagee Tara Singh brought a suit on the basis of these mortgage-deeds, The trial Court gave a decree for Rs. 37,840 and costs in favour of the plaintiff against Ram Saran, the decretal amount and costs to be recovered from the property of the deceased Nathu if he left any property. It dismissed the suit so far as the property mortgaged was concerned. Hakim Singh, the legal representative of Tara Singh, is the appellant in civil appeal No. 3040 of 1922 :

Nathu made the following alienations to Harjas Rai and Shiv Ram :

1. Mortgage-deed dated 25th October 1909, for Rs. 1,000 ; Rs. 750 with interest at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem and Rs. 250 without interest.
2. Mortgage-deed dated 5th January 1910, for Rs. 400 at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem.
3. Mortgage-deed dated 12th February 1910, for Rs. 4,000; Rs. 3,000 with interest at Re. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem and Rs. 1,000 without interest.
4. Mortgage-deed dated 12th February 1910, for Rs. 2,000 at Re. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem.

All these mortgages were with possession. Harjas Rai and Shiv Ram brought a suit on the basis of these mortgage-deeds. They were in possession of one shop only, namely 12 comprised in the mortgage-deed dated 25th October 1909. The trial Court gave them a decree for Rs 21,737 and costs against Ram Saran, defendant, as the legal representative of the deceased Nathu Ram, the amount to be realized from such property of the deceased Nathu Ram, as he may have left. It dismissed the suit so far as the mortgaged property was concerned. Harjas Rai and Shiv Ram are appellants in civil appeal No. 756 of 1924.

Ram Saran brought a suit for possession of the shop referred to above which was in the possession of Harjas Rai and Shiv Ram, alleging that they were his tenants. Shiv Ram pleaded that he was in possession as mortgagee. Ram Saran also asked for Rs. 180 as rent. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit about rent, holding that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant established, but it passed a decree for possession of the shop in dispute on the ground that the mortgage by Nathu to Shiv Ram was invalid. Shiv Ram is the appellant in civil appeal No. 1696 of 1926.

On 17th November 1909, Nathu Ram brought a declaratory suit against Ram Saran praying for a declaration to the effect that Nathu Ram was owner of, and entitled to, a half-share of the immovable property left by his father. Neither the plaint nor the pleas, nor the judgment of the trial Court in the suit is on any of the records in the present suit. The trial Court dismissed the suit on 2nd February 1910, holding, as conceded by both sides, that Nathu Ram was not in possession of any of the property and, therefore, could not bring a declaratory suit. Nathu appealed and the decision in the appeal is at p. 29 of the paper book in Civil Appeal No. 756 of 1924. The decision is based on a compromise which is printed at p. 18 of the same paper book. The decision is dated the 25th March 1912. By the compromise Nathu admitted that the will made by his father was valid, that he had received Rs. 1,000 left by his father for him under the will from Ram Saran and that Ram Saran was the sole owner of the entire property left by Nathu's father ; but Nathu was entitled to have for purposes of residence only two shops and a baithak situate in Jiwan Singhwala bazar and was further entitled to Rs. 20 per mensem as maintenance for life. The parties were to bear their own costs.

The first question to be decided in all these appeals is whether Nathu and Ram Saran continued to be joint until Nathu's death, which seems to have occurred some time before 7th October 1912, or whether Nathu and Ram Saran and Ganpat Rai ceased to be members of a joint Hindu family during the lifetime of Ganpat Rai, or whether Nathu and Ram Saran continued to be joint for some time after the death of Ganpat Rai but separated before the alienations by way of mortgage were made by Nathu.

So far as Tara Singh's case is concerned, the position is fairly clear. Counsel for the plaintiff in oral pleadings before issues printed at p. 36 of the paper book in civil appeal No. 3040 of 1922 pleaded that Nathu and Ram Saran were joint owners as members of a joint family in all the 21 shops after the death of Ganpat Rai, but before mortgaging the property Nathu had become separate from his brother, though the property remained joint. The counsel for the defendant Mohan Lal, son of Ram Saran, pleaded that Nathu was not joint with his brother at the time of mortgage either as a member of the joint Hindu family or as a co-owner in the property, because Ganpat Rai had disinherited him and the property was the self-acquired property of Ganpat Rai. There is no oral pleading by Ram Saran. However, on the evidence led in the case together with the admission of counsel for the defendant Mohan Lal, who in this matter may very well be presumed to represent the knowledge of Ram Saran as well as of Mohan Lal it is clear that at the time of the first mortgage Nathu and Ram Saran were not members of a joint Hindu family. It is clear, however, that, unless it be held that the will of Ganpat Rai was valid, Nathu and Ram Saran were co-owners or tenants-in-common of property left by their father. It has not been seriously contended before us, and indeed could not be contended, that Ganpat Rai's will was valid in its inception. A Hindu son, if he is a coparcener with his father, acquires by birth a right in the joint family property, and there is nothing whatever to show us that Ganpat Rai was entitled to exclude Nathu Ram from his right of survivorship without giving him a share by partition which admittedly was never done. Counsel for the respondent Ram Saran faintly argued that, though the will was invalid in its inception, yet it became good by the agreement made by Nathu Ram in the compromise deed dated 26th July 1911 ; but a will is not a voidable alienation which can be ratified or consented to, and if the will was invalid from the start it would remain invalid, though, of course, a person entitled to take property disposed of by the will may waive his right to take that property at any time.

We, therefore, hold that Nathu and Ram Saran were not members of a joint Hindu family at the date of the first mortgage to Tara Singh, namely 25th September 1909, but they were joint owners in equal shares of the property left by Ganpat Rai. The trial Court on this point had held that Nathu and Ram Saran had continued to be joint up to the date of Nathu's death, and, therefore, one coparcener could not dispose of his undivided interest in the coparcenary property by way of mortgage. On the finding that Nathu and Ram Saran continued to be joint this decision would be correct. It follows equally, however, that if Nathu and Ram Saran had separated after their father's death Nathu was competent to alienate his share of the property that he held in tenancy-in-common with his brother Ram Saran. As regards the reasons for our decision, we consider that, apart from the oral evidence and the pleadings, all the circumstances of the case tend to show that, after the death of their father Ganpat Rai, Nathu and Ram Saran ceased to have their meals in common or to reside in a common house, and it is equally clear that Ram Saran asserted a right under his father's will to be exclusive owner of the property. It is clear that when Nathu brought his suit declaring that he was entitled to a half share he regarded himself as owner of a specified share in the property. This could not be the case if he were still a member of the joint Hindu family, and we, therefore, consider, as held above, that the pleadings the evidence and the circumstances of the case show that there had been a disruption of the joint Hindu family some time after Ganpat Rai's death and before the first alienation in suit by Nathu which alienation itself is of a half share in certain properties.

The next question which was raised before us by counsel for the respondent is that the last alienation in Tara Singh's case, namely the mortgage dated 26th November 1909, was made pendente lite, the suit having been brought on 17th November 1909. In Harjas Rai's case all the alienations except the first, namely. the mortgage dated 25th October, 1909, were made pendente lite, and, therefore, as by the decree in the suit it was declared that Nathu had no title in this property, the alienees got no title whatsoever also. The following rulings have been cited in this connexion ; Bharat Ramanuj v. Surat Kamini (1) Annamalai v. Malayandi (2) and Pulla kal Kathur v. Chenna Jadam (3). Counsel for the appellants however cited Jhuna v. Zarachand (4), Raghubar Dayal v. Ghasite (5) and Tinoo Dhan v. Trailokya Saran (6).

The Full Bench ruling of the Madras High Court and the Calcutta ruling are in favour of the respondents. It is urged, however, by counsel for the appellants that the point as to lis pendens was never raised in the Court below and this is correct. He contends that had the point been raised he would have raised the plea of fraud and collusion. This plea was actually raised in Tara Singh's case, but was not put in issue specifically. No such plea was raised in Harjas Rai's case. Counsel further contended that on the record itself the fraud and collusion are apparent, and his contention on this point, put briefly, is as follows:

At the time of the compromise Nathu had only an equity of redemption in all the properties to which he might have been entitled on the death of his father. It, therefore, meant nothing whatever to him to acknowledge that he had no title in the property provided he got the money equivalent of his equity of redemption, and this, according to counsel, he got by getting Rs. 1,000 in cash and a right of residence in two shops and a baithak and Rs, 20 maintenance for life. There is nothing to show us that counsel is correct in his estimation of the monetary value of the equity of redemption, but it was not contended by the other side that this was incorrect. In fact counsel for the respondents contended that the fact that Nathu got good consideration for his compromise was proof of the bona fides of Nathu and the absence of fraud and collusion in the case. It is unnecessary to decide any of these points in Harjas Rai's case because we consider that the whole matter can be disposed of on another point raised by counsel for the respondents, namely, that the suit is barred by limitation. We have found, as already stated above, that Nathu and Ram Saran were no longer members of a joint Hindu family but were only co-owners of the joint property. It is clear that at least in November 1909 Ram Saran asserted an adverse title to the whole of the property to the knowledge of Nathu and thereupon Nathu brought his declaratory suit. Therefore, ever since 1909 it seems to us that Ram Saran has been holding the property, of which he is in possession, adversely to the claim of Nathu. Limitation, therefore, ran from that date The present suit in which Harjas Rai and Shiv Ram are appellants was brought on 10th February 1922, and is, therefore, barred by the rule of adverse possession. In the lower Court the article relied on appears to have been 127, Lim. Act, but the article applicable on the above reasoning is Art. 144 and, as all the mortgages were with possession, it is clear that the adverse possession of Ram Saran was adverse both to the mortgagor and the mottgagee and the suit is, therefore, barred. We therefore, dismiss the appeal of Harjas Rai and Shiv Ram with costs.

In the case in which Shib Ram is the appellant and Ram Saran was plaintiff, namely, civil appeal No. 1696 of 1926, it is clear from the findings given above that Nathu had a right to alienate his half share. The shop in dispute in that appeal formed part of the mortgage deed dated 25th October 1909, which was, therefore, ante litem. The point about lis pendens, therefore, does not arise. We, therefore, accept the appeal of Shib Ram in that case and dismiss the suit of Ram Saran with costs throughout.

Now, as regards Tara Singh's case: similarly his appeal would have to be accepted on the reasoning explained above qua the mortgages dated 25th July 1909 the 30th September, 1909, and 6th October 1909 for these are all ante litem. The question remains about the mortgage deed dated 6th November 1909. We consider that in the circumstances of the case we should allow the respondent to raise the point of lies pendens. It is obvious on the record and the fact that there may be a good defence to the point extraneous to the point itself, namely, fraud, or collusion on the part of Nathu and Ram Saran with respect to the compromise, would, in our opinion, in this case entitle the appellant only to a remand to lead evidence to prove his defence. We consider it unnecessary at present to decide the question of lis pendens and we remand the case accordingly framing an issue as follows:

Was the compromise dated 26th July 1911 entered into between Nathu Ram and Ram Saran as a result of fraud or collusion and is it therefore, not binding on the appellants.

Both parties will be entitled to lead evidence on this point, and the trial Court will record that evidence together with its finding on the point and will report it to this Court within a period of six months. The remand is under O. 41, R 25, Civil P. C.

First Appeal No. 2518 of 1925, Decided on 8th December 1927, from decree of 1st Class Sub-Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 4th July 1925.

Hindu Law—Maintenance—Husband willing to keep wife in his house but wife refusing—She is not entitled to separate maintenance.

A wife, who is voluntarily living apart from her husband for no improper motive, may at any time return to her husband and claim to be maintained by him, but she cannot be held to be entitled to separate maintenance when the husband is willing to keep her in his house and she refuses to accept his offer without sufficient justification: 31 Mad. 338, Ref. [P 503 C 2]

Moti Sagar and Badri Das — for Appellant.

Ghulam Mohi-ud-din and Ghulam Rasul—for Respondent.

Bhide, J.—The plaintiff, Mt. Sham Kaur, who is a wife of the defendant Sardar Sher Singh, sued in this case for maintenance at Rs. 200 per mensem.

According to the allegations in the plaint the plaintiff was married to the defendant some sixteen years before the suit and bore him a son two years later. The defendant had another wife who grew jealous as she had no male issue, and the defendant at her instance began to ill-treat the plaintiff. The plaintiff's son was murdered when he was about six years of age and the plaintiff suspected her co-wife to be responsible for the murder. After the death of the plaintiff's son she was subjected to even greater ill-treatment than before and was turned out of the house six months later. She began to live with her parents. Her father went several times with a panchayat to induce the defendant to give her maintenance and residence, but the defendant refused to do so and eventually the present suit was instituted.

The defendant denied the allegations and pleaded that the plaintiff was leading an immoral life and had left his house of her own accord. He expressed his willingness to take her back provided she led a chaste life. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge, who tried the suit, found that the allegation of unchastity was not proved and that the defendant had refused to keep the plaintiff in his house without any justification. A decree for Rs. 80 per mensem by way of maintenance was, therefore, passed in favour of the plaintiff. From this decision the defendant has appealed.

The plaintiff's own evidence shows that she herself left her husband's house after her son's death, probably on account of suspicions about the co-wife being responsible for the death of her son and consequent ill-treating towards her. There is no evidence to prove that she was actually ill-treated and turned out as alleged in the plaint. All that the plaintiff's witnesses have said is that the plaintiff left the defendant's house and that thereafter, the defendant refused to take her back, although her father approached him with a panchayat for the purpose several times.

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has found the defendant's evidence as regards the plaintiff's alleged unchastity to be valueless and that evidence has not been laid stress on before us. It was, however, argued that the plaintiff's evidence as regards the defendant having refused to take her back in his house is also worthless and in the circumstances the plaintiff having herself left her husband's house without any justification is not entitled to claim any maintenance. I think this contention is justified. I am not impressed by the evidence produced by the plaintiff as regards the attempts made to induce the defendant to take her back in his house. According to the plaintiff's father's own statement the defendant refused to admit her in his house when she was taken there only two months after she had left it after her son's death, and althougd she went again four or five times, the defendant refused to listen to him (vide Narain Singh's statement at p. 26 of the printed record). No explanation whatsoever has been offered as to why the present claim was delayed for some eight years. If the plaintiff was really willing to go to the defendant she might have been expected to take some prompt action. When the present suit was lodged by the plaintiff the defendant offered to take the plaintiff back into his house and maintain her, but she refused to do so except on certain conditions as regards being given a house and furniture of the same kind as her co-wife. During the pendency of this appeal also an offer was made by the defendant to take her back, but when he went to her village for the purpose the plaintiff failed to avail herself of the offer on a flimsy excuse. In the circumstances I find it difficult to believe that the plaintiff has been genuinely anxious to live with the defendant and that the defendant has refused to allow her to do so. It is true that a wife, who is voluntarily living apart from her husband for no improper motive, may at any time return to her husband and claim to be maintained by him; but she cannot be held to be entitled to separate maintenance as claimed in the case when the husband is willing to keep her in his house and she refuses to accept his offer without sufficient justification (cf. S. Bangaramma v. S. Brambaze (1) and Mayne's Hindu law and Usage, p. 651, 9th edn.

I would, therefore, accept this appeal and dismiss the suit but in view of all the circumstances of the case leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 2 of 1928, Decided on 26th March 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Lahore D/- 21st October 1927.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (1913), S. 3 (5)—Mortgaged property sold in execution of a decree is exempt from the right of pre-emption.

The object of the exemption in S. 3 (5) of the Act appears to be to exclude those sales which are not made voluntarily but by an order of the Court, as every person who chooses to buy the property has the opportunity of bidding for it in the latter case. Mortgaged property, as such, sold in execution of a decree is exempt from the right of pre-emption. [P 504 C 2]

Tirath Ram—for Appellant.

M. Obedullah and Balkrishen for Mohammad Hussain—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The sole point for decision in this second appeal is whether a sale of mortgaged property in execution of a decree is subject to the right of pre-emption. Both the Courts have held that such a sale is subject to the right of pre-emption and have decreed the plaintiff's suit. From this decision the vendee Imam Din has filed a second appeal.

The decision of the point turns on the question whether the sale can be said to have been made "in execution of a decree for money" (vide "definition of sale" in S. 3 (5), Punjab Pre-emption Act 1913) The learned District Judge has referred to certain rulings bearing on the interpretation of the words "decree for payment of money" occurring in S. 73, Civil P.C., and following the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Fazil Howladar v. Krishna Bandhoo (1) and Kartick Nath v. Juggernath (2) in preference to the view taken by the Madras High Court in Kommachi Kather v. Pakker (3) and Abdullah Sahib v. Oosman Sahib (4) has held that a mortgage decree is not a decree "for payment of money." The view taken by the Calcutta High Court in Fazil Howladar v. Krishna Bandhoo (1) was not followed by a single Bench Judge of the Punjab Chief Court in 121 P. L. R. 1908. The rulings of the Calcutta High Court relied upon by the learned District Judge appear to turn on the interpretation of the words "decree for payment of money" occurring in various section ot the Civil Procedure Code and on the scope of S. 73, Civil P. C. In the present instance the expression used is "decree for money" and it occurs not in the Civil Procedure Code but in a different enactment, namely, the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1913. The rulings relied on have thus no direct bearing on the interpretation of the expression "decree for money" as used in the latter enactment. No authority directly in point has been cited; but it seems to me that in the absence of any indication to the contrary the words "decree for money" occurring in S. 3 (5), Punjab Pre-emption Act, should be taken in their ordinary sense, i. e., any decree passed for satisfaction of a claim for money.

It appears that wording of the definition of sale in in the Punjab Pre-emption Act of 1905 was different. Sale was defined therein as follows :

"Sale" shall not include sales in execution of a decree or order of a civil, criminal or revenue Court or of a revonue officer.

This definition appears to have given rise to some difficulty and in Nawab v. Jawaya (5) on the wording of the definition a sale made in execution of a decree for specific performance of a contract was held to be not subject to the right of pre-emption. As a result any person could have easily defeated the rights of pre-emptors by first entering into a contract for sale and then obtaining a decree in a suit for specific performance of the same. It appears that the definition was amended in the Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1913 to avoid this result and the words "for money" were inserted after the word "decree." The object of the exemption in S. 3 (5), Punjab Pre-emption Act, 1913 appears to be to exclude those sales which are not made voluntarily but by an order of the Court, as every person who chooses to buy the property has the opportunity of bidding for it in the latter case. Bearing this in mind, there seems to be no good reason why mortgaged property which is sold in execution of a decree should not be exempt from the right of pre-emption.

In the present instance the original decree was for a sum of Rs. 839-5-6. It was directed by the decree that the sum should be paid by a certain date and in default of payment the house mortgaged was to be sold. It will thus appear that the decree was in reality for payment of the sum of money and could have been satisfied by payment on or before the specified date. There seems to be no good reason why the mere fact that the decree was to be satisfied by sale of the mortgaged property in the event of failure of payment by the specified date should change the character of the decree.

I am of opinion that the sale in the present instance falls within the scope of the exemption in S. 3 (5), Punjab Pre-emption Act. I accordingly accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

He can redeem the prior mortgagee in which case there will be no sale in the prior mortgagee's suit and if there is a sale, he can claim the balance of the sale proceeds after payment to the prior mortgagee, as both the second mortgagee and the mortgagor must be presumed to have obtained the value of their interests in the property out of the sale proceeds in the first sale. Ram Chand Manchanda—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts of the litigation which has given rise to this second appeal, are somewhat complicated and must be set out in some detail. One Harsu Ram was the owner of two shops which may be described as A and B. On 9th December 1911, he executed an unregistered deed of mortgage for Rs. 99 in respect of shop A in favour of Harjas Ram and Surta Ram. The mortgage was without possession and was to carry interest and compound interest at Re. 1 per cent per mensem. On 5th July 1912, Harsu Ram, mortgagor, executed a registered deed of mortgage in favour of one Tara Chand in respect of the shop A and one-half of the shop B. This mortgage was also without possession and was to carry interest at Re. 0-11-6 per cent. per mensem.

On 6th July 1918, Tara Chand, the mortgagee under the second mortgage dated 5th July 1912, instituted a suit against Harsu Ram, mortgagor for recovery of Rs. 926-8-0, the amount due to him on foot of the mortgage. In this suit he did not implead Harjas Ram and Surta Ram, the mortgagees under the first deed. On 27th November 1919 a preliminary decree was passed in favour of Tara Chand for Rs. 695 payable in two months and it was ordered that on failure of the mortgagor to pay the aforesaid sum within the specified period both the mortgaged properties A and one-half of B should be sold. Nothing having been paid Tara Chand, mortgagee decree-holder, applied for the final decree being passed in his favour and this was done on 14th July 1921. As already pointed out Harjas Ram and Surta Ram, the mortgagees under the unregistered deed of 9th December 1911, were not parties to these proceedings.

A few months later but before Tara Chand, decree-holder had taken any steps to bring these properties to sale Harjas Ram and Surta Ram, the mortgagees under the first deed of mortgage dated 9th December 1911, instituted a suit against Harsu Ram, mortgagor, for recovery of Rs. 320 due to them on foot of the aforesaid mortgage. To this suit Tara Chand, the puisne mortgagee, was made a party. He, however, did not file any written statement. A preliminary decree in favour of Harjas Ram and Surta Ram was passed on 23rd May 1922. Nothing having been paid within the prescribed period proceedings were taken by Harjas Ram and Surta Ram to have this decree made final and Tara Chand was made a party to these proceedings also. This time he appeared and filed an application on 26th March 1923, urging that the unregistered mortgage-deed set up by Harjas Ram and Surta Ram was fictitious and was not binding on him. He did not, however, pursue this application, and on 7th April 1923, a final decree was passed in favour of Harjas Ram and Surta Ram for recovery of Rs. 320 plus costs recoverable by sale of shop A. In the meantime Tara Chand who had, as already stated, obtained a final decree in his favour on 14th July 1921, for sale of properties A and one-half of B., took out proceedings to sell these properties. The sale was accordingly held on 21st April 1923, when both properties A and one-half of B were purchased by Ramji Das and Wishan Das. This sale was confirmed on 28th April 1924, and the purchasers, having obtained a sale-certificate on 8th May 1924, were put in possession of both the shops.

Harjas Ram and Surta Ram who had obtained a final decree for sale of property A on 7th April 1923, started proceedings to sell it. This sale was held on 12th December 1924, and the property A was sold to Harjas Ram and Surta Ram, the decree-holders, themselves. The sale was confirmed on 16th January 1925 and a sale-certificate granted on 23rd January 1925. Thereupon the purchasers Harjas Ram and Surta Ram tried to obtain possession of this shop A, but they were resisted by Ramji Das and Wishan Das, purchasers under the sale of 28th April 1924, who, as stated above, had already obtained possession. On 7th May 1926, the plaintiffs Harjas Ram and Surta Ram accordingly instituted the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen, claiming possession of shop A. Their suit was decreed by the Sub-Judge who held that in this dispute between the rival auction-purchasers the Court has to be guided by priority in the dates of the mortgages to enforce which the auction sales were respectively held. The defendants appealed to the District Judge who affirmed the decree in favour of the plaintiffs in so far as it granted them possession of the shop, but added a rider that the plaintiffs shall retain possession not as owners but only as prior mortgagees and that the defendants shall be entitled to redeem the shop from them if so advised.

The defendants Ramji Das and Wishan Das have preferred a second appeal to this Court and pray for dismissal of the plaintiffs' suit in its entirety. Their counsel, Mr. J. L. Kapur, urges that the determining factor in settling the relative rights of purchasers at separate auction sales held in execution of decrees obtained on different mortgages is not priority in the dates of the mortgages but priority in the dates of the auction sales, and as in this case the defendants held possession under the earlier sale they cannot be ousted by the plaintiffs who purchased subsequently even though in execution of a decree based on a mortgage which was of a prior date. In support of his contention the learned counsel relies upon two decisions of the Calcutta High Court in Nanak v. Teluckdye (1) and Dirgopal v. Bulakee (2). Both those rulings are, however, clearly distinguishable from the present case as in none of them had the puisne mortgagee been made a party to the suit which had been instituted by the prior mortgagee to enforce his mortgage. In each of these cases, separate suits had been instituted by each mortgagee against the mortgagor alone to enforce the mortgage in his own favour, the other mortgagee not having been impleaded at all. The facts in Akalti Moidin v. Chirayil (3) were also similar. But here we find that in the suit instituted by the prior mortgagee Harjas Ram and Surta Ram, the puisne mortgagee Tara Chand was made a party and, therefore, he is clearly bound by the result of that suit. I am, therefore, of opinion that the rule enunciated in these rulings is inapplicable to the present case.

Under the explanation to R. 1, O. 34, a puisne mortgagee can sue for sale without making the prior mortgagee a party, but it is settled law that a decree so obtained by him does not in any way affect the rights of the prior mortgagee and in a sale held in execution of such a decree the property shall be presumed to have been sold subject to the rights of the prior mortgagee. As pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the well-known case of Radha Kishen v. Khurshaid Hussain (4) the property in such cases can only be sold subject to the rights of the prior mortgagee "who had a paramount claim outside the controversy of the suit," and, therefore, his rights are in no way affected. If, therefore, nothing further had happened, the equity of redemption in the property would, on the sale in execution of Tara Chand's decree, have vested in the purchasers Ramji Das and Wishan Das, but they would have been bound to redeem the prior mortgage in favour of Harjas Ram and Surta Ram, plaintiffs.

(1) [1880] 5 Cal. 265=4 C. L. R. 358.
(2) [1880] 5 Cal. 269.
(3) [1903] 26 Mad. 486.

But before the sale in execution of the aforesaid decree (obtained by Tara Chand, puisne mortgagee) was held the prior mortgagees (plaintiffs) instituted a suit to enforce their mortgage impleading Tara Chand as a defendant. As already pointed out, a final decree in this suit was passed before the sale in execution of Tara Chand's decree could be held and there is the additional fact found by the learned District Judge that the defendants (the auction-purchasers in Tara Chand's decree) bought with full knowledge of the mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs. These facts alter the situation materially and render the sale in execution of Tara Chand's decree ineffectual against the plaintiffs In these circumstances Tara Chand is bound by the sale in execution of the plaintiff's decree as he was a party to that decree. and so are the defendants who stand in Tara Chand's shoes. The question has been considered at length in Chinnu Pillai v. Venkatasam Chettiar (5) in which the rights and liabilities of auction purchasers in execution of decrees obtained on several mortgages are examined in detail and conclusions recorded at pp. 91 and 92. The present case falls within Cl. (5) where it is stated that > if the second mortgagee sues first without making the first mortgagee a party, the first mortgagee can, while the first suit is pending, sue for sale making the second mortgagee and the mortgagor a party in which case there can be no sale in the first suit, and if there has been a sale pending the first mortgagee's suit, the purchaser will be affected by lis pendens. He can redeem the first mortgagee in which case there will be no sale in the first mortgagee's suit or if there is a sale, can claim the balance of the sale proceeds after payment to the first mortgagee, as both the second mortgagee and the mortgagor must be presumed to have obtained the value of their interests in the property out of the sale proceeds in the first sale. In this case, the purchaser under the second sale gets the property and is entitled to possession against the first purchaser.

The question is also elaborately discussed in a recent judgment of the Allahabad High Court in Lachhmi Narain v. Hriday Narain (6) though the facts in that case were somewhat different. I must, therefore, hold that the sale in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents, though of a subsequent date, has, in the peculiar circumstances of this case, priority over the sale in favour of the defendant-appellants, and the correct legal position is that the title in the shop in question has passed to the plaintiffs. As, however, no appeal or cross-objections have been preferred by the plaintiffs-respondents Harjas Ram and Surta Ram for deleting the rider added by the learned District Judge, I cannot grant them this relief. The decree in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents must, therefore, stand in the terms in which it was passed. Accordingly I dismiss the appeal, but having regard to all the circumstances of the case I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Criminal Appeal No. 410 of 1927, Decided on 7th December 1927, from order of Sess. Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 28th March 1927.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 154—First information report can be used in evidence to corroborate or contradict maker thereof but not to contradict other witnesses.

First information report is not substantive evidence and can only be properly used to corroborate or contradict the maker thereof. It cannot be used to contradict numerous other witnesses who are unanimous on a particular fact : A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 17, Ref. to.[P 509 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 162—Police Diary—Only its contents and not what Police officer stated that witness said or did not say can be used to contradict a witness — Evidence Act, S. 45.

It is only what is written in the police diaries that can be used under S. 145, Evidence Act, to contradict the witness, and what the Police officer stated that a witness said or did not say, is inadmissible. The way to prove those portions of the written statement of a witness which have been specifically put to him in order to contradict him is for the accused to mark the passage or passages in the copy from the police diaries given to him and then to ask the writer of the statement to say that it is a true copy : *A. (c) Criminal P. C., S. 439—Accused tried for lesser as well as for graver offence but convicted for lesser offence—High Court can alter conviction to the graver offence—High Court will enhance sentence only when sentence is grossly inadequate.

Where the accused is tried under Ss. 302 and 325 but convicted only under S. 325 High Court can alter the conviction to one under S. 302. High Court can also enhance the sentences without altering the convictions but this is not done usually but only when the sentences are grossly inadequate. [P 509 C 2]

Bhagat Ram Puri—for Appellants.

Sunder Das for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Addison, J.—Dharam Singh and his three sons, Bighwan Singh, Sawan Singh and Mangal Singh, were tried for the murder of Budkan and for causing grievous hurt to his elder son Labhu on 5th November 1926, i. e., the Dewali day, under Ss. 302 and 325, I. P. C., respectively. Sawan Singh has been convicted under the second part of S. 304 and under S. 325 read with S. 34, I. P. C., and sentenced to seven years' and one year's rigorous imprisonment in respect of the offences charged against him. The other three have been sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment each under S. 325 read with S. 34. I. P. C., in connexion with the first offence and under the same sections to one year's rigorous imprisonment each in connexion with the second offence. They have appealed while the son of the deceased has preferred a revision petition to the effect that all should have been convicted of murder under S. 302, I. P. C., and that, in any case, the sentence should be substantially enhanced.

The four assessors were of opinion that the appellants were guilty of the murder of Budkan. They accepted the prosecution story in its entirety. As regards motive, the learned Sessions Judge found that it had been established, quarrels having commenced between the two families for years before, which continued upto the day in question when there was a dispute over the trespass of a calf and a quarrel that very evening between Kalu, the younger son of the deceased, and Harnama on the one side and Sawan Singh appellant on the other owing to Sawan Singh extinguishing Harnama's lighted candle (it was Dewali night) in attempting to light his own candle at it. The Sessions Judge, however, thought that the two quarrels of that day were not serious enough for the appellants, as a result thereof, to have intended to murder the deceased or to cause such bodily injury as they knew to be likely to cause death.

On the facts the learned Sessions Judge held it established by the evidence that when the deceased went to get water about 7-30 p. m., he was seen by Sawan Singh, appellant, and that the appellants waited for him in their doorway till his return with the bucket when they attacked him with lathis. The first severe blow was struck by Sawan Singh who had quarrelled that evening with Kalu. Labhu, the elder son of the deceased was at once called by Sajada, P. W. No. 3, servant of the deceased, and he, too, was severely beaten when he intervened. Mt. Bishni, wife of the deceased, also arrived and received an injury. Then Kalu, the youger son, came and Sawan Singh, appellant, struck at him but the blow was warded off and Kalu in self defence severely injured Sawan Singh's nose with a lathi with an iron band at one end.

The learned Sessions Judge further held that the defence raised by Sawan Singh and Mongal Singh was false. Their case was that Sawan Singh was attacked by Kalu and Harnama after the quarrel over the candle and that in the course of that fight Labhu arrived with an axe, whereupon Mangal Singh, appellant, came to help his brother and the deceased also arrived, received a blow from a lathi and fell down on a peg. He also rejected the alibis of the other two appellants. No evidence was called for the defence by any of the appellants.

On these findings the Sessions Judge held that the common intention was to beat the deceased and Labhu, when the latter arrived, and not to murder the deceased; that Sawan Singh knew that the blow he inflicted was likely to cause death and he, therefore, was guilty under the second part of S. 304, while the other knew that the aged deceased was likely to suffer grievous hurt from the lathi blows given and were guilty under S. 325 read with S. 34. He further held all the appellants guilty under S. 325 read with S. 34 of causing grievous hurt to Labhu, who suffered from severe concussion of the brain and did not recover consciousness for ten days and whole life was in danger.

We have been taken very carefully through all the evidence by the learned counsel, appearing for the appellants, and I can see no reason to disagree with the main findings of the learned Sessions Judge. It is not necessary to recapitulate all the reasons he has given for accepting the evidence for the prosecution. The Civil Surgeon was in favour of the prosecution story that three, possibly four, blows were struck on the head of the deceased, though he admitted the possibility that they were fewer. There is no reason to disbelieve the testimony of Sajada and Sarwan, or even of Thakar Singh, whose name was not given in the first information report. This document is not substantive evidence and can only be properly used to corroborate or contradict the maker thereof. It cannot be used to contradict numerous other witneces who are unanimous that Thakar Singh was there : see Emperor v. Ibrahim (1). Thakar Singh's evidence is consistent and the fact that he lives in the ihta of Jiwan, the father of Harnama, who is a friend of Kalu, or that he stated at the trial that he had gone to the bazar to buy sweets while he did not say so in his statement to the police. was not a proper reason for rejecting his testimony. It cannot be said that there was any contradiction in the two statements. Dharam Singh and Bhagwan Singh, appellants, had no injuries. It is not likely that they would have had injuries as the four appellants attacked one man at a time and it was only when Kalu arrived that any injuries were caused to them. A small abrasion on the shoulder of Mangal Singh, appellant, might have been due to other reasons and there is no evidence that he was struck by any one. Sawan Singh, however, was struck by Kalu who reported the occurrence. Though he was not an eyewitness of the attacks on his father and brother, the report he made was on the whole in accordance with the present story except that it, as usual, omited the fact that he retaliated and assaulted Sawan Singh. In these circumstances I would hold that the appellants are certainly guilty of the offences of which they have been convicted.

The revision petition has been put in by a private person and not by the Crown. It must, therefore, be taken that the Crown is satisfied with the decision of the learned Sessions Judge. It is well recognized that this Court will only interfere in revision for exceptional reasons, and all the more so when the petition is by a private person. There is no doubt that we could interfere and alter the convictions to murder under S. 302, I. P. C., vide Bhola v. Emperor (2), Kampam Bali Reddy v. Emperor (3) and Fazal Khan v. Emperor (4) while we could also enhance the sentences without altering the convictions though this is not done usually but only when they are grossly inadequate. In the present case, in my judgment, the immediate exciting causes of the attack, combined with the previous enmity, were sufficient to inflame to a considerable extent the passions of persons belonging to the class of the appellants. Further, the evidence probably establishes that the appellants had the knowledge that their attack upon the aged deceased with lathi was likely to cause his death. I am not, however, prepared to alter the convictions of the three appellants, who were not convicted under S. 304, for the reason that the sentence awarded are substantial though inadequate, and this, therefore, is not a proper case for interfering in revision.

In conclusion I would draw the attention of the learned Sessions Judge to Bahadur Singh v. Emperor (5) and Labh Singh v. Emperor (6) as they explain the provisions of S. 162, Criminal P, C., which he does not seem properly to

It is only what is written in the police diaries that can be used under S. 145, Evidence Act, to contradict the witness, and what the Sub-Inspector of Police stated that a witness said or did not say is inadmissible. The way to prove those portions of the written statement of a witness which have been specifically put to him in order to contradict him is for the accused to mark the passage or passages in the copy from the police diaries given to him and then to ask the writer of the statement to say that it is a true copy. For the reasons given above, I would dismiss the appeal and the revision.

* * (a) Criminal P. C., S. 476—Complaint can be made against person though he is not a party to the proceedings.

The presiding officer of a Court can make a complaint not only against persons who are parties to proceedings before him but also against persons who are not parties.

Every person including the presiding officer of a Court has power to make a complaint as a rule. It is only when that general power is taken away by statute that a complaint becomes incompetent unless made by the only authority allowed to do so. There being nothing in S. 476 to the effect that the presiding officer of a Court cannot make a complaint against a person who is not a party, it follows that the general power of the presiding officer to make a complaint is not taken away by implication, because he is the only person who can make a complaint against a party in certain circumstances : *A. C. H. Carden Noad—for the Crown.

B. R. Puri and Har Prasad—for Respondents.

Addison, J.—Bal Mukand of Ramnagar was convicted under S. 465 and Bal Mukand of Kot Harazaka Ullah, Ahlmad of the Court of Lala Hukam Chand, Magistrate 1st Class, were convicted under S. 465/114, I. P. C., by a Magistrate of the 1st Class. Each was sentenced to 18 months rigorous imprisonment. On appeal to the Sessions Judge they were acquitted and against their acquittal the Crown has preferred this appeal.

Mt. Jiwan Devi had instituted a complaint in the Court of Lala Hukam Chand, Magistrate 1st Class, under S. 465/471. I. P. C., against Balmokand of Kot Hara and certain other persons. It was alleged in the complaint that a will which had been produced by Balmokand of Kot Hara before the revenue authorities was forged document. It purported to be the will of one Damodar Mal. In order to see if the thumb-mark on the will was that of Damodar Mal, Lala Hukam Chand had sent for the record of a civil suit as the plaint in it bore the thumb-marks as well as the signature of Damodar Mal. The criminal case was adjourned on 17th July 1926 after the statement of one witness had been recorded. The Magistrate went on leave from the 1st to the 12th August 1926. On 6th August his reader was also on leave. On that day at about 2 p. m. Balmokand of Kot Hara, who was an accused in the case, and Balmokand of Ramnagar, who was not a party are alleged to have gone to Zaka Ullah, the Ahlmad of the Magistrate, and obtained the record of the civil suit from him. The Police Naib Court Inspector saw the two Balmokands with the record and told the clerks of Mt. Jiwan Devi's counsel about it. These clerks and another person ran to the Court-room and it is alleged that they saw Balmokand of Ramnagar trying to rub out the thumb-mark upon the plaint of the civil suit. On their arrival the Ahlmad snatched the record from this Balmukand, in this way tearing the paper a little at the place where Damodar Mal's thumb-mark was. The clerks told the counsel about it. He saw the record on 9th August. When the Magistrate returned on 12th August a formal application was put in by Mt. Jiwan Devi reporting what is alleged to have occurred. The Magistrate held an enquiry and on 17th August 1926 signed a complaint against the two Balmukands and Zakaullah under S. 477, I. P. C. The complaint was sent by the District Magistrate for trial to another Magistrate who convicted them as already stated. It is clear that the Magistrate made a clerical mistake in writing 477, I. P. C., in the complaint. It seems that for the moment he forgot that it was a plaint which had been tampered with and not a will. The case before him was about a will and that is how by inadvertence he wrote S. 477. The complaint, however, gave all the facts, and those facts, if correct, amounted to a complaint under S. 465, I. P. C. The learned Sessions Judge has not accepted the appeal on the merits but on the ground that the Magistrate had no power under S. 476, Criminal P. C., to institute a complaint against persons who were not parties to the proceedings before him, It was held that it was a good complaint as against Balmukand of Kot Hara who was an accused in the case before him, but that as he was tried along with two other persons who could not be tried on the Magistrate's complaint, the whole trial was illegal.

It follows from S. 4 (g) and S. 190, Criminal P. C., that the general rule is that any person can set the law in motion by a complaint. Certain exceptions are however created by statute, for example, Ss. 195 and 198, Criminal P. C., offences about the stamp laws, lotteries, etc. The case for the Crown is that Ss. 195 and 476, Criminal P. C., are sections, limiting and confining the general rule that any person can prefer a complaint. Thus, if an offence has been committed by a party which falls under S. 195 (1) (c), Criminal P. C., no Court can take cognizance of it except upon the complaint of the Court in which the document was produced or given in evidence. The case for the Crown is that the Magistrate can make a complaint in the same way as any other individual and that in certain cases a complaint can only be made by a particular Magistrate or Court. Thus, in the present case the Magistrate who made the complaint was the only person competent to make a complaint as against Balmukand of Kot Hara under the limiting S. 195, Criminal P. C., while under the general law he had power to include the two other persons alleged to be concerned in the offence as there was nothing to limit the general rule in their case.

Sections 195 and 476, Criminal P. C., were considerably altered in 1923. Under the old S. 195 it was competent for certain public servants and Courts to give sanction to a private person to prefer complaints of a particular kind, which could not be made without such sanction. For example. had the old Code been in existence when this case was started Mt. Jivan Devi could have applied for sanction to the Magistrate as against Balmukand of Kot Hara and then have instituted a complaint against him and the other two persons. Under the new Code, however, sanction has been done away with and the complaint must in these cases be by the Court. Again under the old S. 195 the Court itself could prefer a complaint. Lastly, under the old S. 476, the Court, after making any enquiry that might be necessary, could send the case for enquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate along with the accused. In such a case no complaint or sanction was necessary. Now, under the new S. 195 (1) (c), the complaint must always be by the Court in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed by a party to any 'proceeding in any Court in respect of any document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding, while under the new S. 476 the Court can either of its own motion, or on application made to it in this behalf, make a complaint about any offence referred to in S. 195 (1) (b) and (c). Nowhere in the Code is it said that the Magistrate or the presiding officer of a civil Court cannot take action against persons who are not parties to the proceedings before him in respect of the offences mentioned in S. 195, and if there is any such restriction it is only there by implication. Bhag Singh v. The Crown (A. I. R. 1922, Lah 401) was referred to by the Sessions Judge. That was a case under the old Code. It was held in it that a Court could not give sanction to prosecute a person not a party to a particular proceeding under the old S. 195. That case, however, is not in point as the complaint lay against such persons without any sanction. Under the old S. 476, Criminal P. C., it was held by the Madras High Court in Govinda Iyer v. Rex (1), that proceedings under it could not be taken against a person who was neither a party nor a witness in a suit in respect of abetment of forgery of a document exhibited in the suit on the ground that the words "any offence referred to in S. 195" in the old S. 476 incorporate the conditions laid down by S. 195 as to the offence being alleged to have been committed by a party, and a Court could take action under S. 476 only under such conditions. This view, however, was not held by all the High Courts. The Court of the Oudh Judicial Commissioners held in Ejaz Ali Khan v. Emperor (2) that an order under the old S. 476 for prosecution for an offence under S. 465, I. P. C., could be passed also against a person who was not a party to the civil suit. Govinda Iyer v. Rex (1) was not followed. In Emperor v. Ganga Ram (3) the Allahabad High Court took the same view as the Court of the Oudh Judicial Commissioner. Jadu Nandan Singh v. Emperor (4) was dissented from in it. The matter is also mentioned in the last paragraph at p.310 of the report [43 Bom.: Emperor v. Waman Dinkar (5)] where it is said:

> Then as to the words "offence" in S. 476: of course where you have an offence, you must have an offender though you may not know who the offender is. But it seems to me that the section not only intends to, but it is expressly worded so that it may, confer on a Court the power to inquire into a case and to take action, whoever may prove to be the offender, although months or even years may elapse before it becomes known with any degree of certainty who the offenders are.

In Rajkumar Singh v. Emperor (6), the Patna High Court also held that the old S. 476, Criminal P.C., did not restrict the action of the Court to offences committed within its own jurisdiction. It was said that S. 476 was a self-contained section and the reference made to S. 195 was only for the purpose of avoiding the enumeration of the sections mentioned in S. 195. It follows from this that the Court could proceed against persons not parties to the proceedings before it.

The cases principally relied upon by the learned Sessions Judge were C. T. Guruswamy v. D. K. S. Ebrahim (7), and Maung Shew Pha v. Ma Me Hmoke (8), where it was held that it is not open to a Court to make a complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C., in respect of any person other than persons who are parties to the proceedings before it. In those two cases appeals had been preferred against the order of the Court directing the prosecution of certain persons. At p. 380 of the first report it is said :

> As no complaint by the Court is necessary in respect of Abdul Rahman or Guruswamy before the Magistrate can hold an enquiry or trial against them, it appears to me that it is not open to the Court, and it was not intended that the Court should lay a complaint covering them, as they were not parties to the proceedings before it. On this ground in my opinion the appeal must succeed.

Again at p. 281 it is said :

> Section 476 gives the Court power with respect to any offence referred to in S. 195.

With very great respect it appears to me that this is the wrong way to look at the matter. Every person including the presiding officer of a Court has power to make a complaint as a rule. It is only when that general power is taken away by statute that a complaint becomes incompetent unless made by the only authority allowed to do so. There is nothing in S 476 to the effect that the presiding officer of a Court cannot make a complaint against a person who is not a party, and it seems to me that the general power of the presiding officer is not taken away by implication because he is the only person who can make a complaint against a party in certain circumstances.

rulings referred to above : see Emperor v. Rahimdino (A. I. R. 1928 Sind 69). It was admitted by the Judges who decided that case that the view they took was attended with inconvenient consequences. They pointed out that it was obviously desirable that where a party to a proceeding in a Court has committed an offence and the offence has been abetted by persons who are not parties, all the persons concerned in the offence should be tried and not only those who are parties to the proceedings in which the offence was committed.

If the view of the Rangoon Court and the Sind Court is correct that by implication it must be held that the legislature did not intend that the Court should exercise the powers conferred by S. 476, with regard to offences referred to in S. 195 (1) (c) unless they are committed by parties to proceedings in such Courts, it is obvious that the result will be most inconvenient. Of course it would be possible for a private complainant to make a complaint against the persons who are not parties while the Court could make a complaint against the party, but in that way there would be the anomalous state of affairs that two different cases about the same transaction would have to be heard at the same time. It is true that the Magistrate to whom the complaint of the Court goes might be able on reading the complaint to take cognizance, under S. 190 (1) (c), Criminal P. C., of the offence against the persons who were not parties, but in that case the accused would have the option of asking that the case should be sent to another Magistrate. It seems to me that unless the legislature has specifically enacted that Courts should not take action against persons who are not parties, though they alone can take action against parties, it would not be proper to read such an intention into the Act especially as it gives rise to such inconvenient consequences. I am unable to discover anything in the Act definitely forbidding the presiding officer of a Court to make a complaint about an offence committed in connexion with a document produced in his Court when the person complained of is not a party, All that has been enacted is that he alone can do so if the alleged offender is a party to the proceeding. I am, therefore, unable to hold that the Magistrate, First Class, in whose Court the offence complained of is alleged to have taken place, was only competent to make a complaint against the person who was accused in the criminal case before him. In my judgment he could make the complaint not only against him but against the two other persons alleged to have been concerned in the same offence.

I do not think that the new proviso to S. 252 goes to show that the Magistrate can only proceed against a person who was a party before him. Under S. 252 when an accused person appears before a Magistrate he shall proceed to hear the complainant and take the prosecution evidence. The new proviso is that the Magistrate shall not be bound to hear any person as complainant in any case in which the complaint has been made by a Court, but he can do so if he considers it desirable In the present case, however, the Magistrate was examined as a witness though he knew nothing personally as to what had occurred as he was not present at the time of the alleged offence. The two persons who were not parties were therefore not prejudiced as the Magistrate was examined as a witness.

The learned counsel who appeared for respondent 1 admitted that S. 195 was a limiting section providing an exception to the general rule that anyone could make a complaint of a criminal offence. His argument in the main was that when the Magistrate acted as a Court by holding an enquiry he could only proceed against persons who were parties to the proceedings before him and that the Crown could not be allowed to take up the position that as regards the other persons the Magistrate acted as one of the general public. He admitted that the complaint in the present case would have been legal if the Magistrate had held no enquiry under S. 476. I have already discussed this question in detail and it is sufficient to add that in my judgment the Magistrate had power to make the complaint against all the persons alleged to have taken part in the offence regarding the document produced in his Court.

The fact that the Magistrate in his complaint by mistake wrote S. 477 instead of S. 465, Indian Penal Code, does not make the complaint illegal in any way. The essence of the complaint

[see Mt. Naurati v. Emperor (9)], is the statement of the facts relied upon as constituting the offence. It is sufficient that the complainant shall state the true facts in his own language, and it is for the Magistrate to apply the law to those facts. It might be added that it is clear that S. 477 is a clerical mistake as that section does not fall within S. 195, Criminal P. C.

I would, therefore, hold that the complaint made by the Magistrate against all three persons was legal and that the learned Sessions Judge erred in acquitting the three respondents on the ground that there was not a legal complaint against them. As the Sessions Judge has not gone into the merits I would accept the appeal of the Crown, set aside the order of acquittal passed by the Sessions Judge on the ground that the complaint was illegal, and remand the case to him to decide the appeal of the three respondents on the merits.

Administrator-General's Act (3 of 1913), S. 25 —High Court should not advise on disputed points of law and fact.

The High Court should not advise on disputed points of law and fact under S. 28 but only on such questions as advancement, management, change of investments, etc. of the estate in charge of the Administrator: 7 Bom. 381; 12 Bom. 638; and 18 Mad. 443; Ref. [P 514 C 2]

Order.—One Bishen Das died leaving him surviving a widow, Mt. Tara Devi, a daughter by that widow, and also two sons by a predeceased wife. The executors of the will took out probate but later the administration of his estate was transferred to the Administrator-General. One of the sons has now moved this Court under S. 28, Administrator General's Act, to give to the Administrator-General special directions on three points. Notice was served on ths widow and she also asked that he should be given special directions on another point in case this Court was prepared to give directions.

Under the will one house was to go to the sons and the other to the widow. The widow is in possession of the Lahore house and the Administrator-General of the Gorakhpur house. According to the son the Lahore house is ancestral, and his case is that as the two sons and their father constituted a joint Hindu family at the time of the father's death, the father had no power of disposition by will with respect to the Lahore house. It is claimed, therefore, that the Administrator-General should be directed to make over this house to the sons. It is not admitted by the widow that the Lahore house is ancestral. Obviously under S. 28 this Court can give no directions in this matter. The question is one of evidence and is a difficult one. It involves questions which seriously affect the rights of the parties under the will. This Court in my judgment should not advise on disputed points of law and fact under S. 28 of the Act but only on such questions as advancement, management, change of investments, etc. In this connexion Samuel Marie Sreretun, In re (1), Lakshmibai, In re (2) and Madras Doveton Trust Fund, In the matter of (3), might be referred to. In these circumstances I refuse to give directions to the Administrator-General on this point. In my judgment it is a matter which should be decided by a suit.

Under the will all the ornaments were to go to the surviving widow, except two pairs of karas, two chains and some rings, which were to go to the sons. The son has asked that the Administrator-General should be directed to recover from the widow the few ornaments bequeathed to the sons and hand them over to them. The widow, however, has stated that all the ornaments, including those bequeathed to the sons, were lost in a railway accident and that, therefore, she was unable to hand over to the sons those few ornaments which were bequeathed to them. The value of those ornaments is in dispute. The widow is unable to recover from the railway the value of the ornaments lost. In these circumstances in my judgment this matter also ought to be decided by a regular suit. It would appear that the sons would have to claim and prove the value of the ornaments, while the question would also arise whether the widow was liable to make good the loss in the circumstances described. This also is not an easy matter and is not one as to which I am prepared to give directions under S. 28, Administrator-General's Act.

The third request made by the son is that the Administrator-General should be directed to hand over to the son the furniture in the Lahore house. Under the will this furniture was to go to the widow. There is, therefore, nothing in this request. Similarly, I am not prepared to give any directions in the case of the widow's petition. For the reasons given I reject both the petitions.

Judgment. — This is a petition for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, holding that the appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, Tarn Taran, dated 8th April 1927, lay to the District Judge and not to him, as the suit was not of a small cause nature but was an unclassed one, the value of which was over Rs. 100.

The relevant facts are these : Balwant Singh, defendant 1, and Bur Singh, defendant 2, sold certain ornaments for Rs. 140 to Bishen Singh, plaintiff. About two months later it was discovered that these ornaments really belonged to Mangal Singh, defendant 3, and Sikatar Singh, defendant 4, and they had been stolen from their house in a dacoity. Bur Singh, Balwant Singh and a number of other persons were suspected of having committed the dacoity and were proceeded against by the police. They were convicted and sentenced. Some time after their conviction by the Sessions Judge of Amritsar, an application was presented to him by Mangal Singh and Sikatar Singh (the persons at whose house the dacoity was committed) that the ornaments which had been seized by the police during the investigation from Bishen Singh and about Rs. 600 in cash which had been taken from the dacoits might be made over to them. The Sessions Judge directed that the ornaments and the cash might be made over to the Police, who subsequently made them over to Sikatar Singh and Mangal Singh.

Bishen Singh, who had purchased the ornaments, instituted the present suit to recover Rs. 140 which he alleged he had paid in good faith for these ornaments to Balwant Singh and Bur Singh. The suit was decreed by the trial Court and Mangal Singh and Sikatar Singh preferred an appeal to the senior Subordinate Judge who has held that the suit is excluded from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court under Arts. 2 and 23, Sch. 2, Small Cause Courts Act,

I do not see how the suit, as framed, falls under either of the two clauses, and indeed Mr. Rustomji, who had appeared for the respondent, has expressed his inability to support the judgment of the lower Court. Art. 2 excludes from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes a suit concerning an act purporting to be done by an officer of the Government in his official capacity, or by an officer of a Court of Wards in the execution of his office. It is obvious that the plaint as laid down does not in any way concern an act or order of an officer of the kind mentioned in this clause. Similarly, Art. 23 relates to a suit to alter or set aside a decision, decree or order of a Court or of a person acting in a judicial capacity. The present suit does not in any way intend to alter or set aside any judicial decision. Indeed, the learned Subordinate Judge in ordering the ornaments and the cash to be made over to the police, and the police in handing over these things to the persons in whose house the dacoity was committed, were not deciding the relevant rights of Bishen Singh and these persons with respect to the ornaments in question or the price thereof. The suit as framed is clearly cognizable by the Court of Small Causes, and I hold accordingly.

For the foregoing reasons I accept the petition for revision, set aside the order of the lower appellate Court and remand the case to it for disposal in accordance with law. Costs will abide the events.

First Appeal No. 2720 of 1923, Decided on 5th December 1927, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Multan, D/- 27th August 1923.

(a) Custom (Punjab)—Gift of ancestral immovable property—Property reverts to donor and his heirs on failure of issue of the donee.

The ordinary custom in the Punjab is that in the case of a gift of ancestral immovable property to a relation, on the failure of the issue of the donee the property reverts to the donor and his heirs, the presumption in such cases being that the object of the gift is to make a settlement for the benefit of the donee and his issue, and therefore on the failure of the issue of the donee the object of the gift fails and the property reverts to the original donor. [P 518 C 1]

(b) Custom (Punjab)—Gift—Rule of reverter does not apply to hiba-bil-iwaz—Devolution in such cases must be regulated by the law applicable to donee.

The rule of the customary law as to reverter applies only to cases of pure gifts.

What is commonly called a hiba-bil-iwaz is not a gift in the technical sense of that term and is not governed by the rules relating to gifts pure and simple, but it partakes of the incidents relating to sales and the devolution of such an estate after the death of the donee must therefore be regulated according to the law which is applicable to the donee and not to the donor: 43 *P. A custom among the prostitutes that if one of them contracts a marriage she forfeits all rights in her original family, in other words, that she becomes practically an outcaste, is opposed to public policy and is immoral and consequently unenforceable in the British Indian Courts. Even if such a custom exists and is enforceable, it does not necessarily follow therefore that the converse proposition is established that the heirs of a prostitute who has contracted marriage and has discarded the profession of the prostitutes are also disqualified from inheriting her estate even if they be prostitutes. [P 520 C 1]

✻ (d) Record-of-Rights — Unchallenged adverse entry in, or an order to alter the entry without actual alteration, does not extinguish the right of the party unless the other party proves adverse possession or some similar reason in support of his plea.

An adverse entry in the Record-of-Rights, even if allowed to remain unchallenged, does not necessarily extinguish the right of the party against whom such entry has been made and a fortiori an order to alter the entry to the prejudice of the party without the actual alteration of the entry cannot by itself extinguish the right unless the other party can prove adverse possession for the statutory period or some similar reason in support of his plea of such extinction: 56 *I. (e) Limitation Act, Art. 120—Plaintiff in possession need not bring a suit on first denial of his title—He must take proceedings within 6 years from the time when his rights are being actually jeopardized.

If a plaintiff is in possession or enjoyment of the property in suit he is not obliged to sue for a declaration of title on the first or each succeeding denial of his title by the defandant. He may look upon each denial with complacency or at his option may institute a suit to falsify the assertions of the other side. But when he finds that his rights are being actually jeopardized by the action or assertion of the defendant, then he must take proceedings within six years from the date of such actions or assertions: *A. (f) Punjab Land Revenue Act (1887), S. 45—No distinction exists between a suit under S. 45 and one under Specific Relief Act, S. 42.

There is no distinction between a suit under S. 45, Punjab Land Revenue Act, and one under S. 42, Specific Relief Act, because S. 45, Punjab Land Revenue Act, also contemplates a declaratory suit with or without consequential relief under the provisions of the Specific Relief Act. It does not create a new description of suit but merely indicates the remedy of a person who may feel aggrieved by an adverse entry in the Record-of-Rights in other words, it specifies an occasion when a party may bring a declaratory suit under the provisions of the Specific Relief Act. [P 522 C 2]

The plaintiff cannot be tied down to the date of the accrual of the cause of action mentioned in the plaint. The Court is entitled to determine the date on which the cause of action arose from the facts alleged and proved. [P 523 C 1]

Jai Lal, J.—The original owner of the property in dispute in this appeal was one Muhammad Hamid Shah, a Gardezi Sayed of Multan City. He belonged to the Shiah sect and had four wives at the time of his death which occurred some time in the year 1900. Two of his wives namely, Mt. Mughlani Bibi and Allah Wasai were prostitutes before their marriage with Muhammad Hamid Shah while the other two, Mt. Umarao Bibi and Mt. Jindwaddi, belonged to the family of Sayads. On 1st October 1896, Muhammad Hamid Shah made what purports to be a gift of certain properties both movable and immovable, in favour of his wife Mt. Mughlani Bibi. The latter gifted a part of immovable property in favour of her brother's son Muhammad Bakhsh and Ali Muhammad, but we are not concerned with that property in this litigation. Mt. Mughlani Bibi died on 16th June 1913 leaving immovable property which is the subject of dispute in the present appeal. A part of this property had been mortgaged by Muhammad Hamid Shah before the gift in favour of Mt. Mughlani Bibi and has since been in possession of the mortgagees. After the death of this lady possession of such of the immovable property as was in her actual possession at the time of her death was taken by her sister Mt. Rani and mutation of the same, as well as of the property in possession of the mortgagees, was made in the revenue records in her favour on 21st October 1913 by the Naib Tahsildar. The order of the Naib Tahsildar was however, on appeal by Mt. Umrao Bibi and Mt. Jindwaddi, widows of Muhammad Hamid Shah, reversed by the Collector of Multan on 11th November 1913, and it was ordered that the properties be entered in the names of the aforesaid widows of Muhammad Hamid Shah. It appears that there was an appeal from this order to the Financial Commissioner but without success. The result was that on 4th January 1917 the name of Mt. Rani was removed from the proprietary column in the revenue records in respect of the properties in dispute and the names of Mt. Umrao Bibi and Jindwaddi substituted in its place, and thereupon the two widows dispossessed Mt, Rani of the property which was in her possession and took possession thereof.

The suit out of which the appeal has arisen was thereupon instituted by Mt. Rani and her two nephews to whom she had gifted portions of the property in suit, against Mt. Umrao Bibi and Jindwaddi, Sayad Fateh Ali Shah, Mt. Amir Ladi and others who claimed to have derived their interests in the property through the widows. Fateh Ali Shah and Mt. Amir Ladi are a brother and a daughter respectively of Muhammad Hamid Shah. The suit was for possession of properties described as Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 in the plaint and for a declaration of the plaintiffs' title as owners of the properties described as Nos. 5, 6 and 7. These last-mentioned properties are those which are in possession of the mortgagees under the mortgages created by Muhammad Hamid Shah and which admittedly have not yet been redeemed. The suit was contested by the defendants on various grounds some of which are repeated before us and will be dealt with presently. The learned senior Subordinate Judge decreed the suit. The defendant Fateh Ali Shah has presented the present appeal in this Court and the other defendants apparently are taking no further interest in this litigation. Mt. Rani having died during the pendency of this appeal, her legal representatives have been substituted in her place.

The first question that needs determination is whether Mt. Mughlani Bibi was a Shiah before her marriage and whether Mt. Rani is her real sister. There is overwhelming evidence on the record in support of the conclusion of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge that Mt. Mughlani Bibi was a Shiah and that Mt. Rani was her real sister. In this connexion reference may be made to the testimony, inter alia of Hashim Ali Shah (P. W. 1) whose father acted as agent of Mt. Mughlani Bibi, Raza Ali Shah (P. W. 2) Gulab (P. W. 3) and Khuda Bakhsh (P. W. 4). Mt. Rani herself went into the witness-box and stated that she was a sister of Mt. Mughlani Bibi and that the latter was a Shiah. The appellant Fateh Ali Shah was examined as a witness on behalf of the defendants and admitted that Mt. Mughlani Bibi was buried in the graveyard of the Shiahs and that she and Mt. Rani were both daughters of Ghulam Muhammad though he added that he did not know whether they were from the same mother. He also stated that Allah Bakhsh, brother of Mt. Mughlani Bibi, was also buried in the Shiah graveyard. I consider, therefore, that there can be no manner of doubt that Mt. Mughlani was the real sister of Mt. Rani and was a Shiah.

The next question that we have to consider is whether the property in dispute, which was admittedly given to Mt. Mughlani Bibi by her husband and was his ancestral property, descends to the heirs of Mt. Mughlani Bibi under the Shiah-law, or whether it reverts to the heirs of Muhammad Hamid Shah under the customary law. The proposition is not contested before us that the ordinary custom in this province is that in the case of a gift of ancestral immovable property to a relation on the failure of the issue of the donee the property reverts to the donor and his heirs, the presumption in such cases being that the object of the gift is to make a settlement for the benefit of the donee and his issue, and therefore on the failure of the issue of the donee the object of the gift fails and the property reverts to the original donor. The contention of Mr. Badri Das, advocate, for the appellant, is that Muhammad Hamid Shah was governed by the customary law and not by the Mahomedan law and, therefore, the rule of reverter, already mentioned, applies to the ancestral property gifted by him to his wife Mt. Mughlani Bibi. I will assume for the present that Muhammad Hamid Shah was governed by custom and there is no dispute before us that the property gifted by him was not ancestral qua the plaintiffs. The gift to Mt. Mughlani Bibi was not attacked by the collaterals of the donor and is not attacked before us and the only question is as to the devolution of the estate on the death of Mt. Mughlani Bibi. It is to be noted, however, that the rule of the customary law as to reverter applies only to cases of pure gifts.

The question that we have to consider is whether the transfer to Mt. Mughlani Bibi amounted to a gift or whether, as contended by Mr. Kishen Dayal, counsel for the respondent, it amounted to what is ordinarily called heba-bil-iwaz. An examination of the deed of gift which is to be found on the p. 5 of the printed paper-book shows that the transfer of the property by Muhammad Hamid Shah was in lieu of dower due to his wife and her right of maintenance. The deed after the usual covenants recites that :

> she has become the absolute owner of the property settled upon her and I have been left no connexion or concern whatever with the said property, nor shall I have any in future.

It is, therefore, clear that an absolute title in the property in dispute was conferred on Mt. Mughlani Bibi in lieu of the dower admitted to be due to her and of her right of maintenance. It is no doubt true that the amount of the dower is not mentioned in the deed and it is not, therefore, possible to ascertain how much of the consideration for the gift was on account of a debt due from the donor to the donee and how much was on account of her right of maintenance. But this, in my opinion, is immaterial because there is judicial authority in support of the proposition that even if there is partial consideration for what purports to be a hiba or a gift, the transaction ceases to be a gift or hiba as that term is used by the Mahomedan jurists.

Now it has been held in several reported cases that what is commonly called a Hiba-bil-iwaz is not a gift in the technical sense of that term and is not governed by the rules relating to gifts pure and simple but is tentamount to a sale and therefore confers an absolute heritable title on the donee or the transferee. In Nur Muhammad v. Mt. Allah Wassi (1), it was held by a Division Bench of the Chief Court of the Punjab that according to the Mahomadan law a gift by a husband of landed property in lieu of dower in favour of his wife amounts to a hiba-bil-iwaz which was held to be tantamount to a sale.

The Calcutta High Court in Abbas Ali Shikdar v. Karim Bakhsh (2) held that a transfer of immovable property by a Mahomedan to his wife purporting to be made in consideration of a dower debt of Rs. 49 and on account of right of inheritance was a sale and that such a transaction was wrongly described as a hiba-bil-iwaz. It was also held in that case that a copy of the Koran was a valid consideration for a hiba-bil-iwaz. The matter was again elaborately discussed by a Division Bench of the same Court in Sarif-ud-din Muhammad v. Mohi-ud-din Mohamed (3), and it was held that the transaction which was called by the learned Judges as a "false hiba-bil-iwaz" was not a hiba at all but was nothing more or less than sale and was therefore governed not by the Mahomedan law of hiba but was amenable to the general law in India relating to contracts and transfer of property. The transfer in that case was in consideration of the promise by the donee to maintain the donor and to pay her Rs. 999 for that purpose annually and also to arrange for her nursing and proper treatment in case she fell ill. In the deed the transaction was described as hiba or gift, but the learned Judges after a consideration of several authorities both textual and judicial arrived at the conclusion that such a transaction could not be considered to be the real hiba-bil-iwaz but was wrongly called as such by people generally and, therefore, they called it a false hiba-bil-iwaz.

For the purposes of this case it is not necessary to enter into a discussion as to the proper legal terminology to be applied to such transaction ; it is sufficient to hold that they are not governed by the rules relating to gifts but that they partake of the incidents relating to sales.

The devolution of such an estate after the death of the donee must therefore be regulated according to the law which is applicable to the donee and not to the donor : see Faqir Mohamed v. Miran Bakhsh (4), where it was held that succession to unpaid dower of a deceased female among Mahomedan Rajputs governed by agricultural custom of the province must be determined in accordance with the Mahomedan law in the absence of proof of special custom to the contrary.

From the above discussion it follows that the property in dispute must be held to be the absolute estate of Mt. Mughlani Bibi at the time of her death and not subject to reversion to her husband's heirs and consequently heritable by her personal heirs according to the law which governed her estate. It is admitted on both sides that if Mt. Mughlani Bibi was a Shiah, and if the succession to the property is to be governed by that law, then Mt. Rani is the sole heir thereto. In view of my decision that Mt. Mughlani Bibi was a Shiah and that Mt. Rani was her full sister, it must be held that Mt. Rani was entitled to succeed to the whole of the property left by her.

It is consequently unnecessary to decide whether S. Muhammad Hamid Shah was governed in matters of succession by the customary law of the Province or by the Mahomedan law. The material on the present record is inconclusive to enable me to express a definite opinion on the subject though in Gulam v. Ruku (5) and Rahim Shah v. Hussain Shah (6) it was held that in matters of succession the Gardesi Sayads are governed by the customary law of the Province. But this view is opposed to 5 P. R. 1888 and if the question is raised in any proceedings hereafter it will have to be considered in the light of the evidence produced therein. As it is not necessary for the purposes of this case to decide this question I refrain from doing so.

A half-hearted contention was raised by counsel for the appellants that Mt. Mughlani Bibi was governed by the Sunni Law in matters of succession and it was contended that under that law Mt. Rani would be entitled to only half of her estate. This matter must be deemed to have been disposed of by what I have stated above and it will suffice to add that there is absolutely no material on the record in support of the contention of the learned counsel.

At this stage it will be convenient to dispose of another contention raised on behalf of the appellants which was that Mt. Mughlani Bibi being a prostitute before her marriage was governed by the custom relating to the prostitutes, and that as there is a custom among the prostitutes that if one of them contracts a marriage she forfeits all rights in her original family, in other words, that she becomes practically an outcast and, therefore, it was asserted that Mt. Rani, who herself was a prostitute, could not inherit the property of her outcasted sister. The learned counsel put his client's case in the following manner : that according to the Code of the prostitutes their's is a respectable profession and that any member of that profession who contracts a marriage falls from the level of morality as understood among them and consequently becomes immoral and therefore incurs a forfeiture of all her rights in the earnings of the members of the profession. The counsel sought to support this proposition from an extract from the Wajib-ul-arz of the Multan District, but we declined to permit him to refer to this document because we found that it had not been proved and placed on the record. There is, however, the statement of Gulab (P. W. 3) to the effect that :

> according to the Riwaj-i-am governing the prostitutes a giri after marriage forfeits her share in her parent's property. Property inherited or obtained from the husband goes to the husband's relatives and not to the parent's family.

I am not disposed to place much value on this statement of a solitary witness to prove a custom of such importance and in any case would be disposed to hold that such a custom if proved is opposed to public policy and is immoral and consequently unenforceable in the British Indian Courts. Morever even if such a custom exists and is enforceable it does not necessarily follow therefore that the converse proposition is established that the heirs under the Mahomedan law of a prostitute who has contracted marriage and has discarded the profession of the prostitutes are also disqualified from inheriting her estate even if they be prositutes.

We have next to consider the question of limitation. The suit as I have already mentioned, involves two prayers : (1) for possession of the property of which Mt. Rani was dispossessed in January 1917 ; and (2) for a declaration of title in respect of the property which was in possession of the mortgagees. It is conceded by counsel for the appellants that the suit so far as the prayer for possession of the property first above named is concerned is within time, but he contends that it is barred by time so far as the prayer for declaration of title as owner with regard to the second set is concerned. It is common ground that Art. 120, Sch. 1, Lim. Act, governs the case so far as this prayer for declaration is concerned. Art. 120 provides :

> that the time within which a suit for which no other period is provided in Sch. 1, Lim. Act, must be filed is six years and that this period must be counted from the date when the right to sue accrues.

The question therefore that we have to decide is when the plaintiff's right to sue accrued in this case.

The contention of the appellants is that the right to sue accrued at the latest on the 11th November 1913 when the Collector of Multan ordered that the mutation in the name of Mt. Rani be substituted by one in favour of the two widows, Mt. Umrao Bibi and Mt. Jindwaddi. The case of the plaintiffs, on the other hand, is that the time began to run from the 4th January 1917 when the order of the Collector was actually given effect to and the name of Mt. Rani was removed from the revenue records, and as a result she was dispossessed of the properties which had been formerly in her possession. It is asserted that it was on this occasion that her rights were really jeopardized by any action taken by, or at the instance of, the defendants and that before this it was not necessary for her to take steps to safeguard her interests as she was in actual possession of such of the property as was capable of being taken possession of and her name still stood in the column of ownership in the revenue records with regard to all the properties in dispute in the suit.

It is also the case of the plaintiffs that the property with which we are now concerned being in the actual possession of the mortgagees the only right which descended to the heirs of Mt. Mughlani Bibi was the right to redeem it and not a right of immediate possession thereof and, therefore, that it was really an incorporeal right that vested in Mt. Mughlani Bibi and her heirs which not being capable of being actually retained by either party the possession thereof must be deemed to be with the rightful owner of it. This suggestion is due to the phraseology of S. 45, Punjab Land Revenue Act, on which reliance is placed by the plaintiffs and which provides that :

> a person who is in possession of any right and against whom an entry has been made in the Record-of-Rights may institute a suit under the provisions of Chap. 6, Specific Relief Act, for a declaration of such right.

It is admitted on both sides that the period of limitation for such a suit is six years and it is therefore contended on behalf of the respondents and that Mt. Rani having been found to be the rightful heir to Mt. Mughlani Bibi must be deemed to be in possession of the equity of redemption in the property with which we are now concerned and that as the entries in the Record-of-Rights were made against her on '4th January 1917 it is from that date that time for a suit under S. 45, Land Revenue Act, began to run against her. If that view is correct then the present suit which was instituted on 10th December 1921 must be held to be within limitation.

The counsel for the appellants contends that it is the first denial of the plaintiff's right that gave her a right to sue for a declaration and that even if it be held that there were later denials on the appellants a fresh cause of action did not accrue in favour of the plaintiffs on each subsequent denial. The cases of Khushal Singh v. Kanda (7) and Ghulam Hussain v. Saifullah Khan (8) were cited in support of this contention. In the first of these cases an adoption was made by a proprietor more than six years before the institution of the suit and later a gift of his property was made by him to the adopted son. In a suit by the reversioners to set aside the gift it was held by this Court that the right to impeach the adoption having become barred by limitation the suit to set aside the gift was also barred by time as the gift did not involve any further denial of the rights of the reversioners than was involved in the adoption. This case in my opinion does not assist us in the present case. The adoption of a son amounts to a complete infringement of the rights of the reversioners and the gift to the adopted son is merely an acceleration of what is bound to happen in course of time. No fresh cause of action in favour of the reversioners therefore arises by virtue of the gift. In the present case it cannot be predicated that the defendants by merely asserting their title to the mortgaged property and denying the plaintiffs' title thereto in any way interfered with the rights of the latter and improved their own position with regard to such rights. In the second reported case the right of the plaintiff to claim a partition of the property in dispute was denied by the defendant in the partition proceedings before the revenue officer who decided the objection in the defendant's favour and declined to give a share to the plaintiff. The proceedings had however to be kept in abeyance for years owing to civil litigation between the parties about other lands, and on their revival the plaintiff again claimed a share in the same property but the claim was again negatived. In a suit for declaration of title instituted by the plaintiff more than six years from the first denial and adjudication thereon by the revenue officer it was held that the suit was barred by time as the resistance offered to the plaintiff's claim on the second occasion was merely a reiteration of the former resistance and not a fresh invasion of his rights. A revenue officer has jurisdiction to adjudicate on disputes as to title in partition proceedings and to enforce them. It is to be observed that in this case there was adjudication against the plaintiff by the revenue officer as a result of an objection raised by the defendant in the partition proceedings which were not dropped but were merely kept in abeyance ; therefore there was a clear infringement of the plaintiff's right on the first occasion and the second denial did not affect the title of either party to the disputed property. This case is also, therefore, distinguishable from the present case as here it is the action of the revenue officer in 1917 and the consequent dispossession of Mt. Rani that really affected the plaintiff's title to the property in dispute.

Reliance was also placed by the appellants' counsel on Sheo Gopal v. Bishen Singh (9) and Hakim Singh v. Waryama (10) in which it was held that even if the right to demand a correction of an entry in the revenue record is lost by time, a party may be entitled to a declaration of his proprietary title to the land claimed. I am unable to see how these cases help the appellants ; they seem on the other hand to favour the contention of the respondents as it appears to follow from the law laid down therein that an adverse entry in the Record-of-Rights even if allowed to remain unchallenged does not necessarily extinguish the right of the party against whom such entry has been made and a fortiori an order to alter the entry to the prejudice of the party without the actual alteration of the entry cannot by itself extinguish the right unless the other party can prove adverse possession for the statutory period or some similar reason in support of his plea of such extinction. In the present case the mere assertion of a claim by the defendants followed by an order to substitute their names in place of the plaintiff's name cannot be held to extinguish the undoubted title of the latter to the mortgaged property and to pass it to the defendents. The true test seems to me to be whether, if Mt. Rani files a redemption suit against the mortgagees, the latter can defeat it on the plea that she has lost her right by the adverse claim of the defendants or in the alternative whether the defendants can succeed in a suit for redemption in the presence of Mt. Rani. In my opinion the answer must in both cases be in the negative.

On behalf of the respondents the cases of Muhammad Hanif v. Ratan Chand (11) and Bela Singh v. Lakhmi Das (12) and Hakim Singh v. Waryama (10) were cited in which it was held that each invasion of the plaintiffs' right gave them a fresh cause action for a suit for declaration of title, but it is to be observed that all these cases related to immovable property which was actually in possession or in the enjoyment of the respective plaintiffs and consequently each subsequent denial by the defendant was held to be a fresh infringement of the plaintiffs' right. These cases therefore do not afford much assistance in deciding the question now in issue. Thus no judicial authority has been cited by either party which is exactly applicable to the facts of the present case. The principle, however, is fully established that if a plaintiff is in possession or enjoyment of the property in suit he is not obliged to sue for a declaration of title on the first or each succeeding denial of his title by the defendant. He may look upon each denial with complacency or at his option may institute a suit to falsify the assertions of the other side. But when he finds that his rights are being actually jeopardized by the action or assertion of the defendant then he must take proceedings within six years from the date of such actions or assertions.

Having regard to the fact that the defendants are not in the actual enjoyment of the right in dispute and have never been so and in view of the rule that possession of incorporeal rights must be deemed to be with the rightful owner unless the person who disputes such rights can prove his actual enjoyment thereof or effective disturbance by him of the plaintiff's title for the statutory period, I consider that the present suit is within limitation, whether it is a suit under S. 45, Punjab Land Revenue Act or an ordinary suit for declaration of title under S. 42, Specific Relief Act.

A distinction was sought to be drawn by the appellants' counsel between the two kinds of suit, but the matter is not of much importance in view of what I have stated above, though personally I am unable to set any distinction, because S. 45, Punjab Land Revenue Act, also contemplates a declaratory suit with or without consequential relief under the provisions of the Specific Relief Act. It does not create a new description of suit but merely indicates the remedy of a person who may feel aggrieved by an adverse entry in the Record-of-Rights ; in other words it specifies an occasion when a party may bring a declaratory suit under the provisions of the Specific Relief Act.

In connexion with this part of his case the learned counsel for the appellants invited our attention to para. 4 of the plaint and contended that the plaintiff's did not in that paragraph base their cause of action on the reversal of the entries in favour of the defendant and consequent dispossession of the plaintiff, but that they definitely stated that the cause of action accrued on 13th June 1913.

Now, it is no doubt true that in the plaint the plaintiffs did not mention the date of the reversal of the entries in favour of the defendants nor of their dispossession by them, but the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has held that this took place on 4th January 1917. This finding is not attacked before us by the appellants. Moreover, the

(12) A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 391=6 Lah. 132.

Civil Procedure Code nowhere provides that the plaintiff shall state in a separate paragraph of the plaint the date of the accrual of the cause of action. All that it requires is that the facts constituting the cause of action and when it arose should be stated in the plaint. Order 7, R. 1, Civil P. C., is quite clear on this point and the forms of the plaints and the pleadings in Appendix A of Sch. 1, Civil Procedure Code, do not contain a separate paragraph stating when the casue of action arose. The omission to mention the dates of the reversal of the entries and dispossession of the plaintiffs was not noticed by the parties when the issues were framed; but the necessary information, it appears, was supplied during the trial. In my opinion this was merely a formal omission which does not in any way affect the merits of the case and the plaintiffs cannot be tied down to the date of the accrual of the cause of action mentioned in the plaint. The Court is entitled, as the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has done, to determine the date on which the cause of action arose from the facts alleged and proved. After an examination of the pleadings and the finding of the Senior Subordinate Judge I have no doubt that it was on 4th January 1917 that the right of the plaintiffs was really infringed by the defendants necessitating the present suit and, therefore, the time must be held to run against them from that date and not earlier.

I therefore, hold that Mt. Rani's title to the property in dispute had not been extinguished at the date of the suit by any act of the defendants and consequently that the latter had not then displaced her title by their own and that the present suit was rightly held by the trial Court to be within time, having been brought within six years of the invasion of the plaintiffs' right by the defendants by getting their names recorded in the revenue records in place of the plaintiff's name and by taking possession of the estate of Mt. Mughlani Bibi

For the reasons stated above I am of opinion that the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge must be affirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

Broadway, J.—I concur in dismissing the appeal with costs.

Judgment.*—Four collaterals belonging to different branches of the same family sold in 1907 the land in dispute to Chaudhri, the husband of the sister of Sharaf, one of the vendors. It would appear that the sale was made in order to give Chaudhri a better chance of being appointed a lambardar. No member of the family objected to the sale till in 1925, Fazal, the sole plaintiff, instituted the present suit for a declaration that the sale in question being effected without necessity and consideration should not affect his reversionary rights. He was able to bring this suit so late because at the time he was a minor. It is in evidence that he had at least one adult brother alive at the time of the sale. The plaintiff is the son of Haidar, brother of Sharaf, one of the vendors. He is thus the nephew of the vendee's wife. He was born just prior to the sale. The trial Court decreed the claim, but on appeal the learned District Judge dismissed the suit. He granted a certificate under S. 41, Punjab Courts Act, that there was a doubtful question requiring decision regarding the validity of the following custom, namely, whether a childless Awan of the Jhelum District can make an alienation of ancestral property in favour of a stranger in the presence of his own near collaterals. On this certificate this second appeal was preferred, the sole ground of appeal being that the reply to the question stated in the certificate should be in the negative.

It has frequently been held that among Awans of the adjoining district of

[* No Letters Patent Appeal was filed—Ed.]

Jhelum, Shahpur, Mianwali, Rawalpindi and Attock there is an extensive power of alienation especially in the absence of sons. It was held in Sher Mahomed v. Ali Mahomed (1), that although Awans of tahsil Talagang in the Jhelum District have extensive powers of alienation of ancestral immovable property to their relatives such as daughters, sisters and their sons, their powers are limited when the alienation of the property is in favour of a stranger whether he is an Awan or not. This was a decision of a Judge in Chambers and it is the principal case relied upon by the appellant's counsel. Lal Khan v. Nura (2) was also relied upon by him, but it does not seem to me to be in point. It was held in it that Customary Law did recognize a distinction between the powers of alienation of a sonless proprietor and those of a proprietor who had sons and that it had not been proved that among Awans of the Talagang tahsil a proprietor who has sons has unlimited power to deal with his property as he pleases.

It was held in Nur Ahmad v. Ghulam Hussain (3), a case dealing with the powers of alienation of Awans of tahsil Rawalpindi, that by custom a childless proprietor had power to alienate ancestral property in the presence of a first cousin without necessity. This was a case of a sale, in which it was held that necessity had not been established. It is thus on all fours with the present case except that it decided the custom among Awans of Rawalpindi, while the present case is concerned with Awans of Pind Dadan Khan tahsil of the Jhelum District. Again it was held in Devi Das v. Bhakra (4), that by custom among Awans of the Mianwali tahsil a childless proprietor had an unrestricted power of disposing by sale of his ancestral land. This case also is on all fours with the present case except for the distinction already noted. It was held in Ali Mahomed v. Dulla (5), that by custom among Awans of the Shahpur District, a sonless proprietor could bequeath his land to his daughter's sons in the presence of his brothers.

The next case, Nura v. Tara (6), deals with Awans of the Talagang tahsil of the Jhelum District. It was held in it that among Awans a gift by a childless male proprietor of ancestral land to his wife's sister's son in the presence of a brother was valid. It is true that this was a case of gift, but it shows the wide powers of Awans to alienate their land.

In Khuda Baksh v. Wahamali (7) it was held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that by custom among Awans of Talagang tahsil his father was incompetent to make an alienation of ancestral property in his (the sons') presence. This case goes very far and does not recognize the distinction usually made between alienations by a sonless Awan and those by an Awan with male issue. It is true that it was pointed out in Khuda Bakhsh v. Ahmad Khan (8), that the above case might have been decided on a different ground, but it is important to show the view taken by a Judge of this Court as to the powers of Awans to alienate their property.

It was held in Nur Khan v. Sarfruz (9), that by custom among Awans of the Talagang tahsil a childless proprietor could sell his ancestral property to his first cousin, once removed, in the presence of his stepbrother even without necessity. This again is not quite on all fours with the present case. This ruling shows that when a vendee is a near collateral the sale to him without necessity is valid. In the case before me the vendee is the husband of the sister of one of the vendors and I have already shown that there is little or no distinction made regarding alienations to collaterals and to near female relatives.

Certain remarks in Khudayar v. Fatteh (10), may be quoted with advantage. Rattigan, J., at p. 22 in discussing Nura v. Tara (6) said:

> A perusal of the judgment as a whole can leave no doubt that the Judges who decided the case under discussion were satisfied that Awans had by custom in the Jhelum District, no less than in the districts of Shahpur and Bannu (now Mianwali) practically unrestricted powers of alienation.

He also pointed out that the gift in Nura v. Tara (6) was to a wife's sister's son. Again at p. 24 the learned Judge said:

> It has been found as the result of further and more exhaustive enquiry that Awans in various parts of the province concede far larger powers of alienation to the proprietor in possession than are admitted by other agricultural tribes.

The customary law of the Jhelum District is also in favour of the view that a sonless Awan has full power of alienation other than that of gift. This is the reply to question 105 of Talbot's customary law of the Jhelum District though there is a note that there are a good many dissentients who say that it is not lawful for him to alienate without necessity. At p. 8 of this Customary Law occurs the following remark:

> But a proprietor having no sons or son's sons is among Talagang Awans almost absolute owner of his whole estate and can gift it to any relative without the consent of the other.

In view of this statement in the Riwaj-i-am the onus was upon the plaintiff to establish that a sonless Awan could not sell his ancestral property without necessity. The authorities referred to show that this power has been conceded at different times to Awans in different parts of the country and that in all parts it has been held that Awans have much wider powers of alienation than other tribes. The plaintiff, however, has given little or no evidence to show that a sonless Awan has not the power of selling ancestral property. Some of his witnesses have stated that there is a general power under custom to make a will and to gift land in the case of Awans, whereas the customary law of the district does not lay down such a general proposition as regards gifts. One witness did state that a sale or mortgage by a sonless Awan could only be entered into for necessary purposes. On the other hand the defendants' witness stated that the power of sale existed in the case of a sonless proprietor as recerded in the Riwaj-i-am. On the record, therefore, I agree with the finding of the learned District Judge that a sonless Awan of the Jhelum District can sell ancestral property in the presence of his near collaterals to a stranger.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Gulla Ram—for Respondents.

Judgment.*—The defendant-appellant is the ala malik of the land in dispute and the land was in possession of the adna maliks, Indar and Shaman. In 1890 a mutation order was made at the instance of Indar and Shaman according to which Sih and Bishnun were shown as adna maliks in possession along with Indar Shaman. Indar and Shaman both died some time before 1914, and in that year Fauja, etc. (the plaintiff-respondent in the present case) brought a suit for possession of the land stating that the land was ancestral, qua them, that they were the reversioners of Indar and Shaman and that the gift made to Sih and Bishnun was not binding upon them. This suit ended in a compromise and a decree was passed in accordance therewith. The terms of the compromise were that Sih and Bishnun would remain in possession of the land so long as they should live and Fauja etc., would succeed to the whole of it if Sih and Bishnun should die childless, and to half of it if they should leave male issue. Sih and Bishnun died childless in August 1921, and the land was mutated in the name of ala malik on the ground that the line of adna malik had become extinct Fauja, etc., sue for possession of the land. According to the wajib-ul-arz the land of a sonless adna malik must revert to the ala malik unless the former should have alienated it by gift or will.

* [Letters Patent Appeal No. 21 of 1928 was dismissed in limine on 15th March 1928.]

As regards Fauja, etc. plaintiffs, it was found that they were not the collaterals of Indar and Shaman and so the land was not ancestral qua them. That being so they had no locus standi to challenge the gift made by Indar and Shaman to Sih and Bishnun. But Fauja, etc., based their claim on the said entry in the Wajib-ul-arz and contended that the alienation by compromise was equivalent to a gift or will. This contention found favour with the learned District Judge and he decreed their suit. The defendant appeals.

I am of opinion that by no stretch of language or imagination the compromise can be said to be equivalent to a gift or will. It is clear that Fauja, etc., had no right whatsoever to challenge the gift to Sih and Bishnun, but the latter, in order to get rid of the litigation, brought it to an end by a compromise. They thereby neither made a will nor a gift. They evidently had not the patience and capacity, or perhaps the necessary funds, to fight out the case and to extricate themselves from that predicament and, therefore, sought refuge in a compromise.

Evidently they did so under compulsion. A gift or will is on the other hand a voluntary act.

The next question is: Could the terms of the compromise be operative as against the defendant or, in other words, was an adna malik competent to alienate his land or divert succession in any way other than by will or gift. Nor is it clear that according to the Wajib-ul-arz the power of alienation that was recognized was by will or gift. If an adna malik can alienate his land by will or gift, it does no follow, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that he is also competent to sell or mortgage or alienate it in any other way.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the lower appellate Court, restore that of the trial Court. The plaintiffs to pay the appellant's costs throughout.

Dalip Singh, J.—The plaintiff in this case brought the usual declaratory suit to avoid two sales dated 14th February 1921, and 19th December 1921, respectively, by his father, defendant 2. The trial Court granted the plaintiff a decree with proportionate costs to the effect that the sale dated 14th February 1921 would bind him to the extent of Rs. 600 only, while the sale dated 19th December 1921 would not bind him at all. Both sides appealed to the learned District Judge. The learned District Judge dismissed the appeal of the alienee and the relevant words in his judgment are as follows :

Under the circumstances I entirely agree with the Sub-Judge, that it was Subedar Neki Ram's duty to see that Bharat Singh applied to its proper purposes the money raised by the second sale at any rate and he has failed to do so. I reject his appeal.

He accepted the appeal of the plaintiff holding that the alienee was well aware of the character of the alienor and, therefore there was no necessity for the advance of Rs. 650 which had been advanced for, but was not applied to redeeming the mortgages. He, therefore, accepted the plaintiff's appeal with costs.

In second appeal it has been contended that the learned District Judge is obviously wrong in holding that it was the alienee's duty to see that the money was properly expended for the purpose for which it was advanced. This is clear and has not been contested by the counsel for the respondent. We have, however, heard the case as a first appeal from the judgment of the learned Sub-Judge. We agree with the learned Sub-Judge in holding that as regards the second sale the item of Rs. 1,900, which was advanced for the purpose of redemption of land, was not for necessity. In the previous sale of February 1921 the alienee had advanced

Rs. 560 for the purpose of redeeming land, no such redemption had admittedly taken place and we fail entirely to see how the alienee again relied on the simple word of the alienor that he intended to redeem the land. As pointed out by the learned Sub-Judge the sale took place in December and as the mortgages were with possession the alienor could not obtain possession before June at the earliest. The alienee states that he does not reside in the village, but he does reside in Sonepat and belongs to this village and the distance between them is only eight miles and as he has been purchasing property in his ancestral village it is probable that he is acquainted with the happenings of that village. He must, therefore, be taken to have known the character of the vendor who undoubtedly is proved to be a spendthrift. We, therefore, agree with the Sub-Judge in holding that there was no justification for the advance of Rs. 1,900 to the alienor.

As regards the first sale: we find from the memorandum put in by the patwari that at the time of that sale there was an existing mortgage of Rs. 500 for redemption of which the money might justifiably have been advanced. Taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration we are satisfied that the learned Sub-Judge was right in allowing this Rs. 560 plus Rs. 40 incurred as expenses for registration. As regards the other three items in the first sale we agree with the finding of the learned Sub-Judge that the debts are not proved to exist.

We, therefore, restore the decree of the trial Court. As regards costs, the plaintiff should bear the costs of his appeal before the District Judge and proportionate costs of the present appeal before us. The alienee should bear the costs of his appeal before the District Judge and proportionate costs of the appeal before us.

Judgment. — This is a petition for revision of an order dated 20th July 1927 passed by the District Judge of Rawalpindi declining to grant a certificate to the petitioner under S. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act. From the pleadings and the issues framed two points arose in the litigation before the District Judge. Firstly whether according to the custom applicable to the parties the collaterals in the third degree excluded the daughters in the matter of inheritance and, secondly, whether a daughter who had succeeded to the inheritance lost her right on marriage.

The District Judge held that collaterals in the third degree did not exclude daughters. He did not, however, give any finding on the second issue. Whether this was argued before him or not does not appear from the record. An application was thereupon made to the District Judge for grant of a certificate, but curiously enough the custom on which the District Judge has given a finding was not made the subject of the petition. On the other hand the only custom on which the certificate was prayed for was that the marriage of a daughter who had succeeded to the estate of her father had the effect of depriving her of her inheritance. The District Judge thereupon passed the order : " I am not prepared to grant the certificate prayed for." It would thus be observed that the certificate was asked for on a point which had not been decided at all by the District Judge. It is doubtful whether a certificate is at all necessary if the party aggrieved wishes to appeal from the decree of the District Judge on the ground that he has failed to decide a particular issue involved in the case, even if that issue relates to a matter of custom.

In my opinion the proposed appeal was not governed by S. 41 (1) (a). It is only when the grounds in support of the appeal are covered by S. 41 (1) (a) that a certificate by the District Judge is necessary and not otherwise. Moreover, even if such a certificate was necessary, the District Judge has declined to grant one. The learned counsel, however, contends that the order of the District Judge is very brief. That order reads as follows :

I am not prepared to grant the certificate prayed for. Reliance is placed on Chandot v. Sona Devi (1) and Nur Mahomed v. Mehr Chand (2). In the former of these cases there were two matters mentioned in the application for grant of a certificate in respect of which the certificate was prayed for. The District Judge discussed one of the points only and without referring to the other points involved declined to grant a certificate. The Chief Court of the Punjab remanded the case to him with direction to consider the second point also. This was because it was apparent from the order of the District Judge that he had omitted to apply his mind to one of the points involved in the petition. That by no means is the case in the present case. If a question of custom could arise on the petition made to the District Judge that was whether or not daughters were excluded by the collaterals in the third degree, as that was the only question of custom that had been decided by the District Judge and it cannot, therefore, be predicated that that question was not present in the mind of the learned Judge, when he refused to grant the certificate. The only order written by the District Judge was " refused". It was held that was not sufficient. The learned Judge remarked that from the order of the District Judge refusing a certificate it must appear that, having regard to the nature of the case and the point involved, the District Judge had applied his mind to the question on which the certificate was to be granted or refused. I am unable to hold that this case supports the contention of the petitioner before me.

Perhaps it would have been more satisfactory if the learned Judge had written a more detailed order, but the discretion of refusing or granting a certificate has expressly been given by the legislature to the District Judge and ordinarily it is not the practice of this Court to interfere with the order passed by the District Judge, unless it appears that it is perverse or proceeds on an apparent error in procedure or on a misapprehension of the nature of the case before him or of his jurisdiction.

I am, therefore, unable to hold that in this case there is any ground for revising the order of the District Judge, firstly, because, in my opinion it does not appear from his order that the simple point of custom which he has decided against the petitioner was not present before his mind when he refused the application ; and secondly, the certificate was sought on a point which had not been decided by him. I must, therefore, assume that he purported to refuse to grant a certificate on the point which he had decided against the petitioner and which, he considered, did not comply with the conditions relating to the grant of a certificate. I dismiss the petition with costs.

Misc. First Appeal No. 803 of 1927, Decided on 16th December 1927, from order of Sr. Sub-Judge, Delhi, D/- 21st March 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 50—Summons served on authorized agent of partners is individual service on partners and the decree so obtained can be executed against the partners personally.

Sardha Ram—for Appellant.

Kishen Dayal—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal arising out of execution proceedings. The relevant facts are that the respondent instituted a suit against the firm of Ghumandi Lal-Lal Chand, piece goods merchants, Chandni Chowk, Delhi, through Lal Chand and Bhondu Mal (wrongly described in the plaint as Bunda Mal) as partners. The summonses were issued against the firm and were served on one Abad Bihari who held a power-of-attorney on behalf of Lal Chand and Bhondu Mal. Abad Bihari appeared and defended the suit, but none of the partners attended the Court personally at any hearing. It is admitted by both counsel now that the lower Court is not right in saying that Bhondu Mal, partner, appeared personally on some occasions. A decree was in due course passed against the firm and the decree-holder applied for execution of the decree against both the partners personally. Each of them objected that the decree could not be executed against him without the leave of the Court obtained under O. 21, R. 50, Civil P. C., as he had not been served individually as a partner during the pendency of the suit. The lower Court has disallowed this objection and the present appeal is on behalf of Lal Chand.

It is contended that under Cl. (1), R. 50 execution could proceed against the appellant personally only if he had been individually served as a partner and had failed to appear and that this was not done in this case. I am, however, of opinion that there is no force in this contention. The summonses issued to the firm were duly served upon Abad Bihari who actually appeared in Court and produced a power-of-attorney executed by both Lal Chand and Bhondu Mal in his favour on 27th July 1924. Now this power-of-attorney is in the widest terms possible. It empowers him to act not only on behalf of the firm, but on behalf of each partner individually and jointly Service on him, therefore, was service upon each partner individually. Moreover under O. 30, R. 5, read with R. 3, where persons are sued as partners in the name of the firm and the summons is served either upon one or more of the partners or at the principal place at which the partnership is carried on and no notice as required by the first part of R. 5 has been given, the person served shall be deemed to have been served as a partner. Accordingly service on Abad Bihari must be held to be service upon each partner individually. Reference may in this connexion be made to a Division Bench ruling reported as Baishnab Charan Shaha v. Bank of Bengal (1).

Mr. Sardha Ram has contended that in this case the appellant never appeared individually as contemplated by R. 6, O. 30, but it has been held that the word "individually" in R. 6 is not synonymous with "in person": see Bridges & Co. v. Shamas Din & Co. (2). I, therefore, find no force in this contention of the appellant's learned counsel.

Lastly, Mr. Sardha Ram sought to argue that his client had left the firm long before the suit was instituted, but this plea was not raised during the trial and does not appear to have been argued before the lower Court, and cannot be allowed to be agitated in appeal for the first time.

For the foregoing reasons the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No 1346 of 1927, Decided on 5th December 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Ambala, D/- 28th February 1927.

Co-sharer—Sale of a house in abadi by a non-proprietor to one co-proprietor — Another proprietor suing for its possession—Decree directing to remove the materials of the house from the site cannot be passed.

A co-proprietor can occupy a portion of the abadi and build a house on it. If instead of buildnig it himself he has purchased from a non-proprietor the superstructure built by him, his position is not made worse in any way. Therefore in a suit by a co-proprietor for possession of a house in the abadi purchased by another co-proprietor a decree directing to remove the materials of the house from the site cannot be passed: A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 197, Dist.

Fakir Chand for Jagan Nath Agarwal—for Appellant.

Muhammad Monir—for Respondents.

Judgment *—Two non-proprietors occupied a house in the abadi of mauza Jatwar in the Ambala District and sold it with the site underneath to Raja Singh one of the proprietors in the village. The plaintiffs, four in number, who are members of the proprietary body sued for possession of the house alleging that the site underneath the house had fallen to their share in a partition and that, in any case, the sale of the house by the non-proprietors was invalid according to the village custom. The defendants denied the plaintiffs' exclusive ownership of the site and contended that non-proprietors in the village had according to custom the right to alienate it. The Subordinate Judge held a lengthy enquiry into the custom relating to the power of alienation by non-proprietors and found that the alleged custom was not proved. He also came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that on the alleged partition the house in question and the site underneath it fell exclusively to their share. He accordingly held that the sale was invalid, but in view of the fact that the vendee was himself a proprietor in the village and had a right equal to that of the plaintiffs, he passed a decree for joint possession of the site in favour of the plaintiffs.

Both parties preferred appeals to the District Judge who upheld the finding of the trial Court both with regard to the failure of the plaintiffs to prove the alleged partition and that of the defendants to prove the alleged custom. He accordingly confirmed the decree passed by the trial Court in favour of the plaintiff giving them joint possession of the site in suit, but added a direction that the defendant-vendee must within three months from the date of the District Judge's decree remove the materials of the house from the site. The vendee has come up in second appeal to this Court and Mr. Fakir Chand on his behalf has made a faint-hearted attempt to challenge the finding of the learned District Judge on the question of custom; but as no certificate had been granted, this Court is precluded from going into that matter.

The only, question, therefore, is what is the nature of the decree that is to be passed in favour of the plaintiffs-respondents. The sale of the house by the non-proprietors in favour of the appellant Raja Singh gave him no right whatsoever but at the same time this sale does not deprive him of the rights which he possessed as a member of the proprietary body irrespective of the sale. He is one of the members of the proprietary body and has done nothing to divest himself of those rights. As a proprietor he could occupy a portion of the abadi and build a house on it,

If instead of building it himself he has purchased from a non-proprietor the superstructure built by him, I do not think that his position is made worse in any way. In these circumstances all that the plaintiffs-respondents are entitled to is a decree for joint possession of the site. Mr. Muhammad Munir for the respondents has referred to a single Bench judgment of this Court in Sultan Muhammad v. Surkhru Khan (1), where a decree for joint possession of the site after removal of the materials standing thereon was passed, but the facts of that case were wholly distinguishable. There the sale had been originally effected by a non-proprietor in favour of a proprietor and the latter had re-sold the property to two strangers who were not among the proprietary body and who had no right to retain possession of the house sold.

Accordingly I accept the appeal and vary the decree of the learned District Judge by striking out the direction contained therein that the defendant Raja Singh should remove the materials of the house. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case the parties shall bear their own costs in this Court.

Criminal Appeal No. 954 of 1926, Decided on 15th December 1926, from order of Sess. Judge, Shahpur D/- 13th July 1926.

Penal Code, S. 302—Murder—Youth of accused is no ground for imposing lesser penalty.

The mere fact that the murderer is 19 or 20 years of age is a wholly insufficient reason for not imposing the extreme penalty.

Bodh Raj Sawhney—for Appellant.

Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Fforde, J.—The appellant Amir has been convicted under the provisions of S. 302, I. P. C., of having murdered his cousin Umaid Ali, a boy of 10 and 12 years of age, and has been sentenced to transportation for life. The learned Sessions Judge gave as his reason for imposing the lesser penalty the fact that the appellant is a youth between 19 and 20 years of age. The appellant appeals against his conviction and sentence, and the Crown has presented a petition under the provisions of S. 439, Criminal P. C. asking that the sentence of imprisonment be enhanced to the death penalty.

The story for the prosecution is shortly as follows:

The murdered boy had been for some years betrothed to a cousin of his named Mt. Subhani, a girl of 9 or 10 years of age. Some couple of months or so prior to the crime in question the appellant asked for the hand of this girl in marriage but was refused. About seven days before the occurrence he came to stay with Mt. Alan, who is the stepmother of the deceased and the mother of Mt. Subhani.

According to Mt. Alan he on two more occasions asked for the hand of Mt. Subhani and was again refused. On 7th May 1926 the appellant and the deceased left their house to take cattle out grazing. They went out alone, and the appellant came home a little before sunset without the deceased. On being asked what had happened to Umaid Ali, he replied that he had left him at about noon in order to fetch a kahi to stop a breach in a certain watercourse. The appellant's further explanation of the absence of Umaid Ali was that the latter told him that he felt hungry and would go home for his food. Mt. Alan thereupon searched the village for deceased, but could find no trace of him. Subsequently a number of villagers joined together in a search and the body of the deceased was discovered next morning buried in a pit. When brought before the committing Magistrate charged with the offence of having murdered Umaid Ali, the appellant, after one witness Mehra, had been examined, stated that he wished to relate the story of the death of Umaid Ali and he then proceeded to give an account. His account is that it came on to drizzle while the two were together in the fields, and that thereupon the deceased and he agreed to dig a pit in which they could take shelfrom the rain. Umaid Ali was cleaning the pit with a sickle while the appellant was levelling the walls and the banks of the pit with an axe. While so doing his axe accidentally struck Umaid Ali on the head and he died instantaneously from this injury. Being frightened at what he had done he buried the body in the pit and went home. The appellant further stated that one Lakhi had seen him digging the pit. When he again came before the committing Magistrate on 10th June the appellant retracted this statement. He then stated that he did not strike the deceased at all, that he did not bury the body in the pit, and in fact, denied any knowledge of the circumstances under which the deceased came by his death. On 10th July, however, when put on his trial before the Sessions Judge he admitted that his statement made on 10th June was correct. He repeated that he had dug a pit to protect himself and his clothes from the rain. He admitted that Lakhi had met him and had seen him digging the pit, and he admitted having told Ahmad, son of Sajjada, that Umaid Ali had died as a result of having been accidentally struck by him with an axe; but he added that the police were there and this statement was made to Ahmed as the latter had threatened to kill him and had himself advised him to give that explanation. In his appeal to this Court the appellant refers to the various statements made by him in Court and states that this case relates to an occurrence which took place by accident.

There is not the slightest doubt that the appellant did admit that he had dug a pit, and did admit that he struck the blow which caused Umaid Ali's death, but he has throughout contended that this blow was the result of an accident. The only matter for consideration, therefore, is whether or not the injury was accidental. Ahmad, son of Sajjada (P. W. 14), has stated that when he asked the appellant whether he killed Umaid Ali accidentally or intentionally, the appellant replied that Umaid Ali was sitting in the pit digging it with his sickle and that he himself was standing on the bank, that he struck the wrong end of of the blade of his axe in the ground to level the bank but it accidentally came in contact with Umaid Ali's head and caused his instantaneous death, and, as he was afraid of being accused of murder, he buried the body. Lakhi (P. W. 12) has stated that a day before the body of the deceased was found buried in a pit he saw the appellant and the deceased before noon. The appellant had an axe in his hand and the deceased was standing close to him. The appellant was digging a pit with the axe at the time that he saw him. On enquiring as to what he was doing the appellant told him that he was digging a pit to protect themselves and their clothes from rain. The witness thereupon left them. The spot where this witness saw the appellant digging a pit was the spot where the body was subsequently discovered buried.

The medical witness who examined the body has stated that there was a deep incised wound five inches long by one-fourth of an inch wide about the middle of the head, running from the front backwards and that from this injury brain matter was oozing. The skull and its membranes underneath had been cut through. This witness was of opinion that death was due to the smashing of the skull caused by a heavy blow from some sharp edged weapon such as an axe. The wound opened the scalp. The blow, the witness says, was a heavy one inflicted with great force and was necessarily fatal.

There can be no doubt that the explanation of the appellant that this injury was caused by the axe accidentally striking the head of the deceased is absurd. Moreover, the explanation given by the appellant as to why he came to be digging a pit is also, in my opinion, a wholly incredible one. I am satisfied on the evidence that the appellant deliberately murdered Umaid Ali and dug the pit for the purpose of burying his victim's body; moreover, that he prepared this pit for the purpose of concealing the crime which he intended to commit.

The motive alleged was a desire to kill the person to whom the girl, whom he desired to wed, was betrothed. Whether this be the reason for the murder or not it is difficult to say with certainty. There is no doubt, however, that the appellant did desire to wed this girl; there is no doubt that he was refused her hand on more than one occasion when he asked for it, and there is no doubt that the deceased was himself betrothed to this girl. The probabilities are that these circumstances actuated the appellant in committing the crime in question.

I am satisfied that the conclusion of the Sessions Judge as to the guilt of the appellant is the only possible conclusion which could be arrived at, and accordingly, I would dismiss the appeal.

The Crown presses for an enhancement of sentence on the ground that no adequate reason has been given by the learned Sessions Judge for imposing the lesser penalty. As I have already said the learned Sessions Judge has given as his reason for not imposing the death penalty the fact that the appellant is 19 or 20 years of age. In my opinion that reason is wholly inadequate. The murder in the present case was a particularly ruthless and brutal crime. There are no extenuating circumstances whatsoever, and the mere fact that the murderer is 19 or 20 years of age, in my opinion is a wholly insufficient reason for not imposing the appropriate sentence provided by law. I would accordingly accept the petition of the Crown and alter the sentence from one of transportation for life to that of death.

Addison, J.—I concur.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1997 of 1927, Decided on 24th February 1928, from order of Sess. Judge, Mianwali, D/- 1st August 1927.

Evidence Act, S. 45—Expert evidence on commission loses much of its value.

The evidence of an expert has always to be carefully weighed, but when given on commission its value is very considerably reduced.

Maya Das for Ram Lal Anand—for Petitioner.

Ram Lal—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Nur Din, son of Qadir Bakhsh, of Khushab, District Shahpur, was convicted by a Magistrate of the First Class of an offence under S. 409, I. P. C., and sentenced to four months rigorous imprisonment and the payment of a fine of Rs. 100 or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a further period of three months. He appealed to the learned Sessions Judge who, while maintaining the conviction, reduced the sentence to rigorous imprisonment for two months and the payment of a fine of Rs. 50 or in default 15 days' rigorous imprisonment.

Nur Din has now moved this Court under S. 439, Criminal P. C. The facts briefly, are that the petitioner Nur Din took over charge of the office of Secretary to the Municipal Committee of Khushab on 13th June 1923, from one Kadir Din, and apparently held the post in question up to October 1924. When the petitioner took over charge from Kadir Din he was handed a file regarding the making of a channel connecting with the river. In October 1926 the Municipal Committee instituted this case charging the petitioner with having received a sum of Rs. 9-10-1 from Kadir Din on 13th June 1923, and with having criminally misappropriated the same. His conviction is based on the testimony of Kadir Din and Sultan Ahmad, one of the employees of the Municipal Committee. These two witnesses state, the former that he handed over the money, and the latter that he saw it handed over. The former, Kadir Din, produced, in support of the statement, a document marked Ex. P.-B, dated 11th June 1923, in the handwriting of the petitioner, it being a list of the various documents, etc., which were handed over to him by the outgoing Secretary, Kadir Din. On the last page but one of this document appears the entry relating to the file regarding the making of the channel in question and in this entry appears a reference to the receipt by the petitioner of the file along with Rs. 9-10-1. The sum is entered in writing as well as in figures. Kadir Din when he made over charge also prepared a list of the various files, etc., that he was making over to the petitioner. No. 61 is the entry relating to this file. Here no mention whatever is made of Kadir Din having made over to the petitioner any money whatever. The entry in Ex. P-B where this sum is mentioned is said by the petitioner to have been subsequently made. He denied that it was in his handwriting. The document in question was sent down to Calcutta to one F. H Bennat, Handwriting Expert, who gave it as his opinion that the entry was in the handwriting of Nur Din. F. H. Benuat was examined on commission and not in the presence of the petitioner—a circumstance which I do not regard as satisfactory. The evidence of an expert has always to be carefully weighed but when given on commission, as in this case, its value to my mind is very considerably reduced.

In the present case the conviction of the petitioner has been based on the testimony of Kadir Din and Sultan Ahmad supported by the opinion of this expert. Kadir Din is, undoubtedly, a very interested person, while Sultan Ahmad has admitted that he was constantly being found fault with by the petitioner when he was the Secretary without any rhyme or reason. The evidence of these two witnesses is, to my mind, not sufficient for the conviction of the petitioner and I cannot regard the opinion of the expert in this case as affording such corroboration of that evidence as would justify the finding that the petitioner had committed the offence of which he has been charged. I would note that the reference to the money in Ex. P-B appears to be an interpolation and its absence from Ex. P-K is a matter not without significance.

In these circumstances I feel constrained to accept this petition and set aside the conviction and sentence. The fine, if paid, is to be refunded.

Civil P. C., O. 2, R. 2—Prior suit for possession of demised premises—Subsequent suit for recovery of compensation is not barred.

A prior suit for possession does not bar a subsequent suit for compensation for holding over in respect of the same land as the cause of action in the two suits is different: A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 118 and 129 P.R. 1889 (F.B.), Foll.; 38 Bom. 444, Diss. from. [P 534 C 2]

Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand—for Petitioner.

Sardha Ram—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The only question in this case is whether the plaintiff's suit for recovery of compensation from his tenant for contumacious holding over of the demised premises was barred under O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C., the plaintiff having instituted a suit for possession of such premises prior to the institution of the present suit. The Judge, Small Cause Court, has held, relying on Kashinath Ramchandra v. Nathu Keshav (1), that such a suit is barred under O. 2, R. 2, and has consequently dismissed it. This view of the Judge is opposed to two judgments: one of a Full Bench of the Chief Court of the Punjab, Bikrama v. Prab (2); and one of a Division Bench of this Court, i. e., Khushi Ram v. Abdul Ghafur (3). In the last-mentioned case Kashinath Ramchandra v. Nathu Keshav (1) was referred to and dissented from, and it was held that suits for possession and recovery of rent by a landlord against a tenant on breach of a condition contained in the rent-deed are not suits based on the same cause of action, and, therefore, the provisions of O. 2, R. 2 do not apply to such suits. In Bikrama v. Prab (2), it was held that suits to recover possession from a trespasser and compensation for illegal possession of the property are not suits which are based on the same cause of action, the ratio decidendi being that the right to recover profits and the right to possess property in respect of which a suit for profits was filed are distinct rights and can be claimed in separate suits. The combined effect of the two judgments cited above is that to a case like the present the provisions of O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C., have no application Consequently the distinction sought by Mr. Sardha Ram to be drawn between Kushi Ram v. Abdul Ghafur (3) and the present case does not really exist, because a suit for rent and recovery of demised property and a suit for recovery of compensation for illegal occupation and possession of property trespassed upon have been treated by this Court and the Chief Court of the Punjab on the same footing.

I hold, therefore, that the view of the learned Judge, Small Cause Court, is wrong and consequently his decree must be set aside and the plaintiff's suit decreed with costs throughout.

Duni Chand Kapur —for Petitioner.

Judgment.—The plaintiff's suit was dismissed in default on 29th April 1927, under O. 9, R. 3, Civil P. C. An application was filed for restoring the suit on 9th August 1927. In that application the petitioner stated that the case had been fixed for hearing on 26th April 1927. On that date the presiding officer of the Court was absent and the petitioner was given 9th August 1927 as the next date of hearing. He, therefore, prayed that this case might be restored. This application was itself dismissed as time barred on 24th August 1927.

The petitioner has now come on revision from both the original order dismissing the case in default and from the order dismissing the application as time barred. The last order is obviously correct. It seems to me that the Court might well have exercised its inherent jurisdiction in restoring the case if after enquiry it had discovered that the facts stated by the petitioner were correct, for in such a case the mistake was the mistake of the Court and not of the petitioner and the suit could not be properly dismissed on 29th April 1927. I allowed the petitioner to add a ground of revision against the original order. His statement as to the facts is supported by an affidavit of the pleader who appeared in the Court below for him originally as well as when the application to restore was made. The other side is not present though served and in the circumstances I restore the case, assuming the fact to be correct that the petitioner and his counsel were both given a wrong date on 26th April 1927, If this was so the case was improperly dismissed in default under O. 9, R. 3, which was not the date of hearing of which the petitioner had notice.

The revision is accepted accordingly.

Singer Sewing Machine—Plaintiff—Petitioner.

v.

Mt. Begam and others—Defendants—Respondents.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 726 of 1927, Decided on 24th April 1928, from order of Sr. Sub-Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 3rd August 1927.

* Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, Sch. 2, Cl. (15)—An action for the delivery of a specific chattel, if the right to delivery flowed from the contract, differs from an action for specific performance and is not, therefore, excepted from the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court.

An action for specific performance is appropriate only to the enforcement of obligations of an executory as distinguished from an executed contract. For this purpose an executory contract is an agreement which is not intended between the parties to be the final instrument regulating their mutual relations under their contract; an executed contract, on the contrary, is a contract in which all has been already done to settle finally the relative position of the parties. [P 536 C 1]

An action for the delivery of a specific chattel, if the right to delivery flowed from contract, differs from an action for specific performance, since it is based on an allegation not that a contract to deliver has not been performed, but that the chattel is the property of the plaintiff and is being wrongfully detained by the defendant, and, therefore, such an action is not excepted from the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court by virtue of Cl. (15). Such a suit is one for the return of a chattel from the bailee thereof on breach of the conditions on which the bailment took place. [P 536 C 1, 2]

Judgment.—The plaintiffs, who are the petitioners before me, describing themselves as the firm Singer Sewing Machine, instituted a suit against the defendants for the recovery of Rs. 229 and in the alternative for possession of a sewing machine alleging that they had given the machine on the hire-purchase system to Walayat Khan, predecessor-in-interest of defendants 1 to 4, and that Walayat Khan had illegally pawned the machine to defendant 6. The suit was partially decreed by the trial Judge. The plaintiffs filed an appeal against the decree in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Ludhiana, who, on an objection being raised by the respondent, has returned the memorandum of appeal to be presented to the proper Court on the ground that as the plaint involved a prayer for the return of the sewing machine, the suit was really for the specific performance of a contract and, therefore, excepted from the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court under Cl. 15 of the schedule to the Small Cause Courts Act and consequently the appeal from the decree passed in such a suit did not lie to the Senior Subordinate Judge. This is a petition by the plaintiffs for revision of that order.

It is admitted before me that if it be held that the suit was cognizable by a Small Cause Court, then the appeal would lie to the Senior Subordinate Judge. The only question, therefore, is whether that is a suit which is excepted from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court by virtue of Cl. 15 of the schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. That clause excepts from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Courts Act all suits for the specific performance or rescision of a contract. It is contended that as in the plaint a prayer in the alternative is made for the return of the sewing machine, the suit is really for the specific performance of the contract. Some authorities of the Chief Court of Oudh were cited by the respondents' counsel in support of the view of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, but, with great respect, I am not prepared to agree with those cases.

An action for specific performance is appropriate only to the enforcement of obligation of an executory as distinguished from an executed contract. For this purpose an executory contract is an agreement which is not intended between the parties to be the final instrument regulating their mutual relations under their contract; an executed contract, on the contrary, is a contract in which all has been already done to settle finally the relative position of the parties. Halsbury Laws of England, Vol. 27, para. 3, p. 3. Later in the same book instances are given of "kindred but distinct remedies," i. e., remedies which do not fall within the purview of "specific performance," and the opinion is expressed that an action for the delivery of a specific chattel, if the right to delivery flowed from contract, differs from an action for specific performance, since it is based on an allegation not that a contract to deliver has not been performed, but that the chattel is the property of the plaintiff and is being wrongfully detained by the defendant.

These remarks fully apply to the present case, which involves the performance of the conditions of an executed contract and not the enforcement of an executory contract and the plaintiffs' action is for the delivery of the sewing machine alleged to be the property of the plaintiffs which is being wrongfully detained by the defendants.

The prayer in the plaint no doubt involves the return of a specific article and the expression used therein is that by way of "specific reliefs" the return of the sewing machine be ordered if for some reason a decree for the amount claimed cannot be given. The expression "specific relief" as used in the plaint is probably unfortunate, but still it is not tantamount to a claim for specific performance of the contract. The suit in my opinion is a suit for the return of a chattel from the bailee thereof on breach of the conditions on which the bailment took place. It cannot by any stretch of language be called to be a suit for the specific performance of a contract as that term is technically understood.

I accept this petition, set aside the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge returning the memorandum of appeal and remit the case to him with the direction to proceed with the appeal in accordance with law. The costs of these proceedings will abide the result.

Second Appeal No. 1542 of 1923, Decided on 20th October 1927, from decree of District Judge, Amritsar, D/- 13th April 1923.

Civil P. C., S. 100—Appellate Court refusing to entertain point not raised in memorandum of appeal—Second appeal does not lie.

Where the lower appellate Court has in his discretion refused to allow a point, which had not been raised in the memorandum of appeal to his Court, to be taken at the hearing no second appeal lies against that exercise of discretion unless the discretion has been improperly or unjudicially exercised. [P 537 C 1]

Chandar Gupta for Fakir Chand—for Appellant.

Badri Das and Kishen Dayal—for Respondent.

Judgment.—Mr. Chandar Gupta for the defendant-appellant has sought to challenge the judgment of the lower appellate Court on grounds which were not raised in the memorandum of appeal to that Court.

He urges that the agreement in question cannot be enforced on account of uncertainty. The point was not taken in the appeal to the District Judge. He further urges that the decree went beyond the plaint in which the plaintiff stated his readiness to pay costs of registration which have been wrongly imposed upon the defendant by the decree. That is a point which was not raised before the learned District Judge in the memorandum of appeal to his Court and the learned District Judge for that reason refused to entertain that ground when the appeal came before him for hearing. The learned District Judge, in refusing to allow that point to be taken, was exercising his discretion and it cannot be said that he exercised that discretion improperly or unjudicially. That being so no second appeal lies against that exercise of discretion.

Another point which Mr. Chandar Gupta now seeks to argue is that there was no consideration for the original sale contract of 1908. That matter has been determined by the decision of the High Court in a judgment delivered on 27th October 1921, and is now not open to the appellant.

There is no other point raised before us and accordingly, as the other questions are concluded by the findings of the learned District Judge, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Moti Sagar—for Respondents.

Zafar Ali, J.—This is a petition under O. 45, R. 2, Civil P. C. (Act 5 of 1908) praying for a certificate that is required to appeal to His Majesty in Council from an appellate order of a Division Bench of this Court. The learned counsel for the respondents opposes the application on the ground that the case does not fulfil the requirements of S. 110, Civil P. C., inasmuch as the final order appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing the final order, and the appeal involves no substantial question of law.

The facts briefly are that a Judge of this High Court sitting alone in exercise of his original testamentary jurisdiction granted, after a prolonged enquiry, probate of the will and codicils made by Mrs. Jane Skinner of Delhi to one B. C. Sen, the executor appointed in the will. The caveators' appeal from the order of that learned Judge was heard by us, two Judges, and was dismissed. The case involved no question of law and we affirmed the findings of fact that had been arrived at by that learned Judge.

Counsel for the petitioner contends that, though an order of a single Judge of a High Court may be appealable to a Division Bench of that Court, the former could not be said to be immediately below the latter, and in support of this contention he cites Debendra Nath Das v. Bibudhendra Mansingh (1), where on second appeal to the High Court the decree of the lower appellate Court was set aside by a single Judge, but the judgment of the single Judge, was reversed on appeal by a Division Bench and the decree of the lower appellate Court was restored.

Thus the first judgment of the High Court reversed the decree of the Court immediately below, but this reversal was afterwards in effect cancelled with the result that the only effective judgment of the High Court affirmed the decision of the Court immediately below (S. 110, Civil P. C.)

Thus the decision of the single Judge was altogether eliminated in applying S. 110. In doing so, Jenkins, C. J., who delivered the judgment of the Bench, made the following observations :

(1) [1916] 43 Cal. 90=33 I. C. 745.

This appears to me to be the true result of the Letters Patent and the Code, for the Code makes no provision for an appeal within the High Court, that is to say, from a single Judge of the High Court. This right of appeal depends on Cl. 15 of the Charter, and here I may point out that a Judge sitting alone is not a Court subordinate to the High Court. but performs a function directed to be performed by the High Court (Cl. 36, Letters Patent) and thus no decision of a single Judge can be revised under S. 115 of the Code.

(corresponding to Cl. 10 of the Letters Patent constituting the High Court of Judicature at Lahore.)

But it appears that the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Tulsi Persad Bhakt v. Benayek Misser (2) was not brought to the notice of the learned Judges in the above case. In Tulsi Persad v. Benayek Misser (2), a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court had affirmed the decree of a single Judge passed in the exercise of the original jurisdiction of that Court, and the case involved no question of law. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, in view of the last clause of S. 110, held that the appeal to His Majesty in Council could not be entertained. Thus, "the single Judge" was considered by their Lordships to be "immediately below" the Division Court for the purposes of S. 110, Civil P. C., and it may be pointed out that "immediately below" does not necessarily mean "subordinate to."

We, therefore, are of opinion that the requirements of S. 110, Civil P. C., are not fulfilled in the case before us, and we accordingly dismiss this petition with costs.

Misc. First Appeal No. 1470 of 1927, Decided on 25th January 1928, from order of Sr. Sub-Judge, Ferozepore, D/- 28th April 1927.

Guardians and Wards Act (8 of 1890), S. 45 (1) (b)—Guardian submitting application at the instance of minor's mother for investing minors' money in a way different from that ordered by the Court—Court's order fining guardian is illegal as the case does not come under S. 45 (1) (b)—Guardians and Wards Act,

A guardian put in a petition to the Court to the effect that he had collected some money belonging to the minor, which should be deposited at a proper rate of interest and that he would be responsible for it. The Court ordered that he should put the money in fixed deposit in a bank on a certain date on which the guardian appeared and stated that he had not brought the money as the mother of the minor did not wish it to be deposited in a bank but wished that it should be lent out at a higher rate of interest with the help of the minor who had reached the age of 18 years. Thereupon the Court at once fined the guardian Rs. 50 for not having carried out its orders and it further directed that he would be fined Rs. 10 a day until he deposited the money.

Held : that the Court had no power under S. 45 (1) (b), Guardians and Wards Act, to impose the fine in question. That section only authorizes a Court to impose a fine on a guardian if the guardian fails to pay into Court on a requisition under S. 34 (d) of the Act, the balance due on the account exhibited by him in compliance with a requisition under S. 34 (c) and not for failure to deposit other moneys: 25 *C. Carden Noad—for the Crown.

Judgment.—A guardian put in a petition to the Court on the 24th March 1927 to the effect that he had collected Rs. 15,000 belonging to the minor from Gurdial Mal, which should be deposited at a proper rate of interest and that he would be responsible for it. Upon this the Court ordered that he should put the money in fixed deposit in the Punjab National Bank on or before the 28th April 1927. On the 28th April the guardian appeared and stated that he had not brought the money as the mother of the minor did not wish it to be deposited in a bank. She submitted an application that it should be lent out at a higher rate of interest with the help of the minor who had reached the age of 18 years. This obviously was not a contumacious refusal to carry out the Court's order. The Court, however, at once fined the guardian Rs. 50 for not having carried out its orders and it further directed that he would be fined Rs. 10 a day until he deposited the money. Against this decision this appeal has been preferred,

The appeal must obviously be accepted. In the first place the Court had no power under S. 45 (1) (b) to impose the fine in question. That only authorizes a Court to impose a fine on a guardian if the guardian fails to pay into Court on a requisition under S 34 (d) the balance due on the account exhibited by him in compliance with a requisition under S. 34 (c) and not for failure to deposit other moneys, Jaganath Panja v. Mahesh Chandra Pal (1). In the present case there was no requisition under S. 34 (c) and the order of the Court was illegal.

In any case the action of the guardian was not contumacious, and when the Court passed its order he at once deposited the money that very day, namely, on the 28th April 1927, in the Imperial Bank. He had no intention of keeping the money and his action was taken in the interest of the minor and at the request of the mother of the minor. For this reason also I accept this appeal.

There is still a third reason. He was given time up to the 28th April 1927 to deposit the money and he did deposit the money on the 28th April 1927. The Court's action in fining him was, therefore, premature and the appeal must be accepted for that reason also.

For the reasons given I accept this appeal, set aside the order of fine passed by the Court upon the appellant and direct that it shall be refunded to him if it has been paid.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 286 of 1926, Decided on 18th January 1928, from order of the Third Class Sub-Judge, Jullandar, D/- 2nd January 1926.

Specific Relief Act, S. 9 — Order in execution of decree under S. 9—Appeal.

No appeal lies from an order made in execution proceedings in a suit under S. 9 : 45 Cal 519, Foll.

[P 539 C 2]

Fakir Chand—for Petitioner.

R. C. Soni—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff under S. 9, Specific Relief Act, sued the defendant for possession of two sites, namely, the site J on which the defendant had built a wall and the site A on which the defendant had built a portion of a kotha. It was asked that possession should be given by demolition of the wall on J and of the portion of the kotha on site A. The suit was decreed, but in revision it was held by this Court that the plaintiff was only entitled under S. 9, Specific Relief Act, to a decree for possession of the sites and that it could not be ordered that the structures upon them should be demolished. Execution was applied for. The decree-holder admittedly has got possession of the site under the wall J. The Executing Court has refused to give him possession of the site A on two grounds. The first ground is that the site A is not sufficiently defined by the decree and the second that possession of the site A could not be given as it was enclosed with walls and roofed and thus physical entry for that purpose was not possible. Against this decision the plaintiff-decree-holder has put in this revision in this Court.

A preliminary objection was taken that the revision should be dismissed on the ground that an appeal lay to the District Judge. This is incorrect. Under the last clause of S. 9, Specific Relief Act, no appeal lies in proceedings in a suit under that section. It was held in Kandi Lal Ghose v. Jatindra Nath Chandra (1) that no appeal lies from an order made in execution proceedings in a suit under S. 9, Specific Relief Act. With this decision I respectfully agree and follow it.

The only question is as to site A. Counsel for the petitioner stated before me that the walls round the site A have now fallen down and that physical possession can be given. This is a question which can be better gone into by the executing Court. In any case it is clear that symbolical possession of the site A can be given by fixing a copy of the warrant of possession at the site A in a conspicuous place and proclaiming by beat of drum the substance of the decree.

(1) [1918] 45 Cal. 519=26 C. L. J. 325=42 I. C. 711=22 C. W. N. 446.

This should be done by the executing Court if physical possession cannot be given. That would amount to possession under the decree.

The other objection taken by the executing Courts is obviously wrong. The site A is clearly given in the plan which is to the scale. The exact area can be found from the plan and it is useless to say that the boundaries are indefinite and unknown. In a plan which is to scale this is impossible. The boundaries are perfectly definite and that is all that matters. It was the site A on the plan which was decreed and it can be ascertained definitely.

I accept the petition for revision with costs of this Court, set aside the order of the executing Court, and direct it to proceed with the execution of the decree in accordance with law and on the principles laid down above.

Municipal Committee, Montgomery—Respondent.

Criminal Case No. 232 of 1928, Decided on 13th April 1928, reported by Sessions Judge, Montgomery, on 23rd January 1928.

Punjab Municipal Act (3 of 1911, amended 1923), S. 197 (a)—The section does not authorize a Municipal Committee to frame a by-law prohibiting the sale by auction of fresh fruits and vegetables at any place other than a particular place.

Clause (a) of S. 197, as amended by the Municipal Act of 1923, does not authorize a Municipal Committee to frame a by-law prohibiting the sale by auction of fresh fruits and vegetables at any place other than a particular place. Therefore where a Municipality had framed a by-law that the sale should take place at a particular place under S. 197 (d) of the Act, which authorized the framing such a by-law but which sub-section had since been repealed by Act of 1923,

Held: that no person could be prosecuted for the breach of the by-law under old S. 197 (d) when the alleged offence was committed after passing of the Municipal Act of 1923.[P 541 C2]

Madan Chand—for Petitioners.

Order of Reference.—The facts in these cases are not in dispute, and the only point which really arises is the validity of the by-laws for the breach of which the petitioners have been convicted. This is a legal point which is common to all the five revision applications and can be dealt with in one reference. The Punjab Government Notification No. 21744, dated 7th September 1920, sanctioned by-laws passed by the Montgomery Municipal Committee which lay down the place in which fresh fruits and vegetables may be auctioned as the site of the pakka tank to be known in future as Ladha Singh chauk. The second by-law is to the effect that fresh fruits and vegetables shall not be auctioned in any other part of the Municipality, and the third by-law lays down the penalty for the breach. These by-laws were framed and sanctioned under S. 197 (d), Municipal Act, 1911, which allowed the Committee to fix by by-laws the places in which any specified article of food or drink may be sold or exposed for sale or the place in which it may be sold or exposed for sale. It is however admitted that the offences now in question were committed after the passing of the new Municipal Act of 1923 by which S. 197 was considerably altered. The old sub-S. (d) was omitted and sub-S. (a) was altered. In the old Act sub-S. (a) ran :

> May by by-laws prohibit the manufacture or preparation for sale of any specified articles of food and drink in any premises not licensed by the Committee.

In the New Act it was:

> May by by-laws prohibit the manufacture, sale or preparation for sale of any specified article, etc.

Now the learned counsel for the petitioners has attacked the validity of these by-laws on three grounds : The first ground is that they are ultra vires because they institute a new form of taxation without the previous sanction of the Local Government. Now here there is some conflict of thought. The Secretary for the Municipal Committee appeared before me and admitted that acting under the colour of these by-laws the Municipal Committee, by a resolution, had appointed a sole contractor for the auctioning of fresh fruits and vegetables and had permitted him to charge certain fees for auction, in exchange taking from him a lump sum amount which was credited to the revenues of the Municipal Committee. This certainly appears to me to be a new form of taxation, particularly when any competition is stifled and people are forced either to pay the fees demanded by the auctioneer or not to sell their produce at all. It is equivalent to the committee itself levying a tax on anybody who wishes to sell his produce by auction. But it is not these by-laws which have established this new form of taxation. They are perfectly innocent and it is the resolution of the committee to which the Secretary has alluded which is ultra vires and invalid. In the same way the second objection can be disposed of. This is to the effect that under these by-laws the Municipal Committee have established a monopoly of a public service and that such a monopoly is contrary to public policy. Here again it is not the by-laws which have established any monopoly but the resolutions passed by the Municipal Committee. The third objection, however, to the validity of the by-laws seems to me to be more cogent and this is that they are not authorized by S. 197 of the new Act. It has been argued on behalf of the Municipality that S. 197 (d) of the old Act has been merged into S. 197 (a) of the new Act, and that therefore the by-laws can be validly continued under S. 197 (a) of the new Act. This does not seem to me to be a tenable proposition. S. 197 (a) allows the committee to prohibit the sale of any specified articles of food in any premises which is not licensed by the committee. Now, the by-laws which are attacked say nothing whatever about any license. They merely say that fresh fruits, etc., shall not be auctioned in any other part of the Municipality except the Ladha Singh Chauk. They therefore restrict the liberty of action of the subject to a far greater extent than any by-laws which could be passed under S. 197 (a)

It therefore remains to be seen whether in spite of this these by-laws made under the old Act can be deemed to be continued under the new Act. S. 2 (2) of the Act of 1923 lays down that all by-laws made under the Act repealed shall, so far as may be deemed to have been made under this Act. In the commentary to Hari Chand's Manual the words "so far as may be" are explained as meaning that the by-laws in existence must also be consistent with the provisions of the new Act. Now this condition does not seem to me to be fulfilled in these cases. As I have shown above, these by-laws which have been made under the old S. 197 (d) are much more stringent than any which could possibly be made under the new S. 197 (a). It seems to me therefore that in view of the repeal of S. 197 (d) these by-laws must be held to be invalid and any conviction under them bad. I accordingly report these cases to the Honourable High Court, with the recommendation that the convictions be set aside.

Order of the High Court

There is no appearance on behalf of the Municipal Committee, Montgomery; but after considering the arguments before me by the learned counsel for the petitioners I am of opinion that the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge is correct. It will be observed that Cl. (d), S. 197, Municipal Act, has been repealed, and Cl, (a) of that section does not authorize the Municipal Committee to frame a by-law prohibiting the sale by auction of fresh fruits and vegetables at any place other than the Ladha Singh Chauk.

I accordingly accept the recommendation made by the learned Sessions Judge and, setting aside the conviction and sentence, direct that the fine, if realized, be refunded to the petitioners.

Report.—Alam, Sardara, and Mt. Baima, applicants, file an application against the order of Chaudhri Ranjha Khan, Magistrate, First Class, dated 30th August 1927, summoning them as accused to answer a complaint filed by one Mahanda under S 363, I. P. C., in which complainant stated that Mt. Fatima aged 13-14 years is his daughter, that two months previously the accused kidnapped her from his guardianship and are keeping her for illicit intercourse. That a report was made to the police and the accused promised to give back the girl but subsequently declined. After recording the complainant's statement the Court issued process against Raja accused alone under 363, I. P. C., on 15th August 1927. On the next day of hearing (30th August 1927) Raja accused did not appear in Court and the Court ordered warrants to issue against the other three accused.

So far as I can see the order of the Magistrate was not justified by any evidence before him. When he issued the order summoning the present applicants he had no further evidence than the statement of complainant which had been made before him on 15th August 1927. On that date (15th August 1927) the Magistrate saw cause only to summon one of the accused. The Magistrate has given, as his reason, for issuing the summonses against the other accused that it appears that they are abetting Raja accused, but this reason is not based on any evidence. The action of the Magistrate in first summoning one accused only on 15th August 1927, and later on 30th August 1927, summoning three others without recording any further evidence against them, seems arbitrary and not in accordance with the procedure laid down is S. 204, Criminal P. C. I cannot find any definite provision in the Code prohibiting a Magistrate from summoning accused persons at any stage in the case, but it is desirable that a ruling should be obtained on this point, as the procedure in the present case seems objectionable. I therefore accept the application for revision and under S. 438, Criminal P. C., forward the case to the Honourable Judges of the High Court for their orders.

Order.—A complaint was lodged under Ss. 363, 363/109, I. P. C., against four persons. The Magistrate examined the complainant and issued a bailable warrant for one accused only namely, Raja, who was said to be the principal offender. On the date fixed for hearing that warrant was found to have been returned with the report that the accused had disappeared with the girl. The Magistrate thereupon ordered warrants to issue for the other three accused.

The case has been referred by the District Magistrate of Gujrat on the ground that the second order appears to him to be arbitrary, and inasmuch as no further note was recorded after the first order had been passed the procedure was not that contemplated in S. 204, Criminal P. C. As I understand it the view taken by the District Magistrate is that it is irregular or illegal for a Magistrate to issue process piecemeal for the various accused persons in a complaint case unless he has taken some further evidence before issuing the second order. I do not think there is anything either irregular or improper in a Magistrate first issuing process for one and then changing his mind and issuing process for all the accused, and here the Magistrate gives his reason, which may be good or bad, but anyhow is a reason. He thought the disappearance of the principal accused pointed to the truth of the whole story as told by the complainant and without any further waste of time he proceeded against all the accused.

I do not think any reason has been shown for interference, and I dismiss the application for revision.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 1152 of 1927, Decided on 14th November 1927, from order of Sess-Judge, Lahore, D/- 22nd March 1927.

Ahmad Bakhsh—for Petitioner.

Ganga Ram—for Respondent.

Judgment.—Mt. Sarfraz, aged 8 or 9 months, applied through her mother Mt. Iqbal Begam, for an order of maintenance under S. 488, Criminal P. C., against her father Miran Bakhsh. It appears that Mt. Iqbal Begam, and her husband have quarrelled with each other and are living separately and that Mt. Iqbal Begam also applied for an order under S. 488 in her favour, but her application was dismissed. The learned Magistrate has dismissed the application of Mt. Sarfraz also on the ground that she was living with her mother and was not therefore entitled to any maintenance when "she was living apart from her father," who had offered to maintain her if her custody be given to him. In support of this view the Magistrate has relied upon Sardar Muhammad v. Mir Muhammad (1) and Man Singh v. Mt. Dharmon (2).

This is a petition for the revision of the order of the Magistrate presented by Mt. Iqbal Begam on behalf of her minor child.

In Man Singh v. Mt. Dharmon (2), the parties were Sikhs. The ages of the minor petitioners in that case do not appear from the judgment but it is probable that the learned Judges were influenced by the fact that the father, who offered to maintain his children if they came and lived with him, was their legal guardian in preference to the mother who represented them in the proceedings under S. 488. In the present case it is admitted by counsel for the respondent that Mt. Iqbal Begam is the legal guardian of her minor daughter, and thus entitled to her custody in preference to the respondent. The condition imposed by the latter therefore was calculated to deprive the mother of her undoubted right. In Sardar Muhammad v. Mir Muhammad (1), in which the parties were Mahomedans, it appears that the minor, on whose behalf the application was made, was a boy aged 9 years. The father offered to maintain him if the boy went to live with him. The following remarks made by the learned Judge in the concluding portion of his judgment sum up his view of the case :

> There is nothing to show that Mt. Karam Bibi (mother) or anyone else on behalf of Sardar Muhammad (minor) ever asked Nur Muhammad (father) for assistance until this application was filed and there is no reason why he should now be compelled to pay for his son's maintenance while living separately from him. The friends of the minor can move the proper Courts for an order appointing someone, other than Nur Muhammad, guardian of the boy, and if they succeed they would be entitled to claim maintenance from Nur Muhammad on his behalf.

It will thus be observed that the learned Judge considered that the father was entitled to decline to maintain his children if they refused to live with him without reasonable cause when he was entitled to their custody as their guardian, and that if another person had been appointed guardian of the minors, then the father was liable to maintain them while they were living with such guardian. The cases cited therefore do not support the view of the Magistrate on the admitted facts of this case.

It is not seriously contended before me that the father has not refused to maintain his daughter and the only ground on which the order of the Magistrate is sought to be supported is that the minor is not entitled to claim any maintenance because she is living separately from her father. This position cannot be sustained and I hold that if a minor is living with the legally constituted guardian other than the father, then an order for main tenance under S. 488 cannot be refused merely on the ground that the offer of the father to maintain the child, if the latter lives with him, is not accepted. In re Parathy Valappil Moideen (3) and Murgesan Mudaliar v. Sodiamma (4), support this view.

In the case before me, it being admitted that Mt. Iqbal Begam is the legal guardian of the petitioner, it follows that the child is entitled to an order for maintenance against her father while living with her legal guardian.

The Magistrate appears to consider that the minor needs maintenance, but he has not fixed the amount of such maintenance. Under the circumstances I accept this petition, set aside the order of the Magistrate and send the case back to him for disposal.

Criminal Appeal No. 892 of 1927, Decided on 21st December 1927, from order of Sess-Judge, Montgomery, D/- 1st August 1927.

Penal Code, S. 300, Excep. 1—Husband asking his wife to sever connexion with her lover—On her refusal quarral breaking out and ending in death of wife—Case does not come under Excep. 1 to S. 300, but extreme penalty is not called for.

Where the husband asked the wife to sever her connexion with her paramour but she declined to give up her lover, thereupon there was a quarrel between the husband and the wife in the course of which he lost his temper and killed his wife,

Held: that the accused did not receive any grave and sudden provocation, which would bring his case within the ambit of Excep. 1 to S. 300, but that the wife's persistent immorality coupled with her refusal to sever her connexion with the lover provoked the husband and prompted the assault which resulted in her death and that the extreme penalty of the law should not be exacted.

Balkishan Mehra—for Appellant.
Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant Ibrahim has been convicted of the murder of his wife Mt. Nur Bibi, and has been sentenced, under S. 302, I.P.C., to suffer the penalty of death. There is ample evidence on the record that, on the afternoon of 1st June 1927, at about 6 p. m., the prisoner attacked his wife with a hatchet and inflicted upon her three wounds including one on the neck, which resulted in the death of the victim immediately afterwards. Indeed, he himself admits that he did assault his wife with a hatchet and thereby caused her death. He, however, seeks to reduce the offence of murder to one of culpable homicide not amounting to murder by invoking the plea of grave and sudden provocation. He states that his wife had contracted an illicit intimacy with one Ismail, and that on the afternoon in question when he (prisoner) returned to his house from his fields he found the paramour embracing and kissing the woman. Thereupon he lost his self-control and assaulted the erring wife with an axe and caused her death. The paramour, however, managed to make good his escape.

The question for determination is whether the culprit upon whom the onus rested has succeeded in establishing his plea. Now, it may be conceded that Mt. Nur Bibi was on terms of illicit intimacy with Ismail, and that her husband had asked her to give up her immoral relations with the paramour. There is, however, not a scintilla of evidence that Ismail was found on that afternoon embracing Mt. Nur Bibi or that he did any other act which would amount to grave and sudden provocation. The witness Ranga Singh, who lives in the same compound as the prisoner, was an eye-witness of the whole affair. He deposes, that on the afternoon in question when he saw the husband attacking his wife he shouted out to Ismail, who was at that time coming from his own house, and asked him to come in and render help in rescuing the woman. He also describes the immediate cause which led to the assault. He says that the husband asked the wife to sever her connexion with her paramour Ismail, but that she declined to give up her lover.

Thereupon, there was a quarrel between the husband and the wife in the course of which the prisoner appears to have lost his temper and committed the assault in a fit of anger.

While we cannot hold that the accused received any grave and sudden provocation which would bring his case within the ambit of Excep. 1 to S. 300, I. P. C., we are of opinion that the wife's persistent immorality coupled with her refusal to sever her connexion with the lover provoked the husband and prompted the assault which resulted in her death. In these circumstances we do not think that the extreme penalty of the law should be exacted in this case. While upholding the conviction we accept the appeal so far as to reduce the sentence of death to one of transportation for life.

Moti Sagar and W. Chandra Dutta— for Respondents.

Dalip Singh, J.—The facts of this case are given in the judgment of Kundan Lal dated 9th March 1922, and the following is an excerpt from the judgment :

"Ganda Singh and his brother Mehtab Singh owned ¾ths of 4,890 kanals 8 marlas of land. Mehtab Singh died before 1882 leaving behind a widow Mt. Gujri. On 12th April 1882, Ganda Singh mortgaged the whole of the above land for Rs. 4,000 to Hazari Lal (Ex. P. 4)."

"On 13th May 1881, Tara Chand, father of Hazari Lal, etc., executed a mortgage-deed in favour of one Nihal Singh. On the strength of that deed Nihal Singh sued Tara Chand, etc., and obtained a decree for Rs. 3,401-8-0 on 6th August 1885 (Ex. P. 5). In execution of this decree Nihal Singh got the rights of Hazari Lal under the above mortgage-deed (executed by Ganda Singh in favour of Hazari Lal on 12th April 1882) attached. Hazari Lal objected to the attachment and his objection was allowed. Nihal Singh then filed a suit to establish his right to the attachment and obtained a decree on 18th December 1886 (Ex. P. 6). After this he got the mortgage rights of Hazari Lal sold in execution of his decree which he purchased himself. In this way Nihal Singh became a mortgagee of Ganda Singh in place of Hazari Lal. Nihal Singh then sued Ganda Singh on the basis of the mortgage-deed dated 12th April 1882 and obtained a decree for Rs. 8,853 on 20th April 1889 (P. 7). In execution he attached the land mortgaged i. e., ¾ths of 5008 kanals 13 marlas the difference in area being due to re-measurement. Mt. Gujri objected to the attachment of her half-share which was released from attachment. Out of the rest 1,076 kanals 19 marlas of land were sold on 24th November 1896 and were purchased by Nihal Singh's sons. On 30th October 1897 Nihal Singh's sons obtained possession of 1,056 kanals 19 marlas although the land sold was 1076 kanals 19 marlas. This is the only land in dispute in this case."

"On 28th March 1894 Nihal Singh mortgaged his rights, under mortgage-deed dated 12th April 1882 and the subsequent decree thereon to Kishore Chand Kanshi Ram for Rs. 4,000. On 30th March 1897, Kishore Chand Kanshi Ram sued the sons of Nihal Singh (who was dead) for recovery of Rs. 6,571-9-6 on the basis of the above mortgage-deed and got a decree on 13th July 1897 for the full amount claimed by them with an order that the money would be realized by sale of the property mortgaged (file 37) which included the land now in dispute. In execution of this decree, Jaimal Singh, father of defendants 1 and 2 purchased 515 kanals 9 marlas of land for Rs. 1,612 on 21st November 1904 and the sale was confirmed on 6th January 1905.

"On 7th May 1918 Asa Singh, son of Ganda Singh, sued for a declaration that the mortgage-deed dated 12th April 1882, and the mortgage rights acquired by Nihal Singh on the strength thereof, the decree dated 20th April 1889 in favour of Nihal Singh and the order dated 24th November 1896 sanctioning sale of the land shall not affect his reversionary rights (vide file 42). On 11th August 1900 he obtained an ex-parte decree (Ex. P. 8). Asa Singh died in 1903, Ganda Singh died on 5th June 1916. Plaintiff was born on 28th June 1916. He now sues for possession of 972 kanals 16 marlas of land on the allegations that Asa Singh died without issue; that since the decree obtained by Asa Singh on 11th August 1900 the son of Nihal Singh delivered possession of the land in suit to defendants 1 and 2who hold themselves out as vendees on behalf of the sons of Nihal Singh and that the alienation, if any, has no effect against the plaintiff."

The trial Court framed various issues most of which need not concern us now as they are concluded by findings of fact, but the net result was that the learned District Judge on appeal decreed the plaintiff's suit holding that he was entitled to immediate possession of 457 kanals 7 marlas out of the land in suit without any payment and that he was entitled to redeem the remaining land 515 kanals 9 marlas on payment of charges due provided his suit for redemption was competent. In second appeal before us it has been contended by counsel for the appellant-defendants, the sons of Nihal Singh, that the decree which was obtained by Asa Singh on 11th August 1900 could not enure to the benefit of the present plaintiff Waryam Singh, who was born after the decree had been obtained and after the death of Asa Singh. With this proposition of law we are not able to agree, and we hold in view of the rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in Venkata Narayana Pillai v. Subbammal (1) and Janaki Ammal v. Narayanaswami Aiyar (2) as well as the Full Bench judgments of the Allahabad High Court reported in Kesho Prasad Singh v. Shiv Prasad Ojha (3) and the Madras High Court in C.Varumma v. M. Gopala Dasayya (4), that such a decree does enure for all reversioners who may be entitled to succession when the succession opens out whether they were or were not in existence at the time the decree was obtained. The next point urged by counsel for the appellant was that as the decree obtained by Asa Singh was an ex-parte decree obtained without contest, therefore, it was not binding on the alienees. With this proposition we are also unable to agree. The learned counsel has cited Ramalinga Mudali v. Arumuga Mudali (5) in support of this contention and also Kesho Prasad v. Shiv Prasad (3). It is obvious, however, that while a reversioner can plead that another reversioner who brought a previous suit did not represent him because he did not contest the suit bona fide, such a plea is not open to the alienee. The learned counsel has also cited Bhup Kunwar v. Balbir Sahai (6), Saudagar Singh v. Pardip Narayan Singh (7) and Harvans Singh v. Harnam Singh (8), but we are unable to see the bearing of these particular rulings on the point before us. We, therefore, see no force in this appeal, which is dismissed with costs.

Mian Muhammad Shafi—for Appellants.

Ram Lal—for the Crown,

Addison, J.—The communal riots in Lahore City originated on the evening of 3rd May last when four Mussalmans were killed and others injured by a mob of Sikhs and Hindus in Haveli Kabli Mal. Next day there was a big funeral procession which caused further ill-will. As a result the same evening between 7 or 8 o'clock a number of Sikhs and Hindus were attacked in the Delhi Gate Bazar and three persons were killed at that place. These assaults took place within a short time of each other. This appeal is concerned with the assault in which Makhan Lal was killed and his brother, Atma Ram, severely injured. The six appellants are Natha Changar, Gaman, Fajia, Mahandu Toti and Mitta. They were found guilty of rioting under S. 147, I. P. C., and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment each. They were convicted under S. 326 read with S. 149, I.P.C., in connexion with the death of Makhan Lal and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100 each while they were also convicted under S. 324 read with S. 149, I. P. C., in connexion with the injuries caused to Atma Ram, and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment together with a fine of Rs. 50 each. The sentences of imprisonment were directed to run concurrently. It must also be noted that the same appellants were convicted under Ss. 147 and S. 326/149, I. P. C., in connexion with an assault which took place immediately after and in which one Sharm Singh was killed, In that case they were given the same sentences, which, however, were ordered to run concurrently with the sentences in Makhan Lal and Atma Ram's case on the ground that the two assaults formed part of the same transaction. In this way, the appellants have only been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment in the two cases.

It has been clearly established that the deceased Makhan Lal and his brother Atma Ram got into the back seat of a tonga at the railway station. The Mahomedans were in the front seat. When the tonga had gone through the Delhi Gate into the old city, the tonga was surrounded by a gang of Mahomedans. The front seat passengers were allowed to go as they were of the same religion. The driver was beaten but left alone when it was seen that he was a Mahomedan. The two Hindus were, however, attacked. Makhan Lal jumped into the front seat as he was being beaten. He was there stabbed in the back of the neck. According to the medical evidence the sharp weapon used to inflict this injury cut right through the trachea and œsophagus and death must have been instantaneous. As the wound started at the back of the neck, it was a deep one. There was one other injury on the deceased, namely, a vertical incised would, 1¼ inches long on the back of his head. This might have been caused by a shovel as alleged by some of the witnesses. Atma Ram had a contused wound in the vertex of his head, an incised wound on the left parietal region and a punctured wound on the left side of the abdomen. The doctor was so busy attending to other injured persons that he did not look for other injuries.

The tonga was led outside the Delhi Gate by one or two constables who arrived on the scene and from there the driver was directed to lead it to the kotwali. Every body was very busy there also. As Atma Ram was only injured he was sent at once to the hospital, while the dead body of Makhan Lal remained lying in the tonga till approximately 9-30 p. m. when a Sub-Inspector of Police questioned the tonga driver and prepared the inquest report. It was not possible for the police to start the investigation of the case till 10th May when things had quieted down a little and some degree of confidence had been restored. This explains why no relative went specially to report this or the other crimes and why no witnesses went to give information. Conditions were abnormal, people were thinking only of their own safety and the city was in a state of terror. Besides, it was known to all concerned that a note had been kept by the police of the persons killed and that enquiries would start in due course. These considerations sufficiently explain any delay on the part of witnesses in coming forward in the present case.

This delay was, however, very slight. The first day the police could take the case up, Atma Ram was searched for and his statement taken. On 12th May, the tonga driver Muhammad Amin (P. W. No. 9) was found and he identified at a parade held by a Magistrate two of the appellants Natha and Gaman. The 13th was spent in questioning the shopkeepers in the Delhi Gate Bazar. On the 14th the two eyewitnesses, Sadhu Singh and Labh Singh (P. W. Nos. 7 and 8) were found. The approver, Muhammad Din (P. W. No. 14) was arrested on the 15th and made a statement to the police on the 18th May. The witness Labhu Mal (P. W. No. 6) was discovered the same day. A pardon was later obtained for the approver and he was examined by a Magistrate of the First Class on 25th May. In view of the numerous cases under investigation and the state of the city at the time, I am of opinion that the witnesses in the present case were discovered in a very short time.

Muhammad Din, the approver, implicated all the appellants and stated that it was Gaman who thrust a knife through the neck of the deceased and Mitta who struck him on the head with a shovel. According to him, he and the appellants along with three persons said to be absconding gathered at Toti's shop and arranged to beat Sikhs and Hindus. They then attacked the passengers in the tongas this being the first assault he saw. Mitta was armed with the shovel, Natha had a stick. The others had bamboos. The approver picked up a fly-whisk. He did not see the knife in Gaman's hand till it was used. The approver has stated that after this assault he and a person, said to be absconding, joined temporarily another group which was responsible for the third murder, that of Jiwan Singh. The approver has explained that he was induced to make a full statement by talking to other approvers in the lock-up. He and his father are butter-sellers, while they are also employed by the Hindu Merchants in the Abkari Mandi. That is, however, not a sufficient reason why he should implicate falsely the appellants, who are Mahomedans like himself. He has stuck to the same statement throughout. As he is an approver, his statement by itself would not be sufficient for the conviction of the appellants and it has to be seen to what extent they are implicated by other testimony.

Atma Ram, brother of the deceased, was only able to identify out of the appellants, Natha and Gaman, whom he knew before. No enmity has been established between him and the appellants and this remark applies to all the eyewitnesses. There may have been communal ill-feeling at the time, but that would not explain why the Hindu witnesses should give false evidence against the appellants. Atma Ram was still in bed when the Inspector of Police found him on 10th May. He told nobody about what he knew before this except Uttam Chand, his cousin, who removed him from hospital. This was only to be expected for the reasons already given by me.

The tonga driver (P. W. No. 9) who picked out Natha and Gama at the parade held by the Magistrate two as of the assaillants has now stated that they were shown to him before and that he did not see them amongst the persons who took part in the attack. He also said that he was kept at the kotwali till 31st May when he made his statement before the committing Magistrate. I do not believe either of these statement but, the value to be attached to his previous identification is of course very little, if any, now that he has said that he did not see Natha and Gaman amongst the assailants. The fact that he did identify them is, however, admissible : see Ram Prasad v. Emperor (1). His denial in Court seems to be best explained on the ground that he does not wish to implicate his co-religionists.

Labhu Mal is an eye witness who watched the proceedings from a balcony of his house. Of those sitting at the shop of Toli appellant he recognized Natha Mitta, Fajia and Gaman, appellants, the approver and two persons said to be absconding, and he saw them taking part in the attack. He too has said that Gaman struck the deceased with a knife in the neck. His story is the same as that of the approver apart from details which no one could remember and apart from certain exaggerations of small importance. He was living in a house from which he could see what was happening and I can see no reason to reject his evidence.

The other two eyewitnesses are cousins, Sadhu Singh and Labh Singh, who lived in an ihata behind one of the lines of shops in the Delhi Gate Bazar. Hearing a noise in the bazar, they climbed on to the roof of their house and from there by way of other roofs reached the shop of Muhammad Hussain on the Delhi Gate Bazar. Sadhu Singh saw the appellants, the approver and certain others at Toti's shop and also witnessed the attack by them upon the tonga. He stated that Gaman stabbed Makhan Lal. Labh Singh only knew before Natha Fajia, Toti and Mitta out of the appellants, but he also identified Gaman in Court as the person who stabbed Mukhan Lal. The story of these witnesses agrees with that told by the approver, except that they said Fajia as well as Gaman had a knife. Sadhu Singh stated in the Court of the committing Magistrate in the case of Mukhan Lal, Atma Ram, that it was Fajia who stabbed Mukhan Lal and that it was Gaman who stabbed Sharm Singh (the second person assaulted by these appellants), whereas it should have been the other way about. Before the committing Magistrate; however, in the case of Sharm Singh' he said that it was Fajia who stabbed Sharm Singh. This contradiction may have been due to a temporary confusion when he was being examined before the committing Magistrate in Makhan Lal's case and in my opinion is not important. It was contended that these witnesses would never have gone over the roofs of houses to the bazar and that they must be held to be false witnesses. This does not follow. It is just the sort of thing that frightened persons might have done partly out of curiosity and partly because they thought that they could escape more easily from the roofs if anything were to happen. They made their statements to the police on 14th May. They are tailors working in shops in this bazar and would thus have known the appellants.

The appellants called no witnesses in their defence and, in my opinion, the evidence establishes beyond doubt that they were the assailants of Makhan Lal and Atma Ram. All the assessors held it proved that Gaman stabbed Makhan Lal and that the approver was there. The two Muhammoden assessors did not think the guilt of the other appellants established while the two Hindu assessors did. The learned Sessions Judge thought it doubtful whether the approver and the other witnesses could in the prevailing excitement and confusion have been certain that it was Gaman who stabbed Makhan Lal. He also considered that the common object of the assembly was to assail and beat Hindus and Sikhs and not to commit murder and that murder was not an offence such as the members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object or would be committed. He, therefore, refused to convict the assailants of murder but held them all guilty of causing grievous hurt with a sharp weapon under S. 326 read with S. 149, I. P. C, in connexion with Makhan Lal's death and of an offence under Ss. 324 and 149 I. P. C in connexion with Atma Ram's injuries, while he also held them all guilty of rioting under S. 147, I. P. C.

The Crown has preferred a revision petition to the effect that the appellants should be found guilty of murder under S. 302 read with S. 149, or that the sentences under Ss. 326 and 149 should be enhanced or, in any case, that the sentences under Ss 147, 326/149 and 324/149, I. P. C., should be consecutive and not concurrent. After careful consideration, I am not prepared to hold in this case that the convictions should be under S. 302 read with S. 149, I. P. C. It may be the case that the learned Sessions Judge has taken the view most favourable to the appellants, but as the view cannot be said to be clearly wrong, I would decline to interfere.

I would, therefore, maintain the convictions of the appellants and the sentences passed upon them, that is, I would dismiss both the appeal and the revision petition. The sentences will run concurrently with the sentences of transportation for life passed on the same appellants in Criminal Appeal No. 1056 and Criminal Revision No. 1796 of 1927.

Judgment. — This is a petition for revision of the order of the Subordinate Judge of Bhakkar, who directed that an award be filed. An objection was taken to the award on the ground that two out of the three arbitrators made private enquiry from several persons in the absence of the parties and based their award on such enquiry This is admitted by the arbitrators. But the Court below has held that this did not amount to a misconduct because the agreement to refer gave power to the arbitrators to make p ivate enquiry. He has followed A. I. R. 1922 All. 69. That case, however, does not support the conclusions of the Subordinate Judge because it appears from the report of that case that the agreement expressly provided that the arbitrators could make private enquiry. So far as the agreement in this case is concerned, it does not expressly confer any such power, nor does it do so impliedly. The passage in the agreement relied upon by the Subordinate Judge is to the effect that whatever award the arbitrators shall give after investigation and examination of the books, relating to the facts mentioned above shall be binding on the parties.

This certainly pre-supposes that all enquiry and examination of the books shall take place in the ordinary manner, i. e., in the presence of the parties. Any unusual power which is intended to be given to the arbitrators should have been expressly mentioned in the agreement. The arbitrators not only held the enquiry in the absence of the parties but also in the absence of each other.

I am, therefore, unable to agree with the Court below that the agreement provided for a private enquiry by the arbitrators and must, therefore, hold that they were guilty of misconduct and that the award given by them under these circumstances was illegal and unenforceable.

Counsel for the respondent, however, contended that such an objection could not be taken on revision and in support of his contention relies upon Parama Dutt v Bipju (1). That case, however, is distinguishable from this case because here, the ground for revision is the misinterpretation by the Court of the document referring the dispute to the arbitrators.

An objection was also taken by the respondent that this revision did not lie. What happened was this : a previous petition for revision was dismissed in default in the presence of the respondent. The present petition was filed soon after its dismissal and a prayer is added that if it be held that fresh petition for revision does not lie, the present petition be treated as an application for restoration of the former petition, which was dismissed by default. I am satisfied that there was good reason for previous default by the petitioner and would, in any case, treat this application as an application for restoration of the previous petition and grant the same, though I am inclined to think that a fresh petition for revision lies. This view is supported by Suraj Deo Narayan Singh v. Pratap Rai (2) read with S. 141, Civil P C.

I accept this petition, set aside the order of the Court below and set aside the award with costs throughout.

Judgment.—This is a Crown appeal against the acquittal of an accused Shib Charan who was tried on a charge under S. 511 read with S. 420, I. P. C., for having attempted to cheat by dishonestly and fraudulently attempting to recover the value of two currency notes from the Currency Offices at Bombay and Madras.

The story for the prosecution was that, in October 1925, in a letter, Ex. P F, Shib Charan informed the Currency Office, Madras, that he had lost one-half of the Rs. 100 currency-note No. DE/42-31436 during a journey to Delhi on the 10th September 1925, and asked to be informed of the procedure for recovery of the value of the note. He addressed the Bombay Currency Office in the same manner in the letter Ex. P B in respect of the Rs. 100 currency-note No. SD/92-90321.

In compliance with instructions received in reply to his enquiries he forwarded to the Madras and Bombay Offices the halves of these two notes still in his possession with the prescribed application forms and affidavits testifying that he was the owner of the notes.

The Currency Officer had, however, already paid the value of these notes to the firm Amba Lal-Gobind Lal on representation by that firm that the halves of the notes had been stolen from Lal Bhai, one of the partners who was carrying them from Delhi to Ahmedabad.

Shib Charan was prosecuted under S. 511 read with S. 420, I. P. C. His defence was that one Johri Mal, the writer of the two letters, Exs. P B and P F had taken his signatures upon two, three or four blank papers. He was unable to identify his signatures on those two documents without spectacles which he had not brought with him. His signatures on the subsequent communications with the Currency Office had also been made upon blank papers. The affidavits (Exs. P E and P K) had been produced for attestation before the Tahsildar of Nuh by Johri Mal at whose instance he had signed them before when the forms had been filled up. He denied that he had attempted dishonestly to recover the value of the currency notes sent to Madras and Bombay.

The Magistrate, without recording any clear finding as to the dishonest intention of the accused in endeavouring to recover the value of the currency notes, acquitted him on the ground that it was the practice of the Currency Offices not to make payments in such cases until the claimant had executed an indemnity bond, and as no such indemnity bond had been executed by Shib Charan his conduct had not amounted to an attempt to cheat, but had remained within the stage of preparation for the offence. He cited Queen-Empress v Dhundi (1) and Data Ram v. Empress (2).

On behalf of the Crown the learned Government Advocate has contended that the evidence in the case, if believed, was sufficient to establish clearly the charge of cheating as defined in S. 511, I. P. C. He has referred us to the Government of Bengal v. Umesh Chunder Mitter (3), a case which appears to be virtually on all fours with the one now before us.

After hearing what Mr. Rama Nand has to say in opposing the appeal, I find myself in no doubt that the Magistrate's view of the law was incorrect.

The intention of S. 511, I. P. C., was fully discussed by the Allahabad Court in MacCrea's case (4), where Blair, J., remarked that S. 511, I. P. C., appeared to use the word "attempt" in a very large sense, making punishable any one act of a series of acts conducive to the commission of an offence and excluding the notion that the final act short of actual commission is alone punishable, the definition of what is punishable as an "attempt" under the Indian Penal Code being thus markedly differentiated from what is a criminal attempt according to the accepted English doctrine. The same view was expressed emphatically by Knox, J., in the same case. After a review of a number of Indian rulings on the point he held, without hesitation, that

> S. 511 was never meant to cover only the penultimate act towards completion of an act and not acts precedent, if those acts are done in the course of the attempt to commit the offence, are done with the intent to commit it and done towards its commission * * * *. The question is not one of mere proximity in time or place * * * *. Again, the attempt once begun and a criminal act done in pursuance of it towards the commission of the act attempted, does not cease to be a criminal attempt, because the person committing the offence does or may repent before the attempt is completed.

MacCrea's case came ultimately before the Privy Council [Ma Crea Ex-parte (5)]: where the correctness of the interpretation put upon S.511 by the Allahabad Court was questioned. In refusing leave to appeal the Lord Chancellor remarked that their Lordships saw no reason to believe that there was any misdirection on the part of the learned trial Judge who had laid down in his charge to the jury that in order to convict the prisoner they must be satisfied not only that he intended to cheat but that he had done an act towards that cheating.

> The learned Judge (to quote the words of the Lord Chancellor) clearly had in view the distinction between preparation to commit an offence and acts done towards the commission of the offence.

(5) [1893] 15 All. 310=20 I.A. 90=(1893) A.C. 346=6 Sar. 344 (P.C.).

In Queen-Empress v. Kalyan Singh (6), Burkitt, J., citing MacCrea's case held that an accused at whose instance a petition writer had commenced the writing out of a fraudulent and fictitious bond in favour of the accused upon a stamped paper purchased by the accused under the name of the person by whom the bond was to be payable, had been rightly convicted of an attempt to commit the offence defined in S. 467, I. P. C.

In the Government of Bengal v. Umesh Chunder Mitter (3), referred to by the learned Government Advocate the accused against whose acquittal the Crown had appealed had, as here, sought to recover from a Currency Office, upon the halves of two currency notes, the value of the notes, declaring that the halves not in his possession had been lost by him. In reply to a communication from the Currency Office, who were aware that the amount of the notes had been paid to the holder of their other halves, he had submitted a formal claim applying for the payment of the money and stating that he was the proprietor of the entire notes. The application by the accused was dishonest. It was argued for the accused, as it has been argued before us for Shib Charan that his act at the most amounted to preparation to commit an offence and that, as the officer in charge of the Currency Officer, knew that the matters stated by the accused in his application were untrue and would not have paid the money, the offence of cheating could not be completed and therefore the attempt to cheat could not have been committed. The Court in rejecting this proposition pointed out that a man may attempt to cheat, although the person when he attempts to cheat is forewarned and is, therefore, not cheated. In that case also, as here, it was further argued on behalf of the accused that as it was usual to take a bond of indemnity from applicants before payment of the value of currency notes of which halves had been lost, the attempt had not been completed because such an indemnity bond had not been executed. It was, however, held that the application for the money was the attempt, or at any rate sufficient to constitute an attempt:

> The execution of the bond of indemnity, the learned Judge went on to remark is not a portion of the application and is an act which would ordinarily take place before the act of cheating is completed. As far as the applicant is concerned he would be willing to take the money without an indemnity bond and by his making a false attempt in asking for the money the offence would be just as complete, whether an indemnity bond was or was not insisted upon.

The question how far preparation for an offence must be carried to be punishable as an attempt under S. 511 came before the Punjab Chief Court in Abdulla v. Emperor (7). There, after referring to certain suggested definitions of the word "attempt" to be found in legal commentaries the learned Judges expressed their opinion that cases can and do arise in which the offence of "attempt" to commit an offence has been committed even though, in order to the completion of the offence, something more remained to be done by the offender. The attention of the learned Judges had been drawn to Queen-Empress v. Dhundi (1), which, as already stated, was relied upon by the Magistrate in acquitting Shib Charan. The facts in Queen-Empress v. Dhundi's case (1), are not on all fours with the one before us for, as pointed out in the judgment by the Allahabad Court in MacCrea's case, the person upon whom the fraud had to be perpetrated had not been approached in any way by the accused.

The facts in Data Ram v. Empress (2) were also entirely different from those of the present case. There, the Punjab Chief Court, remarking that mere preparation was not sufficient to complete the offence of an attempt, held that the mere act of bringing a sword was not an act of such an approximate nature as would amount to an attempt to commit murder or grevious hurt.

Following the interpretation of S. 511 adopted by the learned Judges in MacCrea's case and in Re The Government of Bengal v. Umesh Chander Mitter (3). I am satisfied that the view that an attempt to commit an offence is not punishable under S. 511 unless the final act short of actual commission of that offence has been accomplished, is an erroneous one.

Holding that the judgment appealed against is manifestly wrong, and being of opinion that the interests of justice require a re-decision of the case, I would accept this appeal, set aside the acquittal, order the respondent to surrender to his bail bond and return the case to the Magistrate for re-decision upon the merits in view of the interpretation of the law set forth above. The Magistrate has, of course, still to decide upon the evidence whether, in acting as the Magistrate finds it proved that he acted, the accused had a fraudulent or dishonest intention.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal—for Appellant.

Faqir Chand—for Respondents.

Bhide, J. — On 11th January 1904 Banarsi Das a Khatri (father of defendant 1 and brother of defendant 2) took on lease 2 biswas and 5 biswansis of land from Kahan Singh, father of plaintiff. The land was admittedly agricultural at the time though it was leased for building purposes. The lease purported to be for a period of 20 years at an annual rental of Rs. 16, but contained a clause giving the tenant option to continue in occupation after the expiry of that period on the same rent. This condition is now the chief bone of contention between the parties and ran as follows:

Agar muzhar bad bis sal ayanda ko arazi apne qabze men rakhana chahega to is sharat lagan se hasab ..... razamandi malik rakhunga.

At the time of mutation the Collector cancelled this condition as contravening the provisions of the Punjab Land Alienation Act, as no lease of agricultural land for a period of over 20 years by a member of an agricultural tribe in favour of a non-agriculturist is permissible under that Act. After the expiry of the period of 20 years the landlord gave notice to the defendants to vacate the land, but as they failed to comply with the terms of the notice he instituted the present suit for ejectment and damages for contumacious holding over at the rate of Rs. 2 per diem. Defendant 2 who contested the suit pleaded that by virtue of the condition quoted above he was not liable to be ejected, that the Collector had no authority to cancel the condition, and that in any case the plaintiff was estopped by his conduct from asking for ejectment inasmuch as he had permitted valuable buildings to be erected on the land.

The trial Court upheld these contentions and dismissed the suit.

On appeal the learned District Judge disagreed with the trial Court and granted a decree for ejectment and also for damages at the rate of Rs. 100 per annum. From this decision defendant 2 has filed a second appeal.

The only points urged on behalf of the appellant before us were:

1. That the Collector's action in cancelling the condition in the lease quoted above was ultra vires, that the condition was still binding on the parties and that the defendants were, therefore, not liable to ejectment.

2. That the amount of damages awarded is excessive.

As regards the first point: the contention that the Collector had no power to cancel the condition in the lease referred to above, appears to me to be sound. The lease was in the first instance only for a period of 20 years and the mere fact that option was given to the tenant to remain in occupation thereafter, if he chose to do so on certain conditions, could not ipso facto convert it into a lease for a longer period: vide inter alia A. C. Boyd v. A. Kreig (1). But assuming this condition to be binding on the parties, it does not appear to me to support the appellant's contention that he is not liable to be ejected. According to the plain interpretation of the language used, hasab razamandi malik, the tenant could only continue in occupation with the consent of the landlord. It was argued that these words merely recited that the consent of the landlord had been obtained and were equivalent to "according to the consent of the landlord already obtained."

This interpretation seems to me to be a very far-fetched one. If the consent of the landlord was not needed for further occupation there was no point in inserting these words at all in the condition. The trial Court remarked that as the rent for the subsequent period of occupation had been fixed there was nothing left for which the consent of the landlord could be necessary. But there might be obviously other conditions of the tenancy, e. g., period of further occupation, etc., for which landlord's consent would be essential. The land had been leased for building purposes, and it cannot be assumed, in the absence of any clear recital in the lease to that effect that the landlord intended to allow the tenant to remain in permanent occupation at the trifling rent of Rs. 16 per annum. The mere fact that valuable buildings were allowed to be constructed on the land cannot be taken as any indication of the parties to create a permanent tenancy, as it was clearly provided in the lease itself that, in the event of ejectment, the tenant was to remove the materials of the buildings. The decree for ejectment passed by the learned District Judge appears to me to be amply justified by the terms of the lease.

As regards damages: the learned District Judge has fixed the rent at Rs. 100 per annum. It was argued that the rent for "contumacious holding over" should not have exceeded Rs. 32 per annum, i. e, double the rent reserved by the lease. 33 P. R. 1898 and Pirbhu Dial v. Ram Chand (2) were cited as authorities. But these authorities do not lay down any such hard-and-fast rule. It was remarked in the latter ruling that double the rent may sometimes be taken as a fitting standerd, but that, in considering what sum should be allowed for use and occupation, or for damages for contumacious holding over, the whole circumstances of the tenancy and the sufficiency in point of time of the notice may properly be taken into consideration: vide Pirbhu Dial v. Ram Chand (2). In the present instance, notice was given on 27th June 1923 i. e., about six months before the expiry of the period of the lease, and yet the defendants failed to vacate the land even up to 6th February 1926, when the present suit was instituted. After the expiry of the period of the lease the defendants appear to have had no legal justification for remaining in occupation of the land and seem to have done so merely on account of the substantial income they were deriving from the buildings which are now situated apparently in the midst of a flourishing mandi. The plaintiff has produced evidence to the effect that the land in dispute would now fetch a rent of Rs. 700 to Rs. 1,000 per annum which stands unrebutted. Although this may be an exaggerated estimate of the rent, the amount fixed by the learned District Judge at Rs. 100 per annum does not appear to be excessive for a building site situated in a mandi.

I would accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs. The defendants are given a further period of three months from this date to remove the materials of the building.

Judgment.—One Jhanda was adjudicated an insolvent on 7th February 1927, and the record was handed over to the Official Receiver to deal with the case. Amongst other things the Official Receiver came to the conclusion that a mortgage for Rs. 99 in the name of Barkat, the minor son of the insolvent, which was effected on 10th February 1927, was not an asset of the insolvent, but that the transaction was in really entered into for the benefit of one Karam Chand who, being a non-agriculturist, could not take a mortgage in his own name and, therefore, took it benami in the name of the minor Barkat. The Official Receiver also held that a mortgage for Rs. 299 effected on 9th February 1927, in the name of Ghani Muhammad, another minor son of the insolvent, was really an asset of the insolvent. An application against the recommendation of the Official Receiver as regards the mortgage in Barkat's name was put in by the creditors presumably under S. 68, Insolvency Act, while Ghulam Muhammad, the maternal uncle of Ghani Muhammad, put in an application against the recommendation made in the case of the second mortgage. The District Judge has held that both the mortgages were mortgages of the insolvent and has directed the Official Receiver to dispose of them as the assets of the insolvent. Against this decision (1) Ghani Muhammad through Munshi, and (2) Barkat through Munshi and Karam Chand have preferred this appeal.

It is objected that no appeal lies without leave. This is not correct. Where property is seized by a Receiver as belonging to an insolvent and a claim is preferred under S. 68 by a third party to such property and the claim is allowed an appeal lies under S. 75: see notes at p. 406 of Rustomji's Insolvency and Bankruptcy 2nd edn. and Allapichai v. Kuppai Pichai Rowther (1). In any case it is perfectly clear that this is a decision of the District Judge finally holding that the title of these two mortgages is in the insolvent. The case is, therefore, one under S. 4, sub-Cl. (1) of the Act and an appeal lies from the decision of the District Judge on the point.

It is clear that all the proceedings have been without jurisdiction and illegal. The Official Receiver, when enquiring into the matter, had not before him the two minors or Karam Chand as parties. Before the District Judge also the minor Barkat and Karam Chand were not parties. Ghani Muhammad seems to have been a party before the District Judge as he, through his maternal uncle, put in an application that the mortgage was his and had been acquired for him by his maternal uncle and that it was not his father's He, however, was not a party before the Official Receiver. The District Judge proceeded to dispose of the matter before him without recording any evidence. The whole proceedings have, in my opinion, been misconceived. As the decision of the District Judge purports to be one under S. 4 (1), Insolvency Act, it was necessary for him to try the matter like a regular suit after having all the parties before him, taking their pleadings, admitting their documents and hearing their evidence. It is not possible to decide a question of title in the manner adopted in the present case. I, therefore, accept this appeal and remand the proceedings to the District Judge for re-decision, in accordance with law, of the question of title arising in the case of the two mortgages. I make no order as to costs of this Court.

N.K. Appeal accepted.

Civil Ref. No. 6 of 1926, Decided on 11th April 1928, made by Dist. Judge, Lahore, on 8th February 1926.

 Divorce Act (1869 amended 1926)—Parties resident in India but domiciled in England—Decree for dissolution cannot be passed—Divorce Jurisdiction Act, 1926, (Indian and Colonial 16 and 17 Geo. 5, Ch. 40), S. 3.

As under the Indian Divorce Act (1869) amended by Act (25 of 1926), the Courts in India cannot pass a decree for divorce in cases of persons resident in India but not domiciled therein, and as the Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Act passed by the British Parliament in 1926 validates only decrees passed and confirmed under the Indian DivorceAct prior to 15th December 1926, the Indian Courts cannot confirm, after the passing of the English statute and the amendment of the Indian Act, where the parties are residents in India but domiciled in England, a decree nisi though the decree nisi may have been passed prior to the passing of the English statute. A decree of dissolution of marriage confirmed or made absolute after 25th March 1926, the date when the amendment of the Indian Act came into force, would be a nullity, as the order of confirming or making absolute is itself a decree of dissolution, and the making of it is prohibited by the Indian Act of 1925 in cases where the parties to the marriage are not domiciled in India at the date of presentation of the petition. As such a decree cannot be made under the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act, as amended by Act No. 25 of 1926, it would not be rendered valid by S. 3, Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Act. [P 560 C 2]

Norman Edmunds—for Petitioner.

C. H. Carden Noad—for Respondent.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On 27th January 1926, the District Judge of Lahore granted a decree dissolving the marriage of Mrs. Lydia Agnes Waller with Samuel James Waller. On 4th October 1926, the wife made an application praying that the decree of the District Judge be confirmed by the High Court. This application came before a Bench of three Judges who made an order, at the request of the counsel for the petitioner, that the matter be kept pending until the passing of the statute by the British Parliament known as the Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Act, 1926. That Act has now come into force, and the petitioner has again applied for the confirmation of the decree granted by the District Judge.

The parties, who profess the Christian religion, were married and resided in India, but they were domiciled in England. The question arises whether this Court has jurisdiction to confirm the decree. Now, there was a divergence of judicial opinion on the question of whether under the Indian Divorce Act, 1869 mere residence within the forum conferred jurisdiction upon the Indian Courts to grant a decree for the dissolution of a marriage between persons who were not domiciled in India. The question was answered in the affirmative by this Court in Lee v. Lee (1), and the same rule was subsequently adopted by the Calcutta High Court in Isharani Nirupoma Devi v. Victor Nitendra Narain (2). It was, however, pointed out in my judgment in Lee v. Lee (1), that, while the Indian Courts had no alternative but to exercise jurisdiction in divorce on the ground of mere residence, the Courts in England would not give recognition to the decree granted by the Indian Courts to parties not domiciled in India. As observed in that case, > this conflict of laws is bound to lead to the scandal that a man and a woman are held to be man and wife in one country and strangers in another. The scandal is not confined to their own personal relations, but affects also the validity of a subsequent marriage entered into by either of the parties, the legitimacy of the issue of that marriage, and succession of the property owned by the parties to the second marriage. Indeed, the second marriage could be treated by the English Courts as a bigamous marriage and the parties could be arraigned before a criminal Court. These and other consequences, which must result from a conflict between the two systems of law, are very serious matters; and, while they cannot influence the decision of the Courts, they must receive due consideration from the authorities who are responsible for amending the law.

The British Legislature accordingly put an end to this conflict of laws by passing the Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Act, 1926, 16 and 17 Geo. 5, Ch. 40. But, before the enforcement of this statute, the Indian Divorce Act of 1869 had been amended by the Indian Legislature, by which the Indian Courts were prohibited from making a decree of the dissolution of a marriage, > except where the parties to the marriage are domiciled in India at the time when the petition is presented.

This Act, which was promulgated on 25th March 1926, definitely laid down that jurisdiction in the matter of divorce depended upon domicile and not upon residence, and thereby assimilated the law in India to that obtaining in England.

(1) A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 513=5 Lah. 147 (F. B.).

(2) A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 871=53 Cal. 282.

The learned counsel on both sides admit that the marriage in this case could not be treated as having been dissolved until the confirmation of the decree granted by the District Judge, and that the rule enacted by the Indian Divorce (Amendment) Act of 1926 prevents this Court from confirming that decree, though it was made before the date of the enforcement of the Act. There can, therefore, be no doubt, when the application for confirming the decree came up originally before a Bench of this Court it was bound to be dismissed on the ground of want of jurisdiction.

It is, however, urged that the Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Act, 1926, has since invested the High Court with the jurisdiction to confirm the decree. Now. a perusal of that statute shows that the primary object of the legislature was to confer on the High Courts in India jurisdiction to make a decree for the dissolution of a marriage, and as incidental thereto to make an order as to damages, alimony or maintenance, custody of children, and costs, where the parties to the marriage are "British subjects domiciled in England or in Scotland, in any case where a Court in India would have such jurisdiction if the parties to the marriage were domiciled in India.

The reason for this legislation was that a person, who, owing to official duty, poverty or any other sufficient cause, is unable to take proceedings in the Court of the country in which he or she is domiciled, should be allowed to obtain in India the same relief as might have been granted to him or her by the Court of domicile. This is the provision for the future. But the legislature also desired to give validity to decrees and proceedings which, validly taken under the Indian Divorce Act, would be invalid under the English law. To achieve this purpose S. 3 was enacted by which it was provided that:

Any decree granted under the Act of the Indian Legislature known as the Indian Divorce Act, 1869, and confirmed or made absolute under the provisions of that Act, for the dissolution of a marriage the parties to which were at the time of the commencement of the proceedings domiciled in England or in Scotland, and any order made by the Court in relation to any such decree shall, if the proceedings were commenced before the passing of this Act, be as valid and be deemed always to have been as valid in all respects as though the parties to the marriage had been domiciled in India.

It is argued that, while the High Court could not, after the commencement of the Indian Divorce (Amendment) Act, 1926, confirm the decree, it has now authority to do so under the aforesaid section of the British statute. But shortly, the contention amounts to this: proceedings, which would be invalid even under the Indian law, have been rendered valid by the statute of the British Parliament. To this contention I am unable to accede. I have no hesitation in holding that S. 3 contemplates only cases of this description. Proceedings have been taken under the Indian law and are valid under that law. But they cannot be treated as valid by the British Courts. The section lays down that such proceedings shall be deemed to be valid even by the British Courts. I do not think that the British Legislature ever intended to legalize an act which could not be validly done under the Indian law.

So far as the present application is concerned the short answer is that the third section of the statute, which is the only law invoked on behalf of the petitioner, lays down in express terms that the decree for the dissolution of marriage must be granted under the Indian Divorce Act and "confirmed or made absolute under the provisions of that Act" ; and that the decree in question was not confirmed and could not be confirmed under the Indian Divorce Act as amended by the Act of 1926. For the aforesaid reasons I hold that this Court has no jurisdiction to confirm the decree of the District Judge. The application is accordingly dismissed.

Broadway, J.—On 4th June 1925, one Mrs. L. A. Waller instituted a suit against her husband. S. J Waller, for dissolution of marriage on the usual grounds and obtained a decree nisi on 27th January 1926.

After the expiry of six months Mrs. L.A. Waller filed a petition in this Court under S. 17, Indian Divorce Act 4, 1869, which came up for hearing before a Special Bench on 17th December 1926, and 21st January 1927, when it was discovered that the parties were domiciled in England. Having regard to the provisions of Act 25 of 1926, amending the Indian Divorce Act 4 of 1869, it was held that this Court had no jurisdiction to confirm the decree. Instead of refusing to confirm it, however, the case was adjourned at the request of the counsel for Mrs. Waller to await the enactment of a Bill which was said to be before the English Legislature and which, it was alleged, dealt with this matter.

The petitioner has moved this Court again, and it has been urged both by her counsel and by the learned Government Advocate who appeared for the King's Proctor, that S. 3, Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Act, 1926 (16 and 17 Geo. 5, Ch. 40) gave this Ccurt jurisdiction to confirm the decree.

It is, I think, clear that subsequent to the passing of the amending Act 25 of 1926 the Courts in this country had no jurisdiction in matrimonial suits which related to persons domiciled in England or Scotland. The question is whether the Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Act 1926, passed by the British Parliament, gives the Courts in this country the jurisdiction claimed on behalf of the petitioner. After giving due weight to the arguments advanced by the learned counsel, in my judgment the answer must be in the negative S. 3 of the English Act deals with the validity of certain decrees passed by the Indian Courts, but to my mind it only validates such decrees or orders as the Indian Courts could, under Act 4 of 1869, have passed or made. The Amending Act 25 of 1926 came into force in March 1926, and after that date the Courts in this country had no jurisdiction whatever either to grant or confirm a decree in a case like the present. In these circumstances, however hardly this view may operate on the petitioner, I consider that it is impossible for this Court to confirm the decree and that we must, therefore, decline to do so.

Fforde, J.—This is an application brought under the provisions of S. 17, Indian Divorce Act 1869, for the confirmation of a decree of dissolution of marriage made by the District Judge of Lahore on 27th January 1926.

The application first came before a Bench of three Judges of this Court on 17th December 1926, and by an order of 21st January 1927, the Court gave liberty to the petitioner to renew her application after the passing of the Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Act, which it was stated was then before Parliament. This course was adopted by reason of the fact that on 25th March 1926 an Act of the Indian Legislature had been promulgated which prohibited the making of decrees of dissolution of marriage when the parties to the marriage were not domiciled in India at the time when the petition was presented. It is conceded that the parties to the present suit were not domiciled, though resident, in India at the date of the presentation of the petition. The Court was inclined to the view that the prohibition in the Act of 1926 applied as much to the confirming of a decree already made as it did to the making of a decree by the trial Judge, but gave no definite decision on that question.

The question which now arises for determination is whether or not this Court has jurisdiction to confirm a decree of a District Court made before the Indian Act of 1926, came into force, in cases where the parties to the proceedings are not of Indian domicile.

Section 10 of the Act of 1869 gives a District Judge, and the High Court jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the dissolution of marriage; and S. 14 confers power upon either Court to pronounce a decree declaring the marriage to be dissolved. Where the decree of dissolution is pronounced by the District Judge the marriage is not dissolved until the decree has been confirmed by the High Court in accordance with the provisions of S. 17, Divorce Act; and where the decree has been made by the High Court it is a decree nisi which can only be made absolute under the provisions of S 16 of the Act. S. 16 commences with these words:

> Every decree for a dissolution of marriage made by a High Court not being a confirmation of a decree of a District Court shall in the first instance, be a decree nisi, which makes it clear, if there could be any doubt in that regard, that a confirmation of a decree of a District Court is a decree for a dissolution of marriage. That being so, the Act of 1926 obviously prohibits the confirmation by the High Court of a District Court's decree. It follows that when this application came before the High Court in December 1927, the Court had no jurisdiction to confirm the decree of the District Judge.

The sole question which remains is, has jurisdiction to confirm this decree since been conferred upon the Courts in India? Mr. Elmunds for the petitioner who is supported by the Government instructed by the King's Proctor, contends that this jurisdiction is given by S. 3, Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Act 1926, which became law on 15th December 1926. The section runs as follows:

> Any decree granted under the Act of the Indian Legislature known as the Indian Divorce Act 1869, and confirmed or made absolute under the provisions of that Act, for the dissolution of a marriage the parties to which were at the time of a commencement of the proceedings domiciled in England or in Scotland, and any order made by the Court in relation to any such decree shall, if the proceedings were commenced before the passing of this Act, be as valid and be deemed always to have been as valid in all respects as though the parties to the marriage had been domiciled in India.

It seems to me clear that this section confers no new jurisdiction upon the Courts in India, but only validates a decree granted under the Divorce Act of 1869, which has been confirmed under the provisions of S. 17, or made absolute under S. 16, in cases where the proceedings commenced before the passing of the Indian and Colonial Divorce Act. The learned Government Advocate has argued that unless this latter Act was intended to validate all decrees for dissolution of marriage, whether made before or after the Act came into force, the words "if the proceedings were commenced before the passing of the Act" would be meaningless, as in cases where the decree was made before the Act was passed the proceedings must necessarily have been commenced before that date. The real application of this anomaly, however, appears to be that the Parliamentary draftsmen had not in mind the effect of the Indian Act of March 1926, when the Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Bill was prepared. Had the Act of March 1926, been delayed until the English statute had become law the situation would have presented no anomalies. The difficulty we are confronted with has arisen from the fact that the Indian Legislature took away from the Indian Courts the jurisdiction which some of the Courts claimed to possess, to dissolve marriages of persons resident but not domiciled in India, some nine months before the English Parliament passed an Act to validate the decrees passed by Courts in India which has assumed that jurisdiction.

Shortly summarized the law stands thus: A decree of dissolution of marriage confirmed or made absolute after 25th of March 1926, would be a nullity as the order of confirming or making absolute is itself a decree of dissolution, and the making of it is prohibited by the Indian Act of 1926, in cases where the parties to the marriage are not domiciled in India at the date of presentation of the petition. As such a decree would not have been made under the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act, as amended by Act 25 of 1926, it would not be rendered valid by S. 3 Indian and Colonial Divorce Jurisdiction Act.

The net result of this recent divorce legislation, therefore, is that, whereas the English Legislation intended to validate all decrees of dissolution of marriage made in India where the proceedings were commenced before 15th of December 1926, the Act passed to effect this object does not, owing to the Indian Act, touch decrees which were not confirmed or made absolute prior to the 25th March 1926.

With the greatest reluctance I am forced to the conclusion that the present application cannot be granted.

The question of law need not be one of importance, but must be a substantial question of law between the parties to the case, where the trial Court, in the exercise of its discretion, refuses to extend the time for putting in Court-fees, it can hardly be said that the question is a substantial question of law arising between the parties to the case. [P 561 C 2]

Fakir Chand—for Petitioners.

Har Gopal—for Respondents.

Dalip Singh, J.—The petitioners in this case apply for leave to appeal to the Privy Council in appeal No. 86 of 1924. The facts of this case are given in the referring order of Mr. Justice Campbell dated 27th May 1924. The appeal which was dismissed by this Court purported to be under S. 47, Civil P. C. The trial Court in a suit brought by the present petitioners for pre emption decreed the suit and passed a decree in the usual form in pre-emption suits. It has also ordered that all the decrees are made conditional on payment of the additional Court-fees as ordered. If the deficiency is not made good in any suit within the time allowed the plaint in that suit shall be deemed to be rejected.

A fortnight was allowed to the plaintiffs to put in the deficient Court-fees. The plaintiffs were admittedly one day late in putting in the stamps for the additional Court-fees. Thereupon the Court passed the following order:

According to the decree the time allowed expired on 23th November 1923. After expiry of the time the Court-fee stamp now filed cannot be accepted. Hence it be returned.

This was the order against which an appeal was lodged in this Court on a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 4 purporting to be under S. 47, Civil P. C. A preliminary objection was taken that the order by itself was not appealable and if read with the original order of the trial Court it amounted to an order rejecting the plaint as insufficiently stamped and, therefore, a Court-fee Rs. 4 only was insufficient. It was contended by counsel for the appellants that the order was appealable because it fell within S. 47, Civil P. C., and was a decision of a question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and related to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. This contention was rejected by this Court and it was held that the order was not by itself an appealable order and that it did not fall within S. 47, Civil P. C. An application for review of this order was filed but was dismissed and now the petitioners seek for leave to appeal to the Privy Council and again raise the contention that this Court was incorrect in deciding that the order did not fall within S. 47, Civil P. C., and secondly, that no sound judicial discretion was exercised by this Court in not extending the time for the appellant to make up the deficiency in the Court-fees. It has not been contended before us that the second ground can possibly be said to be a substantial question of law within the meaning of S. 110, Civil P. C. It is, however, contended that ground 1 is a substantial question of law within that section. The exact meaning of the words "substantial question of law" has been the subject of various and divergent decisions. Before us both sides have relied upon the ruling reported as Gokal Chand v. Sanwaldas (1) which follows an Allahabad ruling which lays down that the test is that the question of law is such that in respect thereof there may be a difference of opinion. The proposed test seems to me somewhat unsatisfactory because it would tend to vary with different Judges who might or might not think a question was open to difference of opinion. The latest ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council, of which I am aware, namely, A. I. R. 1927 Privy Council 110 lays down that the question of law need not be one of importance, but must be a substantial question of law between the parties to the case.

This decision of their Lordships overrules the decisions which had laid down that the question of law must be one of importance. The only other meaning of substantial question of law that I can think of, is that the question must be one affecting the substance of the case and not a question which merely arises incidentally to the case. Now, in this case it cannot be contended, and was not contended, that the trial Court had not discretion to extend or not to extend the time for putting in Court-fees. If in the exercise of that discretion it refused to extend time for putting in Court-fees, it can hardly be said that this was a substantial question of law arising between the parties to the case. As a matter of fact in this case the plaintiff had succeeded in his suit and the decree was made conditional on his putting in the Court-fees. It is difficult to see how a question of Court-fees can be a question between the parties to the case at all. It is more a question between the Court and the plaintiff. I am, therefore, of opinion that this particular case does not involve any substantial question of law nor do I think that there is really any room for difference of opinion if this is the correct test. The order was not one under S. 47, as S. 47 only comes into play where there is a decree. In this case the existence of the decree itself was conditional on payment of Court-fee and when no Court-fee was paid the plaint stood rejected as insufficiently stamped.

The order rejecting a plaint is no doubt appealable, but then the Court-fees would not be a Court-fee of Rs. 4 alone nor did the appeal actually lodged purport to be from an order rejecting a plaint. I am, therefore, of opinion that in the circumstances of the case no substantial question of law arises between the parties and I would, therefore, dismiss the application with costs.

Bhide, J.—Fazal Dad along with nine other persons was prosecuted for the murder of one Amira. When the challan was sent up, Fazal Dad was reported to be absconding. Proceedings were taken under S. 87/88, Criminal P. C. and the land which is the subject-matter of this appeal was sold by auction on the 20th December 1918 to different persons for Rs. 6,650. The sale was confirmed on 10th April 1919.

In October 1919 Fazal Dad was arrested. He was then tried for the murder but acquitted on 7th February 1920. On 13th March 1920 Fazal Dad applied under S. 89, Criminal P. C., for restoration of the property which had been sold. The application was rejected by the Magistrate. The Sessions Judge on appeal ordered the restoration of the property to Fazal Dad. On the case coming up before this Court in revision it was pointed out by Campbell, J. that under S. 89, Criminal P. C., only the net proceeds of the sale and not the property itself could be restored to the applicant. The order of the Sessions Judge was modified accordingly and it was directed that the applicant should be given the net proceeds of the sale.

Not satisfied with this order Fazal Dad instituted the present suit on 10th May 1924 for a declaration to the effect that the sale by auction of the land in dispute made on 20th December 1918 and confirmed on 10th April 1919 is invalid and void and shall not affect the plaintiff's rights.

The pleas on the basis of which Fazal Dad sought this relief briefly were that he had not "absconded", that he was unaware of the proceedings under S. 87/88 Criminal P. C., and lastly, that those proceedings were not in accordance with law. The Secretary of State as well as the vendee were impleaded as defendants.

The defendants traversed the above pleas and the vendees also pleaded that a civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge decided the issues in favour of the plaintiff and decreed the suit. From this decision two of the vendees, namely, Dewa Singh and Bahawal Bakhsh have appealed.

The points at issue have been argued at length before us and after giving my careful consideration to them I am of opinion that this appeal should succeed on the question of jurisdiction.

Before proceeding to discuss the law on the subject it may be stated at the outset that it was not denied on behalf of the respondent that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to take proceedings under S. 87/88, Criminal P. C., and that a civil Court would have no jurisdiction to entertain a suit of this kind if the sale had been carried out according to the provisions of S. 87 or 88, Criminal P. C. It was, however, contended that in the present instance those provisions had not been complied with inasmuch as 30 days time was not given for the absconder's appearance on a specified date and no warrant of attachment was issued according to law in connexion with the land in dispute. Assuming that the sale was irregular in these respects, the question for decision is whether a civil Court has jurisdiction to declare it to be null and void.

The case law on the subject seems to be rather meagre. A number of rulings were cited on behalf of the appellants but none of them appears to be directly in point. The only rulings on which some stress was laid and which need be referred to are Bhukhooree Singh v. Government (1), Secy. of State v. Lown Karan Marwadi (2), and A. I. R. 1923 Bom. 198. In the first ruling it was laid down that a civil action will not lie to reverse a sale of property carried out under S. 185, Criminal P. C. (corresponding to S. 87/88, Criminal P. C. 1898). But the sale in that case was apparently carried out "legally" and the effect of irregularities in procedure was not considered. In Secy. of State v. Lown Karan Marwadi (2), the question for decision was whether a suit would lie to contest an order of disposal passed by a Magistrate under S. 524, Criminal P. C. with respect to property suspected to be stolen. It was pointed out that the question whether a civil action would or would not lie would depend upon the nature of the provisions of the Code in respect of the disposal of such property. The learned Judges were of opinion that a civil suit would lie in respect of an order passed under S. 524, Criminal P. C. as such order could not be taken to be conclusive as regards the owner's title. On the other hand, they expressed the opinion that Ss. 88/89, Criminal P. C., would debar an absconder from suing for recovery of his property. These remarks are of course only 'obiter' and the effect of irregularities in the proceedings was not considered. In the last ruling, namely, A. I. R. 1923 Bom. 198 also the question of the effect of the irregularities in procedure on a sale conducted under S. 87/88, Criminal P. C. was not raised.

On behalf of the respondent reliance was placed on Mian Jan v. Abdul (3). The ruling is certainly in his favour but with all respect I must say that I am unable to follow the reasoning underlying it. It appears that the proclamation in that case was irregular inasmuch as it failed to state the time within which and the place at which the absconder was to appear to save the sale of his property, it was held by Blair, J., that the proclamation and therefore the sale also was a nullity. As regards S. 89, Criminal P. C. which enables a proclaimed offender to ask for the restoration of the attached property within two years of the attachment Blair, J. observed as follows:

> There is a provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure by which an absconder returning or being brought to the Court by which the attachment was made is entitled to prove that he did not abscond or conceal himself to avoid the execution of the warrant, and also that he had no such notice of the proclamation as to enable him to attend within the time specified therein. Under these circumstances he can claim some sort of restitution of his property. But that section has no bearing whatever in the case when the proclamation of sale is an absolute nullity in point of law. If then there is no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure for restitution under the circumstances of this case, and no section except S. 89 is suggested to me, then, if I were to follow the ruling of the Court below, I should be holding that there was no remedy left to the man whose property had been seized and sold under the thinnest and most indefensible colour of law. I have no hesitation in saying that the law is not so and the plaintiff had a right to maintain the suit.

It appears from the above that the decision of Blair, J. assumes (1) that a person aggrieved by sale proceedings under S. 87/88, Criminal P. C, in which the "proclamation is a nullity in point of law" has no remedy under the Criminal Procedure Code, and (2) that when there is no remedy provided by the Criminal Procedure Code a civil suit ought to be maintainable. As regards the first point, it is true that S. 89, Criminal P. C. is somewhat limited in its scope. It enables the absconder to seek relief on two grounds only, namely, (1) that he did not abscond or conceal himself for the purpose of avoiding execution of the warrant, and (2) that he had not such notice of the proclamation as to enable him to attend within the time specified therein. He cannot as of right ask for restitution on any other ground. Probably this was done deliberately by the legislature as it may not have thought it fit to give an absconder the right to ask for restitution of the property merely on the basis of irregularities where no substantial injustice was involved. At the same time, I do not see that there is no remedy at all under the Code of Criminal Procedure for cases not coming within the four corners of S. 89. The revisional powers of the High Court under S. 439, Criminal P. C., are very wide and I do not see why it should not be possible to find a remedy in a fit case in the provisions of that section. The High Court has besides "inherent powers" to pass such orders as may be necessary to prevent abuse of processes of Courts and to secure the ends of justice which has been now expressly recognized by S. 561-A, Criminal P. C. In Jahangiri Mal v. Kanshi Ram (4), it was held by a division bench of the Punjab Chief Court that the Chief Court could interfere in revision even in cases not falling within the scope of S. 89, Criminal P. C. A similar view was taken by another division bench of the Punjab Chief Court in Bahadur Singh v. Ram Singh (5), in which it was held that the proclamation was not in accordance with law and it was directed that > so much of the property moveable or immovable as has not been sold be restored to him (applicant) and the proceeds of the sale of any property which has taken place be refunded to him.

In a more recent case Butta Singh v. Emperor (6), a single bench of this Court (Harrison, J.) exercised its "inherent power" to set aside an illegal attachment of land, as the case did not come directly within the scope of S. 89, Criminal P. C.

It will thus appear that a person who is unable to apply on the ground specified in S. 89, Criminal P. C. is not altogether without a remedy. Secondly the assumption of Blair, J., that when the Code does not expressly provide a remedy except for certain cases falling within the scope of S. 89, Criminal P. C., the remedy for other cases must be found in a civil suit, is also not easy to understand. It is true that all suits of civil nature are ordinarily cognizable by a civil Court but S. 9, Civil P. C. makes an important exception to this rule, namely, suits of which cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred. It seems to me that the present case is one in which cognizance by civil Courts is impliedly barred. It is an established principle of law that when an act of legislature gives power to any person for a public purpose from which an individual may receive an injury, if the mode of redress is also specified in the statute the jurisdiction of ordinary Courts will be ousted (cf. Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, sixth edition pp. 708-9). In the present instance the Criminal Procedure has vested criminal Courts with certain power for enforcing the attendance of persons and among these powers is that of attaching and selling their property. This power may cause injury to the person concerned and the Code itself specifies the remedy open to such persons, namely, that provided in S. 89, Criminal P. C. The Code further allows a right of appeal from an order passed under that section. These facts seem to point to the conclusion that the legislature intended this to be the proper ramedy open to persons aggrieved by an order under Ss. 87 and 88, Criminal P. C., in ordinary cases. The Code, however, confers ample revisional powers on High Courts to rectify injustice in other cases also. I do not see any good ground in the circumstances for holding that in cases where the proclamation is a nullity a man aggrieved by the result of such proclamation would be without a remedy and, therefore, a civil action must be maintainable.

I have so far dealt with the two grounds on which the decision of Blair, J., is based and with which the Division Bench, which heard the Letters Patent appeal from his judgment, apparently agreed. As regards the possible hardship on the vendees in such cases the learned Judges of the Letters Patent Bench remarked that the purchaser should have safeguarded his position by taking the ordinary precaution of ascertaining whether a Court had issued a statement in writing to the effect that the proclamation had been duly published : vide S. 87 (3), Criminal P. C. The Code, however, does not appear to impose any such duty on the auction purchaser. In an ordinary criminal prosecution, the Crown is the prosecutor. The Code prescribes the procedure which is to be followed by Courts in selling the property of an absconder. The auction purchaser is a stranger to these proceedings and it is difficult to understand why the auction purchaser should be held liable for failure on the part of the Court to follow the procedure prescribed by law.

I have tried to show above that the Criminal Procedure Code itself provides suitable remedies to a person aggrieved by proceedings under Ss. 87 and 88, Criminal P. C. There is, however, one thing I would like to add. I am doubtful whether the Code contemplates that a sale once effected under Ss.87 and 88, Criminal P. C., should be set aside at all even by a criminal Court. The provisions of S. 89, Criminal P. C., are noteworthy in this connexion. Even when the applicant proves under that section that he was neither "absconding" nor had any notice of the sale (the strongest case imaginable on grounds of equity) the Court can only give him the net proceeds of the sale. If the legislature had intended any restoration of the property after the sale it is difficult to see why such restoration should not have been allowed under S. 89 itself. I am, therefore, inclined to think that the legislature intended the sale effected under Ss. 87 and 88, Criminal P. C., to be final. This is in keeping with the general policy of the law which aims at making the title of a purchaser at a Court sale as safe as possible. The result in the present case is no doubt more drastic than in the case of sales by civil Courts, but it must be remembered that the provisions of Ss. 87 and 88, Criminal P.C., are of a penal character. According to these provisions the property of an absconder is not sold for six months after attachment. If a person is not "absconding" to evade justice, he can scarcely fail to learn about the attachment through his agent or relations in charge of the property during the period. On the other hand, if he is absconding to evade justice he must take the consequences of his own failure to comply with the process of the Court.

However, whether a criminal Court should or should not set aside a sale in the exercise of its powers in revision, I am of opinion that a civil suit for the purpose is impliedly barred by the provisions of the Code. To allow a civil suit in such cases would create an intolerable position. For there would be nothing to prevent a person from resorting to a civil Court at any stage to challenge the irregularity of proceedings of criminal Courts and to obstruct or nullify their action. On course there are instances in which the decision of criminal Courts is intended to be only provisional and in such cases the Code itself has laid down that the decision will be subject to final adjudication in civil Courts. Such a provision occurs for instance in S. 87, Criminal P. C, itself in respect of claims by third persons to attached property. For other instances of the same type reference may be made to Ss. 145 to 147 and 522, Criminal P. C. These exceptions have apparently been made only in cases where a criminal Court has to pass orders summarily in the interests of peace, etc, without any elaborate enquiry into questions of title. Criminal Courts are of course not the proper forum for adjudication of questions of title to property ; but the question involved in the present case is not of title but that of the right of a criminal Court to exact a penalty for an absconder's failure to attend in obedience to a warrant issued by that Court to answer a criminal charge. If a civil suit were maintainable in the present case a suit might as well lie for refund of fine or forfeited property on the ground that the trial in which the order of fine or confiscation was passed was wholly illegal—a proposition which, so far as I am aware is not supported by any authority.

The plaintiff has already got an order for the refund of the net proceeds of the sale of his property from the criminal Court. He has, in my judgment no right to agitate the question in a civil Court. I would accordingly accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with respect to the property sold to the appellants. Parties should bear their own costs.

Tek Chand, J.—I agree with the conclusions arrived at by my learned brother and have very little to add.

After carefully considering the provisions of Ss. 87-89 Criminal P. C. I have no doubt that a "proclaimed" person, immovable property belonging to whom has been attached and sold by the criminal Court, has no right to maintain an ordinary civil action against the auction purchaser for its restoration even though the procedure laid down for issuing the proclamation and attachment had not been strictly followed. It seems to me that Ss 87-89 form a "complete Code" by themselves and the remedies provided therein to afford relief to a person, who considers himself aggrieved by orders passed under any of these sections are exclusive, subject of course to the right of appeal (wherever expressly given) or any orders that the High Court may choose to pass, in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction under S. 439 or its inherent powers.

It is no doubt an elementary principle of law that every presumption shall be made in favour of the jurisdiction of civil Court and that it shall not be taken away except by express words or by necessary implication : see S. 9, Civil P. C., and Winter v. Attorney-General (7) But it seems to me that the present case clearly falls within the exception and that once the attached property has been placed at the disposal of the Government, the remedies open to the "proclaimed" person are limited to those provided for in the Code of Criminal Procedure. If he appears before the Court within two years of the attachment and satisfies it: (1) that he did not abscond or conceal himself for the purpose of avoiding execution of the warrant, and (2) that he had no notice of the proclamation, the attached property, if it has not been sold already, shall be returned to him. But if it had been sold, then the only relief to which he is entitled is that the net proceeds realized at the sale shall be made over to him. It is clear that the intention was to lay down that a sale, if once completed, cannot be set aside, even if the proclaimed offender appears within two years and satisfies the conditions laid down in S. 89. In these circumstances, it will be absurd to suppose that the legislature intended to allow the same person to institute and maintain a civil action within twelve years for the restoration of the property from the auction purchaser on grounds which would not have entitled him to claim even the sale proceeds within a period of two years. Any other interpretation would lead to serious anomalies and defeat the very object which the legislature had in view in enacting Ss. 87-89 to the Code.

My learned brother has examined at length the reasoning of the decision in Mianjan v. Abdul (3) and has given good grounds for dissenting from it. It may also be mentioned that the case was decided in 1905 when the Civil Procedure Code (14 of 1882) was in force. Under S. 11 of that Code civil Courts had jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature, excepting those of which the cognizance was barred "by any enactment for the time being in force," and in Kishori Mohun v. Chunder Nath (8) and other rulings, these words were held to mean "expressly barred." In the Code, as amended in 1908 the exception has been enlarged by the substituiton of the word "excepting suits of which their cognizance is expressly or impliedly barred". It is possible that the Allahabad case might have been differently decided if it had come before the Courts after 1908.

In my opinion the appeal should be accepted and the plaintiff's suit dismissed. But having regard to all the circumstances of the case I leave the parties to bear their own costs in both Courts.

Tek Chand, J.—The information given by Thiraj, petitioner, that two of his mares had either been stolen or gone astray, the police took up the investigation and eventually succeeded in capturing a mare from the field of Mehtab Singh, respondent. On enquiry Mehtab Singh stated that he had purchased the captured mare in good faith and for valuable consideration from one Hazara Singh, who, in turn, declared that his brother Pal Singh had bought it from one Bahawala. The police did not believe Hazara Singh's story and prosecuted him. He was convicted under S. 411, I. P. C., but the Magistrate omitted to pass any order as to the disposal of the mare. On appeal the Sessions Judge acquitted Hazara Singh holding inter alia that the description of the captured animal did not tally with that of any of the two mares as given by Thiraj in the first information report. At the close of his judgment the learned Judge directed that "the mare be returned to Mehtab Singh from whose possession it was captured." This order was passed on the 16th January 1926.

About 17 months later, Thiraj preferred a petition for revision to this Court urging that as the trial Court had not passed any order for the restoration of the animal under S. 517, Criminal P. C., the learned Sessions Judge on appeal had no jurisdiction to direct its return to Mehtab Singh. This petition was heard by Jai Lal, J., but as the rulings bearing on the point were conflicting and the question was one of general importance the learned Judge referred the case to a Division Bench.

After considering the relevant sections of the Code, I am of opinion that under S. 423 (1) (d), as well as under S. 520, of the Code, the appellate Court has the power to pass appropriate orders for the disposal of the property produced at the trial, even though the trial Magistrate had omitted to do so. Under Cl. (d), S. 423, an appellate Court while deciding an appeal against an acquittal or conviction is expressly authorized to make "any consequential or incidental orders that may be just and proper." It seems to me that an order disposing of property produced at the trial is an order "consequential" on its findings on the merits. It is not denied that such an order, if passed by the Court of first instance at the termination of the trial is "consequential" on its decision discharging, convicting or acquitting the accused. If this be so in the case of the trial Court, I do not see why a different view should be taken when the appellate Court, while disposing of an appeal against a conviction or acquittal, passes an order in similar terms ; and it seems to me wholly immaterial that the appellate Court passes such an order for the first time, or it does so while affirming, modifying or cancelling the order that had been passed by the trial Court in this behalf. This was expressly held by Stanley, C. J., in Gopi Nath v. Emperor (1) and by the Madras High Court in Arunachala Thavan v. Vellachami Thevan (2), though in each of these cases the question came before the Court in a somewhat different way.

In the former case the trial Court had passed an order for restoration of only a portion of the property in respect of which the crime was alleged to have been committed. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge upheld the conviction and directed that the remaining property with regard to which no order had been passed by the Magistrate should also be restored to the complainant. On revision it was contended before the High Court that the Sessions Judge had no power to order the restoration of the property which had not been included in the order of disposal passed by the trial Magistrate. This contention was repelled by the learned Chief Justice, who observed under S. 423 (d) :

> The appellate Court was entitled in an appeal from a conviction, and in other cases, to make any amendment or any consequential or incidental order that may be just or proper. The order directing restoration of the property which was found to have belonged to the complainant was clearly a consequential or incidental order within the meaning of that section.

Similarly in the Madras case Krishnan, J., remarked :

> In fact it is the common practice in this Presidency for such Magistrates to pass orders under S. 520, if necessary, when disposing of the appeal. I see no reason to interfere with this practice. Objection has never been taken to such orders as having been passed without jurisdiction. It will also be noticed that S. 423 (d) authorizes appellate Magistrates to pass consequential orders, and orders under S. 520 are usually consequential orders based on the findings in the appeal.

I am not unmindful of the fact that a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Mehi Singh v. Mangal Khandu (3), where the question for decision was whether an appellate Court can for the first time award compensation under S. 250, Criminal P. C., has put a narrow interpretation of the words "consequential or incidental order" in S. 423 (d) and this view is now accepted as correct by all the Courts so far S. 250 is concerned. But I am of opinion that the restrictive meaning placed on the expression "consequential or incidental orders" in that ruling must not be applied to orders relating to disposal of property. In Bhagabat Shaha v. Sadique Ostagar (4), the same Court extended the rule laid down by the Full Bench to cases falling under S. 522 and held that an appellate Court deciding an appeal against a conviction under S. 448, I. P.C., cannot pass an order restoring possession of immovable property to the person who had been unlawfully dispossessed and the same view was taken in a similar case by the Punjab Chief Court in Hari Chand v. Emperor (5). But it is significant that the legislature soon intervened and by the amending Act 18 of 1923, a clause was added to S. 522, providing that an order under that section might be made by any Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision. In my opinion orders for disposal of property produced before a criminal Court in course of the trial are clearly "consequential or incidental orders" within the meaning of S. 423 (1) (d) and on principle I cannot see any reason why the Court of appeal or revision should possess the power to pass such order when the property concerned is immovable but not have it when it is moveable. After fully considering the matter I have reached the conclusion that the view taken in the Allahabad and Madras cases above cited, is sound and must be followed so far as the question now before us is concerned.

The other section bearing on the question is S. 520, which runs as follows :

> Any Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision may direct any order under S. 517, S. 518 or S. 519, passed by a Court subordinate thereto, to be stayed pending consideration by the formal Court and may modify, alter or annual such order and make any further orders that may be just.

It may be noted that the words "and make any further orders that may be just" were not to be found in the Codes of 1872 and 1882, but were added by Act 5 of 1898. Now there cannot be any doubt that the language used in the amended section is not quite happy and might have been more explicit. Accordingly it is urged on behalf of the petitioner that the power given to the Court of appeal, confirmation, reference or revision to pass "further orders that may be just" is limited to orders passed as a consequence of the modification, alteration or the amendment of orders passed by the trial Magistrate under S. 517, Criminal P. C. On the other hand, it was contended for the respondent that the added words must be given a liberal interpretation and be taken as authorizing the appellate or the revisional Court to pass all orders relating to disposal of property, which it might think fit, regardless of the fact whether the trial Magistrate had taken action under S. 517 or not. In this connexion counsel referred us to Kanshi Ram v. Emperor (6), Abdul v. Ghulam Muhammad (7) both of which had been decided by the same learned Judge sitting singly. It is conceded by both counsel that these rulings contain remarks which are not easy to reconcile, but I do not think it is necessary to pursue the matter further and the question did not directly arise in either of these cases and the remarks relied upon by both counsel are in the nature of obiter dicta which are not of any real assistance to us.

Coming now to S. 520 we find that here also the view taken by the Allahabad High Court supports the respondent. The question directly arose in Emperor v. Azmat Shah Khan (8) and it was held that S. 520 of the Code gave to an appellate Court the same power as the Court which originally tried a case to pass orders under S. 517. Similary in Onkar v. Emperor (9), Sulaiman, J., upheld the order of the appellate Court under S. 520 directing restoration of property to the complainants, even though the trial Court had refused to do so and had referred them to a civil Court.

This view also receives support from certain remarks in Ma Wet v. Mg Po Taik (10) and Badrul Hasan v. Mt. Chamela (11), to the effect that S. 520 authorises the Court of appeal, reference or revision to order restitution when and if justice so requires. The only ruling to the contrary, which has been brought to our notice is a decision of the Madras High Court Locanada Aiyar v. Seethal (12), decided in 1903 in which it was held that the appellate Court had no such power. The question was not, however, discussed at any length and no reasons for the conclusion are given. After fully considering the matter I am inclined to the view that the words added to S. 520 by Act 5 of 1898 should be liberally construed as has been done by the Allahabad Court in the rulings above cited.

I would, therefore, hold that the order of the learned Sessions Judge directing return of the captured mare to the respondent was not passed without jurisdiction and I would dismiss the petition for revision.

Agha Haidar, J.—This is a reference made by a learned Judge of this Court to a Bench of two Judges The facts are given in the judgment of our learned brother and may briefly be stated as follows :

One Thiraj lost his mare. A mare was found in the possession of one Mehtab Singh. The prosecution treated this mare as the stolen property of Thiraj and prosecuted one Hazara Singh from whom Mehtab Singh had purchased the mare, under S. 411, I. P. C. The defence of Hazara Singh was that his brother Pal Singh had purchased it from one Bahawala for consideration and in good faith that it was not the mare which had been stolen from the possession of Thiraj. His defence was not accepted by the trial Magistrate who convicted Hazara Singh under S. 411, I. P. C., and sentenced him to one years' rigorous imprisonment. No order was made by the trial Magistrate under S. 517, Criminal P. C., as to the restoration of the mare to the complainant, Thiraj. Hazara Singh appealed to the Sessions Judge, who allowed his appeal and acquitted him on the ground that there was no satisfactory evidence to prove the identity of the mare as the animal which had been stolen from Thiraj's house. He further held that, even if this identity were to be established, there was no proof on the record that Hazara Singh knew that his brother Pal Singh had purchased the mare from Bahawala knowing it to be stolen. In conclusion the learned Sessions Judge made an order that the mare should be returned to Mehtab Singh from whose possession it was captured.

An application in revision was filed on behalf of Thiraj in this Court on the ground that, as the trial Court had not passed any order under S. 517, Criminal P. C, the Sessions Judge in appeal was precluded from making an order as to the disposal of the property. The learned Judge of this Court in his order of reference referred a number of authorities which clearly indicate that there is a certain amount of conflict of opinion on the question. The case was argued by the counsel for the petitioner, Mr. Muhammad Amin Khan, who in effect contended that the Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order as to the disposal of the mare. Mehtab Singh was represented by Mr. I. C. Chopra, and the Crown was represented by Mr. Sundar Das.

The main contention on behalf of the applicant was based upon a case Locanada Aiyar v. Seethal (12). It is a short order by a single Judge of the Madras High Court and lays down that, if an order had been made by a trial Magistrate under S. 517, Criminal P. C., as regards certain stolen property, it would have been competent to the Magistrate in appeal to make an order as regards the person to whom the stolen property should be handed over. But the learned Judge goes on to say that, as no order under S. 517, Criminal P. C., had been passed by the trial Magistrate, S. 520 of the Code can have no application and the order passed by the appellate Court directing that the property be handed over to the complainant was made without jurisdiction. There is no discussion of any principles of law or of any rule of procedure and no authority is quoted.

The next case relied on by the applicant is Muhammad Din v. Emperor (13). This case lays down that the appellate Court was not competent to make an order under S. 522, Criminal P. C., directing the restoration of possession of immovable property to the person entitled to it when the trial Court had for some reason or other refrained from taking any action under the said section. But this case and Bhagabat Shaha v. Sadique Ostagar (4), on which it is based, can hardly be treated as authorities in the present case which depends upon the construction of Ss. 517 and 520, Criminal P. C., and in any case, having regard to the subsequent amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code, these cases may be treated as obsolete now.

Reliance was also placed on Abdul v. Ghulam Muhammad (7), where a learned single Judge of this Court held that an order under S. 517, Criminal P. C., for the disposal of the property regarding which an offence had been committed must be made upon the conclusion of an enquiry or a trial before any criminal Court and not on the application of a person after the conclusion of the trial and that any such order directing delivery of the property to a party on a date subsequent to the conclusion of the trial must be treated as passed without jurisdiction. This case was not followed by another learned Judge of this Court in Kishanchand v. Nanakchand (14), and is moreover in conflict with an earlier decision given by the same learned Judge in Kanshi Ram v. Emperor (6) which is printed at p. 49 of the same volume of the Indian Law Reports Lahore series. In that case a person had been convicted under S. 411, I. P. C., for being in possession of certain currency notes. He filed an appeal and his conviction was set aside by the Sessions Judge who acquitted him. The Sessions Judge did not make any order as regards the currency notes which had been recovered by the police from the possession of the accused person and had been handed over to the complainant under the orders of the Magistrate who had convicted the original offenders. Several months after the appeal had been decided by the Sessions Judge an application was made to him by the successful appellant for the restoration of the currency notes to him. The Sessions Judge dismissed the application on the ground that it was barred by limitation. On revision the learned Judge of this Court held that the Sessions Judge had overlooked the provisions of S. 520, Criminal P. C., which gave him very wide powers to pass such orders as may be just. He further held that the concluding words of S. 520, Criminal P. C., namely, "and make any further orders that may be just" were intended to cover cases of this nature so as to enable superior Courts to pass suitable orders where property had been erroneously disposed of by the trial Court under S. 517, Criminal P. C. In this case the trial Court had made no order under S. 520, Criminal P. C., but it was held that under S. 520, Criminal P. C., it was competent to the appellate Court, namely, the Sessions Judge, not only to modify, alter or annul an order passed under S. 517, Criminal P. C., but to make any other order which may be just. The case, therefore, supports the contention of the respondent Mehtab Singh in that it lays down that the concluding nine words of S. 520, Criminal P. C., should receive liberal construction which would operate in furtherance of justice.

Arunachala Thevan v. Vellachami Thevan (2), is a case in which an order had been passed by the trial Magistrate under S. 517, Criminal P. C., who had convicted the accused and had ordered the stolen property, namely, certain bullocks, to be made over to the complainant. On appeal the conviction was set aside, but the appellate Magistrate did not pass any orders regarding the disposal of the bullocks. A month afterwards an application was made and the appellate Magistrate passed an order that the bullocks should be handed over to the complainant. On this an application in revision was filed in the High Court and it was held that the order should be treated as part of the proceedings in the appeal itself and, therefore, the appellate Magistrate could make an order under S. 520 for the disposal of the property concerned. So far, this case is not an authority in favour of the respondent ; but the learned Judge further goes on to say that S. 423, Cl. (d) authorises the appellate Court to pass consequential orders and that orders under S. 520 are in the nature of such consequential orders. This reasoning seems to be correct, and in my opinion in any event the Sessions Judge as a Court of appeal was perfectly competent to make the order as regards the disposal of the mare which formed the subject-matter of the prosecution.

The case, which is directly in point and supports the contention of the respondent, is Emperor v. Azmat Shah Khan (8). In this case certain persons were convicted of having caused wrongful restraint to the opposite party. On appeal the Sessions Judge maintained the conviction but reduced the sentence. The appellate Court made an order as to certain property which was the subject of dispute between the parties. An objection was taken in revision before the High Court that such an order was ultra vires, and that under S. 517, Criminal P. C., it could only have been passed by the Court trying the case and not by the appellate Court for the first time. This contention was not accepted by the learned Judge Ryves, J., who, on the authority of Baloram Gogai v. Chinta Ram (15), held that under S. 520, Criminal P. C., the appellate Court had full power to pass such an order. In this connexion it may be noted that in the Code of Criminal Procedure of 1882 (Act 10 of 1882) S. 520 did not contain the words "and make any further orders that may be just." These words were added to it for the first time in the Criminal Procedure Code (Act 5 of 1898) and this must undoubtedly have been done with some object. We may take it, therefore, that the legislature was aware of the ruling Emperor v. Azmat Shah Khan (8), while the amending Act 18 of 1923 was on the legislative anvil. And if the wide and liberal interpretation put upon S. 520, Criminal P. C., by Ryves, J., was not justified, there cannot be any doubt that the amending Act of 1923 would either have omitted the concluding words of the section or would at any rate have introduced some restrictive phraseology therein. But the words have been allowed to remain as they were. This clearly indicates that the legislature accepted the interpretation placed upon the section by Ryves, J., as correct and fully borne out by its general context. The policy of law seems to be, that in the absence of any clear statutory provisions to the contrary, an appellate Court should dispose of once and for all, every outstanding matter in controversy between the parties. Several other cases were cited, but as they had no direct bearing upon the point under consideration I need not discuss them.

In my opinion, the order passed by the Sessions Judge as regards the mare was correct, and the learned Judge was competent to pass such an order. I would, therefore, dismiss the application.

I may further observe that if the application had come up before me for preliminary hearing I would have rejected it in limine on the ground of being stale, having been filed in this Court more than 17 months after the order sought to be revised, had been passed by the Sessions Judge.

Judgment.—The sole question in this appeal is whether the custom of pre-emption exists in the town of Naraingarh or not. The facts are admittedly fully and correctly stated in the judgment of the learned District Judge and need not be recapitulated. The learned Judge held that the custom was proved by Ex, P-4 and the two judgments mentioned in it of 1897 and 1901 together with the admission of the existence of the custom in Ex. P-6, and he further held that the existence of a judgment, Ex. D-2, in which it was held that the custom had not been proved where the first three cases were not produced in evidence and only Ex. P-6 was produced, was not sufficient to rebut the presumption raised by the existence of the four judgments taken together. I do not see that this view is in any way incorrect and I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

X sold immovable property to A, B, C and D. In the sale-deed it was stated that the property had been sold to the vendees in equal shares. The reversioners of the vendor instituted a suit for a declaration that the sale should not affect their reversionary rights after the vendor's death. The suit was dismissed and the plaintiffs appealed. During the pendency of the appeal A, one of the vendees, died and his representatives were not brought on the record within time; the appeal abated as against A:

Held: that the abatement of the appeal as against A did not result in a dismissal of the appeal in its entirety; A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 851; Lah. L. P. 42 of 1925; 231 P. L. R. 1912; *A. I. The death of one of the respondents does not necessarily result in the abatement of the appeal in its entirety. It would depend entirely upon the nature of the suit, and if the suit, having regard to its frame and character, could proceed in the absence of the deceased defendant, there is no reason why the appeal should not ordinarily proceed against the surviving respondent or respondents. Agha Haidar, J.—Decrees, as a rule, should not be drawn up on the model of a steel-frame and it is always desirable that the Court, under its inherent powers and in order to give full effect to its decision, should frame its decree in such an elastic form as would define the respective rights and liabilities of the several parties to the suit and thus to do substantial justice between all those who are concerned with the result of litigation. Nanak Chand Pandit, Mukand Lal Puri and Shambu Lal Puri—for Appellants.

Gokal Chand Narang, Shamsher Chand and Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Respondents.

Tek Chand and Fforde, JJ.—By a registered deed of sale dated 19th July 1920, Kharak Singh, defendant 5, sold for an alleged consideration of Rs. 14,000 his one-half share in four shops and a house situate in the town of Lyallpur to defendants 1 to 4 Gulab Singh, Rattan Singh, Mehr Singh and Karam Singh, sons of Pritam Singh, in equal shares. On 13th May 1921 the vendor's sons, Sant Singh and Ishar Singh, plaintiffs instituted a suit for a declaration to the effect that the aforesaid sale shall not affect their reversionary rights after the death of Kharak Singh. The trial Court dismissed the suit and the plaintiffs have preferred a first appeal to this Court.

During the pendency of the appeal, one of the vendees, Gulab Singh, defendant 1, died on 15th April 1923, but no application to bring his representatives on the record was filed within time. The result was that on the expiry of 90 days the appeal automatically abated against Gulab Singh. On 19th May 1926, an application was filed by the plaintiffs to have the abatement set aside on the ground that the plaintiffs being residents of a village in the Sialkot District were ignorant of the death of Gulab Singh defendant who resided and died in the town of Lyallpur.

After hearing both counsel we are of opinion that sufficient cause has not been shown for condoning the delay in filing this application. It is no doubt true that the plaintiffs lived in a village in the Sialkot District but their uncle Budh Singh, defendant 6, is a joint owner of the shops in dispute with the vendees. He must have been going to Lyallpur to collect the rents and looking after his share of the joint property. We cannot believe that for a period of three years the plaintiffs could remain ignorant of the death of one of the vendees. We, therefore, see no valid ground to set aside the abatement so far as Gulab Singh vendee defendant-respondent 1 is concerned.

Dr. Narang, on behalf of the respondents, contends that the appeal cannot proceed against the surviving defendants respondents and must be dismissed in its entirety. He argues that the sale which is impugned by the plaintiffs was joint in favour of the four vendees, and in case the appeal is accepted against defendants 2 to 4, there would be two contradictory decrees on the record of the Court with regard to the same sale. He relies on Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Dass (1) the facts of which were very similar to those of this case.

Mr. N. C. Pandit for the appellants replies that the shares of the four vendees are specified in the sale deed in which it is stated that the four had bought the property in equal shares. He argues that the vendees were tenants-in-common of the property, the share of each being well defined, and therefore the appeal as a whole cannot be dismissed. This contention is, however, opposed to the view taken in Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Dass (1) where it was ruled that the appeal cannot proceed even in those cases in which in the deed of sale the area which each of the vendees is to take is specified but not the proportion in which the sale-money was paid by the vendees. This ruling has been followed in a number of cases see inter alia Hadu v. Lala (2), Inayat v. Ganga (3), Akbar Hussain v. Ali Ahmad (4) and Jamna v. Sarjit (5). It was, however, distinguished in Mt. Zainab Bibi v Rohila (6) and Raghbhir Saran v. Mt. Sohan Devi (7), where it was held that the suit or appeal could under somewhat similar circumstances proceed against the surviving defendants or respondents. We, however, cannot see any distinction in principle between the two groups of cases. The facts in Raghbir Saran v. Mt. Sohan Devi (7) were almost identical with those in Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1) and with all deference to the learned Judges we are unable to appreciate the grounds on which the latter ruling was distinguished. Mt. Zainab Bibi v. Rohila (6) was followed by a Division Bench in Nandoo Singh v. Baljit Singh (8) and more recently in Jalal v. Bahawali (9). The test laid down in Hadu v. Lala (2) does not appear to have been followed in Devi Das v. Muhammad (10) and some other cases. The view taken in Nazir Khan v. Manjli (11) is also in conflict with Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1).

In a recent Allahabad case Darshan Dass v. Bikramajit Rai (12), Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1) was cited with approval, but seems to have been given a meaning different from its accepted interpretation in this Court.

The Bombay High Court has consistently taken a view contrary to the rule laid down in Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1). The latest ruling of that Court is Shankarbhai Manorbhai v. Moti lal Ramdas (13), which follows Chandarsang v. Khimabhai (14) where it was held that the appeal should proceed against the surviving defendants.

In the Madras and Calcutta Courts the rulings are not uniform but the prevailing view seems to be as laid down in Sarat Kamni Dasi v. Chaitanya Chandra (15) that the suit or appeal will not abate in its entirety, if the interests of the several defendants can be discriminated.

This does not go so far as Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1).

It seems to us that the law on the subject is at present in a state of some confusion, and as the point is frequently arising, it is necessary that the question be examined by a larger Bench and it be authoritatively decided whether in such circumstances the appeal can or cannot proceed against the surviving respondents. We, therefore, refer the following question to a Full Bench:

X sells immovable property to A, B, C and D. In the sale-deed it is stated that the property has been sold to the vendees in equal shares. The reversioners of the vendor institute a suit for a declaration that the sale shall not affect their reversionary rights after the vendor's death. The suit is dismissed and the plaintiffs appeal. During the pendency of the appeal A, one of the vendees, dies and as his representatives are not brought on the record within time the appeal abates as against A. Can the appeal proceed against B, C and D, the surviving vendees-respondents, or must the abatement of the appeal as against A result in a dismissal of the appeal in its entirety.

The appers will be laid before the learned Chief Justice for constituting a Full Bench to hear the reference.

Opinion.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—The question of law upon which we are asked to pronounce our opinion, is in these terms :

X sells immovable property to A, B, C and D. In the sale-deed it is stated that the property has been sold to the vendees in equal shares. The reversioners of the vendor institute a suit for a declaration that the sale shall not affect their reversionary rights after the vendor's death. The suit is dismissed and the plaintiffs appeal. During the pendency of the appeal A, one of the vendees, dies and as his representatives are not brought on the record within time the appeal abates as against A. Can the appeal proceed against B, C and D, the surviving vendees-respondents, or must the abatement of the appeal as against A result in a dismissal of the appeal in its entirety ?

Now O. 22, R. 4, sub-R. (3), read with O. 22, R. 11, Civil P. C., provides that where within the time prescribed by law no application is made to implead the legal representative of the deceased respondent the appeal shall abate as against the deceased respondent. It is true that, so far as the statute is concerned, the appeal abates only qua the deceased respondent, but the question whether the partial abatement thus caused leads to an abatement of the appeal in its entirety depends upon general principles. If the case is of such a nature that the absence of the legal representative of the deceased respondent prevents the Court from hearing the appeal as against the other respondents, then the appeal abates in toto. Otherwise, the abatement takes place only in respect of the interest of the respondent who has died.

Whether the appeal can, or cannot, proceed the absence of the legal representative of the deceased respondent must depend upon the nature of each case ; and it is not possible to formulate a rule of general application. It is obvious that if the action, which has given rise to the appeal, could have been brought without impleading the person who has died, his death affects only the interest if any, which he had in the litigation, but it cannot prevent the determination of the rest of the claim. This rule does not, however, solve the problem in every case The test often adopted in such cases is whether in the event of the appeal being allowed as against the remaining respondents there would or would not be two contradictory decrees in the same litigation with respect to the same subject-matter. It is a matter of common sense that the Court should not be called upon to make two inconsistent decrees about the same property, and in order to avoid conflicting decrees the Court has no alternative but to dismiss the appeal as a whole. If, on the other hand, the success of the appeal would not lead to such a result, there is no valid reason why the Court should not hear the appeal and adjudicate upon the dispute between the parties who are before it.

Now, in the present case, though there is one conveyance in favour of four persons, the share taken by each vendee is clearly specified in the deed. On principle there is no real distinction between one deed transferring the whole of the immovable property in equal shares to A, B, C and D, and four deeds, each conveying one-fourth share in the property, to the four vendees respectively. The death of A pending the appeal undoubtedly debars the Court of appeal from dealing with his share, but his absence does not prevent the Court from determining the controversy with respect to the shares of the remaining three vendees. There might be one decree as to A's share, and another decree of an inconsistent character governing the shares of the other vendees ; but as these decrees do not affect the same property, there is no legal difficulty in giving effect to them. We are here not dealing with a case in which one decision settles the dispute one way, and another decision determines it in an entirely another way, with respect to the same matter, so that it becomes impossible for the Court to carry out both the decisions at the same time.

The learned counsel for the parties have invited our attention to a large number of judgments, but it is unnecessary to examine them here at length. Suffice it to say that there is a considerable divergence of judicial opinion on the subject. A distinction must, however, be made between the cases, in which there is a specification or definition of shares or interests, and those in which there is no such specification or definition. The latter class of cases can have little or no bearing upon the issue arising in this case which, as stated above, is one of ascertained shares. There are no doubt some decisions which lay down the proposition that, even in the case of ascertained shares, the death of one respondent causes, not only a partial abatement, but a total abatement, vide inter alia, Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1). But the balance of the authority favours the view that in such a case the appeal abates only in respect of the interest of the deceased respondent and not as a whole; vide Mt. Zainab Bibi v. Rohila (6), Raghbir Saran v. Mt. Sohan Devi (7), Darshan Das v. Bikramajit Rai (12) and Sarat Kamini Dasi v. Chitanaya Chandra (15). Indeed, the Bombay High Court has gone so far as to hold that in either case the appeal abates only against the deceased respondent, and that it should be heard on the merits in so far as the other respondents are concerned: vide Chandarsang Verasbhai v. Khimabhai Raghabhai (14) and Shankerbhai Manorbhai . Patel v. Motilal Ramdas Shah (13).

There is no real difficulty in adopting in the present case the rule against total abatement, which has the advantage of enabling the Court to adjudicate upon the merits of the case and does not compel it to dismiss it upon a technical ground. The Courts exist for determining the merits of the dispute between litigants, and it is their duty to avoid, if they can legally do so, a result which causes hardship.

My answer to the question, therefore, is that the appeal in this case does not abate in toto but can proceed against B, C and D.

Broadway, J.—I concur with the Chief Justice.

Tek Chand, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgments prepared by the learned Chief Justice and my brother Jai Lal and agree with them that our answer to the reference should be, that on the facts stated the abatement of the appeal against A does not result in the automatic dismissal of the appeal in its entirety and that it can proceed against B, C and D. As pointed out by the learned Chief Justice the relevant statutory provision relating is to be found in Cl. (3), R. 4, O. 22, which runs as follows:

> (3) Where within the time limited by law no application is made under sub-R. (1), the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant.

This clause was added to the Code in 1908 with a view to set at rest the conflict of judicial opinion in respect of the corresponding provision in S. 368 of the Code of 1882, the material portion of which was in these terms:

> When the plaintiff fails to make such application within the period prescribed therefor, the suit shall abate.

It will be seen that S. 368 did not state that the abatement was only as against the deceased defendant. Some Courts interpreted this section literally and held that the suit abated in its entirety irrespective of the fact that the shares of the various defendants were separate or separable, and in one or two cases the suits were dismissed in toto even when the deceased was a pro forma party. Other Courts, however, took the contrary view and ruled that the section contemplated abatement of the suit in respect of the deceased party alone and if the interests of the defendants could be separated the abatement was partial. The legislature preferred the latter view and in 1908 amended the section by enacting that in such circumstances "the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant."

The amendment, however, has not put an end to the controversy and a large volume of case law has grown up, which it is not always easy to reconcile. The conflict of opinion now is not as to the interpretation of the newly added clause, which is definite and explicit enough, but as to the effect of the partial abatement on the suit itself. It is admitted that the suit abates as regards the deceased person only but the absence from the record of his heirs might result in the suit becoming imperfectly constituted and consequently liable to dismissal on that ground. If the suit is of such a nature that it cannot proceed without the representatives of the deceased person (e. g.. suit relating to partnership) the Court will find itself powerless to deal with it any further and must necessarily dismiss it. If, however, the rights of the surviving defendants in the subject-matter of dispute can be determined, without affecting the rights of the deceased person, the suit shall proceed. Again if the question arises in appeal, another principle has to be borne in mind. In such a case the Court has to see that it does not pass a decree, which it may find itself incapable of executing, owing to the circumstance that the lower Court's decree in favour of the deceasd respondent has become final in consequence of the partial abatement of the appeal against him. If the result of the acceptance of the appeal is to have on the rolls of the Court two absolutely contradictory decrees relating to the same subject matter, it will stay its hands and refuse to proceed with the hearing of the appeal, but if the rights of the deceased and the surviving respondents are separate or separable and there is no real likelihood of a conflict between the decrees passed as to their respective rights the appeal shall be heard. There is no dispute as to the soundness of these propositions but it is in their application to particular cases that the Courts have materially differed. Let us now apply these rules to the case before us.

The leading decision of the Chief Court on the subject, the facts of which were almost similar to those of the present case, is Khada Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1). In that case the property in dispute had been sold to seven persons by one deed in which the area to be taken by each vendee was specified, but there was no specification made as to the proportion in which the vendees had paid the sale-money. On the death of the vendor his son instituted a suit for possession on the allegation that the land was ancestral and his father had sold it without necessity. The suit was dismissed by the lower appellate Court and the plaintiff preferred a further appeal to the Chief Court. During the pendency of the appeal, one of the vendees died and no application to bring his legal representatives on the record was made within time. The appeal accordingly abated as against that respondent. At the hearing an objection was taken on behalf of the respondent that in view of the fact that the representatives of the deceased respondent were not on the record, the appeal could not proceed against the surviving respondents. This objection was sustained and the appeal dismissed, the learned Judges (Shah Din and Chevis, JJ.) holding that as the land was still joint in the hands of the surviving vendees and the representatives of the deceased the liability of the cosharers was joint and not several. It will be noticed that in the sale-deed the area purchased by each vendee was specified and yet the learned Judges held that the appeal could not proceed against the six surviving vendees. The first ground given for this conclusion was that the proportion in which the sale price was paid by each vendee to the vendor was not specified in the deed.

With all deference to the learned Judges, I fail to see the bearing of this fact on the maintainability of the appeal against the various vendees. That fact is, no doubt, of great importance in suits for pre-emption, but it appears to me to be wholly foreign to constitution of the appeal in cases like the one before us, which are governed by entirely different consideration. Nor do I see the force of the other argument that because the land was still joint in the hands of the various vendees and the liability of the cosharers was joint and not several the appeal became imperfectly constituted. It must be borne in mind that the vendees in that case were not "joint tenants" but were "tenants-in-common" having purchased the land in certain specific shares and the mere fact that partition by metes and bounds had not taken place does not seem to me to affect the matter. The deed, though apparently joint in favour of the seven vendees, was in reality equivalent to seven different sales in favour of each vendee, written on one piece of paper. The interests of the various vendees were well defined and separate and the plaintiff could prosecute the appeal against six of them leaving the seventh vendee alone. I cannot see how the acceptance of the appeal in the case by the Chief Court would have militated against any of the principles which furnish the basis of the rule for total abatement. In that event the decree of the Chief Court (if in favour of the appellant) would not have been ineffective or infructuous nor would it have been in any way inconsistent with that part of the lower Court's decree, which had become final in consequence of the death of one of the vendees and the failure of the appellant to bring his representatives on the record. The acceptance of the appeal would have resulted in setting aside the sale to the extent of the shares of the six surviving vendees only, the share of the deceased being left untouched. The appellant and the heirs of the deceased would become co-owners in the property in the same proportion in which the surviving vendees and the deceased had held it before, and any of them could, by taking appropriate proceedings, have had the property actually partitioned. In short he would, in the event of his appeal being successful, step into the shoes of the surviving vendees and would hold the property along with the heirs of the deceased vendee in the same way as the former held it at the time of the suit.

Dr. Gokal Chand for the respondent was unable to urge any valid argument to the contrary. In fact he frankly conceded that if one of the vendees had died before the decision of the suit in the Court of the first instance the abatement would be partial and the suit could have proceeded against the other defendants but he contended that the position was different in a case where the death took place after the vendees had been successful in the trial Court and had obtained a joint decree in their favour. In my opinion, this circumstance ought not to make any difference, as the decree of the trial Court merely affirmed the pre-existing rights of the defendants, both in relation to the plaintiff and as between them inter se. It did not, and could not, convert a tenancy-in-common into a joint tenancy, nor did it affect the shares in which they held the property.

In my opinion the rule which governs such cases, has been correctly and succinctly stated by my learned brother Addison in the following terms in the recent case of Karam Khan v. Mast Ali Khan (16):

> Whether a suit or an appeal abates, in whole or in part, depends on whether the interests of the respondents are or are not separately defined. If they are separable, the suit or appeal will abate only as regards the interest of the deceased. If they are joint, the proceedings will abate as regards the whole of the joint interests.

This decision is in accord with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Chief Justice and LeRossignol, J., in Letters Patent Appeal No. 42 of 1925 Chet Ram v. Mt. Illaicho, decided on 7th April 1926 [reversing the single Bench judgment of Campbell, J., in Chet Ram v. Mt. Illaicho (17)], where it was held that > from the authorities cited at the bar the principle which emerges is that when the different defendants have separate rights either ascertained or ascertainable in the property in suit, the suit can proceed against those defendants, who are made parties and does not necessarily fail because some of the defendants have not been joined.

To the same effect is the earlier decision of Nazir Khan v. Mangli (11), decided in 1911, but which was not noticed in Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1).

Applying this test it must be held that Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1) was wrongly decided and must be overruled. I am not unmindful of the fact that this ruling has been followed in a large number of cases decided by the Punjab Chief Court and the Lahore High Court, but it must not be forgotten that in several other decisions the learned Judges while trying to distinguish it, have really refused to apply the principle underlying it to cases the facts of which were substantially similar. Reference may, in this connexion be made to Mt. Zainab Bibi v. Rohila (6), Raghbir Saran v. Mt. Sohan Devi (7), Nandoe Singh v. Baljit Singh (8) and Jalal v. Bahawali (18).

I do not think it necessary to discuss in detail the numerous rulings of the other High Courts, bearing on the point. It is, I think, sufficient to point out that the view prevailing in the Bombay High Court has been uniformly against that taken in Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1). See Shankerbhai Manobhai Patel v. Motilal Ramdas Shah (13), which follows the earlier decision in Chandarsang Verasabhai v. Khimabhai Raqhabhai (14), and at Allahabad the question may be taken to have been set at rest in favour of the appellant, by the recent F.B. judgment in Faqira v. Hardewa (19).

For the foregoing reasons, I am of opinion, that on the facts as stated in the reference, the appeal can proceed against B, C and D.

(16) A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 851.

Jai Lal, J.—I have read the judgment of his Lordship the Chief Justice and agree with him that the answer to the first part of the question referred to this Court must be in the affirmative and to the second part in the negative.

It would be observed that so far as the express provisions of the Civil Procedure Code are concerned, they are against the contention of the respondent that the appeal abates in its entirety. O. 22, R. 4, clearly states that where no application is made to substitute the legal representatives of the deceased defendant within the time limited by law the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant. The same law applies to appeals and instead of "the suit" and "the deceased defendant," "the appeal" and the "deceased respondent" have to be read when dealing with the case of an appeal. Reference may then be made to O. 1, R. 9, Civil P. C., which provides that no suit shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder or non-joinder of parties and the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. No statutory provision of the law of procedure laying down a contrary rule applicable to the present case has been referred to by the counsel for the respondent; there is, therefore, no sanction in the Civil Procedure Code for ordering the abatement of the appeal in its entirety.

This, however, does not conclude the matter. The question still remains whether there is any substantive law, statutory or otherwise, which is a bar to the hearing of the appeal against the surviving respondents. An instance of a statutory provision making the presence of all the interested parties necessary before relief can be granted by the Court is to be found in S. 45, Contract Act which provides that when a person has made a promise to two or more persons jointly, then, unless a contrary intention appears from the contract, the right to claim performance rests as between him and them, with them during their joint lives, and, after the death of any of them with the representative of such deceased person jointly with the survivor, or survivors, and after the death of the last survivor, with the representatives of all jointly. It follows from this that in a suit on a joint promise made to two or more persons jointly if one of such persons dies and his legal representatives are not brought on the record within the time fixed by law the suit must abate as against the person so dying and the necessary consequence thereof is that the suit abates in its entirety because it cannot proceed in the absence of his legal representatives, it having been expressly laid down by law that in such a case, unless the right to enforce the promise is expressly given to them, some of the joint promisees cannot enforce the same. The same rule applies to appeals, and therefore an appeal by the promisor against a decree granted against him in favour of the promisees jointly would abate in its entirety if one of the promisee-respondents dies and his legal representative is not properly substituted in his place. Similar instances can possibly be cited from other statutes, but no statutory provision applicable to the facts of the present case was cited by Dr. Gokal Chand Narang on behalf of the respondents. I am unable to hold that such a provision exists prohibiting the Court from proceeding with the appeal as against the surviving defendants, the respondents in this appeal.

It is next to be seen whether any principles of the substantive law are violated if under the circumstances the appeal is allowed to proceed as against the surviving respondents. In this connexion the learned counsel for the respondents contended that two principles of law would be violated if the appeal is allowed to proceed. The first objection of the counsel was that such a course if adopted by the Court would result in contradictory decrees in the same suit. Applying this test to the facts mentioned in the question referred to this Court the counsel contended that the appeal must be deemed to have been dismissed as against A and the decree of the trial Court affirmed so far as he is concerned, and that if the appellate Court proceeds with the hearing of the appeal as against the remaining respondents and finally accepts it and sets aside the decree of the trial Court, then there will be two decrees arising out of the same suit, one in favour of A dismissing the suit and the other against B, C and D, accepting the appeal and decreeing the suit.

I am unable to see that there is any real force in this objection. It must be remembered that the decree in favour of A has been allowed to stand by this Court not as a result of any adjudication on the merits in his favour but by virtue of the operation of a provision of law due to the default of the appellants. There is not, therefore, in this case a contradictory finding or adjudication by this Court to which any reasonable objection could be taken. Moreover, the existence of contradictory decrees in some cases is legally possible. For instance, supposing there had been four sale-deeds, each with regard to a one-fourth share in the property in suit, and four different suits had been instituted by the plaintiff in the trial Court. It was open to the trial Court in some of them to come to the conclusion that the property was ancestral and in the others to hold that the property was not ancestral because each case had to be decided on the evidence produced therein, and it is conceivable that some of the vendees were able to produce convincing evidence as to the nature of the property and the rest were not equally fortunate. I see no legal objection to the so-called contradictory decrees or findings in such cases. To give another instance suppose a suit is instituted against A and B the joint executants of a bond and A confesses judgment but B pleads that the bond was executed for an illegal consideration. If the Court finds the plea of B established and dismisses the suit as against him but decrees it as against A on his own confession, can there be any valid objection to such a decree? I think not. There is, therefore, no force in this contention of the learned counsel.

The second objection of the learned counsel was that if as a result of the hearing of the appeal this Court set aside the decree of the trial Court and decreed the suit as against B, C and D, the decree so passed would be infructuous and ineffective. This is certainly an answerable objection to the hearing of the appeal as against B, C and D if it can be established that the decree against B, C and D would be infructuous, because it is a well-recognized rule of law that no Court shall pass an infructuous and ineffective decree—a decree which it cannot enforce. I do not, however, consider that the decree passed against B, C and D will be infructuous or ineffective. One test is whether it will be open to the legal representatives of A to contend successfully, if after obtaining his decree against B, C and D with regard to their interest in the property in suit, the plaintiff, decree-holder seeks to execute it, that they have obtained such an indefeasible right in the entire property, that is to say, both in the share of A and in those of B, C and D, as to make it impracticable for the plaintiff, decree-holder, to reap the fruit of the decree obtained by him against B, C and D. I do not see how the legal representatives of A can raise such an objection which will amount to a claim that the shares of B, C and D have also vested in them. I consider that the plaintiff can, in spite of the dismissal of the suit against A, get an effective relief against the others by obtaining a declaration that the title of the latter will be displaced by him when the limited interest of their vendor expires and then in proper proceedings and on the proper occasion the Court will put the plaintiff in joint possession of the shares of B, C and D along with A's legal representatives with the result that the plaintiff will step into the shoes of these men and if necessary will be able to get separate possession of their shares in the property in dispute by means of partition proceedings against A's legal representatives. I am, therefore, unable to see why in the present suit the Court is unable to declare that the sale with regard to the shares of B, C and D is invalid and will not affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiff while the sale of the one-fourth share in favour of A remains unimpeached. I am consequently unable to hold that the decree, if one is passed in favour of the plaintiff against B, C and D as a result of the present appeal, will be infructuous or ineffective.

Nor do I think it makes any difference, as was urged at the Bar, in the consequences that, in my opinion, must follow as already indicated when the shares of the vendees are actually ascertained and specified in the sale-deed and when they are not so specified but are ascertainable. I see no distinction between the two cases for the purpose of applying the rule as to the abatement of suits or appeals as in both cases the guiding factor is the real nature of the interest of the deceased party and not necessarily what appears or does not appear in the document evidencing the title of such party.

Agha Haidar, J.—In order to understand the reference which has been made to the Full Bench, it is necessary to state briefly a few facts out of which it has arisen. On 19th July 1920 one Kharak Singh, defendant 5, by a registered sale-deed, sold his half-share in four shops to Gulab Singh, Rattan Singh, Mehr Singh and Karam Singh, sons of Prem Singh, in equal shares, the consideration being a lump sum of Rs. 14,000. On 18th May 1921 Sant Singh and Ishar Singh, the sons of Kharak Singh, instituted a suit in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lyallpur, for a declaration that the sale-deed in respect of the ancestral property executed by defendant 5 in favour of defendants 1 to 4 on 19th July 1920 shall, on the death of defendant 5, be null and void and ineffectual as against the plaintiffs' reversionary rights. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiffs' claim. The plaintiffs filed an appeal to this Court on 2nd October 1922. On 15th April 1923 defendant 1, Gulab Singh, died. No application, however, was made within the period prescribed by the law of limitation for bringing the legal representatives of the deceased Gulab Singh on the record. The inevitable result was that the appeal abated automatically as against Gulab Singh, defendant-respondent 1, vide Churya v. Baneshwar (20). When the appeal came up for final hearing an application was made on the 19th May 1926 under O. 22, R. 9, Civil P. C., praying that on certain specified grounds the abatement may be set aside. This application was rejected by the learned Judges who were hearing the appeal. At this stage counsel for the remaining respondents took the preliminary objection that as a result of the abatement of the appeal against defendant-respondent 1, the whole appeal had become infructuous and could not proceed against the surviving defendants-respondents and must, therefore, abate and be dismissed in its entirety. On the other hand counsel for the appellants contended that the appeal abated only against the deceased respondent and could proceed against the remaining respondents for decision on the merits. A number of cases were cited on behalf of the parties and the learned Judges, in view of the undoubted conflict of authorities on the subject, directed that the question may be referred to a larger Bench so that an authoritative pronouncement may be made on it once and for all, as the point involved was of considerable importance in daily practice. The terms of the reference are as follows :

> X sells immovable property to A, B, C and D. In the sale-deed it is stated that the property has been sold to the vendees in equal shares. The reversioners of the vendor institute a suit for a declaration that the sale shall not affect their reversionary rights after the vendor's death. The suit is dismissed and the plaintiffs appeal. During the pendency of the appeal A, one of the vendees, dies and, as his representatives are not brought on the record within time, the appeal abates as against A. Can the appeal proceed against B, C and D, the surviving vendees-respondents, or must the abatement of the appeal as against A result in the dismissal of the appeal in its entirety?

Before I proceed to discuss the conflicting mass of case-law on the subject it is desirable to approach the question referred to the Full Bench as an abstract proposition of law and to try to find out the proper solution according to the general principles of law, without being hampered by the judicial decisions of the various High Courts in India.

The sale-deed is in favour of four different persons. It is true they are brothers, but their shares are clearly specified and each is entitled to a one-fourth share only. This being so it was open to the plaintiffs to bring four separate suits at one and the same time against each of these four defendants. And while these four parallel suits were proceeding, if one of the defendants in one of these suits had died and his legal representatives had not been brought on the record with the result that the suit abated as against him, it cannot be argued with any show of reasoning that the three other suits against the three other defendants would have also abated. This being so, I fail to understand what difference does it make if the plaintiff brings one suit against these four persons, the extent of whose interest in the sale of 19th July is clearly defined. The same principles would apply to the present appeal, having regard to the provisions of O. 22, R. 11, Civil P. C. It is true that there is no apportionment of consideration, but this ought not to make any difference because the plaintiffs are challenging the transfer of the alleged ancestral property by the father in favour of the vendees and it is a matter of indifference to them as to what sum, by way of consideration, was paid by each of the four vendees. We can test this proposition by assuming that instead of the sale-deed there had been a deed of gift, without any consideration. The position would not be altered. It would be open to the plaintiffs to bring a suit challenging the transfer by way of gift and the total absence of consideration would not make any difference to their claim Thus the fact that the amount of consideration is indicated by one lump sum ought not to affect the question which we have to consider.

Reverting to the four separate suits already assumed it cannot be urged that the plaintiffs would not be competent to withdraw one of the suits against the sole defendant in one of the suits under O. 23, R. 1, Civil P. C. Again, there would be nothing to prevent the plaintiff from entering into a compromise with the defendants in one of the suits and as a result of the compromise asking the Court to dismiss that suit. Applying the same reasoning to the present appeal in view of O. 22, R. 11, Civil P. C., in my opinion it would be competent to the plaintiffs-appellants either to withdraw unconditionally their appeal qua defendant-respondent 1 or to enter into a compromise with him and then ask the Court to dismiss the appeal as against him. This being so, I cannot understand how on general principles the mere fact that one of the defendants or respondents has died it should follow as a matter of course that the whole suit or appeal should abate.

Under the old Code, Act 14 of 1882, S. 368, which was the section corresponding to O. 22, R. 4, of Act 5 of 1908, the words used by the Legislature were :

> Where the plaintiff fails to make such an application within the period prescribed therefor the suit shall abate.

It is significant that even under the old Code and in spite of the phraseology used in S. 368 there were cases that the total abatement of the suit would not follow in case the interests of the several defendants were distinct and capable of separation. The present Code of Civil Procedure has introduced an important change by altering the phraseology of O. 22, R. 4, and we find that the language of sub-R. (3) is a distinct departure from the phraseology of the old S. 368, in that it lays down that > where within the time limited by law no application is made under sub-R. (1), the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant.

The italicized words introduce an important change and the meaning of the text standing by itself is clear and unmistakable, in that it lays down that from the mere fact that the suit has abated against the deceased defendant it does not necessarily follow that it would abate against the remaining defendants as well. In fact there are some cases, which I shall presently discuss, which have laid down the proposition that by reason of this altered phraseology the suit or appeal, as the case may be, must proceed as a matter of course, even if it has abated as against a particular defendant or respondent. I am not prepared, with due deference, to accept this broad and general statement of law. It would, in my humble judgment, depend upon the nature of the suit and the relief claimed. There are some suits which, from their very nature, cannot proceed if one of the defendants dies and his legal representatives are not duly brought on the record. One very good test is whether the particular suit was one which, when originally instituted, could have proceeded in the absence of a party. I may illustrate the proposition which I am submitting by referring to a suit for partition or for the dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts. There is a very good illustration of a suit belonging to the latter class. In Raj Chunder Sen v. Ganga Das Seal (21). which was a suit for accounts and for winding up the affairs of a partnership which had subsisted between the plaintiffs and the several defendants, there were complicated questions between the parties inter se as regards their respective relations. One of the defendants-respondents in the suit died. An application to bring his legal representatives on the record was made and being time barred was eventually dismissed. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the nature of the suit was such that the cause of action did not survive against the remaining respondents and therefore the whole appeal bated.

Some cases of injunctions also present similar features. Thus if several plaintiffs bring a joint suit for a mandatory injunction against a defendant and obtain a decree and the defendant appeals, and during the pendency of the appeal one of the plaintiffs-respondents dies and his legal representatives are not brought on the record, the result would be a deadlock. The decree in favour of the deceased plaintiff-respondent would become final and his legal representatives would be entitled to execute it, while the defendant, in case he succeeds in his appeal against the remaining plaintiffs respondents, would be powerless to stop them from executing the decree in their favour. In this class of cases also it is not possible to allow the appeal to abate against one of the respondents only and to proceed with its trial as against the remaining respondents. The appeal must abate as a whole. A case of this kind is to be found in Gauhar Khan v. Sher Muhammad Khan (22).

My view, therefore, is that the death of one of the respondents does not necessarily result in the abatement of the appeal in its entirety. The interpretation placed upon the concluding words of O. 22, R. 4 (3), namely, that the appeal must as a matter of course proceed against the remaining respondents in spite of its abatement against the deceased respondent is too wide and is not justified. As already stated it would depend entirely upon the nature of the suit, and if the suit, having regard to its frame and character, could proceed in the absence of the deceased defendant there is no reason why the appeal should not ordinarily proceed against the surviving respondent or respondents.

I may observe that the cases of the members of a joint Hindu family governed by the law of Mitakshara, being parties to a suit or appeal, and the case of parties to a suit for pre-emption, are governed by different principles which are not applicable to the facts of the reference before us.

As regards the case-law on the subject I would naturally begin with a discussion of the cases of our own High Court and of its predecessor, the Chief Court of the Punjab. In Mir Nawab v. Hardeo (23) one out of the two persons, who represented a numerous body of respondents under O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., died during the pendency of the appeal before the Chief Court and the application to bring his legal representatives on the record was rejected as it was made after the expiry of the period of limitation. The learned Chief Judge, referring to the terms of O. 22, R. 4 (3), Civil P. C, observed that they were imperative and that no case has been established which would justify a departure from the rule that the appeal shall be dismissed under the circumstances. It is clear that the learned Chief Judge was thinking of the provisions of S. 368, Civil P. C. (Act 14 of 1882) which provided that if the plaintiff failed to make such an application within the period prescribed therefor, the suit shall abate. O. 22, R. 4 (3) of the Code of 1908 says exactly the contrary, namely, that the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant. Thus the reference to the terms of O. 22, R. 4 (3), Civil P. C. is inaccurate. Then follows the following cryptic paragraph :

> The decree was joint and we concur in the exposition of the law contained in the judgment of a Division Bench in Civil Appeal No. 649 of 1907, that on the death of one of two representatives of the body of respondents the appeal abates,

I am at a loss to understand the exact meaning of this sentence. It only conveys to my mind the impression of rough and ready injustice.

I find, however, that this judgment was animadverted upon in Hadu v. Lala (2), where the learned Judges observe as follows:

> We do not rely upon Mir Nawab v. Hardeo (23) which is a very brief judgment and which is based upon an unpublished ruling, the particulars of which appear to have been wrongly quoted and which we have been unable to find.

Therefore this case cannot be of any help to the respondents.

Nazir Khan v. Mangli (11) goes to the other extreme and, while distinguishing Mir Nawab v. Hardeo (23), it puts a very wide construction upon O. 22, R. 4 (3), Civil P. C., and lays down that the appeal abates only against the deceased respondent implying thereby that it would proceed in the ordinary course against the other respondents. As I have already stated such a general statement of law is misleading and in fact goes too far. I find that the learned Judges do not refer to any authorities to any general principles of law in support of their view

The most important case on which counsel for the defendants-respondents relied in support of his contention is Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1). In that case, Ghulam, the father of the plaintiff, sold the land in suit to one Mathra Das, who in his turn sold it to four persons in specified shares. On the death of Ghulam, his son brought a suit claiming to recover possession of the land from the vendees. In this suit Mathra Das was implead as a pro forma defendant while the suit was contested by the transferees from Mathra Das. The trial Court decreed the suit, but the lower appellate Court, on appeal, dismissed the plaintiff's claim. The plaintiff filed a second appeal in the Chief Court and while this appeal was pending one of the purchasers from Mathra Das, namely, Muhammad Din, defendant-respondent, died and no application was made to bring his legal representatives on the record. The appeal consequently abated so far as Muhammad Din's share in the land was concerned. The question arose whether the appeal could be continued against the remaining three transferees from Mathra Das. It may be observed here that although the area which each transferee was to take was specified in bighas, the total area covered by the sale-deed was joint and undivided. The learned Judges following Hem Kunwar v. Amba Prasad (24), observed that as the land was joint, the liability of the co-sharers was also joint at present even although on partition each of the contesting defendants would be allotted a certain share. They accordingly held that the appeal cannot proceed against any of the respondents and must, therefore, abate in its entirety. The Allahabad decision arose out of a suit for recovery of possession of certain land. It was brought by four plaintiffs, namely Raj Bahadur, Mt. Mohni, Mt. Lachha Kunwar and Hem Kunwar, who claimed to be jointly entitled to the land in suit. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiff's claim. The defendants went up in appeal to the lower appellate Court and impleaded the four plaintiffs as respondents.

(24) [1900] 22 All. 480=(1900) A. W. N. 136.

While the appeal was pending the appellants made an application alleging that Mt. Mohni and Mt. Lachha Kunwar, two of the plaintiffs-respondents, had died and that Hem Kunwar who was already on the record, was their legal representative. Accordingly necessary alteration was made in the array of defendants. At the hearing of the appeal Hem Kunwar satisfied the Court that Mt. Mohni was alive and that he was not the legal representative of Mt. Lachha Kunwar and that in any event the application to place him on the record as her legal representative was made more than six months after the date of her death. It appeared that notice of the appeal was not served on Mt. Mohni and with regard to Mt. Lachha Kunwar it was held that Hem Kunwar had been wrongly placed on the record as her legal representative. The lower appellate Court decreed the appeal in the following terms:

> It is decreed that the claim of the plaintiffs-respondents Raj Bahadur and Hem Kunwar be dismissed with costs and the appeal of the defendants appellants be dismisssd with costs as against the plaintiffs-respondents, Mt. Mohni and Mt. Lachha Kaur.

Hem Kunwar and Raj Bahadur went up in appeal to the High Court and a learned single Judge decreed the appeal, holding that it was one where the right to appeal did not survive against the surviving respondents only, but against them and the representatives of the respondent who had died and that having regard to the provisions of S. 368 read with S.582, Civil P.C., Act 14 of 1882, the whole appeal before the lower appellate Court should have abated. There is no discussion of any principles of law in the judgment, nor do we know whether the interests of the several plaintiffs-respondents in the lower appellate Court were specified and discriminated. This difficulty was experienced by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in a case in Joy Gobind Laha v. Monomotha Nath Banerji (25), while considering the case of Hem Kunwar v. Amba Prasad (24). In my opinion in the absence of any clear indication that the shares of the plaintiffs-respondents were distinctly specified, the Allahabad case was not an authority which would support the decision of the learned Judges in Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1). In my humble judgment, having regard to the nature of the suit and the provisions of O. 22, R. 4 (3), Civil P. C., this case was wrongly decided. There was nothing at all to prevent the appeal from proceeding against the surviving defendants-respondents after the appeal had abated against Muhammad Din. The plaintiff, if successful against the three contesting respondents, could obtain joint possession of the property along with the legal representatives of Muhammad Din under the provisions of O. 21, R 55 (2), Civil P. C. There is no principle either of law or of equity which would justify the Court in depriving the plaintiff of such advanatage as he may be entitled to, in case he is successful on the merits, in his appeal.

The case in Hadu v. Lala (2), purports to follow Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1). This case was in my opinion correctly decided on its own facts, irrespective of the decision in Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1). The case arose out of a suit which the plaintiffs, the proprietors of taraf charhda had brought against the defendants, their co-proprietors, for a declaration that the shamilat land of their taraf was divisible between the proprietary body of the taraf according to their ancestral shares and not according to the entries in the khewat. The trial Court dismissed the suit. The defendants filed a first appeal in the Chief Court and while the appeal was pending one of the defendants-respondents, namely Daim, died. An application to bring his legal representatives on the record was filed too late and the appeal was held to have abated against Daim. It was rightly held that the suit abated as a whole. It would at once appear from this brief statement of the facts of the case that it was a suit in which from its very nature it was necessary that all the members of the proprietary body should be arranged before the Court, either as plaintiffs or defendants, so that their rights may be fully determined and adjusted. The learned Judges applied the correct test that the suit could not have been correctly framed and instituted if Daim had been left out of the array of parties.

The case in Jamna v. Sarjit (26), belongs to the same class of cases and may be taken to have been correctly decided by the learned single Judge, although unfortunately, the judgment comes to an end somewhat abruptly without any discussion of authorities or legal principles.

The case in Inayat v. Ganga (3), was a mortgage suit brought by the plaintiff for possession of certain land on the allegation that the mortgage on the land had been discharged. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court and while the plaintiff's appeal was pending in the lower appellate Court, Sukhu, a co-mortgagee, who was impleaded as one of the respondents, died and his legal representative was not brought on the record. The lower appellate Court accordingly dismissed the suit. In second appeal a Bench of the Chief Court rightly held that the plaintiff's suit could not have proceeded at all unless Sukhu in his capacity as a co-mortgagee had been impleaded and on his death as a respondent the appeal could not have proceeded from the very nature of the suit. I have no doubt that the learned Judges while deciding this appeal had in their mind the well-known principles of law that in a mortgage suit every person having an interest in the mortgage security should be joined as a party, that a mortgage is primarily indivisible and that, except in special circumstances, which did not exist in the case before them, the integrity of the mortgage cannot be broken. Therefore, the decision was based upon different principles which have no application to the present case.

We now come to an important judgment in Mt. Zainab Bibi v. Rohila (6), which fully supports the appellants' contention. In this case the plaintiff brought a suit against nine defendants, for possession of certain lands on the ground that it was self-acquired property of the last owner and that the plaintiff, as his daughter, had a preferential right as against the defendants who were collaterals. The trial Court dismissed the suit. The plaintiff came up in appeal to the Chief Court. One Sadar Din, defendant-respondent, died without his legal representatives being brought on the record. The suit consequently abated as against Sadar Din. It was urged on behalf of the remaining defendants-respondents that the appeal abated as a whole, but this contention was overruled by the learned Judges who held that Sadar Din had no joint right with his co-defendants but each had a separate interest and, therefore, Sadar Din's heirs will retain the shares secured to him by the decree of the trial Court and that there was nothing to prevent the plaintiff-appellant from attacking the remaining defendants-respondents. The learned Judges referred to Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1), but observed that that case presented features which differentiated it from the case before them. With due respect to the learned Judges I fail to see any differentiating features. The position of the defendants in Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1) as well as in Mt. Zainab Bibi v. Rohila (6) was practically the same. However, the case supports the contention of the appellant and is an authority in his favour. In my judgment the decision proceeds on the right principle.

Mt. Zainab Bibi v. Rohila (6) was followed by a Division Bench of two Judges in Nandoo Singh v. Baljit Singh (8). The facts of the two cases are exactly similar, with this difference only, that the case in Nandoo Singh, etc. v. Baljit Singh (8) was a suit for a declaration and therefore is an authority which supports even more fully the contention of the appellants in the reference before us. I need not stop to consider the case in L. Devi Das v. Muhammad (10) which, although decided by two learned Judges, does not contain either any discussion of legal principles or of the reported decisions on the subject.

In the case in Sardari Mal v. Ram Lal (27) three persons obtained a joint decree on the foot of a mortgage for a sum of Rs. 6,670 with costs realizable by the sale of the mortgaged property. The defendant appealed to the High Court and while the appeal was pending one of the plaintiffs-respondents died and her legal representatives were not brought on the record. The learned Judges observed that > under O. 22, R. 4, Civil P. C., the appeal abates entirely unless the right to appeal survives so far as the present respondents are concerned.

With due respect I beg to submit that O. 22, R. 4, Civil P. C., says exactly the contrary, in that it provides that the appeal shall abate as against the deceased defendant only and not in its entirety. In any event this case does not apply to the facts of the reference because here the decree was for a single sum of money and was joint in its character, the shares of the decree-holders not being specified.

The case in Raghbir Saran v. Mt. Sohni Devi (7) presents certain difficulties though the decision is correct. The widow of B. S., while in possession of her husband's estate, made a gift of four items of property in favour of defendants 2 and 3. These donees sold one of the items of property to defendants 4 to 36. The property sold was indicated by 29 shares, 27 of which were transferred to vendees 1 to 27 and the remaining two shares to vendees 28 to 31. A suit was brought by the adopted son of the deceased B. S. for possession of the property transferred by the widow. While the suit was pending, one of the vendees, namely, Hargopal (defendant 30) died and no application to bring his legal representatives on the record was made within time. The suit therefore abated against Hargopal. The trial Court dismissed the whole suit holding that as a result of the death of Hargopal the whole suit had abated. Plaintiff appealed. On behalf of the respondents it was conceded that the appeal could not possibly abate against the defendants (Set II). It was, however, contended that the suit abated as against the co-vendees of Hargopal (Set I). Reliance was placed by the respondents upon the case of Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1) and it was argued that as the interests of the vendees (Set I) were joint in the sense that the property acquired by them under the sale-deed had not been actually divided, therefore the appeal abated against this set of defendants. The learned Judges, while distinguishing the case of Sardara v. Allahyar (28) observed that Hargopal, the deceased defendant-respondent, had only 1/29th share according to the specification of shares in the sale-deed and that therefore his co-vendees had no concern with this 1/29th share. In my judgment, having adopted this line of reasoning, the learned Judges should have refused to follow the rule of law laid down in Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1). The learned Judges, however, tried to distinguish the facts of the case before them from those of (27) [1920] 1 Lah. 225=57 I. C. 199=1 L. L. J. 225.

(28) A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 132.

Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1) by observing that in the latter case the son who had brought the suit to avoid the effect of the sale-deed executed by his father could not achieve his object and obtain possession of any portion of the property without getting rid of the sale-deed and that as the sale-deed was a joint one, the suit could not proceed against the surviving defendants alone. The learned Judges seem to be under the impression that Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1) was a suit for the cancellation of a deed of sale. As a matter of fact it was a suit for possession and on the plaintiff's proving his title the sale-deed would no longer have any legal effect. The learned Judges, however, relied upon the principles of law laid down in Mt. Zainab Bibi v. Rohila (6) and held that the suit abated only as regards the interest of Hargopal, the deceased defendant, and should have been allowed to proceed against the remaining defendants. The learned Judges having decided to follow the principle of Mt. Zainab Bibi v. Rohila (6) should have consistently dissented from the case in Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1). The distinction which has been made, as I have tried to show, is not the right distinction. The decision of the learned Judges, however, in Raghubir Saran v. Mt. Sohni Devi (7) is correct, and I follow it as well as the principle of the decision on which it is founded, namely, Mt. Zainab Bibi v. Rohila (6).

Raghubir Saran v. Mt. Sohni Devi (7) and Mt. Zainab Bibi v. Rohila (6) have been recently followed by a Bench of this Court in the case of Jalal v. Bahawali (9) where the facts were very similar and the learned Judges observed that where the interests of the reversioners of the deceased proprietor were ascertainable and originally a suit could have been brought against some of the defendants in respect of the land which fell to their share there was no reason why on the abatement of the appeal against one of the respondents (reversioners) the appeal should not proceed against the remaining respondents the extent of whose respective interests was clearly defined.

Lastly, I may refer to the decision of a learned single Judge in Karam Khan v. Mast Ali Khan (16) which besides following Raghubir Saran v. Mt Sohni Devi (7) and Mt. Zainab Bibi v. Rohila (6), further relies upon the principle of the recent case in Darshan Das v. Bikramajit Rai (12). The learned Judge observes that the question whether the appeal abates in whole or in part depends on whether the interests of the respondents are or are not separately defined and if they are, the appeal would abate only as against the interests of the deceased respondent. This in my opinion is the correct principle deducible from the cases relied upon by the learned Judge.

Thus the preponderance of the relevant judicial authority in this Court is in favour of the contention put forward by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants. In my humble judgment the case in Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1), and other cases which have followed its authority were wrongly decided.

In the Bombay High Court the current of decisions has been uniform and this perhaps accounts for the paucity of the case-law on the subject. The first case of any importance is Chandar Sang v. Khimabhai (14) This was a suit for possession which the trial Court decreed. There was an appeal to the lower appellate Court and during the course of the appeal one of the plaintiffs-respondents and one of the defendants-appellants died and their respective legal representatives were not brought on the record. The lower appellate Court dismissed the appeal on the ground that the land being held in common the appeal was therefore defective for want of parties. The defendants filed a second appeal in the High Court and the learned Judges, so far as the death of the deceased respondent was concerned, held that the lower appellate Court ought to have acted under the provisions of S. 368, Civil P. C. (now O. 22, R. 4 (3) of the new Code), and declared that the appeal had abated as against him only and should have proceeded against the rest of the respondents under S. 544, Civil P. C., (now O. 41, R. 4, Civil P. C.). They accordingly set aside the order of the dismissal of the appeal and remanded the case to the lower appellate Court for disposal. This case was followed in Bai Full v. Adesangh (29). This was a suit in which the plaintiff claimed a certain undivided area out of a larger area against a number of defendants. While the suit was pending in the trial Court some of the defendants died and their legal representatives were not brought on the record. The trial Court dismissed the suit holding that it abated in its entirety. It was held in appeal by the High Court that the proper course for the Court below was to follow Chandar Sang v. Khimabhai (14), and to declare that the appeal had abated against the deceased defendants-respondents and to proceed to hear the appeal on the merits as against the other respondents.

The last and the most important Bombay case is to be found in Shankerbhai v. Motilal (13), in which the learned Acting Chief Justice delivered a very instructive judgment. This was a suit for possession of a certain house site. The plaintiffs were related to each other as uncle and nephew and claimed the land in suit as tenants-in-common. While the suit was pending the nephew died and his widow was duly brought on the record and the suit was decreed. After the appeal had been filed by the defendant in the lower appellate Court, the widow, who was impleaded as respondent 2, died and her legal representatives were not brought on the record, but an application was made by the defendant-appellant that plaintiff-respondent 1 was her heir and legal representative and that the appeal could proceed against him. Respondent 1 opposed this application and mentioned the name of the proper heir and legal representative of the deceased lady, respondent 2, and urged that as the said legal representative had not been brought on the record, the appeal abated as regards respondent 2. The lower appellate Court held that the appeal abated not only against respondent 2 but in its entirety, the reasoning being that the shares of the plaintiffs-respondents not being ascertained, any decree which might be passed against respondent 1, in case the defendants' appeal was successful, would be infructuous, as the decree in favour of respondent 2 would continue to stand. This reasoning was not accepted in appeal by the High Court and it was held that the order treating the appeal as having abated in respect of respondent 1 as well, was wrong, there being nothing in O. 22, R. 4 (3), Civil P. C., which would justify the abatement of the whole appeal. Shah, Ag. C. J., fully realized that there might be difficulties when the relief which the Court may grant against the remaining respondents in appeal is not likely to be effective. He rightly observed that that difficulty must depend largely upon the nature of the suit and the possible relief that can be granted in appeal, under the circumstances of the particular case. He, however, pointed out that, ordinarily speaking, if the appellant succeeded in proving his case on the merits, there was no reason why he should be deprived of the possible advantage that would accrue to him by obtaining a decree against the surviving respondent or respondents and making as much as he can out of the said decree. Fawcett, J., in the course of the judgment referred to the case Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (30) which seems to lay down the contrary view but he followed Chandar Sang v. Khimabhai (14) and held that it was not a necessary consequence in every case that the whole appeal should abate.

He observed that if the appeal ultimately succeeded the result will not be so anomalous or inconvenient that the Court should merely on that account refuse to pass a decree in favour of the defendant-appellant against respondent 1. He pointed out that in such a case the result will be that while the appellant would fail against respondent 2, he shall succeed against respondent 1 and the order of the lower appellate Court could be modified by directing that the defendants do put the legal representatives of plaintiff-respondent 2 in joint possession of the property while the suit of plaintiff 1 as regards his share would stand dismissed. I entirely agree with this reasoning and in my humble judgment there is nothing anomalous or impracticable in framing a decree on these lines in the circumstances of the case which their Lordships of the Bombay High Court had before them. I have in my experience come across many decrees where a suit instituted against a large array of defendants had abated against one or more defendants and decreed against the rest, or the plaintiff has entered into a compromise with one or more of the defendants and asked the (30) [1920] 24 C. W. N. 44=54 I. C. 822=30 C. L. J. 217.

Court as a result of that compromise to dismiss his claim against them. The decree simply mentions the result of the abatement or the compromise as regards the said defendant or defendants, and in case the plaintiff succeeds on the merits grants him a decree against the remaining defendants. Having regard to the provisions of O. 22, R. 11, Civil P. C., and S. 107, Civil P. C., I fail to understand why a similar decree may not be possible in an appeal which has partially abated as regards some of the respondents and only has succeeded against the remaining respondents. No question of contradictory decrees on the record of one suit arises in the case. There would be only one decree in the suit, but having regard to the course of events the rights of the various parties under the decree would be distinct and capable of being separately dealt with in execution.

Turning to the decisions of the Allahabad High Court, I have already dealt with the case in Hem Kunwar v. Amba Prasad (24). Neave, J, sitting singly in Dayaram v. Ram Narain (A. I. R. 1925 All. 623) followed Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (30) a case which came up before him under the following circumstances : Three persons who were not members of a joint family, brought a suit and obtained a joint decree for possession of certain property. The defendant appealed to the lower appellate Court and before the appeal was decided one of the plaintiffs-respondents, namely Ram Narain, died and as his legal representatives were not brought on the record, the appeal was held to have abated against him. The appeal was apparently dismissed by the lower appellate Court on the merits. The defendant went in second appeal to the High Court when a preliminary objection was raised that the decree being one for joint possession in favour of three persons, the appeal could not proceed against two of them only. The learned Judge gave effect to this objection and held that where a joint decree had been obtained and the appellant had failed to bring on the record the legal representatives of one of the joint decree-holders who had died, though under O. 22, R. 4, Civil P. C., the appeal abated against the deceased plaintiff-respondent only, the result of such abatement would be that the appeal would become imperfectly constituted so that in the absence of a necessary party the Court would be unable to decide the appeal on the merits. The learned Judge accordingly dismissed the appeal.

Another case Bikramjit Rai v. Darshan Das (31) came up before the same learned Judge, but I need not discuss it as it went up in appeal under the Letters Patent before a Bench of two learned Judges in Darshan Das v. Bikramjit Rai (12). The facts of the case are briefly these: A certain Mahant transferred the property in suit to a woman named Mt. Sobhagi. She in her turn transferred her interest under a sale-deed to several persons in the following manner:

B and G	...	½ share
G R and J	...	... ¼ share
K and R	...	... ¼ share

A suit was brought by the successor of the Mahant for possession of the property which had been the subject-matter of these transfers. It was dismissed by the trial Court. The plaintiff appealed and the lower appellate Court decreed the suit. While the appeal was pending in the lower appellate Court, G died but no steps were taken to bring his legal representatives on the record, nor was the matter brought to the notice of the lower appellate Court. The lower appellate Court decreed the plaintiff's suit. In second appeal filed by the defendants the attention of the learned single Judge was drawn to the fact that G had died while the appeal was pending in the lower appellate Court and that his legal representatives had not been brought on the record and it was argued that the appeal abated as a whole. The learned Judge accepted this contention and allowing the appeal dismissed the plaintiff's suit. It appears that the attention of the learned single Judge was not drawn to the fractions already mentioned indicating the shares of the various groups of transferees from Mt. Sobhagi. Accordingly the learned Judges in the Letters Patent appeal modified the decree of the single Judge and held that the appeal abated only against the half-share which represented the joint and undivided interest of B and G. In other words the learned Judges treated the various fractions and the various groups of transferees who jointly held them as so many separate watertight compartments which stood independently of each other so that one compartment could not be affected by the partial abatement of the appeal qua another compartment as a result of the death of an individual belonging to that compartment. Thus the appeal was decreed against the two groups of transferees, namely, G, R and J (=½) and K. R. (=½) and dismissed against the group B and G (=¼). The learned Judges justified their decision by observing that to hold otherwise would lead to the inconvenience of there being two contradictory decrees in the course of one suit with regard to the same property. This ruling supports the plaintiff-appellant's contention, in so far as it held that the appeal abated only partially against the parties who were holding a particular share and could proceed against the holders of the remaining shares.

I may observe that shortly afterwards. in the case reported in Narain Das v, Sheo Din (32) Sulaiman, J., who delivered the judgment of the Court in Darshan Das v. Bikramjit Rai (12) deal-, ing with the question of the abatement of the appeal against one or more of the defendants in a suit for joint possession seems to have modified his view and observed as follows:

> In any case, very often an appellate Court may uphold the decree in favour of some of the plaintiffs and may dismiss the claim of the other plaintiffs. It, therefore, seems to me that in a case for joint possession of property brought by a number of plaintiffs it is possible to dismiss the claim of some and uphold the decree in favour of the others. The decree is certainly a joint decree, but the rights of claimants are distinct and can be considered indvidually and disposed of separately.

This disposes of the contention based upon the alleged inconvenience of there being two contradictory decrees in the same suit. In such cases there would be only one decree dealing with the rights of the various parties and the history of the litigation would at a glance explain the meaning and purpose of such decree. In the same case Mukerji, J., quoted with approval the following passages from Shankerbhai v. Motilal (13).

> It is enough for our present purpose to point out that if the defendants succeed it would place them in a more advantageous position in so far as they would have then to satisfy plaintiff 2 only with reference to the decree and not plaintiff 1.

(32) A. I. R. 1926 All. 234=48 All.251.

This case, therefore, lends support to my view that there is nothing in law to prevent the same decree containing adjudication as regards the various rights and liabilities of the different parties to it.

After the conclusion of the arguments I received the report of another case which came before three learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court. I am referring to the case in Fakira v. Hardewa (19). In that case the learned Judges held that where during the pendency of a second appeal arising out of a suit for a declaration of title against two sets of defendants, one defendant belonging to the second set died and no steps were taken within the time allowed by law to bring his heirs on the record, and the other defendants did not represent the deceased, the appeal would abate as against the second set of defendants only, but not against the first set whose interests were separate and distinct from the other defendants. Mukerji, J., expressed his definite opinion that when under the law his suit or appeal abates against one party only, the rest of the appeal or suit must continue and cannot be dismissed for want of parties. He goes on to say that in a suit for declaration if the plaintiff cannot obtain a declaration of title against some of the defendants, it does not follow that he should not obtain it against the other defendants as well.

With this opinion I entirely agree. The learned Judge once again approves of the decision in Shankarbhai v. Motilal (13), but having regard to the trend of decisions in the Allahabad High Court the learned Judge did not find himself strong enough to differ from it and agreed with the other Judges that on the death of the defendant-respondent, when his legal representatives were not duly brought on the record, the appeal abated against the whole set of defendants with whom he was jointly holding the land in suit. Thus the weight of authority in the Allahabad High Court is on the whole in favour of the appellants before us and the single Judge case in Gajraj v. Bhagirathi (33) which follows Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (30), need not be separately considered.

In the Calcutta High Court the course of decisions has not been uniform. As matters stand now, Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (30), which has been followed in a number of cases, may be taken to be the leading authority on the subject. This was a joint suit for a declaration that the land in dispute appertained to the plaintiffs' property in zamindari rights as well as by adverse possession. The trial Court decreed the plaintiffs' claim and gave the declaration sought for. The defendants filed an appeal in the High Court. Some of the plaintiffs-respondents died and their legal representatives were not brought on the record as required by law. The appeal therefore abated against the deceased respondents under the provisions of O. 22, R. 4, read with R. 11, Civil P. C. The question arose whether the appeal in view of the nature of the suit could proceed against the other respondents and the decision of the trial Court in their favour could be reversed. The learned Judges, while dealing with the conflict of decisions, pointed out that Rampini, J., had expressed divergent views on the subject in different cases. They, however, treated the decree in plaintiffs' favour as a joint decree against the defendants who claimed one undivided interest against the plaintiffs.

On these facts they held that the appeal abated in its entirety. Their reasoning was that if the defendants' appeal were allowed to proceed then, having regard to the nature of the claim and the decree of the trial Court, the result would be that the appeal would become imperfectly constituted and the appellants would no longer be in a position to invite the Court to adjudicate upon the matters in controversy. They further pointed out the incovenience of there being two contradictory declarations in the same suit, one by the trial Court in favour of the deceased plaintiffs and the other by the High Court against the plaintiff-respondents in case the defendants' appeal succeeded. Reference is also made to the embarrassing situation which would arise if these contradictory declarations were produced before the Collector with a view to the entries being made in the revenue records in accordance therewith. The facts of this case are essentially different from those of the case before us, and, therefore, strictly speaking, the decision has no direct application. But as the case was strongly relied upon by the respondents' counsel and contains important propositions, it requires careful consideration. I have already expressed my views when discussing the case in Shankarbhai v. Moti Lal (13) on the question of the so-called inconvenience of having two contradictory decrees in the same suit. I would further point out that a declaratory suit is in the nature of quiatimet relief and the decree in such a suit is incapable of execution except as to costs and is used in many cases either as the basis of a subsequent suit or for the purposes of correcting the revenue records. In the event of the defendants succeeding in their appeal, the declaration would hold good only in favour of the deceased respondents. They undoubtedly secured an advantage of which the heirs cannot be deprived. And there is no reason either in law or in equity why the remaining plaintiffs respondents should benefit simply because one or more of their co-respondents had died and the suit has abated as against them. This case was followed in Dendoo v. Sachoo (34) where the facts were similar. In Arjan Mirdha v. Kali Kumar (A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 294) also Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (30) was followed, although in that case the plaintiffs had specified their shares but had sued for joint possession.

Neyajaddin v. Akamat Ali (35) follows Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (30). In this case a suit was brought for the recovery of possession of a certain plot of land against a number of joint tort-feasors. The trial Court granted only a declaration as regards two plots and dismissed the suit as to khas possession. The plaintiffs appealed and the lower appellate Court passed a decree for khas possession of those plots. It appears, however, that while the appeal was pending before the lower appellate Court one of the defendants-respondents died and some of his heirs were brought on the record. Five of these heirs were minors. It was noticed by the lower appellate Court that these minors were not duly represented and that in fact no steps had been taken to secure their proper representation before the Court. The lower appellate Court's decree was, therefore, given against the major defendants only. Some of the heirs of the deceased defendants and the other defendants appealed to the High Court and urged that in the absence of the minor heirs of the deceased defendant who were properly not represented in appeal the whole appeal before the lower appellate Court ought to have abated. The High Court gave effect to this contention on the ground that the suit being for recovery of possession aginst a number of joint tortfeasors and the plaintiffs not having alleged that the defendants individually dispossessed them from different portions of the land, the decree was inseparable and indivisible and the appeal before the lower appellate Court was, therefore, liable to be dismissed in toto. It is significant that the learned Judges based their decision upon the fact of the decree of the trial Court being inseparable and indivisible implying thereby that if the interests of the defendants had been separate the result would have been different. As in the reference before us the shares of the defendants are admittedly divisible and separable and the plaintiff has come into the Court on the distinct allegation that the defendants 1 to 4 purchased the property in certain specified shares, the case is an indirect authority in favour of the appellants.

(35) A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 411.

In Midnapur Zamindari Co. v. Ishar Chandar (A. I. R. 1924 Cal 346) following Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (30) it was held that if the appellate Court were called upon to set aside a decree for possession which enured to the benefit of four persons, one of whom is dead and his legal representatives have not been brought on the record, it will refuse to do so on the ground that even if the appeal were to succeed the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff would not be bound by the appellate Court's decree and would be at liberty to execute it in its entirety as one of several joint decree-holders and the appeal would become infructuous. This case proceeds on the principle of avoiding two contradictory decrees in the suit. To the same effect is the case in Midnapur Zamindary Co. v. Amulya Nath (36) which also follows Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (30).

Gopika Raman Roy v. Atal Singh (A. I. R. 1926, Cal. 193) and Tara Prasanna Singh v. Ranjit Lal Mandal (A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 252) have been decided on grounds which very closely approach the principle on which Darshan Das v. Bikramajit Rai (12) was decided. In this case distinct plots were held by the various defendants. The plaintiff brought a suit for possession, treating the defendants as if they were joint tort-feasors. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court and while the plaintiff's appeal was pending in the lower appellate Court some of the defendants-respondents died and their legal representatives were not brought on the record. It was held that the appeal did not abate in its entirety for should the plaintiff-appellant succeed in his appeal, he would obtain a decree against such of the defendants-respondents who may be in possession of specified plots, provided such plots were not held jointly by them with some of the defendants against whom the appeal had abated. As I have already observed the principle upon which the decision of this case is based supports to a certain extent the contention of the plaintiffs-appellants in the case before us for in the present case also the defendants were holding the land in specific sharers under their purchase and the plaintiff can obtain a decree against such of the shares as represented the respective interests of the surviving defendants-respondents.

In Siddik v. Aziz (37) the plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration and khas possession of certain land. The trial Court decreed the suit in part and gave him a declaration in respect of most of the lands claimed by him and also awarded him khas possession. In appeal the lower appellate Court upheld the declaration of the plaintiff's title in respect of the land decreed by the lower Court but set aside the order as regards khas possession. The plaintiff filed a second appeal and while this appeal was pending one of the defendants-respondents died and no steps were taken to substitute his heirs. It was held that the whole appeal abated and the reasoning of the learned Judges was that the order which they were asked to give was one of khas possession of the lands in dispute and that as there was nothing on the record to show that the various defendants owned lands in separate allotments or even in separate shares and as there is no definition of shares or of specific lands belonging more to one defendant than to another, the appeal could not be proceeded with as it would be impossible for the Court in case the plaintiff succeeded, to grant an effective decree. This reasoning shows that if, as in the case before us, the various defendants had held lands in separate and defined shares, the result of the second appeal would have been different and the learned Judges would not have ordered the abatement of the whole appeal. This case, therefore, though cited on behalf of of the defendandants-respondents, really supports the principle contended for by the plaintiffs-appellants.

(37) A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 238.

Only one Madras case was cited before us in argument, namely Srinivasalu Chetty v. P. Guraviah (38). In this case a joint decree to establish the rights of the plaintiffs to a site had been obtained and the defendants appealed. While the appeal was pending one of the plaintiffs-respondents died and the Court following Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (30) held that whole appeal abated as the legal representatives of the deceased-respondent who had not been brought on the record could execute the decree as a whole.

This case and similar cases decided on the same principle are not authorities against the plaintiffs-appellants in the present case, and I am not called upon to express a definite opinion as to their correctness or otherwise. But I may observe with due deference to the learned Judges who have held this view, that the Code of Civil Procedure in O. 21, R. 15, makes ample provision to meet such a contingency and it is not at all difficult in such cases for the Court to frame its decree in such a way as to make it consistent with its actual decision as regards the abatement of the appeal against some of the respondents and the success of the appeal as against the others. The provisions of O. 21, R. 15, Civil P. C., are as follows:

> Where a decree has been passed jointly in favour of more persons than one, any one or more of such persons may, unless the decree imposes any condition to the contrary, apply for the execution of the whole decree for the benefit of them all. . . . . .

Now, in case the appeal of the defendants succeeds there would be nothing to prevent the Court from imposing such conditions as would meet the situation created by the death of one of the plaintiffs-respondents. And according to sub-R. (2), R. 15, O. 21, Civil P. C., the Court can protect the interests of the ultimately successful defendants-appellants. After all decrees, as a rule, should not be drawn up on the model of a steel-frame and it is always desirable that the Court, under its inherent powers and in order to give full effect to its decision, should frame its decree in such elastic form as would define the respective rights and liabilities of the several parties to the suit and thus to do substantial justice between all those who are concerned with the result of litigation.

I have discussed the authorities cited by the parties before me with a few others which I found out after the arguments were over. I find that there is a substantial volume of authority in the Punjab itself which is against the view expressed in Khuda Bakhsh v. Mathra Das (1). The Bombay cases are very helpful and support the contention of the plaintiffs-appellants to its full logical extent while the tendency of the Allahabad decisions is also distinctly in favour of the appellants' contention. The observations occurring in some of the cases of the Calcutta High Court also lend support to the appellants' contention while most of the cases of that Court like Kali Dayal v. Nagendra Nath (30) and the cases following it only inferentially support the contention of the respondents. Though their facts are distinguishable from those of the reference before us I have, however, discussed these cases at some length and have expressed my views on some of the propositions enunciated in them and on which reliance has been placed by the respondent.

My answer, therefore, to the reference is that the appeal can proceed against B, C and D, the surviving vendees-respondents, and that the abatement of the appeal as against A would not result in the dismissal of the appeal in its entirety.

Gopi Chand and another—Judgment-debtors—Respondents.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 227 of 1927, Decided on 14th November 1927, from order of 4th Class Sub-Judge, Chakwal, D/- 14th December 1926.

Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 52—C mortgaging his properties to A and then to B—A suing on his mortgage without joining B and properties sold—Surplus proceeds doposited in Court—B attaching the deposit before the judgment in his suit, but no note made in Deposit Register—A obtaining another decree for unsecured debts and deposit paid to him towards the decree—Deposit was held to have been properly attached by B, and his rights as puisne mortgagee not affected.

A, a prior mortgagee, and B, a puisne mortgagee, of the same property, got two decrees against C, the mortgagor. A, in execution of his decree, sold the property, and the surplus of the sale proceeds was deposited in the Court. B, during the pendency of his suit, applied for the attachment of this amount before judgment. Attachment was allowed, but no note was made in the Deposit Register about attachment. Meantime A brought another suit in another Court against C to recover unsecured debts and the amount deposited in the first Court was paid to him in satisfaction of his decree. B objected. Later B obtained the decree and applied that the amount due to him on this decree be paid out of the amount deposited in Court as the surplus of the sale proceeds. Finding that the money was already paid to A the Court, acting under S. 151, Civil P.C., ordered A to refund the money and that money so refunded should be paid to B.

Held: that the amount had been properly and validly attached before judgment in the suit instituted by B and that A could not in execution of the decree obtained by him for his unsecured debts take away the whole of the deposit without first paying off B the amount due to him on foot of his mortgage. [P 594 C 2]

Manohar Lal—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This petition was admitted by Campbell, J., as the facts were a little complicated and had not been expressed with sufficient clearness in the judgment of the Court below in which the names of the two rival claimants Gopi Chand and Gian Chand had been by a slip of pen mixed up at several places. I have had the case argued at great length by both counsel and I think it necessary to re-state the facts in some detail.

One Waris was the owner of a house which he mortgaged to Gian Chand, petitioner. Subsequently, on the 4th October 1920, Waris created another mortgage on the same house in favour of Gopi Chand, respondent. Waris also owed to Gian Chand money on account of certain other unsecured debts for which he had executed bonds in his favour.

Waris having died childless leaving a widow, Mt. Bano, Gian Chand instituted a suit against her for recovery of the amount due to him on foot of the mortgage dated the 5th August 1916, and obtained from the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chakwal, a decree for Rs. 330 plus costs recoverable from the house. In execution of this decree the house was sold for Rs. 1,000 on 9th June 1925, and out of the sale proceeds Gian Chand was paid off the decretal amount and the balance, Rs. 610, remained in deposit with the executing Court (Subordinate Judge, Chakwal) to the credit of Mt. Bano.

On the 20th April 1925 Gopi Chand instituted a suit against Mt. Bano for recovery of Rs. 180 due to him on foot of the mortgage in his favour, dated 4th October 1920. On the 9th July 1925 he applied for attachment before judgment of the amount that was in deposit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chakwal, as the surplus of the sale proceeds of the house. On the 14th July 1925 an order was passed directing the attachment of the above sum. It seems, however, that by a mistake of the ministerial officers of the Court no note in the register of deposits was made to the effect that the amount had been attached before judgment in this suit. The suit against Mt. Bano proceeded and a preliminary decree was passed on the 15th August for Rs. 180 principal plus Rs. 31-6-0 costs recoverable from the estate of Waris, deceased This was followed by a final decree passed on the 4th January 1926.

In the meantime Gian Chand had, on the 16th December 1924, instituted a suit against Mt. Bano in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jhelum, for recovery of Rs. 1,899 due to him by Waris on foot of two bonds which had been executed by Waris. It may be noted that the amount due on these bonds had not been charged on the house. On the 13th July 1925, Gian Chand also applied to the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jhelum, for attachment before judgment of the deposit of Rs. 610, which was lying with the Subordinate Judge, Chakwal, as the surplus of the sale proceeds of the house. On the 12th August 1925, the Senior Subordinate Judge passed an order allowing attachment before judgment and the usual precept was issued to the Subordinate Judge, Chakwal. Gian Chand obtained a decree on the 27th October 1925; he took out execution praying that the amount which had been attached before judgment may be made over to him. On the 4th November 1925, a precept was issued by the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jhelum, to the Subordinate Judge, Chakwal, asking him to pay the amount to Gian Chand, and on the 13th February 1926, Rs. 610 was paid.

On the 4th January 1926 Gopi Chand who had, as already stated, obtained a final decree for Rs. 180 (plus Rs. 31-6-0 costs) on foot of his mortgage recoverable from the house, and who had an order of attachment of the surplus of sale proceeds on the 14th July 1925, applied that the amount due to him on account of this decree be paid to him. On this the nazir reported that the amount had already been attached in Gian Chand's decree and there was no note in his register that this amount had been attached before judgment in the suit instituted by Gopi Chand against Mt. Bano. While enquiry on this application was proceeding Gian Chand took away the whole of the amount on the 18th February 1926 as already stated. Gopi Chand contested the right of Gian Chand to take this amount and after enquiry the Subordinate Judge, Chakwal, acting under S. 151, Civil P. C., directed Gian Chand to refund Rs. 212-14-0 out of the Rs. 610 and ordered that amount as refunded to be paid to Gopi Chand.

Against this order of refund the present petition for revision has been presented by Gian Chand and I have heard Mr. Gobind Ram Khanna in support of it. The main point urged by him is that the lower Court was in error in presuming that the amount of Rs. 610 had been actually attached before judgment in the suit instituted by Gopi Chand to enforce the mortgage in his favour. He admits that Gopi Chand's application for attachment was granted by the Court on the 14th July 1925, and that the necessary process-fee was deposited almost immediately by Gopi Chand, but he urges that the provisions of O. 21, R. 52 were not complied with inasmuch as no notice was issued to the Court in which the deposit was lying requesting it that the money might be held subject to further orders of the Court and for this reason there was no valid attachment of the money. In my opinion this contention is void of all force. In this case the order attaching the money had been issued by the Subordinate Judge, Chakwal, and the amount which was to be attached was lying in that Court itself. In my opinion it would have been a meaningless formality for the Court to issue a precept to itself requesting it to hold the money subject to its own orders. I have no doubt that under the circumstances the order of the Court directing attachment was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of O. 21, R. 52. Mr. Gobind Ram relies upon Surjamull Agarwal v. Ram Chandra Mistry (1), but the facts of that case were wholly different, and, so far as I can see, the remarks of the learned Judges at p. 126 really negative the contention of Mr. Gobind Ram. I therefore hold that the amount had been properly and validly attached before judgment in the suit instituted by Gopi Chand and that Gian Chand could not in execution of the decree obtained by him for his unsecured debts take away the whole of the deposit without first paying off Gopi Chand, mortgagee, the amount due to him on foot of his mortgage.

Mr. Gobind Ram has further argued that Gopi Chand, the second mortgagee, by not intervening at the sale of the house in execution of the decree obtained by Gian Chand, the prior mortgagee, and not having his rights reserved at the sale, had lost his lien for his mortgage money on the sale proceeds of the house and that the only remedy now available to him is to file a suit to have the sale set aside and the property re-sold. In my opinion this contention also has no force whatever. It is well settled that the sale of a mortgaged property held in the circumstances described above, does not affect the title of the puisne mortgagee who had not been made a party to the suit by the prior mortgagee or who had not intervened at the sale. Such a person can either proceed against the mortgaged property in the hands of the purchaser by bringing it to sale or he can proceed against the surplus of the sale proceeds left with the Court after satisfying the claim of the prior mortgagee: see in this connexion Barhamdeo Prasad v. Tara Chand (2), and the recent judgment of the Madras High Court in Krishnaswami Bhagavathar v. Thirumalai Iyer (3), where most of the previous authorities have been discussed.

For the foregoing reasons I hold that there is no force in this revision and I dismiss it with costs.

Second Appeal No. 2373 of 1926, Decided on 19th April 1928, from decree of District Judge, Jhelum, D/- 31st August 1926.

Custom (Punjab)—Succesion — Brahmins of Bhilowal, Tahsil Pind Dadan Khan,

The custom that the reversioners among the Brahmins of Bhilowal, Tahsil Pind Dadan Khan, succeed to the property of their deceased collaterals to the exclusion of daughters was held not proved. [P 595 C 2]

Judgment.—The appellants in appeals Nos. 2373 and 2374 of 1926, alleging themselves to be the reversioners of one Mathra Das, Brahman of Saroba in the district of Jhelum, instituted two suits, one for the recovery of certain land from Mt. Bharai, the daughter of Mathra Das, and another for possession of a house and a kotha on the allegation that Mathra Das had made a gift thereof to them four days before his death. The District Judge has found that Mathra Das was governed by the Hindu Law and not by custom, and that, therefore, he was entitled to make a gift of his land to his daughter, Mt. Bharai. With regard to the house and the kotha he has held that the gift of the same in favour of the plaintiffs, the appellants before me, has not been established as having been made by the deceased while he was in possession of his full senses. He has found on the evidence that the deceased was suffering from melancholia for about a month before his death and that he was unconscious three or four days before that. He has, therefore, been unable to hold that the alleged gift was made by him. This conclusion is also supported by him from the consideration of suspicious circumstances under which the deed of gift in favour of the appellants was executed. These, in my opinion, are all findings of fact and cannot be attacked in this Court on second appeal.

The appellants, however, have obtained a certificate from the District Judge which is to the effect that there is a question regarding the existence of a custom involved, i, e., that the reversioners among Brahmans Bhilowal, Tahsil Pind Dadan Khan, succeed to the property of their deceased collateral to the exclusion of daughters.

The matter, however, was not decided by the District Judge on that basis. He held that the parties were governed by the Hindu Law and not by custom. Even if I assumed that the certificate is sufficient to enable me to examine the question whether such a custom, as is mentioned in the certificate, does actually exist governing the family to which Mathra Das belonged, an examination of the record shows that there is practically no reliable evidence in support of the appellant's assertion. The evidence is very meagre. For instance, one of the witnesses says that among the parties daughters do not succeed to the estate of the father and the other merely says that the parties cultivate land. In my opinion such evidence was rightly held by the District Judge as insufficient to establish the existence of a custom such as is mentioned in the certificate, assuming that the District Judge considered the question of the existence of the custom at all.

On all the grounds, therefore, I hold that there is no ground for these appeals. They are accordinly dismissed with costs.

Dalip Singh, J.—Plaintiffs in this case sued defendant 1 for the price of certain goods which the plaintiffs alleged the defendant had contracted to buy from them, and they sued defendants 2 and 3 as acceptors of certain drafts for the price of the said goods which defendants 2 and 3 finally refused to honour. The trial Court granted the plaintiffs a preliminary decree holding that defendant 1 had contracted to buy the said goods from the plaintiffs, that the property in the said goods had passed, but as the plaintiffs had sold some portion of the goods on their own account they were entitled to damages from defendant 1 for the difference in price by resale and for the price of the goods still unsold which was to be determined after further enquiry. It refused a decree against defendants 2 and 3 holding that the property in the goods had passed to defendant 1 and the drafts were against shipping documents or against goods which the plaintiffs were not in a position to deliver to defendants 2 and 3.

Defendant 1 alone appealed from the decree making the plaintiffs as respondent 1 and defendants 2 and 3, pro-forma respondents, as respondents 2 and 3. The appeal was lodged in this Court in 1924. Plaintiff-respondent 1 lodged cross-objections against defendants-respondents 2 and 3 on 12th March 1926. On 26th January 1928, when the appeal came on for hearing before a Division Bench, counsel for the appellant stated that his client had been adjudicated insolvent. Under O. 22, R. 8, Civil P. C., the Division Bench ordered notice to the Official Receiver directing him to take steps to continue the appeal if he wished to do so. They also ordered that if he decided to proceed with the appeal he should furnish security for the costs of the appeal within two months from that date, namely, 26th January 1928.

The appeal has now come on for hearing and the Official Receiver has notified that he is unable to give security as the insolvency Court will not allow him to do so. Counsel for defendant-respondent 3 has put in a petition under O. 22, R. 8 (1) and (2), Civil P. C., praying that the appeal be declared to have abated as the Official Receiver is not continuing the same and has not furnished the required security, and further that the appeal be ordered to be dismissed and costs awarded to petitioner, respondent 3, against the estate of the insolvent. Counsel for plaintiff-respondent 1 has contended that the appeal does not abate. He has referred to the history of the section and points out that in the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 the word "abatement" is definitely used. In the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 he contends that there was no abatement but only dismissal of the suit. He contends that under O. 22, R. 8 the only course open in a case, where the appellant has become insolvent and the Official Receiver declines to continue the appeal and to furnish security, is for the defendant to apply for a dismissal of the suit with costs, and if he does not do so the appeal does not abate but remains suspended.

In support of his contention he has cited Khuni Lal v. Rameshar (1), Lekhraj v. Sham Lal (2) and Kissen Gopal v. Suklal Karnani ( ). Counsel for defendant-respondent 3 has cited Peary Mohan v. Narendra Nath (4).

(1) A. I. R. 1922 All. 361=43 All. 621.
(2) [1892] 16 Bom. 404.
(3) A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 76=53 Cal. 844.
(4) [1910] 37 Cal. 229=5 I. C. 404=37 I. A. 27 (P. C.).

After considering all these rulings we are of opinion that the section itself, namely, O. 22, R. 8 (1) is too clear to admit of any debate on the point. That section states that the appeal shall not abate unless certain contingencies happen, clearly implying thereby that if those contingencies happen the appeal shall abate. Counsel for the plaintiff-respondents has contended that the section is badly drafted and contends that in O. 22, R. 1 similar words occur but are followed by O. 22, R. 3 in which it is definitely stated that the appeal shall abate, whereas in sub-S. (2), O. 22, R. 8 it is stated that the appeal shall be dismissed, and in O. 22, R. 9, a remedy is provided both for abatement and for dismissal. The section certainly does not seem to be very happily drafted, for instance, it is pointed out by counsel on both sides that, whereas in the first portion of the section the words are that the Official Receiver may neglect or refuse to continue the suit or to furnish security, whereas in sub-S. (2) the words are the Official Receiver refuses or neglects to continue the suit and to furnish security.

Whatever may be the exact effect of the use of the word "and" in the second portion of the section it is clear that the two sections cannot be read as if the words "shall not abate" had no meaning whatsoever. Why in sub-S. (2) the word "dismissal" is put for "abate" is certainly not very clear, but be that as it may, we are of opinion that the appeal does abate, even without the defendant's application for dismissal with costs. In this particular case the defendant has applied both for dismissal and for costs, as well as for a declaration that the appeal has abated, and we accept his contention and declare that the appeal has abated and is dismissed as abated with costs against the insolvent's estate. We have ascertained the costs of the defendant-respondent 3 and of plaintiff-respondent 1, and we allow defendant 3 Rs. 23-4-0, for printing and Rs. 100 as counsel's fees. We allow plaintiff-respondent 1 who has also orally applied for costs Rs. 159-2-0 for printing and Rs. 875 as counsel's fees.

Counsel for plaintiff-respondent 1 next contended that his cross-objections against defendants-respondents 2 and 3 could proceed although the appeal has been held to have abated. He cites O. 41, R. 22 on this point and contends that the change in the section, i. e., the omission of the words "upon the hearing" and the change in sub-S. (3) by which for the word "appellant" the words "the party who may be affected by such objection" have been substituted shows that any respondent may now urge cross-objections against any other co-respondent without reference to the fate of the appeal provided an appeal has been duly lodged. That is to say he admits that in the case of an appeal barred by limitation the cross-objections could not be heard. But he contends that sub-S. (4) is merely illustrative and an appeal which has abated was once in existence and therefore is no bar to the hearing of the cross-objections. It might, however, as well be contended that the words "upon the hearing" were omitted from sub-S. (1), O. 41, R. 22 because of the insertion of sub-S. (4) and that sub-S. (4) is exhaustive of the cases in which cross-objections may be heard even though the appeal is not heard. The form of the draft seems to us to suggest that the latter view is the more correct one and that, except for the cases provided in sub-S. (4), cross-objections share the fate of the appeal, and this view is supported by the only authority brought to our notice, namely Murugappa Chettiar v. Ponnusami Pillai (5). There it was definitely held that in a case of abatement cross-objections could not be heard. It is, therefore, unnecessary for us to go into all the points which were urged by counsel for defendant-respondent 3 as to whether the cross-objections against co-respondents could be urged in the circumstances of this particular case. It is sufficient for us to hold that the appeal has abated in the present case and the cross-objections therefore cannot be heard. We therefore dismiss the cross-objections and allow Rs. 100 costs to counsel for defendant-respondent 3 in the same.

Appeal and cross objections dismissed.

Second Appeal No. 2129 of 1927, Decided on 11th January 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 29th March 1927.

Party wall—Raised portion of a joint wall must be considered to be a party wall.

In a portion raised on an existing joint wall by one party with the acquiescence of the other neither owner is at liberty to open windows without the consent of the other, while the raised portion must also be considered to be a party wall: *A. Nanak Chand—for Appellants.

Judgment.— The plaintiff sued the defendants for an injunction to be issued to them to close two windows and a ventilator which they had made in the wall of their third storey. It was alleged in the plaint that the wall separating the two houses was joint up to the first storey, by which was meant the ground floor, and that the windows and the ventilator had been forcibly opened on the third storey of their house by the defendants. The defendants' house is one of three storeys but that of the plaintiff has two storeys. Defendants pleaded that plaintiff was a tenant or raiyat and that the openings had existed for over 20 years. Later the plaintiff was allowed to take an additional plea that the openings interfered with his privacy. The trial Court held that the plaintiff owned his house, that the openings had been made within five or six years, that the plaintiff's privacy was interfered with and that by custom this privacy could be protected by the Courts. The defendants appealed. The learned District Judge held that the house belonged to the plaintiff, that the openings had been made within six years and the suit was thus within time but that the plaintiff had not proved that his community observed purda and also had failed to prove that at the time in question there was a custom by which persons were bound not to interfere with the privacy of others. The learned District Judge, however, then went on to state that the real points in the case had not been decided, namely, whether the party wall in the first storey (i. e., the ground floor) was joint and if so, what was the effect of the defendants having built on this joint wall for other two storeys. He, therefore, accepted the appeal and remanded the case for re-decision on these lines, at the same time refunding the stamp on appeal. Both sides seem to have been content with this order.

When the suit went back for re-decision the trial Judge held that the wall of the parties to the height of the first storey (i. e., the ground floor) was not joint. He found that there were four niches in the wall on the plaintiff's side in this first storey while 10 or 11 rafters of the first storey, i. e., the ground floor, of the plaintiff rested upon the wall. In the second storey of the plaintiff's house, however, there were no niches on the plaintiff's side of the wall and no rafters rested on the wall in dispute on the plaintiff's side. He purported to follow Chiragh Din v. Buta (1) and held that the evidence did not establish that it was a joint wall to the height of the ground floor. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

On appeal the learned District Judge held that the facts proved established that the wall was a joint wall to the height of the first storey, that is, the ground floor, and he distinguished Chiragh Din v. Buta (1). Following Imambhai Kamrudin v. Rahimbhai Usmanbhai (2) he held that the defendants must have built the wall to the height of their third storey on the joint wall, already existing to the height of the ground floor with the consent or acquiescence of the plaintiff, but that the raised portion must also be considered to be a party wall and that neither owner was at liberty to open windows in the portion so raised without the permission of the other. He, therefore, accepted the appeal and granted the plaintiff the injunction sued for. Against this decision the defendants have preferred this second appeal.

There was evidence before the learned District Judge which he has considered when coming to his finding that the wall is a party wall up to the height of the first storey. His finding must, therefore, be accepted.

The plaintiff did not even object in his suit to the raising by the defendants of the wall held to be joint to the height of the first storey, that is, the ground floor, so that it must be taken that the plaintiff acquiesced at least in the raising of the wall. The cases, therefore, which state that one party cannot raise a joint wall without the consent of the other do not apply. Imambhai Kamrudin v. Rahimbhai Usmanbhai (2) is, however, directly in point. It is to the effect that in a portion raised on an existing joint wall by one party with the acquiescence of the, other neither owner is at liberty to open windows without the consent of the other, while the raised portion must also be considered to be a apply party wall. I should have thought that it would have been sufficient to protect the plaintiff's right by a declaration to the effect that he can close the openings whenever he desired to use the raised portion for his building. I think, however, that I should follow the ruling referred to and I, therefore, dismiss this appeal though I leave the parties to bear their own costs in it. It will remain for future decision, if necessary, whether the plaintiff can use the portion of the joint wall which has been raised by the defendants without paying his share of the cost.

(2) A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 373=49 Bom. 586.

Second Appeal No. 1916 of 1923, Decided on 27th September 1927, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Lahore, D/- 9th June 1923.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 33—Powers under O. 41, R. 33 must be carefully exercised.

The powers given to the High Court under O. 41, R. 33, have to be exercised with care and discretion and only when the party appealing to it can fairly be said to be entitled to the relief equitably: A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 620, Ref. [P 601 C 1]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 6, R. 17—Amendment of plaint was not allowed at the stage of second appeal.

A sued B, and C and prayed for a decree against one or both. The trial Court decreed the suit against C. C appealed to the District Judge, but A neither appealed nor filed cross-objection. The District Judge finding that the plaint did not disclose any cause of action against C, dismissed the suit. Thereupon, A preferred a second appeal to the High Court and prayed for an amendment.

Held: that amendment could not be allowed at that stage as it would amount to a retrial and equity did not require such a course being adopted. [P 600 C 2]

Broadway, J.—The facts giving rise to this second appeal are briefly these:

The Punjab National bank had dealings with a firm known as Gokal Chand Salig Ram, while a firm entitled Uma Datt-Hansraj acted as the bank's agents. Gokal Chand Salig Ram were in the habit of buying produce, making a certain deposit with the bank purchasing the produce through the bank, acting through their agents Uma Datt-Hans Raj and executing a promissory note in favour of the bank for the amount advanced. They undertook to increase the deposit whenever called upon to do so by the bank, the bank intending to cover itself in this way when the rates of the produce varied adversely. In addition to the execution of a promissory note the produce purchased was hypothecated or mortgaged to the bank for the amount of the money payable.

It appears that on 8th September 1915 the firm Gokal Chand Salig Ram purchased a kotha of gram for Rs. 3,834-11-3 and executed a promissory note for that amount in favour of the bank. The purchase was made through the agency of Uma Datt-Hans Raj. A sum of Rs. 565 was deposited to cover any loss. The interest payable under the promissory note was at the rate of seven and a half per cent. Prices went down, and it is said the bank called upon Gokal Chand Salig Ram to increase the deposit. They failed to do so whereupon the bank exercised its rights and sold the kotha of gram through their agents Uma Datt-Hans Raj. It appears that the amount realized at the sale was Rs. 3,266-0-9. This amount should have been paid into the bank to the credit of Gokal Chand Salig Ram. As a matter of fact Uma Datt Hans Raj only paid in the sum of Rs. 2,205-4-0. I would note that the sale took place on 5th February 1917.

On the 25th July 1919, the bank instituted a suit, impleading as defendant 1 Gokal Chand Salig Ram and as defendant 2 Uma Datt-Hans Raj. The suit was based on the promissory note and it was alleged that the amount outstanding including interest to date of suit, came to Rs. 1,734-3-0. It was prayed that a decree for that amount together with further interest and costs should be granted against one or both of the defendants.

Gokal Chand Salig Ram, for some reason best known to themselves, pleaded that they had not executed any promissory note and this matter was put in issue. Uma Datt-Hans Raj raised the plea that the plaint showed no cause of action against them, but this was not put to issue. The case then proceeded, and a commissioner was appointed to go into all manner of accounts between the plaintiff and Gokal Chand Salig Ram as well as between Gokal Chand Salig Ram and Uma Datt-Hans Raj. Why this was allowed to be done it is difficult to understand. Finally, the trial Court came to the decision that nothing was due to the bank from Gokal Chand Salig Ram; but the bank's claim was decreed against Uma Datt-Hans Raj.

Uma Datt-Hans Raj preferred an appeal against this decree which was disposed of by the Additional District Judge, Lahore, on 9th June 1923. The bank apparently was content with its decree and neither appealed against the dismissal of the suit so far as Gokal Chand Salig Ram were concerned nor filed any cross-objections. The learned Additional District Judge came to the conclusion that the plaint disclosed no cause of action against Uma Datt-Hans Raj and that if there was any dispute between the bank and Uma Datt-Hans Raj relating to their agency that was a matter which could not be gone into in this suit but might well form the subject of a suit for rendition of accounts. In conclusion the learned Additional District Judge stated that it was not necessary to consider whether the suit against defendant 1 should or should not have been dismissed because the bank has not appealed.

On the 6th August 1923 the bank preferred this second appeal against the order of the Additional District Judge dismissing their suit, impleading both the original defendants as respondents.

It was urged that, inasmuch as the bank had a lien on the kotha of gram, Uma Datt-Hans Raj were not entitled to retain any part of the purchase-money to reimburse themselves for moneys due to them by Gokal Chand Salig Ram. It was also urged that the Additional District Judge should have acted under R. 33, O. 41, Civil P. C, and passed a decree against Gokal Chand Salig Ram.

This second appeal was admitted on the question of lien and the learned counsel for the parties in this case have admitted that the bank had a lien on the kotha of gram in accordance with the hypothecation that had been made. The question for determination, however, is whether or not, so far as Uma Datt-Hans Raj are concerned, the plaint discloses any cause of action. Mr. Har Gopal for the bank has read the plaint and has emphasized the points that he considered of importance, notably the contents of paras.3 and 5. On the other hand Mr. Fakir Chand for Uma Dutt-Hans Raj has urged that nothing in the plaint really amounts to an assertion or allegation which can be construed into forming any cause of action. After a careful consideration of the point my learned brother and I have come to the conclusion that the contention of Mr. Fakir Chand is correct and that no cause of action at all was alleged in the plaint. Mr. Har Gopal then urged that he should be allowed even at this stage to amend the plaint, pointing out that Uma Datt Hans Raj had taken this plea but that it had not been put in issue. I am afraid we are unable to agree to this course being adopted. It would practically amount to a retrial, and it appears that at this late stage equity does not require such a course being adopted. The suit against Uma Datt-Hans Raj having been, therefore, rightly dismissed the appeal as against them must be dismissed as well.

Turning to the next point.: Mr. Har Gopal urged that R. 33, O. 41, Civil P.C., was wide enough to enable the Additional District Judge and this Court to modify or alter the decree of the trial Court so as to make it one against Gokal Chand Salig Ram. Mr. Sethi for Gokal Chand Salig Ram has, however, strenuosly protested against the use of this rule and order against his clients. He has indeed urged that the powers of this Court are limited in this direction, and, having regard to a Madras authority reported as Ramalingam Chettiar v. Sub- ramania Chettiar (1) there seems some force in this contention. But the authorities of this Court have not gone as far as Mr. Sethi contends the Madras High Court have. At the same time it is obvious that, even if this rule and order gives a Court such wide powers, these powers have to be exercised with care and discretion and only when the party appealing to it can fairly be said to be entitled to the relief equitably. In the present case we have a bank, drafting through its counsel, a most defective plaint and allowing the case to be mishandled from start to finish. We have a finding of the trial Court, arrived at apparently after a careful examination of all the dealings between the bank and this firm, that this firm is not indebted to the bank as a result of all the transactions between them. It is also clear that the firm of Uma Datt-Hans Raj have escaped liability through the errors into which the plaintiff bank fell in drawing up its plaint, and, having regard to all these circumstances, I am forced to the conclusion that this present case would not be a proper one in which to exercise the powers conferred on this Court by R. 33, O. 41, Civil P. C., even assuming that those powers were wide enough to cover the case. To decide whether the firm of Gokal Chand Salig Ram was in any way indebted to the bank it would be necessary to treat this appeal practically as a first appeal from the decision arrived at by the trial Court and, speaking for myself, I do not think that it was the intention of the legislature to give such a right of appeal when R. 33 was enacted. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal in toto; but in the circumstances of the case direct that the parties bear their own costs in this Court.

Jai Lal, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the redemption of three mortgages effected by the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff in favour of the father of the defendants. The first mortgage-deed dated 7th June 1888 is printed at p. 15 at the printed paper-book. The principal amount mentioned in the deed was Rs. 800, and interest thereon was agreed to be paid yearly at the rate of Rs. 8 per cent. per annum. A further condition was added that the mortgagee would be put in possession of the land mortgaged if interest due were not paid in any year, and in that case the interest and the income of the property mortgaged were to balance each other. In addition to the interest the mortgagor agreed to pay Rs. 29 a year to the mortgagee as what is called badhautri. What this term actually means was not made clear before us, but apparently it means "profit" or "additional payment."

The second mortgage-deed was executed on 24th April 1893, and the principal amount mentioned therein was Rs. 1,534-14-0. This included Rs. 317-3-0 interest due on the first mortgage, and the rest was money otherwise due from or paid to the mortgagor. The property mortgaged was the same as had previously been mortgaged and possession thereof was given to the mortgagee and it was stipulated that the income therefrom would balance the interest on Rs. 600 out of the mortgage amount and the rest, i. e., Rs. 934-14-0 would carry interest at Re. 1-9-0 per cent. per mensem. It was further stipulated that the mortgage amount shall be payable within two months, otherwise interest on the entire amount due under the deed shall be payable at rate of Rs. 2-8-0 per cent. per mensem till the date of repayment. Under the third deed, which is dated 20th December 1895, the mortgagor effected a further mortgage on the same property for Rs. 982 out of which Rs. 582 was interest on Rs. 934-14-0 mentioned in the second mortgage-deed and the rest was paid in cash to the mortgagor. Interest on this amount was payable at the rate of Re. 1-9-0 per cent. per mensem every year and it was further stipulated that in case of non-payment of the annual interest, compound interest at the same rate would be paid.

The plaintiffs alleged in their plaint that the condition relating to the payment of badhautri in the first mortgage-deed was unlawful and that > the condition as to the payment of compound interest in the third mortgage-deed was unfair and unlawful, and they prayed that an account might be taken from the defendants, the mortgagees, on the above basis and a decree for redemption be passed accordingly.

The defendants in their written statement claimed that a sum of Rs. 30,811-9-6 was due to them on the three mortgage-deeds and thus agreed to redeem the land on receiving that amount. In the plaint it was further alleged that the mortgagor was blind and simple-minded and that some of the conditions in the mortgage-deeds were onerous and were, therefore, not binding on him. The trial Court construed this as a plea of undue influence and put in issue the question, whether the mortgage-deeds were executed under undue influence. Other issues which are relevant, so far as this appeal is concerned, were whether the condition as to the payment of badhautri was illegal and whether the condition with regard to the payment of compound interest in the third mortgage-deed was illegal and unenforceable. The Court found against the plaintiffs on all these issues and granted them a decree for redemption on payment of the full amount claimed by the defendants together with future interest and costs of the suit. The plaintiffs appeal.

A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the defendants-respondents that this appeal has not been properly presented, inasmuch as a copy of the order of the Court on two preliminary issues has not been filed with the memorandum of appeal. It appears that in the Court below they had pleaded that one of the legal representatives of the mortgagor, namely, Sher Singh, had not been impleaded by the plaintiffs and that the occupancy tenants of the land in suit had also not been impleaded. Sher Singh was examined by the trial Court and he stated that he had no interest in the mortgaged property as he had made a gift of whatever rights he had therein to his sons who were already plaintiffs in the case. The Court, however, holding that though he was not a necessary party it was desirable to implead him, added him as a defendant. Sher Singh, however, died during the pendency of the suit and as his sons were his only legal representatives and were already on the record, the suit proceeded to trial. With regard to the tenants the first Court held, and quite rightly, that they were not necessary parties to the suit for redemption. In the final judgment the trial Court did not make any mention of those preliminary issues nor of its decision thereon.

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that it was necessary for the appellants to file a copy of that order and that as they have not done so the appeal cannot be entertained. Reliance is placed in support of this objection on O. 41, R. 1, Civil P. C., which provides that a memorandum of appeal shall be accompanied inter alia by a copy of the judgment on which the decree is founded. The same rule provides also that the appellate Court can dispense with such copy. The question is whether it can be successfully urged by the respondents that the decree in this case is founded on the order of the trial Court on the two preliminary issues. In my opinion this contention is devoid of force. The correctness or otherwise of the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge in this case does not in any way depend upon the correctness or otherwise of the order passed on the preliminary issues. That order does not materially affect the decree which would have been passed even in the absence of Sher Singh or of his legal representatives and obviously in the absence of the occupancy tenants. It is not even contended by counsel for the respondents that they propose to support the decree or to file cross-objections on any ground based on that order. I am, therefore, unable to see that it was necessary to file a copy of the order concerned The cases cited by the respondents, i. e., Morton v. Woodfall (1) A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 451 and A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 46, even if they lay down correct law—a matter on which, with great respect, I entertain some doubt—are, therefore, distinguishable from the present case. In any case under the circumstances I would be prepared, if necessary, to dispense with the filing of the copy of the order. I would, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection.

With regard to the merits, there is absolutely no evidence on the record in support of the plea of undue influence, In fact there was no such plea definitely raised by the defendants, and consequently there are no details given by them of facts on which such a plea can be founded. Some witnesses were produced by the plaintiffs, i. e., Jagat Singh (P. W. 2), Surjan Singh (P. W. 3), Wadhawa Singh (P. W. 4) and Mit Singh (P. W. 5). None of these support the case of the plaintiffs on this point. I do not think it necessary to discuss the testimony of these witnesses in detail. All that they say is that the mortgagee's son Sardar Gajjan Singh was a pleader who practised in Ludhiana and that the plaintiffs' predecessor-in-interest, who used to eat opium and was a simpleton, mortgaged the land in suit to the pleader's father, as the former was helping him and would be of service to him on some future occasion. This evidence is entirely insufficient to establish the plea of undue influence. Indeed the learned counsel did not seriously attempt to press this evidence to our attention.

(1) A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 103=8 Lah. 257.

His case, however, was that the conditions in the second and the third mortgage-deeds were onerous and, therefore, unconscionable and as the mortgagee by virtue of the first mortgage was in a position to dominate the will of the mortgagor, therefore, a presumption of undue influence should be raised in this case and he relied upon S. 16, Contract Act, in support of this contention. I am, unable, however, to hold that any presumption can arise in this case such as is claimed by the counsel. I am not prepared to hold that the conditions in the second and the third mortgage-deeds are unconscionable so as to entitle the Court to raise the presumption of undue influence even if it be held that the mortgagee was in position to dominate the will of the mortgagor.

The real contention of the appellants' counsel, however, was with regard to the amount of interest claimed by the mortgagee. With regard to the second mortgage-deed his contention was that the condition as to the payment of interest at Rs. 2-8-0 per cent per mensem instead of the original rate of Re. 1-9-0 per cent per mensem in default of payment of the amount within two months was penal as the enhanced rate of interest was payable from the date of the mortgage-deed. He claimed that under S. 74, Contract Act, his clients were entitled to relief with regard to the penal part of the interest. It is to be observed that in the plaint the plaintiffs have nowhere alleged that this rate of interest is penal and there was no issue framed by the trial Court on this point. The plaint is very badly and inartistically drafted as would appear from the fact that with regard to the third mortgage it is alleged that the interest is Rs. 2-8-0 per cent per mensem and is unlawful and illegal. A reference to the mortgage-deed shows that this interest of Rs. 2-8-0 was not payable at all on the third mortgage-deed but on the second mortgage-deed. In view of this fact, and the fact that the question is one of law, we have, as a special case, allowed the appellants to raise the question of interest on the second mortgage-deed. On a reading of the mortgage-deed there is not the least doubt that the condition to pay enhanced rate of interest is penal and, therefore, the Court is competent to give relief to the mortgagor. Having regard to the security, the number of years during which this mortgage has continued in force and other surrounding circumstances I consider that interest at the rate of 24 per cent per annum would be ample compensation to the mortgagor and I would, therefore, reduce the rate accordingly.

A further objection was taken by the appellants that interest had been calculated on the full amount of Rs. 1,534-14 0 and not on Rs. 934-14-0 as should have been done. A reference to the account filed by the defendants, however shows that this contention is not correct and that interest has been calculated on Rs. 934-14-0. There is, however, one mistake in the calculation and this mistake has been admitted by the counsel for the respondents and that is that interest has been calculated from the date of the mortgage-deed, i. e., 24th April 1893, whereas it should have been calculated from the 20th December 1895, as interest up to the last-mentioned date has been included in the third mortgage-deed.

With regard to the third mortgage-deed: the contention of the appellants is that compound interest is not claimable under the terms of the mortgage-deed. Now, in the first instance, it would be observed that the plea of the plaintiffs was that the condition relating to compound interest "is quite unfair and unlawful" and an issue was framed in those terms. The learned counsel for the appellants has abandoned that position before us and has contended that as a matter of fact the mortgage-deed does not provide for the payment of compound interest and in any case not with yearly rests. Even if such a plea is open to the counsel at this stage, I am of opinion that the mortgage-deed does provide for the payment of compound interest as claimed by the mortgagee. It provides, that interest at Re. 1-9-0 per cent per mensem shall be payable annually to the mortgagee and that on failure of payment of such interest, interest thereon at the same rate and in the form of compound interest shall be payable. The actual words in the deed are :

Ba surat wada khilafi adam adae sud saliyana ke sud ba hisab sud dar sud ba sharah bala shumar kar ke bawaqt fakhurrehn hamrah asal zare-e-rehn sabiqa wa hal ada karunga.

This condition, in my opinion, is distinguishable from the condition in P. C. Muthu Chettiar v. K. V. Meenakshisundaram Ayyar (2), where on a construction of the condition in the mortgage-deed their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the claim of the mortgagee to be awarded compound interest with monthly rests was not tenable. The condition therein merely was that the principal amount would carry interest at eight annas per cent per mensem which would be paid before the 10th of every month, but in case of default in payment in that manner the rate of interest was to be doubled. The claim of the mortgagee was that the mortgagor must pay interest with monthly rests on the composite sum of the principal and interest at the end of each month at double the original rate. Their Lordships held that the mere condition that the mortgagor shall pay "interest on interest" did not support the claim of the mortgagor. It is to be observed that in the present case the terms of the deed, as stated above, clearly provide for the payment of compound interest on failure of payment of interest at the end of each year. I therefore hold that the conclusion of the trial Court on this matter is correct.

This leaves a short point with regard to the payment of Rs. 29 a year as badhautri on the first mortgage-deed. The learned counsel has not seriously contended that the condition as to the payment of this amount is illegal and I am unable to see how such a condition under the circumstances of this case can be held to be illegal.

The result is that the decree of the trial Court must be upheld, except with regard to the amount payable on the second mortgage-deed, which shall be calculated in the manner indicated above and a decree for redemption prepared accordingly. The parties have undertaken to prepare an account of the amount that would be payable by the mortgagor to the mortgagee. A date six months from to-day shall be fixed as the date for redemption. The plaintiffs shall pay the costs of the defendants in the trial Court and the parties shall bear their own costs in this Court. The appeal is accepted pro tanto.

Principal and Agent — Commission agent— Agent must show that the transaction was brought about by the direct result of his intervention in order to entitle him to commission.

Where a person is employed as an agent to bring about a transaction on behalf of his principal, he is entitled to have his remuneration only if the transaction in question is the direct consequence of his agency.

It need not necessarily be the immediate cause of the transaction, but it must be shown that the transaction was brought about as the direct result of his intervention. Tek Chand, J. — This appeal and Civil Appeal No. 2563 of 1926 arise out of a suit which was instituted in forma pauperis by Mrs. K. McCready against the firm of Messrs. Andley Brothers, Coal Merchants, Delhi, for recovery of Rs. 8,900 as remuneration for work done by her for the defendants as their commission agent in securing for them : (a) a contract for the purchase of 12,000 tons of coal from Kantapahari Colliery of the North West Angrapathra Coal Company, Behar, in December 1921 ; and (b) an order from the Superintending Engineer, 2nd Circle, Raisina, Delhi, for the supply of 10,000 tons of coal on 26th September 1922.

A sum of Rs. 3,000 was claimed as commission at 4 annas per ton for the first of these transactions and Rs. 5,000 at 8 annas per ton for the second. To these items was added Rs. 900 as interest at 7½ per cent making up a total of Rs. 8,900.

The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff was not entitled to any commission on either transaction, but the learned Subordinate Judge upheld the plaintiff's claim for Rs. 341-4-0 on account of (a) and Rs. 5,000 on account of (b) or Rs. 5,341-4-0 in all, and deducting Rs. 125 as having been already paid by the defendants to the plaintiff he passed a decree in her favour for Rs. 5216-4-0. Both parties have filed cross appeals, the plaintiff praying that the decretal amount be enhanced to the full sum claimed in the plaint and the defendants urging that the plaintiff's suit be dismissed in toto. It will be convenient to deal with the two claims separately.

As already stated the first claim for Rs. 3,000 is based on the allegation that in December 1921 the plaintiff, at the request of the defendants, secured for them a contract for the purchase of 12,000 tons of coal from the Kantapahari Colliery and that she was entitled to commission thereon at the stipulated rate of 4 annas per ton. The contract between the defendants and the colliery is evidenced by the bought and sold notes, Ex. D-6 and C-1 printed at p. 9 and 20 of the supplementary paper-book. In the lower Court the defendants admitted having entered into this contract, but denied that it was brought about by the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, held it proved on the record that the contract had been secured for the defendants by the plaintiff who had acted as their commission agent in the transaction. This finding has not been challenged before us by Mr. Moti Sagar, who admits that the plaintiff acted as their agent and is entitled to commission at 4 annas a ton. The dispute as to this claim is now confined to the simple question, whether under the terms of the agency the plaintiff was, as claimed by her, entitled to commission on the total quantity agreed to be sold by the colliery to the defendants or, as held by the learned Subordinate Judge, on the quantity actually supplied to the defendants. Both parties are agreed that the conditions of agency are contained in the letter Ex. P-1 written by defendants to the plaintiff on 8th December 1921, which is printed at p. 11 of the supplementary paper-book and which runs as follows :

Delhi, 8th December 1921.

My dear Mrs. McCready.

I promise to give you 4 annas a ton if I will get a contract of Kantapahari Colliery of North West Angarapthra Coal Company through you. Your duty will be to see some 3 or 4 wagons of this coal at Sabzimandi station and to keep a little sample with you of this coal. Our contract with Kantapahari will be of first class steam and slack coal and if I find the coal inferior or water mark or if there will be slack in steam wagon or steam in slack wagon then I shall show that coal and the wagon to you and you shall have to get the matter settled with the managing agents of the above colliery. Kindly confirm and oblige

Yours sincerely.

(Sd.) C. B. Mathur.

It is conceded by the plaintiff's learned counsel that this letter does not state in clear and explicit terms whether commission at the rate of 4 annas per ton was payable on the 12,000 tons of coal contracted for or whether it was to be paid on the quantity actually dispatched by the colliery to the defendants. He contends, however, that it was understood at the time that the plaintiff's duty would end the moment she succeeded in securing the contract for the defendants from the colliery, and that on a binding agreement of sale and purchase being entered into between them, commission at the rate of four annas per ton on the quantity contracted for would be paid to her, irrespective of the fact whether the colliery supplied the whole or any part of it to the defendants. The defendants, on the other hand, deny that there was any such understanding, and urge that it is one of the incidents of the coal trade, that in the absence of a contract to the contrary, commission is payable on the quantity actually dispatched. In support of their contention they have led evidence to prove that contracts of agency like the one embodied in Ex. P-1 are always understood by coal merchants to mean that commission is payable after the colliery has executed the contract and is paid on the quantity actually dispatched. Counsel for the plaintiff has argued that this evidence was not legally admissible, but after hearing him at length I am of opinion that this contention is devoid of all force. It is conceded, as already stated, that the letter Ex. P. 1 is silent on the point, and this being so proviso 5, S. 92, Evidence Act, applies, under which any usage or custom by which incidents not expressly mentioned in any contract or usually annexed to contracts of that description may be proved provided that the annexing of such incidents would not be repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the express terms of the contract.

I hold, therefore, that the evidence relied on by the lower Court was legally admissible. Both Mr. Mukerji (D. W. 3), who is described as a colliery owner and coal merchant, Delhi, and Mr. Grant Goven (D.W. 4), who has experience of coal business, have deposed that in contracts relating to purchase of coal from collieries the agent gets commission on actual deliveries and not upon the quantity contracted for. It is significant that Mr. Mukerji was not cross-examined at all on this point and Mr. Grant Goven in cross-examination emphasized what he had stated in his examination-in-chief, that in the absence of a special contract to the contrary the commission was payable on the actual supply after the order had been executed. The plaintiff led no evidence beyond her own statement on the point and she admitted that she had not acted as commission agent in any other transaction. Further light on the matter is thrown by the correspondence that passed between the parties and Mr. Carapiet, the proprietor of the Kantapahari Colliery, all of whom seem to have understood the contract to mean that commission was payable on the quantity dispatched by the colliery. This is fully borne out by Ex. P-3, P-5, P-15 and C-2 which the lower Court has discussed at length in its judgment at p. 35 and 36 of the paper-book and which I need not reproduce here. There is also the significant fact that if the plaintiff's contention were correct Rs. 3,000 had become payable to her on the completion of the contract between the colliery and the defendants in December 1921, but she never made any demand for this amount until the suit was instituted. All that she has been found to have received is Rs. 125 in two instalments on 25th and 26th January 1922 and on each occasion she executed a receipt describing the item as having been received "in advance of coal." Her counsel is unable to explain why the words "in advance" were used if the Rs. 3,000 were actually due at the time. Again we find the plaintiff writing to Mr. Carapiet several months later asking him to recover from the defendants the amount of her commission as he was "the best person to know the number of wagons supplied." Further, it is admitted that in those days, there was a shortage of wagons and it is not likely that the defendants would have agreed to pay commission on the quantity contracted for, when it was possible that a very small portion of it would be actually dispatched for delivery to them. In my judgment the lower Court has come to a correct conclusion in holding that the commission of 4 annas per ton was payable to the plaintiff on the quantity actually dispatched and I would accordingly affirm its finding on issue 1.

The next question to be decided is how much coal was in fact dispatched by the colliery to the defendants. The plaintiff has led no evidence whatsoever on this point. Mr. Carapiet, the colliery proprietor, was examined by interrogatories, but no effort was made to ascertain from him as to how many wagons he had dispatched. The defendants had clearly pleaded in their written statement that 1,365 tons only had been supplied to them. This allegation was not specifically denied in the replication as it should have been under O. 8, R. 5, Civil P. C. At the trial Chand Bahadur, a member of the defendants' firm, stated on oath that 1,365 tons only had been received by them in execution of the contract in question, and this was not contradicted by anything on the record. I agree, therefore, with the lower Court on this point also and hold that the amount due to the plaintiff in this account was Rs. 341-4-0. The defendants had pleaded that as against this item the plaintiff had been actually paid Rs. 412-8-0. But the lower Court has found payment to the extent of Rs. 125 only as proved. This finding has been challenged by Mr. Moti Sagar, but, after hearing him, I am of opinion that the additional sum was received on account of the travelling expenses of the plaintiff's husband who had gone to the colliery at the defendants' request. The result is that as regard claim (a) both the appeal and the cross-appeal should be dismissed and the decision of the lower Court allowing the plaintiff Rs. 216 only affirmed. (After discussing evidence as to claim (B) the judgment proceeded.) The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff, acting as the defendant's agent, approached Mr. Rouse to buy coal from them, but he, instead of buying it himself, told the contractors who were working under him that they might, if they liked, buy from the defendants and this was a "dignified hint from a superior officer to patronize 'the defendants' firm." He thought that on these facts the plaintiff is entitled to be paid commission at 8 annas per ton. I am, however, of opinion that in coming to this conclusion, the learned Judge has ignored the well-established principle of law that where a person has been employed as an agent to bring about a transaction on behalf of his principal he is entitled to have his remuneration only if the transaction in question is the direct consequence of his agency : see Bray v. Chandler (1) and Gibson v. Crick (2). It need not necessarily be the immediate cause of the transaction, but it must be shown that it was brought about as the direct result of his intervention Burton v. Hughes (3). It is not sufficient for the agent to show that it would not have been entered into but for his services, if it resulted therefrom only as a casual or remote consequence : Tribe v. Taylor (4) and Jordon v. Ram Chandra Gupta (5). To such cases the maxim causa causans et non remota spectatur (the direct and not the remote cause of an event is to be regarded) is applicable.

For the foregoing reasons I feel bound to disagree with the lower Court on this point and hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to any commission on claim (b). In view of this finding it is not necessary for me to discuss at length the additional argument put forward by Mr. Moti Sagar, that even if the order in question was secured to the defendants by the plaintiff, she is not entitled to the full amount of commission claimed, as after a small quantity of coal had been supplied to Sobha Singh, etc., the contract between them and the defendants was cancelled and on the principle of quantum meruit the plaintiff should have been paid on the quantity supplied. It is sufficient to say that in my opinion this contention is devoid of all force, and had I found in favour of the plaintiff on merits I would have had no hesitation in rejecting this last argument of the defendants' learned counsel. In the agreement between the plaintiff and defendants as embodied in Ex. P.-5 it is specifically stated that she would get commission at the rate of 8 annas per ton on the "receival of each and every order." In face of this express term in this agreement, there is no question of paying the agent a quantum meruit on her services and she could not be deprived of her commission merely because the transaction by her fell through subsequently or that the principal derived no benefit from it. Reference may in this connexion be made to the recent case of Howard Houlder and Partners Ltd. v. Manx Isles Steamship Co. Ltd. (1923) I.K.B. 110, and the authorities cited therein. The claim relating to (b) has, however, failed on the merits and I need not discuss this point further.

The result is that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for the sum of Rs. 216 only. Accordingly I would accept appeal No. 1778 of 1926 and dismiss appeal No. 2563 of 1926, and in lieu of the decree passed by the lower Court, pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 216. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case I would leave the parties to bear their own costs in both the Courts.

Second Appeal No. 2593 of 1923, Decided on 29th September 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Mianwali, D/- 15th October 1923.

Civil P. C., O. 47, R. 7—Appeal.

It is competent for a party aggrieved to appeal against an order allowing review under the provisions of O. 43, R. 1 (w). However, the powers of the appellate Court are limited by R. 7, O. 47. [P 604 C 1]

Niaz Muhammad—for Appellant.

S. R. Laul—for Respondents.

Broadway, J.—It appears that one Mt. Bakhtan executed a deed of sale in favour of her brother Ghulam Hassan on 15th February 1914. The property conveyed consisted of a house. On 27th March 1923 Ghulam Hassan sued his sister and her second husband and his son for possession of the house, alleging that subsequent to the sale he had obtained possession of the property bought, but had permitted his sister to continue to live in it. Mt. Bakhtan pleaded that the house had belonged to her first husband from whom she had obtained it, that she had been induced by her brother, the plaintiff, to execute this deed of sale in his favour in order to deprive her first husband's collaterals of the property and that the deed of conveyance had never been acted upon and was purely fictitious. The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit, holding that the transaction was a fictitious one. Ghulam Hassan appealed to the District Judge, and the learned District Judge took a contrary view, holding that Mt. Bakhtan had failed to prove that the transaction had been fictitious. He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's suit for the property claimed excluding from the decree, however, one small kothi.

Mt. Bakhtan then preferred a second appeal to this Court which came up for hearing as a motion before a Division Bench on 10th December 1923. On this date Mr. Niaz Muhammad for the appellant stated that the lower appellate Court had reviewed its judgment and asked for time to file an amended memorandum of appeal. Time was allowed, and in due course an amended memorandum of appeal was filed, containing certain additional grounds.

Before us to-day Mr. Niaz Muhammad has urged that the decision of the lower appellate Court was open to attack in second appeal on the ground that the onus had been wrongly placed on the appellant to prove that the transaction was a fictitious one. He placed reliance on Ram Chand v. Harnam Singh (1) and Bhagwan Das v. Mt. Ram Bai (2), Those cases proceeded on their own particular facts. There can be no doubt that, having regard to the facts that Mt. Bakhtan executed the deed of sale, the onus lay on her to prove that the transaction was a fictitious one. The finding of the learned District Judge that it was not a fictitious transaction is one of fact which we are precluded from examining in second appeal.

This would dispose of the case before us but for the fact that the matter has been complicated by the learned District Judge's action in granting application for review referred to above. This application related to the exclusion of the kothi from the decree. It was entertained by the learned District Judge and granted. Mr. Niaz Muhammad has attacked this action of the learned District Judge and has urged that the review had been wrongly granted. As a matter of fact the appeal before us is one against the final decree as prepared after the review had been allowed. Therefore, the finding as to the fictitious nature of this transaction covers this kothi. No doubt it is competent for a party aggrieved to appeal against an order allowing review under the provisions of O. 43, R. 1 (w), Civil P. C. It seems to me, however, that the powers of an appellate Court are limited by R. 7, O. 47, Civil P. C. Mr. Niaz Muhammad had been asked to state whether the order on review contravened the provisions of R. 2 or R. 4, O. 47, and was constrained to admit that neither of these two rules had been contravened. In these circumstances it appears to me that we are not empowered to interfere with the order passed on review in this appeal.

It was then contended that, inasmuch as the order was passed without jurisdiction having regard to the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Chhajju Ram v. Neki (3), this appeal might be treated as a revision. Speaking for myself, it seems to me that the learned District Judge's action in dealing with this application for review was unsatisfactory, but at the same time I am not prepared to treat this part of this appeal as a revision in this particular case because it appears that this kothi was definitely claimed in the plaint and not specifically referred to in the written statement filed by the appellant. The appellant's defence was that the entire transaction was fictitious. She did not elect to differentiate between any portions of the properties claimed by the plaintiff. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal, but, in the circumstances, leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Agha Haidar, J.—I agree.

Order of Reference

Dalip Singh, J.—Plaintiffs brought a suit for possession of half a square which had been sold to them by defendant 1 for Rs. 17,500 out of which Rs. 8,000 had been paid in cash before the Sub-Registrar and Rs. 9,500 was secured by a promissory note payable on demand from the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs alleged that defendant 1 had been duly paid Rs. 17,500 because the promissory note for Rs. 9,500 in his favour had been discharged by another promissory note executed by the plaintiff in favour of the defendant's brother-in-law Muhammad Hussain at the request and with the consent of the defendant, that the plaintiffs had paid Rs. 5,500 out of the Rs. 9,500 to Muhammad Hussain and were prepared to pay the balance. Defendant 1 had refused to deliver possession of the property and the plaintiffs prayed that possession of the property sold might be delivered to them, or, in the alternative, that a decree for Rs. 17,500 the consideration money, together with interest or damages arising from breach of contract at the rate of one per cent. per mensem, amounting to Rs. 1,050, i. e., for Rs. 19,000, in all, might be passed against the other property of defendant 1.

Defendant 1 pleaded minority. Defendant 2, wife of defendant 1, pleaded minority of defendant 1, and also pleaded a prior gift by defendant 1. The trial Court decreed the suit for possession holding that defendant 1 had made a false representation that he was of full age to the plaintiffs and was therefore estopped from raising the plea of minority, following the authority of Wasinda Ram v. Sita Ram (1). It also held that the consideration had been duly discharged by payment of Rs. 8,000 in cash and by substitution of the promissory note in favour of the defendant by one in favour of Muhammad Hussain and that Muhammad Hussain had realized Rs. 5,500 out of this sum from the plaintiffs. It also held that the gift to the wife was of no effect and was void ab initio. Defendants have appealed.

Their counsel has urged that the facts do not show that the plaintiffs were in any way deceived by any representation made by defendant 1. He relies on the evidence of Fakir Muhammad (P. W. 3) who states that Lakha Singh, one of the plaintiffs, had told the defendant that he (defendant) should state his age to be 19 at time of registration. There can be no doubt that the defendant stated his age to be 19 at the time of registration. Except the evidence of Fakir Muhammad there is no evidence to show us that the plaintiffs knew or were in a position to know what the age of the defendant was. The defendant had previously executed other mortgages and deeds of gift in which he had represented himself to be 19. In one case he had obtained a medical certificate showing that he was over 19 years of age. He admits that he stated before the Sub-Registrar that he was 19 years of age because his cousin Muhammad Hussain had asked him to give his age as 19 years. We have no reason to suppose that the plaintiffs knew that this representation was false and we do not accept the evidence of Fakir Muhammad.

The question that arises then is whether a minor is estopped from pleading minority when he has made a false representation as to his age. Wasinda Ram v. Sita Ram (1) is undoubtedly an authority for the proposition that he is so estopped. This ruling followed a Bombay ruling reported in Ganesh Lala v. Bapu (2) and the Bombay High Court has since followed that ruling in Dadasaheb Dasrathrao v. Bai Nahani (3) and in Jasraj Bastimal v. Sadashiv Mahadev (4). On the other hand, the Calcutta High Court in Dhurmo Dass Ghose v. Brahmo Dutt (5) and Brahmo Dutt v. Dharma Das (6), which is the same case in appeal, held that S. 115, Evidence Act, did not apply to minors. The case went before the Privy Council and is reported as Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodass Ghose (7) but the Privy Council expressly did not decide this point. In Levene v. Brougham (8) the Court of appeal in England held that there could be no estoppel in such a case. It has been contended before us that S. 115, Evidence Act, governs the matter and the word "person" in it is wide enough to include minors. I find it difficult to follow this argument because it seems to me that in every honest dealing with a minor there is presumably a representation, expressed or implied, on the part of the minor that he is competent to contract. Therefore, if the doctrine of estoppel could be applied to the case of minors there would hardly be a case in which the doctrine would not apply and the protection given by the law to minors would practically be done away with. Further, I am unable to see how the force of a statute can be avoided by what after all is a law of procedure, namely, estoppel. For these reasons I am quite clear that there can be no estoppel in such a case, but owing to the existence of the Division Bench ruling of this Court and the importance of the matter, I would prefer to refer the question to a Full Bench. Counsel for the appellants has cited Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill (9) and Mahomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeohooi Gark (10). The latter ruling is a Privy Council ruling in an appeal from the Strait Settlements in which their Lordships approved of the doctrine laid down in Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill (9). At first I was of opinion that this question was covered by the Privy Council ruling and that, therefore, there was no need to refer the matter to a Full Bench, but on carefully examining Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill (9) I find that the question of estoppel was not decided in that case. That question was decided in the Court of appeal in Levene v. Brougham (8) and was only referred to in Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill (9). The question there was whether a suit would lie for money received by a minor where the contract for loan failed on the ground of being void by statute. The ruling of the Privy Council in Mohammed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark (10) further is obiter on the point and therefore, though entitled to great respect, is not absolutely binding on us. I therefore consider that the question whether a minor who has made a false representation as to his age is estopped from pleading his minority should be referred to a Full Bench for decision.

The next point arising in this case is also a difficult one. As explained above the plaintiffs had pleaded in the alternative that they should get a decree for Rs. 17,500 with interest or damages. Counsel for the appellants has contended on the authority of Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill (9) that in such a case there could be no restitution by the minor. On considering Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill (9) I am definitely of opinion that in spite of the doubt expressed as to the correctness of Bristow v. Eastman (11) in that case the case itself did not decide that Cowern v. Nield (12) was wrongly decided. That case is directly in point, whereas Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill (9) is not directly in point, because, as pointed out in Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill (9) the jurisdiction in equity to force the minor to make restitution was never clearly defined and all that Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill (9) held was that the jurisdiction did not extend to repayment as distinguished from restitution. On general principles of justice it would seem to me monstrous that the minor should be able both to retain the property and the benefit which he derived by making false representations to parties as to his capacity to deal with the property. I would, therefore, be inclined to hold that there is jurisdiction in the Court to compel the minor to make restitution. It has been contended before us that the position alters when the minor is plaintiff or defendant. I am quite unable to accede to this argument which is moreover not borne out by any authority cited to us. It seems to me that where a minor is plaintiff or defendant all that the Court in effect orders is, that it refuses to allow a certain plea to prevail except upon terms. If such a jurisdiction exists it seems to me wholly immaterial whether the minor is plaintiff or defendant and it would certainly be extremely anomalous that such a question should rest on the relative position of the parties as plaintiff and defendant. The question, however, is by no means free from difficulty and undoubtedly there are expressions in Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill (9) which would tend to show that their Lordships in that case disapproved of certain previous cases taking the more equitable view, if I may so call it, and, I, therefore, think, in view of the importance of the question that this matter also should be referred to the Full Bench. The question would be whether a party who, when a minor, has entered into a contract by means of false representation as to his age, can whether he be defendant or plaintiff in a subsequent litigation refuse to perform the contract and at the same time retain the benefit he may have derived therefrom.

If the Full Bench hold that the minor is bound to make restitution it will be for the Division Bench to decide on the evidence how much is due.

Harrison, J.—I am also of opinion that the two questions should be referred to a Full Bench. At present I am inclined to think that it is impossible to escape from the logical result of holding that the contract is void, however deplorable that result may be. The suit is based on a contract and by no process of mental gymnastics can it, in my opinion, be converted into anything else. As I understand Cowern v. Nield (12) the reasoning is somewhat as follows: The contract being void has no existence and no reality. No action can, therefore, result from or be based upon it, but the tort which gave rise to and brought about the contract may possibly be treated as the true foundation of the action. If the contract, however, be void the only reality in the tort is the fact that it is the origin or cause of that void contract, for it is only because of its subsequent history or development that an action can be based upon it. True as it is that had there been no tort there would have been no contract. It is equally true that had there been no contract there would have been no tort, in the sense that there would have been no actionable wrong but merely an infructuous attempt to deceive. It appears to me to be impossible to separate the two chapters in the incident and to give reality to the embryo while denying it to the child into which the embryo develops.

Opinion.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—The questions, which have been formulated for decision by the Full Bench, are in these terms :

(1) Whether a minor, who, by falsely representing himself to be a major, has induced a person to enter into a contract, is estopped from pleading his minority to avoid the contract.

(2) Whether a party, who, when a minor, has entered into a contract by means of a false representation as to his age, whether he be defendant or plaintiff, in a subsequent litigation, refuse to perform the contract and at the same time retain the benefit he may have derived therefrom.

As regards the minor's capacity to enter into a contract, there was some uncertainty prior to 1903 as to whether a minor's contract was void or voidable. But all doubt on the subject has been dispelled by the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (7), which declares that a person who, by reason of infancy is, as laid down by S. 11, Contract Act, incompetent to contract, cannot make a contract within the meaning of the Act. The transaction entered cannot be recognized by law.

The question arises whether an infant is precluded by the rule of estoppel from showing the invalidity of a transaction of this description. Now, the doctrine of estoppel is embodied in S. 115, Evidence Act, which runs as follows :

> When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief, neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his representative, to deny the truth of that thing.

There is a conflict of judicial opinion as to whether an infant comes within the ambit of the section ; the Bombay High Court holding that an infant is not excepted by the language of the section, vide Ganesh Lal v. Bapu (2) ; Dadasaheb Dasrathrao v. Bai Nahani (3) and Jasraj Bastimal v. Sadasiv Mahadev Walekar (4) ; while the Calcutta High Court has adopted the opposite view : vide Dhurmo Dass Ghose v. Brahmo Datt (5) which view was endorsed on appeal by a Division Bench of the same Court in Brahmo Dutt v. Dhurmo Dass Ghose (6). In the latter Calcutta case Maclean, C. J., sought to get over the comprehensive language of S. 115 by holding that the term " person " in that section applies to " one who is of full age and competent to enter into a contract." It will be observed that the expression " person " is used twice in that section, and it is clear that if in the first portion of the section it means a person sui juris, it must have the same meaning when used again in the same section. The interpretation placed upon the word " person " by the Calcutta High Court would, no doubt, help the minor in so far as he would be able to repel the plea of estoppel when it is urged against him ; but he must, at the same time, forego the benefit accruing from the doctrine of estoppel and cannot invoke the plea for his own advantage. If the word " person " means only a person competent to enter into a contract, then the section cannot be used to the advantage of the minor any more than to his detriment ; in other words the doctrine of estoppel, as enacted by S. 115, must be treated as non-existent in so far a person under disability is concerned.

That a minor cannot set up the plea of estoppel as against an adult is obviously an absurd result. Now, it is a cardinal rule governing the interpretation of statutes that when the language of the legislature admits of two constructions, the Court should not adopt a construction which would lead to an absurdity or obvious injustice. But I do not think that there is any ambiguity in the term " person." In construing statutes, and indeed all written instruments, it is the duty of the Court to adhere to the grammatical and ordinary sense of the words ; and the expression " person," when used in its ordinary sense, includes every person whether sui juris or under a contractual disability. As pointed out above, the same word is used again in S. 115, and there can be no doubt that it cannot, in that connexion, bear any restricted meaning. Indeed the term " person " is to be found also in S. 116, which deals with the estoppel of a tenant as against his landlord, and in numerous other sections of the Evidence Act, e. g., Ss. 5, 8, 10, 112, 118, 122 and 139 ; and a perusal of those sections leaves no doubt that it is intended to include minors as well as other persons under disability.

I must, therefore, hold that the language of S. 115 is comprehensive enough to include a minor ; and if the matter rested there, I would say that an infant, who has induced another person to deal with him by falsely representing himself as of full age, should not be allowed to deny the truth of his representation. But the rule of estoppel is a rule of evidence and must be read along with and subject to the provisions of other laws. The law of estoppel is a general law applicable to all persons, while the law of contract relating to capacity to enter into a contract is directed towards a special object ; and it is a well established principle that, where a general intention is expressed by the legislature, and also a particular intention, which is incompatible with the general one, particular intention is considered an exception to the general one : per Best, C. J. in Churchill

v. Crease (13 & 14). This rule applies whether the general and special provisions are contained in the same statute or different statutes. Now, when the law of contract lays down that a minor shall not be liable upon a contract entered into by him, he should not be made liable upon the same contract by virtue of the general rule of estoppel. I do not go so far as to say that the language of S. 115, would, if given its full scope, render absolutely nugatory the law declaring the incapacity of a minor to make a contract; for there may be instances in which a contract though entered into with a minor has not been induced by any misrepresentation made by him and no question of estoppel can arise in such cases. There can, however, be be no doubt that the rule of estoppel would take away in many cases the protection which the legislature has deliberately created for the benefit of the minors, and would make them liable on a transaction which has no existence in the eye of the law. The Court should struggle against repugnancy and should construe an enactment as far as possible in accordance with the terms of the other statute which it does not expressly modify or repeal.

Now, both the statutes can stand together, if we apply the general rule of estoppel, as enacted by S. 115, Evidence Act, subject to the special law imposing disability upon the contractual capacity of an infant. This construction which recognizes an exception to the general rule, avoids all repugnancy and does not lead to any absurdity or injustice.

It is to be observed that, so far as the English law is concerned, there is no authority for the proposition that a contract, which is void under the statute on the ground of infancy, can be enforced simply because it has been entered into on the faith of a false representation as to age which the minor is precluded from denying. In the case of Levene v. Brougham (8), the plea of estoppel was raised against the minor but was rejected by the Court of appeal. It must be remembered that, as observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sarat Chunder Dey v. Gopal Chunder Laha (15), S. 115, Evidence Act, has not enacted as law in India anything different from the law of England on the subject of estoppel and the English decisions are therefore, relevant to the discussion of the subject before us.

In India the rule against the application of the doctrine of estoppel to a contract void on the ground of infancy has been adopted, not only by the Calcutta High Court, but also by the High Courts at Madras, Allahabad and Patna: Vide Vaikuntarama Pillai v. Authimoolam Chettiar (16), Jagar Nath Singh v. Lalta Pershad (17) and Ganganand Singh v. Rameshwar Singh (18). A Division Bench of the Lahore High Court has, however, favoured the view taken by the Bombay High Court in Wasinda Ram v Sita Ram (1). I am not aware of any judgment of the Privy Council which gives expression to the considered view of their Lordships on the subject. In the case of Mohoree Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (7), which was an appeal from the judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Brahmo Datt v. Dhurmoo Dass Ghose (6) their Lordships refrained from expressing their opinion and disposed of the question by making the following observations:

> The Courts below seem to have decided that this section (S. 115) does not apply to infants but their Lordships do not think it necessary to deal with that question now. They consider it clear that the section does not apply to a case like the present, where the statement relied upon is made to a person who knows the real facts and is not misled by the untrue statement.

Nor is there anything in the judgment in Mahomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Oon Gark (10), which can be treated even as an obiter dictum on the subject of estoppel. That case was heard by the Privy Council on an appeal from the Supreme Court of the Straits Settlements and dealt with the Strait Settlements Ordinance (3 of 1893), which is in similar terms to the Indian Evidence Act. It was sought to establish the liability of the infant for damages on the ground of a fraudulent statement, but their Lordships held that no fraud had been established. It is clear that no case of estoppel was either set up or decided in that case.

It will be seen from the foregoing discussion that not only the English law, but also the balance of the judicial authority in India, is decidedly in favour of the rule that where an infant has induced a person to contract with him by means of a false representation that he was of full age, he is not estopped from pleading his infancy in avoidance of the contract and, though S. 115, Evidence Act is general in its terms, I consider for the reasons, which I have already given, that it must be read subject to the provisions of the Contract Act, declaring a transaction entered into by a minor to be void. My answer to the first question referred to us is, therefore, in the negative.

Coming now to the second question: I am clear that when a contract has been induced by a false representation made by an infant as to his age, he is liable neither on the contract nor in tort, if the tort is directly connected with the contract and is the means of effecting it and parcel of the same transaction: The Liverpool Adelphi Loan Association v. Fairthurst (19 & 20). It is true that infancy does not constitute a valid defence to an action on tort, but the tort, which can sustain an action for damages must be independent of the contract and must not be another name for the breach of the contract. No person can evade the law conferring immunity upon an infant from performing a contractual obligation by converting the contract into a tort for the purpose of charging the infant. As observed by Byles, J., in Burnard v. Haggie (21), one cannot make an infant liable for the breach of a contract by changing the form of action to one ex delicto.

The Court has to look at the substance, and not at the form, of the action; and if it finds that the action is in reality an action ex contractu but disguised as an action ex delicto, it would decline to enforce the claim. Indeed, it has been repeatedly held in England that when an infant has induced a person to contract with him by making a false statement that he was of full age, the infant is not answerable either for the breach of the contract or for damages arising from the tort committed by him.

But a false representation by an infant that he was of full age gives rise to an equitable liability. The Court, while relieving him from the consequences of the contract may in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction restore the parties to the position which they occupied before the date of the contract. If the infant is in possession of any property which he has obtained by fraud, he can be compelled to restore it to his former owner. The matter is, however, debatable: if the benefit acquired by him consists of money which is not earmarked, has the Court of equity authority to make him liable for the payment, to the defrauded person, of a sum equal to the amount of which the latter has been deprived by the former? The equitable jurisdiction is founded upon the desire of the Court to do justice to both the parties by restoring them to the status quo ante, and there is no real difference between restoring the property and refunding the money except that the property can be identified but cash cannot be traced.

The doctrine of restitution finds expression in S. 41, Specific Relief Act. Suppose, A, an infant, executes an instrument of mortgage in favour of B for Rs. 1,000 borrowed by B by making a false representation as to his age. This instrument is void, and S. 39, which expressly applies, not only to a voidable but also to a void, instrument, allows A to move the Court to adjudge it to be void and order it to be delivered up and cancelled. Then comes S. 41, by which it is provided that on adjudging the cancellation of the instrument the Court may require A, to whom such relief is granted, to make any compensation to B which justice may require. It is beyond question that under this section the Court has the discretion to impose terms upon A and to compel him to pay Rs. 1,000 as compensation to B. The statute nowhere says that pecuniary compensation should not be allowed, when the award thereof would be tantamount to a repayment of the money borrowed on the strength of a void transaction. Indeed, the Courts in India have ordered the minor to refund the money received by him before allowing him to recover the property sold or mortgaged to the other party.

In Jagar Nath Singh v. Lalta Pershad (17) the minor, who, by making fraudulent representation as to his age, had induced the defendant to purchase property from him, was held liable in equity to restore to the purchaser the benefit he had obtained before he could recover possession of the property sold. The same rule was followed in Balak Ram v. Dadu (22), where the plaintiff was directed to refund the purchase money as a condition precedent to his obtaining possession of the property. In Saral Chand Mitter v. Mohan Bibi (22a), the minor was required to refund the money borrowed by him on the foot of a mortgage.

(21) [1868] 32 L. J. C. P. 189=14 C. B. (N. S.) 45=8 L. T. 320 = 11 W. R. 644=9 Jur. (N. S.) 1325.

It is true that in the case of Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas Ghose (7) restitution was not allowed, but the party, who had lent the money to the minor, was aware of the minority; and their Lordships of the Privy Council, while recognizing that S. 41 does give a discretion to the Court, did not see any reason for interfering with the discretion of the lower Courts which, on the facts of the case, had declined to direct the return of the money.

There are some English cases in which an infant repudiating a transaction was held liable in equity to return the benefit he had obtained by reason of his fraud. In re King Ex Parte, The Unity Joint Stock Mutual Banking Association (23), a person, who had lent money to an infant on the faith of a fraudulent representation as to age, was held entitled to prove in his bankruptcy. Lord Justice Knight Bruce, while deciding that in equity the liability of the borrower had been established, made the following pertinent observations :

> The question is whether in the view of a Court of equity, according to the sense of decisions not now to be disputed, he has made himself liable to pay the debt whatever, be his liability or nonliability at law. In my opinion we are compelled to say that he has.

Cowern v. Nield (12) was a case in which it was decided that an infant trader, who had entered into a contract for the sale of goods and failed to deliver them after receiving their price, was not liable on the contract, but that > if the plaintiff can prove that the defendant obtained his money by fraud, the action can be maintained.

The Court of appeal accordingly ordered a new trial > in order that the plaintiff may have an opportunity of proving if he can, that his money was obtained from him by the defendant by fraud.

In Stocke v. Wilson (24) an infant, who had obtained furniture from the plaintiff by falsely stating himself to be of age, and had sold part of it for £.30 was directed to pay this amount as part of the relief granted to the plaintiff.

A different view was, however, taken by the Court of appeal in R. Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill (9). In that case an action for the recovery of advances made to an infant on the faith of his fraudulent representation as to his age was dismissed, because the cause of action was held in substance ex contractu. The learned Judges of the Court of appeal distinguished the judgment in The Unity Joint Stock Mutual Banking Association (23) on the ground that it expressed the law in bankruptcy and did not lay down a doctrine of general application. With all respect, I am unable to follow the distinction. Either the liability to return the benefit obtained by fraud exists or it does not exist. If it does not, then the mere fact that the quondam infant has been subsequently adjudged a bankrupt cannot bring it into existence. If, on the other hand, the infant is in equity liable to return his ill-gotten gains his liability holds good, even if he is not subsequently adjudged to be an insolvent. It must be remembered that the relief springs, not from the circumstance that the borrower is adjudicated a bankrupt, which may be a pure accident, but from the rule of equity that a person should not be allowed to take advantage of his own fraud. It would be sheer injustice if an infant should retain, not only the property which he has agreed to sell or mortgage, but also the money which he has obtained by perpetrating fraud. As stated by Lord Kenyon in Jennings v. Rundall (25) the protection given by law to the infant "was to be used as a shield and not as a sword." It must be remembered that, while in India all contracts made by an infant are void, there is no such general rule in England. For instance, a contract for necessaries is not affected by the Infants Relief Act, 1874, and can be validly entered into by an infant. There should, therefore, be greater scope in India than in England for the application of the equitable doctrine of restitution.

It is, however, argued that this jurisdiction can be exercised only when the minor invokes the aid of the Court as a plaintiff. If he asks the Court to cancel a transaction brought about by his own fraud, he cannot complain if the Court does justice to both the parties ; and, while granting him the relief the Court compels him, at the same time, to return the advantage which he has acquired in pursuance of the void transaction. But if the minor happens to occupy the position of a defendant in an action involving the cancellation of the transaction of the above description, he should not, it is urged, be required to make restitution.

It is difficult to understand why the granting of an equitable remedy should depend upon a mere accident, namely, whether it is the minor or his adversary who has taken the initiative in bringing the transaction before the Court. The material circumstances in both the cases are exactly the same. A contract has been entered into with an infant and, as it is an invalid transaction, it must be cancelled. The Court, however, finds that the infant has, by practising fraud upon the opposite party, received property or money ; and that justice requires that he should not retain the benefit derived by him from a transaction which has been declared to be ineffectual against him. The transaction has been wiped out. It is only fair that both the parties should revert to their original position. These considerations are, in no way, affected by the circumstance that one party and not the other, has moved the Court in the first instance. There is neither principle nor justice which would warrant a discrimination.

The equitable jurisdiction of the Court to order restitution rests purely upon the principle of justice, and that principle is no more applicable to a case in which he is a defendant. But when we come to the case law, we find it in an unsatisfactory state. The decisions of the High Courts in India show that when the minor succeeds in an action brought by him, he is ordinarily required to restore the benefit obtained by him by committing fraud. The same unanimity is not, however, found in cases in which he occupies the role of a defendant. In some cases of this character restitution has been allowed, e. g., Saral Chand Mitter v. Mohun Bibi (22a), but there are several cases in which relief has not been granted against frauds committed by minors when they were defendants. The language of Ss. 39 and 41, Specific Relief Act, no doubt shows that the jurisdiction conferred thereby is to be exercised when the minor himself invokes the aid of the Court. The doctrine of restitution is not, however, confined to the cases covered by that section. That doctrine rests upon the salutary principle that an infant cannot be allowed by a Court of equity to take advantage of his own fraud. It is possible that, though the Court ordinarily imposes terms upon an infant guilty of fraud if he seeks its aid as a plaintiff, it may decline to exercise its equitable jurisdiction if he happens to be a defendant. All that can reasonably be said is that the Court, in deciding whether relief against fraud practised by an infant should or should not be granted, will consider, along with other circumstances of the case, the fact that the infant is a defendant and not a plaintiff in the case. But there is no warrant either in principle or in equity for the general rule that the relief shall never be granted in a case where the infant happens to be a defendant.

No such distinction seems to have been drawn in the English cases. Indeed, Stocks v. Wilson (24) was a case in which the infant was the defendant, and yet he was held liable to refund to the plaintiff the price of the furniture received from the latter. Similarly in Cowern v. Nield (12) the action was brought against the infant but it was never suggested that the circumstance of his being a defendant should make any difference in his liability.

The exact form which the relief should take must depend upon the peculiar circumstances of each case, but the contract or any stipulation therein should never be enforced. The remedy by way of restitution may sometimes involve the payment of a sum of money equal to that borrowed under the void contract. The grant of such relief is not, however, an enforcement of the contract, but a restoration of the state of affairs as they existed before the formation of the contract. The Court, while giving this relief, has not to look at the contract or to give effect to any of the stipulations contained therein. Indeed, the relief is granted, not because there is a contract which should be enforced, but because the transaction being void does not exist and the parties should revert to the condition in which they were before the transaction. This is not a performance of the contract but a negation of it. For example, the contract may provide for the payment of interest at a certain rate, but the Court does not give effect to such stipulation or to any other term of the contract. The defrauded party gets, not the remedy on the contract, but the relief in equity against fraud. The mere fact that the result of granting the relief is similar to that flowing from the performance of one or more of the terms of the contract cannot constitute an adequate ground for refusing the relief, if the Court considers that justice requires that it should be granted. As stated by Knight Bruce, V. C., in Stikeman v. Dawson (26) in what cases in particular a Court of "equity will thus exert itself is not easy to determine". If the infant has obtained property by fraud the Court will require him to restore it to its owner. In other cases, his estate or he, after attaining majority, may be held liable for the return of the pecuniary advantage acquired by him by fraud.

For the aforesaid reasons my answer to the second question is that an infant though not liable under the contract, may in equity, be required to return the benefit he has received by making a false representation as to his age.

Broadway, J.—I concur with the learned Chief Justice.

Dalip Singh, J.—I concur with the learned Chief Justice.

Harrison, J.—On the first question of whether a minor who has made a false representation as to his age is estopped from pleading his minority, I agree with the learned Chief Justice in holding that he is not estopped from doing so.

On the second question it appears to me that deplorable as the result may be the minor cannot be compelled to make restitution where the result of his misrepresentation has been the passing of money as opposed to goods. In the first place the contract is void and has no legal existence. Doubtless an action in tort can succeed, if it be shown that the tort is independent of the contract. Great reliance has been placed on Cowern v. Nield (12), but all that this authority lays down is: that if it can be established that there has been an independent tort the action will succeed. That case was sent back for a new trial in order that the plaintiff might have an opportunity of proving, if he could, that his money was obtained from him by fraud, but the judgment has been relied on by counsel for the proposition that where a contract has arisen as the direct consequence of a fraudulent statement, an action may still succeed on the basis of that fraud. It appears to me that what is laid down is precisely the contrary proposition, and that unless and until the fraud can be dissociated from the contract, the plaintiff's suit must fail. In this case there can, I think, be no doubt that the substance of the cause of action is contractual. Had the fraud or misstatement of the defendant not led to a contract, we would have heard no more about it. The only reality in the tort was the fact that it was the origin or the cause of the void contract. In consequence of the misrepresentation a contract was made and it is, therefore, equally true to say that had there been no tort, there would have been no contract and that had there been no contract, there would have been no tort, for there would merely have been an infructuous attempt to deceive as opposed to a successful fraud. It follows that the suit is not based upon a tort and Cowern v. Nield (12) does not help us. The question remains of whether the defendant can be denied the right of pleading that the contract is void except upon definite terms, which would obviously be that he should restore the benefit he has received in consequence of his dishonesty. To quote from the judgment of Lord Sumner in Leslie Ltd. v. Sheill (9) at p. 612:

> It is perhaps a pity that no exception was made where, as here, the infant's wickedness was at least equal to that of the person who innocently contracted with him, but so it is. It was thought necessary to safeguard the weakness of infants at large, even though here and there a juvenile knave slipped through.

In the following paragraph it is explained that to a claim for return of the principal money paid to the infant under the contract that failed there are at least two answers: the first the infancy itself being at common law the answer before 1874. I take it that in India this is the answer still. S. 41, Specific Relief Act, is invoked and relied upon as affording an analogy for ordering restoration. This runs as follows :

On adjudging the cancellation of an instrument the Court may require the party to whom such relief is granted to make any compensation to the other which justice may require.

In the first place there is no question of the cancellation of an instrument but the assertion of the fact that the contract was void from the start and had no legal existence. In the second place, S. 41, Specific Relief Act, appears to me merely to enunciate and give effect to the well-known principle that he who seeks equity must do equity. In this case the infant asks for no equitable relief, but on the contrary he pleads the substantive law and states the self-evident fact that the contract on which the suit is based had no existence. Whatever may be the consequences where an infant seeks an equitable relief, I do not think the analogy has been established and I do not think that S. 41, Specific Relief Act, throws any light upon or affords any assistance to the decision of the present question. I realize how deplorable it is that a dishonest infant should be able to keep what he has obtained by his dishonesty, but the matter appears to be one for the legislature, and I am of opinion that until and unless the legislature sees fit to move, no suit of this nature, being in its essence contractual, can lead to an order for restitution by the infant on the ground of his having dishonestly induced the plaintiff to contract with him and to pay him money.

Tek Chand, J.—This reference to the Full Bench gives rise to the following three points, which it will be convenient to deal with separately :

(i) Is a party, who, when a minor, has induced another to enter into a contract with him by falsely representing himself to be of age, estopped from pleading his minority in avoidance of the contract ?

(ii) In the event of the answer to the first question being in the negative, can he avoid the contract and at the same time retain the benefit derived by him therefrom ?

(iii) Will the answer to (i) be affected by the circumstance that he is a plaintiff or a defendant in the action in which this question arises ?

I shall take up (i) first. It was contended by the learned counsel for the appellant that this question is concluded in his favour in consequence of the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mohori Bibi v. Dharmodass (7) and Mahomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark (10). An examination of these cases, however, shows that this contention is baseless. It is no doubt true that in Mohori Bibee's case (7) the question was raised before Jenkins, J., who dealt with the case as the Court of first instance on the original side of the Calcutta High Court in Dharmo Dass Ghose v. Brahmo Dutt (5) and on appeal three Judges of that Court discussed it at great length : Brahmo Dutt v. Dharmo Dass (6). But on the matter going up before the Judicial Committee this question did not arise, as their Lordships found on the facts that the party dealing with the minor had not been misled by the alleged misrepresentation made by the minor. It was found on the evidence that at the time when the contract was entered into the representee in that case had full knowledge of the fact that the representor was in reality a minor and it was accordingly held that there could be no estoppel where the truth of the matter was known to both parties. The real question decided in that case was that having regard to the provisions of S. 11, Contract Act, a contract entered into by a minor was void and not merely voidable as had been hitherto erroneously held in a number of cases in India.

The question appears to have been argued before their Lordships in Mahomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark (10), which was an appeal from the Straits Settlements, where the statute in force is identical in terms with S. 115, Evidence Act. But the actual decision in that case also proceeded on a different point, their Lordships finding on the facts that the representation which was alleged to have been made by the minor could not be justly characterized as fraudulent. There is, however, a remark in the judgment of Lord Shaw to the effect that the plaintiff's case, based on the minor representing himself to be of age would have failed on the principle recently given effect to in the case of Leslie Ltd. v. Shiell (9).

The remark is clearly in the nature of an obiter dictum and though entitled to great respect cannot be said to be decisive of the matter.

The question is, therefore, not directly covered by any authoritative pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council and it is open to us to come to our own conclusion on it. It is admitted that the matter has to be decided in reference to S. 11, Contract Act, and S. 115, Evidence Act. As already pointed out the former section has been authoritatively interpreted in Mohori Bibee's case (7) as meaning that a contract entered into by a minor is void. There can, therefore, be no room for controversy on that point. The difficulty, however, arises when, in an action brought in respect of such a transaction, the opposite party urges that the plea that the contract was void ought not to be heard as the transaction had been brought about by the minor representing himself to be of age and on that misrepresentation the opposite party has parted with his money or property. In other words the question is what is the effect on such a case of S. 115, Evidence Act, which runs as follows :

> When one person has, by his declaration, act or omission, intentionally caused or permitted another person to believe a thing to be true and to act upon such belief neither he nor his representative shall be allowed, in any suit or proceeding between himself and such person or his respresentative, to deny the truth of that thing.

The question has arisen in several cases in India, but as pointed out by the learned Judges of the Division Bench there is a serious conflict of judicial opinion on it. It is, therefore, necessary to review the leading Indian cases on the subject so as to properly appreciate the reasons in support of the two rival views.

Beginning with our own Court, we find that the rulings, though few in number, are not uniform. In Wasinda Ram v. Sita Ram (1) the plaintiff sued to recover the amount due on a bond which the defendant had, during minority, executed falsely representing himself to be of age. Chevis, Offg. C. J., who delivered the principal judgment, held that S. 115, Evidence Act, applied to the case and that the defendant could not be heard to plead his minority to escape from the consequences of the transaction which he had himself brought about by false representations. He definitely dissented from the view of the Calcutta High Court (which I shall presently discuss) that the word " person " in the first line of S. 115 must be interpreted as meaning a person sui juris and does not include a minor. LeRossignol, J., in agreeing with his learned colleague, thus expressed himself :

> It is true that a contract made with an infant is no contract, but is void ab initio, but that is not a matter of which Courts must take cognizance suo motu, and if S. 115, Evidence Act, prohibits the tender of the plea (and I see no reason to suppose that it does not) then the plea may not be tendered.

The question next arose in Harji Mal v. Abdul Halim (27 & 28) before LeRossignol, J., sitting singly. The learned Judge reiterated his former opinion and upholding the plea of estoppel decreed the suit on a promissory note on which the defendant had, during minority, obtained a loan falsely representing himself to be of age. A contrary view was, however, taken two years later by Moti Sagar, J., (also sitting in Single Bench) in Kapura v. Arjun Singh: A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 511, where a minor had sued to set aside a sale executed by him during minority which it was found he had persuaded the vendee to enter into on a fraudulent misrepresentation that he was sui juris. The learned Judge refused to follow Wasinda Ram v. Sita Ram (1), being of the opinion that the authority of that ruling had been considerably shaken if not altogether annihilated by the remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark (10) where Leslie v. Sheill (9) had been approved. He accordingly held that the plaintiff was not estopped from pleading the invalidity of the contract by reason of his minority, even though he had himself induced the contract by false representation.

The view taken in Wasinda Ram v. Sita Ram (1), is in accord with that which had been uniformly accepted as correct by the Bombay High Court. The first case of that Court which needs notice is Ganesh Lala v. Bapu (2), where Jardine and Ranade, JJ. held that S. 115, Evidence Act, made no exception in the case of infants and that an infant who had represented himself to be of full age and had sold property to the defendant by falsely representing himself to be of full age was estopped from subsequently pleading that the contract was void by reason of his minority and that he could not maintain his suit to set aside the sale on that ground. This ruling was followed in Dadasaheb Dasrath Rao v. Nahani (3), where Beaman and Heaton, JJ. definitely dissented from the Calcutta view that a minor was not a "person" within the contemplation of S. 115, Evidence Act. At p. 483 it was remarked that the rulings to the contrary > reveal a constant confusion of thought between what is true estoppel and what may be that effect of fraudulent misrepresentation by a minor. . . . . We are not, however, concerned with any considerations proper to the latter point. Estoppel is a law of allegation and proof and if we are right in our interpretation of S. 115 then defendant 2, being a "person" within the contemplation of that section and having by direct declaration intentionally caused the plaintiff to believe that he was a major, is precluded absolutely from denying the truth of that assertion, that is to say, he might not plead-much less prove-that at the time the conveyance was executed he was in fact a minor. The point is not, as seems too often to be assumed, what would be the effect upon such a transaction of minority as a fact, but it is this that if the law of estoppel be correctly and strictly enforced the Court is not to know that defendant 2 was in fact a minor at all. The whole trial must proceed upon the footing of that being true which he represented and caused the plaintiff to believe to be true, viz., that he was a major. Fraudulent misrepresentation is upon a totally different footing. In the large majority of cases of fraudulent misrepresentation it is the party who has suffered by it who desires the truth to be known and to obtain relief on that basis. That of course is a doctrine wholly outside the law, of estoppel proper and should never be confused with it.

In Jasraj Bastimal v. Sadashiv Mahadev (4), the plaintiff sued on a promissory note on which he had advanced money to the defendant who was under age at the time, but who had fraudulently represented himself to be a major. The plea of minority was not allowed to be urged and the defendant was held to be estopped, it being laid down that the fact that the present suit was for recovery of money and did not relate to immovable property, as Dadasaheb Dasrath Rao v. Bai Nahani (3), did not make any difference, the rules of evidence being exactly the same with regard to suits relating to promissory notes. The principle of these rulings has also been accepted by the Bombay Court in Fazul Bhoy Jaffar v. Credit Bank of India Ltd. (29), and Gurushiddswami v. P. D. Narendra (30), though the actual decision in each of those cases proceeded on other points. It will thus be seen that the Bombay High Court has given full effect to the plea of estoppel, and has refused to put a narrow interpretation on the word "person" in S. 115 so as to exclude from its connotation all persons described under the Contract Act to be incompetent to contract.

This view has not, however, found favour in Calcutta. The first case of that Court which requires notice is Dhanmull v. Ram Chunder Ghose (31), where Petheram, C. J., and Prinsep and Pigot, JJ., held that a suit to recover money advanced as a loan to an infant upon his false representation that he was of age could not be maintained against him there being no obligation binding upon him, which could be enforced upon the contract either at law or in equity. It was remarked that > no doubt an infant will not be allowed to take advantage of his own fraud and may be compelled to make specific restitution, when that is possible, of anything he has obtained by deceit. But this does not come within either principle. If we, as a Court of equity as well as of law, were to allow the plaintiff to recover in this suit, it would amount to restraining a defendant from setting up the plea of infancy in an action on a contract by reason of his having made a fraudulent misrepresentation dans locum contractui; and in no case has this ever been done.

It may be noted that though the loan in question had been secured on a mortgage, it was admitted at the Bar on behalf of both parties that the plaintiff was not entitled to a mortgage decree, and the dispute was confined to the right of the promisee to obtain a personal decree only. It is also noteworthy that the case was decided in 1890, but its publication was prohibited by order of one of the Judges constituting the Bench and it did not find its way in the Reports till 1897.

Next we come to the case of Saral Chand Mitter v. Mohun Bibi (5) which was first heard by Jenkins, J., on the original side, whose judgment is printed at pp. 372 to 386 of the report. That was a suit to obtain a decree on a mortgage, which had been effected on the false representation made by the defendant that he was of age. It was pleaded by the defendant that notwithstanding his fraud, infancy was a complete answer to the claim. Jenkins, J. in an exhaustive judgment held that the disability of the defendant could not be successfully used in defence of fraud. He accordingly passed a decree for the sum due recoverable only from the mortgage property. The learned Judge distinguished the case of Dhanmull v. Ram Chand Ghose (31) on the ground that the only question before the Court in that case was the right of the mortgagee to obtain a personal decree and that his right to enforce the mortgage by foreclosure or sale had not been considered. It may also be mentioned that the learned Judge started with the assumption (which was in accord with the view then prevailing in Calcutta) that a contract entered into by a minor was not void but merely voidable. It is doubtful if the decision would have been the same, if the contract had been treated as void, which must now be the case in view of the Privy Council decision in Mohori Bibee v. Dharmodas (7). The judgment of Jenkins, J., was appealed against and affirmed by Maclean, C. J., and Macpherson and Trevelyan, JJ., who doubted the correctness of Dhanmull v. Ram Chand Ghose (31) and held that in cases of fraud by an infant the protection which the law throws around him is taken away; in other words, that the defence of infants cannot be successfully pleaded in defence of a fraud perpetrated by the infant.

The question arose again before the same learned Judge (Jenkins, J.) presiding over the original side of the Court in Dharmo Dass Ghose v. Brahmo Dutt (5), to which reference has already been made. There the plaintiff sued to have a mortgage-deed executed by him cancelled on the ground that at the time of its execution he was a minor. In reply the defendant mortgagee pleaded that the loan was induced by a fraudulent misrepresentation as to his age, made by him to the defendant's attorney. It was, however, found as a fact that the said attorney had been made aware of the plaintiff's minority before the transaction was completed. No question of estoppel, therefore, really arose in the case. The learned Judge, however, proceeded to consider the point which had been raised before him that fraud and deceit were not necessary to the success of the defendant's plea of infancy and which was supported by certain remarks in Ganesh Lala v. Bapu (2). Dissenting from this view he held that the general law of estoppel as enacted by S. 115, Evidence Act, would not apply to an infant unless he had practised fraud operating to deceive, in which case the Court administering equitable principles will deprive a fraudulent minor of the benefit of a plea of infancy. As no fraud had been established in the case, the suit was decreed. The mortgagee's appeal was heard by Maclean, Prinsep and Ameer Ali, JJ., Brahmo Dut v. Dhurmo Dass (6), who upheld the finding of fact of the trial judge that the defendant-appellant's attorney was not misled by the alleged representation by the plaintiff-respondent as to his age. The learned Judges, however, proceeded to consider the plea of estoppel and laid down the proposition that S. 115, Evidence Act, had no application to contracts by infants. At p. 88 the learned Chief Justice remarked :

The term "person" in S. 115 is amply satisfied by holding it to apply to one who is of full age and competent to enter into a contract, and I cannot bring myself to think that it could have been the intention of the legislature by such a general expression, to institute such a grave change in the law of estoppel in relation to minors.

The point was further developed by Ameer Ali, J., at p. 394, in the following words :

To hold that an infant may be estopped in regard to contracts by conduct or misrepresentation would be practically to sweep away all the limitations the law has imposed on the capacity to contract ; and a person labouring under disability could be enabled to enlarge by his own act his legal capacity to contract. In the Liverpool Adelphi Loan Association v. Fairhurst (20), it was held that a person under a disability to contract was not liable upon the contract, nor for a wrong arising out of or directly connected with the contract, and which is the means of effecting it and parcel of the same transaction. The same principle was followed in Bartlett v. Welles (32 & 33). It follows, therefore, that when the present law declares that an infant shall not be liable upon a contract, or in respect of a fraud in connexion with a contract, he cannot be made liable upon the same contract by means of an estoppel under S. 115.

As pointed out already this case went on appeal before the Privy Council in Mohori Bibi v. Dharma Das Ghose (7) and was decided against the plaintiff on the ground that he knew the truth of the matter and consequently no question of estoppel really arose. At p. 545 Sir Ford North specifically stated that in view of this finding their Lordships did not think it necessary to deal with the question as to whether S. 115 applied to infants or not.

In Surendra Nath Roy v. Krishna Sakhi Dasi (34) the vendor, while over 18 but below 21 years of age and being himself aware that his minority had been extended by reason of an order under S. 7, Guardians and Wards Act, had sold the property to the plaintiffs, who were not aware of that fact. Caspers and N. R. Chatterjee, JJ., remanded the case for enquiry, whether the vendee was in fact deceived and whether there was misrepresentation and legal fraud on the vendor's part. They expressed the view that if such misrepresentation and fraud was in fact established, the quondam minor would be estopped from taking advantage of his minority to show that the conveyance by him was inoperative. But in the absence of such fraud he cannot be held liable. In Ram Charan Das v. Joy Ram Mejhi (35) the point was again raised but not definitely decided, though Mukerji, J., expressed the opinion that the proposition that there can never be an estoppel against an infant, is too broadly stated and requires qualifications in the cases of fraud. The last Calcutta case is Golam Abdur v. Hem Chandra (36), in which on the finding that the representation by the minor was not fraudulent, N. R. Chatterjee and Newbould, JJ., repelled the plea of estoppel and held that > the law of estoppel must be read subject to other laws such as the Indian Contract Act and that a minor

> cannot be made liable upon a contract by means of an estoppel under S. 115, Evidence Act.

In view of their finding that the representation in that case was not fraudulent they did not think it necessary to decide whether a man can be estopped when the minor intended to deceive the opposite party and the latter was in fact deceived.

It will thus be seen that the rulings of the Calcutta Court on this point are not uniform. The balance of authority, however, appears to be in favour of the view that while generally speaking the plea of estoppel cannot prevail against a minor he may be estopped in cases where the representation made by him was fraudulent and has in fact resulted in defrauding the representee. It must, however, be borne in mind, as has been pointed out already, that the only considered decisions of that Court, in which this conclusion was arrived at, were given at a time when it was erroneously believed that a minor's contract was voidable and not void.

At Allahabad the question appears to have been first considered in Jagar Nath Singh v. Lalta Prasad (17), where Banerji, J., held that :

> the law of estoppel can only be applied subject to other provisions of law, and therefore, when, as held by the Privy Council, a contract by a minor is void under the provisions of the Contract Act, the law of estoppel cannot be invoked in aid to validate that which is void under the law.

He, however, held that on equitable grounds the quondam minor must restore the benefit he has derived as a result of his fraudulent representation. But the learned Judge took care to point out that the liability to restitution attached to the minor, not on the ground of estoppel, but because "an infant shall not take advantage of his own fraud." The other member of the Bench, Richards, J., however, took a different view of the facts and held that the representation in question was not fraudulent. Another Bench of this Court (Richards and Tudball, JJ.) in Kanhaiya Lal v. Babu Ram (37) held that in a suit brought for recovery of money on a promissory note, the defendant was competent to plead his infancy although he had misrepresented his age to the plaintiff at the time of the execution of the promissory note. The same view was taken by Karamat Husain and Chamier, JJ, in Kanhaya v. Girdhari Lal (38) and by Richards, C. J, and Banerji, J., in Dhara Singh v. Gyan Chand (39), though in this latter case the High Court refused to set aside the decree against the minor on the ground that the case had come up before it on the revision side.

The first Madras case which needs notice is Vaikunta Rama Pillai v. Authimoolam Chettiar (16), where, after citing with approval an obiter dictum to the same effect in Arumugam Chetti v. Durasinga Tevar (40), it was held that the plain statutory provision that a minor is incompetent to incur a contractual debt cannot be overruled by an estoppel. Again in Raghavayya v. Subbayya (41) Courts-Trotter and Seshagiri Ayyar, JJ., held that a sale-deed executed by a minor is liable to be cancelled by him after attaining majority, but that the Court before granting him possession can put him on terms. Reference was made to Leslie v. Shiell (9) and Mahomed Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark (10); and the decision in Dadasahev Dasrathrao v. Bai Nahani (3) was dissented from. The same view was taken in Guruswamy Pantulu v. Budhkaran Lal (42) though the point is not discussed in any detail. The latest Madras case is Venkataramayya v. Punnayya (43), where Reilly, J. followed, though not without hesitation, the previous rulings of the Court and repelled the plea of estoppel, but directed the quondam minor to refund the consideration retained by him.

The same view has also found favour with the Rangoon and Patna High Courts. See Maung Tin v. Ma Lun (44) and Ganganand Singh v. Ramashwar Singh (18). In the latter case, Das J., held (Adami, J. concurring) that a minor is not bound in law by a contract into which he had entered, even if he induced the other party to enter into it by a fraudulent misrepresentation that he was of age; but where the infant had obtained an advantage by falsely stating himself to be of full age, equity would restore his ill-gotten gains and release the party deceived from obligations or acts induced by the fraud. In order to create this liability, however, the representation must be express and fraudulent and will not be constituted so by mere inference suggested by or drawn from the infant's conduct.

The Sindh Judicial Commissioner's Court at Karachi for a time followed the decisions of the Bombay High Court and upheld the plea of estoppel in several cases : see Sobhanmal Pohumal v. Bachal (45) and Lunidomal Khiloomal v. Ghanumal Jamna Das (46). But a Full Bench of that Court has recently taken the contrary view in Mt. Hari v. Roshan A. I. R. 1923 Sindh 5, and has held that S. 115 is inapplicable to such a case.

The above review of the authorities shows that the consensus of judicial opinion in India is decidedly against giving effect to the plea of estoppel in such cases. This has been definitely ruled in Allahabad, Madras, Patna, Rangoon and Karachi; and the Calcutta High Court, while taking the same view on the general question, has in some decisions qualified the proposition by holding that the minor may be estopped where the representation was fraudulent and the representee had in fact been deceived. In our own Court the rulings are not uniform, but the latest decision is in accord with the view taken by the majority of the other Courts. In the Bombay High Court, however, the contrary opinion still holds good, according to which the quondam minor is debarred from setting up the minority in avoidance of the contract. Now I may say at once that I have no hesitation in accepting the reason given by Beaman, J., in Dadasaheb Dasrathrao v. Bai Nahani (3), for dissenting from the view taken by Maclean, C. J., and the other Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Brahmo Dutt v. Dharmo Das Ghose (6) that the word "person" in S. 115 must be taken to have been used as meaning only a person sui juris. In my opinion neither the context nor the general scheme of the Evidence Act nor the established canon of interpretation of statutes warrants such a restricted meaning being put on the word. In the absence of there being anything in the definition clauses or other parts of the Act to indicate that a technical meaning has been imposed on the word, it must be taken to cannote what it does in ordinary plain English. Secondly in S.. 115 itself the word "person" is found twice—at one place in reference to the representor (or the person of incidence as he is called by American lawyers) and at the other in reference to the representee (or the person of inherence). Now it is not suggested that the legislature intended to use the same word in two different senses in the same section. If, therefore, it has the same meaning in both places, and is to be taken to mean only a person sui juris, the startling result will follow that even in those cases in which the minor is the person of inherence (representee) and has acted to his detriment on the belief of the representations made to him by an adult, he shall not be allowed to take advantage of the doctrine of changed situations and shall be debarred from putting forward the plea of estoppel against the opposite party. So far as I am aware such a contention has never been put forward and cannot possibly be accepted as correct. Then again we find the word "person" in several other sections of the Act, e. g., Ss. 8, 10, 112, 116, 118, 122 etc, and it is conceded that in none of them it can be given a restricted meaning so as to exclude minors. This being so, the well-settled rule of construction must be applied that the same words are to be prima facie construed in the same sense in different parts of the same statute: per Chitty, J., in Spencer v. Metropolitan Board of Works (47). I am, therefore, of opinion that S. 115 cannot be held to be inapplicable on this ground.

Nor am I prepared to accept the argument which seems to have appealed to the learned Judicial Commissioners of Sind in the Full Bench case, above cited, to the effect that as under S. 115 the representor must intentionally cause or permit another person to believe a certain thing to be true and to act upon such belief, and as it is only a person of mature judgment who can be supposed to have such an intention the section cannot apply to a minor. It will be sufficient to say that this construction is opposed to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sarat Chander Dev v. Gopal Chander Laha (15), where it was held that the term "intentionally" has been advisedly used in the Indian Act for the purpose of declaring the law in India to be precisely the same as the law of England, according to which it is not the real intention of the representor which matters, but what has to be seen is whether he has so conducted himself that a reasonable man would take the representation to be true end believe that it was meant that he should act upon it.

This brings us to the remaining but really substantial point, viz, whether the specific provision of the substantive law (S. 11, Contract Act), which declares a minor's contract to be void, can be rendered nugatory by a general provision embodying the rule of estoppel found in a procedural Code like the Evidence Act. In order to find a satisfactory answer to this question two fundamental principles must be borne in mind. The first is embodied in the great maxim generalia specialibus non derogant, which has frequently been applied to resolve the apparent conflict between provisions of the same statute or of different statutes. In such cases, wherever there is a particular enactment and a general enactment and the latter, taken at its most comprehensive sense, would overrule the former, the particular statute must be operative : Pretty v. Solly (48) and its provisions must be read as excepted out of the general : Dryden v. Overseers of Putney (49) and Taylor v. Corporation of Oldham (50). The second is that where a a particular act is declared to be void and unlawful by statute a party cannot by representation, any more than by other means, raise against him an estoppel so as to create a state of things, which he is under a legal disability from creating. As pointed out by vice-Chancellor Bacon in Barrow's case (51) :

> The doctrine of estoppel cannot be applied to an Act of parliament. Estoppel only applies to a contract inter parties, and it is not competent to the parties to a contract to estop themselves or anybody else in the face of an Act of Parliament . . . I am of opinion that as between the parties to this contract there was no estoppel, they contracted to do a thing which in the result it was unlawful to do.

On the same principle it has been held that a corporate body cannot be estopped from denying that they have entered into a contract, which it was ultra vires for them to make : see Canterbury Corporation v. Cooper (52).

In this connexion I think it is legitimate to seek guidance from the English law, for though in India the law on the subject of estoppel has been codified, it has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sarat Chunder Dev v.

Gopal Chandar Lala (15) that the law enacted in S. 115 relating to estoppel doer not differ from the English law on the subject. In Levene v. Brougham (8) it has been held by the Court of appeal that such a contract being void under the Infants Relief Act, the defendant was not estopped from relying on the statute by the fact that he had made a misrepresentation as to his age. Then there is the much cited case of Leslie v. Shiell (9) where, however, the question of estoppel was not raised or discussed, it being assumed that a suit to enforce the contract as such would not lie and the real points raised and decided were that in such a case an action delicto for damages on the basis of deceit will not lie, nor can the creditor recover from the defendant the amount as money "had and received" by him for the plaintiff's benefit. The Court of appeal, re-affirming the rule laid down in numerous cases that an infant is not answerable ex delicto, as the tort is directly connected with the contract, which the infant is entitled to avoid. Therefore, this case also supports, though indirectly, the conclusion arrived at in Levene v. Brougham (8) and is of particular value as having been approved by the Privy Council in the obiter dictum in Mahomed Syedol Arrifin v. Yeoh Ooi Gark (10) already referred to.

I am, therefore, of opinion that both on principle and authority, the first question referred to the Full Bench must be answered in the negative and it must be held that the minor is not estopped rom pleading his minority in avoidance of the contract. I wish, however, to remark that while this is my well considered opinion on the point I have arrived at it after a great deal of hesitation, for I find that there exist weighty considerations for the opposite view which has in support of it the high authority of eminent Judges in England, India and America and of several learned authors who have made a special study of the subject. In view of this serious divergence of opinion on the subject, I venture to think that it is high time for the legislature to intervene and set the controversy at rest as has been done in several States in America : see American Cyclopedia of Law in Procedure, vol. 32, p. 611 and Curpus Juris vol. 31, p. 1005, et seq. The question is frequently arising and in the absence of an authoritative pronouncement by their Lordships of the Privy Council there does not appear to be much chance of unanimity of judicial opinion on it.

The next question to be decided resolves itself into two parts :

(a) Whether the quondam minor can avoid the contract and at the same time retain the benefit derived by him therefrom ; and,

(b) whether the matter is in any way affected by the circumstances that he is a plaintiff or a defendant in the action in which the question arises.

On both these points again there is considerable conflict of judicial opinion though, speaking for myself, I do not feel the same difficulty here as I do on the first question. It has been argued for the appellant that the contract being void and the Court being incompetent to enforce it or to grant relief in an action ex delicto arising from the deceit practised by the minor, it follows as a matter of course that it has no jurisdiction to order restitution or repayment of the consideration for this would be doing the same thing in another garb. In my opinion this argument is fallacious and ought to be rejected. In ordering restitution the Court is not enforcing a void contract but is restoring the parties to the status quo ante. The necessary consequence of the declaration that the contract is void is to wipe it off entirely out of consideration, to treat it as if it never had any existence, and the Court, while granting the minor this relief is not powerless to adjust the equities between the parties and can make the fraudulent minor restore what he has obtained by the very contract which he is now seeking successfully to avoid. This is in accord with equity, justice and good conscience and appears to have been recognized for a long time by the Courts in England. It is no doubt true that there are dicta in several English decisions that this jurisdiction to make restitution in integrum is limited to those cases only in which it is possible to compel the minor to restore the property in specie which he had obtained by fraud and that the Courts, while holding a contract to be void, cannot order him to refund the money which he has received under it. It is not, however, necessary to discuss the decisions which bear on the point and which it is not always easy to reconcile as in India jurisdiction of Courts to require a party at whose instance an instrument has been adjudged to be void to make any compensation to the other party, which justice may require, has been expressly recognized by the legislature in Ss. 39 and 41, Specific Relief Act. It will be noticed that this power to grant compensation is not confined to those cases only in which the instruments related to transfer of property, nor is the mode in which compensation is to be given defined. The discretion of the Courts in the matter seems to be absolutely unfettered. They might, therefore, in appropriate cases, while adjudging a deed executed by a minor to be void, order refunds of the monetary consideration received by him under the contract and in addition make him restore any other benefit which he has derived therefrom.

It is no doubt true that Ss. 39 and 41 relate to those cases only in which the minor is the plaintiff; but that does not affect the question of jurisdiction of the Courts to grant equitable relief, either by way of restitution of the property in specie or by refund of the money with or without interest. Of course, whether compensation is to be granted at all and if so to what extent and in what form are matters to be determined by the Courts in each particular case according to its peculiar facts and circumstances. But it does not seem to me to be open to doubt that the Courts in this country possess the powers to compel the fraudulent minor to restore the benefit derived by him from a void contract. This was recognized by Chief Court in Balak Ram v. Dadu (22) and, so far as I am aware, has been accepted all along as correct law: see also Kupura v. Hardit Singh, A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 510. The same view has been taken at Allahabad: see Jagan Nath Singh v. Lalta Parsad (17), and Lila Dhar v. Piarey Lal (53), at Madras in Vikuntarama Pillai v. Authimoolam Chettiar (16), and Raghavyya v. Subhayya (41), at Patna in Ganganand Singh v. Rameshwar Singh (18); and by the High Court of Calcutta in Saral Chand Mitter v. Mohun Bibi (5).

It remains now to notice the subsidiary question whether the power of the Court to order restitution is limited to those cases only in which it has been moved by the minor himself; whether before or after attaining majority, or whether the Court can grant relief also when he is the defendant. On this question again the authorities are not uniform, but after giving the matter my fullest consideration I am of opinion that there is no justification for making such a distinction. It is no doubt true that S. 41, Specific Relief Act, relates to those cases only where the minor is the plaintiff, but its terms are not exhaustive and I fail to see why the equitable jurisdiction of the Court should be affected by the fact that the minor comes before it as a defendant. The Court exercises this power to do complete justice between the parties by restoring them to the position which they occupied before the void contract was entered into and the mere circumstance, that the minor is arrayed before it on one side or the other, ought not to make any difference.

For the foregoing reasons my answer to the reference is:

(1) That in the circumstances stated in the question the quondam minor is not estopped from pleading his minority in avoidance of the contract.

(2) that he cannot in subsequent litigation refuse to perform the contract and at the same time retain the benefit which he had derived therefrom.

(3) It makes no difference whether in such litigation he is the plaintiff or the defendant.

Full Bench

BROADWAY, ADDISON AND TEK CHAND, JJ.

(Bhai) Kirpa Singh—Defendant—Appellant.

v.

Rasalldar Ajaipal Singh and others—Plaintiffs—Respondents.

First Appeal No. 2630 of 1922, Decided on 23rd June 1928, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Amritsar, D/- 5th October 1922.

* (a) Sikh Gurudwaras Act (Punjab Act 8 of 1925), S. 39—Act coming into force during pendency of appeal from suit regarding manage- ment of Gurudwara—High Court can hear appeal—Procedure indicated.

The enactment of the Sikh Gurudwaras Act and the issue of a notification made under the provisions of the said Act declaring the Gurudwaras to be a Sikh Gurudwara do not bar the jurisdiction of the High Court to deal with an appeal against the decree of the subordinate Courts passed in a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C., in respect of Gurudwara, which appeal was pending when the Act came into force or the notification was issued. The High Court must hear and decide the appeal, though in view of the imperative provisions of S. 3 it may not be possible for it to grant all the reliefs claimed. Under that section it is not open to the Court to go into the question whether or not the Gurudwara is a Sikh Gurudwara, nor can it settle a scheme of management in respect of such a Gurudwara. The procedure laid down in S. 32 is applicable to "suits" or "proceedings" ejusdem generis pending in a Court of first instance and does not govern a pending appeal even if all or some of the matters mentioned in that section arise for decision in the appeal. [P 634 C 2]

It is now authoritatively settled that the right of appeal is not a mere matter of procedure, but is a vested right which inheres in a party from the commencement of the action in the Court of first instance. If according to the law in force at the time when the action was started in the Court of first instance the ultimate decision of such Court was appealable, the right to prefer or prosecute an appeal therefrom is not affected by subsequent change of the law abolishing the appeal or modifying its forum unless it is so provided expressly in the amending statute or follows by necessary implication from its terms. Colonial Sugar Refining Co., Ltd. v. Irving, (1905) A. C. 369, Rel. on. [P 630 C 2; P 631 C 1]

✲ (c) Interpretation of Statutes—Vested rights must be respected.

Statutes should be interpreted, if possible, so as to respect vested rights and in the absence of anything in an enactment to show that it is to have retrospective operation it cannot be so construed as to have the effect of altering the law applicable to a claim in the litigation at the time when the Act is passed. [P 631 C 1]

When a statute is retrospective with regard to certain sections only and silent as to others the rule to be followed in construing such a statute is that the Court should examine the subject-matter of the enactment of the particular section and decide whether it is to be supposed that retrospective construction was intended by the legislature to be given to it. [P 631 C 1 & 2]

A statute is not to be construed so as to have a greater retrospective effect than its language renders necessary. [P 631 C 2]

✲ (f) Words—"Suit or proceeding."—Meaning depends on context in a particular case.

The words "suit," "proceeding," and words of similar connotation have different meanings in different statutes and it is not possible to lay down a general rule of interpretation which would be applicable to all cases. In each particular case the question has to be examined in reference to the context and that meaning is to be preferred which will best fit in with it. [P 632 C 2]

(g) Sikh Gurudwaras Act (1925), Ss. 29 and 32—Suit does not include appeal.

The words "suit" or "proceeding," in Ss. 29 and 32 must be construed in a narrow sense as signifying an action in the trial Court or proceedings ejusdem generis and cannot be held to include appeals. [P 632 C 2]

Hazara Singh, Jagan Nath Agarwal and M. L. Batra—for Appellant.

G. C. Narang, Man Singh and Bhagat Singh—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The reference has arisen out of a suit instituted on 26th July 1921 in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Amritsar, with the previous sanction of the Collector obtained under S. 92, Civil P. C., by certain worshippers of the Gurdwara of Guru Sar Sutlani praying that the defendant be removed from the office of the Mahant of the Gurdwara, that he be directed to render accounts of the trust properties, and that a scheme of management under a "committee of administration" be settled. It was alleged that the defendant had set up a title adverse to the trust with respect to the Gurdwara and the properties attached thereto, that he had been guilty of waste and misappropriation of large sums of money and of neglect of his religious duties, and that he was a man of immoral character and otherwise unfit to hold charge of his office as Mahant. The defendant denied these allegations, but the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit holding that the Gurdwara was a Sikh Gurdwara, that the properties in suit were attached to the institution and that the defendant was not a fit person to continue as Mahant. He accordingly ordered his removal from the office and settled a scheme for the appointment of his successor, who was to be assisted by a committee of management. He also ordered the defendant to submit accounts for a specified period for the scrutiny of the committee, and further directed that an allowance of Rs. 75 per mensem be paid out of the Gurdwara income to him as maintenance for his lifetime and that he be given a house at Amritsar for residence. The costs of the suit were ordered to be paid by the defendant personally and not from the Gurdwara income.

From this decree two appeals were lodged to this Court: C. A. 2630 of 1922, presented on 23rd October 1922 by the defendant praying for the dismissal of the suit, and C. A. 182 of 1923, preferred on 8th January 1923, by the plaintiffs objecting to the grant of maintenance allowance and the house for residence to the defendant. When these appeals came up for hearing before a Division Bench on 26th March 1928, a preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the plaintiffs that the Sikh Gurdwaras Act 8 of 1925 having in the meantime come into force on 1st November 1925, and the Gurdwara in question having been declared to be a "Notified Sikh Gurdwara" under the provisions of that Act, the High Court had no jurisdiction to hear and dispose of the appeals, even though they had been instituted before the Act was passed. As the points raised were of considerable importance the learned Judges of the Division Bench referred the following three questions for the opinion of the Full Bench :

(1) What is the effect of the provisions of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act upon the jurisdiction of the High Court in entertaining an appeal from a decree passed in a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C., with respect to a Gurdwara when such a suit had been decided and an appeal had been preferred to the High Court against the decree of the trial Court before the Sikh Gurdwaras Act came into force ?

(2) What difference if any would it make if the Gurdwara, the subject-matter of the suit under S. 92, has been notified as a Sikh Gurdwara under the Sikh Gurdwaras Act after the decision of the trial Court but before the institution of the appeal ?

(3) In case the High Court is not competent to decide these appeals on account of the provisions of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act what further procedure should be adopted by the High Court with a view to forward the records to the tribunal constituted under the provisions of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act ?

It will be noticed that question (1) is expressed in somewhat general terms and asks us to determine the effect of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act on the jurisdiction of the High Court to deal with an appeal which was pending on 1st November 1925, against a decree passed by a subordinate Court in a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C., "with respect to a Gurdwara." Now for the purposes of the Act, Gurdwaras may, broadly speaking, be divided into three main classes :

(A) Gurdwaras included in Sch. 1 of the Act and declared to be "Notified Sikh Gurdwaras" under S. 3 (2).

(B) Gurdwaras, not included in the schedule but in respect of which proceedings have been taken under S. 7 et seq of the Act to have them declared Sikh Gurdwaras.

(C) Those which do not fall under class (A) or class (B).

The question as framed is not confined to cases falling in class (A) alone, but includes within its scope Gurdwaras of all the three classes. As the Gurdwaras with which we are concerned in this and the connected references were included in Sch. 1 and no proceedings had admittedly been taken within the prescribed period to have them excluded from it, it was decided at the hearing, with the concurrence of all parties, to limit the arguments to Gurdwaras of class (A) only. I shall accordingly discuss the matter in so far as it relates to such Gurdwaras alone and not concern myself with those which fall under class (B) or class (C).

Dr. Narang, who appeared for the plaintiffs-respondents began his arguments by boldly asserting that as a result of the enactment of the (Punjab) Act 8 of 1925 and of the Sikh Gurdwaras Supplementary Act 24 of 1925 (passed by the Central Legislature) all cases relating to Notified Sikh Gurdwaras, which were pending on 1st November 1925, in all civil Courts (including the High Court on its appellate side) became "automatically dead" and that from that date these Courts lost all power to proceed further with them and to give decisions thereon. He was, however, unable to refer us to any provision in these Acts in support of this contention, and was eventually constrained to admit that the bar applied (if at all) to the determination of certain specified matters only, which had been either conclusively settled by the legislature or the cognizance of which was transferred exclusively to the Sikh Gurdwaras Tribunal, and that subject to these limitations the Courts were competent to continue the cases pending before them. Of the sections of the Act on which reliance was placed and which will be discussed in detail presently, S. 3 (4) lays down certain presumptions, Ss. 29 and 31 prohibit the Courts from entertaining or continuing "suits" or "proceedings" in so far as they involve certain specified claims or ask for certain reliefs, and S. 32 provides the mode of enquiry into and decision on certain issues. Even if all or any of these sections were intended to govern pending appeals, they merely deprive the Courts of the power to decide the particular matters mentioned therein and cannot be taken as creating an absolute bar against the Courts proceeding with the appeals, simply because the Gurdwaras concerned had been declared to be notified Sikh Gurdwaras. Therefore, even if we were to accept the respondent's interpretation of these sections, it does not follow that the appeals have automatically come to an end, but it will be for the Court in each case to see which (if any) of the questions arising in it have been taken out of its cognizance and what reliefs, if any, it is no longer competent to grant and then to proceed to decide the remaining points in the ordinary way.

Let us now consider whether all or any of the sections relied on by the respondents apply to appeals which were pending in the High Court on 1st November 1925 when the Act came into force. Sub-S. (4), S. 3, lays down inter alia, (a) that the publication of a declaration and of a consolidated list under the provisions of sub-S. (2) shall be conclusive proof that the Gurdwara is a Sikh Gurdwara, and (b) that from the date of the publication of the notification declaring it to be a Sikh Gurdwara the provisions of Part 3 of the Act shall apply to it. In S. 41, which appears in Part 3, it is stated that the management of every Notified Sikh Gurdwara shall be administered by the committee constituted therefor, the Board, and the commission, in accordance with the provisions of this Act, and other sections in that part prescribe the machinery by which such administration is to be carried on. Now the terms of sub-S. (4), S. 3 are clear, explicit and imperative, and admit of no exception whatever. They determine conclusively the nature of certain Gurdwaras and lay down the law as to their future control and management. Pending litigation is not excluded from their purview and (provided the conditions laid down in the sub-section are fulfilled) it is not open to any Court including this Court, to determine whether or not a Notified Gurdwara is a Sikh Gurdwara or to settle a scheme for its future control and management. These two matters are, therefore, settled by the legislature and this Court cannot, go into them.

I shall next consider sub-S. (1), S. 31, on which reliance was placed on behalf of the respondents. This sub-section reads as follows :

> No Court shall continue any proceedings in so far as such proceedings involve any claim relating to a gurdwara specified in Sch. 1 or in regard to which a notification has been published under the provisions of sub-S. (2), S. 3, if such claim could have been made in a petition forwarded to the Local Government under the provisions of S. 5 or S. 6 or presented to a tribunal under the provisions of Ss. 19, 20, 21 or 27 and was not so made, unless and until such Gurdwara is deemed to be excluded from specification in Sch. 1 under the provision of S. 4.

The language used is no doubt obscure on certain points and was the subject of much discussion at the Bar, but it is clear from the portions underlined (here italicized) that this section governs only those cases in which petition could have been made to the Local Government under S. 5 or S. 6 or to the tribunal under S. 17 et seq, and were not so made. It does not apply whether either petitions could not have been made, or if they could have been made were not actually made within the period prescribed therefor. Now it was stated at the Bar by the counsel for both parties in this and the connected reference (C. A. 545 of 1925) that the parties concerned had actually presented to the Local Government petitions under S. 5 and that such petitions had been forwarded to the Tribunal for disposal. This being so S. 31(1) does not obviously apply and cannot affect the power of the High Court to proceed with these appeals.

It now remains to examine Ss. 29 and 32 of the Act and see what effect, if any, they have on the appeal before us. Before examining these sections, however, I think it necessary to point out that it is now authoritatively settled that the right of appeal is not a mere matter of procedure but is a vested right which inheres in a party from the commencement of the action in the Court of first instance. If according to the law in force at the time when the action was started in the Court of first instance the ultimate decision of such Court was appealable the right to prefer or prosecute an appeal therefrom is not affected by a subsequent change of the law abolishing the appeal or modifying its forum, unless it is so provided expressly in the amending statute or follows by necessary implication from its terms. In Colonial Sugar Refining Co. Ltd. v. Irving (1) Lord Macnaghten, delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee in a case from New South Wales, which according to the law in force at the time when the action was brought was appealable to the Privy Council, but in which under the Australian Commonwealth Judiciary Act (which had been enacted in the meantime) the appeal lay to the newly constituted Supreme Court, observed :

> The Judiciary Act is not retrospective by express enactment or by necessary intendment. And therefore the only question is : Was the appeal to His Majesty in Council a right vested in the appellants at the date of the passing of the Act, or was it a mere matter of procedure ? It seems to their Lordships that the question does not admit of doubt. To deprive a suitor in a pending action of an appeal to a superior tribunal which belonged to him as of right is a very different thing from regulating procedure. In principle, their Lordships see no difference between abolishing an appeal altogether and transferring the appeal to a new tribunal. In either case there is an interference with existing rights contrary to the well-known general principle that statutes are not to be held to act retrospectively, unless a clear intention to that effect is manifested.

It is an established canon of interpretation that "statutes should be interpreted if possible, so as to respect vested rights" Hough v. Windus (2), and in the absence of anything in an enactment to show that it is to have retrospective operation, it cannot be so construed as to have the effect of altering the law applicable to a claim in litigation at the time when the Act is passed : Leeds and County Bank v. Walker (3) and Moon v. Durden (4).

Again cases may arise (and the present seems to me to be such a case) when a statute is retrospective with regard to certain sections only and silent as to others. The rule to be followed in construing such a statute was thus explained in the House of Lords by Lord Cairns L. C., in Gardner v. Lucas (5) :

> No doubt there is, with regard to some of its sections a very clear statement that they shall apply only to instruments written after the passing of the Act ; and with regard to other sections there is an equally clear statement that those sections shall apply to things done both before and after the passing of the Act, and there is a third class of cases, of which the 38th and 39th sections are examples, in which the Act contains no clear and explicit statement of whether it is to be retrospective or merely to be prospective. But in a case of that kind your Lordships have to examine the subject-matter of the enactment of the particular section which you have to construe, to bear in mind the effect of a construction which would make it retrospective, and to ask yourselves whether it is to be supposed that that construction was intended by the legislature to be given to it. Your Lordships have further to guide and direct you, the observations which were made in this House in the case last referred to at the Bar, the case of Urquhart v. Urquhart (6), that in a matter of this nature any Court will be slow to construe an enactment as retrospective and thereby as disturbing existing rights, unless Parliament has clearly said that the enactment is to be construed retrospectively.

Based on the principle underlying the rules enunciated above, another and a subordinate rule has been laid down, that a statute is not to be construed so as to have a greater retrospective effect than its language renders necessary and that in construing "a section which is to a certain extent retrospective, the maxim ought to be borne in mind as applicable whenever the line is reached, at which the words of the section cease to be plain" (Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes, 6th edn., 382). These being the established rules of interpretation to be followed in interpreting statutes which purport to affect vested rights, let us now proceed to apply them to Ss. 29 and 32, Sikh Gurdwaras Act. It is admitted that in neither of these sections is there an express prohibition against an appellate Court proceeding to determine in a pending appeal the particular matters specified therein. The Bar applies in terms to "suits" or "proceedings" and not to "appeals." It has, however, been contended on behalf of the respondents that an appeal is in reality a continuation of the suit, in which the decree under appeal was passed by the Court of the first instance, and, therefore, the sections must be held to include in their ambit, if not expressly at least by necessary implication, the entire litigation beginning with the filing of the plaint or the making of the initial application in the trial Court, and ending with the decision of the Court of ultimate appeal or revision. In support of this contention reliance was placed on Gobind Chundar Roy v. Guru Churan (7), Dinonath Ghose v. Shama Bibi (8), Settappa Goundan v. Muthia Goundan (9), Kristama Chariar v. Mangam Mal (10), Atchayya v. Seetharamachandra (11) and Rustomji v. Official Liquidator, People's and Amritsar Banks, Ltd. (12). In the the first three of these cases the question involved was whether, in reference to S. 52, T. P. Act, the rule of lis pendens applied to the period between the passing of the decree of the trial Court and the institution of the appeal therefrom. The fourth case interpreted Art. 179, Limitation Act, 1877 and the fifth dealt with S. 115, Civil P. C. In the last case it was laid down that orders passed by the trial Court can be appealed against only by a person who was a party to the litigation before it. The provisions of the law, which the Courts had to interpret in these cases are in no way similar to those of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act and the remarks made therein were not intended to be of universal application but had reference to the particular matter dealt with in each case.

Per contra it is possible to cite an equally large number of cases in which a narrower meaning has been attached to the word "suit" as denoting the stage of the litigation before the Court of the first instance, beginning with the filing of the plaint and ending with the decree or final order passed by such Court: see for example Mrs. B. Baness v. Turton (13), Dhonessur Kooer v. Roy Gooder Sahay (14), Watkins v. Fox (15) and the observations in Mt. Lachhmi v. Mt. Bhulli (16).

Similarly the word "proceeding" has been held in some enactments to include appeals: Ratan Chand Shri Chand v. Hanmantaray Shivbakas (17), but in others it has been given a narrower meaning. An instructive case of the latter class is Hood Barrs v. Cathcart (18) where the expression "action or proceeding instituted" in S. 2, Married Women's Property Act (56 and 57 Vict C. 63, S. 2) was interpreted as an action or proceedings ejusdem generis in a Court of first instance, "in which the married woman was the actor," and it was definitely ruled that it did not include an appeal preferred by her from an order passed against her by the trial Court in a lis in which she was the defendant. This decision was approved by the House of Lords in Hood Barrs v. Heriot (19). Reference may also be made in this connexion to the judgment of Jessel, M. R, in Holme v. Guy (20), where a similar interpretation was put on the expression 'suit, petition or other proceedings' in S. 2, (English) Charitable Trust Act, 1853.

An examination of these and other cases leads to the conclusion that "suit" "proceeding" and words of similar connotation have different meanings in different statutes and that it is not possible to lay down a general rule of interpretation which would be applicable to all cases. In each particular case the question has to be examined in reference to the context and that meaning is to be preferred which will best fit in with it.

I have given my most careful consideration to the phraseology used in Ss. 29 and 32 and have examined it in reference to other parts of the Act, and have reached the conclusion that the word "suit or proceeding" must be construed in a narrow sense as signifying an action in the trial Court or proceedings ejusdem generis and cannot be held to include appeals. Taking S. 32 first we find it laid down that where in any suit or proceeding pending at the commencement of the Act, in a civil or revenue Court it has become or becomes necessary to decide any claim in connexion with a Notified Sikh Gurdwara which the Court finds might be made under the provisions of Ss. 3, 5, 6, 7, 10, 11, 19, 20, 21 or 27 within the time prescribed therein the Court shall frame an issue in respect of such claim and shall forward the record of the suit or proceeding to a tribunal and thereupon the tribunal shall proceed to hear and determine the issue and record its decision in the form of an order and shall return the record with a copy of its decision to the Court and the Court shall proceed to determine the suit or proceeding in accordance with such decision subject to the provisions of S. 34. In my opinion the procedure laid down in this section was not and could not have been intended to govern appeals, which were pending in the High Court or other appellate Courts on the day the Act came into force. The Tribunals constituted under the Act are admittedly Courts of original jurisdiction and have no appellate powers, and if the intention was to invest them with jurisdiction to deal with matter arising in pending appeals such intention should have been expressed more clearly and explicitly than has been done in S. 32.

Again, the principal function of an appellate Court is to review (subject to O. 41, R. 27, etc.) the evidence recorded by the trial Court and to give its own findings thereon. But if the contention of the respondents were accepted the appellate Court dealing with matters mentioned in S. 32 must ignore the evidence given at the trial of the suit which is under appeal before it, and irrespective of the wishes of the parties, it must frame an issue and submit it to the Tribunal for determination, and after the Tribunal has given its finding thereon and returned the record to the appellate Court, it must (subject to the provisions of S. 34) decide the matter accordingly, without itself considering the evidence and seeing if the conclusions arrived at by the Tribunal are correct or not. In other words, the appellate Court, which is seized of the case, has not to apply its own mind to the matter but (so far as these issues are concerned) it must merely act as a ministerial functionary of the Tribunal, and decide in accordance with the findings recorded by the latter. And the position will be exactly the same whether the appellate Court is the High Court, to which the Tribunal is admittedly subordinate, or an inferior appellate Court like that of the District Judge or the Senior Sub-Judge, and whether the appeal is before the High Court as a first or second appeal or has been filed under the Letters Patent against a decree passed by a single Judge of the Court itself.

In cases in which the order of the Tribunal has been appealed against under S. 34, there will be simultaneously pending in the High Court two appeals, arising out of the same suit one against the decree of the Sub-Judge and the other against the order of the Tribunal. In one of them the Court has to adjudicate on the findings of the Tribunal on the issues referred to it, and in the other it has virtually no judicial functions to perform so far as the matters covered by the issues are concerned. It is conceded that such a position is highly anomalous and incovenient and may at times lead to serious complications. In these circumstances, I am not, in the absence of clear words to the contrary, prepared to hold that S. 32 applies to appeals.

The phraseology used in S. 29 is similar to that in S. 32 and on similar considerations " suit or proceedings " in that section must be given the same meaning. Indeed it seems to me that the respondent's contention, if accepted with regard to this section, will lead to even greater anomalies. Take for instance a case like the one before us, in which the defendant was removed from his office as Mahant of the Gurdwara at Gur Sar Sutlani in due course of law, in execution of a decree which had been passed by a competent Court long before the Act came into force. Against this decree an appeal having been preferred, the whole case had once more become res sub judice and a duty was cast on the appellate Court to see if the trial Court had come to correct conclusions on the questions involved, including the question whether the appellant had been rightly removed from office. Let us assume, for the sake of argument, that the decision of the trial Court on this point was palpably erroneous, and on the evidence and under the law in force at the time, the appellant ought not to have been removed. Now if this Court cannot on appeal look into the matter and point out the error of the lower Court, its finding must stand unreversed, and as a result thereof the appellant will be deprived of the benefit of S. 134 and other provisions of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act to which he would have, but for the trial Court's (admittedly erroneous) decree, been entitled as a " present hereditary office holder " of a Notified Sikh Gurdwara. Indeed it seems to me, that he would have occupied a far better position if the plaintiffs-respondents instead of having him removed through Court in a suit under S. 92 had taken the law into their own hands and forcibly ejected him. For in that case he or his " presumptive successor " would have been entitled to claim compensation under S. 6, but to which they are not even entitled in view of the decision of the lower Court. That this is not a mere fanciful argument is clear from the fact, admitted by both parties at the hearing, that the appellant (ex-Mahant Kirpa Ram) had actually applied for compensation under S. 6 to the Tribunal, but his application was rejected in limine on the ground that the section was inapplicable, as he had not been " unlawfully " dispossessed. In this view of the case the appellate Court is debarred from undoing the mischief done by the erroneous order under appeal. With all these startling consequences staring us in the face I am not prepared to hold that the legislature intended, as if it were by a side wind and without expressing itself more clearly than it has done, to effect so material a change in the jurisdiction and powers of the appellate Courts, including the High Court, to deal with matters properly pending before them. As pointed out by Jassell, M. R., in Jacobs v. Brett (21):

> Nothing is better settled than that an act of Parliament which takes away the jurisdiction of a superior Court of law must be expressed in clear terms. I do not mean to say that it may not be done by necessary implication as well as by express words, but at all events it must be done clearly. It is not to be assumed that the legislature intends to destroy the jurisdiction of a superior Court. You must find the intention not merely implied, but necessarily implied.

In my opinion, S. 29 is no bar to this Court deciding the question whether the appellant had been properly removed by the trial Court, though it may be that in view of S. it may not be possible for it to grant to the appellant all the reliefs claimed by him. I would, therefore, hold that neither S. 29 nor S. 32 applies to pending appeals.

The foregoing discussion deals with questions (1) and (3). Question (2) as framed, does not really arise in this or the connected references, as it contemplates a case in which a Gurdwara has been notified as a Sikh Gurdwara after the decree of the trial Court but before the institution of the appeal. Both, the Gurdwara at Gur Sar Sutlani and the Dharamsala Bhai Abnasha Singh at Wazirabad, were admittedly notified after the institution of the appeals. It is, therefore, not necessary to examine this question in any detail, but having regard to the views expressed above, the position in such a case will for all practical purposes be the same as in cases in which a notification had issued during the pendency of the appeal.

To sum up: my answer to the questions referred is as follows :

(1) The enactment of the Sikh Gurdwaras Act and the issue of a notification under the provisions of the said Act declaring a Gurdwara to be a Sikh Gurdwara do not bar the jurisdiction of the High Court to deal with an appeal against the decree of a subordinate Court passed in a suit under S. 92, Civil P. C., in respect of the Gurdwara, which appeal was pending when the Act came into force or the notification was issued. The High Court must hear and decide the appeal though in view of the imperative provisions of S. 3 it may not be possible for it to grant all the reliefs claimed. Under that section it is not open to the Court to go into the question whether or not the Gurdwara is a Sikh Gurdwara nor can it settle a scheme of management in respect of such a Gurdwara. (2) This question does not arise in this reference. (3) The procedure laid down in S. 32 is applicable to " suits " or " proceedings " ejusdem generis pending in a Court of first instance and does not govern a pending appeal, even if all or some of the matters mentioned in that section arise for decision in the appeal.

J. L. Kapur—for Petitioner.

Kahn Chand—for Respondents.

Judgment.—It was alleged in the plaint that the respondent agreed to sell his land assessed at four annas per annum as land revenue to the plaintiff for Rs. 22,300. The defendant having declined to carry out the contract to sell, the suit out of which these proceedings have arisen for specific performance and possession of the land, was filed by the plaintiff. The suit was valued for the purposes of Court-fee at Rs. 3-8-0 and for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 10. On an objection being taken by the defendant as to the valuation of the suit the trial Court held that the valuation by the plaintiff was correct. It finally dismissed the suit on its merits.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge who held that the proper value for the purposes of Court fee and jurisdiction should have been Rs. 22,300, that is, the price agreed to be paid for the land, and that he had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal according to such valuation and therefore he returned the memorandum of appeal for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiff thereupon filed an appeal in this Court.

The first ground of appeal is directed against the order of the District Judge returning the memorandum of appeal on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. The remaining grounds of appeal are directed against the decree of the trial Court, dismissing the suit on its merits. Various objections to this appeal were taken before me by the respondent's counsel. The first objection was that no appeal lay to this Court from the order of the District Judge, returning the memorandum of appeal. Mr. Jiwan Lal Kapur, who appeared for the appellant, thereupon asked me to treat these proceedings as a petition for revision from the order of the District Judge. This course necessarily eliminated from consideration by me of the grounds of appeal Nos. 2 to 7. I permitted the appellant to treat this as a petition for revision and proceeded to decide the question whether the view of the District Judge that he had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal was correct.

This view is directly supported by a judgment of a Division Bench of this Court reported in Fakir Chand v. Ram Datt (1) and is further supported by Sundararamanujam Naidu v. Sivalingam Pillai (2). Both these authorities are to the effect that in a suit for specific performance of contract for sale of land the proper valuation is the price agreed to be paid for the same. Following these authorities I hold that the appeal did not lie to the District Judge and consequently his view is correct. The counsel for the petitioner sought to distinguish Fakir Chand v. Ram Datt (1) on the ground that no prayer for possession had been made in the reported case, whereas there was a prayer for possession in this case and he cited Gopal Das v. Paramanand (3) and Nathe Khan v. Mahomed Khan (4) both of which are Single Bench judgments of this Court. They have been fully discussed in Sundararamanuja Naidu v. Sivalingam Pillai (2); moreover I must follow the judgment in Fakir Chand v. Ram Datt (1).

Mr Kapur, however, contended that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to decide the question of valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction and that he could only decide the question of valuation for purposes of Court-fee. Under S. 8, Suits Valuation Act, the valuation for purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction in a case like the present must be the same. The District Judge was bound to decide first whether he had jurisdiction to hear the appeal and in doing so he had necessarily to decide the valuation both for purposes of Court-fee as well. This is what he has done in this case. I am unable to see any force in the contention of the learned counsel that the District Judge was not entitled to decide the question of jurisdiction. I hold that the view of the District Judge is correct and that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. The consequence is that this petition must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 308 of 1927, Decided on 28th November 1927, from order of Dist. Judge, Karnal, D/- 7th February 1927.

Civil P. C., S. 152—Errors arising from accidental slips.

Where in a decree passed in favour of a mortgagee the Court omitted to mention that the amount was recoverable only by sale of the mortgaged property and where subsequently an application was made by the mortgagor to add the words " by sale of the house mortgaged " to the judgment and the decree.

Held: that the words " by sale of the house mortgaged " could be added to the judgment and decree as they were omitted by an accidental slip. [P 637 C 1]

Shamair Chand—for Petitioners.

Nawal Kishore—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a petition for revision of the order of the District Judge. Karnal, ordering under S. 152, Civil P. C., amendment of a decree passed by his predecessor two years before.

The relevant facts are that Khuda Bakhsh and Tulli mortgaged a house to one Ulfat Ram. Ulfat Ram died childless and was succeeded by his reversioners Relu Mal, etc. (petitioners). In the meantime the mortgagors had sold the equity of redemption to Maru Mal, respondent, and had authorized him to redeem the mortgage from Ulfat Ram's heirs. Nothing having been paid to the mortgagees, Relu Mal, etc., instituted a suit for recovery of the amount due to them on foot of the mortgage praying that the amount found due to them be realized by sale of the mortgaged property. No prayer for a personal decree against the purchasers of the equity of redemption was made. The trial Court passed a decree for Rs. 308 with proportionate costs in favour of Relu Mal, etc., against the then defendants, Maru Mal etc., with the reservation that the decretal amount should be realized by the sale of the house mortgaged.

Maru Mal, etc., preferred an appeal to the District Judge (Mr. Skemp) praying for reduction of the amount found payable by the trial Court. The District Judge went though the accounts and reduced the amount to Rs. 274-8-0, but in the judgment he omitted to mention that the amount was recoverable only by sale of the mortgaged property. The concluding portion of his judgment runs as follows:

The decree of this Court is to state that the mortgagees, Relu Mal, Shugan Chand, Ratan Lal, plaintiffs, and Jai Lal, defendant, are entitled to realize the sum of Rs. 274-8-0 from Maru Mal defendant.

A decree was prepared in accordance with this judgment. No second appeal was preferred by either party. Two years later Maru Mal, etc., applied to the District Judge (Mr. Sri Ram) to amend the judgment and the decree by adding the words at the end " by sale of the house mortgaged," so that it might be made clear that the amount is not recoverable from the judgment-debtors personally but should only be realized by sale of the property mortgaged. This application was granted by the District Judge and he directed that the words mentioned above be added to the decree.

Mr. Shamair Chand, who appears on behalf of the decree-holder Relu Mal contends that the learned District Judge has added these words to the decree but not in the judgment, and therefore the decree is not in accordance with the judgment. This is correct, but there is no doubt that it was due to a mere oversight on the part of the District Judge (Mr. Sri Ram). I accordingly direct that the words " by sale of the house mortgaged" be added to the judgment also.

Mr. Shamai Chand's, main argument, however, is that the learned District Judge was not justified in adding these words either in the judgment or in the decree under S. 152 and that such an amendment could only be made either on second appeal to this Court or on a properly constituted application for review filed before the District Judge. There is, however, no force in this contention. S. 152 authorizes a Court to correct not only clerical or arithmetical mistakes in judgments, decrees, or orders, but also errors arising therein from accidental slips or omissions. After going through the judgment of Mr. Skemp I have no doubt whatsoever that these words were omitted by an accidental slip and the judgment and decree passed by him could be amended under S. 152, Civil P. C.

I therefore see no force in this revision and dismiss it with the modification that the words "by sale of the house mortgaged" be added to the judgment of Mr. Skemp dated 8th January 1924. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case I leave the parties to bear their own costs in both Courts.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 185 of 1928, Decided on 23rd April 1928, from order of Sess. Judge, Multan, D/- 20th August 1926.

* Penal Code, S. 411—Accused in possession of property identified as belonging to different owners—He should not be convicted of more than one offence under S. 411 unless there is evidence to prove that they were received by him at different times.

A person who is found in possession of properties identified as belonging to different owners should not be convicted of several offences of receiving in respect of the property identified by each owner unless the prosecution proves that they were received by him at different times. It is not for the accused to prove that the act of receiving was only one: 15 All. 317; *A. I. Raj Krishna—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner was convicted of three different offences under S. 411, I. P. C., by the 1st Class Magistrate on 8th April 1926, and was sentenced to six years' rigorous imprisonment in addition to a fine of Rs. 200 to be followed by six years' police surveillance under S. 565, Criminal P. C. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge maintained the three convictions under S. 411, I. P. C., but reduced the sentences to one year, two years and one years' rigorous imprisonment, total four years, to be followed by six years' police surveillance under S 565, Criminal P. C., that is, two years for each offence. I admitted this revision as it seemed to me that a person who was found in possession of cattle identified as belonging to different owners should not be convicted of several offences of receiving in respect of the property identified by each owner unless there was evidence to prove that they were received by him at different times. The petitioner was found with the stolen cattle of three different persons shortly after the thefts of the cattle had occurred. There was no other evidence against him and nothing to show that there were three distinct acts of receiving the stolen cattle.

I find that there is a Full Bench decision of the Punjab Chief Court, Pars Ram v. Manja Khan (1), which took the view that it was for the accused to establish that there was only one act of receiving when he was found with property forming the subject-matter of different thefts. This Full Bench decision dissented from a previous Division Bench decision, Kanhya v. Ganesha (2). The Sind Court has taken the same view as that expressed in the Full Bench decision of the Punjab Chief Court: see Ghulamo v. Emperor (3). The Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts have taken the other view. The Allahabad decisions are Queen-Empress v. Makhan (4) and Emperor v. Sheo Charan (5) and the Calcutta decisions are, Ishan Muchi v. Queen-Empress (6) and Ganesh Sahu v. Emperor (7). It seems to me that the correct view is that the prosecution must establish its case and that it was, therefore, for the prosecution to establish that there were three different acts of receiving. No case, following, the Full Bench decision of the Punjab Chief Court, can be traced and I know that the practice of this Court of late years has been to follow the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts' view. With very great respect I wish to say that my view is the same as that taken by the learned Judges of the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts.

In any case it was laid down in the Punjab Chief Court's Full Bench decision that Magistrates would be wise not to inflict aggregate sentences amounting to more than the maximum for the offence, that is three years. This view may have been expressed because the learned Judges had some doubt as to the proper view to be taken of the law. I, therefore, accept these three petitions and in modification of the order of the learned Sessions Judge convict the petitioner of one offence only under S. 411, I. P. C. The petitioner has already been for more than two years in jail. I, therefore, reduce the sentence of imprisonment to that already undergone. I also reduce the period of police surveillance under S. 565, Criminal P.C., to two years in all.

Judgment. — The petitioner Sarab Dial brought a complaint under Ss. 426, 379, 147 and 448, I. P. C., against Bir Singh and six other persons. The learned trial Magistrate recorded the statement of the complainant and held it to be false. He accordingly discharged the accused persons and, while passing the order of discharge, he called upon the petitioner to show cause why he should not pay compensation to the accused. After he had shown cause the learned Magistrate passed an order directing him to pay a sum of Rs. 50 to each of the accused as compensation, or in default, to undergo simple imprisonment for one month. The petitioner preferred (a) a petition for revision to the learned Sessions Judge against the order of discharge and (b) an appeal under S. 250 (3) against the order directing him to pay compensation to the accused. The learned Sessions Judge dismissed the petition for revision and held that no appeal lay to his Court as the amount of compensation ordered to be paid to each accused individually did not exceed Rs. 50.

The complainant has come up to this Court on the revision side and has prayed for the setting aside of the order of discharge as well as has urged that the learned Sessions Judge was in error in holding that no appeal lay against the order directing him to pay compensation to the accused. The second of these prayers is well founded and must, in my opinion, succeed. Having regard to the fact that the aggregate amount of compensation payable to the accused was Rs. 350, an appeal clearly lay to the Sessions Court. Reference may in this connexion be made to A. M. Pereira v. D. P. Demello (1) and Sumaria v. Emperor (2). I hold, therefore, that the order in question was appealable to the Sessions Court. As the complaint had been jointly brought against all the seven accused persons it was not necessary for them to file separate appeals. I therefore accept the petition for revision and, setting aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge, send back the case to him for disposal in accordance with law.

As the question whether the complaint was false, frivolous and vexatious may have to be considered again by the learned Sessions Judge, I do not think it proper to decide whether the order of discharge was proper or not. The learned Sessions Judge may, if he thinks fit, go into the matter again and decide whether the order discharging the accused should be affirmed or set aside and further enquiry ordered.

Second Appeal No. 1042 of 1927, Decided on 2nd February 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Lahore, D/- 24th March 1927.

Civil P. C., O. 39, R. 1—Alienation in violation of a prohibitory order is not void though the alienator may be liable in contempt of Court—Contempt.

It is clear law that an alienation effected in violation of a prohibitory order is not void though the person who alienates it may be liable for action in contempt of Court or damages. [P 639 C 2]

Gobind Kam Khanna—for Appellant.

Judgment.—In this suit the plaintiff sued for possession of certain land, Khasra No. 1604, measuring 22 kanals 5 marlas, which he alleged, belonged to one Sundar Singh and had been exchanged by Sundar Singh for the plaintiff's field, Khasra No. 186, measuring 17 kanals, by a registered deed of exchange dated 19th January 1924. The plaintiff alleged that he had given possession of Khasra No. 186 to Sundar Singh but Sundar Singh did not give him possession of Khasra No. 1604, that Sundar Singh had sold 22 kanals out of the said khasra to Makhan Singh, Wasan Singh and others on 28th January 1924, that the land having been already exchanged with the plaintiff Sundar Singh had no right to sell the land to Makhan Singh, etc., and hence the plaintiff's suit for possession.

Only three defendants Wasan Singh, Boga Singh and Narain Singh defended the suit. They alleged that the plaintiff was not the owner of Khasra No. 186 and, therefore, could not exchange it. They secondly contended that the land of Sundar Singh was under attachment in a suit brought by themselves against Sundar Singh and, therefore, the exchange, if any, was void as against them.

The trial Court held that the plaintiff was the owner of the land, Khasra No. 186, because his brothers, who had been entered as co-owners with him in the jamabandi admitted that by private partition this khasra had fallen to plaintiff's share. It further held that there was no attachment as pleaded by the defendants, but a prohibitory order had been served on Sundar Singh forbidding him to alienate the land. There is nothing to show that the present plaintiff had any notice of this prohibitory order. Accordingly the trial Court held that the exchange effected by Sundar Singh was not void and as it was prior to the sale by Sundar Singh to the defendants, which took place in execution of a decree obtained by the defendants against Sundar Singh, therefore, the plaintiff was entitled to possession, and decreed the suit.

On appeal the learned District Judge held that the private partition between Hakim Singh, plaintiff, and his brothers was not proved because the entry in the jamabandi was against any private partition. It is not clear what the learned District Judge deduced this fact from. The only co-owners of Hakim Singh, plaintiff, assuming that they were co-owners, had denied their title to the land. At the very best, even assuming that they wrongly denied their title, they must be held to be ratifying the exchange by Hakim Singh and I, therefore, fail to see why the learned District Judge in the first place disbelieved their allegations of a private partition, and secondly what deduction against the plaintiff could be drawn from it. The learned District Judge then proceeded to hold that the execution file showed that the judgment-debtor believed that his property was attached and that the temporary injunction amounted to an order of attachment of his property. After reading the execution record I fail entirely to see on what ground this assumption is based. But even assuming that it was correct I fail to see how the belief of the judgment-debtor affected the rights of the present plaintiff. Nowhere does the learned District Judge find that the present plaintiff had notice of the prohibitory order.

It is clear law that an alienation effected in violation of a prohibitory order is not void though the person who alienates it may be liable for action in contempt of Court or damages. The learned District Judge further admitted in appeal a mutation order whose bearing is not at all clear to me. In it the Tahsildar had held, when the mutation arising from the sale by Sundar Singh to Wasan Singh, etc., came up, that there had been an exchange by Sundar Singh prior to this sale. I do not find that the Tahsil-dar anywhere held that this prior exchange was a bogus one, nor do I see how the order of the Tahsildar was relevant in this case, nor do I see any reason why it should have been admitted in appeal.

I therefore accept the appeal and decree the plaintiff's suit. In the circumstances I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 1352 of 1927, Decided on 5th December 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Gujranwala, D/- 19th February 1927.

Evidence Act, S. 35—Register not prepared by public servant, though kept in Deputy Commissioner's record room is inadmissible.

House registers not prepared by any Government Officer, or by any public servant whose duty it was to prepare them, though kept in the record room of the Deputy Commissioner, are inadmissible in evidence. Niaz Mahammad—for Appellant.

G. C. Narang—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by certain inhabitants of Wazirabad with regard to a drinking well situated in that town, claiming that the well was constructed by their ancestors and had been dedicated to the use of the public, and that the defendant had no right to sell it which he intended to do. The trial Court, finding that the plaintiffs had failed to establish their claim, dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned District Judge allowed the plaintiffs to produce additional evidence, documentary as well as oral, and mainly on the strength of an entry in the register of houses that was thus received in evidence he came to the contrary conclusion and decreed the plaintiffs' suit.

On behalf of the defendant-appellant it is urged that there was no good ground for admitting additional evidence and that the register in question was inadmissible in evidence not being a public document or a document prepared by a Government officer in the discharge of his official duty. The first objection is untenable. The learned District Judge had a discretion in the matter which he does not appear to have exercised unjudicially.

As regards the second the said register of houses was prepared in 1856 and again in 1866 and in both the well in dispute was shown as "shamilat shahr." Now the question is: Was the register a public document as defined in S. 74, Evidence Act, or was it an official book falling within the purview of S. 35 of that Act? There is no evidence to show that the registers were prepared by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty. The registers are kept in the record room of the Deputy Commissioner's office at Gujranwala, but the mere fact that they are kept in a public office does not lead to the inference that they are public documents. In Nittyanund Roy v. Abdar Raheem (1) a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that certain measurement records produced from the Collectorate were not public documents within the meaning of S. 74 where there was nothing to show that they were the record of measurements made by any Government officer. As already stated, there is nothing to show that these registers were prepared by any Government officer, or by any public servant whose duty it was to prepare them. Nor is there anything to show that the entries therein were made after due enquiry so that a presumption of correctness should attach to them. This being so, they are inadmissible in evidence.

The learned District Judge based his finding mainly on the said entries. It cannot be divined what his finding would have been if he had excluded them from consideration.

I, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court and remand the case for re-decision of the appeal on the basis of the evidence on the record that is admissible. The costs to abide the event.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 313 of 1927, Decided on 3rd February 1928, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Layallpur, D/- 5th February 1927.

Where an alleged partner of a lessee of land for one year filed a suit against the lessee for the recovery of the earnest-money paid by him, as the latter failed to pay him his share in the produce:

Held, that the suit did not fall under S. 77 (3) (k), Punjab Tenancy Act, but was cognizable by a civil Court.

Ram Chand Manchanda — for Petitioner.

Muhammad Akbar—for Respondent.

Judgment. — The plaintiff in this case alleged that he was a partner with one Ganga Ram who had taken on lease squares of land from Khan Bahadur Bahadur Shah for one year for Rs. 4,900. The plaintiff had become a partner in this enterprise and he had, therefore, paid Rs. 300 to the defendant by way of earnest-money. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant had not given him his share of the produce and he brought this suit for the recovery of this earnest-money of Rs. 300 and interest thereon.

The trial Court decreed the suit for Rs. 477 giving interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per mensem. The appellate Court modified the decree and gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 300 only with proportionate costs, the costs of the appeal being borne by the parties.

In revision it is urged that the suit was a suit cognizable only by a revenue Court because it falls under S. 77 (3) (k), Tenancy Act. I do not see how this clause at all governs this class of suits. Sundar Singh v. Kesar Singh (1) is cited as authority in support of the proposition. That was not a case of partnership between two tenants and the reasoning is based on the definition of the term "landowner" including every person other than a tenant or assignee of land revenue. Ganga Ram was clearly only a tenant and not a landowner. Counsel admits that he was a lessee, but says there is some distinction between being a tenant and a lessee. He had not been able to explain to me what this distinction is. Further the suit is not for a share of the produce and, therefore, the clause does not apply; nor has the ruling Sundar Singh v. Kesar Singh (1) got any bearing on the point.

I, therefore, dismiss the revision with costs,

Second Appeal No. 2037 of 1927, Decided on 2nd February 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Amritsar, D/- 1st June 1927.

Civil P. C., O. 17, R. 1—Party undertaking to produce his own witnesses—Witnesses not produced—Court is not bound to give further extension of time.

Where a plaintiff has undertaken the burden of producing his own witnesses, it is not for the Court to give him further extension of time if owing to some circumstances he finds himself in a position in which he cannot produce those witnesses. [P 642 C 1]

B. D. Qureshi—for Appellant.

Ram Lal Anand—for Respondent.

Judgment.—In this suit issues were struck on the 25th January 1927, and the 23rd February 1927 was fixed for evidence. The plaintiff asked for one witness, namely, the defendant, and put in process-fee for him. On the 23rd the Mukhtar of the plaintiff stated that he did not wish to examine the defendant as his witness. On the same day he put in an application stating that he had hoped to bring his witnesses with him but he had been engaged in another case on the 21st, 22nd and 23rd, and, therefore, had not been able to go to this village to fetch the witnesses. He also stated in the application that certain persons against whom a case had been brought under S. 417, I. P. C. were preventing his witnesses from attending and, therefore, he asked that the witnesses might now be summoned by process of.

Court. The trial Court held that there was no sufficient reason for granting the application and, as the plaintiff had produced no evidence and the burden of two issues struck was on her, it, therefore, dismissed the suit.

On appeal the learned District Judge also dismissed the appeal holding that the mukhtar, even if he was busy on the 21st, 22nd and 23rd, could have made arrangements for the production of his witnesses.

In second appeal it has been contended that it was an unforeseen circumstance, namely, the fixing of the date in the criminal hearing for the 21st, 22nd, etc., which prevented the mukhtar from going to fetch his witnesses and that the plaintiff's case is a good one because the khana shumari papers and certain receipts, some of which are alleged to be in the handwriting of the defendant, would prove the plaintiff's case. So far as the khana shumari papers are concerned, the patwari could not have been brought by the plaintiff's mukhtar with him and would have had to be summoned in any case; and as the plaintiff had never thought of summoning him, I see no reason why she should be allowed to summon him now.

As regards the so-called receipts, these were documents which were in the possession of the plaintiff, and there is no reason why they were not put in on or before the first hearing in compliance with the provisions of O. 13, R. 1, Civil P. C. In the circumstances, therefore, it seems to me that as the plaintiff had undertaken the burden of producing her own witnesses it was not for the Court to give her further extension of time because owing to some circumstances about which I may add there is no affidavit on the record at all, she found herself in a position in which she could not produce those witnesses.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment.*—On 8th March 1925 the appellant obtained a decree for Rs. 66,924-12-0 together with interest at 9 per cent. from the date of suit till realization and costs against the defendant. The decree was transferred to Lyallpur for execution. Certain sums were paid by the judgment-debtor to the decree-holder in discharge of the decree but, while making the payments, the judgment-debtor did not specify whether the payments were to be appropriated towards interest or the principal. The decree-holder claimed that he had appropriated these payments first towards interest and the surplus towards the principal. The judgment-debtor's contention was that the payments should have first been appropriated towards the principal.

On 2nd January 1926 an application signed by counsel for both parties was filed, stating that they had gone through the accounts and had agreed that the total sum due to the decree-holder on that date was Rs. 25,030 besides interest that had accrued due from 14th May 1925. This settlement was certified before the Court on that date and the execution proceedings proceeded on that basis. Further payments were made subsequent to that date, and on 7th October 1926 another application was presented signed by the judgment-debtor's mukhtar and the decree-holder's counsel Lala Ram Lal stating that they had mutually settled the accounts and Rs. 13,895 was the sum due to the decree-holder on that date to which was to be added interest on the principal amount from 16th June 1926. The decree-holder's pleader Lala Ram Lal, while signing this application, wrote that he had done so at the request of one Sardar Narain Singh. On 12th November 1925, Sardar Narain Singh styling himself as the mukhtar of the decree-holder filed an application through Lala Ram Lal stating that the application of 7th October had been filed under a misapprehension and that Lala Ram Lal had signed it on the authority of Sardar Narain Singh who was not the duly authorized agent of the decree-holder on that date but who had been given a power-of-attorney on 1st November 1926. The decree-holder also wanted to go back upon the settlement of 2nd January 1926, and applied that the accounts from the beginning should be gone into de novo and the payments made, be appropriated first towards interest and then towards the principal. This contention was repelled by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge who held that the plaintiff was bound by the settlements which had been duly certified by his counsel on 2nd January and 7th October 1926.

An appeal has been preferred to this Court by the decree-holder and Mr. Mohsin Shah has contended that as at the time of making the various payments the judgment-debtor had not stated that the payments were on account of interest or principal the decree-holder was entitled under the law to appropriate them first towards the interest and then to apply the surplus towards the principal. This proposition is not controverted by Mr. Gobind Das who appears for the judgment-debtor but he argues that the question does not arise in the present proceedings. The real question is whether the appellant, decree-holder, is entitled to go back from the settlements which were duly certified by his counsel. Mr. Mohsin Shah urges that accounts once settled can be reopened on the ground of error or fraud. In this case, however, no fraud is alleged nor has any error been pointed out except in the mode of appropriation and the dispute between the parties as to that matter had been duly settled by them by compromise in the Court below. On the present record no valid reason has been shown for going behind these settlements. As regards the application of 2nd January 1926 Mr. Mohsin Shah has not been able to urge any valid argument for upsetting it, but, as to the settlement of 7th October 1926, he has contended that the decree-holder had not agreed to it personally, and his counsel Mr. Ram Lal signed the document on the authority of Narain Singh who was not the duly authorized agent of the appellant on that date. In my opinion this contention has no force. Mr. Ram Lal had been engaged by the appellant to conduct the case for him and the vakalatnama given to him clearly authorized him to enter into a compromise on behalf of the appellant. The fact that he acted on instructions from Narain Singh and not from the decree-holder himself does not affect the matter in any way. Moreover, it is significant that this very Narain Singh who is alleged to have acted without authority on 7th October 1926, was formally appointed mukhtar by the decree-holder on 1st November 1926, and it was he who instructed Lala Ram Lal to file an application on 12th November 1926 to repudiate the settlement which Lala Ram had made under his instructions. On these facts the decree-holder-appellant has obviously made out no case to go behind the settlement of 7th October 1926. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Moti Sagar and Mohsin Shah — for Appellants.

Zafrulla Khan and Bashir Ahmad— for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs' suit for possession of land was decreed by the Subordinate Judge on 30th November 1925 and the defendants preferred an appeal to the District Judge, Lahore, on 8th January 1926, i. e., on the 39th day after the delivery of the judgment of the trial Court. The plaintiffs-respondents objected that the appellants were entitled to an extension of eight days only on account of the time spent in obtaining copies of the judgment and decree appealed against and that the appeal was out of time by one day. This objection was upheld by the learned Additional District Judge (L. Topan Ram) who was of opinion that no sufficient cause for extending time under S. 5, Lim. Act, had been made out. The defendants have preferred a second appeal to this Court and two questions have been argued before me.

It is contended by Mr. Mohsin Shah for the appellants that the learned Additional District Judge should have in the peculiar circumstances of this case held that the appeal had been presented within time and secondly that even if this Court agreed with the view taken by him that the appeal had been filed beyond the period of limitation, it should be held that the learned Additional District Judge has not exercised his discretion according to sound judicial principles in refusing to extend time under S. 5.

As regards the first of these contentions Mr. Mohsin Shah's contention is that the application for the copy of the trial Court's judgment was made on 9th December 1925 and that for the copy of the decree was made on 14th December 1925, that both these copies were as a matter of fact completed on 23rd December 1925 and were delivered to his clients on that date. He, therefore, claims that he is entitled as of right to deduct the period from 9th December to the 23rd December, (i. e., 15 days) under S. 12, Lim. Act. The endorsements on the copies of the judgment and the decree of the trial Court, which the defendants-appellants actually filed with the memorandum of appeal in the District Court show, however, that the former was completed on 16th December and the latter on 15th. According to these dates the appellants were entitled to deduct eight days only and this is the period which has been allowed to them by the Additional District Judge. An examination of the endorsements on the copies shows that the revising and attesting officer of the copying department had not complied with R. 17, Cl. (2), printed at p. 34, Vol. 3 of the rules and orders of this Court, in as much as he had not entered on the last page the date on which he attested the copies nor did he give the date on each sheet of the judgment as he should have done. This defect led the defendants to contend that the endorsements by the copyists on the copies showing that they had been completed on 15th and 16th December 1925 respectively, were incorrect and that the copies had really been completed on 23rd. Accordingly the office of the District Judge called for a report from the officer in charge of the copying department to state on what date the copies had actually been attested. The said officer in turn called for a report from the copyist concerned and on 17th February 1926 he reported to the District Judge that the copy of the decree was ready on 15th and that of the judgment on 16th December. Along with his own report he sent the report which had been submitted to him by the copyist.

On the case coming up before the Additional District Judge on 31st March 1926 an objection was raised on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents that the appeal was barred by time. On that date affidavits were filed, by Sayad Mohsin Shah, advocate for the appellants and by Muhammad Ali, clerk of Sh. Abdul Aziz, advocate and Abdul Karim, one of the appellants. In the first of these affidavits Sayad Mohsin Shah deposed that he had prepared and signed the memorandum of appeal on 5th January 1926 and had handed it over to his clerk Muhammad Hussain for filing it in Court, but that the said clerk, being under a bona fide mistake that the period to be excluded should count till the 23rd December 1925 when the copies were delivered to the clients, presented it in Court on 8th January 1926. The other two affidavits stated that the deponents had actually gone to the copying department of the Small Cause Court on 16th, 17th and 18th December but had been told that the copies were not ready and that the copies were actually delivered to them on 23rd December. The allegations made in these affidavits were not admitted by the respondents and the case was adjourned to 21st April. 1926 to enable the appellants to lead evidence in support thereof. On that date the defendants examined Abdul Karim plaintiff, Muhammad Ali, Clerk of Sh. Abdul Aziz, advocate, Muhammad Hussain, clerk of Lala Hari Chand, advocate and Sardar Harnam Singh Pleader, but the plaintiffs led no evidence. The Additional District Judge enquired from counsel for both parties if they wanted to produce the copyist concerned but neither of them expressd his willingness to do so. An affidavit was also filed by Muhammad Hussain, clerk of Sayad Mohsin Shah repeating the statement made in his master's affidavit. The learned Additional District Judge held that the defendants-appellants had failed to prove that the copies were not ready on 15th and 16th December 1925 as noted thereon and that the defendants-appellants were entitled to a deduction of eight days only and consequently the appeal was time-barred. He also held that even if the allegation contained in the affidavit of Sayed Mohsin Shah and his clerk were correct, a mistake of law made by the plaintiffs' advocate's clerk did not amount to sufficient cause justifying extension of the period of limitation under S. 5.

In deciding that the copies had actually been prepared on 15th and 16th December 1925 the learned Additional District Judge has in his judgment relied inter alia upon the report which the copyist had submitted on 17th February 1926 to the revising officer of the Small Cause Court and which the latter had forwarded to the District Court. The appellants' counsel contends that this report is not legal evidence in the case and the learned Additional District Judge was in error in relying upon it. I have heard lengthy arguments on this point from both counsel and agree that the contention put forward on behalf of the appellants is sound. Mr. Zafar Ullah Khan for the respondents urges that this report is admissible under S. 35, Evidence Act, and in support of his contention he has relied upon three rulings. Parbati Kunwar v. Chandra Pal Kunwar (1), Raman v. Secy. of State (2) and Rathanamasari v. Secy. of State (3). The facts of these cases were, however, entirely different. The Privy Council judgment related to replies as to existence of a custom given to questions put by the officers who had been specially deputed by Government for the purpose. The Raman v. Secy. of State (2) case was explained in Malikarjuna Dugget v. Secy. of State (4) and relates to a wholly different set of facts, while the second Madras case was cited but not followed by this Court in Secy. of State v. Sarala Devi (5).

Section 35, Evidence Act, makes relevant an entry in any public or other official book, register or record stating the fact in issue or relevant fact and made by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty or by any other person in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by the law of the country in which such book, register or record is kept. Under this section the entry made on the copy indicating the date on which it was completed is certainly relevant but when an enquiry as to the correctness of such an entry has been started on its accuracy having been challenged by a party and in such enquiry a report is made departmentally by a copyist to his superior officer, such report is wholly outside the purview of S. 35 and cannot be referred to as legal evidence without the copyist being cited as witness and called upon to depose to the statements made in the report. I must, therefore, hold that the learned Additional District Judge acted illegally in relying upon the report.

Both counsel were agreed that if this report were to be held inadmissible in evidence, the finding of the learned Additional District Judge as to the date on which the copy was actually completed could be reopened in second appeal and that I should examine the remaining evidence and come to an independent finding thereon. Accordingly I have examined the evidence of the witnesses produced by the appellants to prove the above allegations and have reached the conclusion that the appellants have entirely failed to prove that the copies were not ready on 15th and 16th December as noted thereon. The evidence of the appellant Abdul Karim and of Mohammad Ali, clerk of Mr. Abdul Aziz does not strike me as satisfactory while the other two witnesses Muhamad Ali, clerk of L. Hari Chand and Sr. Harnam Singh pleader are very vague as to their facts. I, therefore, hold that the copies had been completed on 15th and 16th December and that the defendants-appellants were legally entitled to a deduction of eight days only.

The next question to be decided is whether the learned Judge was right in refusing to condone the delay of one day under the peculiar circumstances of this case. Mr. Zafar Ullah Khan for the respondents contends that the mistake of a legal practitioner or his clerk is not sufficient cause within the meaning of S. 5 and that in any case the learned Additional District Judge having refused to exercise his discretion, this Court ought not to interfere in second appeal. A large number of authorities have been cited by both counsel which I have examined, but which I do not propose to discuss at length, as each case has to be decided according to its peculiar circumstances. It is true that ordinarily this Court will not interfere with the exercise of discretion by the lower appellate Court, but there may be cases in which interference by this Court might be not only justified but absolutely necessary. The affidavit filed by Mr. Mohsin Shah in this case sets out the facts clearly and no counter-affidavit has been filed by or on behalf of the respondents. Indeed Mr. Zafar Ullah Khan stated before me definitely that he was not prepared to argue that the averments in Mr. Mohsin Shah's affidavit were incorrect. An examination of the memorandum of appeal actually presented in the District Court shows that the stamps were purchased on 5th January 1926 and Mr. Mohsin Shah actually signed the memorandum of appeal on that date. These facts support the statement made in his affidavit. In these circumstances the case is on all fours with that reported as Mt. Putli v. Mt. Jowala Devi (6), where Shah Din and Scott-Smith, JJ., held a similar mistake on the part of the appellants' counsel, who had prepared the grounds of appeal and had given them to his clerk several days before the expiry of the period of limitation, to be sufficient cause within the meaning of S. 5. Similarly in Icchar Singh v. Natha (7) Campbell and Dalip Singh, JJ., condoned the delay of one day in filing the appeal caused by the mistake of an advocate and his munshi.

Following these authorities I was inclined to hold that the learned Additional District Judge had not exercised his discretion in a sound and judicial manner and to set aside his order refusing to condone the delay of one day. But at the conclusion of the arguments in the present case Mr. Mohsin Shah brought it to my notice that his appeal to the District Judge on the merits was really concluded by a decision of Dalip Singh, J., in Civil Appeal No. 3144 of 1925 in which the same point was involved and to which most of the persons now arrayed as the appellants or respondents were parties. In that case the rights of the parties had been determined against the plaintiffs and that decision had been affirmed by the Letters Patent Bench. Having regard to this circumstance I think that no useful purpose will be served by remanding the case.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal, but having regard to all the circumstances of the case, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

(b) Evidence Act, S. 133— Accomplice is the person who joins his associates with the intention of taking part in the crime—Informer is the person who joins his associates for purpose of carrying information to police.

In criminal cases the distinction between an informer and an accomplice assumes at times considerable importance, and in order to determine whether a witness who first associated with wrongdoers and subsequently gave information to the police belongs to the first category or is an accomplice whose evidence cannot be accepted without corroboration, it has to be seen whether the witness had entered into the conspiracy for the sole purpose of detecting and betraying it or whether he is a person who concurred fully in the criminal designs of his co-conspirators for a time and joined in the execution of those till either out of fear or for some other reasons he turned on his former associates and gave information to the police. If at the time when he joined the conspiracy he had no intention of bringing his associates to book, but his sole object was to partake in the commission of the crime, he cannot be called an informer but is an accomplice ; and his position is not modified simply because later on he turns round and carries information to the police : A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 193, Rel. on. [P 649 C 1]

(c) Evidence Act, S. 157—To bring a statement under S. 157 prosecution must establish by clear and unequivocal evidence the proximity of time between the taking place of the fact and the making of the statement.

Section 157 provides an exception to the general rule excluding hearsay evidence and in order to bring a statement within the exception the duty is cast on the prosecution to establish by clear and unequivocal evidence the proximity of time between the taking place of the fact and the making of the statement. [P 650 C 2]

(d) Evidence Act, S. 54—Past good character does not lead to presumption of innocence but to prove guilt of such a man evidence against him must be of an unimpeachable character.

The mere fact that a person has enjoyed the confidence of his superiors or that he had in fact led a life of honesty during the past, is no reason to suppose that he will not succumb to temptation at the close of his career, but before a man of this type and such antecedents is adjudged guilty the evidence against him must be of an unimpeachable character. B. R. Puri and Shamair Chand—for Petitioner.

O'Connor—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner Mangat Rai, Head Clerk to the Officer-in-charge of the Animal Transport Section of the Indian Army Service Corps Record Office, Dagshai, has been convicted under S 161, I. P. C., for having received on 14th September 1927 from one Dost Muhammad (P. W. 6), Pensioner-Risaldar of mauza Nahr Kahuta in the Rawalpindi District the sum of Rs. 200 as illegal gratification, for having shown him favour in the discharge of his official duties as a public servant and has been sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for nine months and to pay a fine of Rs. 350. His appeal to the Sessions Judge, Ambala, having been unsuccessful he has preferred a petition for revision to this Court.

The first point raised by his learned counsel is that the trial was vitiated by reason of the Magistrate recording fresh evidence after the case for the defence had been closed. The relevant facts appear to be as follows :

On 8th October 1927, the evidence of seven witnesses for the prosecution was recorded and the petitioner charged. These witnesses were then cross examined on 3rd December and defence evidence recorded on 7th December, on which date the "case was closed" and the hearing adjourned to 19th December for arguments. Arguments were heard on that date and judgment reserved. On 22nd December 1927, instead of pronouncing his judgment the learned

Magistrate recorded an order briefly summarizing the case for the prosecution as well as that for the defence and wound up as follows :

As the case at present stands, I might come to some conclusion from deductive argument on these points, but such reasoning is open to continual doubt and would form the ground for endless appeals. It is possible by examining the parties concerned to settle the points definitely, and for this reason I shall recall Dost Muhammad, who will be ordered to produce all correspondence he had at any time with the accused, Colonel Steele will be recalled and asked to bring all letters he received from Colonel Collins bearing on this case and the District Magistrate will be asked to issue a commission to Colonel Collins (in the form attached) questioning him on the interview it is alleged he had with Dost Muhammad and Qaim Din.

Interrogatories were accordingly issued to Colonel Collins at Rawalpindi, and Colonel Steele (P. W. 1) and Dost Muhammad (P. W. 6) were recalled and examined in Court. At the close of this evidence the Magistrate asked the accused, if, in view of the further evidence recorded, he had anything to add to his former statement and he replied in the negative. Mr. Puri argues that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was illegal and prejudicial to the petitioner and vitiates the trial. In support of his contention he has relied on Allu v. Emperor (1) and Shugan Chand v. Emperor (A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 531), in both of which retrials were ordered. The facts of the present case are, however, wholly dissimilar and do not fall within the rule laid down in the rulings cited. In this case the action taken by the trial Magistrate is covered by S. 540, Criminal P. C., which authorized him to summon and examine or recall and re-examine any person at any stage of the case if his evidence appeared to him essential to the just decision of the case. It is no doubt true that the discretion given to Magistrates under this section has to be exercised with a great deal of caution, as pointed out by the Calcutta High Court in Natabar Ghose v. Adya Nath Niswas (2), but I do not think that the learned trial Magistrate has, in the present case used it in any improper manner. After examining the record as it stood at the time he felt that some points had been left obscure and in order to elucidate them it was necessary to recall certain witnesses and to examine a new witness, and when this evidence had been recorded, he took the precaution of asking the accused if he wanted to add anything to his previous statement and on his replying in the negative, he heard further arguments and then proceeded to decide the case. There is no illegality in the procedure adopted nor has the petitioner been prejudiced in any way by it. I hold, therefore, that there is no force in this objection and overrule it.

Coming now to the merits, it has been satisfactorily established by the evidence and indeed no arguments were addressed to me by Mr. Puri on this point that two currency notes of Rs. 100 each were given by Dost Muhammad (P. W. 6) to the petitioner at his house at Dagshai on 13th September 1927, and that these notes were recovered from him almost immediately by Mr. Abdul Salam, Magistrate 1st Class (P. W. 5) and Chaudhri Ghulam Rasul, Deputy Superintendent, C. I. D. (P.W. 2) who arrived on the spot by arrangement with Dost Muhammad and his companion Qaim Din. As remarked by the learned Sessions Judge a "trap" had been laid for catching the petitioner redhanded and the plan appears to have been carefully prepared and successfully carried out.

The factum of the receipt of money by the petitioner being thus established the next question for decision is whether it was received innocently, as alleged by him, or as illegal gratification for favour having been shown in his capacity as a public servant to Dost Muhammad in the matter of his application for grant of land. The case for the prosecution is that when Dost Muhammad's application reached this office and he saw the petitioner, the latter demanded a bribe of Rs. 800 and after a good deal of haggling Dost Muhammad agreed to pay him Rs. 400 in two instalments, i. e., Rs. 200 when the Deputy Commissioner of Rawalpindi had signed the application and Rs. 200 when the land was actually granted. It is alleged that in consequence of this arrangement these two currency notes (of Rs. 100 each) were given towards the first instalment. The prosecution seek to prove these allegations by the evidence of Dost Muhammad (P. W. 6) and Qaim Din

(1) A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 104=4 Lah. 376.
(2) A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 690.

(P. W. 7). The learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that these witnesses were "informers" or "spies" and not "accomplices" and that no corroboration of their testimony was necessary. Mr. Puri has assailed this position as legally unsound and has urged that both Dost Muhammad and Qaim Din were accomplices and according to the well-established rule of practice their evidence should be accepted only if it is corroborated in material particulars by other independent testimony. The test to determine whether a person is a spy or an accomplice has been recently laid down in the following terms by this Court in Karim Baksh v. Emperor (5), decided on 9th December 1927, where the Indian and English authorities on the subject were considered at length :

> In criminal cases the distinction between an informer and an 'accomplice' assumes at times considerable importance, and in order to determine whether a witness who first associated with the wrongdoers and subsequently gave information to the police belongs to the first category or is an accomplice whose evidence cannot be accepted without corroboration, it has to be seen whether the witness had entered into the conspiracy for the sole purpose of detecting and betraying it or whether he is a person who concurred fully in the criminal designs of his co-conspirators for a time and joined in the execution of those till either out of fear or for some other reason he turned on his former associates and gave information to the police. If at the time when he joined the conspiracy he had no intention of bringing his associates to book but his sole object was to partake in the commission of the crime, he cannot be called an informer but is an accomplice; and his position is not modified simply because later on he turns round and carries information to the police.

It was conceded by Mr. O'Connor for the Crown that the test laid down above is correct, and that applying it to the present case, it must be held that the real position of the witnesses Dost Muhammad and Qaim Din is that of accomplices and not of spies, as erroneously held by the learned Sessions Judge.

Mr. O'Connor, however, argued that as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge while dealing with the case in the alternative, that if corroboration of the testimony of these witnesses be necessary, it is found in the following three facts:

(1) In January 1927, Dost Muhammad and Qaim Din saw Colonel Collins at Rawalpindi and told him that the petitioner wanted a bribe of Rs. 400.

(2) The petitioner gave a chit (Ex. P. G.) in his own handwriting to Dost Muhammad containing his Ambala address.

(3) The payment and recovery of currency notes for Rs. 200 in the manner already described.

The first point requiring decision is as to the admissibility of the evidence of Colonel Collins which is admittedly based on hearsay. It is contended for the Crown that this evidence was rightly admitted under S. 157, Evidence Act, which provides that in order to corroborate the testimony of a witness, any former statement made by such witness relating to the same fact, at or about the time when the fact took place, or before any authority legally competent to investigate the fact may be proved. It is conceded that Colonel Collins was not an authority legally competent to investigate the fact but it is argued that the statement was made by Dost Muhammad "about the time" when the negotiations between him and the petitioner had been completed. As neither of the Courts below had discussed in detail the evidence on this point, I found it necessary to examine the record carefully to determine if the alleged negotiations had been completed so shortly before the making of the statement by Dost Muhammad to Colonel Collins, that it could be said to have been "on or about" the time when that fact took place. Now both these witnesses have made vague and contradictory statements as to the time of their visits to Dagshai and the place where the bribe was demanded and the amount fixed. In his statement (Ex. P. E.) recorded by Sub-Inspector Barkhurdar Khan of the C. I. D. on 6th September 1927, Dost Muhammad stated that his first visit to Dagshai was in January 1926, and that he saw Colonel Collins soon after. In his examination-in-chief at the trial he deposed that this visit was in 1926, but he mentioned neither the month nor the date. When cross-examined after the charge, he declared that he did not remember the month of his visit to Dagshai, but it was in the end of the year 1926. He then corrected himself by saying that he had made a mistake as to the date in his statement (Ex. P. E.) recorded by Barkhurdar Khan and that what he really meant to say was January 1927. At the close of the trial he was examined again as a Court witness on 6th February 1928, and on that occasion he stated that his memory was not accurate as "all this happened two years ago," which would be early in 1926. Further, in his statement (Ex. P. E.) he put his second visit to Dagshi in March 1927, and stated that it was at this meeting that Mangat Rai had given him the chit containing his Amballa address (Ex P. G.) and had asked him to correspond at that address. When examined in Court on 8th October 1927, he was positive that the chit (Ex. P. G.) had been given to him at the time of the first visit and that his second visit was in the beginning of 1927. When cross examined on 3rd December 1927, he fixed the second visit "two or three months after the first" but stated that he did not remember the date. His companion Qaim Din (P. W. 7) in the statement (P. F.) recorded by Barkhurdar Khan fixed the date of the first visit in January 1926, but stated that the second visit was 15 months later in March 1927. In his examination-in-chief in Court on 8th October 1927, he deposed that the first visit was in "the last year" and that the second was "two or three months after the first." In cross examination on 3rd December 1927, he stated, however, that the first visit was in the end of 1926, and the second visit six months later.

The discrepancy as to the date of the second visit is brought out more prominently in the statement of Dost Muhammad dated 3rd December 1927, when he deposed that this visit was in consequence of a certain letter having been received from the Sitapur office, asking him to procure his discharge certificate and that it was with the object of getting that certificate that they went to Dagshai. The letter in question has been produced as P. W. 6/1 and bears the date 18th May 1926. This would show that the second visit was in 1926 and not in 1927.

Again as to the place where the bribe was demanded Dost Muhammad stated on 3rd December 1927, that the petitioner asked for the bribe in the office when he and Qaim Din met him for the first time. This is contradicted by Qaim Din, who is positive that the petitioner did not ask for the bribe in the office but asked them to see him at his house in the evening and it was there that the demand was first made and the amount settled.

The above review of the evidence shows that the prosecution have not been able to definitely fix the date when the bribe was demanded and negotiations completed. It is variously given as being in the beginning of 1926, May 1926, end of 1926, January and March 1927. Having regard to the discrepant nature of this evidence I am not prepared to hold that the statement alleged to have been made by Dost Muhammad to Colonel Collins was made "at or about the time when the fact took place." It must be borne in mind that S. 157, provides an exception to the general rule excluding hearsay evidence and in order to bring a statement within the exception the duty is cast on the prosecution to establish by clear and unequivocal evidence the proximity of time between the taking place of the fact and the making of the statement. I hold, therefore, that the evidence of Colonel Collins is inadmissible and must be kept out of consideration. (The judgment then dealing with the evidence used as corroborative evidence, proceeded.) I hold, therefore, that no corroboration of the testimony of Dost Muhammad and Qaim Din is forthcoming on the record.

As a last resort Mr. O'Connor contended that under S. 133, Evidence Act, it is not illegal to base a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of accomplices and even if the evidence of corroboration is to be rejected, the petitioner might still be held guilty on the statements made by Dost Muhammad and Qaim Din. I have, however, discussed their evidence above and have pointed out several contradictions in their statements. I may also note another glaring discrepancy in this evidence. Qaim Din deposed that before the second visit to Dagshai Dost Muhammad had told him that he had received a letter from the petitioner that his papers were ready. When questioned at the trial Dost Muhammad, however, denied having received any such letter. On the other hand he stated that he had been informed in his village by one Mughal that he had received a message from the petitioner through one Dittu that the papers were ready and that he should go to Dagshai. It is further significant that the identity of these two persons has not been disclosed and none of them appeared as a witness at the trial.

It will thus be seen that the evidence which Dost Muhammad and Qaim Din had given is not of the type on which implicit reliance can be placed without any in-independent corroboration. Moreover, while judging of the probabilities of the case, we cannot ignore the evidence of Colonel Steele (P. W. 1) Officer-in-charge of the I. S. C. Record, and Mr. Griffin (D. W. 1) the Officer-in-charge of the Section in which the petitioner worked, of Colonel Rennison D. A. D. of S. & T. Corps who had just recommended him for the title of Rai Sahib; and of Colonel H. L. Alexander, Director of Purchase and Intelligence, Indian Stores Depot, with whom he had served in several fronts during the War and at whose instance he had been specially "mentioned in the despatches," that the petitioner is a man of "exceptional capability" who had throughout his service been believed to be a man of character and unimpeachable honesty. It is no doubt true, that the mere fact that a person has enjoyed the confidence of his superiors or that he had in fact led a life of honesty during the past, is no reason to suppose that he will not succumb to temptation at the close of his career, but before a man of this type and such antecedents is adjudged guilty the evidence against him must be of an unimpeachable character. As shown above the evidence produced by the prosecution in this case is discrepant, vague and inconclusive and, in my judgment, wholly insufficient to bring home the guilt to the petitioner.

This being my view of the evidence, I do not think it necessary to discuss the legal point raised by Mr. Puri that the petitioner was not a 'public servant' as defined in S. 21, I. P. C., but was (to use the language of Sir Henry Rattigan in Ahad Shah v. Emperor (4) "a mere Babu" and consequently S. 161 was inapplicable.

For the foregoing reasons I accept the petition for revision, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct the petitioner to be set at liberty forthwith.

Shromani Gurudwara Prabandhak Committee, Amritsar and another—Defendants—Respondents.

Misc. First Appeal No. 240 of 1928, Decided on 15th June 1928 from order of Sikh Gurudwar Tribunal, Lahore, D/- 21st January 1928.

(a) Sikh Gurudwara Act (Punjab Act 8 of 1925), S. 34 (1)—Order by Tribunal under Civil Procedure Code is not appealable unless it is covered by S. 34 (1) though such order by ordinary civil Court would be appealable.

Sub-S. (1), S. 34, has taken away from an aggrieved party the right to appeal against orders passed by the tribunal under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, even though such orders, if passed by an ordinary Court would have been appealable under S. 104 or O. 43, Civil P. C., unless they come within the purview of sub-S. (1), S. 34. [P 652 C 2]

(b) Sikh Gurudwara Act (1925), S. 34 (1)—Order of interim injunction is not a final order.

The expression "final" is not defined in the Sikh Gurudwara Act. But there is no doubt that in S. 34 (1) it is used to signify orders which are not of an interlocutory nature. An order of interim injunction to a party is merely provisional in its nature. It is in no sense of the term, a "final order" determining a matter decided by the Tribunal under the provisions of the Act: 23 All. 220 (P. C.); A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 571 (*F. Jivan Lal Kapur—for Appellant.

Man Singh and Bhagat Singh—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The appellant Sital Das, ex-Mahant of Gurdwara Ker Bawawali in the Gujrat District, which is a notified Sikh Gurdwara under (Punjab) Act 8 of 1925, and in respect of which a consolidated list of properties had been duly published in the Punjab Gazette, presented to the Local Government a petition under S. 5 of the Act claiming that the jagir money and the lands mentioned in the list did not appertain to the Gurdwara, but belonged to him personally. This petition was in due course forwarded to the Sikh Gurdwara Tribunal for disposal in accordance with the provisions of the Act. On the Sheromini Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee and the local Committee of management of the Gurdwara Ker Bawawali denying the appel-dant's claim the Tribunal framed an issue to determine the nature of the property. On the same day the respondents presented an application under O. 39, R. 1, and O. 40, R. 1, Civil P. C., praying that, as it was necessary to prevent the appellant from appropriating the jagir money and the mesne profits of the land pendente lite, a receiver may be appointed and a "letter of request" issued to the Deputy Commissioner, Gujrat, not to pay the jagir money to the appellant. This application was resisted by the appellant on the ground that the Tribunal was a Court of limited jurisdiction, which had been established to determine certain specified matters only, and had no power to receive petitions under O. 39 and O. 40, Civil P.C. and to pass orders thereon. It was also urged that no case has been made out on the merits for the appointment of a receiver or issuing a "letter of request" to the Deputy Commissioner.

On the legal point the learned President (Skemp, J.) and the two members of the Tribunal were not agreed. The former was of opinion that the appellant's objection was sound and that the application should be thrown out in limine, on the ground that sub-S. (9), S. 12 of the Act did not empower the Tribunal to issue the orders prayed for as such orders were not necessary > for the purpose of deciding the claim of the appellant under S. 5 to the properties in dispute.

On the other hand, the other two members (Messrs. Munna Lal and Kharak Singh) held that a narrow interpretation should not be put on sub-S. (9) aforesaid and that orders under O. 39 and O. 40, being merely incidental to the decision of the 'matter' pending before them, could in appropriate cases be passed by the Tribunal. On the merits they held that this was not a fit case for the appointment of a receiver and rejected the prayer in that behalf, but thought that it was necessary to preserve the jagir money pendente lite. Instead of sending "a letter of request" to the Deputy Commissioner as prayed for, they however directed that an interim injunction be issued to the appellant > directing him not to realize the jagir money from the treasury pending the decision of the petition under S. 5 by the Tribunal.

From this order Mahant Sital Das has presented an appeal under O. 43, R. 1 (r), Civil P. C., to this Court.

On behalf of the respondents a preliminary objection has been raised that an order passed by the Tribunal issuing a temporary injunction is not appealable under O. 43 (1), Civil P. C., or any other provision of the law. The law as to appeals against orders passed by the Tribunal is contained in S. 34, Sikh Gurdwara Act (8 of 1925) and we have to see whether in reference to that section an appeal lies in this case. S. 34 reads as follows :

> 1. Any party aggrieved by a final order passed by Tribunal determining any matter decided by it under the provisions of this Act may, within ninety days of the date of such order, appeal to the High Court.
> 2. No appeal or application for revision shall lie against an order of a Tribunal except as provided for in sub-S. (1).
> 3. An appeal preferred under the provisions of this section shall be heard by a Division Court of the High Court.

As stated already the appeal before us has been preferred under O. 43, R. 1 (r), Civil P. C., but sub-S. (2), S. 34 explicitly lays down that > no appeal or application for revision shall lie against an order of a Tribunal except as provided for in sub-S. (1).

There is no manner of doubt that this sub-section has taken away from an aggrieved party the right to appeal against orders passed by the Tribunal under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, even though such orders, if passed by an ordinary Court, would have been appealable under S. 104 or O. 43, Civil P. C., unless they come within the purview of sub-S. 1, S. 34. It follows, therefore, that the appeal against the order in question, if competent at all, should have been preferred under S. 34 (1) of the Act and not under O. 43, R. 1 of the Code. The appeal is, therefore, not properly constituted and must fail on this ground alone.

But I do not want to rest my decision on a technicality, as I am of opinion that the order under appeal is not a "final order" > determining any matter decided by it (the Tribunal) under the provisions of the Act.

The expression "final" is not defined in the Sikh Gurdwaras Act, but there is no doubt that in S. 34 (1) it is used to signify orders which are not of an interlocutory nature. The expression is found in the Civil Procedure Code and other legislative enactments in India and in England and has been uniformly interpreted as meaning an order which finally decides any matter that is directly at issue in the case in respect of the rights of the parties : see Radha Kishan v. Collector of Jaunpur (1).

The point in that case arose in reference to S. 109, Civil P. C., which provides that " * * * an appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council from any decree or final order passed on appeal by a High Court * * *.

Again a Full Bench of our own Court in Sultan Singh v. Murli Dhar (2), following Rahim Bhoy v. Turner (3) and Sayyed Muzhar Hossein v. Bodha Bibi (4), has held that a " final order " is an order comprising the decision upon a cardinal issue in a suit, that issue being one that goes to the foundation of the suit and one that can never, while the decision stands, be questioned again in the suit.

The view expressed in these rulings is in accord with that taken in England, where in reference to O. 58, R. 3, Judicature Act, Lord Alverstone, C. J., with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor (Lord Halsbury), has laid down the test in these terms :

Does the judgment or order, as made, finally dispose of the rights of the parties ? If it does, then it ought to be treated as a final order; but if it does not, it is then an interlocutory order: Bozson v. Altrincham Urban District Council (5): see also Standard Discount Co. v. La Grangee (6) and Salaman v. Warner (7).

Applying this test to the case before us, the order in question must be held to be one of a purely interlocutory character. The interim injunction issued is merely provisional in its nature. It is not intended to conclude a right and is not decisive of the contentions of the parties on the merits of the litigation. Its sole object is to preserve the jagir money unimpaired till the decision of the litigation, to be disposed of in accordance with the orders which will eventually be passed by the Tribunal on the appellant's application under S. 5. It is in no sense of the term, a " final order " determining a matter decided by the Tribunal under the provisions of the Act.

In the Civil Procedure Code itself such orders are described as being interlocutory (S. 94) and temporary (O. 39), and the Calcutta High Court in Darma Coal Co. v. Benares Bank (8) has definitely ruled that an order of the High Court, made in reversal of the order of the Court of first instance, refusing to issue a temporary injunction, was not a " final order " within the meaning of S. 109, Civil P. C.

After giving the matter my careful consideration I am of opinion that the preliminary objection must be sustained and it must be held that the order passed by the lower Court is not appealable.

Before closing this judgment I think it necessary to mention that both counsel wanted to have an expression of an opinion on an argument which they had addressed to us by analogy, viz. whether or not an order passed by the Tribunal issuing a perpetual injunction or appointing a receiver was appealable But as that question does not directly arise in this case and is not necessary for a decision of the question before us, I decline to go into it and this judgment ought not to be taken as expressing any opinion thereon.

The appeal is incompetent and must be dismissed. But having regard to all the circumstances of the case, I would leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Johnstone, J.—I concur.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On 11th March 1924, the plaintiff Hira Lal brought an action for the recovery of a certain sum of money due on account of principal and interest on the foot of a mortgage which the defendants Ramjas Rai and Rallia Ram had executed in his favour on 20th April 1915. The mortgagee claimed to recover the money from the mortgaged property as well as from the mortgagors personally. The mortgagors confessed judgment, with the result that the Subordinate Judge allowed the claim in toto and passed a preliminary decree for Rs. 13,895-13-3. The judgment-debtors failed to pay the money within the prescribed period, and on 15th January 1926 a final decree for sale was made in terms of O. 34, R. 5, Civil P. C.

The net proceeds were, however, found to be insufficient to satisfy the claim of the plaintiff, and he accordingly asked the Court to pass a decree under O. 34, R. 6, Civil P. C., for the realization of the balance from the mortgagors personally. This power was granted by the trial Judge, and his judgment has been upheld by Harrison, J.

The defendants have preferred this appeal under Cl. 10, Letters Patent, and Mr. Balwant Rai on their behalf argues that as it has been held that the personal remedy for the principal sum is barred by limitation, the prayer for the realization of interest from the defendants personally is equally barred. I am unable to accede to this contention. As stated above, the plaintiff had, in his plaint, claimed to recover the whole of the debt from the defendants personally as well as from the mortgaged property, and the latter did not demur to that claim. Indeed, they confessed judgment, and though the trial Judge did not state in express terms, but he intended to say, that, if the proceeds of the sale were not sufficient to pay the mortgage-debt, the mortgagors should pay the balance personally. It is true that the personal remedy could not be enforced until after the sale had failed to satisfy the debt, but such a provision in the decree cannot be held to be invalid: vide: Jeuna Babu v. Parmeshwar Narayan (1). The defendants by confessing judgment prevented the plaintiff from showing that the period of limitation had been extended under Ss. 19 and 20, Lim. Act, and it is not open to them now to say that the personal remedy is barred by time.

Conceding for the sake of argument that the claim for the principal amount is barred, I am not prepared to hold that the mortgagee is not entitled to recover from the mortgagors personally the interest which accrued due during the six years immediately preceding the institution of the suit. It may be that the personal remedy for the principal debt could not be enforced after the expiry of six years from the date of the mortgage, but the debt being a charge on immovable property was not extinguished. As the debt existed even after the expiry of six years, the personal liability for the payment of interest under the covenant contained in the instrument of mortgage arose in the seventh year and also in each of the subsequent years until the expiry of the period for the recovery of the debt from the mortgaged property. There is some plausibility in the proposition that when the principal cannot be realized, the interest, which is only an accessory to the principal, is equally unrealizable. It is, however, clear that this rule can apply only when the liability for the principal debt is altogether extinguished and no remedy to realize it is available. I accordingly hold that the mortgagee is entitled to a personal decree for the interest which accrued due during the six years before the institution of the suit.

For the foregoing reasons I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 2331 of 1927, Decided on 29th February 1928, from decree of Addl. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 6th June 1927.

* (a) Limitation Act, S. 12—Time expiring during vacation — Copy applied for during vacation but after limitation—Appeal filed the next day of obtaining the copy — Appeal was held to be in time.

Time for filing an appeal expired during the vacation. The appellant applied for the copies of judgments and decree after the prescribed period but while the right of appeal was subsisting (before the Court was opened) and obtained the copies two days after the Courts opened. The appeal was filed on the next day of obtaining the copies.

Held: that copies can be applied for at any time when the right of appeal still subsists even though the application is made after the expiry of the period prescribed. The appeal was, therefore, in time: 89 I.C. 437. Rel. on; 79 P R. 1916, Dist. [P 656 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 31—Appellate judgment—The Judge should state his own reasons and should not confine himself to approving of the reasons of the Court of first instance.

The Judge of an appellate Court must state in his judgment his own reasons and should not confine himself to approving of the reasons of the Court of first instance. The reason is that the judgment must show on the face of it that the points in dispute were clearly before the mind of the Judge and that he exercised his own discretion in deciding them. The proper form of the order to be made in second appeal in such cases is to set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and send back the case to that Court in order that the appeal may be disposed of according to law. [P 657 C 1]

Nand Lal—for Appellant.

Nanak Chand and Shambu Lal Puri—for Respondents.

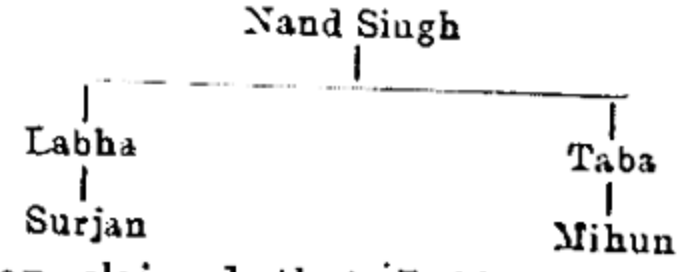
Judgment.—These are two connected second appeals. In one suit Surjan, son of Labha, sued Ram Chand and his brother for possession of a certain residential property. The plaintiff alleged that he had been in possession up to five years before suit when he went to Jullundur to earn his livelihood. On his return to the village he found that during his absence defendants had illegally taken possession of the property. The defendants denied that the property belonged to the plaintiff and alleged that they had been in possession from time immemorial. They further alleged that they erected structures on the site more than 12 years back, that the claim of the plaintiff was time barred, and that the plaintiff was estopped from suing as he stood by when the buildings were made. The following pedigree table was set up by the plaintiff:



Surjan claimed that Labha and Taba were recorded as owners in the settlement papers of 1852, and that he and Mihun succeeded to the property in suit along with an adjoining piece of land which is in dispute in the other suit. According to Surjan he sold the property in the other case, which was his own share, to Ram Rattan, the plaintiff in the other case, in 1895. Surjan himself after that sale lived with Mihun, his cousin. Mihun was murdered in 1916 and Surjan succeeded Mihun as owner of the unsold half. Surjan continued to live there for some time after 1916 till he went to Jullundur. It was then that Ram Chand and his brother illegally took possession.

In the other suit Ram Rattan sued Ram Chand and certain others for permanent injunction that they should not prevent him from building walls on a vacant site which was his property and which had been purchased by him from Surjan as already described. The real contesting defendant was Ram Chand. He claimed the vacant site as his own and pleaded that as he was in possession the suit for injunction was incompetent. He further pleaded his own adverse possession from time immemorial.

In Surjan's suit the trial Judge held that Labha and Taba were owners in 1852, that Surjan sold his half-share in 1895 to Ram Rattan and continued to live with Mihun in the other half till 1916 when Mihun was murdered and also continued to live there after Mihun's murder for some time further, i. e., it was found that Surjan was the owner of the land in dispute in that suit and had been in possession within 12 years. He further found that the property in dispute was not built by Ram Chand and his brother but by Mihun and Surjan and that though Surjan did not hold any agricultural land in the village at present, he did so originally and that he was full owner of the property and had not abandoned possession by going to Jullundur for a short period. The trial Judge, therefore, decreed Surjan's suit for possession.

In Ram Rattan's suit the trial Judge held that the sale to him by Surjan in 1895 was proved and that the portion sold to Surjan's original half of the property, held by Mihun and Labha He further found that Ram Rattan had leased the house then standing on this property in 1904, 1911, 1913 and 1915 to certain persons and paid the chowkidara tax for this house in 1913. Some time after 1915, he held that the house on this part of the site fell down and it became a vacant site. After that date, therefore, possession followed title and the defendants had not established adverse possession. He, therefore, granted Ram Rattan a decree for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendants from preventing him from building walls on the site.

Against this decision in Ram Rattan's suit Ram Chand alone appealed and against the decision in Surjan's suit Ram Chand and his brother appealed. The Additional District Judge who heard the appeals briefly stated what the true cases were and then went on to hold that the evidence established the ownership of Surjan with respect to the property in the two suits At this point his judgment ceased and he then went on as follows: The ownership of Surjan with respect to the property in the two suits is supported by sufficient oral evidence on the files of the two cases and I agree entirely with the finding of the lower Court in both the suits to the effect that both these plots belonged ultimately to Surjan, who duly sold the southern portion to Ram Rattan and is entitled to recover the northern portion for himself while Ram Rattan has justly been given a decree for a permanent injunction against Ram Chand and his colleagues, who unlawfully prevented him from building the walls AB and BC thereon. Both the appeals are hereby dismissed with costs.

Against this decision these two second appeals have been preferred in the one case by Ram Chand and in the other case by Ram Chand and his brother.

A preliminary objection was taken that the second appeal in Ram Rattan's case is barred by time. On account of the vacation, under S. 4, Lim. Act, the appeal could be instituted in this Court on the 19th September 1927 and in point of fact both the appeals were so instituted. In Ram Chand's appeals, however, copies of the lower appellate Court's judgment and decree were not put in till the 22nd September. It was argued that as an application for the copies was not made till the 7th September after 90 days had expired, no allowance could be made for the time taken in getting the copies of the lower appellate Court's judgment and decree. As against this it was contended that copies could be applied for at any time when the right of appeal still subsisted and that as an application for copies was made on 7th September and the copies were dispatched on the 21st September and were put in this Court on 22nd September the time from the 19th September to 21st September must be excluded, and the copies having been put in on the 22nd September, the appeal was within time. This question has been the subject of two conflicting judgments of this Court delivered by different Judges in Chambers. One judge held in Guran Rakha v. Bindraban (1) that as the day when the 90 days for the appeal had expired was a holiday and the copies were not applied for till the next day, no allowance could be made for the time required to get the copies. A different view was, however, taken by another Judge in Naman v. Gurditta (2). The subject is discussed at length at p. 118 of Rustomji's Law of Limitation, 4th edn. where the first decision of this Court is doubted and where numerous decisions of other Courts taking the same view as the second decision of this Court are given. There is no doubt that on the authorities the appellant could have applied for copies even on 19th September and have excluded the time taken in getting those copies. In my judgment this is the correct view and I hold that copies can be applied for at any time when the right of appeal still subsists even though the application is made after the expiry of 90 days and that the time requisite to get these copies must be excluded. It follows that in the present case the appeal in Ram Rattan's case is not time barred and I so hold.

On the merits the learned counsel for the appellants contended in both the appeals that there was no judgment of the lower appellate Court within the meaning of O. 41, R. 31, Civil P. C. In my judgment this is correct. Under the rule in question reasons for the decision of the lower appellate Court are essential. In the case of the two appeals in question the Additional District Judge did give reasons that Surjan at one time owned both the plots. After that all he did was to say that he agreed with the findings of the trial Judge that the suits should be decreed. Although the questions of possession and adverse possession were very important points in the appeal and were taken before him, he had not even specifically mentioned that adverse possession was not established in Ram Rattan's case or that in Surjan's case Surjan was in possession within 12 years. He contented himself by saying that he agreed entirely with the findings of the lower Court. This is most unsatisfactory. The Judge of an appellate Court must state his own reasons and should not confine himself to approving of the reasons of the Court of first instance. The reason is that the judgment must show on the face of it that the points in dispute were clearly before the mind of the Judge and that he exercised his own discretion in deciding them. The subject is discussed at p. 951 of Mulla's Code of Civil Procedure, 8th edn. The proper form of the order to be made in second appeal in such cases is to set aside the decree of the lower appellate Court and send back the case to that Court in order that the appeal may be disposed of according to law. This must be done in the present cases.

I accordingly accept both the appeals, set aside the orders of the Additional District Judge and remand both the cases to the District Judge of Hoshiarpur under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., to decide the appeals in his Court according to law. Court-fees in both appeals will be refunded: other costs will abide the event.

G. C. Narang and N. C. Pandit — for Appellants.

J. M. Mackay for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment. — Six persons, namely, Chandu, Ram Singh, Khayali, Jaimal, Girdhari and Behari, who were originally charged under S. 302 read with S. 149, I. P. C., with the murder of Ram Karan, deceased, have been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Hissar of the offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under S. 304-II, I. P. C. Chandu, Ram Singh and Khayali have each been sentenced to ten years rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement, while Girdhari, Behari and Jaimal have been each sentenced to seven years rigorous imprisonment including three months solitary confinement. The six convicts have appealed to this Court and a lady named Mt. Har Kaur has put in an application for enhancement of the sentences passed upon the appellants.

With the exception of Girdhari and Behari, who are strangers, the remaining four accused as well as the deceased Ram Karan and the witness Nathu (P. W. 4) and Chuni (P. W. 5) are all descended from a common ancestor. In fact Chandu and Khayali were the first cousins, and Jaimal and Ram Singh the nephews of Ram Karan, deceased. The case for the prosecution is that there was enmity between Ram Karan and his cousins and nephews. It was partly due to the partition of the family property, which took place about 15 years ago, and latterly, some two years ago, Chandu and Khayali were convicted of some excise offence, and they suspected that Ram Karan had got up the case against them. In fact they very frankly stated, when they were being prosecuted under the Excise Act, that they were on inimical terms with Ram Karan.

Ram Karan was a native of Chani Khushal in the Hissar District. Early in the morning, on 17th April 1927, he left his house for the jungle in order to answer a call of nature. His son Nathu (P. W. 4) handed him a lota. In the narrow lane in front of Ram Karan's house two bullock carts were standing close to the house of Gagan (P. W. 6). Ram Karan remonstrated that the carts were obstructing the way. The boy Nathu (P. W. 4), after handing over the lota, had walked back to the house. Soon afterwards he heard the cries of "Marlo marlo," Nathu immediately came out accompanied by another person named Mangla and saw that his father was lying in the chauk and the six accused persons were beating him with lathis. It is said that Jaimal had a kulhari with him. The boy at once went up to the roof of the house and raised an alarm which attracted a number of people to the spot. Among the people attracted there were Gagan (P. W. 6), Chuni (P. W. 5), Lakhma (P. W. 7) and Mohru (P. W. 8). All these persons saw the assault. The evidence is to the effect that, even after Ram Karan had been felled by the blows which he received, his assailants continued to shower blows upon him. He received no less than 14 injuries, four of them being on the head. One of these injuries must have been caused with a terrific blow which smashed his jaw and knocked out ten of his teeth. Chuni and Gagan tried to intervene but in their blind fury the assailants did not spare them even, with the result that they received some injuries. Mohru and Lakhma were present but remained standing at a distance, Soon afterwards Ballu, lambardar, (P. W. 9), came and made inquiries as to who the assailants were. The boy Nathu and other persons present gave him the names of the assailants. Ballu immediately sent for Chetia, chaukidar (P. W. 3), and told him to go at once to the police station at Hansi, which was at a distance of two kos from the scene of the occurrence, and lodge the first information report. The report, which was made with great promptitude at 9 a. m. within a couple of hours of the incident narrated above, gives clearly the names of the six appellants as being the assailants of Ram Karan. At the time when Chetia started to make the report, Ram Karan had not died though he had become senseless and soon afterwards succumbed to his injuries. The Sub-Inspector arrived at the scene of the occurrence soon afterwards and found Ram Karan already dead. He dispatched the dead body to the headquarters for post mortem examination and took up the investigation.

Now, this story is fully corroborated by the evidence of five eyewitnesses, namely, Nathu, Gagan, Chuni, Lakhmu and Mohru. The evidence of Chuni is very important because he is related to Ram Karan as well as to the four appellants, namely, Chandu, Khayali, Jaimal and Ram Singh. He had no reason whatsoever to implicate his relations in a serious crime unless they were really guilty. His actual presence at the scene of the occurrence is put beyond doubt by the fact that in his attempt to separate the assailants he himself received injuries. Gagan (P. W. 6) also received injuries in the attempt to save Ram Karan from the onslaught of the assailants, and it cannot be doubted for one moment that he was present at the time of the occurrence and actually saw the murderous attack. He belongs to the same brotherhood as Ram Karan and the six appellants and the same is the case with Lakhmu and Mohru (P. Ws. 7 and 8). These witnesses had no motive to give false evidence in order to implicate absolutely innocent persons of their own brotherhood. In the first information report the chaukidar is reported to have stated :

> to-day after sunrise, there arose a fight between the parties of Ram Karan and Khayali.

A good deal of capital was attempted to be made out of this unfortunate word "fight" and the injuries received by Chuni and Gagan were also invoked in aid in order to build up an argument of despair, namely, that there was a free fight between the party of Ram Karan consisting of himself, Chuni and Gagan on the one side and the appellants on the other side and that Ram Karan's party got the worse of it. We need hardly say that there is no foundation whatsoever for this argument. Chetia, Chuni and Gagan all gave evidence in the case and no question was put to them nor was even a suggestion thrown out in the course of their cross-examination in support of this theory of an alleged fight. The utter hollowness of this defence is further apparent from the fact that four of the accused, namely, Ram Singh, Chandu, Khayali and Behari, pleaded alibi on their defence.

It was further argued that there were factions in the village and that the witnesses, who have come forward to support the prosecution, belonged to Ram Karan's faction. This argument does not advance the case for the defence any further. On the other hand, it lends support to the story of the prosecution in that it assumes that the relations between Ram Karan on one side and Chandu, Jaimal, Ram Singh and Khayali on the other were strained.

It was argued very strenuously that although Ballu lambardar (P. W. 9), has stated in his evidence that he gave the names of the witnesses to the chaukidar the chaukidar did not mention any such names in the report. The chaukidar may have neglected the instructions of Ballu or it may be due to his mental lethargy that he did not mention the names of the witnesses. The mere fact that in the first information report the names of the witnesses, who ultimately support the prosecution are not given, is not a matter which would throw suspicion upon the story for the prosecution.

It was further argued that no motive has been proved by the prosecution which would justify the attack upon Ram Karan on the morning of 17th April 1927, by the appellants. In the first place it is not the duty of the prosecution to prove motive for every crime. In fact there are both Indian and English authorities which make it perfectly clear that it is not at all necessary for the prosecution in order to establish a charge of crime to prove a motive for it, much less the adequacy of that motive. No one can prove the inner workings of human mind, especially if it happens to be the abnormal mind of a criminal. In the present case, however, it cannot be said that there was a total absence of motive for the crime. It may be that the old partition was considered by the cousins and they have been consequently smarting under the sense of a real or imaginary injury. Then we have the comparatively recent conviction of Chandu and Khayali under the excise laws which both these persons imputed to Ram Karan as the prime mover. As already stated, there is no evidence to show what actually transpired before these appellants opened their attack upon their solitary victim, namely, Ram Karan. Ram Karan is dead and the only persons, who could throw any light upon the actual events which led up to the assault are the appellants and they are naturally reticent.

We are considerably impressed by the argument in support of the application for enhancement put forward by Mr. Shamair Chand. The facts established would bring the case against the six appellants well within the purview of S. 302, I. P. C. The assault was a brutal one both in its intensity and ferocity. There were six men all armed with dangs while their victim, Ram Karan, was unarmed. A number of blows were directed against the most vital part of Ram Karan's body, namely, his head, and the assailants did not pay any attention to the importunities of Chuni and Gagan who tried to intervene but continued their assault, even after wounding Gagan and Chuni as Ram Karan lay helpless on the ground. We do not agree with the reasonings of the learned Sessions Judge when he says that there was no common intention to cause death or to cause such bodily injury as was likely in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The facts narrated above show that the six appellants must have known very well that Ram Karan could not possibly survive the concerted attack made by them. However, as under the circumstances we are not inclined to impose the capital penalty upon any one of the appellants under S. 302, I. P. C., and the lesser penalty under the same section, namely, transportation for life, would not in its actual working have entailed, a much more severe sentence of imprisonment upon the three principal assailants, namely, Chandu, Ram Singh and Khayali, than the one already imposed upon them by the Court below, we do not consider it desirable to alter the charges and to formally convict the appellants under S. 302, I. P. C. We, therefore, maintain the convictions and sentences which have been passed upon the six appellants and dismiss the appeal.

In view of our observations we have already made, the application for enhancement of sentences necessarily fails.

Criminal Appeal No. 665 of 1927, Decided on 11th November 1927, from order of 1st Class Magistrate, Attock, D/- 30th May 1927.

Criminal P.C., S. 439— Reference by District Magistrate to High Court for enhancement of sentence —Procedure is irregular—Proper procedure is to instruct law officer of the Crown to file application for revision.

A reference for enhancement of sentence by a District Magistrate to the High Court is irregular and not warranted by law. The proper course for him to adopt is to instruct the law officers of the Crown in the High Court to file an application for revision asking for the enhancement of the sentence. [P 660 C 1]

Abdul Ghani Khan—for Appellants.

B. H. Bevan Petman for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.— Three persons, namely, Gulab, Dalli and Shah Sufaid, had been challaned by the police under S. 397, I. P. C., Dalli has been acquitted by the learned trying Magistrate, and Gulab and Shah Sufaid have each been convicted under S. 394 and sentenced to a term of five years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 100. They have appealed to this Court through Mr. Abdul Ghani Khan.

The District Magistrate, Campbellpore, has made a reference to this Court for the enhancement of the sentence of the appellants by convicting them under S. 397, I. P. C. The procedure adopted by him appears to be irregular and not warranted by law. The proper course for him to adopt would have been to instruct the law officers of the Crown in the High Court to file an application for revision asking for the enhancement of the sentence. However, a learned Judge of this Court was pleased to issue notice on 28th July 1927 to the accused to show cause why the sentence which has been passed upon them, should not be enhanced. The notice has been duly served. Both the appeal and the reference are before me for disposal.

The story for the prosecution is mainly as follows :

Four persons, namely, Fazal (P. W. 5), Muhammad (P. W. 6), Ghazan (P. W. 29) and Abdulla (P. W. 30), (complainants), had gone to a cattle fair and were returning from it after selling their bullocks. They had the proceeds of the sale with them. These four persons passed a night at the village called Kalu Kotha and in the morning started on their homeward journey. When they reached a spot near the forest bungalow of the village Jabbi three persons, namely Gulab, Shah Sufaid and Dalli, met them. Gulab and Shah Sufaid, according to these witnesses, were armed with revolvers, while Dalli had a hatchet. Gulab, Shah Sufaid and Dalli put some questions to Fazal and his party regarding some dacoity at Fatehjang and immediately after Dalli gave a kulhari blow to Abdullah who fell down. Upon this Dalli took a sum of Rs. 62 from Fazal (P. W. 5) and Gulab and Shah Sufaid robbed Ghazan. Muhammad one of the bullock sellers, managed to make good his escape and reached the village Jabbi. In the meantime the accused, after robbing Abdullah, Fazal and Ghazan, ran away having given a blow to Ghazan also who was disabled and fell down. While the accused were running away, Fazal went to the village Humak and asked some people who were working in the fields for assistance. Some of these people joined Fazal in the pursuit. At the village Jabbi the party of Fazal requested Chanan Shah to assist them in the pursuit of the robbers, and Shah Murtaza, the son of Chanan Shah, and some others joined the pursuing party. When they reached the foot of a hill called Kawa Garh the pursuing party overtook the accused. Shah Murtaza, who was soldier on leave and carried a gun with him, fired at the accused as they were climbing the hill. The accused returned fire with their revolvers. Shah Sufaid and Gulab were injured by the shots fired from Shah Murtaza's gun. Upon this Shah Murtaza, who, as a man of action, had in the meantime constituted himself the leader of the pursuing party, asked the accused persons to surrender their weapons. The accused gave up the weapons as well as a sum of Rs. 90 in nine currency notes of Rs. 10 each. The accused were natives of the village Bolianwal on the other side of the hill Kawa Garh and, as some people from the village Bolianwal came near the scene of encounter apparently to rescue Gulab and his confederates, Shah Murtaza and the pursuing party together with the four complainants, returned towards Campbellpore where Shah Murtaza saw Sardar Dost Mohammad Khan who took them to Captain Richardson (P. W. 35). The latter reported the matter to the District Magistrate. The District Magistrate called the Sub-Inspector of Police, Mirza Ghulam Ghauns (P. W. 41) who recorded the statement of Fazal (P. W. 5) and sent up the case to the Fatehjang police station for investigation.

There is overwhelming evidence on the record to support the prosecution story in its main features. Apart from the consideration of the evidence of the numerous witnesses for the prosecution to me it appears that the evidence of the complainants, Fazal, Ghazan, Muhammad and Abdulla is quite sufficient to justify the conviction of the appellants in the present case. They are ordinary traders who were absolute strangers to the accused and it cannot for a moment be believed that they would implicate innocent persons in a serious crime. The learned counsel for the appellants did not refer me to the evidence of any one of the witnesses for the prosecution or for the defence but contented himself simply by criticizing the judgment of the learned Magistrate. At the end of the argument I asked him to suggest any reason why these four persons, the bullock sellers, should not be believed, and he very frankly had to admit that he could not. This, in my opinion, is quite sufficient to justify the conviction of the appellants.

Some evidence was produced by the accused in their defence suggesting that the whole trouble arose because Shah Murtaza lost heavily while gambling with Gulab. I need hardly say that this evidence is absolutely unconvincing.

Now the question is as to what section of the Indian Penal Code applies and whether the appellants should be convicted of an offence under S. 397, I. P. C., and their sentence enhanced. The trying Magistrate, by a very unsatisfactory process of reasoning, came to the conclusion that the revolvers were really thrust upon the accused and that they belonged to Shah Murtaza who was a naik in the army. There is no evidence whatsoever that Shah Murtaza possessed these revolvers, much less that he had any opportunity of foisting them upon the accused. It may be noted that one of the pistols is what is called, Webly IV Service Revolver. This revolver is not given to every soldier who may be employed in the army, but the military authorities use considerable discrimination and give it only to a few selected soldiers. In any case Shah Murtaza is not proved to have been given this revolver by the military authorities. The other revolver is a private one. I am not prepared to assume that Shah Murtaza came by these revolvers by any unlawful means as there is no evidence on the record for such an assumption.

There is another matter which deserves some consideration. According to the prosecution the complainant's party consisted of four persons, while the accused were only three. Unless the accused were armed with dangerous weapons it does not stand to reason that they could have attacked and overpowered Fazal and his three companions. It is true that, out of these four complainants, one was a man sixty years old. According to the trying Magistrate the other three were "lads of about 25 or 30." Now to speak of the three bullock sellers, whose ages ranged from 25 to 30, as mere lads is nonsense. I would prefer to call them, unless they were suffering from bodily infirmity, as strong, healthy, powerful young men. The conclusion is irresistible that the accused were armed with deadly weapons and could, therefore, successfully overpower and rob the complainants. The learned Magistrate has also remarked that, if the accused were really armed with revolvers they would have certainly injured some of the pursuing party, seeing that there was evidence that shots were exchanged between the pursuers and the pursued at a point blank range of some seventeen or eighten paces. This again is not very convincing. When the accused were pursued by a number of persons they must have been in a panicky and nervous condition and it is just possible that, although they fired their revolvers, they did not hit any body. The evidence of Mr. Morris, Foreman of the Ordinance Department, Rawalpindi, is clear that the two revolvers had been recently fired.

There is another way of looking at the matter. These revolvers must be expensive weapons. At any rate, their price would be a big sum for Shah Murtaza, who is only a naik in a camel corps. According to the prosecution, a sum of Rs. 90 in currency notes was handed over to Shah Murtaza by the accused men when they surrendered at the foot of the Kawa Garh hill.

This money was delivered by Shah Murtaza to the police. Now this sum is not negligible for a man of Shah Murtaza's position and it does not stand to reason that Shah Murtaza for the mere fun of securing the conviction of the accused would throw away this sum of Rs. 90 and the two valuable revolvers. In my opinion the accused had these two revolvers and used them. Their conviction, therefore, under S. 394, I. P. C., was erroneous. The accused ought to have been convicted under S. 397, I. P. C. This being so, the minimum sentence under S. 397 is seven years' rigorous imprisonment. I, therefore, alter the conviction and sentence, and in lieu thereof order that the accused be convicted under S. 397, I. P. C., and sentenced to seven years rigorous imprisonment each. The order as to fine passed by the trial Magistrate shall be maintained.

In a suit for partition of joint property the parties entered into a written compromise which was filed in Court and the suit dismissed in accordance therewith. The compromise provided the manner in which the joint property in suit was to be divided between the parties and, in order to adjust the difference between the prices of the properties which fell to the shares of the two contesting parties, it was provided that a certain sum would be paid by D and G to B and his brothers. A subsequent suit was instituted by B against G and D for the recovery of the amount. In the plaint the relevant terms of the compromise were recited and it was alleged that the amount in suit was payable by the defendants to the plaintiff a month after the date of the compromise. The defendants in their written statement stated that "with reference to para. 2 of the plaint there was no condition as to the payment of amount after one month." In appeal G and D contended that the compromise was not admissible for want of registration.

Held: that as the terms of the agreement had been admitted by the defendants, the question of the admissibility or otherwise of the compromise did not arise: 1 Lah. 436, Rel. on.

The amount was to be paid after one month. B brought a suit to recover the amount. D contended that the suit was time barred according to Art. 111.

Judgment.—This is the defendant's appeal from the decree, dated 5th May 1927, of the District Judge of Gujranwala, passed in a suit brought by the plaintiff for the recovery of Rs. 633-5-4 against the defendants.

It appears that in a suit for partition of joint property the parties entered into a written compromise on 21st August 1922, which was filed in Court and the suit dismissed in accordance therewith. The compromise provided the manner in which the joint property in suit was to be divided between the parties and, in order to adjust the difference between the prices of the properties which fell to the shares of the two contesting parties, it was provided that Rs. 633-5-4 would be paid by Duni Chand and Gurdas Mal to Baij Nath and his three brothers.

The suit out of which this second appeal has arisen, was instituted by Baij

Nath against Gurdas Mal and Duni Chand on 3rd October 1925 for the recovery of the above amount. In para. 2 of the plaint the relevant terms of the compromise were recited and it was alleged that the amount in suit was payable by the defendants to the plaintiff a month after the date of the compromise. The defendants in their written statement in para. 2 merely stated that > with reference to para. 2 of the plaint there was no condition as to the payment of amount after one month.

They must, therefore, be deemed to have admitted the other allegations made in para 2 of the plaint. The suit was defended mainly on the ground that it was barred by time. It was dismissed by the trial Court, but on appeal the District Judge has decreed it.

The main questions have been discussed before me. One is of limitation and the other is of admissibility of the compromise for want of registration. It will be convenient to dispose of the second point first.

No objection to the admissibility of the compromise for want of registration was taken in the trial Court. The matter was not even raised before the District Judge. It has been raised for the first time in the grounds of appeal to this Court. Whether this question could be raised under the circumstances is a matter which I need not decide, but I hold that, in view of the fact that in para. 2 of their written statement, the defendants must be taken to have admitted the existence of the agreement and the terms thereof, the question of the admissibility of the compromise does not arise. Bisheshar Lal v. Mt. Bhuri (1), cited by the appellants, does not help them at all. On the other hand there is a remark in that judgment which clearly supports the view that I have taken in this case. In that case the document was held to be inadmissible in evidence for want of registration. The defendant had not admitted the contents thereof, but when he was put in the witness-box a question was asked from him whether he admitted the execution of the document and he replied in the affirmative. It was contended that the defendant having admitted the execution of the document the objection as to its inadmissibility for want of registration was not open to him. The learned Judges held that the mere admission of the execution of the document did not debar the party from objecting to its admissibility for want of registration and they distinguished certain cases which were cited on behalf of the party who wanted to rely on the document. In those cases it was held that if the contents of the document have been admitted then the objection to its admissibility is not open to the party so admitting. As in this case the terms of the agreement have been admitted by the defendants the question of the admissibility or otherwise of the compromise does not arise.

With regard to limitation: the counsel for the appellant contends that Art. 111, Sch. 1, Lim. Act, governs the case. That article provides a period of limitation of three years for a suit by a vendor of immovable property for personal payment of unpaid purchase money. I am unable to understand how the plaintiff in this case can be said to be a vendor of immovable property and how the defendants can be called purchasers of that property. The transaction in this case was one of partition of joint property. It was not a case of sale and amount in suit could not be described as purchase money. I am, therefore, unable to hold that Art. 111 applies to this case. No other article of the Limitation Act was relied upon by the learned counsel and I am aware of none which applies to the circumstances of the case. It follows, therefore, that Art. 120 governs this case and admittedly the suit is within limitation according to that article. It is not necessary to discuss the next question whether the acknowledgments relied upon by the respondent save the limitation. The learned District Judge has held that they do, with this exception: that such acknowledgments do not save limitation as against Duni Chand, defendant, because it has not been established that they were made either by him or under his authority. I am inclined to think that the conclusion of the learned District Judge, that they bind Gurdas Mal, is correct. For this reason also the suit was not barred by time as against Gurdas Mal, but, as I have held that Art. 120 governs the case, no question of acknowledgment arises, I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Criminal Revn. No. 1520 of 1926, Decided on 3rd December 1927, made by Sess. Judge, Shahpur.

Criminal P. C., S. 139-A—Magistrate should weigh the evidence as it stands and find if the evidence is reliable.

Where a right of public way is denied and the person denying as well as the person complaining produce evidence the Magistrate should take the evidence as it stands and see whether, on the face of it, if there was no evidence to the contrary, he could come to the conclusion that the evidence was false and was, therefore, unreliable. It is not a correct procedure that he should weigh the evidence produced by both sides and then come to the conclusion which he believes or which he prefers : *A. I. Facts.—Malik Kanshi Ram, on 13th February 1925, complained under S. 133, Criminal P. C., that he and the accused (six persons) were the joint owners of the vacant sites as shown at Nos. 6 and 13 on the plan filed by him, that the accused has put walls on the boundaries of plot 6 which have obstructed the public ways marked Nos. 2 and 7 going from Pipliwala well and Baghwala well to the abadi, that this obstruction should be removed under S. 133, Criminal P. C., and the walls should be demolished. The accused denied the existence of any public right in respect of the way through plot 6. The complainant produced 11 witnesses, and the accused produced four witnesses in support of their respective positions. The accused further pleaded that the so-called way was never recorded in any revenue records. The Magistrate came to the conclusion that the evidence produced by the accused was not reliable. The accused, on conviction by Chaudhury Pir Mohammad exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the 1st Class in the Shahpur District were directed by order, dated 15th April 1926, under S. 137, Criminal P. C., to demolish the walls erected by them. The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds :

Grounds.—The principles laid down as applicable to such cases in a number of rulings, e. g., Phalla v. Niaz Ahmad (1), A. I. R. 1923 Oudh 152, A. I. R. 1924 All. 1, Abdul Wahid Khan v. Abdulla Khan (2) and A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 268, are that the provisions of S. 133, Criminal P. C., are not intended to be applicable to a case where there is a bona fide dispute as to the existence of public way ; that such a dispute should be left to be determined by a civil Court; that these summary powers were primarily intended to be exercised in cases where there was no question that the way was one vested in the public, and when that question is seriously disputed and its decision becomes a difficult matter of mixed fact and law, the Magistrate clearly had jurisdiction to exercise his discretion by declining to decide it and sending the parties to the civil Court ; that private property cannot be converted into public merely because it looks as though it ought to be, and because to do so would be convenient to a section of the public who have enjoyed permissible user over it.

All these principles have been overlooked by the learned Magistrate. He has inspected the spot, but it is admitted that the alleged public way passes through the admittedly private property of the parties. It is also clear from the revenue records that the revenue authorities never recognized this pag dandi (a footpath) to be a regular thoroughfare and never recorded it as such during any settlement The fact that people pass through the property of the accused, which was lying as a waste land, as a short-cut, does not necessarily establish the right of the public to its user. A difficult matter of mixed facts and law was involved in this case which ought to have been referred to a civil Court.

In a recent case, A. I. R. 1926 Patna 170, Thakursao v. Abdul Aziz (3), it was held that all that the Magistrate has to find out, is whether the denial by the respondent, is bona fide or a mere pretence. He can proceed to make his order absolute only when he is satisfied that the denial is a mere pretence. If he finds that the denial is bona fide, his jurisdiction is ousted and he has no authority to enquire further. The Magistrate is not entitled to demand that the evidence shall be sufficient to satisfy him that no public right exists. The only condition is that upon the material before him, the Magistrate must have no reason to think the evidence false. The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to weigh the evidence and to determine on which side the balance leans. In the case under reference the Magistrate has clearly discussed the evidence of both sides and tried to weigh it. There is clear room for difference of opinion. It cannot possibly be said that the denial by the respondent was a mere pretence and if the denial is held to be bona fide, that was enough to oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate.

In view of the authorities quoted, it is recomended, therefore, that the order of the Magistrate making the conditional order, given to remove the obstruction from the way, absolute, may be set aside and the complainant referred to the civil Court.

Order.—This case has been referred by the learned Sessions Judge on the ground that the learned Magistrate in proceedings under S. 133, Criminal P. C., is not entitled to proceed under that section and the following sections where there is a bona fide dispute about the right of the public to pass over a certain path. This I do not consider is the law: see Abdul Wahid Khan v. Abdullah Khan (2), Ramsagar v. Alek Naskar (4) in which the matter has been discussed at great length. The rulings are under the old law and even under that law the latest pronouncements of the Courts are in favour of the view that the Magistrate has jurisdiction. S. 139-A, which has been recently enacted now lays down that the Magistrate in such an enquiry has to find if there is any reliable evidence in support of the denial of the party alleged to cause the obstruction.

As to what the learned Magistrate has to do, to determine that question, the only authority which I have been able to find is Thakursao v. Abdul Aziz (3). It is there pointed out that reliable evidence is evidence of reliable persons. I take it that what is really meant is not that the Magistrate should weigh the evidence produced by both sides and then come to the conclusion which he believes or which he prefers, but the Magistrate should take the evidence as it stands and see whether on the face of it, if there was no evidence to the contrary, he could come to the conclusion that the evidence was false and was, therefore, unreliable. I have read the evidence given in this case and I do not see that on the face of it this evidence is unreliable or of unreliable persons. The order of the Magistrate shows clearly that he proceeded to weigh the evidence and to inspect the spot and then came to the conclusion that the evidence given by the petitioners was unreliable. This, in my opinion, was a wrong exercise of the powers given under S. 139-A. Although a Magistrate has jurisdiction to decide whether the evidence is reliable or not, in this particular case the Magistrate has failed to notice how he had to arrive at that finding. I, therefore, accept the reference and set aside the order of the learned Magistrate making the conditional order to remove the obstruction absolute.

Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Appellant.

Fakir Chand—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The main point urged in this second appeal is concluded by the findings of fact arrived at by the learned District Judge. The plaintiff-respondent sued the defendant-appellant for recovery of Rs. 807-2-0 due on foot of a pro-note which was admittedly executed by the defendant in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 650. The defence set up was want of consideration. The trial Court accepted this plea and dismissed the suit, but on appeal the learned District Judge, after carefully going through the evidence and examining the story set up by the defendant-appellant in all its aspects, came to the conclusion that he had failed to prove that the pro-note had been executed without consideration. Mr. Mehr Chand for the appellant has tried to attack this finding, but he has been unable to point out any substantial error in procedure which would justify interference by this Court on second appeal. It must, therefore, be held that the defendant has failed to prove that the pro-note was without consideration.

The second point urged by Mr. Mehr Chand is that in the pro-note no rate of interest is mentioned and as the plaintiff has failed to prove that he made any demand from the defendant before the institution of the suit, no interest was legally payable. In support of his contentions he relies on a decision of the Madras High Court reported as Best v. Haji Muhammad Sait (1). There are, no doubt, certain observations in that ruling which support Mr. Mehr Chand's contention, but so far as I am aware the vew taken there has never been accepted as correct by this or any other Court. The question was recently considered by a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court in Framroz Eduljee Dinshaw v. Mahomed Essa (2) where Macleod, C. J. (Coyajee, J., concurring) held that the liability on a pro-note payable on demand arises from the date of the note from which date the time of limitation begins to run and not from the date on which a demand is made for payment. Where therefore such a note is silent as to interest, interest is claimable under S 80, Negotiable Instruments Act, at 6 per cent. from the date of the note. Following this ruling I hold that the learned District Judge was right in allowing plaintiff interest at 6 per cent. from the date of pro-note till realization.

No further point was urged. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

First Appeal No. 124 of 1927, Decided on 30th January 1928, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Simla, D/- 10th November 1926.

Civil P. C., S. 47 — Liquidator of decree-holder bank buying property of judgment-debtor at auction sale—Suit by judgment-debtor for declaration that the sale is void is barred.

Where a suit was filed by a judgment-debtor for a declaration that the auction sale was null and void, inasmuch as the auction purchaser, the liquidator of the decree-holder bank was not competent to bid for and purchase any property as liquidator under the company law even with the permission of the executing Court.

Held: that the suit was barred under S. 47. [P 669 C 1]

Muhammad Amin Khan—for Appellant.

Judgment.—This was a suit by a judgment-debtor of the name of P. W. Fitzholmes for a declaration that the sale of his estate consisting of Carlton Hotel and the Craigs Court situated in Simla that had been confirmed by the executing Court was null and void, inasmuch as the auction purchaser, Mr. Hunter, the liquidator of the decree-holder, the Bank of Upper India in liquidation, was not competent to bid for and purchase any property as liquidator, even though he had obtained the permission of the executing Court to do so. Thus the plaintiff's contention was that the liquidator had no power under the Indian Companies Act to purchase the estate. Mr. Hunter pleaded, inter alia, that the suit was barred by S. 47, Civil P. C. The trial Court, i. e, the Senior Subordinate Judge of Simla, overruled this plea on the ground that he was for the moment sued not as a party to the suit but because he was a liquidator

that the suit was filed under company law against the liquidator for his actions as a liquidator.

Eventually the learned Senior Subordinate Judge found that the liquidator acted beyond his powers in bidding for and purchasing the property and he further came to the conclusion that the sale was for that reason null and void.

The liquidator has come up to this Court in first appeal

Mr. Bishan Narain accepted service of the notice of appeal on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent, but he appeared before us to-day to represent, that he had not yet received instructions from the respondent and asked for an adjournment. He further stated that he had not yet been engaged by the respondent; but this was not consistent with having accepted service on his behalf. In these circumstances we were unable to allow an adjournment and Mr. Bishan Narain withdrew.

Turning now to the liquidator's contention it is quite clear to us that the suit was not entertainable. Whatever should be the nature of the dispute that may arise in execution proceeding between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder or his representative, it must be decided by the executing Court, and if either party should be dissatisfied with the decision of that Court his only remedy is by way of appeal against that decision. In the present case assuming for the sake of argument that the liquidator's act of bidding at the auction was ultra vires, the judgment-debtor was in no way precluded from urging this before the executing Court, and decision of that Court on that point could be questioned by the party aggrieved thereby by an appeal to the High Court. S. 47 is comprehensive enough to cover all disputes that may arise between a decree-holder and his judgment-debtor in execution proceedings, and the contention now raised by the judgment-debtor should have been raised in the executing Court. We therefore find that the suit was not competent and should have been dismissed on that ground.

The appeal is accordingly accepted and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Judgment. — This second appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption with respect to 34 kanals and 4 marlas of land. The land in dispute was mortgaged by defendant 2 in favour of defendant 1 for Rs. 1,000 by a deed dated 27th March 1925. The plaintiff alleged that the transaction was in reality a sale and sued for pre-emption. The trial Court found that the transaction was a mortgage and dismissed the suit with costs. This decision was affirmed by the learned District Judge on appeal. The plaintiff has filed a second appeal and the sole point for decision is whether the transaction in dispute was a sale or a mortgage. This appears to me to be a "question of fact" and not of law and consequently no second appeal is competent. On behalf of the appellant the only authorities in point which were referred to are Tikaya v. Dharam (1) and Bishen Singh v. Mt. Paro (2). The first ruling is no doubt in favour of the appellant but the view taken therein by Stogden, J., was dissented from in Budha Mal v Gulab (3). In fact it appears from the latter ruling (vide p. 181) that Stogden, J., himself expressed doubts subsequently about the correctness of the view taken by him in Tikaya v. Dharam (1). In Bishen Singh v. Mt. Paro (2) the question raised before me does not appear to have been argued at all and consequently the attention of the learned Judges was apparently not invited to the point. In Sunder Das v. Dhanpat (4) it was held following Budha Mal v. Gulab (3) that the question whether a transaction is a mortgage or a sale is one of fact and not of law. The learned counsel for the appellant has drawn my attention to several authorities which lay down that the true construction of the terms of a document is a question of law and not of fact; but in the present case the question whether the transaction was a mortgage or sale does not depend merely upon the construction of the terms of the document but also upon the surrounding circumstances: cf. Jagdish v. Mansingh (5). Johnstone, J.—The plaintiffs in this case are the lineal descendants of Kanshi Ram deceased. On 6th October 1898, Kanshi Ram and Sukh Dial took a mortgage in equal shares without possession, of 1,094 bighas of land from two brothers, Jiwan Mal and Wazir Chand and advanced Rs. 3,500. Interest was fixed at 14 per cent per mensem and if a default occurred, the deed provided for compound interest at Re. 1-9-0 per cent per mensem. Amongst other conditions in the mortgage-deed was one that, if principal and interest were not paid off in ten years, the mortgagees could take possession of the whole land. The share of Sukh Dial was redeemed and is not now a subject of controversy.

Two main complications occurred after the execution of the deed:

(a) It had been provided by the deed that the mortgagors should not alienate any portion of the mortgaged land, but might sell portions in order to pay off the debts after two years. The mortgagors made certain alienations: they sold 600 kanals to Rai Sahib Lala Maya Das, the father of defendants 4 to 6, and another plot of about the same area to defendant 7 and a third plot of 200 kanals to defendant 9. The matter did not rest there for Rai Sahib Maya Das mortgaged some of the land he had acquired to defendant 10, while defendant 7 transferred his piece of land by sale to defendant 8. Finally the mortgagors exchanged some of the mortgaged land with other land.

(b) The second complication in the case has arisen from the fact that at the last settlement the village of Deowal, which contained the mortgaged area, was divided into two villages, one of which retained the old name and the other was named Chabba. This event has caused some confusion in the tracing out of the mortgaged lands

The plaintiffs sued for possession, in accordance with the provisions of the mortgage-deed, of the half-share of the lands mortgaged now in the possession of the original mortgagors or their transferees by sale, exchange or mortgage. The defendants resisted the claim on various grounds, but in view of what follows it is unnecessary to detail them here.

The trial Court considered, for reasons which are explained in its judgment that it was desirable to ascertain the charges on the different portions of the lands in suit, and in the result it passed a decree to the effect that the plaintiffs should get possession ; but it postponed the execution of the decree until the plaintiffs should realize their money due from the lands in possession of certain defendants, and directed that, in the event of those defendants paying within three months the decree should not be executed against any of the defendants.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and the grounds of appeal may be conveniently summarized under four heads :

(1) That the decree should have been for possession simpliciter.

(2) That the charges on the property have been wrongly decided.

(3) That one particular khewat number has been erroneously entered in the decree.

(4) That they should have been awarded costs on the market value of the property fixed by them at Rs. 75,000 in their plaint and not objected to by the defendants.

The lower Court pointed out that some defendants had paid considerable sums of money, while others had wrongly retained money, and that a decree for possession simpliciter would relegate them all to the same position. This matter has been stressed by some of the counsel for the defendants in the course of arguments before us. On the other hand, Mr. Jagan Nath has contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that there is clear authority for the view that a decree for possession only was the proper decree to pass. The first authority on which he relied was Kuman v. Sultani Mal (1). In that case the lower Courts had, as here, entered into an elaborate examination as to the amount of the lien, and it was held by the Division Bench that, if the plaintiff was to have possession, it was sufficient that he should have a decree for possession as mortgagee simpliciter, " the matter of the amount of the lien being left to be decided upon redemption." That ruling was followed in Khota Ram v. Nawaz (2). A similar decision was given in Gokul Parsad v. Sitla Parsad (3), where the mortgagors were not permitted to redeem their mortgages in a suit for possession brought by the mortgagees.

This view was not taken in Bakhtawar Singh v. Bakhtawar Singh (4), where the lower Court had passed a decree similar to the one now under appeal before us. No allusion was made to Gokul Parsad v. Sitla Parsad (3) and the judgment professed to follow Muhammad Sher Khan v. Swami Dayal (5). All that was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the last-named case was that a mortgagor had statutory right to redeem whether or not the mortgage was one in which by S. 93, T. P. Act, the rights and liabilities of the parties were to be determined by their contract. There is nothing in that decision, as far as I can ascertain, which supports the contention that mortgagors and persons holding from them can claim to redeem in a suit brought by the mortgagees for possession in accordance with the terms of the mortgage-deed. It is, no doubt, desirable that a multiplicity of suits should be avoided, but the defendants have had many years within which to sue for redemption, and in view of the previous decisions of this Court it must be held that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for possession simpliciter. I find no force in the distinction sought to be drawn by the defendant's learned counsel, namely, that in the present suit there was a default in the payment of principal and interest, whereas in Kiman v. Sultani Mal (1) the default was in the payment of interest only. The same principle certainly applies.

In consequence of the conclusion just reached it is unnecessary for us to discuss the questions regarding the amounts of the charges on the different portions of the lands in dispute. Those questions will have to be decided when the defendants seek to redeem the property.

It was next contended by Mr. Jagan Nath that the decree wrongly shows Khewat No. 114 Chabba as one of the areas for which possession is granted. No mention was made of that number in the plaint, at p. 2 of the printed book, nor was that number stated in the first part of the decree itself. We have been referred in this connexion to pp 23 to 27 of the printed book, where a chart of jamabandis and Record of Rights are given. The original Khewat number was 117. In the Settlement of 1906-07 two numbers were formed, i e, 186 (Sc. Deowal) and 114 Chabba. A reference to pp. 40 and 41 of the printed paper-book shows that 114 Chabba became 198 Chabba and it is clear that the lower Court accidentally entered the older number for the the latter one when the decree was drawn up.

On the question of the plaintiff's costs in the lower Court I see no reason to interfere. It may be that the market value of the property was what is stated by the plaintiffs in their plaint, but the plaintiffs so long delayed in bringing their suit that I consider that the amount of costs awarded is not unreasonable.

Defendant 5 has preferred cross-objections with regard to one khata number, 135, but his counsel has not made out a case for a modification of the decree in that respect.

The result is that the appeal is accepted and the decree of the lower Court is varied to this effect: that the plaintiffs will get possession of the lands mentioned in the decree No. 198 Chabba being substituted for No. 114 Chabba. The cross-objections are dismissed. The plaintiffs will get their costs in this Court in equal proportions from the defendants who have contested the appeal.

Second Appeal No. 2634 of 1927, Decided on 23rd April 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Ambala, D/- 9th August 1927.

(a) Appeal—Forum—Pre-emption suit.

Where there has been no prejudice to the appellant by the hearing of the appeal by a Court of inferior jurisdiction, when, as a matter of fact, it lay to a Court of superior jurisdiction, the order of such inferior Court should not be interfered with in second appeal: [P 671 C 2]

D. C. Ralli—for Appellant.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal—for Respondent 1.

Jai Lal, J.—Rahmat Ullah, respondent filed a suit to pre-empt a house purchased by the appellant Mt. Ilahi Jan. The price of the house mentioned in the deed of sale was Rs. 7,000; but the plaintiff alleged that the house was really sold for Rs. 2,000. The trial Judge held that Rs. 7,000 was actually paid and that the market value was about the same. He therefore passed a decree for pre-emption on payment of Rs. 7,000.

From this decree an appeal having been lodged by the plaintiff in the Court of the District Judge of Ambala, an objection was raised on behalf of the vendee that that Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, as according to the finding of the trial Court, and also according to its decree the value of the subject-matter was Rs. 7,000. This objection was overruled by the learned Judge who heard the appeal and came to the conclusion that Rs. 2,000 was the amount that had been actually paid by the vendee and that the same was the real price of the house in suit. He, therefore, varied the decree of the trial Court by reducing the amount payable by the plaintiff to Rs. 2,000.

Against this decree of the District Judge, the defendant Mt. Ilahi Jan appeals to this Court and it is contended on her behalf that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal and that is the only point debated before us.

The learned District Judge in support of his view has relied upon Imam Din v. Ghulam Mahomed (1) which certainly supports it But the later view of the Chief Court of the Punjab and also of this Court appears to be to the contrary. In Jaswant Ram v. Moti Ram (2), a Full Bench of this Court held that in a suit for the pre-emption of a mortgage it is the amount fixed by the trial Court as really due from the mortgagor to the mortgagee which determines the forum of appeal even if, according to the valuation as originally fixed by the plaintiff, the appeal lay to another Court. The learned Chief Justice, in the course of his judgment, remarked that > in a redemption suit the subject-matter is not the immovable property mortgaged by the debtor to his creditor, for the property admittedly belongs to the mortgagor and the dispute between the parties relates not to the ownership of the property, but to the amount which the mortgagor should, before recovering the property, pay to the mortgagee. In other words, it is the mortgagee's interest in the property.

(2) A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 376=7 Lah. 570 (F.B.).

The respondent's counsel relied upon this observation in support of his contention that that case is distinguishable from the present case. Later, however, his Lordship remarked as follows :

> In this province, it has been repeatedly held that a Court cannot grant a decree for possession of immovable property on payment of a sum of money which exceeds the pecuniary limit of its jurisdiction, vide inter alia Muhammad Afzal Khan v. Nand Lal (3) and Abdul Rahman v. Charagh Din (4), and there is no cogent reason for departing from this rule which has been followed for many years.

This remark fully applied to this case which involved a decree in favour of the plaintiff for possession of immovable property on payment of an amount fixed by the Court.

In the present case, the question of the jurisdiction of the trial Court does not arise because admittedly the Senior Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to entertain the suit without regard to the value of the subject matter ; but the course of appeal did depend upon such valuation. Similarly, in Budha Mal v. Rallia Ram (5) a Division Bench of this Court held that in a suit for rendition of accounts, where the plaintiff had valued his relief approximately at Rs. 1,100 but was granted a decree for Rs. 11,000, odd, it was the amount ascertained by the trial Court to be due to the plaintiff which should be regarded as the value of the suit for purposes of determining the forum of appeal. The principle underlying this judgment applies to this case. In Chiragh Din v. Seraj Din (6) it was held that where in a pre-emption suit the trial Court decreed the claim on payment of Rs. 60, the price paid by the vendee, plus Rs. 71-2-0 representing compensation for improvements effected by the vendee, an appeal from the decree would lie to the Court which was competent to hear the appeal on the assumption that the valuation of the suit was Rs. 60 and not Rs. 60 plus Rs. 71-2-0 and that the latter amount should not be taken into consideration in determining the value of the suit in a pre-emption case for purposes of jurisdiction. The point involved in the present case did not directly arise in the reported case ; but the ratio decidendi was that the amount which determines the jurisdiction of the appellate Court is the amount found by the trial Court as the price payable by the pre-emptor. It seems to me, therefore, that the appeal lay to this Court and not to the District Judge.

It is, however, contended by the respondent's counsel, that S. 11, Suits Valuation Act, governs this case, and that the appellant has not been prejudicially affected by the disposal of the appeal by the District Judge and that this Court therefore should not interfere with the decree of the District Judge. There seems to be force in this contention especially because the District Judge has found that the value of the property was Rs. 2,000 and that the same was the amount paid by the vendee. This finding was not contested before us. In this connexion, it may be mentioned that the finding of the Senior Subordinate Judge as to the market value of the property was not so definite as it should have been. Admittedly if the view of the District Judge as to the value of the house and the price paid therefor is correct then the appeal lay to him.

In the peculiar circumstances of this case, it is not necessary for us to decide whether the hearing of the appeal by a Court of inferior jurisdiction when, as a matter of fact, it lay to a Court of superior jurisdiction, does by itself prejudice the party who has taken objection to such jurisdiction. It is a matter on which there is a considerable conflict of opinion between the various Courts. I hold that there has been no prejudice to the appellant by the assumption of jurisdiction by the District Judge and would dismiss this appeal, leaving the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

TEK CHAND, J.

Mt. Talia Bibi—Decree-holder—Appellant.

v.

Nur Din—Judgment-debtor—Respondent.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 1501 of 1927, Decided on 24th November 1927, from order of Addl. District Judge, Lahore, D/- 3rd March 1927.

Civil P. C., O. 21, Rr. 99 and 103—Order directing the decree-holder to file a suit against persons offering resistance—Failure to file a suit does not make it conclusive.

The provisions of O. 21, Rr. 97 to 103 are of a restrictive nature and strict compliance with them is necessary. They take away the common law right of the decree-holder or the persons who offer resistance in their own rights to have their respective claims adjudicated upon in a regular civil suit and therefore they must be strictly construed and if in a particular case it is shown that the provisions of any of these rules have not been strictly complied with the penal consequence barring the suit cannot legally flow therefrom. [P 673 C 2]

An order passed by the Subordinate Judge, on an application by the person obstructing, directing the decree-holder to file a suit against the persons in possession and obstructing decree holder to take possession is not one which is passed under O. 21, R. 99, and the failure of the decree-holder to file such a suit does not under O. 21, R. 103, make it conclusive as between the decree-holder and those persons. [P 674 C 1]

B. D. Kureshi—for Appellant.

Duni Chand—for Respondent.

Tek Chand, J.—This is an appeal arising out of proceedings in execution of a decree, which was obtained as far back as 25th March 1918, by the appellant Mt. Talia Bibi against Nur Din respondent, for possession of a kotha situate in the city of Lahore. The decree-holder commenced proceedings in execution soon after the decree was passed, but for more than six years the judgment-debtor managed to have the execution delayed by putting forward all kinds of objections. After these objections had been rejected the executing Court, on 24th March 1923, issued a warrant for delivery of possession. The bailiff who went to execute the warrant found one Muhammad Din and certain other persons in possession. These persons refused to surrender possession and alleged that they were not holding under Nur Din (judgment-debtor) but were the tenants of one Mt. Allah Rakhi, a washerwoman. On that date Mt. Allah Rakhi handed over a written application to the bailiff stating that she was the owner of the house, that she had not been made a party to the suit and that the persons actually in possession were her relations who were holding the house as tenants under her. The bailiff submitted this application to the Court along with his report dated 5th April 1925, stating that Muhammad Din, etc., had offered resistance, and asking instructions as to how he should proceed. The case came up before the Court on 14th April 1925, when Mt. Allah Rakhi filed a fresh application purporting to be under O. 21, R. 97, Civil P. C, in which she repeated her previous allegations and prayed that she be not dispossessed as she was not bound by the decree. This application was rejected by the Court on 22nd May 1925, on the ground that O.21 R. 97 governed applications filed by decree-holders or auction-purchasers and not by persons who claimed to be in possession in their own right and who had offered resistance. The Court, further, held that if the application was really intended to be one under O. 21, R. 100, it was premature as the applicant had not been actually dispossessed. Accordingly it issued a fresh warrant and directed that if the judgment-debtor offered resistance he should be arrested This order, however proved to be infructuous and another warrant had to be issued. Resistance was again offered, and this time the Court ordered that notices should issue to Shahab Din and Ghulam Muhammad, etc., who had offered resistance. It took considerable time to serve them, but eventually on 20th October 1925, the decree-holder and counsel for Shahab Din and Ghulam Muhammad were present and the following issue was framed:

Are Ghulam Muhammad and Shahab Din, etc., in possession as tenants under Nur Din.

The case was adjourned to 2nd November 1925 for evidence. It had to be adjourned once again, as a compromise was mooted, but the Court directed that if no compromise was effected by that date the parties must be ready with their evidence.

On 25th November it transpired that no compromise had been effected nor were any witnesses for the parties present. The Court refused to give to the decree-holder further opportunity to produce her evidence and ordered that no proceedings could be taken against the "trespassers" as it had not been proved that they were holding possession under Nur Din, judgment-debtor. The execution proceedings were accordingly consigned to the record room but it was remarked that if the decree-holder was so advised she could file a regular suit against Mt. Allah Rakhi or the "trespassers."

On 15th June 1926, the decree-holder without having instituted any suit against Mt. Allah Rakhi or the trespassers filed another application moving the executing Court to be put in possession alleging that Nur Din, judgment-debtor, was the real person in possession and that Mt. Allah Rakhi had told her that she had never been in possession at all nor had she anything to do with it. This application was dismissed in limine by the executing Court without notice to the judgment-debtor on the ground that it had, on 25th November 1925, directed the decree-holder to file a regular suit against Mt. Allah Rakhi or the persons who claimed to hold under her and as this had not been done, the executing Court was incompetent to proceed any further with the matter.

Against this order the decree-holder preferred an appeal to the Additional District Judge, Lahore, who held that the previous order of the executing Court, dated 25th November 1925, was really one passed under O. 21, R. 99, and that it had become final inasmuch as no appeal against it had been filed nor had any suit been instituted as required by O. 21, R. 103, Civil P. C. He was also of opinion that even if Nur Din, judgment-debtor, was, as a matter of fact, in possession at the time of the filing of the present application, the executing Court could not make an enquiry into this matter. He, accordingly, dismissed the appeal.

The decree-holder has preferred a second appeal to this Court and it is contended on her behalf that the lower Courts have erred in holding that the order of 25th November 1925, was conclusive of the rights of the parties and that it debarred the executing Court from taking further proceedings in execution of the decree.

The first question to be decided is whether the lower Courts are right in holding that the aforesaid order was passed under O. 21, R. 99, Civil P. C. Now it is clear that an order under that rule presupposes the filing of an application under O. 21, R. 97, which reads as follows:

> Where the holder of a decree for the possession of immovable property or the purchaser of any such property sold in execution of a decree is resisted or obstructed by any person in obtaining possession of the property, he may make an application to the Court complaining of such resistance or obstruction.

It will be seen that this rule contemplates proceedings being started on an "application" made to the Court by the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser complaining of resistance or obstruction having been offered. The summary of the proceedings given above indicates that no such application was presented by the decree-holder in this case and, indeed, Mr. Duni Chand Kapur, who has argued the case on behalf of the respondent with considerable ability, admits that he is not able to point out any such application on the record. He, contends, however, that R. 97 does not say that the application must be in writing and that a decree-holder can orally move the Court to take action. But Mr. Duni Chand is unable to state when and at what stage this oral "application" was made. He relies on the circumstance that the decree-holder was allowed to summon witnesses and at one stage she stated that she did not want to proceed against Ghulam Muhammad and from these facts he asks me to conclude that proceedings were being taken at her instance. I am, however, unable to accept this contention. It is clear from the record that investigation into the rights of the persons who had offered resistance had been started by the Court suo motu on the receipt of a report from the nazir and not on any application oral or written made by the decree-holder.

The provisions of O. 21, Rr. 97 to 103 are of a restrictive nature and, in my opinion, strict compliance with them is necessary. They take away the common law right of the decree-holder or the persons who offer resistance in their own rights to have their respective claims adjudicated upon in a regular civil suit and, therefore, they must be strictly construed and if in a particular case it is shown that the provisions of any of these rules have not been strictly complied with, the penal consequence barring the suit cannot legally flow therefrom. Mr Duni Chand has referred me to a Single Bench decision of the Rangoon High Court reported as A. I. R 1925 Rang. p. 374, where it was held that O. 21, R. 97, does not bar an investigation being ordered in anticipation of the obstruction offered by a person in possession. The point decided in that case does not arise here, but counsel argues that the ruling is of value as laying down that strict compliance with its terms is not necessary. It may be mentioned, however, that the decision in the Rangoon case is not in accord with Sobha Ram v. Tulsiram (1) and I may say, with all respect, that if it were necessary to decide the matter, I should be inclined to follow the latter decision.

I must, therefore, hold that the learned Additional District Judge was not right in holding that the order passed by the Subordinate Judge on 25th November 1925, directing the decree-holder to file a suit against the persons in possession was passed under O. 21, R. 99, and the failure of the decree-holder to file such a suit did not under O. 21, R. 103, make it conclusive as between the decree-holder and those persons.

The learned Additional District Judge has given another reason for holding that that order had become conclusive, viz. that no appeal against it had been filed. If, however, that order was (as supposed by the learned Judge) one under O. 21, R. 99, it was not appealable according to the view that has found favour in the Punjab: see inter alia Gulabi Bibi v. Aslam Khan (2). The failure to file an appeal against that order does not, therefore, affect the matter in any way.

I,must, therefore, hold that the grounds on which the decree-holder's application for execution has been dismissed are legally unsound. Accordingly I accept the appeal, set aside the orders of the Courts below and remit the case to the executing Court for enquiry and disposal in accordance with law. Costs shall abide the event.

Fazal Din—Defendant—Appellant.

Second Appeal No. 1482 of 1927, Decided on 13th December 1927, from decree of Senior Sub-Judge, Sialkot, D/-7th March 1927.

Minor—Decree against—Guardian not vigilant of minor's interests—Decree is not binding on the minor.

Where the guardian ad litem of the minor against whom a decree is passed has been guilty of gross negligence and laches in conducting the suit on behalf of the minor the decree so passed can be set aside : 1 Lah. 27 and A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 116, Ref. to. [P 675 C 2]

Mohsin Shah for Shuja Din—for Appellant.

Judgment.—The defendant-appellant Fazal Din or Fazla brought two suits—one against Mt. Muhammad Bibi and her four sons and the other against the said four minors and their uncle Lal Din. The minors' father was dead and their mother had remarried Lal Din. After the death of their father Mt. Muhammad Bibi leased out the minors' land to Fazal Din for five years, but she resumed it before the expiration of that period. The deed of lease was, however, inadmissible in evidence for want of registration and there was the further fact that the mother had no power to lease out the minors' land for so long a period. The former suit was for damages for dispossession before time and the other was based upon a bond. A ministerial officer of the Court was appointed the minors' guardian ad litem in both the cases and both were eventually decreed. In execution of the decree a house of the minors was attached. Lal Din was appointed their guardian for the execution proceedings and he objected that the house was not liable to attachment and sale as the minors were agriculturists. The house was, however, sold and it was purchased by the decree-holder himself The minors now sue to avoid the decrees and the sale. The trial Court decreed their suit in full. On appeal by Fazal Din the learned Senior Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the decree in the bond suit was binding upon the minors but that the decree in the suit for damages was not because the guardian for that suit had been guilty of gross negligence inasmuch as he failed to raise necessary pleas and defend the action properly. With regard to the sale in execution the learned Subordinate Judge held that that too was not binding upon the minors as the guardian for the execution proceedings also had been guilty of gross negligence. Upon these findings the minors were restored to their original rights.

In second appeal preferred by Fazal Din his learned counsel, Mr. Mohsin Shah, has raised only two contentions, viz, (1) that a decree against a minor cannot be set aside on the ground that his guardian for the suit had been guilty of gross negligence in conducting the defence; and (2) that the minors were not entitled to avoid the sale in toto as they had benefited by it to the extent of the part of the sale proceeds paid to another decreeholder.

In support of (1) counsel relies on Imam Din v. Puran Chand (1) in which Scott-Smith, J., held that a decree against a minor cannot be set aside only on proof of fraud and collusion on the part of his guardian, but if the guardian neglected to support the case of the minor and there is nothing to show that he did so deliberately that circumstance alone would not entitle the minor to avoid the operation of the decree. This ruling was also cited before the Senior Subordinate Judge and he did not follow it in view of the later ruling of Scott-Smith, J., in Nawabsingh v. Gurbakhsh Singh (2), in which that learned Judge, considering Ahmad v. Amir (3), Ismail v. Sultan Bibi (4), Jowla v. Hira Singh (5), and C. Punnayah v. R. Viranna (6), came to a different conclusion. There can be no manner of doubt that the ministerial officer of the Court who was appointed guardian ad litem in the suit for damages took no steps whatsoever to defend the action and was guilty of laches. Similarly Lal Din who was the guardian in the execution case did not make any real effort to protect the minor's interests most probably because he was benefited at the expense of the minors inasmuch as the decree as against him was also satisfied by the sale of their house. The decision of the lower appellate Court on this point appears therefore to be correct.

The next question is whether the minors were benefited to any extent by the sale of their house. It may be observed that they were under no personal liability to pay anything and in no case they were liable to lose their house or any other ancestral property. If, therefore, the house sold in satisfaction of a decree in execution of which the house could not be sold they cannot be said to have benefited by the sale. This second contention, therefore, must also be overruled. The result is that the appeal fails and I dismiss it with costs.

Judgment.—In execution of a decree certain properties of the appellant Bhagwan Das were attached and sold. Jodha Mal, the other appellant, was a mortgagee of some of the properties. On 18th July 1927 Jodha Mal's agent Lala Sri Krishan Das made a statement to the effect that he had no objection to the properties being sold free of encumbrances and the amount realized being subsequently paid to him. The properties were accordingly sold. No objections were raised to the sale and the sale was duly confirmed.

A joint appeal has been filed on behalf of Bhagwan Das and Jodha Mal against the order confirming the sale. A preliminary objection is raised that the appeal is not competent as Bhagwan Das has been declared as insolvent and that Jodha Mal as a mortgagee has no right of appeal under S. 47, Civil P. C.

It appears that Bhagwan Das was adjudicated an insolvent on 2nd August 1927, before the confirmation of the sale The learned counsel for the respondent has based his objection on the provisions of O. 22, R. 8, Civil P. C., but in the present instance, Bhagwan Das was declared an insolvent before the appeal was filed and hence that rule does not seem to be in point. The real question for consideration appears to be, whether Bhagwan Das had any right of appeal, after his property had vested in the Receiver on his adjudication as an insolvent. It has been held in Banamali Dutta v Lalit Mohan (1) by the Calcutta High Court that a judgment-debtor who has been adjudicated an insolvent has no right to maintain an appeal against a decision in execution proceedings that certain properties belonging to him were fraudulently concealed by him from his creditors and that the proper person to appeal is the Official Receiver. The present case appears to stand on the same footing. In Pragji Kala v. Assa Jalal (2) it was held that after adjudication an insolvent cannot object to an execution sale: Sakhavantali v. Radha Mohan (3) and A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 556 are also analogous cases and lend support to the same view. I, therefore, hold that Bhagwan Das has no locus standi to maintain this appeal.

As regards Jodha Mal it was conceded that he has no right to appeal under S. 47, Civil P. C., but it was requested that the appeal may be treated as a revision. I see no good reason to adopt this course. There is no doubt that Jodha Mal's agent did state that the property may be sold free of encumbrances. Jodha Mal's grievance is that the learned District Judge has said in his order that the mortgage charge may be paid subject to the validity of the mortgage being determined by a competent Court. There is no specific mention of this point in the statement of Jodha Mal's agent dated 18th July 1927, but it appears from the learned District Judge's order that the intention was to leave this question of validity open. In any case this cannot affect the validity of the sale under appeal. I see no ground for interference in revision. I reject the appeal of both the appellants with costs.

Nand Lal—for Appellant.

M. Sleem for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Broadway, J.—One Amar Singh of mauza Sibian in the District of Ferozepore was murdered on the evening of 8th September 1926. On the following morning a report was made by Hira Singh, lambardar, who stated that he had been informed by one Sajjan that Amar Singh had been killed by Nidhan Singh, Gurdial Singh, Gurdit Singh and Budhu Mochi, all of mauza Sibian. The police went to the spot and discovered that the four persons named could not be found in the village. Gurdit Singh and Budhu were ultimately arrested on 22nd December 1926. Gurdial Singh gave himself up to Sodhi Lal Singh on 25th December 1926. Nidhan Singh is still absconding. On 5th January 1927, Gurdial Singh made a confession before a First Class Magistrate and on 8th January 1927 Budhu did the same. These confessional statements implicated Sodhi Puran Singh and after further investigation Gurdial Singh was tendered a pardon and made an approver, while Puran Singh, Gurdit Singh and Budhu were committed to session to be tried for the murder of the deceased Amar Singh. The learned Additional Sessions Judge found that there was not enough reliable corroboration of Gurdial Singh approver's statement against Puran Singh and Gurdit Singh, who were accordingly acquitted. The approver's statement as against Budhu was held to be sufficiently corroborated by his own confession and, being found guilty, he was sentenced to death under S. 302, I. P. C. He has appealed and the case is also before the Court under S. 374, Criminal P. C.

Dr. Nand Lal on behalf of the appellant has taken us through the evidence in detail and has urged that the evidence in the case is not sufficient to warrant the conclusion arrived at by the learned Sessions Judge. He urged that the confession of the appellants was not a voluntary one and that, therefore, it was inadmissible under S. 24, Evidence Act. He referred to various authorities in support of his contention laying greater stress on Emperor v. Panchkari Dutt (1). I have had already occasion to quote from this authority in Partab Singh v. Emperor (2) and do not, therefore, think it necessary to discuss that case again. The circumstances that existed in Panchkari Dutt's case (1) do not exist in the one under consideration and as was pointed out in Emperor v. Diwan Kahar (3) it is not possible for a Court to say that the making of a confession appears to have been caused by any inducement, threat or promise except upon evidence before it. The inference may be suggested by the confession itself or by the evidence of the prosecution or by the evidence adduced by the accused person or by the surrounding circumstances which the Court is always bound to take into consideration but the conclusion cannot be reached on surmise or conjecture. Whether or not a confession is admissible in evidence is a matter which is to be decided after a full consideration of the evidence and the particular circumstances of each case and in the present instance all that has been pointed out by Dr. Nand Lal is that the appellant, having been arrested on 22nd December 1926, remained in the custody of the police until 8th January 1927, when his confession was recorded. Further it was urged that as the Sub-Inspector (P. W. 28) Khan Muzaffar Khan had stated that he had consulted the Court Inspector and had decided to suggest that one of the persons arrested should be made a witness, it must be inferred that an inducement was offered or a promise made to the appellant which led him to make his confession on 8th January 1927.

A reference to Muzaffar Khan's statement appears to me to raise the very opposite inference. He certainly states that on 19th January 1927, he had made up his mind after consulting the Court Inspector to propose the grant of pardon to either Gurdial Singh or Budhu. It is, however, perfectly clear from his statement that the consultation between him and the Court Inspector took place after 8th January 1927, when Budhu had made his confession. He, Muzaffar Khan, had after 8th January 1927, two confessions before him, the one made on the 5th by Gurdial Singh and the other made on the 8th by Budhu; and having regard to the fact that Sajjan, the man who had reported the matter to the lambardar, had, as he alleged out of fear, declined to give evidence as an eyewitness, it was only natural that the Sub-Inspector should have considered it advisable to attempt to get one of the two arrested persons who had confessed, to give evidence. There is nothing inherently improbable in the approver's statement nor in the confession of the appellant. The one or two differences in their statement, which have been emphasized by Dr. Nand Lal, are in my judgment, minor ones and wholly immaterial.

(2) A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 605=6 Lah. 415.

The story told by the approver is that he and his companions all of whom had some sort of grudge against the deceased, had been hired by Sodhi Puran Singh to kill Amar Singh who had supplanted him as sarbarah lambardar in the village, that they had been promised Rs 600 for the deed and that on the day in question, 8th September 1926, they had discovered that Amar Singh had gone out in connexion with his agricultural pursuits and that it would be a convenient opportunity to waylay, on his return. Accordingly they had gone out armed with gandasas and a chhavi and ambushed him near a pond a short distance from the village. Gurdit Singh had caught the reins of his horse and then pulled him into the pond by his hair while the other three including the approver had hacked him to death with their weapons. After this the horse was tied at a little distance and Amar Singh's corpse dragged to one side. The approver and his companions spent the rest of the night in the village and early in the morning came to know that a report was to be made against them. They endeavoured to get Puran Singh to pay them Rs. 600, but being unable to get the money from him had absconded wandering about in various places till finally, Budhu and Gurdit Singh having returned to their village were arrested and the approver himself thought it advisable to give himself up to Sodhi Lal Singh, hoping that through his assistance he would get pardon.

I see no reason to doubt the approver's complicity in the murder of Amar Singh and agree with the learned Sessions J dge that his statement is sufficiently corroborated by Budhu's own confession and I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

Judgment.* — In order to clearly understand the facts of this case it is necessary to refer to the following pedigree table :

Ghulla Mal
|
Mt. Chandi (daughter) (m) Bihari Lal
|

Nihal Chand (m) Mt. Gangi (daughter) — Mathra Das =(m) Mt. Kishen Devi
Mt. Durgi (daughter).

On the 2nd October 1883 Ghulla Mal mortgaged the house in dispute to one Jamita Mal for Rs. 700 for a term of 30 years. The mortgage-deed contained several onerous conditions, which it is not necessary to detail here. On the 8th May 1908 Jamita Mal's heirs alleging themselves to be full owners of the house sold it for Rs. 2,180 to Tulsi Ram, who in turn sold it to Kashi Ram Chetu Mal and the latter again sold it to Matu Mal defendant-appellant by a registered deed, dated 22nd December 1921, for Rs 3,500. Matu Mal is now in possession of the property and claims to be the owner.

In the meantime Ghulla Mal and Mt. Chandi had died and were succeeded by Mathra Das. On the 1st March 1909 a document (Ex. P.-3) was executed by Mt. Kishen Devi, widow of Mathra Das and Mt. Gangi, his sister, whereby they, describing themselves as the heirs of Ghulla Mal, purported to release the equity of redemption in the aforesaid house to Nihal Chand. This document was written on a stamp-paper worth Rs. 5 only and was described and registered as a deed of release.

On the strength of this deed Nihal Chand on the 18th June 1909, instituted a suit for redemption of the house im-pleading as defendants the heirs of the original mortgagee Jamita Mal and their assignees as defendants. The suit was dismissed on the preliminary point that on the plaintiff's own allegations the term of the mortgage had not expired and the suit was premature.

On the 3rd July 1921, Nihal Chand sold his rights in the equity of redemption to Joti Prashad and on the 23rd December 1921, both Nihal Chand and Joti Prashad instituted the present suit for redemption of the house against the original mortgagee Jamita Mal's heirs, the subsequent transferees (including Matu Mal and Mt. Kishen Devi and Mt. Gangi.) It is important to note that in the plaint the plaintiffs specifically stated that the deed executed by Mt. Kishen Devi and Mt. Gangi in favour of Nihal Chand on the 1st March 1909, (Ex P. 3) on which they based their title was a deed of release.

Mt. Kishen Devi originally admitted the plaintiffs' claim but subsequently she filed a second jawab dawa stating that she had not transferred her rights to Nihal Chand and that she was the victim of fraud. The other defendants contested the suit on various grounds, of which those material for our present purposes are that the deed of the 1st March 1909 relied on by the plaintiffs is ineffectual to pass any title to them inasmuch as:

(a) One of the executants, Mt. Gangi, being the sister of the last male holder, Mathra Das, had no rights to succeed to him.

(b) Mathra Das had left a son Durga Das who should be impleaded as a party.

(c) If Durga Das be not proved to be Mathra Das's son, his widow Mt. Kishen Devi could not by executing a deed of release in favour of a stranger like Nihal Chand invest him with any rights in the equity of redemption.

It is important to note that when this last objection was raised, the plaintiffs, realizing that the deed executed by the two ladies on the 1st March 1909, in favour of Nihal Chand, plaintiff, could confer no legal right on him, definitely took up the position that this deed, though styled as a deed of release, was in reality an "out-and-out sale," the consideration for which was the amount spent by Nihal Chand in defraying the marriage expenses of the daughter of Mt. Kishen Devi. At the trial the plaintiffs led evidence to prove that Nihal Chand had spent large sums of money on the marriage.

The trial Court in its judgment dated 7th July 1924 held that the plaintiffs had no locus standi to sue as the transaction of the 1st March 1909 was in reality a deed of release and not a deed of sale as alleged and that it conferred no title on Nihal Chand. It accordingly dismissed the suit.

The judgment was set aside on an appeal by Lala Topan Ram, District Judge, who ordered a re-trial on the ground that the trial was defective inasmuch as Durga Das, the alleged son and heir of Mathra Das had not been impleaded as a party. Durga Das was accordingly impleaded and fresh evidence led by both sides.

On remand the plaintiffs realizing the weakness of their evidence as to consideration, shifted their position once more and alleged that the deed of 1st March 1909, was neither a deed of release nor an out-and-out sale but was a gift. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge again dismissed the suit holding that Durga Das had not been proved to be the son of Mathra Das and that the deed of 1st March 1909 was really a deed of release and not a valid assignment of the equity of redemption.

On appeal by the plaintiffs the learned District Judge has, however, taken the contrary view and holding the deed to be a gift has held that the plaintiffs had a locus standi to sue and has remanded the case to the trial Court for decision of certain issues which had been undecided by the trial Court.

On second appeal, the first point urged by the defendant-appellant's counsel is that the suit was barred by limitation under Art. 134 as the mortgagee Jamita Mal representing himself to be the full owner of the mortgaged-property had sold it to Tulsi Ram in 1908 and then he had made subsequent alienations in which the house had been described as the property of the transferees. It was contended that this is a pure question of law patent on the face of the record and should be allowed to be raised for the first time in this Court. I am, however, unable to accede to this contention as, in my opinion, the decision of the question depends on facts which are not on the present record and to ascertain which a remand would be necessary.

I am, however, of opinion that the appeal should succeed on the short ground that the plaintiffs-respondents ought not to have been allowed to urge for the first time after remand that the deed of release dated 1st March 1909, in favour of Nihal Chand was in reality a gift. As already pointed out the document in question was executed as a release deed: it was written on a stamp-paper of Rs. 5, which is the duty payable on a release-deed, it was registered as a release-deed, and in the plaint the plaintiffs themselves described it as a release-deed. Subsequently when the defendants objected that a release-deed by Mt. Kishen Devi was ineffectual in law to confer any right on Nihal Chand or his assignee Joti Parshad, the plaintiffs took up the position that it was in reality a deed of sale, the consideration for which was the amount spent by Nihal Chand on the marriage expenses of Mt. Kishen Devi's daughter. At the trial evidence was led to prove the contention and witnesses came forward to depose that Nihal Chand had actually paid the expenses of the marriage in pursuance of this agreement. When that plea failed and the evidence was held to be unreliable the plaintiffs turned round and after remand stated that the deed in question was neither a release nor a sale but was in reality a gift. In my opinion the plaintiffs should not have been allowed to shift their ground in this manner.

The learned District Judge has referred to a Single Bench decision of the Chief Court reported as Nidhan Singh v. Sham Singh (1) and Mr. Fakir Chand for the respondents has relied strongly on it. It was decided there that > deeds and contracts of the people of India ought to be liberally construed and literal sense is not so much to be regarded as the real meaning of the parties.

This ruling is, however, wholly distinguishable from this case and the passage cited must be taken as having reference to the peculiar facts of that case. In the present case, it is not merely a question of putting a liberal construction on the terms of a deed, but the real point is whether a literate person, residing in a town and belonging to one of the commercial classes also having special knowledge of the real nature of the transaction had deliberately taken up the position that the transaction was a sale for which consideration had actually passed, should be subsequently allowed to urge that the transaction was in reality one of a purely gratuitous character and that consideration was not intended to pass and did not in fact pass.

It is also important to note that before me Mr. Fakir Chand has not taken up the position that the document was described as a release-deed by inadvertence or owing to the ignorance of the scribe, but he has boldly asserted that the transaction was deliberately given the form of a release-deed to avoid payment of stamp duty. If this was so the plaintiffs cannot invoke the aid of the rulings which lay down that deeds executed by ignorant people in this country should be liberally construed.

Mr Fakir Chand has not sought to contest the finding of the trial Court that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that the transaction was one of sale, nor has he assailed the view of the lower Court that taken as a deed of release it was ineffectual to confer any legal title on Nihal Chand or his assignee Joti Parshad. He admits that one of the executants, Mt. Gangi, had no right whatever in the equity of redemption of the house which belonged to her deceased brother, and which on his death had vested in Mt. Kishen Devi. Mr. Fakir Chand also admits that Mt. Kishen Devi could validly release, relinquish or surrender her rights only in favour of a person, who was one of her heirs or had an interest vested or contingent in it and concedes that Nihal Chand is not such a person. I hold, therefore, that the lower Courts acted illegally in allowing the plaintiffs to set up an entirely new and inconsistent case after remand.

I wish also to point out that Mr. Fakir Chand has not suggested any valid reason for holding the document to be a deed of gift. The phraseology used in it is clear and explicit and there are no materials on the record which would indicate that the transaction was anything different from what it purported to be.

For the foregoing reasons I hold that the plaintiffs had no locus standi to maintain the suit. Accordingly I accept the appeal, set aside the order of the learned District Judge and dismiss the suit. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case and especially in view of the fact that both parties had put forward several frivolous pleas, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throught.

Moti Sagar and J. L. Kapur—for Appellant.

R. C. Soni—for the Crown.

Coldstream, J.—On 6th June 1923, Moti Ram a Government pensioner living in Multan, possessed of property valued at about a lakh of rupees, executed a will which was registered three days later. On 29th April 1926 he was struck by paralysis and on 29th May following he died.

On 28th July 1926 the Official Receiver of Multan was searching the shop of Tola Ram, an undischarged bankrupt, who practised as a petition-writer, in order to take possession of his property. While he was going through Tola Ram's papers he saw Tola Ram tear up a document. The Official Receiver took possession of the pieces. Next day he was asked by Hari Das, a cousin of Moti Ram, and some other persons whether he had come across a forged will purporting to be that of Moti Ram among the papers he had seen. He put the pieces of the torn document together and saw that the writing on this was apparently a deed thumb-marked by Moti Ram amending a previous will of 1923.

The document bore the signature of Dwarka Das and Chatru Malik as attesting witnesses. It was dated " Baisakh, equivalent to (—) May " a space for the day of the month being left vacant.

Moti Ram had three brothers, Shut Malik, Teju Malik and Loku Malik. Under the original will (Ex. P. H.), Loku Malik and Teju Malik and Radha Malik, son of Shut Malik, had been given nothing out of the estate, the main property of the testator having been bequeathed, after deducting certain bequests in favour of Moti Ram's widow, other female relations and charity, to the three grandsons of Shut Malik, whose son Radha Malik, their father, was specifically excluded from any benefit. The new will, which is Ex. P/A, included, however, a bequest of Rs. 5,000 to Teju Malik, of which a sum of Rs. 2,200 was stated to have been paid off already, leaving Rs. 2,800 as the net bequest. It also included a bequest of Rs. 4,000 to Radha Malik and left the residue of the estate not as previously willed to the sons of Radha Malik, but to be divided in three equal shares between the descendants of Teju Malik, Katu Malik, the son of Loku Malik, and the descendants of Radha Malik. Other noteworthy amendments made in the original will were an increase from Rs. 200 to Rs. 1,000 in the bequest to Moti Ram's servant Chela, the substitution of Radha Malik for Moti Ram's widow as guardian of Radha Malik's sons and a change in the provision for Moti Ram's widow who, according to the original will, was entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 75 per mensem but under the amended will was to be given Rs. 4,000 in cash and maintenance at the rate of Rs. 35 per mensem.

The Official Receiver reported his proceedings to the Senior Subordinate Judge and this led to a judicial enquiry by Mr. Meehan, Magistrate, First Class, under the order of the District Magistrate. On 29th August 1926 Dwarka Das, who had signed the document Ex. P./A, as an attesting witness, offered to make a full disclosure. He was tendered a pardon and on his and other evidence, Chatru Malik, the second attesting witness, of the document Ex. P/A, Tola Ram, the petition-writer, the scribe of the document, Teju Ram, the beneficiary under its provisions and two others Ram Kishan and Jassu Malik who were alleged to have conspired in the making of the document, were committed for trial at Sessions under Ss 467 and 467/109, I. P. C., for forgery and abetment.

The documentary evidence included two documents, Exs P/S and P/T, which the Official Receiver had found among Tola Ram's papers after he had made enquiries into the case. These were manifestly preliminary drafts of the final document Ex. P/A. The prosecution also produced Tola Ram's register of which the Official Receiver had taken possession when searching his shop. In this register the entry No 499 is dated 2nd May. On the next page there is in the margin a thumb-mark alleged to be Moti Ram's, but the space for the copy of the document entered is blank. The entry after this, No. 501, is dated 5th May.

The accused all denied their guilt. Tola Ram declared that he had written the document Ex. P/A on 4th May 1926 at the dictation of Moti Ram, after having written the two drafts Ex. P/S and P/T which he had corrected there and then according to Moti Ram's instructions. When he was reading the draft out to Moti Ram, Dwarka Das and Chatru Milik came into the room. They attested the will with their signatures. Teju was not present. Moti Ram was incapable of writing and therefore put his thumb-mark on the deed. Two or three days later Moti Ram returned the document to him, saying he was reconsidering the matter. The omission to date the will was due to Tola Ram's own inadvertence. He had left the space in his register for the copy of the document blank under Moti Ram's instructions as he had not time to copy out the document. Moti Ram himself had torn the document before he returned it to him and he attempted to destroy it in the Official Receiver's presence because Moti Ram had told him to tear it up and keep the matter to himself. He had not destroyed it before because he had been suffering from a weak heart. He attributed the charge against him to the enmity of Hari Das who had been excommunicated by his brotherhood.

Chatru Malik admitted that he and Dwarka Das had attested the document Ex. P/A, but they signed it at the instance of Moti Ram who was in his perfect senses and had thumb-marked it after Tola Ram had read it out. He explained that he had been falsely implicated by Hari Das and others who were Arya Samajists while he was a Sanatanist.

Teju Malik disclaimed any knowledge of the registered will, Ex. P/H, and stated that he had come to know of the existence of the document, Ex. P/A, only after its seizure at Tola Ram's shop. He admitted, however, that he had urged Moti Ram to make some provision for him and stated that Moti Ram had promised to do this. He had been sent by Moti Ram to fetch Lila Ram, the scribe of the registered will, but had brought Tola Ram as he could not find Lila Ram. He also pleaded an alibi, stating that he was in Hardwar on 9th June.

The Sessions Judge, believing the prosecution evidence and rejecting the evidence produced by these accused in support of their defence, convicted Tola Ram and Chatru Malik on both charges, inflicting a single sentence of six years' rigorous imprisonment on the former and three years' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 500 on the latter whom he held to have been merely a tool of Tola Ram. Teju Malik, who was in his opinion clearly the person who inspired the forgery, was convicted of two offences under S. 467 read with S. 109, I. P. C., and sentenced to the single punishment of five years' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 1,000 fine Ram Kishan and Jassu Malik who had denied knowledge of the matter were acquitted, not, however, because their plea of alibi was found established, but because the approver's story had not been corroborated so far as it concerned them by independent evidence.

The convicts appealed, Tola Ram and Teju Malik through Doctor Gokal Chand Narang (Criminal Appeal No. 675 of 1927), and Chatru Malik through Mr. Moti Sagar (Criminal Appeal No. 674 of 1927).

The appeals came before Dalip Singh, J., who, after noticing certain difficulties of fact and law, passed an order referring the appeal for hearing to a Division Bench.

We have been taken through the record by the counsel for the appellants and have heard Mr. Soni who opposed the appeals on behalf of the Crown.

The evidence has been very fully described and discussed in the exhaustive judgment of the Sessions Judge and the e is no need to refer to it in detail here. It consists principally of the deposition of the approver Dwarka Das, whose story is that on 9th June 1926 Jassu Malik, Ram Kishan, Teju Malik and Kattu Malik took him from his house to Ram Kishan's house where he was told that, in order to remove the injustice done to Teju Malik and Kattu Malik in Moti Ram's registered will, another will had been drafted by Tola Ram in consultation with Teju Malik and Kattu Malik. He was asked to attest the new document, Teju Malik and Kattu Malik promising to pay him Rs. 100 for his services. He went with Jassu Malik, Teju Malik, Ram Kishan and Kattu Malik to Tola Ram's shop where the document, Ex. P/A, was read out by Tola Ram. He attested it. It bore the thumb-mark of the executor, but had not been signed by Chatru Malik. The document was left with Tola Ram. Next day Teju Malik told Dwarka Das that Tola Ram wanted Rs. 300 for writing the deed and had been paid Rs. 100 so far. Four or five days after signing the will he, the approver, had gone to Hyderabad in Sindh where his son was at the time. About the 22nd August Teju Malik came to him there and informed him that the will had been seized and that a warrant for his (the approver's) arrest had been issued. He returned to Multan and remained in hiding for two days. On 29th August he petitioned to be given a pardon.

There is no reason why in this case the approver's evidence should be exempted from the well-established rule of practice followed by this Court that the testimony of an accomplice is not sufficient for the conviction of an accused without corroboration connecting that accused with the offence of which he is charged. The questions therefore before us for decision are: firstly, whether the approver's story is acceptable as substantially true as a whole; secondly, whether there is other sound evidence corroborating it in respect of each of the accused; and lastly, if the accused are proved to have acted as stated by the approver, for what, if any, offence is each accused punishable? Prima facie, the document Ex. P/A is in itself highly suspicious. Admittedly it was made when Moti Ram was suffering from a severe stroke of paralysis which disabled him physically and ended in his death The facts that it is not dated, that it was not produced by any of the beneficiaries or executors, that it was discovered in the possession of Tola Ram, that an attempt to des roy it was made when the Official Receiver proposed to take it from Tola Ram, and that it was not copied in Tola Ram's register although a thumb-mark was placed against the space left for it, all heighten the suspicion attaching to it. There is also a presumption that if it is a forgery, it was made by, or at the instance of, the persons benefited by the alterations it makes in the registered will. There is nothing incredible in the approver's story which as a whole is prima facie inherently probable.

In arguing the case before us, the learned counsel for the appellants have criticized at great length the medical and other evidence produced to prove that at the time when, according to Tola Ram and Chatru Malik, the document was written, thumb-marked, and attested, Moti Ram's condition was such as to preclude the possibility of its having been in fact authorized or executed by Moti Ram. Reliance has been placed by them upon the defence evidence produced on this point and it is contended that by the prosecution and defence evidence read together it has not been established beyond possibility of doubt that the document could not have been drawn up with his assent and, in accordance with brief directions such as might have been given by a man who was too ill to speak fluently. All this evidence has been carefully scrutinized by the learned Sessions Judge.

According to the defence version, both the drafts Exs. P/S and P/T and the document Ex. P/A were written out at Moti Ram's dictation. It is obvious from the comparison of these three documents with each other and the original will that the drafting of the final document Ex. P/A could not have been accomplished without continued reference to what had been written before.

Having considered the whole evidence of the matter before us, I am of opinion that the learned Sessions Judge's conclusions on the facts are justified by the evidence and correct. I find it proved by the evidence including that of Chela Ram (P. W. 20), Moti Ram's servant (who stood to gain were the document Ex. P/A acted upon), Doctor Vaina (P.W-8) who attended Moti Ram from 29th April till 5th May, Doctor Mehta (P. W. 11), Major Puri, Civil Surgeon (P. W. 7), Doctor Gopal Das (P. W. 9), who visited him regularly throughout his illness and never missed visiting him on more than two consecutive days, that Moti Ram could not have authorized or voluntarily executed the document Ex. P/A between the 2nd and 5th May. For reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge I reject the defence evidence on the point. Besides direct evidence as to Moti Ram's condition at the time, we have in support of the approver's story the suspicious circumstances already mentioned and the facts to which attention has been drawn by the Sessions Judge that, while a large number of the respectable witnesses attested the registed will the attesting witnesses of the document Ex. P/A are Dwarka Das and Chatru Malik, that none of the executors appointed under the registered will was informed of the new will except Teju Malik, and that Moti Ram's legal advisers who attested the registered will were not informed of it, nor was the presence of any medical man secured to certify Moti Ram's fitness to execute a will. I also agree with the Sessions Judge in finding that the defence evidence does not falsify the approver's statement that he was not in Multan when, according to the appellants he added his signature to the document.

It is to be noted that it has been proved by expert evidence that the thumb-impression on Ex. P/A and in Tola Ram's register are of one and the same person. As regards the resemblance between these signatures and Moti Ram's signature on the registered will, the expert evidence is that these thumb-marks are similar in type and general appearance to the signature on the registered will, but that he cannot swear to their being of the same person. It is not, however, disputed that the signature on the document Ex. P/A is Moti Ram's. The appellant's case is that Moti Ram himself put his thumb-mark on the document Ex. P/A. I also agree with the learned Sessions Judge's opinion regarding the evidence produced by the defence to prove enmity between Hari Das at whose instance the accused were proceeded against and the appellants. The alleged ex-communication of Hari Das took place fourteen years previously, and there is in my opinion no cogent ground for holding that Hari Das was inspired by personal enmity in insisting on the matter being brought to light.

Before considering the evidence against each of the accused individually it will be as well to dispose briefly here of their pleas of alibi, for, if these are established it is obvious that the evidence of the approver will be materially shaken. Doctor Gopal Chand Narang has attached importance to the alibi evidence of his client Teju Malik. This has been described in detail by the learned Sessions Judge. Teju Malik declared that he noted the numbers of the tickets issued to him on 6th June from Multan to Hardwar, on the 10th June from Hardwar to Lahore and on the 11th June from Lahore to Multan ; but this evidence has been broken down by the further examination of the clerk, D. W. 2, on 23rd May 1927, who deposes that the tickets from Hardwar to Lahore No. 89385 which Teju Malik declared was issued to him was a half-ticket. As regards this evidence about the ticket numbers I agree with the learned Sessions Judge's conclusions that the probable explanation is that Teju Malik somehow or other obtained the numbers of tickets sold on particular dates and used this knowledge to bolster up an alibi. The evidence of Teju Ram's Panda at Hardwar and the other witnesses who support his alibi has been rightly rejected by the Sessions Judge for the reasons he gives. As regards the pleas of alibi . . . . advanced by Ram Kishna and Jassu Malik, the acquitted accused, I find that their evidence is not incompatible with the truth of the approver's story.

For all these reasons I accept the approver's evidence as conclusively establishing that the document, Ex. P/A, was not executed by, or with the authority of, Moti Ram but was a fictitious document.

It is now to be considered how far the approver's story implicating the individual appellants is corroborated by other evidence connecting them with the forgery. As regards Teju Malik there is no direct corroboration of the approver's evidence implicating him. There are, however, the facts, that he and his family were beneficiaries along with Khattu Malik, his nephew under the new will (having received nothing under the registered will), Teju Malik personally being especially favoured with a bequest of Rs. 5,000 in cash. We have his own admissions that he was anxious to have the registered will amended in his favour and had elicited a promise to this effect from Moti Ram during his illness and that he had fetched Tola Ram at Moti Ram's instance because the scribe of the original will whom Moti Ram first asked him to summon could not be found. There is also the evidence of Chela Ram that Teju Malik asked him (witness) to show him the original will and that he had objected to Chela Ram's taking Moti Ram's papers from Moti Ram's Baithak to the latter's house where they would be safer. He was seen by Radho Ram, (P. W. 19), and Chela Ram (P. W. 20) going to Tola Ram's house during the period of Moti Ram's illness once or twice.

There is also the evidence of Radho Ram that on the morning of the day of Moti Ram's death, he saw an ink-roller, such as is used for taking thumb-impressions projecting from Teju Malik's pocket when he and Taju Malik were sitting beside Moti Ram who was asleep. The witness said that he took possession of the roller and told Chela Ram about it. Chela Ram has given evidence that he was informed about it by Radho Ram, but his evidence at the trial regarding the time at which, according to the information Radho Ram had taken possession of the roller was totally different from the time mentioned in his statement before the committing Magistrate. On being cross-examined on this inconsistency he collapsed. In view of the fact that the learned Sessions Judge has dismissed the story about the roller as a clumsy piece of fiction, I attach no importance to it. Certainly Teju Malik had ample opportunity for procuring the thumb-mark of the paralytic Moti Ram upon the document. There is no doubt that the evidence of an accused person's conduct may be be used as corroboration of an approver's story. If authority is required it is found in R. v. Feigenbaum (1), a judgment of the Court of criminal appeal. I have weighed the accepted evidence with care. Obviously it raises a very strong suspicion against Teju. It cannot, however, be said that it is inconsistent with his innocence, and it is, in my opinion, insufficient as corroborative evidence necessarily connecting him with the crime. I would, therefore, accept Teju Malik's appeal and acquit him, ordering the fine if paid to be refunded.

As regards Tola Ram, the proved circumstances afford strong corroboration of the approver's story so far as it implicates him. He wrote the deed and kept it in his custody from which it was taken by surprise and in spite of his effort to destroy it. There is also evidence that, after proceedings had begun in the committing Magistrate's Court, Tola Ram submitted a petition on 21st October 1926, to the Deputy Commissioner, Multan, stating that he would make a full disclosure of the true facts and produce evidence to prove them if he was given a free pardon. His explanation that he did this in consequence of a message from Malik Hari Das may or may not be true, but it does not lessen the force of this evidence of conduct which alone would raise a powerful presumption that he joined in the act for which he and his co-accused were being prosecuted. Finding that there is independent evidence connecting Tola Ram with the acts for which he was tried, I accept the approver's statement against him throughout.

Chatru Malik's case is peculiar in that there is no direct positive evidence of the approver implicating him. All that we have from the approver about Chatru Malik is that he (the approver) attested the document Ex. P/A on 9th June. Chatru Malik's attestation was not then upon the document. I may here dispose of the point taken by his counsel Mr. Moti Sagar, that the prosecution have failed to prove that the whole attestation entry upon the deed alleged to have been made by Chatru Malik was in fact written by him. As already made clear, Chatru Malik has admitted his signatures. Moti Sagar, however, contends firstly : that a conviction cannot properly be based upon a mere admission of an accused person unles there is some evidence produced by the prosecution which has to be explained away, and, secondly, that Chatru Malik's admission relates only to the signature of his own name and not all the words of the entry.

As regards the first of these two contentions : it need only be remarked that the presence of Chatru Malik's signature upon the deed as an attesting witness is not a matter of mere admission by Chatru Malik but was proved by the evidence of Radho Ram (P. W. 19) who had employed him as a broker in his business, and as regards the second, that a glance at the writing of the attestation clause itself is sufficient to refute it. The words written are "Atar Sakhi Chatru Mehra mukh wachni pooj Malik Moti Ram Mehra akhar wasiyat ute kite." The meaning of these words is attestation of Chatru Mehra at the instance of Malik Moti Ram Mehra, signature put upon the will.

It will be observed that the name "Chatru Mehra" comes not as an isolated signature, but in its proper sequence among the other words expressing in the ordinary form the fact of attestation.

I find it legally proved that Chatru Malik wrote the attestation, including his name upon the document Ex P/A. This fact taken along with the evidence which I have held to be proof that Moti Ram did not authorize or execute the document Ex. P/A establishes with certainty that the attestation by Chatru Malik was untrue, inasmuch as the attestation was not made at the instance of Moti Ram as it purported to have been made.

It remains to be decided whether the prosecution story having been established as regards the facts alleged against Chatru Malik and Tola Ram, these appellants were legally punishable upon the charges which they were tried.

It is first contended by counsel for the appellants that, as the document P/A was never completed and remained ineffective it could not be said to have been "made" within the meaning of S. 464, I. P. C. Reliance is placed on Empress v. Riasat Ali (2). a judgment which on this point was dissented from in Emperor v. Krishtappa Khandappa (3) in which reference was made by the learned Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court to the definition of document in S. 29 of the Code. I can see no reason for believing that the word "makes" in S. 464 means anything other than makes, that is to say, creates or brings into existence or that a person cannot forge a document which purports to be a will unless the will has been completed by the addition of the date. I find support for my view in the judgment of Pigott, J, in Emperor v. Jawahar Thakur (4). The document P/A undoubtedly purports to be a will executed by Moti Ram. Indeed the accused themselves declared that this is what it really was. The omission to fill in the date was due, it was asserted, entirely to forgetfulness on the part of Tola Ram. That the will had legal validity without the signature of a witness and that it had no such validity without an entry of the date appear to me to be facts entirely beside the point. A writing may purport to be a will although it turns out to be technically defective, see the judgment of Oldfield, J, in Ramaswami Ayyar v. Emperor (5).

On behalf of Chatru Malik it is urged by Mr. Moti Sagar that the attesting words alleged to have been written by Chatru Malik were no part of the document which was admittedly complete in form except for the date before Chatru Malik put his writing upon it as a witness. Therefore, Chatru Malik could not have been an abettor but was merely an accessory, if he was an accessory, after the fact. Having regard to the definition of document in the Code (and this is our only guide in the matter) it is to me perfectly clear that in this particular case the attestation written by Chatru Malik was not only a part of the document purporting to regard the attested will of Moti Ram but was in itself also a document.

I find it indubitably that Tola Ram in writing the document P/A, including the words 'Malik Moti Ram" above what purports to be the thumb-impression of Moti Ram, made the document fraudulently with the intention of causing it to be believed that it was made by Moti Ram by whom Tola Ram knew it was not made. His action fell within the definition in Cl. 1, S. 464, I P. C., and he is punishable under S. 467, I. P. C.

The words and signature subsequently added by Chatru Malik can have had no other purport than to be evidence that he attested the will in Moti Ram's presence with the intention of causing it to be believed that the attested will was made by the authority of Moti Ram. It having been proved that the attested will was not so made it follows that Chatru Malik made a part of the document with the intention that the document (the attested will) was made by the authority of Moti Ram knowing that it was not so made. There can be no possible doubt of the fraudulent intention in his so attesting a deed purporting to be that of the paralytic or dead Moti Ram. I consider that he has been rightly convicted under S. 467, I P. C.

Viewing the attested will as one false document jointly made by Tola Ram and Chatru Malik, I would set aside the conviction and sentence under S. 109, I. P. C., in the case of both these appellants.

I think that the sentences are excessive, having regard to the possibility that the forgers had no intention of using the document having left it incomplete for so long, and I would, therefore, further accept the appeals of Tola Ram and Chatru Malik so far as to reduce the sentence passed on them to two years and one year's rigorous imprisonment respectively.

Teju Malik's bail bond is cancelled. Tola Ram and Chatru Malik will surrender to their bonds before the District Magistrate and serve out the sentences imposed upon them. The fine on Chatru Malik, if paid will be refunded.

Evidence Act, S. 114, Ill (a)—Long lapse of time between theft and discovery of stolen property—Onus to prove innocent possession is not on the accused—Penal Code, S. 411.

Durga Das Kuller—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—The petitioner has been convicted under the provision of S. 411, I P. C, of having dishonestly received a stolen bullock and he has been sentenced to eight months' rigorous imprisonment. He now asks to have this conviction and sentence set aside on the ground that the onus of proving honest possession was cast upon him whereas the onus should have been placed upon the prosecution, of proving that he had received or retained the animal knowing it to have been stolen. Some animals were stolen from the house of one Sunder Singh on 13th February 1926, and of these one animal was discovered in the house of the petitioner in June 1927, i. e., over fifteen months after the theft. In the view of this long lapse of time between the theft and the discovery of the stolen property, the onus of proving innocent possession should not have been cast on the petitioner. If any authority were required for this proposition, I would refer to the judgment of Shadi Lal, J. (now Chief Justice Sir Shadi Lal) in Mangaya Shah v. Emperor (1). The fact that the petitioner when asked to explain his possession of the animal gave an explanation which has not been held to be satisfactory is not sufficient ground for his conviction. His grievance that he was asked to prove his innocence instead of the prosecution being required to affirmatively prove his guilt is a real one. Under these circumstances the conviction and sentence must be set aside and I direct that the petitioner be set at liberty.

First Appeal No. 2437 of 1923, Decided on 30th March 1928, from decree of 1st Cl. Sub-Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 29th March 1922.

Limitation Act, Art. 39—Suit by a cosharer for recovery of his share of rent realized by other cosharers—Art. 89 and not Art. 62 applies.

Where by virtue of an arrangement some of the cosharers have been realizing rent of joint immovable property for division among other cosharers, the relationship between the latter and the former is that of an agent and principal; and a suit for realization of the share of rent by the cosharer is governed by Art. 89 and not Art. 62: 24 All. 27; *A. Shiv Charan Das and Jagan Nath—for Appellant.

Hargopal and Nawal Kishore—for Respondents.

Jai Lal, J.—The pedigree of the parties will be found at p. 76 of the printed paper-book. Mt. Kishen Devi, widow of Gauri Shankar, instituted a suit against the defendants some of whom are the sons and grandsons of an uncle of Gauri Shankar and the others are grandsons of his father's brother. Gauri Shankar and the remaining defendants were once members of a joint family and as such carried on joint business and acquired immovable property in various places. They separated long ago but the business and the immovable property remained joint. As the properties were situated in several places such of the joint owners as were either residing in such places or were actually there at the time used to realize the rents thereof which were finally divided between the parties according to their shares.

Gauri Shankar died on 1st February 1908 and since then the properties have remained joint between his widow, Mt. Kishen Devi and the defendants. It appears, however, that the defendants, taking advantage of the widowhood of Mt. Kishen Devi, have since the death of her husband been placing all sorts of obstructions in her way to prevent her from realizing her share of the rents and have also been raising objections to paying her share of the income. Consequently the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by Mt. Kishen Devi against the defendants on 13th January 1920, for partition of the joint immovable property and for the recovery of her share of the rents realized by the defendants together with interest thereon.

It has been found that Mt. Kishen Devi's share in the immovable property is $\frac{1}{4}$th, and there is no contest on this point before us. The trial Court has decreed her suit so far as the prayer for the partition of the joint immovable property is concerned, but has dismissed her claim with regard to her share of rent and interest thereon on the ground that Art. 62, Sch. 1, Lim. Act, governed this part of her claim and that she was therefore not entitled to recover more than three years' rent actually realized by the defendants immediately before the institution of the suit, and further that it had not been proved that any rent had been actually realized by the defendants within three years of the institution of the suit. Mt. Kishen Devi has presented this appeal against this part of the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

It seems to me that the view of the trial Court, that the article applicable was 62, is erroneous, the article which governs the case being Art. 89. It has been found that after the death of Gauri Shankar Mt. Kishen Devi succeeded to his interest in the joint property, and she has been awarded a decree for partition thereof which decree is not attacked before us. She must, therefore, be deemed to have become a joint owner in the property with the defendants who by virtue of an arrangement which existed in the lifetime of Gauri Shankar have been realizing the rent of the joint property for division among all the cosharers. Presumably therefore in the lifetime of Gauri Shankar the relationship between the cosharers who actually realized the rent and the other cosharers was that of an agent and principal. I am not prepared to hold that such relationship ceased to exist merely because after the death of Gauri Shankar obstructions were placed by the other cosharers in the way of Mt. Kishen Devi. In her plaint she has stated that up to a certain stage she actually realized her share of the rents, but that later the defendants began to raise objections. At the trial the defendants did not deny her title to a ¼th share in the joint property but they stated that she was wasting the same. In the absence of clear proof to the contrary that the relationship of agency had terminated it must be assumed that it continued. There is no such evidence in this case and I hold, therefore, that the defendants realized the income of the joint property as agents of the plaintiff and are therefore accountable to her as such.

On behalf of the plaintiff reliance was placed on Asghar Ali Khan v. Khurshid Ali Khan (1), Venkanna v. Agasthiah (2) and Yerukola v. Yerukola (3). All these cases support the appellant's contention that Art. 89 applies to the present case. In the Madras case it was held that agency in such cases need not be express but may be implied, and that the ordinary presumption should be that one cosharer realizes the income of the joint property as an agent of the other cosharers. Following the above authorities I hold that Art. 89 was applicable to the present case and the plaintiff's suit was therefore not barred by time. On behalf of the respondents reliance was placed on Banoo Tewary v. Doona Tewary (4), Mahomed Wahib v. Mahomed Ameer (5) and A. I. R. 1924 All. 812. All these cases are distinguishable, because there a former cosharer had realized the income of the previously joint property after partition or a previously joint debt after division between the co-obligees, when he had ceased to be their agent by virtue of the partition or division.

The question does not really arise in view of my finding on the point of limitation, but even if the suit was barred except with regard to the rents realized within three years of the institution of the suit, the Court should have passed a preliminary decree for accounts and should not have dismissed it at the present stage. There can be no manner of doubt that the rent of the joint property was actually realized by the defendants. What was the actual amount so realized by them was a matter which was specially within their knowledge and they should have been directed to render proper accounts after the preliminary decree had been passed.

At this stage I might dispose of a preliminary objection that was taken by the respondents that Harbans Lal, respondent, one of the defendants in the suit, having died on 14th June 1925, during the pendency of this appeal and an application to bring on the record his legal representatives having been made on 15th December 1925, when it was barred by time, the appeal has abated. No good ground has been shown why such an application was not made within the time allowed by law. In view of the relationship of the parties I am not prepared to believe that the appellant did not know of the death of Harbans Lal. I consider, therefore, that the appeal has abated as against the representatives of Harbans Lal. The respondents' counsel then contended that the entire appeal had abated. With this I am unable to agree. The liability of the defendants is not joint. Each is accountable for what he has actually realized. Therefore the absence of Harbans Lal or his legal representatives from the record does not prevent the Court from deciding what amount of rent of the joint property was actually realized by the surviving respondents each of whom will be liable to the plaintiff for her ¼th share of the amount realized by him subject to any adjustment of account between him and the appellant.

The result is that I would accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge dismissing the suit with regard to her prayer for her ¼th share of the income realized by the defendants and interest thereon and would pass a preliminary decree in her favour against the respondents declaring that she is entitled to a ¼th share, subject to such deductions as the defendants may legitimately be entitled to claim, in the income of the joint property actually realized by each respondent respectively. The case will be remanded to the trial Court with directions to frame a preliminary decree and to proceed with the case in accordance with law. Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal paid in this Court shall be refunded to the appellant and other costs will abide the result.

Judgment.*—These three appeals can be disposed of in one judgment. The plaintiffs sued alleging that they were the owners of the land in dispute and that the defendants had dispossessed them within three years of the suit wrongfully. The defendants denied that the plaintiffs had been in possession and, on the other hand, claimed that the property was their own. It appears that the land in dispute whose area is 2 bighas 10 biswas 4 kanals 2 marlas along with 7 bighas 1 biswa was granted as a muafi to the predecessors-in-interest of the defendants in Sambat 1902 by Maharaja Dalip Singh.

In 1847 this land was recorded as the maufi of Jane Khan, etc., the predecessors-in-interest of the defendants. The muafi was only for life. In 1878, on the death of Jane Khan, the muafi was resumed, but the land was given to the descendants of Game Khan, father of Jane Khan, as malguzars. In the Settlement papers of 1851, 7 bighas 1 biswa are shown as ownership and muafi of Jane Khan and his brothers and 2 bighas 10 biswas, the land in dispute, are shown as the ownership of Waris and as the muafi of Jane Khan and his brothers. In 1851 Waris is shown as in possession of the land in dispute and his name is also entered in the proprietary column. In 1885 Umra and Idu, descendants of Waris, are shown as the owners, and the descendants of Game Khan are also shown in that column as malguzars. In the column of possession the words are khudkasht and in the column of batai the words are yaftani Nathu weghera thekedaran muafi munzabta nisfa nisf ma nira. In the column of malguzari there is an entry showing a malikana of two annas. It would appear from this entry then that owners, the descendants of Waris, were cultivating the land and were paying half and half batai to the malguzars and were also recovering two annas from the malguzars by way of malikana. It is said in the judgment of the learned District Judge that in the jamabandi of 1899-1900 Lachhman Das, the descendant of the plaintiffs, who derived title from Umra and Idu, is shown in the proprietary column and there is no mention of the malguzars.

In 1914, however, Game Khan' descendants applied to have their names recorded as malguzars, and their names were so entered by mutation No. 3359, decided on 27th August 1915, it being held that their names had been omitted by mistake. There was a dispute between the owners and the malguzars as to who had been in possession, but the Revenue Authorities found that the actual possession was with the malguzars. The malguzar had then said that they had acquired this possession by redeeming the land from the mortgagees who were also the owners in 1914. Since that date Game Khan's descendants are throughout shown as malguzars. In 1915 the possession is shown to be that of Nathu Khan, the malguzar, through his tenant. In the 1921-22 jamabandi the maliks, and the malguzars are shown in the proprietary column and possession is simply shown as that of Fattu gher maurusi and others; the batai continues to be half and half. In 1909 the sons of Lachhman Das mortgaged the land in suit with other land to one Mian Mal. It is stated in that mutation that possession is given to the mortgagee. The mortgagee, however, was their uncle.

On 26th November 1921, the land was redeemed and again possession is alleged to have been given. But the learned District Judge has not accepted this mutation as showing that possession was actually transferred either in 1909 or 1921. Besides this the muafi file of 1879 shows that Khuda Bakhsh, the son of Waris, applied to have the settlement made with him after the resumption of the muafi in 1878. In that application he alleged that he had been in possession and had been paying batai to the malguzar, but that the malguzar had mortgaged his rights to some other person and, therefore, was no longer, according to Khuda Bakhsh, entitled to batai. In 1886 another application was made by Umra, son of Khuda Bakhsh, to be allowed to pay land revenue instead of batai. From these two applications it seems clear to me that the owners, namely, the descendants of Waris, were in possession until 1886. There is a mortgage-deed of 1877 in which Sandhi Khan, one of the descendants of Game Khan, mortgaged his share of the whole land, i. e. both the land which was by malkiyat of Game Khan and the land which was the muafi of Jane Khan to one Nabi Bakhsh. This mortgage was with possession, but it is not clear to me whether the the muafi land was also supposed to be mortgaged with possession, or whether the muafi rights were simply handed over, leaving the possession whatever it was on the spot existing as before.

The learned District Judge has found on all this evidence that the land in dispute had been in possession of Game Khan's descendants all along. He had previously found that the maliks are shown by the record to have paid the malguzar half the produce with straw while the malguzar paid malikana to the owner and land revenue and cesses to the Government. This finding seems to me to contradict the other finding about the possession of Game Khan's descendants. It is, therefore, though a finding of fact, open to attack in second appeal.

The trial Court dismissed the suit holding that the so-called maliks had really only been tenants under the malguzars and that, therefore, they had no right to possession of the land. The learned District Judge on appeal held that the malguzars were the taqarriridars or inferior owners, and the so-called maliks were the ala maliks, or superior owners, entitled only to a nominal malikana. This was not the case of either side. As I have already said he further held that possession all along was with Game Khan's descendants with a contradictory finding that the maliks paid half the produce with straw to the malguzars. The jamabandi of 1899 referred to by the District Judge has not been found by me on this record, but the facts stated therein are not controverted by either side. From all this documentary evidence it seems to me clear that possession, at any rate up to 1886, was with the maliks, i. e., the descendants of Waris and their successors-in-interest. There is nothing to show that there was any change of possession until 1914 when on the application of Game Khan's descendants it was found that his descendants were in possession on that date. The entry recorded in the Settlement bears this out. In 1921-22 the possession, according to the entry, might be either with the malguzars or with the maliks. On the whole, however, bearing in mind that the tenant is the same as the tenant shown in 1915 and that the plaintiffs themselves alleged dispossession in October 1921, I am inclined to think that possession remained with the malguzars. In 1923 the plaintiffs brought the present suit, and obviously the suit is within time from 1914 when the first possession of the malguzars can be said to be conclusively shown. I, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs have proved that they were dispossessed sometime within 12 years of the institution of the suit and that the suit is not barred by limitation.

It remains then only to decide what the relative positions of the malguzars and the maliks are. On this point I have been referred to Santa Singh v. Budhwanti (1) and Bela Singh v. Lakshmi Das (2) by counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants. Counsel for the defendants-respondents had referred me to Budha Singh v. Kanshi Ram (3), Gujar Singh v. Bawa Uddham Singh (4), Douie's Settlement manual, paras. 5, 99, 120 and 185 and the letter of the Financial Commissioners printed as Appendix 5, p. 10, of the Final report of the Revised Settlement of Jullundur, dated 1913-17. The rulings applicable, in my opinion, are Santa Singh v. Budhwanti (1) and Bela Singh v. Lakshmi Das (2). The Punjab Weekly Reporter's rulings, Budha Singh v. Kanshi Ram (3) and Gujar Singh v. Bawa Uddham Singh (4), are cases of gifts of land as opposed to gift of muafi and, therefore, are not applicable in this case if one accepts the finding of the two Courts that a muafi grant of the land was made by Maharaja Dalip Singh to the ancestors of the defendants. From these rulings, namely, Santa Singh v. Budhwanti (1) and Bela Singh v. Lakshmi Das (2), it seems to me that the malguzars have no proprietary right in the land at all, and the mere fact that settlement operations are conducted with him or the revenue is due from him does not confer any right to proprietary possession of the land on the malguzar. Following these rulings then I hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to possession of the land in dispute and I, therefore, accept the appeals and decree all the three suits. As the matter is a difficult one and the plaintiffs on my finding did not move in the matter for 11 years, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

I may note that it was contended before me by counsel for the respondents that the land had been granted by Maharaja Dalip Singh and that it was a mistake on the part of the two Courts to say that only the muafi rights had been given. It is difficult for me to decide this question, because Ex. D.-A. on which reliance is placed is a piece of paper bearing no seal of a Court or any signs of compliance with the provisions of O. 13 and it is almost unintelligible to me and counsel for the defendants respondents could not really explain it. In the circumstances I cannot see any reason to vary the concurring finding of the Courts below that this was a grant of muafi, i. e., an assignment of land revenue and not a gift of land. Moreover this conclusion is strengthened by the fact that in 1877 the predecessors-in-interest of the defendants distinctly described this land as muafi and the ownership was said to be that of the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiffs. This would not have occurred had they been owners of this land. No doubt if Ex D.-A. were construed as being a gift of land as distinct from a gift of muafi, the matter would be quite different and then the Punjab Weekly Reporter's rulings, Budha Singh v. Kanshi Ram (3) and Gujar Singh v. Bava Uddham Singh (4), might apply.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 686 of 1928, Decided on 25th May 1928, from order of Sess. Judge, Montgomery, D/- 18th February 1928.

Indian Penal Code, S. 105—Right of private defence—Trespass by cattle — Cattle can be chased even outside the fields trespassed—Cattle Trespass Act, S, 10.

Certain cattle belonging to accused trespassed a field where they were grazing. An attempt was made by the owner of the field to seize them in order to take them to cattle pound. The cattle ran towards the field of the accused where the chasers followed them. The accused inflicted mortal injuries on one of the chasers, who consequently died. It was urged that the chaser had no right to pursue out of the field trespassed and the accused were entitled to a right of private defence.

Held: that notice of trespass being taken at once, the mere fact that the cattle had left the land, before they could be seized, did not deprive the owner of the field of the right of seizure conferred upon him by S. 10, Cattle Trespass Act, and no case for private defence was proved : *A. [P 693 C 1]

Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din—for Petitioners.

C. H. Carden Noad—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The facts, which are relevant to the question of law debated before me, may be shortly stated. On the night of 17th September 1927 one Shahab-ud-Din received information that his crops were being damaged by cattle. Thereupon, Shahab-ud-Din, accompanied by certain persons, went to the spot and found bullocks grazing in his maize field. He and his companions attempted to sieze the cattle in order to take them to the cattle pound, but the bullocks ran away towards the fields of their owners, who are the petitioners before me. While Shahab ud-Din and his friends were chasing the bullocks, Chanan Singh, who was at that time watering his field, also joined them ; but he lagged behind and was mercilessly beaten by the prisoners Ghulami and Waryam with dangs. The other two prisoners were standing at a short distance instigating the assault. Chanan Singh received mortal injuries to which he succumbed on the following day.

Now it is contended by the learned counsel for the petitioners that after the cattle had left the field upon which the trespass had been committed the complainant's party had no right to pursue and seize them. The petitioners were, therefore, entitled to exercise their right of private defence, when the complainant's party were passing through their fields in their pursuit of the bullocks. In support of this contention the learned counsel relies upon the judgment in Bhagwant Rao v. Champat Rao (A. I. R. 1925. Nagpur 50) but the facts of that case are wholly different. There, the person, upon whose land trespass had been committed took no notice of it at the time of the trespass, but went to the cattle shed of the owner of the cattle afterwards with the intention of taking them from there to the cattle pound. On these facts it was held that a person upon whose land trespass had been committed, had no right to go to the cattle-shed of another person and to take away the cattle from there on the plea that they had trespassed upon his land and had done damage to him. In the case before me notice of trespass was taken at once, and the mere fact that the cattle had left the land before they could be seized did not, in my opinion, deprive the complainant's party of the right of seizure conferred upon them by S. 10, Cattle Trespass Act.

It is, however, unnecessary to pronounce any final opinion on the question, because I am quite clear that no right of private defence has been established on the facts of the present case. As pointed out above Chanan Singh had not seized any cattle: he was a mere straggler and the prisoners had no justification for belabouring him with dangs.

Waryam and Ghulami, who actually committed the assault, have, therefore, been rightly convicted under S. 304, I. P. C. and the sentences imposed upon them cannot be held to be excessive. The other two prisoners, namely Saidu and Agra, no doubt abetted the assault, but as admitted by the learned Government Advocate it is doubtful whether they abetted the offence of culpable homicide. I accordingly give them the benefit of the doubt, and altering their conviction to one under S. 325, read with S. 109, I. P. C., I reduce the sentence in the case of each of these two prisoners to rigorous imprisonment for one year. The application for revision is accepted pro tanto and the order of the Sessions Judge modified accordingly.

Second Appeal No. 1645 of 1927, Decided on 16th December 1927, from decree of Sub-Judge, Rohtak, D/- 31st March 1927.

Civil P. C., O. 1, R. 8—Partition suit.

Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand—for Appellants.

G. C. Narang—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This was a suit for possession of 434 square yards of abadi and the plaintiffs' case was that this land formed part of a plot which was allotted to them and had been in their possession in accordance with the decree for partition that they had formerly obtained.

The defendants pleaded, inter alia, ignorance of that decree. In the partition suit the persons impleaded as defendants being no less than seventy-nine, the plaintiffs were allowed on their application under O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., to nominate three of the defendants to defend the action on behalf of all, but notice of this suit was given to all the defendants. Further, Mehnga Singh and Bir Singh who are defendants in the present case stated to the commissary in the partition suit that they had no objection to partition. They were, therefore, bound by the decree in that case.

Further, it is clear that the plaintiffs were already in possession of the plot that was allotted to them on partition and it was not, therefore, necessary for them to take out execution of the decree for partition to obtain possession of that plot. The small area now in dispute was lying waste and it follows that it remained in possession of the plaintiffs till the defendants encroached upon it by erecting a wall around it. In view of these facts the Courts below have overruled the defendants' pleas.

In second appeal it is urged that O 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., does not apply to defendants in a partition suit because they cannot be said to have "the same interest in the suit." This contention is not supported by any authority and the paragraph at p. 383, Mulla's Civil P. C., under the head—"Different interests" is misleading and the rulings—referred to under it, i. e., Kalikanta Surma v. Gouri Prosad Surma (1) and Sadu v. Ram (2), do not lay down any such proposition. As a matter of fact, O. 1, R. 8, Civil P. C., is not referred to therein at all.

Counsel for the appellants concedes, that the finding that the defendants' possession was only recent, cannot be interfered with being a finding of fact. The appeal, therefore, fails and I dismiss it with costs.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 691 of 1928, Decided on 25th May 1928, reported by Dist. Mag., Hoshiarpur, on 26th March 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 107—Proceeding under S. 107 cannot be regarded a complaint—Ss. 202 and 203 are not applicable.

Sections 202 and 203, Criminal P. C., are applicable only to complaints and a proceeding under S. 107 cannot be regarded a complaint within the meaning of Cl. (h), sub-S. (1), S. 4 of the Code. [P 694 C 2]

Mohsin Shah—for Respondents.

Facts.—Hari Singh, the petitioner, brought an application against Jagta and others under S. 107, Criminal P. C., before Bawa Sunder Singh, Magistrate, 1st Class. The Magistrate recorded the statement of Hari Singh, and then sent the case to the local Zaildar for report apparently under S. 202, Criminal P. C. On receipt of the Zaildar's report he held that there was no sufficient ground for proceeding under S. 107, and dismissed the application, which he referred to as a "complaint" under S. 203 of the Code. Hari Singh now applies for the revision of this order.

Grounds.—I do not think that the procedure prescribed for complaints by Ss. 202 and 203, Criminal P. C. can be held to apply to informations under S. 107 of the Code. Such informations are not apparently complaints within the meaning of Cl. (h), sub-S. (1), S. 4 of the Code, as though they may contain an incidental allegation that an offence has been committed, such an allegation does not form an essential part of them. The wording of S. 107 of the Code indicates that a Magistrate before whom an information is laid may either at once refuse to proceed or, if in his opinion there is sufficient ground for proceeding, may act "in the manner herein after provided", that is to say, in accordance with the provisions of Ch. 8 which includes S. 107. I do not think that it is open to the Magistrate to refer to a Zaildar or anyone else before deciding whether to proceed, and it would seem that if he is satisfied that there are grounds for proceeding he is bound to act under S. 112. My recollection is that in December last a judgment of the High Court was published in the press in which it was held that cases under S. 107 could not be dealt with under Ss. 202 and 203 of the Code. I have, however, been unable to find this judgment, and the only authority on the subject before me is A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 119 (2). The parties to the proceedings have been heard by me.

Order.—Sections 202 and 203, Criminal P. C., are applicable only to complaints and a proceeding under S. 107, Criminal P. C., cannot be regarded a complaint within the meaning of Cl. (h), sub-S. (1), S. 4 of the Code. The trial Magistrate could not, therefore, deal with the case under Ss. 202 and 203 of the Code.

I accordingly quash the proceedings of the trial Magistrate and direct him to try the case in accordance with law.

M. Sleem and H. D. Bhalla—for Appellants.

Badri Das—for Respondent.

Judgment.—Malla Singh, Jat of the Jullundur District, made a gift of a portion of his property in favour of his four pichhlag sons (Hazara Singh, plaintiff, and his three brothers) by a registered deed dated 14th April 1893. Malla Singh was childless at the time. It was provided in the deed that if no son was subsequently born to him, the whole of his property would go to pichhlag sons. No provision was made in the deed for the contingency of the birth of any daughter.

As it happened, subsequent to the execution of the above-mentioned deed, two daughters were born to Malla Singh, but no son. Malla Singh died in January 1901, and then a dispute arose about succession to his property. When the mutation with respect to his land came up for disposal, the pichhlag sons as well as the collaterals claimed to be the heirs. The Revenue Officer, who decided the mutation was, however, of opinion that the unmarried daughters were entitled to hold possession in lieu of maintenance till death or marriage and mutation was accordingly sanctioned in their names. Neither the pichhlag sons nor the collaterals took any step to contest this decision of the Revenue Officer.

One of the daughters died subsequently and the other, Mt. Santi, was married in 1920. The land was thereafter mutated in favour of the defendants, who are collaterals of Malla Singh. Plaintiff Hazara Singh, the sole survivor, out of the four pichhlag sons of Malla Singh, then instituted the present suit on 23rd December 1921, for possession of the land, on the basis of the above-mentioned deed dated 14th April 1893. The defendants pleaded inter alia that the suit was barred by limitation, but this plea was overruled and the suit was decreed by the trial Court. The learned District Judge concurring with the findings of the trial Court dismissed the appeal.

The defendants have come up to this Court in second appeal and the sole contention put forward on their behalf is that the suit was clearly time barred and should have been dismissed. The learned counsel for both the parties were agreed before us that Art. 140, Sch. I, Limitation Act, is applicable to the case. According to this article, the period of limitation would run from the time the "estate falls into possession." There is no doubt that according to the terms of the deed, the pichhlags were entitled to succeed on the death of Malla Singh. The lower Courts have, however, found that the daughters were allowed to succeed in lieu of their right to maintenance, by an agreement between the pichhlag sons and the collaterals and hence held the suit to be within time. The finding does not appear to be supported by the evidence on the record. Both the pichhlag sons and the collaterals claimed the land at the time of mutation and it was the Revenue Officer who of his own accord seems to have mutated the land in favour of the daughters. It is true that neither the pichhlag sons nor the collaterals attempted to challenge the Revenue Officer's decision, but in the absence of any other evidence this fact alone cannot be held to establish any agreement on the point between the parties to the suit.

It is, however, pointed out on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that it was specifically asserted in the plaint that the unmarried daughters held possession of the land in lieu of maintenance with the permission and consent of the plaintiff and that this allegation was not denied by the defendants in the jawab dawa. It is, therefore, contended that the possession of the unmarried daughters being permissive, plaintiff's cause of action only arose when the defendants took possession of the land after the marriage of Mt. Santi in 1920. This contention appears to us to be well founded. On a strict construction of the pleadings, there is no doubt that it must be held to have been admitted by defendants that the unmarried daughters held possession of the property with the permission of the pichhlag sons in lieu of maintenance. There are, however, other circumstances also which point to the same conclusion. The pichhlag sons had a strong claim to Malla Singh's property under the deed of 1893, which they had asserted at the time of mutation and it cannot be expected that they would have abandoned the claim without even a contest, if they had not been willing to allow the unmarried daughters to remain in possession in lieu of their right of maintenance or had looked upon the claim of the daughters as "adverse."

There is no doubt that according to the general custom in this Province, unmarried daughters are entitled to be maintained out of the estate of their father and although there was no specific provision in the will for the maintenance of the daughters, the pichhlags probably thought that their claim to maintenance could not be defeated by the will. They may have been readily induced to accept this position owing to a feeling of gratitude towards Malla Singh, who had treated them so generously. Secondly, it is significant that Mt. Santi quietly gave up possession of the property on her marriage in 1920 The land left by Malla Singh has been held to be "non-ancestral" and this finding has not been challenged before us in arguments. According to general custom daughters are entitled to inherit non-ancestral property in perference to collaterals. If, therefore, the contest was merely between the daughters and the collaterals the former might have been expected to claim the property of Malla Singh. The fact that she surrendered possession quietly on her marriage suggests that she was conscious that her possession till then had been only permissive and that she had no claim to the land in the face of the deed in plaintiff's favour.

The possession of a female who is allowed to hold property merely in lieu of her right of maintenance cannot be held to be "adverse" to the real heir. It was held in Bura Mal v Narain Das (1) in somewhat similar circumstances that the widow of a pre-deceased son, who held land in lieu of her right of maintenance did not hold it adversely to the real heir and that limitation did not run till after the death of the widow.

In view of the pleadings of the parties as well as the other circumstances alluded to above we hold that possession of the unmarried daughters in this case was permissive and not adverse to the plaintiff and that plaintiff's suit was, therefore, within time.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 417 of 1927, Decided on 8th February 1928, from order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Lahore, D/- 15th December 1926.

Civil P. C., S. 145—Surety undertaking to produce judgment-debter on a certain date—Court closed on the day—Surety is not bound to produce him on any other date unless called upon to do so.

Suretyships must be construed strictly. A surety cannot be held liable beyond the extent to which he has contracted. [P 698 C 1]

A judgment-debtor was arrested. A bond was executed by a surety to produce him on a fixed date and in default to pay the decretal amount. Court was closed on the fixed date, when the surety was present with judgment-debtor. No notice was served on the surety to produe the judgment-debtor on any or other date and the judgment-debtor and the surety were absent on the next hearing fixed. Proceedings were taken out against surety.

Held: that the surety was not liable: A. I. R. 1925 All. 5; A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 20 ; and 15 P.W. R. 1919 ; Rel. on. [P 698 C 1]

arrest of his judgment-debtor. The appellant in this second appeal, when the judgment-debtor was arrested, stood surety for him on 8th May 1926. The next date of hearing had already been fixed and was 23rd June 1926. This date had also been given in the warrant. The bond provided that he would produce the judgment-debtor on the date fixed, i. e., the 23rd June 1926, and in case of default that the surety would be liable to pay the decretal amount. The 23rd June 1926 later was declared to be a holiday and the Subordinate Judge did not sit on that day. His Reader was present and noted that the counsel for the decree-holder attended and that the case was adjourned to the 1st July On 1st July the decree-holder applied to execute his decree against the surety and the 15th July was fixed for the surety's attendance to show cause against this application. The surety appeared on that date and pleaded that he had produced the judgment-debtor in the Court compound on 23rd June 1926. No evidence was taken and on 18th August 1926, the Subordinate Judge held that the surety was not liable as his agreement was to only produce the judgment-debtor on 23rd June which he could not do as it was a holiday. He further held that S. 4, Limitation Act, and S. 10, General Clauses Act, did not apply and that it was not the duty of the surety to produce him on the next day the Court sat, that is, on 24th June 1926.

On appeal the learned Additional District Judge has written a somewhat confused judgment. He first held that in his opinion the surety was bound to produce the judgment-debtor on the day of the reopening of the Court, that is, the next day. His argument in connexion with this finding is based on the analogy of S. 4, Lim. Act and S. 10, General Clauses Act. He then went on to hold that there was no evidence on the record that the surety produced the judgment-debtor in Court on 23rd June 1926, and that his case might have been different, had he done so. In the last part of his judgment he came to the finding that there was a duty resting on the surety to produce the judgment-debtor in Court on the next day of hearing, which I presume would be the 1st July 1926, though the Additional District Judge has not stated what it was. Consequently he accepted the appeal and held that the surety was not discharged. Against this decision this second appeal has been preferred.

There is an affidavit before me of the surety to the effect that he did bring the judgment-debtor to the Court of the Subordinate Judge on 23rd June 1926, but that he then found that the Court was closed. It has frequently been held that a security bond must be strictly interpreted. It was conceded before me that the sole undertaking of the surety was to produce the judgment-debtor on 23rd June 1926, which turned out to be a holiday. Further it was conceded that the surety could not produce him on that day for the reason that it was a holiday Now, no notice was ever given to the surety to produce the judgment-debtor on any other date. He was only called upon to show cause why he himself should not be held liable for the decree. In these circumstances it follows that he is certainly not liable for the decree. He could not produce the judgment-debtor on the date fixed for the reason already given and was never called upon to produce him on any other date. That is sufficient to dispose of this appeal which must be accepted with costs throughout.

I might mention that the judgment-debtor was being criminally prosecuted by the surety. The criminal case against the judgment-debtor had been temporarily stayed, but it was revived and the judgment-debtor was arrested in that case at the instance of the surety on 26th July 1926. He was convicted on 1st November 1926, and has since been in jail. It is obvious that the decree-holder did not desire the presence of the judgment-debtor for these reasons and that was why he tried to make the surety liable for the decree. The learned counsel who appeared on behalf of the respondent asked me to allow him now to call upon the surety to produce the judgment-debtor, but I am not prepared to do so in the circumstances described as he did not then desire the judgment-debtor when it was possible to produce him.

In A. I. R. 1928 Lahore 20 it was held that where a surety undertook to produce an accused person before a Magistrate on a particular date and the Magistrate did not sit on that date, the surety was not liable to produce him on any other date. It is true that case is not on all fours with the present case as the day fixed was not a holiday. At the same time it is analogous to the present case as the Court was not sitting. To a similar effect is another decision of this Court reported in Thakur Das v. Sham Das (1). In A. I. R. 1925 All. 5 the sureties bound themselves to produce in Court the judgment-debtor on the day the appeal then pending was dismissed and in case of failure to pay the decretal amount. It was held that it was impossible to know beforehand on what date the appeal would be finally disposed of by the High Court and that decree-holders since then took no steps to call upon the sureties to produce the judgment-debtor in Court. In that case the vakil for the decree-holder was asked whether he wanted the judgment-debtor to be brought into Court and said that he did not want him as he had become insolvent. This case bears some analogy to the present case except that the decree-holder was not specially asked whether he wanted the surety to produce the judgment-debtor in Court. It is obvious, however, for the reasons already given, that he did not want him as the judgment-debtor was a man of straw. It follows, therefore, that the decree-holder cannot be now allowed to call upon the surety to produce the judgment-debtor in Court.

Lastly, I am of opinion that suretyships must be construed strictly and that a surety cannot be held liable beyond the extent to which he has contracted. This means that, as for no fault of his own the surety could not produce the judgment-debtor in Court on 23rd June 1926, he cannot be called upon to produce him on any other date. For this reason also the appeal succeeds.

In the result the appeal is accepted with costs throughout. The order of the Additional District Judge is set aside and the order of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, restored.

Judgment.—Nobody appears in this Court on behalf of the respondents.

The plaintiff had by a registered deed gifted certain houses to his sons but his case was that the gift was inoperative and invalid and had never been acted upon because possession had never been delivered to the donees. But he produced no evidence whatsoever in support of this plea and the trial Court dismissed his suit for a declaration that the houses belonged to him. On appeal the learned District Judge decreed his suit finding that the gift was invalid because it was not followed by delivery of possession. But in the deed itself it was recited that possession had been delivered to the donees. A party who executed and registered a document should prove that a recital made therein was incorrect. In Chandra Kunwar v. Narpat Singh (1) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that " what a party himself admits to be true may reasonably be presumed to be so " and until the presumption was rebutted the fact admitted must be taken to be established. In that case also there was an admission in a document. As in the present case the admission in question made in a regstered deed was not shown to be incorrect, it must be taken to be correct and the plaintiff's suit must fail. I, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the order of the lower appellate Court and restore

Letters Patent Appeal No. 74 of 1926, Decided on 24th April 1928, from judgment of Campbell, J., D/- 10th February 1926, in Civil Appeal No. 2875 of 1925.

Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 69—Court sale—Acceptance of decree-holder's bid — Refusal by him to deposit the usual 25 per cent of the price—Attempt by auctioneer to continue sale but finally closing it to continue it on a further date if so ordered by Court—Sale is not postponed.

Where at a Court sale the auctioneer accepted the decree-holder's bid and then called upon him to deposit the usual 25 per cent., but on the decree-holder's refusal to make this payment the auctioneer made an attempt to continue the sale, but owing to the state of the weather and other circumstances he obtained no further bids and at the request of the parties closed the auction telling them that should the Court order it the sale would be continued on a future date.

Held : that there was no actual postponement or adjournment of the sale as contemplated by R. 69, O. 21, by the auctioneer, and therefore it could not be contended that there was no sale which could be confirmed.

Durga Das and Mohammed Monier—for Appellant.

Moti Sagar and Jagan Nath Aggarwal—for Respondents.

Broadway, J.—The firm of Seth Chuhar Mal-Rai Sahib Mohan Singh of Amritsar obtained a decree against the firm of Fateh Mohammad-Din Muhammad also of Amritsar for Rs. 25,518 odd and in execution of that decree attached certain property which under orders of the Court was brought to sale on 3rd August 1925. The decree-holder had obtained permission to bid at the sale and offered a sum of Rs. 20,000, which being the highest bid was accepted by the auctioneer.

When the decree-holder was called upon to pay the customary 25 per cent. deposit he refused to do so saying that his decree exceeded the amount of his bid. The auctioneer thereupon acting under O. 21, R. 84 (1), Civil P. C., proceeded to try to resell the property. It was then about 5 p m. and heavy rain had begun to fall with the result that there was no further bidding and the auctioneer at the instance of the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor closed the auction.

On 6th August 1925, the auctioneer reported the circumstances to the Court, at the same time saying that he had announced that if the Court ordered it the auction would again be held on the morning of 7th August 1925.

On 10th October 1925, the Court confirmed the sale holding that as the decree-holder was himself the purchaser it was not necessary for him to deposit the 25 per cent and adjourned the case to 26th October 1925.

On that date the judgment-debtor filed certain objections purporting to be under S. 47, O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C. The Court dismissed the objections holding that the sale had already been confirmed and refusing to entertain the judgment-debtor's application after such confirmation, more particularly since he, as a judgment-debtor, had exhausted every possible method of delaying execution of the decree.

Against this order the judgment-debtor preferred an appeal to this Court which was dismissed by Campbell, J., as incompetent.

The judgment-debtor has now preferred this appeal under Cl. 10, Letters Patent, and we have heard Mr. Durga Das in support of it, while Mr. Moti Sagar has addressed us on behalf of the decree-holder respondent.

The only point for determination is whether the appeal against the order of 26th October 1925 was competent. Mr. Durga Das admitted that the majority of the objections contained in his application of 26th October 1925 fell within the purview of O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., and inasmuch as the application was barred by time those objections could not be entertained. He urged, however, that in the said objections it was definitely alleged that inasmuch as the auctioneer had under O. 21, R. 69, Civil P. C., postponed the sale on 3rd August 1925, there was no sale.

which could be confirmed, and, therefore, the sale should be regarded as a nullity or void, and the question gone into under S. 47, Civil P. C. He also urged that the failure on the part of the decree-holder to deposit the 25 per cent of his bid was an illegality not covered by O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C., and therefore, falling within the purview of S. 47 of the Code.

The second contention is concluded by Parja Mal Chandi Mal v. Mul Chand Murari Lal (1). On the first point reliance was placed in the main on Rajagopala Ayyar v. Ramanuja Chariar (2) which to some extent supports Mr. Durga Das. It is not, however, necessary to discuss that authority as the mere fact that in the application S. 47 was mentioned does not necessarily mean that the objection falls within it: see Matiur Rasul v. Abdul Said (3).

Before the question whether a sale was void because of its postponement can be considered, it has to be seen whether the factum of the alleged postponement has been made out. In the present case all that Mr. Durga Das could say was that the report of the auctioneer dated 6th August 1925 establishes his contention that there was a postponement of the sale, but a reference to that report does not bear out his contention. It shows rather that the auctioneer had accepted the decree-holder's bid of Rs. 20,000 and had then called upon him to deposit the usual 25 per cent. On the decree-holder's refusal to make this payment the auctioneer made an attempt to continue the sale, but owing to the state of the weather and other circumstances he obtained no further bids and at the request of the appellant and the respondent closed the auction telling them that should the Court order it the sale would be continued on 7th August 1925. As I read this report there was no actual postponement or adjournment of the sale as contemplated by R. 69, O. 21, by the auctioneer. All he did was to report the facts to the Court for such orders as might be necessary.

Seeing that the amount of the decree-holder's bid was less than his decree by over Rs. 4,000, the Court very properly exercised the discretion given to it by R. 84 (2), O. 21 and dispensed with the deposit. There was thus no postponement of the auction and the sale was not void on that account. In these circumstances I think the Court was right in dismissing the application and the learned Judge in Chambers in dismissing the appeal.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 1330 of 1927, Decided on 22nd November 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Mianwali, D/- 15th March 1927.

Restitution of conjugal rights—Gross failure by husband to perform obligations imposed by marriage contract — Decree for restitution should not be granted.

The grant of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights is discretionary with the Courts and though ordinarily such a decree will be refused only if the husband has been guilty of legal cruelty towards his wife, he may disentitle himself to this relief by his gross failure to perform the obligations which the marriage contract had imposed on him for the benefit of the wife : 11 *M. S. R. Laul—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The suit, which has given rise to this second appeal, was instituted by Imam Bakhsh, plaintiff-appellant, for restitution of conjugal rights against Mt. Amiran, defendant 1, whom he claimed as his wife. The parents of Mt. Amiran and some other relations were also impleaded and an injunction was asked for against them directing them not to prevent Mt. Amiran from going over to the plaintiff.

The suit was decreed ex parte by the trial Court but was dismissed by the learned District Judge on appeal by the defendants.

A second appeal has been preferred by Imam Bakhsh and it is argued on his behalf that the learned District Judge having found that defendant 1 was validly married to the plaintiff has dismissed the suit for restitution of conjugal rights on legally inadequate grounds. The facts found are, however, as follows :

(a) That Mt. Amiran was married to the plaintiff about ten years before the suit, the marriage having been arranged by her father with a view to procure a bride for his son in exchange for her.

(b) That since the marriage the girl has been living with her parents, no effort having been made by the plaintiff to bring her to his house.

(c) That though Mt. Amiran attained puberty three years ago, the marriage has not been yet consummated.

(d) That about the time Mt. Amiran attained puberty the plaintiff married another woman with whom he has since been living and from whom he has got a daughter.

(e) During all this period the plaintiff has absolutely neglected Mt. Amiran,

Mr. Shambhu Lal Puri has argued that these facts are insufficient to justify refusal to the plaintiff of relief by way of restitution of conjugal rights and that the learned District Judge should have decreed the suit. He has cited before me a number of rulings each of which was, however, decided on its peculiar facts. It is well settled that the grant of a decree for restitution of conjugal rights is discretionary with the Courts and though ordinarily such a decree will be refused only if the husband has been guilty of legal cruelty towards his wife, he may disentitle himself to this relief by his gross failure to perform the obligations which the marriage contract had imposed on him for the benefit of the wife : see Moonshee Buzloor Ruheem v. Shumsoonnissa Begum (1), Ziada v. Jowai (2) and the recent decision of this Court in Nawab Bibi v. Allah Ditta (3).

Having regard to the facts as found above and all the circumstances of the case I am of opinion that the learned District Judge exercised a sound discretion in dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab—Respondent.

Miscellaneous Petn. No. 451 of 1927, Decided on 21st February 1928.

Income-tax Act, S. 66—Application for reference rejected—Notice subsequently erroneously issued under S. 29 instead of under S. 45—Fresh application for reference to re-agitate previous unsuccessful points was not entertained.

Acting under S. 33 the Commissioner assessed the petitioner to an additional sum. On the Commissioner refusing to refer the case to the High Court, an application was made to the High Court to take action, which was rejected. A notice of demand was then issued as headed under S. 29, and the assessment was described under Ss. 23 and 33, while in fact it ought to have been headed as under S. 45. Petitioner paid the money and then applied to the Commissioner to refer not only the legality of the demand, but also all the other points which he had unsuccessfully attempted to agitate before and contended that as S. 29 was wrongly invoked and quoted, he was entitled to agitate all the points contended on the previous unsuccessful application.

Held : that the other points could not be agitated as no special jurisdiction had been created by the error in quoting S. 29. [P 702 C 1]

J. C. Sethi—for Petitioners.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal—for Commissioner, Income-tax.

Dalip Singh, J.—Acting under S. 33, Income-tax Act, the Commissioner assessed the present petitioner to an additional sum of Rs. 6,000 odd. The petitioner presented an application under S. 66 (1) asking to have certain points of law, which he alleged arose, referred to the High Court. On the Commissioner declining to take action an application was made to this Court which was rejected by a Division Bench, an order being passed to the effect that whatever power the Presidency High Courts might have of compelling a reference under S. 66 (1), this High Court had no such power and as the action taken by the Commissioner was taken under S. 33, no relief could be given. After this decision had been announced a notice of demand was issued by the Income-tax Officer to the petitioner for the recovery of the amount so assessed. This was described and headed as under S. 29 and the assessment was described as falling under Ss. 23 and 33, the decision having been under S. 33. On receiving this demand the petitioner paid the money and then applied to the Commissioner to refer not only the question of the legality of the demand but also all the other points, which he had unsuccessfully attempted to agitate before. The Commissioner gave a finding that S. 29 did not apply and had wrongly been referred to by the Income-tax Officer. He pointed out that action should have been taken under Ch. 6, and referred to S. 45. He then offered to return the deposit as he had decided the only point involved in favour of the petitioner.

The petitioner has now come to this Court again and contends that because S. 29 was wrongly invoked and wrongly quoted by the Income-tax Officer, the door is somehow opened, which was formerly closed, and he is entitled to agitate all the points contended on the previous unsuccessful application, and this because the error committed by the Income-tax Officer in some curious way creates a new and special jurisdiction under S. 66 (2) to deal with points which normally could only reach this Court if referred under S. 66 (1), inasmuch as they arise out of an order passed by the Commissioner under S. 33.

We are of opinion that the decision of the Commissioner was right and that S. 29 was wrongly used. As we agree with him, there is no question of our granting leave to refer the question on which we do agree. We are of opinion that the other points cannot be agitated now any more than they could be agitated before and that no special jurisdiction has been created by the error of the Income-tax Officer in quoting S. 29.

We, therefore, dismiss the application. No order as to costs, as Rs. 100 have been deposited and not repaid.

Judgment.—Sucha Singh was surety for certain debts due by another person. The creditor sued on one of the bonds and obtained a decree for Rs. 600. Thereafter Sucha Singh mortgaged two houses with the creditors for Rs. 1,000. The consideration was the sum of Rs. 600 for which a decree had been obtained and another sum of Rs. 400 due on two bonds in which Sucha Singh was surety also. The creditor was the same in the case of all the bonds and he was also the decree-holder and the mortgagee. The sons of Sucha Singh brought the present suit for a declaration that the alienation by mortgage should be held not to affect their reversionary rights after the death of their father as the money was not advanced for necessity. Consideration was held to be proved but both the Courts below have concurred in holding that there was no necessity. The plaintiffs, therefore, obtained the decree they asked for and the mortgagee has come here in second appeal.

It is quite clear that this appeal must be dismissed. It was held in Hemraj v. Ganda Singh (1) that an alienation of ancestral property by an agriculturist for a debt incurred as surety is invalid according to custom as such a debt is not a necessity. It, therefore, follows that there was no necessty for the sum of Rs. 400 due on the two bonds as to which no decree was obtained. The mortgagee as he was himself the creditor knew that Sucha Singh was only a surety. Further, the fact that a decree was obtained for Rs. 600 on one of the bonds does not help the mortgagee. In that case, too, he was the creditor and also the decree-holder and he knew that the bond and the decree were against Sucha Singh as surety. This case, therefore, has no analogy of any kind with Ran Singh v. Rullia (2).

The decision of the Courts below was correct and I dismiss this appeal with costs

First Appeal No. 2690 of 1925, Decided on 5th May 1928, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 20th October 1923.

Custom (Punjab)—Among Awans of Kardar (Jhelum District) daughters inherit self-acquired property in preference to collaterals.

Among Awans of village Khardar of the District of Jhelum a daughter is entitled to succeed to the self-acquired property of her father in preference to collaterals : 115 P. R. 1892, Doubted and Dist. [P 703 C 1,2]

Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand—for Appellant.

Badri Das and Mehr Chand Wadhera—for Respondents.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On 22nd November 1922, Mt. Sharfan, the widow of one Sharaf Khan, an Awan of the village Khardar in the District of Jhelum, gifted to her daughter, Mt. Bhag Bhari, a plot of land which she had inherited from her deceased husband. The plaintiffs, who are the brothers and nephews of Sharaf Khan, have brought the present action to impeach the alienation, and the question debated before us is whether the daughter or the collaterals are entitled to succeed to the estate which was admittedly the self-acquired property of Sharaf Khan.

The plaintiffs place their reliance upon an entry in the Riwaj-i-am of the district, which lays down that an unmarried daughter, in the absence of male lineal descendants, succeeds to the property of her father only until marriage; and that no distinction is made, in the matter of inheritance, between self-acquired and ancestral property of the father or between moveable and immovable property. As laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Beg v. Allah Ditta (1) an entry in the Riwaj-i-am raises a presumption in favour of the custom recorded therein, and the onus lies upon the daughter to rebut that presumption. It is, however, clear that the general custom of the province favours the succession of the daughter to the acquired property of her father in preference to collaterals, vide Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, para. 23, sub-para. (2); and that the custom invoked by the plaintiffs must be treated as an exception to the general rule. It is to be observed that the Code of Tribal Custom prepared by Mr. Talbot at the last settlement of the district does not mention any instances in support of the exclusion of the daughter from the self-acquired property of her father and the declaration that a married daughter cannot inherit even the self-acquired moveable property of her father verges on an absurdity. Indeed, Mr. Talbot himself in his preface points out that the Code must not in all cases, be regarded as a correct record of the customs actually existing, and that the more intelligent tribesmen who usually act as spokesmen on an occasion of this kind sometimes allow their opinion as to what customs are expedient to override their knowledge of the customs as they really are.

The considerations set out above leave no doubt that the onus placed upon the daughter by the entry in the Riwaj-i-am is a light one, and does not require much evidence to repel it. Now the evidence produced on behalf of the defendants shows that, in at least four instances, daughters inherited the self-acquired property of their fathers in preference to collaterals. The witness Abdulla deposes that the property of Mt. Chhati's husband was inherited by her daughter Mt. Suban in the presence of the cousins of the deceased husband. The village to which Mt. Chhati belonged is situate at a distance of less than five miles from the village of the parties. The second instance is mentioned by the witness Ashraf Khan, who states that the estate of Sahib went to his daughter Mt. Milkhan to the exclusion of his male collaterals. The third instance is proved by an entry in the mutation register which shows that Mt. Bhag Bhari gifted the estate of her deceased husband to her daughters In the same way one Mt. Bakht Bano gifted the land inherited by her from her husband to her daughters, and no person objected to this gift.

The learned counsel for the defendants has invited our attention to two other instances, namely, the succession of Mirza's daughter and of Khadim's daughters, but it does not appear that in either of these cases there was any collateral who could dispute the claim of the daughters.

As against the instances relied upon by the defendants, we have only one real instance proved by the plaintiffs in which, according to the witness Captain Nawab Khan, the self-acquired property of Muhammad Khan was taken by his brother without any contest by his daughters. The area of the land is not, however, given, and it appears that the property was acquired by the deceased jointly with his brothers.

Mr. Shamair Chand for the plaintiffs has also relied upon the judgment in Mt. Sharfan v. Kammu (2), in which a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court held that no custom was proved entitling a daughter and a daughter's son to exclude a brother and nephews from succession to acquired immovable property. It is, however, clear that parties to the case, though Awans by tribe, were Jhiwars (water-carriers) by occupation, and that they lived in the town of Rawalpindi. The property, which was the bone of contention, was a water-mill and not agricultural land. Moreover, this judgment was adversely commented upon in Wazir v. Mt. Maryan (3).

Upon an examination of the entire material before us I have reached the conclusion that the presumption arising from the entry in the Riwaj-i-am has been sufficiently rebutted, and that the plaintiffs are not entitled to succeed to the self-acquired property of Sharaf Khan. I accordingly confirm the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment.— The plaintiffs in this case sued for possession of a house shown red in the plan annexed to the plaint. They alleged possession and dispossession by the defendant. On appeal the learned Senior Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiffs on their own evidence had not been able to prove that they had ever been in possession of the house. He further accepted the defendant's evidence that the defendant had been in possession for a long time—more than twelve years—and he, therefore, dismissed the suit as time barred. The plaintiffs appeal and their learned counsel has endeavoured to argue that the defendant should have proved adverse possession and the plaintiffs should not have been called upon to prove their possession within 12 years. Jai Chand v. Girwar Singh (1) and Ismail v. Ibrahim (2) have been cited in support, but those were suits on title without allegation of possession and dispossession. This contention of counsel for the appellant is, therefore, incorrect.

Counsel has next contended that the documents produced by the defendant and in fact most of the documents produced by either side have not been duly exhibited and has cited Secretary of State v. Sarla Devi (3) and Sadik Husain Khan

v. Hashim Ali Khan (4), a Privy Council ruling, as laying down that in such a case there must be a re-trial. The Privy Council, in my opinion, do not lay down anything of the kind. Their Lordships merely stated that in future to avoid the great difficulty which arises before their Lordships in determining what documents were or were not on the record they would not for purposes of appeal before them look at any documents that had not been duly exhibited. It is to be observed that their Lordships stated that they would not, not that they could not, look at these documents. It is obvious that before their Lordships of the Privy Council there must be considerable difficulty in determining what documents had been produced and what not. Those considerations would not necessarily apply in every case in this country. In Secretary of State for India v. Sarla DeviChaudhrani (3) no doubt it was stated by a Division Bench that they would in that case have ordered a re-trial as the documents had not been duly exhibited. But that decision was obiter because counsel on both sides agreed to allow the documents which had been put in to be taken as evidence.

I do not, therefore, think that that is binding on me. To make my meaning clearer I would refer to the rules of this Court by which documents on which either side wished to rely on a first appeal have to be printed. It is open to the Court to refuse to look at documents that have not been so printed, but I have never heard it contended that the Court is debarred from looking at such documents. Of course, the Court should always consider before looking at such documents whether the other side was being prejudiced in any way by this fact, but I know of no ruling that the Court could not, if it wished to, refer to documents which had not been printed. In any event this point was not raised before the lower appellate Court by either side and I do not consider that it is open to any party who had not raised this point to raise it for the first time in a second appeal merely in order to have a decision, counter to himself, set aside on that ground. When all is said and done it is impossible for any party to compel the Court to observe the provisions of O. 13, and if the parties have not made the non-compliance of the Court a ground of complaint at the earliest opportunity I do not think they should be allowed to raise such points in a second appeal thereafter.

Counsel for the appellants has further wished me to refer to a record of execution proceedings. There is nothing to show that these execution proceedings were ever produced or brought on the record of the present case. I, therefore, decline to look at them. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed. In view of all the circumstances of the case I do not think that any order for costs is necessary.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 1566 of 1927, Decided on 16th February 1928, from order of Dist. Judge, Sialkot, D/- 14th March 1927.

Limitation Act, Art. 10—Pre-emption suit—Actual possession of property sold given to vendee—Art. 10 applies and limitation starts from date of possession.

A suit for pre-emption is governed by Art. 10 where the sale is of a specified plot whether in actual possession of the vendor or in joint possession of the vendor and others, and actual possession of the property sold is given to the vendee, and the starting point for limitation is the date of possession. The determining factor in such cases is the factum of actual physical possession and not the nature of the whole property of which the plot sold is a part.

Judgment.*—This is a second appeal in a suit for pre-emption which was dismissed by the trial Court as barred by time but which was remanded to it for trial on the merits by the appellate Court on the ground that it was not barred by time. The sale took place on the 3rd February 1925 on which date a report was made by the parties to the patwari stating that out of a big holding which was joint between the vendor and others, the vendor had sold 11 marlas of a specific plot to the vendee and had actually given possession thereof to him and that he had erected walls around the plot so purchased by him. The sale was expressly for the purpose of construction by the vendee of a cattle-shed on the plot sold. The District Judge has found on evidence produced at the trial that actual possession of the plot sold was given to the vendee but he holds that :

as the sale was of a share of a joint khata the property sold was incapable of physical possession according to rulings, and therefore he has declined to apply Art. 10, Sch. 1, Lim. Act.

In my opinion the District Judge has misunderstood the law on the subject. If the sale is of a share of a joint khata as distinguished from a specified plot out of a joint khata then the property sold would not be capable of actual physical possession and therefore Art. 10, Lim. Act, would not govern a pre-emption suit in such a case But where the sale is of a specified plot whether in actual possession of the vendor or in joint possession of himself and others, and actual possession of the property sold is given to the vendee then it is Art. 10, Lim. Act, that applies and the starting point for limitation is the date of possession. The determining factor in such cases is the factum of actual physical possession and not the nature of the whole property of which the plot sold is a part.

I hold that, on the finding of fact arrived at by the District Judge, the suit was clearly barred by time and consequently accepting this appeal I dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Tek Chand, J.—The land in dispute was owned by one Khushal Singh, a Sikh Virk Jat of Mauza Sawanke in the Khankah Dogaran Tahsil of Sheikhupura District. Khushal Singh died in 1918 and on his death mutation was effected in the names of defendants 1 and 2, Kabula Singh and Tilok Singh, minors, who described as his sons, under the guardianship of their mother Mt. Isher Kaur.

Three years later Khushal Singh's collaterals sued for a declaration that they were the owners in possession of the land left by him and that defendants 1 and 2 "had nothing to do with it." It was alleged that Mt. Isher Kaur, the mother of defendants 1 and 2, belonged to the Mazhabi caste and was not in fact, nor could she be in law, married to Khushal Singh and that defendants 1 and 2 being his illegitimate children were not entitled to succeed to his property.

The defendant admitted that Mt. Isher Kaur was of the Mazhabi caste but pleaded that she was the lawfully wedded wife of Khushal Singh, that they were his legitimate sons and that Khushal Singh and the brotherhood had throughout recognized them as such.

Both the Courts below have concurrently found that Khushal Singh was married to Mt. Isher Kaur in the Anand form and this finding has not been challenged before us. As to the validity of the marriage, the Subordinate Judge held on the evidence that marriages between Jats and Mazhabi women were valid according to the custom prevailing in the locality, and further, that they were not prohibited by Hindu law, to which resort must be had, if no well-established custom be held to have been established. On appeal the learned District Judge, Sardar Sewa Ram Singh, did not choose to rest his decision on actual proof of custom, but, following Dalip Kaur v. Fatti (1), held the marriage to be legal under the Sikh law of marriage, as well as under Hindu law, according to which intermarriages between Jats and Mazhabis are lawful both being subdivision of the Sudra caste. On these findings the suit has been dismissed and the plaintiffs have preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The only question which has been agitated before us relates to the validity of the marriage of Khushal Singh with Mt. Isher Kaur. As stated above the marriage was performed according to the Anand ceremony, which is now one of the recognized forms of marriage among the Sikhs. According to the Sikh tradition Anand marriage was first introduced by the third Guru, and his immediate successor Guru Ram Das composed the four Lawans given in the Suhi Rag of the Granth Sahib, which are recited at the ceremony, and which will be found translated in Macauliffe's Sikh Religion, Vol. II, pp. 334 and 335, and Hari Kishen Kaul's Census Report (Punjab), 1911, part 1, p. 277. At one time doubts were entertained about the legality of marriages performed in this form, but the matter was set at rest by the enactment of the Anand Marriage Act 7, 1909, S. 2 of which provides that all marriages which may be or may have been duly solemnized according to the Sikh marriage ceremony called Anand shall, and shall be deemed to have been, with effect from the date of the solemnization of each, respectively, good and valid in law.

The learned counsel for the appellants, however, contends that the Anand marriage Act is a permissive legislation. which merely authorizes a change in the ritual observed at the marriage ceremony, and does not deal with the qualifications of the spouses, which continue to be regulated by the personal law of the parties or the rules of custom (if any) prevailing among them. His argument is that all that the Act did was to dispense with the necessity of performing the ceremonies prescribed in the Shastras like circumambulations round the sacred fire and the chanting of Sanskrit texts, and to substitute therefor the prakriman round the Granth Sahib and recitation of verses from it, and that the Act being silent about marriages between persons of different castes cannot be said to have legalized inter caste marriages, even though performed according to the Anand ritual. As at present advised, I am not prepared to accept this argument as sound, but I do not wish to express a definite opinion, so far as intermarriages between persons belonging to the higher castes are concerned. At the trial the enquiry was not directed towards that aspect of the matter nor is it necessary for the purposes of this case to give a decision on it. The parties to the marriage, the legality of which is under consideration, were a Jat male and a Mazhabi female and I have no doubt that marriages between them are valid, whether performed according to the Anand or the ordinary Hindu ceremonies.

It is well known that Jats, especially Sikh Jats, hold very liberal views on questions relating to marriage and even at the height of the Brahmanical supremacy they did not show much inclination to be bound by the caste iron rules laid down in the later Hindu Smritis, interdicting marriage outside the caste, and prescribing elaborate ritual for the performance of the marriage ceremony. Among them remarriage of widows has all along existed commonly, and chadar andazi, in which the ceremonial has been reduced to the very minimum, is one of the recognized forms of marriage. Indeed the Riwaj-i-ams of the districts [e.g, Ludhiana (1834-1835) p. 46, and Kaithal, p. 4] and the records of cases decided judicially are full of instances in which mere cohabitation as man and wife for a long period without any strict matrimonial ceremony, has been considered sufficient to validate the marriage It will perhaps be no exaggeration to say that nowhere has the doctrine of factum valet been more liberally applied to marriage than in the Punjab, and here, in no tribe so freely as among the Jats. In this connexion reference may inter alia be made to the following decision in which marriage between Jats and females of other castes have been held to be valid: Chandra Singh v. Mela (2), Jat with a Jhiwar Nai or Kalal woman; Sahib Ditta v. Bela (3), Jat with a Brahman woman, Ranjit Singh v. Isa (4), Khatri Kuka Singh with a Jat woman;

Mt. As Kaur v. Sawan Singh (5), Jat with woman of the Koli (Chamar) caste and Mt. Dalip Kaur v. Mt Fatti (1), Jat Sikh with an Arain woman converted to Sikhism.

Incidentally it may be mentioned that the last two rulings are of particular importance as affording a complete answer to the argument of the appellants' counsel, that howsoever lax Jats might be in their notions of marriage, a union of a Sikh Jat with a woman of one of the so-called "impure" castes, even if performed in the Anand form, will not be valid. In the first of these cases the woman belonged to one of the Chamar tribes, and in the latter she was a born Mahomedan, who had been converted to Sikhism. Other cases bearing on the point are Sodhi Kartar Singh v. Sher Singh (6) and Lachhman Singh v. Partap Singh (7). It should also be noted that such marriages are not mere recent innovations, but seem to have been recognized as valid long before the British occupation: See, for example Macauliffe's Sikh Religion, Vol. V, p. 249, where an account is given of a number of Mahomedan women having been converted to Sikhism by Banda Sahib and married to Sikh soldiers (mostly Jats) by the ceremony of Anand.

I am also in complete agreement with the learned District Judge that the marriage in question would be valid under Hindu law, as administered by the British Indian Courts. As pointed out by Mayne in his Treatise on Hindu Law, (edn. 9, p. 106) the prohibition against marriages between persons of different castes is of comparatively modern origin. It was not in force in ancient times, as then caste was not regulated by birth, but, according to some Orientalists, was determined by the personal qualities of each individual, and according to others it was an "ethnological distinction." Bannerji's Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhana, (edn. 2, p. 71). Gradually the caste system in its present form grew up, but for centuries inter-caste marriages were allowed. Among the earlier Sutra writers the validity of such marriages was undisputed (Mayne, p. 107) and later on the marriage of a male of a higher caste with a woman of lower caste (Anuloma) but not the reverse (Pratiloma) was recognized (see Ganpathi Iyer's Hindu Law, Vol. 1, p. 454, and Golap Chandra Sarkar's Hindu Law, edn. 6, p. 146, where numerous quotations are given from lawgivers like Yajnawalkya, Manu, Budhayana, Gautama, Vasishta, Narda, Brihaspati and the Mitakshara permitting such marriage). It was only in the time of Apastamba that the rule was made more rigid and marriages outside the caste were prohibited. But even then the prohibition was applicable to the three regenerate or the Dwija castes and did not apply to the Sudras (Ganpathi Iyer's Hindu Law, p. 458, S. 632); Gour's Hindu Code, edn. 2, p. 271, Ss. 483, 486) and Mulla's Hindu Law, edn. 4, p. 421, S. 531).

But whatever conflict might have existed among the mediaeval Sanskrit writers on the subject, it may be taken as settled law, at any rate so far as British India is concerned, that marriages inter se between different sub-divisions of Sudra caste are valid and must be recognized as such. The matter has been put beyond all controversy by the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in two cases from Madras reported as Inderun Valungypooly v. Ramasawmy Pandia (8) and Rammani Ammal v. Kulanthai Natchear (9). The rules laid down in these rulings have since been applied to Sudras in other provinces as well. See Upoma Kuchain v. Bholaram Dhubi (10), Garish Chandra v. Mahomed Shajed Chowdhury (11), Biswanath Das Ghose v. Sarashibala Dasi (12), Fakiraguda v. Gangi (13), Mahantava Irappa v. Gangavi (14), Har Prasad v. Kewal (15), Mt Dalip Kaur v. *Mt. challenged, contended as a last resort that the rule could not be extended to intermarriages of males of the "pure" Sudra caste like the Jat with women of the "unclean classes," touch with whom was pollution. He has, however, been unable to cite any authority in support of his contention. In Gour's Hindu Code at p. 199, S. 294 (4) the untouchable classes, including Chamars, Pariahs, and Mehtrars are described as Sudras and in the leading case of Muthusami Mudaliar v. Musilamani (18) it was held by Sankaran Nair, J. (Abdur Rahim, J., concurring) that for the purposes of the rule aforesaid, all Hindus other than those belonging to three regenerate classes were to be treated as Sudras, marriage between different sub-sections of whom were valid. In that particular case one of the parties was a Christian who had before marriage been converted to Hinduism. She was classed as a Sudra and her marriage with a male of the Kaikolar caste was held to be legal under Hindu law. As regards the Mazhabis it is interesting to note that many of them have the same gots as those of the Jats and in their customs, too, at wedding etc., they conform to a great extent to those prevalent among the Jats: Rose's Glossary of Tribes and Castes in the Punjab, Vol. 3, p. 76.

I am of opinion, that the marriage between Khushal Singh and Mt. Isher Kaur was valid and defendants 1 and 2 being his legitimate sons have lawfully succeeded to his property.

Judgment. *—The plaintiffs in this case sued for a permanent injunction directing defendant 1 to remove the almirah and the wooden takht which he had placed in a certain galli and restraining him from using the land of the galli in future in any way so as to obstruct the rights of the plaintiffs in the galli. The plaintiffs claimed to be joint owners of the land of the galli and also claimed rights of easement and user therein. They alleged that their rights of way in this passage had been obstructed by the erection of this takht and the almirah. The defendants pleaded that they were the owners of the galli and that the plaintiffs had only a right of way and that the almirah and the takht had been lying there for more than 35 years and that the plaintiffs' right of way was not obstructed and the suit was barred by limitation.

The trial Court held that the plaintiffs had not proved their joint ownership, that the defendants had failed to prove their exclusive ownership, that the land in question was a street which the plaintiffs had a right to use, that the obstruction made the enjoyment of the easement more difficult and that the obstruction had been caused only few months before the suit and granted, therefore, a decree for permanent injunction as prayed.

On appeal the learned District Judge agreed that the plaintiffs had not proved their joint title. He held that the takht had been there since 1896 and that the plaintiffs' right of way had in no way been interfered with and he thereupon dismissed the suit with costs in both Courts.

The plaintiffs have appealed and the first point urged by their counsel is that both the Courts are wrong in holding that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the joint ownership. His ground is that in the case of a blind alley there is a presumption of law that the ownership vests in the owners of the adjacent houses and he cites Secy. of State v. Lakshmishankar Govindram (1), a Division Bench ruling of the Bombay High Court, in support of his proposition. The word "presumption" is sometimes used to describe what is really an inference of fact and not a presumption of law in the true sense, and I think the word "presumption" in this particular ruling is used in the former sense. No doubt. ornarily speaking, if the Court drew this inference of fact in the case of a blind alley it would be a proper inference to draw. But in this particular case evidently the matter was not presented in this light to the District Judge and I cannot say that his finding which is a finding of fact is wrong. In this particular case further there is the fact that plaintiffs never claimed either in 1895 or in 1916 or at any time prior to this suit any right of joint ownership. I therefore repel the contention of the appellants.

The second point raised by them is that the trial Court held that the defendants were not exclusive owners of this property and they say that their admission that the defendants were joint owners along with themselves must be taken as a whole or should not be considered at all. There is force in this contention, and as the District Judge gave no finding as to whether the defendants were or were not owners for the purpose of this appeal, I will assume that the defendants also are trespassers on this land. Nevertheless, I see no force in the further ground that counsel raises on this assumption, namely, that whereas the owner of a servient tenement can use the property in any way he likes as long as he does not curtail the plaintiffs' right of easement, this principle does not apply to the case of a trespasser. An easement like a right of way over a tenement is a right running with the land and is not a personal right. It seems to me, therefore, that whether it is the owner or a trespasser who is in possession the person who claims the right of way cannot claim more than that his right of easement should not be curtailed in any way. It is a finding of fact by the learned District Judge that the plaintiffs' right has not been so curtailed in any way, and, therefore, there is no force in this ground either.

I therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment.—Civil Appeals Nos. 3014, 3015 and 3016 of 1927, arise out of three out of four suits relating to a dispute between two persons named Rama Mal and Upendra Datt who own properties separated by a cul-de-sac in Jullundur city.

Upon the application of Upendra Datt, the Municipal Committee, Jullundur, proposed to declare the cul-de-sac a thoroughfare, upon which Ram Mal instituted a suit on 22nd May 1926 against Upendra Datt and the Committee for an injunction to prevent them from interfering with the use of the cul-de-sac, which he claimed as his private property.

On 14th July 1926, Upendra Datt brought a suit against Rama Mal, for an injunction to restrain him from building a wall in the cul-de-sac so as to close his (Upendra Datt's) ventilators and water-spouts.

On 12th October 1926, Rama Mal instituted a suit against Upendra Datt for an injunction directing him to close the door which he had opened in his house, on to the cul-de-sac.

On 19th October 1926, Upendra Datt filed another suit against Rama Mal for a permanent injunction to restrain him from obstructing his right of way through the cul-de-sac by building a kucha bandi.

In the first suit instituted by Rama Mal, on 22nd May 1926, against Upendra Datt and the Municipal Committee, Ram Mal stated in Court on 20th December 1926 that he did not wish to proceed with the suit as the Municipal Committee had admitted his rights in the cul-de-sac. The suit was therefore dismissed.

It was contended in the remaining suits that as the question of the ownership of the cul-de-sac was in issue in the first suit and the suit had been dismissed the issue must be deemed to have been decided against Rama Mal and the matter had become res judicata. The contention was, however, not accepted by both the Courts below. On merits the Courts found that the cul-de-sac, was the property of Rama Mal. As a result of this finding, Upendra Datt's suit with respect to kucha bandi (instituted on 19th October 1926) has been dismissed and Rama Mal has been granted an injunction restraining Upendra Datt from using his door for passing on to the cul-de-sac. As regards the suit of Upendra Datt with respect to the waterspout and the ventilators, the trial Court found that Upendra Datt's right of easement regarding these had been already established in a suit of the year 1915, but held that the right had not been interfered with in any way. Upendra Datt had claimed that he was entitled to discharge not only rain-water but also dirty water from latrines, etc, through the water-spout. The trial Court held that the claim had not been substantiated and that Upendra Datt was only entitled to discharge rain-water through the waterspout. As, however, no interference with the right of easement has been proved, the suit of Upendra Datt in connexion with the water spout and ventilators was dismissed. On appeal the learned District Judge was of opinion that there was no justification for the right of easement in connexion with the waterspout, being restricted to rain-water as held by the trial Court. He accepted the appeal and granted Upendra Datt a decree for an injunction against Rama Mal, restraining the latter from constructing his wall so as to obstruct the ventilators and the waterspouts.

From the above decrees second appeals have been filed in all the suits excepting the one instituted on 22nd May 1926, which was withdrawn by Rama Mal. There are thus two appeals by Upendra Datt and one by Rama Mal.

In the appeals filed by Upendra Datt, the main contentions put forward by the learned counsel were :

(1) That the issue as to ownership of the cul-de-sac must be deemed to have been found against Rama Mal, in asmuch as the first suit which involved that issue was dismissed and the finding operated as res judicata for the purposes of the other suits.

(2) Secondly, that the finding on merits, viz., that the cul-de-sac was the private property of Rama Mal was incorrect and could be challenged in second appeal as the learned Judge had failed to take all the material evidence into consideration and had misconstrued a certain document.

As regards the first point relianace was placed on Rama Rao v. Surya Rao (1), Kartik Chandra v Shridhar Mandal (2), Venkatachalam v. Mahalakshmamma (3) and Kedar Nath Singh v. Sheoshankar (4) which were cited before the learned District Judge and also on Danesh Mulla v. Dhananjoy Biswas (5). The learned District Judge has distinguished the rulings cited before him from the present case merely on the ground that in those cases the subsequent suits were filed after the dismissal of the first suit, while in the present instance the other suits were pending at the time of the dismissal of the first suit. But I do not think this distinction is of any consequence. For, according to Expl. 1, S. 11, Civil P. C., it would appear that the expression "former suit" denotes a suit, which has been decided prior to the suit in question whether or not it was instituted prior thereto. But the rulings seem to me to be distinguishable on another ground, viz., that the plaintiff Rama Mal in the present instance withdrew the first suit and did not seek adjudication on merits.

The basic principle of res judicata is that there should have been a final adjudication on merits. But when a plaintiff withdraws his suit, there is no necessity for any finding on the issues arising in it and the suit is dismissed without any findings being recorded. In none of the rulings cited before the learned District Judge did the plaintiff withdraw his suit. If a party goes to trial on issues, but fails to produce evidence in respect of the same and his suit is consequently dismissed, the dismissal may no doubt operate as res judicata, but the case of withdrawal obviously stands on a different footing The case of withdrawal is analogous to a dismissal in default. In the latter case also there is no decision on merits and consequently no res judicata: see Chand Kour v. Partab Singh (6). It was urged that the plaintiff only stated that his claim had been admitted by the Committee and not by Upendra Datt; but the fact remains that even as against Upendra Datt he did not go to trial on the issues on merits, but merely abandoned the suit. The Code has attached a definite consequence to a withdrawal or abandonment of a claim of this kind and that consequence is that the plaintiff is debarred from instituting a fresh suit with respect to the same subject-matter, except in those cases where the suit is withdrawn with the permission of the Court to institute a fresh suit. as laid down in R. 1, O. 23, Civil P. C. In the present instance no such permission was obtained, but the plaintiff had already instituted another suit against Upendra Datt with respect to the cul-de-sac, when the first suit was withdrawn and hence the provisions of that rule cannot apply. It will appear from P. Surja Reddi v. Subba Reddi (7) that a second suit will not be barred in the case of withdrawal of a previous suit unless the conditions of O. 23, R. 1, Civil P. C., are fully satisfied. The ruling Danesh Mulla v. Dhananjoy Biswas (5) seems to be somewhat in favour of the contention of the learned counsel, but no reasons have been given in support of the view, that the principle of res judicata applies even in the case of a withdrawal or abandonment of a claim. The facts of that case are also distinguishable in certain respects for the plaintiff therein had apparently definitely stated in the former case that he did not at all claim the property to which the subsequent suit related. I therefore agree with the Courts below that the dismissal of the first suit in the circumstances stated above did not operate as res judicata.

The second point urged on behalf of Upendra Datt involves a finding of fact. It was urged that the learned District Judge has not taken into consideration some material evidence. Reference has been made in this connexion to the oral evidence of Bulanda and Ramzan Ali who have stated that the cul-de-sac was at one time paved by the Committee. As against this evidence there is the definite fact that the Municipal Committee itself does not claim the cul-de-sac as its property (vide evidence of P. W. 1): The learned District Judge refers to the existence of a drain in the cul-de-sac and I am not satisfied that he has failed to take into consideration any material evidence. I also do not think that he has misconstrued any documentary evidence. The learned counsel for the appellant has referred in this connexion to a mortgage-deed executed by Rama Mal with respect to some of his house property in which the cul-de-sac is described as Kucha and shown as one of the boundaries of the property mortgaged. But the learned District Judge has considered this point and held that the cul-de-sac was shown as a boundary because it was not included in the property mortgaged. This was a possible construction of the terms of the document and I do not see that the construction involves any error of law. I must, therefore, hold that there is no ground for interference with the findings of fact or merits.

As a result of the above findings, the two appeals of Upendra Datt (Nos. 3015 and 3016) must fail. As regards the appeal of Rama Mal (No. 3014) the learned District Judge does not appear to have given any good reasons for reversing the decree of the trial Court. The trial Court found that the plaintiff had not been obstructed in the exercise of his right of easement.

This finding of fact was not disturbed by the learned District Judge and must be taken as final. The mere fact that a wall was being constructed would not entitle Upendra Datt to an injunction. He had moreover already obtained a decree in respect of such right of easement relating to the waterspout and ventilators as he possessed and he could execute the decree, if the right were interfered with. It was unnecessary in the circumstances to go into the question whether Upendra Datt was entitled to discharge only rain-water or foul water also.

It seems to me that the decree of the trial Court dismissing the suit was correct. I dismiss Civil Appeals Nos. 3015 and 3016 with costs. I accept Civil Appeal No. 3014 and dismiss plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Judgment. — A money decree for Rs. 486-7-6 was obtained by the firm Hamir Chand-Hari Chand against one Doulat Ram. The decree-holder applied for execution by arrest of the judgment-debtor. The judgment-debtor was brought under arrest on 3rd May 1926, but was released on Lajpat Rai appellant, executing a surety bond. Later on the decree-holder applied for recovery of the decretal amount from the surety Lajpat Rai, but he denied liability on the ground that under the terms of the surety bond his liability had not yet arisen. The trial Court found against him and held that he was liable. This order was upheld on appeal.

A second appeal has been preferred by the surety but this appeal is clearly incompetent. The execution proceedings in which the surety bond had been executed related to a decree passed in a suit the value of which was below Rs. 500. The suit was of a small cause nature and in such a case no second appeal lies under S. 42 (2), Punjab Courts Act.

Mr. Badri Das has asked to treat the memorandum of appeal as one for revision and has urged that the lower Courts have misinterpreted the surety bond. There is no doubt that the bond is not very happily worded, but misconstruction of a document (even if established) is not a sufficient ground for interference on the revision side.

Accordingly I hold that no appeal lies and there is no ground for interference on revision. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Collector declined to entertain the application and directed him to civil Court. A then instituted a suit against B for a declaration that he was a jagirdar jointly with B and that B was not entitled to recover land revenue from him. He also claimed an injunction that B should not recover the land revenue on A's land alleging that Collector's direction was tantamount to a certificate under S. 6. It was contended that the civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit without the Collector's certificate. A was given time to produce certificate of the Collector, which was duly produced and placed on record :

Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Petitioner.
Faqir Chand—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff-respondent instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Kangra against Jagat Singh, appellant, on the allegation that a certain jagir was granted to the common ancestor of the parties for the benefit of the family and that the defendant was the nominal holder thereof, the plaintiff being a share-holder in such jagir, that the share of the plaintiff was represented by the land revenue assessed on the land in his possession which by an agreement he was entitled to retain in satisfaction of his share in the jagir instead of paying it to the appellant. It is to be noted that the jagir takes the form of the land revenue assessed on certain land, including the plaintiff's land. The relief claimed was a declaration that the plaintiff was a jagirdar jointly with the defendant and that the latter was not entitled for that reason to recover the land revenue from him ; secondly an injunction to the defendant not to recover land revenue assessed on the plaintiff's land from him for the reasons already mentioned and, thirdly, for return of Rs. 14-7-3 recovered by the lambardar as land revenue on the plaintiff's land and presumably paid to the defendant.

An objection was taken on behalf of the defendant that the suit was not cognizable by the civil Court and was given effect to.

On appeal, however, by the plaintiff the Senior Subordinate Judge of Kangra at Dharamsala has held that the suit was cognizable by the Subordinate Judge and has remanded the case for trial and decision on the merits to the Subordinate Judge of Kangra, subject to the production by the plaintiff within one month of a certificate from the Collector of Kangra under the provisions of S. 6, Pensions Act, 1871. This is an appeal by the defendant against the order remanding the case.

A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that an appeal from the order in question does not lie to this Court. Mr. Mehr Chand for the appellant concedes that his objection has force and prays that, having regard to the fact that the question before me is one of jurisdiction, the memorandum of appeal may be treated as a petition for the revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge and the case heard accordingly.

To this also objection is taken by the respondent's counsel, who relying on Bhoji Lal Trikam Lal v. Amar Nath Lajpat Rai (1), Chhubu Mian v. Harcharan Das (2), Arur Singh v. Bua Dutta (3) and Dawlat Ram v. Asa Ram (4), contends that no revision lies from such an order as it is really an interlocutory order. The petitioner's counsel, however, relies upon Dalipa v. Barkat Ali (5) which follows the judgment of a Full Bench of the Madras High Court reported as V. Atchayya v. Venkata Seetharama (6).

It is to be observed that Bhoji Lal Trikam Lal v. Amar Nath Lajpat Rai (1)

Dalipa v. Barkat Ali (5) are by the same learned Judge of this Court, but apparently there is conflict between the two. 2 Lah. case is the later judgment but 76 I. C. is based on a judgment of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court. On the other hand the later view receives some support from some judgments, already referred to, of the Chief Court of the Punjab. It becomes, therefore, rather difficult to decide which of the cases cited should be followed. I do not however, propose to discuss the matter any further because in my opinion the petition even if admitted must fail on its merits.

Now, it is to be remembered that, by virtue of S. 9, Civil P. C., a civil Court has jurisdiction to adjudicate upon all disputes of a civil nature, unless its jurisdiction is barred by any provision of law statutory or otherwise. It is, therefore, for the defendant to establish that the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge in this case was barred as admittedly the dispute in this case is of a civil nature. Reliance was placed by the defendant in the Courts below on the provisions of Ss. 4, 5 and 6, Pensions Act, 1871. S. 4 runs as follows :

> Except as hereinafter provided, no civil Court shall entertain any suit relating to any pension or grant of money or land revenue conferred or made by the British or any former Government * * *.

Section 5 provides that > any person having a claim relating to any such pension or grant may refer such claim inter alia to the Collector of the district, and such Collector shall dispose of such claim in accordance with such rules as the chief revenue authority may prescribe in this behalf.

Section 6 lays down that > a civil Court shall take cognizance of any such claim on receiving a certificate from such Collector, but shall not make any order or decree in any suit whatever by which the liability of Government to pay any such pension or grant as aforesaid is affected directly or indirectly.

It seems that originally the plaintiff applied for relief to the Collector, but that officer declined to entertain his petition and recorded an order that. if so advised, the petitioner could seek his remedy in the civil Court. It was contended in the Courts below that this order of the Collector was tantamount to the grant of a certificate under S. 6. This contention, however, was held not to be sound and in my opinion with justification, but the learned Senior Subordinate Judge granted the plaintiff a month's time to produce the Collector's certificate.

I am informed that such a certificate has now been produced and placed on the record. This, in my opinion, is a sufficient compliance with the provisions of S. 6, Pensions Act, 1871. The suit is distinctly of the nature contemplated by Ss. 4 and 5 of the Act, and it does not involve any order or decree by which the liability of the Government to pay any pension or grant will be affected directly or indirectly, the dispute being between the jagirdar and the plaintiff who claims to be entitled to be paid a share thereof by the defendant. It was a sufficient compliance with law that the certificate was produced within the time fixed by the Court.

The petitioner's counsel did not urge before me that the cognizance of the suit by the Subordinate Judge under the circumstances mentioned above was barred by the provisions of the Pensions Act, 1871. His contention, however, was that, under S. 158, Punjab Land Revenue Act, the suit was excepted from the jurisdiction of the civil Courts. The clauses of that section relied upon were (viii), (xiii) and (xiv). Cl. (viii) provides that > a civil Court shall not exercise jurisdiction over a claim of any person to be liable for an assessment of land revenue or of any other revenue assessed under the Act.

The present suit is not of the nature contemplated by this clause. The plaintiff does not claim to be liable for an assessment of land revenue. On the other hand he merely admits that he has been assessed to and is liable to pay the land revenue to the Government and claims that the land revenue assessed though assigned to the defendant is repayable by him to the plaintiff and, therefore, in order to save the trouble of collection and its repayment to the plaintiff, an arrangement had been made between the parties whereby the plaintiff is entitled to retain it in lieu of his share of the jagir.

The same remarks apply to Cl. (xiii) which ousts the jurisdiction of the civil Courts with regard to any claim to hold any land free of revenue. Here again the plaintiff does not claim that he is entitled to hold free of revenue the land in his possession.

Clause (xiv) relates to > any claim connected with, or arising out of the collection by the Government, or the enforcement by the Government, of any process for the recovery of land revenue.

Now, here again the plaintiff's claim does not involve an attack on the right of the Government to collect the revenue from him, because so far as the collection of the revenue by the Government is concerned he does not object to it.

The clauses of S. 158, Punjab Land Revenue Act relied upon by the petitioner, therefore, have no application to the present suit. It seems to me that these clauses are really intended to oust the jurisdiction of the civil Courts to determine disputes between the Government and the owner connected with the assessment and recovery of the land revenue. They do not prevent disputes between persons to whom such land revenue may have been assigned and others who dispute the right of such persons to the exclusive enjoyment of such rights. To such cases the provisions of the Pensions Act, 1871, apply and those provisions have been complied with in this case.

I dismiss this petition with costs.

Judgment.—The two minor boys in this case were orphans, and their stepmother Mt. Lachhmi made an application to be appointed guardian of their persons and property. The property is situated in the Ferozepore District where the application was made. The minors live with the husband of a sister at Kasur. He opposed the application of the stepmother and applied himself to be appointed guardian of the persons and property of the minors. The Senior Subordinate Judge of Ferozepore accepted his application and rejected that of the stepmother.

She appeals, and her counsel contends that the proceedings of the Court below were irregular, inasmuch as the order was made without an enquiry and further because a person who did not live within the jurisdiction of the Court could not have been appointed the guardian. There can be no manner of doubt that the proceedings were summary and that no proper enquiry was made. The Court should have given an opportunity to the parties to produce evidence and show which of them was better entitled and qualified to act as guardian of the minors. Further it should have been determined which of them was better entitled under the personal law of the parties. In Askhar Ali v. Amina Begam (1) a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, contemplates that an applicant for guardianship should reside within the jurisdiction of the Court to which he makes the application. In Yusaf Ali Mamoonji v. Alibhoy (2) and Sheoshankar v. Khupchand (3) it was held that proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act were not summary. With these observations I accept the appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and remand the case for a fresh enquiry and decision in accordance with law.

Second Appeal No. 2153 of 1927, Decided on 21st December 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 22nd June 1927.

Easements Act, S. 7—Owner of land on lower level cannot prevent water flowing over his land in natural course from higher level.

An owner of land on a lower level to which surface water from adjacent land on a higher level naturally flows is not entitled to so deal with his land as to obstruct the flow of water from the higher land: A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 449 (F.B.), Foll. [P 717 C 1, 2]

Faqir Chand—for Appellants.

H. D. Bhalla—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs' case was that the surplus rain-water used to drain away from their fields through the adjoining fields of the defendants, which were on a lower level, but that the defendants had recently by constructing a dam at the common boundary obstructed the flow of water through their land with the result that the water accumulated in their (plaintiffs') fields and caused damage thereto. They prayed for an injunction directing the defendants to remove the dam and restraining them from obstructing the flow of water in future.

The trial Court decreed the suit, but on appeal the learned District Judge dismissed it on the authority of Mahamahopadyaya Rungachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (1) where it was held that the right of the owner of higher land that the water naturally rising in, or falling on, such land, shall be allowed by the owner of adjacent lower land to run naturally thereto is not a right in the nature of an easement and is subject to the right of the owner of such lower land to build thereon.

But Mahamahopadyaya Rungachariar v. Municipal Council of Kumbakonam (1) was expressly overruled by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Hussain Sahib v. P. Subbayya (2). The general proposition of law laid down in that case is stated thus:

An owner of land on a lower level to which surface water from adjacent land on a higher level naturally flows is not entitled to deal with his land so as to obstruct the flow of water from the higher land.

Mr. Bhalla, who appears for the defendants-respondents, contends that in the present case no obstruction has been proved, nor is it proved that the defendants' fields are on a lower level. This contention is not well founded. The commissary, who made a local enquiry in accordance with the order of the trial Court, found that the defendants had raised the boundary ridge so high that it obstructed the flow of water from the plaintiffs' fields into theirs. This boundary ridge should, therefore, be removed so that the water may flow on to the defendants' fields as before.

I, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the order of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court, granting the plaintiffs the relief that they seek. The defendants will pay the plaintiffs' costs throughout.

J. N. Bhandari—for Appellants.

M. L. Puri—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The appellant, after obtaining sanction of the Collector under S. 92, Civil P. C., instituted a suit against two men, defendants 1 and 2, who were alleged to be the trustees of a Gurdawara and against whom certain allegations of mismanagement were made. The prayer was to remove the defendants and for the appointment of new trustees in their place. The defendants pleaded that they were not the real trustees of the Gurdawara but were acting on behalf of another person Mahant Thakar Das. The trial Court thereupon directed that Mahant Thakar Das be added as a defendant. This having been done an objection was raised on behalf of Mahant Thakar Das that the suit could not proceed as against him without the sanction of the Collector. Thereupon the trial Court giving effect to this objection rejected the plaint. This order of the trial Court was affirmed on appeal by the District Judge. Consequently the plaintiff has presented this second appeal.

It is contended on his behalf that, as a matter of fact, no sanction was necessary, considering that the new defendant was added under the orders of the trial Court and not at the request of the plaintiff, and reference is made to Parmeshwaram Manpu v. Narayanan Nambudri (1), Vithilingam v. Ramalingam Pillai (2), Bachal Shaw v. Jama Shaw (3), Kuber Singh v. Baohu Ram (4) and finally to Abdul Rahman v. Kassu-um-Ebrahim (5). Some of these cases do not appear to have any bearing on the present case. In some of them it has been laid down that if a defendant has been added under the orders of the Court the suit does not in every case fail in the absence of the sanction of the Collector under S. 92, Civil P. C., to file or institute the suit against such defendant, but the principle has been recognized that if the addition of the defendant alters or enlarges the scope of the suit instituted by the plaintiff then it cannot proceed without such sanction. In this connexion the counsel for the respondent cited A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 970, a case in which the facts were similar to the present case. There also the suit originally had been instituted against persons who alleged that they were not trustees, but that another person was the trustee and thereupon the latter was added as a defendant. An objection was then taken by him that the suit could not proceed against him without sanction under S 92. The trial Court gave effect to this objection and dismissed the suit after ariving at the conclusion that the original defendants were not the trustees, but that the added defendant was and that no breach of trust on the part of the latter had been alleged. A Division Bench of the Madras High Court on second appeal held that under the circumstances mentioned above the suit has been rightly dismissed as the original defendants were found not to be the trustees and no sanction of the Advocate-General had been obtained to file a suit against the added defendant, the real trustee, and no breach of trust had been alleged as against him.

The following extract from the judgment of the learned Judges sums up their view on the legal point involved in this case.

> The very object of insisting upon the sanction of the Collector or of the Advocate-General being obtained as a preliminary to a suit under S. 92 is to secure that suits are not brought against trustees unless there is a prima facie case against them of breach of trust or unless circumstances exist which necessitate the Court's interference in the administration of the trust. The object of this section will be defeated if it is left open to a plaintiff to get sanction against a person who is not the trustee and then use it afterwards against the real trustee. The personality of the trustee and the way in which he is dealing with the trust are matters of material consideration in granting sanction for a suit.

Agreeing with this view I hold that sanction of the Collector was necessary in this case in order to enable the plaintiff to maintain the suit against Mahant Thakar Das.

It is, however, to be observed that it has not been determined in this case whether or not the original defendants 1 and 2 are the trustees of the Gurdwara or whether Mahant Thakar Das is the trustee; the trial Court, merely, on the objection of the original defendants has ordered that the latter should be impleaded as a defendant. The plaintiff's counsel asserts before me that the allegation of the original defendants that they are not the trustees is false, and states that he is prepared to abide by the plaint originally filed by him in case it is held that the suit is not competent against the added defendant without the sanction of the Collector. I consider that there is force in this contention of the appellant, as the suit cannot proceed against the added defendant without sanction and, as the plaintiff is not willing under the circumstances to retain him as a defendant in the case, I consider that he should be struck off from the list of the defendants and the suit should proceed against the original defendants. If the plaintiff is unable to establish his allegation that they are the trustees of the Gurdwara he will have to bear the consequences that must naturally flow from his failure in this respect.

I accept this appeal, set aside the order of the Courts below rejecting the plaint and direct that the name of Mahant Thakar Das be struck off from the list of the defendants and the suit proceed against the original defendants with due regard to the observations made above. Under the circumstances I leave the parties to bear their own costs in the Court of the District Judge and in this Court.

Second Appeal No. 1741 of 1927, Decided on 25th January 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Ambala, D/- 18th May 1927.

(a) Injunction—Defendant bona fide preventing plaintiff from building a wall—Plaintiff suing after three years for injunction and damages—Injunction was granted but damages were refused.

Plaintiff waited for three years after the defendant bona fide prevented him from building a wall, and then sued for a permanent injunction that the defendant should not prevent him from building a wall and for damages owing to the defendant's act in preventing the building of the wall three years before the suit. Injunction was granted but damages were refused.

Held : that the damages were rightly refused on the ground of plaintiff's laches [P 719 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 35 (2)—Symbolical joint possession stops adverse possession from running against the decree-holder.

Bakhshi Sain Das—for Appellant.

Mahesh Das—for Respondent.

Judgment.—Kundan Lal sued Gauri Lal (1) for a permanent injunction that the defendant should not prevent the plaintiff from building a wall G E ; (2) for joint possession of a half share in an alcove beneath a stair case A C ; (3) for Rs. 300 as compensation or damages owing to the defendant's act in preventing the building of the wall G E, three years before suit ; (4) for Rs. 20, the value of a plank and rafter alleged to have been removed by the defendant and to be joint property of the parties : and (5) for Rs. 18 being the rent for three years of a chabutra in front of the staircase A C. The lower Courts granted the plaintiff a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from preventing him building the wall G E ; in other respects the suit was dismissed. Against this decision the plaintiff has preferred this second appeal.

Only two other reliefs were claimed before me by the learned counsel for the plaintiff the rest being given up. The first was that as an injunction had been granted to the plaintiffs in connexion with the wall G E, he should also have been awarded damages for the defendant's act in preventing him from building that wall. Both the Courts below refused to allow any damages on account of the laches of the plaintiff who waited for three years after the defendant bona fide prevented him building the wall before he instituted the suit. I think these are weighty reasons for refusing damages and I refuse to grant them.

The next relief claimed was that a decree should have been granted for joint possession of a half-share in the alcove below the staircase A C. There was a previous suit between the parties and it was held in it that the staircase A C and the alcove beneath it was the joint property of the parties and the plaintiff was in that suit given a decree for joint possession of this property though it was specifically laid down in the decree that the property should remain impartible. In the present suit the defendant denied that the alcove below the staircase was joint. It is clear that the plaintiff got joint possession under the previous decree. The giving of this joint possession is merely a symbolical transaction as laid down in O. 21, R. 35 (2), Civil P. C., but it stops adverse possession from running against the plaintiff. As the defendant has in this suit denied that the plaintiff is entitled to a share in this alcove the plaintiff is again entitled to a decree for joint possession as regards this alcove against the defendant. This appeal must be accepted to that extent and a decree for joint possession given to the plaintiff of this alcove in which he holds a half share. This portion of the decree will be executed under O. 21, R. 35 (2), Civil P. C., that is, symbolical possession only will be given. The alcove forms part of the defendant's shop and approach to it is only possible through the defendant's shop so that the decree granted amounts to very little.

As the plaintiff-appellant has failed to the extent of half his suit or more, the parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Moti Sagar—for Appellants.

Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Plaintiffs sued in this case for ejectment of the defendants from a site about 200 square yards in area situated in Delhi city, on the allegation that the defendants were their tenants and had refused to pay rent. The defendants denied that the plaintiffs were the owners of the land and also pleaded adverse possession for over 12 years. In the alternative they claimed that they were permanent tenants and not liable to ejectment. Both the Courts below have found the defendants to be permanent tenants and decreed the claim only with respect to the arrears of rent. The plaintiffs have come up in second appeal and the sole contention put forward on their behalf is that the facts found are insufficient to establish permanent tenancy.

The learned Additional District Judge following Abdul Hakim Khan v. Ilahi Bakhsh Shah (1) has relied on the following facts in support of his finding :

(1) The origin of the tenancy is unknown ; (2) there were permanent pakka buildings on the land which were built long before the present suit, to the knowledge of the landlords ; (3) the rent has been nominal (six annas ser mensem) and uniform ; (4) the tenancy has been transferred on more than one occasion without any objection on the part of the landlords.

The finding of the lower appellate Court in respect of the permanent tenancy, in so far as it depends upon inferences from facts proved can be challenged in second appeal, vide Dhanna Mal v. Moti Sagar (2), but the findings of fact from which the inferences are drawn cannot be disturbed without adequate grounds falling within the scope of S. 100, Civil P. C. It has been argued on behalf of the appellants that the findings of fact in the present instance cannot be sustained in certain respects as they are not supported by any evidence and it is therefore necessary to clear the ground by examining these findings at the outset.

The first of the findings referred to above, viz., that the origin of the tenancy is not known has not been challenged. The second finding was questioned but there is evidence on the record, which goes to show that certain pucca structures have existed on the site for some 40 or 50 years. Defendants' witnesses have deposed that the materials of the structures are 40 or 50 years old and the evidence has been believed. The learned Judge of the trial Court also inspected the spot and found the materials to be old. The third finding of the Court below that the rent has been uniform has been challenged on the ground that there is no evidence to show that the rent has been six annas all along. But the deeds of transfer relied on by the appellants themselves show that even in the years 1910-13 the rent was six annas per mensem. This raises a strong presumption that the rent has been uniform. If a different rent has been ever charged any time, the fact should have been within the knowledge of the plaintiffs and they could have easily produced evidence in rebuttal. But no such evidence has been produced. The last finding relied upon by the learned Additional District Judge is that the tenancy has been transferred more than once without any objection by the landlords. As regards this finding it was urged that there is no evidence on the record to show that the transfers were consented to or acquiesced in by the landlords by acceptance of rent etc. But although there is no such direct evidence, the fact remains that several transfers have taken place and the landlords have not objected. The landlords and their predecessors apparently belonged to Delhi and it is a reasonable presumption in the circumstances of the case that the pucca buildings as well as the transfers must have come to their knowledge.

(1) A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 309=52 Cal. 43.
(2) A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 102=8 Lah. 573=54 I.A. 178 (P.C.).

I see, therefore, no good ground for interference with the above findings of fact and the only question that requires consideration is whether an inference of permanent tenancy is supported by those findings. The ruling Abdul Hakim Khan v. Elahi Bakhsh Shah (1), contains a review of a number of previous decisions of High Courts and the Privy Council and according to the test laid down the above findings of fact would appear to be sufficient to justify the learned Additional District Judge's conclusion. The learned counsel for the appellants has invited my attention to Ismail Khan v. Jaigun Bibi (3), Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (4), Secy. of State v. Luchmeswar (5) and A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 682.

In Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (4) the origin of the tenancy was known. The land had been leased for the term of the settlement only and there was nothing to prevent the landlords from evicting the tenants thereafter. It was held that the mere fact that the tenant had erected buildings on the land without any objection from the landlords could not in such circumstances estop the latter from ejecting the tenant. In the present case the origin of the tenancy is unknown and there is nothing to indicate that the tenancy was for a definite period only.

In Secy. of State v. Luchmeswar Singh (5) again the origin of the tenancy was known and it was held that mere long possession or a uniform rate of rent could not in the circumstances support any inference as to permanency of tenure.

In Ismail Khan v. Jaigun Bibi (3), the tenancy had been created by a kabuliyat which on the face of it contained nothing to imply permanency in the tenure created. It was held under the circumstances that a tenant in order to resist ejectment successfully on the ground that he had been allowed to erect permanent buildings must show that he was acting under an honest belief that he had a permanent right in the land and that the landlord knowing that he (the tenant) was acting under such belief stood by and allowed him to go on with the construction of the buildings.

In A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 682, it was only laid down that mere length of possession (about 40 years in that case) and uniform payment of rent were not sufficient to raise any presumption as regards permanency of tenure. The land had apparently not been let for residential purposes; there were no pucca buildings and no instances of transfers or succession.

It will thus be seen that the rulings cited are easily distinguishable from the present case. In the present case the inference as to permanency of tenure is based upon the cumulative effect of different factors. The absence of any evidence as to the origin of tenancy—evidence which a landlord seeking to evict a tenant is expected to produce in the ordinary course—is a very important factor in this case and strengthens the inference to be drawn from the other facts. No explanation is forthcoming as to why the landlords failed to object to the construction of the buildings or the transfers of the tenancy. There is some evidence indicating uniformity of rent and the landlords have not been able to show that there was any change in the rent. The value of the building materials is not great, but that is not very material cf. A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 465. Besides the buildings were probably of a substantial value from the standpoint of the tenants, who were apparently poor men. Taking all these facts into consideration the conclusion of the lower appellate Court seems to be amply justified in the light of the principles laid down in Abdul Hakim Khan v. Elahi Bakhsh Shah (1). The conclusion would also appear to be supported by the decisions in Caspersz v. Kader Nath (6), which was quoted with approval in Afzal-un-nissa v. Abdul Karim (7), A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 465 and Nabin Chandra v. Bandi (8), which have been cited on behalf of the respondents, and where an inference as to permanency of tenure was based on similar evidence. Ram Lal Anand—for Appellant.

Jai Gopal Sethi—for Respondents.

Broadway, J.—This second appeal has arisen in the following circumstances:

On 27th June 1923 one C. P. Gupta executed a pro-note in favour of Mrs. Aziz Dutta of the Punjab Ice Company, Lahore, for Rs. 4,000. The pro-note was later endorsed by Mrs. Aziz Dutta in favour of her sister Jan Bibi on 9th July 1923, and on 8th May 1925 Jan Bibi instituted this suit for the recovery of Rs. 4,880 being the principal and interest due on the above pro-note. The suit was instituted against the executant of the pro-note, Mr. C. P. Gupta, and Mr. D. Johnston, it being alleged that these two defendants were partners, and that Mr. Gupta had signed the pro-note on behalf of the said partnership. The partnership was denied by Mr. Johnston and it was also pleaded that the pro-note itself was not executed on behalf of the partnership but by Mr. Gupta on his own account. The trial Court held that Mr. Gupta had signed this document on his own account and not on behalf of any partnership. He found that as a matter of fact Mr. Johnston and Mr. Gupta were partners in a concern known as the Lahore Cotton Baling Press. The plaintiff, Mt. Jan Bibi, as the holder in due course of this negotiable instrument was granted a decree for the amount claimed against Mr Gupta alone. Not satisfied with this decree the plaintiff preferred an appeal to the District Court, asking that the decree should be granted against Mr. Johnston as well. The Additional District Judge on 22nd April 1927 accepted the appeal and made Mr. Johnston liable under the decree. Against this decree Mr. Johnston has preferred this second appeal which has been argued on his behalf at considerable length by Mr. Ram Lal Anand, and we have heard Mr. Jaigopal Sethi at equal length on behalf of Mt. Jan Bibi

Mr. Sethi raised a preliminary objection to the effect that no question of law was involved. After being heard for some time, however, he was constrained to admit that there was a question of law involved and we thereupon proceeded to hear the case.

Now, it seems to me that two questions of law emerge from the matters agitated at the Bar. First, whether the conclusions arrived at on the findings of fact by the Additional District Judge are correct and ; secondly, whether the inferences which have been drawn by the learned Additional District Judge with regard to the presumptions to be raised on account of the non-production of certain account books were warranted. The second matter is of minor importance and does not really go to the root of the case. I think it only necessary here to say that in my judgment the learned Additional District Judge was wrong in drawing the inferences that he did. It appears that Mr. Johnston and his clerk Nanak Chand had been summoned as witnesses by the plaintiff together with certain documents including the account books in question. It was pointed out on behalf of Mr. Johnston that the documents and the account books called for were not in his possession, being as a matter of fact exhibits in certain other cases that were pending in other Courts. The plaintiff apparently took no further steps to obtain these documents and finally gave up both Mr. Johnston and Nanak Chand. Later Mr. Johnston and Nanak Chand went into the witness-box as witnesses for Mr. Johnston himself. In these circumstances I consider that no presumption could legally have been drawn either as to the contents of those documents or against Mr. Johnston from their non-production.

The real point, however, is whether the learned Additional District Judge is right in concluding that Mr. Johnston is liable on the pro-note. The major portion of the arguments addressed to us has been directed to the question of the liability of one partner for the action of another partner, either in a partnership under the Contract Act or in the case of a partnership under the Hindu Law. It seems to me, however, that the question is really concluded by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sadasuk Janki Dass v. Kishan Pershad (1). As stated by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in that judgment at p. 667 :

> The real point for decision is whether the hundis have been so drawn that in form they bind the Maharaja. If they have, it will then become necessary to determine whether in fact Mohan Lal had authority for the purpose. If they have not, this question of agency does not, and cannot arise in the present suit.

As in that case so in the one before us, the first and the real point for decision is whether this pro-note has been so drawn that in form it binds Mr. Johnston as a partner of the Lahore Cotton Baling Press. Now, the learned Additional District Judge has found the following facts which we are unable to interfere with : He has found that (1) the pro-note is not written on any printed form ; (2) it is all typed and signed by Gupta by his own hand (3) ; at the top of the pro-note it is written : " The Lahore Cotton Baling Press. Lahore, dated 27th June 1923 ;" (4) the third line is Rs. 4,000 ; (5) below the fourth line commences " on demand I promise to pay ;" (6) it is signed " C. P. Gupta ;" and (7) no further designation of the executant is given below his signatures. On these findings he proceeds to say :

> The pro-note on the whole clearly shows that it was executed by Gupta in his managing capacity of the Lahore Cotton Baling Press, otherwise there was absolutely no necessity for him to insert the name of the press at the top of the pro-note.

He then goes on further to say :

> If the words " The Lahore Cotton Baling Press " had been inserted just below the signatures of Gupta, then surely there would have been no reason for the respondent to assert that it was not executed on behalf of the press. To my mind the pro-note is perfectly clear as having been executed on behalf of the press. Mr. Gupta has adopted this commercial form of a pro-note, as is evidenced by putting the figure " Rs. 4,000 in the third line at one corner."

Now, it is only necessary to point out here that, as was held by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Ram Gopal v. Shams Khatun (2), a Court of second appeal is entitled to examine the conclusions arrived at by the first Court of appeal on the facts found. It becomes, therefore, necessary to examine the document which is in the following terms :

> The Lahore Cotton Baling Press.
> Lahore, dated 27th June 1923.
> Rs. 4,000.

As pointed out, it is headed "The Lahore Cotton Baling Press," immediately below which come "Lahore, dated 27th June 1923." As noted by the learned Additional District Judge, had Mr. Gupta placed the words "The Lahore Cotton Baling Press" immediately below his signature there would have been only one conclusion to come to. I am unable to agree with the learned Additional District Judge that the fact that this piece of paper is headed : "The Lahore Cotton Baling Press" necessarily raises an inference that Mr. Gupta was acting on behalf of that press. An examination of the document leads me to the conclusion that the heading was given by Mr. Gupta merely as his address. In Sadasuk Janki Das v. Krishan Pershad (1) the hundi in question is to be found given in extenso in the judgment delivered by Lord Buckmaster. It will be seen that the hundi was headed "By order of Sirkar, may his happiness increase," and the executant of that hundi, Mohan Lal, signed giving his designation as "Acting Superintendent of the Private Treasury of his Excellency Sir Maharaja, the Prime Minister of H. H. the Nizam." It was held there by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee that that was not sufficient to make it primarily appear that the Maharaja was responsible for the hundi in the suit brought on the document.

Similarly, it seems to me that it is not necessary to go into the question whether Mr. Johnston and Mr. Gupta were partners, or whether the money had been repaid as Mr Gupta alleged, or whether Mr. Gupta had the power as a partner to sign on behalf of the partnership and thus bind Mr. Johnston. for it seems to me that on the authority of their Lordships of the Judicial Commitee those questions can only be gone into when the form of the document shows that Mr. Johnston is bound by it. Whether Mr. Gupta had other dealings with Mrs. Aziz Dutta is entirely immaterial as also is the question whether he was carrying on any other dealing on his own account. The document, as it stands, does not attract the liability of Mr. Johnston on the face of it and in my judgment Mr. Gupta and Mr. Gupta alone is liable under this document.

I would, therefore, accept this appeal, set aside the order of the learned Additional District Judge and restore the decree passed by the trial Court. The appellant will get his costs throughout.

Criminal Appeal No. 239 of 1928, Decided on 11th May 1928, from order of Sess. Judge, Shahpur, D/- 3rd February 1928.

(a) Criminal Trial — Identification marks told to the witness before identifying the accused—Subsequent identification cannot be considered.

Where an accused has been admitted to have been identified by a witness after being told the identification marks of the accused by the police before he was required to identify him in jail, such an identification cannot be considered in proving the guilt of the accused.

* (b) Criminal P. C., S. 164—Incomplete challan put by police to avoid S. 164—Magistrate examining accused under S. 342—Accused subsequently withdrawing his admission—His confession was excluded—Criminal P.C., S. 342.

A was charged of murder. Before police investigation had been concluded, an incomplete challan was placed before the committing Magistrate who, after recording the evidence of some witnesses, examined the prisoner under S. 342, wherein A admitted his participation in assault. But when he was again examined he denied having committed the murder and attributed his previous statement to a promise of pardon by the police and also to the ill-treatment by the investigation officer. It was found that the incomplete challan was produced with the object of avoiding mandatory provisions of S. 164.

Held: that an attempt by the police to get over the mandatory provisions of S. 164 must be deprecated and such a confession must be excluded from consideration. [P 726 C 1]

Mukand Lal Puri—for Appellant.

Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—The appellant Sullah, an Abir of Chak No. 452 in the District of Jhang, has been found guilty of the murder of one Salehon, an Ahir of the same Chak: and has been sentenced, under S. 302, I, P. C., to suffer the penalty of death.

The story for the prosecution is briefly to the following effect:

The deceased's cousin Luqman, was suspected of having contracted a liaison with Mt. Bakhan, the wife of the prisoner Sullah. This illicit intimacy was resented not only by the husband but also by his cousin Mudai. On the morning of 21st October 1927, Mudai and Sullah were working in their fields when they saw Luqman going to Jhang. They then decided to take their revenge on Luqman when he returned from Jhang, and they accordingly concealed themselves behind some bushes. In the afternoon Luqman was seen coming back from Jhang, riding a mare, with his cousin Salehon sitting behind him. Thereupon, Sullah and Mudai emerged from their place of concealment and attacked Luqman and Salehon. Luqman received a blow with a dang on his forehead but he galloped off and managed to make good his escape. His cousin Salehon, however, fell down and was done to death by the prisoner and Mudai. Luqman, after reaching his village, proceeded to the police station at Mochiwala, three miles away, and lodged a report in which he charged six persons with having participated in the assault and declared that they were all armed with dangs.

It is to be observed that the evidence given by Luqman in Court materially differs from the story related by him at the police station, and we do not think that his testimony can be accepted at its face value. Mudai, who was one of the assailants, has turned King's evidence and appeared as a witness for the prosecution. In his statement before the Committing Magistrate he implicated his cousin Sullah but resiled from that statement before the Sessions Judge and explained that the version given by him to the Magistrate was the result of tutoring received by him from the Deputy Superintendent of Police.

On the morning of 24th October 1927 the prisoner conducted the investigating party to his cotton field from which he recovered a dang and a hatchet. The hatchet was, on serological examination, found to be stained with human blood. There is also the evidence of a boy, Ghulam Muhammad, aged 13, to the effect that on the evening of 21st October 1927, he had seen two persons washing the hatchet at a water pool close to the scene of the occurrence; and, on 26th October 1927, when a parade in the jail was held, he identified the prisoner and the approver out of a group of 15 or 16 persons as the men whom he had seen washing the hatchet on the evening in question. The witness, however, admitted in his statement before the Committing Magistrate that the police had told him the identification marks of both the persons before he was required to identify them in jail. In view of this admission the evidence of the boy does not deserve any serious consideration.

Our attention has also been invited to the evidence of the head constable Nur Muhammad, who claims to be an expert tracker. He visited the scene of the occurrence on 22nd October 1927, and observed the footprints of three persons. He admits that he did not cover these footprints, and yet, on the following day, when he saw the tracks of seven persons, including the prisoner and the approver who had been asked to walk in his absence, he declared that the footprints of the approver and the accused tallied with those found on the spot. Upon the record as it stands, we are unable to test the veracity of this witness; and it would be unsafe to accept this ipse dixit without corroboration that the tracks found on the spot were those of the prisoner and his cousin Mudai.

Lastly, we have the confessional statement made by the prisoner before the Committing Magistrate. It appears, that on 27th October 1927, when the police investigation had not yet concluded, an incomplete chalan was placed before the Magistrate, and after recording the evidence of three witnesses, namely, the boy, Ghulam Muhammad, Sardar Bakhsh (who deposed to the recovery of the hatchet from the prisoner's field, and the approver Mudai, the Magistrate examined the prisoner under S. 342, Criminal P. C. In that statement the accused admitted his participation in the assault, but when he was examined again by the Committing Magistrate on 17th December 1927, he denied having committed the murder and in his written statement filed two days afterwards he attributted his first statement to a promise of pardon made by the police and also to the ill-treatment to which he was subjected by the investigating officer. The police produced the incomplete chalan evidently with the object of getting the confession recorded by the Committing Magistrate, and thereby avoiding the mandatory provisions of S. 164 Criminal P C., relating to the recording of a confession by a Magistrate. As the police had not completed their investigation, they should have adopted the straightforward course of producing the accused before a Magistrate and asked him to record the confession under S. 164 after observing the precautions prescribed by that section. Sub-S. (3), S. 164 lays down in clear terms that a Magistrate shall, before recording a confession, explain to the person making it, that he is not bound to make a confession, and that if he does so it may be used as evidence against him; and that no Magistrate shall record any such confession unless upon questioning the person making it, he has reason to believe that it was made voluntarily. Now, if these precautions had been observed, the prisoner might have explained to the Magistrate that he was making the confession, not voluntarily, but under the pressure of the police or in pursuance of a promise of pardon made by them. We must deprecate this attempt made by the police to get over the mandatory provisions of the law contained in S. 164, Criminal P. C., and we exclude the alleged confession from consideration.

Coming now to the remaining material on the record, we find that the approver has retracted the statement made by him before the Committing Magistrate and that his evidence before the Sessions Judge does not, in any way, implicate the prisoner. As regards the evidence of Luqman, it is sufficient to say that it differs in material particulars from the report which he dictated at the police station shortly after the murder and also from the story related by the approver before the Magistrate. It is true that the prisoner produced from his field a hatchet, on which human blood was found by the Imperial Serologist; but this discovery, coupled with the unsatisfactory evidence of Luqman, cannot be regarded as a certain foundation which can support the conviction for murder.

We may have a moral conviction that Sullah participated in the fatal assault on Salehon, but moral conviction can never be a substitute for legal proof. The evidence produced against the prisoner appears to be tainted, and cannot sustain the conviction.

Upon an examination of the entire material before us I have reached the conclusion that the guilt has not been brought home to the accused. I would accordingly accept the appeal, and setting aside the conviction and the sentence, direct that he be released forthwith.

First Appeals Nos. 2255 and 867 of 1923, Decided on 23rd January 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, D/- 4th June 1923.

(a) Pre-emption—Sale or mortgage—Real intention of the parties when entering into the transaction is the criterion—Intention has to be determined on all the available material including the terms of the document.

The criterion, for deciding the question whether a certain mortgage was a sale, is the real intention of the parties when entering into the transaction, and it has to be determined on all the available material including the terms of the document itself ; 100 P. R. 1898 (F.B.), Rel. on. [P 727 C 1]

A mortgagor who mortgaged his land admitted that the transaction was in reality a sale. The terms of the mortgage-deed were so onerous as to render the redemption impossible. But it was also found that there was no necessity to disguise the transaction as a mortgage for defeating the right of pre-emption of a third proprietor because the mortgagees were themselves the proprietors in the village.

Held : that the mortgage was not a sale in spite of the admission of the mortgagor to the contrary : 78 P. R. 1904, Rel. on

(b) Evidence Act, S. 18—Admission.

The admission, if gratuitous, can be withdrawn at any time and therefore such a confession, though against the interest of the party making it, is of little value : 78 P. R. 1904, Rel. on. [P 728 C 1]

A. N. Chona and A. R. Khosla—for Appellant.

G. C. Narang and G. R. Khanna—for Respondents.

Bhide, J.—This was a suit for pre-emption with respect to a mortgage of 183 kanals 13 marlas of land for Rs. 6,400 executed by defendant 1 in favour of defendants 2, 3 and 4 on the allegation that the transaction was in reality a sale and had been disguised as a mortgage merely to defeat the right of pre-emptor.

The learned District Judge who tried the suit found that the plaintiff had failed to establish his allegation and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has appealed.

The sole point in appeal is whether the transaction in dispute was in reality a sale. The criterion for deciding the question is, as laid down in Zafaryab Khan v. Fatteh Ram (1), the real intention of the parties when entering into the transaction, and has to be determined on all the available material including the terms of the document itself. The onus lay heavily on the plaintiff to establish beyond reasonable doubt that the parties did intend permanent transfer at the time when the transaction was entered into.

The learned counsel for the appellant relied mainly on : (a) the terms of the mortgage-deed which he alleged to be so onerous as to render redemption virtually impossible; (b) the evidence of the mortgagor himself to the effect that the transaction was in reality a sale; and (c) the evidence relating to the market price of the land which was alleged to be much less than the amount for which the land was mortgaged.

As regards the first contention stress was laid on the following terms in the mortgage-deed, namely, No. (1). The mortgage was to be for twelve "pur abad" years, the term "pur abad" being defined as a year in which at least two-thirds of the land was cultivated (2). The mortgagees had the right to get the land partitioned (3). The mortgagees were entitled to take from it loppings, etc., of the trees and cut wood for agricultural implements (4). The mortgagees had the right to construct a cattle shed and also to construct a new well and realize the costs from the mortgagor at the time of redemption (5). Out of the mortgage debt Rs. 2,400 were to carry interest at annas 15 per cent per mensem.

As regards No. 1, it was pointed out (vide Ex. P. 5) that during the years from 1916 to 1923 the land was cultivated to the extent of two-thirds of the area only in one year. But the mortgage itself was effected in 1920 and it is obvious that the mortgagees cannot be held responsible for want of adequate cultivation during the years prior to the mortgage which may have been due to a variety of causes including scarcity of rain-fall to which the learned District Judge has referred. The present suit for pre-emption was instituted within a year after the mortgage and hence the mortgagees may have been apathetic about cultivation thereafter. I do not, therefore, think that any reasonable inference can be drawn from this evidence either as to the state of normal cultivation or as to the intention of the parties. It was argued that it was possible for the mortgagees to render redemption practically impossible merely by cultivating less than two-thirds of the mortgaged area, but if the mortgagees deliberately abused this condition, in this manner the Courts would probably not hesitate to treat it as a mere "clog" on the equity of redemption.

The right to get the land partitioned seems to be of little significance and will not affect in any way the mortgagor's title. The right to enjoy fruit or cut trees for agricultural implements or even the right to construct cattle shed which has been given to the mortgagees does not appear to be of a very unusual character. As regards the right to sink a well, it was urged that wells are very expensive in the Dera Ghazi Khan District and the cost of a new well which will have to be eventually paid by the mortgagor would practically render redemption impossible. There appears to be no evidence on the record about the cost of constructing a new well in the Dera Ghazi Khan District, but, if it is really prohibitive it is unlikely that the mortgagees will incur the expense. It seems to me that all these conditions may well have been agreed to merely to secure to the mortgagees full benefit from the mortgaged land during the period of the mortgage and they do not afford any strong indication as to the intention of the parties. Lastly, the condition as regards the interest to be paid on Rs. 2,400 also cannot be considered to be particularly onerous. Out of the mortgage debt Rs. 4,000 were to be paid to prior mortgagees and interest was paid only on the extra sum of Rs. 2,400 paid to the mortgagor. The learned District Judge has pointed out that the rate of 15 annas per cent. per mensem which was fixed in this case was a little less than the normal rate prevailing in the case of loans to Hindu agriculturists in the Dera Ghazi Khan District.

It seems to me that the conditions of the mortgage-deed, even if they be considered to be onerous in some respects, are not so unreasonable as to justify an inference that the parties contemplated a permanent transfer and intended to render redemption impossible. On the contrary the mortgage-deed makes not only the mortgaged property but also the person and other property of the mortgagor liable for the mortgage debt and this condition certainly appears to be a strong indication that the parties did not contemplate at the time that the mortgagor was severing his connexion with the mortgaged land for good, or was putting an end to his liability for the mortgage debt for ever.

The evidence of the mortgagor to the effect that the transaction was in reality a sale, though not excluded by the provisions of S. 92, Evidence Act, does not appear to me to be reliable in this case. The learned District Judge has pointed out that the mortgagor's evidence, which was taken on interrogatories, could not be secured till the plaintiff himself went to Jammu where the mortgagor was living. The mortgagor appears to have given his evidence under the influence of the plaintiff as he has gone to the length of admitting even plaintiff's allegation in the plaint that he, i. e., the mortgagor, was a debauchee and a man of bad character. The mortgagor stated that a verbal agreement as to the sale transaction was made in the presence of three persons named Lalu, Bala and Daulat Ram. It seems unlikely that if the parties were discussing a fraudulent transaction they would have done so in the presence of strangers. Out of the witnesses named only Lalu, who is a relation of the plaintiff, has supported him, while Daulat Ram, who was produced as a witness by the defendant denied his presence. It was argued that the mortgagor's admission being against his own interest should be given great weight; but as pointed out in Muhammad Umar v. Kirpal Singh (2), the admission being gratuitous could be withdrawn at any time. It is possible that the mortgagor, thinking that the terms of the mortgage were more onerous than he realized at first, was induced to support the plaintiff's case. The plaintiff's position was that the mortgagor sold his land because he had to leave his village on account of his having incurred the displeasure of the baradari owing to his abduction of a Brahman widow. But it appears from the mortgagor's own evidence that he has still valuable virt land and house property in his village and his sons are living there.

The evidence as to the market price of the land is of little value. No documentary evidence in the shape of title-deeds was produced. In the abstract of sales prepared by the village patwari for the years 1915-20, no details as to the classification of land or its situation are given. The witnesses produced have made widely divergent statements as to the price of the land without giving any definite reasons. No conclusion as to the market price of the land could be based on such evidence. Moreover, plaintiff's contention was that the land was worth only about Rs. 80 per bigha. According to this rate the market price of the land in suit would be about Rs. 3,660. But the land was admittedly mortgaged in favour of other persons for Rs. 4,000 before the transaction now in dispute. Plaintiff's allegations as to the market price of the land then seem obviously unreliable.

The learned counsel for the appellant has cited Parma Nand v. Airapat Ram (3) and Anwar Hasan v. Umatul Karim (4) as authorities in his favour; but these rulings appear to be clearly distinguishable from the present case. In Parma Nand v. Airapat Ram (3) there was independent documentary evidence in the shape of a bahi entry to show the real nature of the transaction. In Anwar Hasan v. Umatul Karim (4) there were a number of circumstances which do not exist in the present case. The property had, for example, been already offered for sale in that case. The mortgagor was 80 or 90 years of age and yet the term of mortgage was fixed at 32 years. The mortgagee was given the right to erect new buildings on a site situated in a town, while the mortgagor had not even the right to look into the mortgagee's expenditure on the buildings.

The facts of the present case appear to be analogous in several respects to those in Muhammad Umar v. Kirpal Singh (2) in which, in spite of the mortgagor's admission that the transaction was a sale and the terms of the mortgage-deed which were somewhat onerous, it was held that the transaction was not a sale. In the present case there is the further important fact that the parties had really no necessity for "disguising" the transaction as a mortgage. The plaintiff has based his right of pre-emption merely on the fact that he is a proprietor in the village; but two of the mortgagees are also admittedly proprietors in the village and if the object was merely to defeat plaintiff's right of pre-emption this could easily have been achieved by executing a sale in favour of these persons only.

I would accordingly uphold the finding of the learned District Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Reference No. 34 of 1927, Decided on 21st February 1928, made by Offg. Commissioner, Income-tax, Lahore, D/- 18th October 1927.

Income-tax Act, S. 23 (4)—Return made by signing of a prescribed form with all various columns left blank and the word "blank" written against the item of "total," is no return under S. 23 (4).

A return made by the signing of a prescribed form without any date with all the various columns left blank and the word "blank" written against the item "total" accompanied by a covering letter in which it was explained that the assessee carried on no business in the place, is no return for the purposes of assessment under S. 23 (4). [P 729 C 2]

Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Appellant.

Jagan Nath Aygarwal—for Income-tax Commissioner.

Judgment.—The question referred to by the Income-tax Commissioner, is as follows:

Whether a "return" such as was made in this case, namely, the signing of a prescribed from without any date with all the various columns left blank and the word "blank" written against the item "total," accompanied by a covering letter in which it was explained that the firm in question carried on no business in Amritsar, is "no return" for the purposes of assessment under S. 23 (4).

Section 22 (1) says that the principal officer of every company shall prepare a return, in the prescribed form, which is sent to him by the income-tax authorities, and verified in the prescribed manner, of the total income of the company during the previous year.

Counsel contends that, in the first place, the word "blank" must be read as having a totally different meaning from that to be found in the dictionary, that it means "nil," that the absence of the date is wholly immaterial as it is the business of the Income-tax Department to look up the registers and other papers and find out the year referred to in the notices and fill up the lacunae, that the signature on the form together with the verification somehow supplied the missing details and made the form no longer a blank form, but one sufficiently filled up to be a "return." The word "blank" is explained in the Oxford Dictionary as, not written or printed on (of paper); (of document) with space left for signature or details.

Blankness is the negation of any entry and how that which is blank can be said to constitute a "return" containing all or any necessary facts, figures and details, appears to us impossible to understand. In our opinion this form was what it said it was, a blank form, and the writing of the word "blank" merely emphasized and drew a attention to the fact that nothing had been shown in any column and that the verification was meaningless as verifying nothing at all. But counsel urges, the covering letter must be read with this blank form and, if the necessary figures are to be found in that covering letter, it may be said that the necessary return has been made in the prescribed form, the information there called for having been supplied. Even if this view were accepted we find that the covering letter does not supply the information, let alone supplying it in the prescribed form. It merely challenges the rights of the Income-tax Officer to call for a return at all and does not say that the addressee had no income during the year in question, or even that he had no assessable income. Even if we read the two together, therefore, as counsel would have us do, we find that there had been no return in the prescribed form and that the action taken by the income-tax officer was quite correct.

We answer the question accordingly and hold that there has been no return. No order as to costs. Rs. 100 have already been deposited by the unsuccessful petitioner and have not been returned.

R.* 1911, Expl. [P 731 C 2]

Mehr Chand—for Appellant.

Nand Lal—for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—The appellant instituted a suit against the defendants, his brother and first cousins, for a declaration of his right to realize the usual brit from the jajmans and an injunction against the defendants restraining them from interfering with such right. The parties are acharajs and it was alleged by the plaintiffs that the right to recover the birt in suit really belonged to one Shankar Nath who had mortgaged it to the plaintiff, but that the defendants were illegally interfering and were realizing the brit themselves. The plea of the defendants was that the mortgage by Shankar Nath was not to the plaintiff in his individual capacity but as representative of the joint Hindu family to which the plaintiff and the defendants were the members. On these respective allegations the parties went to trial. The dispute, however, was referred to arbitration and the award of the arbitrator being in favour of the plaintiff, objections were taken by the defendants to the validity thereof on the ground of alleged enmity of the arbitrator with the defendants and also on the ground that the dispute between the parties was not cognizable by the civil Court. The trial Court repelled these objections and decreed the suit. The District Judge, however, on appeal dismissed it on the ground that the right to recover birt from the jajmans was not "property" as that term is defined in law and that therefore the suit was not cognizable by the civil Courts. The plaintiff has consequently presented this second appeal.

The first ground urged on behalf of the appellant is that the dispute having been referred to arbitrator and the award made on such reference by the arbitrator the only ground which could be raised against the validity of the award was some illegality apparent on the face thereof or misconduct on the part of the arbitrator. In reply, counsel for the respondents cited 80 P. R. 1909 in support of his contention that this ground has no force. In that case an application had been made to file an award and the first Court had ordered that same be filed, and had passed a decree thereon. On appeal, however, it was found that the award was not in existence at the date of the presentation of the application to file it. The application was therefore dismissed. The facts of the reported case are distinguishable from the present case, still I am inclined to hold that if the Court is not initially competent to entertain a suit in respect of the dispute which is the subject-matter of the reference to arbitration, it cannot pass a decree on an award made as a result of such reference by the parties whether before the suit was instituted or during its pendency. In the latter case the Court is incompetent to refer the matter to arbitration.

Another objection taken by the appellant's counsel was that the decree of the trial Court being in accordance with the award no appeal lay with the District Judge. In my opinion the rule prohibiting an appeal against a decree based on and in accordance with an award does not apply to a case like the present where the objection is to the inherent jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit.

On the merits, however, the contention of the appellant is that the suit was cognizable by the civil Courts and it was in the first instance fought by the parties on that assumption. It is no doubt true that the latest view of the Chief Court of the Punjab is that a claim to realize brit from the jajmans is not property as that term is understood in legal parlance and therefore that a suit to establish such a right is not entertainable by the civil Courts. Reference in this connexion may be made to Gurdas v. Bhag (1) In that case it was held that the relationship between a jajman and an acharaj is purely of a voluntary nature and that a decree declaring the right of an acharaj to receive brit from a particular jajman to the exclusion of certain other acharajs and for an injunction against the latter restraining them from receiving such brit would practically amount to controlling the right of the jajman to select his own acharaj which the Court is not entitled to do and therefore that a decree in such a case would be practically valueless, the evasion of which would be the easiest task, and consequently that no such decree could be given by the civil Courts but the following remark made by the learned Judge at p. 342 of the report would show that they considered that under certain circumstances the plaintiff may be granted a decree:

> Apparently defendants admitted that the suit would lie for an injunction restraining them from visiting the houses of jajmans during specified days of the month. It certainly would, if defendants had covenanted with plaintiffs not to visit jajmans during those days, but in the absence of any, such agreement (and I believe none such was pleaded) I consider that the objections urged to the grant of a declaratory decree are equally fatal to the grant of an injunction. Before an injunction can be granted under S. 54, Specific Relief Act, the plaintiff's case must disclose a breach, whether actual or threatened, by the defendant of some present legal right vested in the plaintiff. But plaintiffs have no legal right to brit vested in them and therefore they cannot claim an injunction to restrain a threatened breach of that right.

Now, it will be observed that the learned Judges hold that if there is an agreement or an arrangement between the acharajs to visit certain jajmans on certain specified days (which implies a right to recover brit from the latter), that is to say, an agreement or arrangement that one family to receive brit from a particular jajman and the rest from others, then an injunction may be granted to restrain the parties from breaking such an agreement or arrangement. Ordinarily an arrangement of the nature mentioned above between the acharajs is based on actual contract or on custom and I am unable to see why a Court should not be able to enforce the right of one acharaj against the other when it is based on custom if it can enforce it in the case of an agreement. I quite agree that a Court cannot control the selection of an acharaj by the jajman and if it transpires that the jajman has chosen a particular acharaj to the exclusion of another, the Court will not give any decree so as to affect such a selection; but as between the acharajs themselves, in the absence of an express selection by the jajmans to whom it may be immaterial whether the brit is received by one or by the other there is no reason why the rights of the acharajs inter se could not be adjudicated upon and enforced by the civil Courts.

Some judgments of the Bombay High Court and of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind were cited by the appellant's counsel. They have, however, no application to the present case, because in Bombay and Sind it has been held that the right of the hereditary priests to receive certain customary dues is enforceable even against the jajmans and cannot ordinarily be annulled by the latter which view has never been followed in this Court and is opposed to the recognized practice as it prevails here.

Now in the present case there is no question of a choice having been made by the jajman, and it appears that from this point of view it is immaterial whether the plaintiff receives the brit or the defendants. The person who is really entitled to it is Shankar Nath whose right is not denied either by the plaintiff or the defendants and the contest between the parties is as to the character in which the plaintiff took mortgage from him. It, therefore, seems that by declaring the plaintiff's right and restraining the defendants from interfering therewith this Court will not in any way control the choice of the jajman, but will merely decide the dispute between the parties. I consider that there can be no legal objection to the decree prayed for by the plaintiff in this case and if necessary a proviso can be incorporated therein that it would not in any way affect the right of the jajman to choose his acharaj, though he not being a party to this litigation would not under any circumstances be bound by the decision in it. I hold, therefore, that having regard to the nature of the present suit, the pleadings of the parties and the fact that they referred the dispute to arbitrator who decided in favour of the plaintiff, there was no legal objection to the grant of the decree to the plaintiff in this case.

I accept this appeal and setting aside the decree of the District Judge, restore the decree of the trial Court. The respondents will pay the costs of the appellant throughout.

First Appeal No. 959 of 1923, Decided on 26th April 1928, from preliminary decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Amritsar, D/- 26th January 1923.

Civil P. C., O. 2, R. 2—First suit for recovery of rent purporting to be interest on a mortgage—Subsequent suit for principal and balance of interest is not barred.

A mortgaged his houses with B. He then executed a lease-deed of the mortgaged houses in favour of B. The rent was to be accounted for in the interest account of the mortgage. B sued A for the recovery of rent and later on for the principal and balance of interest.

Held : that the two transactions were separate and O. 2, R. 2 did not bar the subsequent suit : A. I. R. 1922 P. C. 412, Dist.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal and Jiwan Lal Kapur—for Appellant.

Sheo Narain and Din Dayal Khanna—for Respondents.

Dalip Singh, J.—In this case the plaintiff brought a suit for the recovery of principal and interest due on two registered mortgage-deeds dated 28th May 1907, and the 23rd June 1910 respectively, executed in favour of his grandfather and of himself. The rate of interest in both deeds was annas 10 per cent per mensem. The two houses Nos. 198 and 172, were hypothecated in the first deed for Rs. 2,800 and these two houses and a third house No. 185, were hypothecated in the second mortgage-deed for Rs. 1,700.

The trial Court struck three issues, but the only issue contested in the trial Court was whether O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C., barred the claim, because the plaintiff had obtained a decree on a rent deed dated 23rd June 1910 and it was contended that the rent-deed was only a machinery for recovery of interest on the mortgages sued on. On 23rd June 1910 the defendant had executed a lease-deed in favour of the plaintiff for Rs. 28-2-0 rent per mensem for a period of 11 months for the three houses forming the subject of the two mortgages. It is admitted that this rent was exactly equal to the interest due on the two mortgages at the rate of annas 10 per mensem. This rent was agreed to be paid monthly and it also referred to the two mortgage-deeds. The mortgage-deed of 23rd June 1910 also referred to the fact that the mortgagee had been put in possession of the three mortgaged houses by means of deeds of rent, and it was stipulated that the rent should be accounted for in the interest account. It was further stipulated that if the mortgagor got deeds of rent executed by other tenants occupying the mortgaged houses in favour of the mortgagee, the mortgagor would receive credit for the rent that would be realized in the interest account and would be responsible for excess or deficiency. The term fixed for redemption was two years, with a clause allowing redemption in 1½ years under certain conditions. The following rulings were cited before the trial Court: Gangaram v. Abdul Rahman (1), Kundan Mal v. Alla Dad Khan (2) and Natha Singh v. Chuni Lal (3), on behalf of the defendant in support of the contention that O. 2, R. 2 barred the present suit. On behalf of the plaintiff the following rulings were cited before the trial Court, Pindi Das v. Lal Chand (4), Duni v. Ali Mahomed (5), Parmeshri Das v. Fakiria (6), and Ralia Ram v. Amir Chand (7).

Before us, in addition to the above, reliance has also been placed on A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 559 and our attention has also been drawn to Mahomed Husain v. Abdul Ghafur Khan (8) and to the Privy Council ruling reported as Kishan Narain v. Pala Mal (9) and Sultan Singh v. Joti Sarup (10) decided on 8th February 1928. The trial Court held, following Ralia Ram v. Amir Chand (7), that the lease and the mortgage-deed were not indivisible transactions and, therefore, O. 2, R. 2 did not bar the present suit. He accordingly gave the plaintiff a preliminary decree with costs for the sum claimed with future interest on Rs. 4,500 at annas 10 per cent per mensem from date of suit until realization, realizable on the decree being made absolute after four months time, from the mortgaged property by sale thereof and the balance, if any, from the person and other property of the mortgagor.

It is unnecessary for us to enter into any detailed discussion of these rulings. It was conceded by the learned counsel who appeared for the appellant that in all the rulings in which a suit for this nature has been held to be barred by O. 2, R. 2 it has been held that the lease and the mortgage form one transaction. In the present case it is obvious and it has not seriously been contested by counsel for the appellant that the lease and the mortgage-deeds cannot be said to form part of one transaction. Counsel, however, relies on an argument based on analogy and the contention is that the suit for rent should really be regarded as a suit for the interest due on the two mortgages. At that time the mortgagee could have sued for principal and for interest. The Privy Council ruling reported in Kishan Narain v. Pala Mal (9), does not apply because there was no independent obligation to pay interest and principal. He also somewhat faintly contended that the conduct of the respondent should be held to bring the case within the purview of O 2, R. 2. The last contention obviously has no force as a technical rule of procedure cannot be based on some intention to be deduced from the actions of the parties. We are of opinion that on the facts of this case it cannot be held that the claim for rent was really no more than a claim for interest on the mortgages in a disguised form. This being so, the fact remains that the transactions in form were separate and there has been nothing shown to us by which the defendant-appellant has discharged the onus which lay on him to show that in reality they were one and the same. We therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

It has been conceded on both sides that the judgment of the trial Court is defective, in that it directs a decree to be passed not only for sale of the mortgaged property, but also for the balance, if any, from the person and other property of the mortgagor. This will be corrected in the decree drawn up by this Court.

Batna—Defendant—Appellant.

Dewa Singh and another—Plaintiffs—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 1820 of 1927 Decided on 13th January 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 1st March 1927.

(a) Civil P. C., O. 3, R. 4 (as amended in 1926)—Principal authorizing agent to engage counsel in the suit—Counsel so engaged cannot represent the principal in appeal — Legal Practitioner.

There is no doubt that a pleader appointed by a principal can conduct all proceedings in every and any Court; but where the principal has authorized his attorney to appoint a pleader in the suit the pleader appointed by him has no authority to represent the principal in the appellate Court. [P 734 C 1, 2]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 3, R. 4 (3)—"Appeal."

The word "appeal" in para. 3, R. 4, O. 3 is not confined to first appeal, but it covers all appeals. [P 734 C 2]

(c) Words—"Pervi," and "jawabdehi," do not include presentation of appeal.

The words "pervi" or prosecution, and "jawabdehi," or reply, do not cover and include the presentation of an appeal. [P 734 C 2]

N. C. Pandit—for Appellant.

Nanak Chand—for Respondents.

Judgment.—A preliminary objection is taken in this second appeal to the effect that Mr. N. C. Pandit was not duly authorized inasmuch as Ram Singh, the attorney of the appellant Batna, had no authority to appoint him. The power-of-attorney in favour of Ram Singh appoints him to act on behalf of his principal and to engage counsel in the suit, Dewa Singh v. Batna. In the exercise of the power so conferred he has appointed three different counsel in turn in the trial Court, the lower appellate Court and this Court. Counsel relies on Mohammad Ali Khan v. Jasram (1), and points out that the authority is silent on the subject of appeal and that, therefore, Ram Singh's power ended with the proceedings in the original Court. Mr. N. C. Pandit has quoted Thiruvenkatasami Iyengar v. Pavadai Pillay (2), which does not help us in any way. He has also relied on the amendment of the year 1926 of R. 4, O. 3. This rule deals with the appointment of a pleader and in para. 3 says that, inter alia, any appeal from any decree or order under suit shall be deemed to be proceedings in the suit. Mr. Nanak Chand would have me confine the word "appeal" to a first appeal, but the words used are very wide and appear to me to cover all appeals. The only question, therefore, is whether this amended rule extends Ram Singh's authority in any way, for it is clear, as laid down in Mohammad Ali Khan v. Jasram (1), that before this rule was amended Ram Singh's authority ended and, indeed, even a pleader's authority if appointed in the terms used in Ram Singh's power-of-attorney ended with the conclusion of the case in the original Court. There is no doubt that a pleader appointed by the principal could have conducted all proceedings in every and any Court, but unless the attorney's power is extended by this rule Ram Singh himself had no authority and, therefore, no pleader appointed by him had any authority in this Court and Thiruvenkatasamy Iyengar v. Pavadai Pillay (2) does not help. I think the word "pleader" must be read in its narrowest sense and it must be held that Ram Singh's authority ended with the original Court and the amended rule only applies to pleaders in the strict sense. Counsel would have me hold that the words "pervi" or prosecution and "jawabdehi" (or reply) cover and include presentation of an appeal. This is, I think, impossible, and holding as I do that the amendment of the Code has not extended the power of Ram Singh, I find that the appeal has not been duly presented and must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

First Appeal No. 1941 of 1926, Decided on 7th January 1927, from order of Dist. Judge, Ferozepore, D/- 27th July 1926.

Punjab Land Alienation Act, S. 16—Property of an insolvent though not liable to sale is liable to attachment—Receiver can sell the property to an agriculturist—Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 28 (5).

Under S. 16, the property of an insolvent agriculturist is not liable to sale, but nothing is said about its being not liable to attachment and, therefore, his property does vest in the Receiver and the Receiver would be entitled to sell the property to an agriculturist. [P 735 C 1]

Lal Chand Mehra—for Appellant.

Fakir Chand—for Respondents.

Judgment. — The appellant in this case was declared an insolvent on the 11th November 1925. On the 3rd June 1926 the learned District Judge, acting in insolvency, ordered that the Receiver should sell the land which is in his possession to any agriculturist for the highest bid obtainable. On the 7th July 1926 the insolvent applied to the Court to recall this order on the ground that under S. 16, Punjab Alienation of Land Act, the Receiver could not sell the land of an agriculturist through this Court. On the 27th July 1926 the Court sanctioned the sale, having previously rejected the petition of the 7th July 1926.

The insolvent has appealed. and the appeal was admitted by order of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Broadway on the 16th August 1926. No order was passed on the application for leave to appeal under S. 75 (3), Provincial Insolvency Act. I presume, however, that by admitting the appeal the learned Judge impliedly granted leave. A preliminary objection is taken by counsel for the respondent that this appellant has not made the Receiver or the purchaser a party to this appeal, and, therefore, the appeal is not properly instituted. Counsel for the appellant wishes me to exercise my powers under O. 41, R. 20. Civil P. C., to make the Receiver a party. As regards the auction-purchaser he says that his client was unaware that the property had been sold. This is incorrect, because it is clear that the appellant was aware of the order of the 3rd June 1926 and he was present in Court when the order sanctioning the sale was passed on the 27th July 1926. I, therefore, consider that the preliminary objection has force, and I see no reason to exercise the powers given under O. 41, R. 20, Civil P. C. The appeal would, therefore, fail on this ground.

On the merits, however, I also think the appeal should fail because under S. 28 (5), Provincial Insolvency Act, the property of the insolvent which does not vest in the Receiver must be not liable to attachment and sale. Under S. 16, Punjab Land Alienation Act the property of an insolvent is not liable to sale. Nothing is said about it being not liable to attachment. Therefore, following the case of Manji v. Girdhari Lal (1), I hold that the property does vest in the Receiver. The Receiver, therefore, would be entitled to sell the property to an agriculturist and this is exactly what the Court ordered and this seems to have been done. I would, therefore, hold that the appeal fails on the merits also.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal No. 1373 of 1927, Decided on 5th December 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Amritsar, D/- 1st March 1927.

Easements Act, S. 15—Light and air—Measure of, laid down—Closing of the only ventilator of a room, though occupied by servants was held a nuisance.

The owner of the dominant tenement is entitled to the uninterrupted access through his ancient windows of a quantity of light, the measure of which is what is required for the ordinary purposes of inhabitancy or the business of the tenement according to the ordinary notions of mankind. The closing of the only ventilator of a room amounts to a nuisance whether the room is occupied by servants or others: 42 Cal. 46 (P. C.), Rel. on. [P 736 C 1]

Fakir Chand for Jagan Nath Aggarwal—for Appellants.

D C. Ralli—for Respondent.

Order.—The suit out of which this second appeal has arisen was instituted by the temple Shri Dwarka Dhish Ji of Amritsar through its trustees against one Dewa Singh for a perpetual injunction to the effect that the defendant be directed to remove the obstruction against the ventilator C and the door D caused by the defendant building against the plaintiff's wall. In the plaint it was claimed that the door and the ventilator in question had existed for more than 20 years and that the plaintiff acquired an easement of light and air through both and of passage through the door D. The suit was resisted by the defendant on various grounds it being alleged: firstly, that the wall in which the door and the ventilator existed did not belong exclusively to the plaintiff; secondly, that the alleged right of easement did not exist; and thirdly, that the defendant had built against the door and the ventilator with the consent of some of the trustees of the temple. The trial Court held that the wall was the exclusive property of the plaintiff, that the ventilator C and the door D existed for more than 20 years, that the plaintiff had acquired an easement of light and air in respect of both C and D and also an easement of psssage through the door D and that the defendant had failed to prove that he had built with the consent of any of the trustees of the temple. The Court, however, refused to grant the injunction prayed for on the ground that the rooms in which the door and the ventilator opened were occupied by servants, "who had not a very high standard of living." He accordingly, granted a decree for Rs. 400 as damages for infringement of his rights.

Both parties appealed to the District Judge who upheld the findings of facts of the trial Court on all points but granted the injunction prayed for in respect of the obstruction to the ventilator. He held that no cause had been made out for the issue of an injunction relating to infringement of light and air through the door D, but that for this infringement damages were the proper relief which he assessed at Rs. 300.

Second appeals have been preferred by both the parties to this Court and the case has been fully argued by Mr. Ralli for the defendant and Mr. Fakir Chand for the plaintiff.

As regards the ventilator Mr. Ralli contends that though it has been found that there has been a deprivation of light and air, there is no finding that it amounts to a nuisance and that consequently the mandatory injunction should not have been issued. In support of his contention, he relies on the well-known case of P. C. E. Paul v. William Robson (1). But in my opinion this contention is devoid of all force. A look at the plan, Ex. H. P. 1, shows that besides this ventilator the room has no other means of access of light and air except a door which opens into another kothri and that if the ventilator is closed the room will become dark. The deprivation of light and air, therefore, clearly amounts to a nuisance. The rule laid down by Lord Davey in the well-known case of Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores (2), which was adopted by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the above-cited case is thus expressed:

> The . . . owner of the dominent tenement is entitled to the uninterrupted access through his ancient windows of a quantity of light, the measure of which is what is required for the ordinary purposes of inhabitancy or business of the tenement according to the ordinary notions of mankind.

(1) A. I. R. 1914 P. C. 45=42 Cal. 46=41 I.A. 180 (P. C.).

(2) [1904] A. C. 179=53 W. R. 30=73 L. J. Ch. 484=20 T. L. R. 475=90 L. T. 687.

Applying this test the obstruction caused to the ventilator in question clearly amounts to a nuisance. Mr. Ralli has laid emphasis upon the fact that the room is used by servants, and this circumstance appears to have largely influenced the Subordinate Judge in refusing the injunction. Servants even in a country like India cannot be denied the right to receive free air and light through the ancient lights of rooms in which they live and a relief otherwise appropriate cannot be refused merely because the room is inhabited by persons of inferior status. I, therefore, uphold the order of the lower appellate Court with regard to the ventilator.

In respect of the door the plaintiff had in the plaint claimed an easement of passage as well as of light and air. Issue 3 covered both these easements and the Subordinate Judge had decided it in plaintiff's favour. The learned District Judge has, however, given no finding with regard to the easement of passage; and as to the easement of light and air he has given no finding whether the diminution of the quantity of light and air is of such a nature as to amount to a nuisance. The materials on the record are insufficient to enable this Court to definitely decide this point, nor are there any data on the record from which it may be ascertained whether the damages have been properly assessed. It is, therefore, necessary to remit the case to the learned District Judge under O. 41, R. 25, Civil P. C., for decision of issues 3 and 6 in respect of this door D. He should definitely find whether the plaintiff had or had not acquired an easement of passage through the door on the date the suit was instituted, and whether the infringement of the easement relating to light and air amounts to a nuisance. In order to determine the relief to be granted it should be ascertained when the building in front of the door was built and what is the nature and size of the building constructed by the defendant, which will have to be demolished in case the appropriate relief to be granted to the plaintiff is the grant of injunction. If the learned District Judge is of opinion that the proper relief is by way of damages, he should state the data on which he assesses the amount of damages. If the materials on the present record are found to be insufficient the case may, if necessary, be remanded to the trial Court for fresh evidence being produced.

The remand is under O. 41, R. 25. The report will be submitted to this Court within three months.

Second Appeal No. 3155 of 1927, Decided on 15th April 1928, from decree of Sr. Sub-J., Dharamsala, D/- 26th August 1927.

Plaintiffs brought a suit for possession of a strip of land together with a tree and for damages for removing bows of the trees against defendants 1 to 6, alleging unlawful possession by defendants 1 to 3 in collusion with defendants 4 to 6. Their claim was decreed, and was affirmed on appeal by defendants. During pendency of this appeal, defendant 1 had died. Other defendants then preferred an appeal on behalf of all defendants except one who confessed judgment. Defendant 1 was not represented by any legal representative.

M. L. Puri and S. L. Puri—for Appellants.

Gullu Ram—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for possession of a strip of land together with a tree and for Rs. 5 as damages. The trial Court decreed the suit, and the decision was affirmed by the learned Senior Sub-Judge on appeal.

The present appeal was filed on behalf of all the defendants, but it appears that Johaga who is shown as an appellant, had really died during the pendency of the appeal before the learned Senior Sub-Judge. A preliminary objection is therefore taken on behalf of the respondents that the appeal is not competent. Reliance is placed on Ambika Prasad v. Jhinak Singh (1) and Balaram Pal v. Kanasha Majhi (2).

Those authorities lay down that when an appeal is filed by one person on behalf of others under O. 41, R. 4, Civil P. C., the latter must be joined as respondents In the present instance, however, the appeal was filed on behalf of all the defendants, except Loharu who confessed judgment. The only defect in the appeal was that Johaga had died during the pendency of the appeal before the learned Senior Sub-Judge as stated above and the appeal should have been on behalf of his legal respresentatives. This does not, however, appear to affect the appeal on behalf of the other appellants. According to the plaintiffs' allegations defendants 1 to 3 had taken unlawful possession of the site in collusion with defendants 4 to 6. The pleas of the defendants were that the site belonged to defendants 4 and 5 and that the tree belonged to defendant 6. Johaga, defendant 1, according to the defendants themselves only took the leaves of the tree. The decree for possession was passed against all the defendants, but it seems to me that the appellants exoluding Johaga had an independent right of appeal in the circumstances of the case. The cases cited by the learned counsel for the respondent can be distinguished inasmuch as the appellants therein had a joint cause of action. Even if the decree stands so far as Johaga's legal representatives are concerned, there seems to be no good reason why the suit against the other appellants should not be dismissed, if the decree passed against them is found to be unsustainable. Plaintiff cannot eject the appellants (excluding Johaga) unless he establishes his claim for possession as against them. I am of opinion that the appeal can proceed as filed on behalf of the appellants with the exception of Johaga.

The next preliminary objection raised on behalf of the respondent was that the appeal was not properly stamped on the date on which it was instituted and as the Court-fee was not made up within limitation it should be held as time barred. It appears, however, that the mistake in respect of the Court-fee arose owing to the fact that the value for purposes of Court-fee was given as Rs. 15 instead of Rs. 25 in the copy of the judgment of the learned Senior Sub-Judge. In the circumstances I would allow the necessary extension of time under S. 5, Lim. Act.

A third objection raised on behalf of the respondent was that no second appeal was competent as decision of the learned Senior Sub-Judge was based purely on findings of fact. As regards this point it was argued on behalf of the appellants that the decision can be attacked in second appeal inasmuch as it proceeds not on legal evidence, but on mere conjectures. This contention appears to me to be well founded. The learned Senior Sub-Judge has himself remarked that the oral evidence produced in the case was practically useless. He has merely affirmed the decree of the trial Court on the grounds that the site in dispute was just behind another strip of land belonging to the plaintiff and that Loharu, one of the defendants (not included in the list of the appellants) had confessed judgment. Now it seems obvious that the mere fact that the site in dispute adjoined another strip of land belonging to plaintiff could not establish the plaintiff's claim. So also the admission by Loharu, who, according to the appellants, is colluding with the plaintiff, cannot be considered binding on the appellants in any way. It has not been urged that there is any other evidence which the learned Senior Sub-Judge has not taken into consideration and on which the decree could be upheld. In the circumstances I must accept this appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit as against the appellants excluding Johaga. In view of all the facts of the case I leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Judgment.—On 13th November 1922 Tulsi Ram and others applied for the insolvency of one Mohammad Araf. On 13th February 1923, Tulsi Ram and the insolvent referred the matter of their debt to arbitration. On 4th April 1923. an award was made and on 30th May 1923, the award was made a rule of Court and a decree was passed in terms of the award. By the award a charge was created on certain land of the defendant-insolvent. On 6th December 1923. Mohammad Araf was declared an insolvent. A receiver was appointed on that date and on 10th July 1925 the receiver submitted a report together with a schedule of various debts proved before him. There was no mention in the schedule that the debt of Tulsi Ram was a secured debt by virtue of the decree.

In the report, however, Tulsi Ram was mentioned as a secured creditor. On the same date the Court ordered objections to be filed within the time allowed by law and fixed the next date of hearing as 6th August 1925. Various objections by various persons were dealt with, but on 3rd June 1926, objections were taken by one Daulat Ram and one Mohammad Khan, creditors of the insolvent wherein they alleged that they had come to know that Tulsi Ram had been made a secured creditor by the receiver because wrong facts had been given to the receiver by Tulsi Ram and that the charge created by the decree was anyhow bad under the Land Alienation Act. On 3rd June 1926, the Court passed a brief order holding that Tulsi Ram should not be treated as a secured creditor. This order was set aside on 21st June 1927, by this Court on the ground that the judgment was unsatisfactory as it did not show on what grounds it proceeded. The case, was, therefore, sent back to the insolvency Court for decision.

The Court has now held that as this decree was obtained by Tulsi Ram after the presentation .of the application for insolvency the doctrine of lis pendens would, therefore, apply and the decree was of no avail as against the other creditors. It further held that under S. 28 the order of adjudication relates back to the date of presentation of the petition and, therefore, the creation of the security in favour of Tulsi Ram by the decree was invalid as against the receiver. It further held that there was no question of limitation arising in the case as an ordinary receiver has no power to declare any creditor to be a secured creditor, and in this case the receiver never actually declared Tulsi Ram to be a secured creditor, but only submitted a schedule for the approval of the Court and in the annexed report mentioned Tulsi Ram as a secured creditor, therefore, there was no adjudication on the point by the receiver. It further held that the Court had never approved of the schedule before it was objected to. He, therefore, refused the application of Tulsi Ram to be treated as a secured creditor.

In appeal it has been contended that the doctrine of lis pendens has no application, that until the order adjudicating Mohammad Araf an insolvent had actually been passed suits could proceed and decrees be obtained against him and that S. 28 had also no bearing on the question of the validity or otherwise of the decree and that the Court by its action had approved of the action of the receiver and, therefore must be taken to have approved of the report of the receiver mentioning Tulsi Ram as a secured creditor and further as no objection had been taken to it at any time until the present application, the present application was barred by limitation and the Court has wrongly held it to be within limitation.

In my opinion no question of limitation arises in the case because as pointed out by the Court the receiver had only power at best to submit a report to the Court as to whom he considered to be a secured creditor of the insolvent and he had no power to go into the question as to the nature of the debt at all. There is nothing to show that the Court had delegated this power to the receiver and where a Court takes extraordinary action of this nature it is incumbent to limit that action within the narrowest limits posssible. I, therefore, hold that at no time, did the Court approve of the report of the Receiver that Tulsi Ram was a secured creditor. It was not actually put into the schedule that he was a secured creditor and, therefore, the mere fact that the receiver mentioned this fact in a report which was never approved by the Court either expressly or by implication does not mean that the Court approved of the receiver's report that Tulsi Ram was a secured creditor.

The only question, therefore, that remains to be decided is whether Tulsi Ram as a matter of fact can be treated as a secured creditor. It seems clear to me that this award was obtained during the pendency of an insolvency application by Tulsi Ram himself. Now Tulsi Ram's locus standi to bring such application would rest on the fact that he was a creditor. He had not contended that there was any other debt due to him by the debtor. It, therefore, follows that the matter of his debt was itself before the Insolvency Court. I, therefore, consider that Tulsi Ram and the .insolvent could not ,refer the matter of this debt to arbitration without obtaining the leave of the Court and the award following on such a reference without leave of the Court was a nullity. No doubt if the insolvency Court had chosen to adopt this award it might do so, but at no time has the insolvency Court ever adopted the award of Tulsi Ram as already explained. I, therefore, hold that Tulsi Ram was not a secured creditor on this short ground.

As regards S. 28 it is argued that as the property of the insolvent by virtue of the adjudication vests in the receiver on the date of the petition, the condition of the property must also be taken from that date and that charges whether created by decrees or otherwise after the date of the petition cannot be held binding against the receiver. It seems to me that there is force in this way of looking at the matter and I take it that this is what the learned District Judge meant. I, therefore, consider that on this ground also the charge created by the decree in favour of Tulsi Ram would not be valid as against the receiver though it might be valid as against the insolvent himself. For these reasons I dismiss the appeal.

Criminal Misc. No. 162 of 1927, in Criminal Revn. No. 373 of 1927, Decided on 12th July 1927, to delete some portion from the record of judgment of 1st Class Mag. Jhelum, in Criminal Case No. 20/15 of 1925, D/- 17th November 1926.

* Criminal P. C., (Amended 1923), S. 561-A --High Court can expunge objectionable remarks in lower Court's judgment — The power should be sparingly used — Court should not make remarks against a person who has no chance to explain his conduct.

The High Court has power to expunge passages from judgments delivered by itself or by a Subordinate Court but this jurisdiction is of an extraordinary nature and has to be exercised with great care and caution. On the one hand it has to be borne in mind that in weighing evidence and arriving at conclusions on questions of fact, lower Courts have to review the conduct of witnesses with reference to particular incidents and at times have to adjudge generally on the veracity or otherwise of such persons and in doing so they have often to make remarks which reflect adversely on their character. It is of the utmost importance to the administration of justice that Courts should be allowed to perform their functions freely and fearlessly and without undue interference by the High Court. At the same time it is equally necessary that the right of Magistrates to make disparaging remarks on persons who appear, or are named, in the course of a trial, is one that should be exercised with great reserve and moderation, especially where the person disparaged has had little or no opportunity of explaining or defending himself. If the conduct of the witness appears to the Judge to be suspicious or otherwise not above board, he has the right and the duty to test his evidence by putting questions to him. But before he is justified in commenting adversely upon his evidence he must establish the particular fact warranting such criticizm by proper evidence in Court and not on conjectures or by reference to materials which are not properly on the record. Again, a Magistrate should not in his judgment make observations prejudicial to the character of a person, who is neither a witness nor a party to the proceedings and who has no opportunity of being heard : *A. Abdul Rashid—for Secretary of State.

Judgment.—On 29th April 1927, the learned Government Advocate acting under instructions from the Government of India, presented to this Court a petition under S. 561-A, Criminal P. C., praying for the expunction of certain passage from the judgment of Diwan Sita Ram, Magistrate, First Class, Jhelum, in Criminal Case 20/15 of 1925 (Crown v. Ram Lal and Muhammad Said) in so far they contained remarks which reflected adversely on one N. D. Daly, Superintendent, Salt Mines, Khewra and certain "other clerks" of the Salt Department. Another application, containing a similar prayer was filed by N. D. Daly himself on 3rd May 1927. It was stated in the petitions that the remarks complained of were not supported by any materials on the record but were wholly unjustified. These petitions were laid before a Judge of this Court on 20th May 1927, who directed that copies thereof be sent to the learned Magistrate for any remarks that he might wish to make. The Magistrate has accordingly submitted an explanation, dated 7th June 1927. I have examined the record in the light of this explanation and have heard the learned Government Advocate at length in support of the petitions.

It is necessary to briefly state here the facts, which gave rise to and resulted in the prosecution and conviction of Ram Lal and Muhammad Said. Ram Lal was a clerk employed under the Salt Department and was at the time in question posted at Khewra. Muhammad Said was a contractor who used to supply powder to the department at certain fixed rates. In 1922, Muhammad Said, on various occasions, supplied large quantities of powder to the Salt Department for which he submitted bills in due course and received payments. Subsequently when accounts were checked it was discovered that the sum of Rs. 260-8-5 had been twice paid to Muhammad Said in the month of February 1922 for a single supply of 15 maunds 13 seers of powder. An enquiry was ordered and it was discovered that Muhammad Said had received double payment in collusion with Ram Lal, Powder Clerk. Both Ram Lal and Muhammad Said were tried of offences under Ss. 409, 420 and 467, I. P. C., and convicted by Diwan Sita Ram, Magistrate, First Class On appeal the learned Sessions Judge found that the charges under Ss. 409 and 467, I. P. C., were not established and acquitted the convicts of those offences, but maintained the conviction under S. 420

At the close of his judgment the trial Magistrate after holding that Ram Lal and Muhammad Said had conspired together to defraud the Salt Department, made the following remarks :

Not only that I am convinced that Mr. Daly also was a partner along with them (Ram Lal and Muhammad Said), Mr. Daly's conduct shows that he has been neglecting his duties in a reckless manner. Had he been a little prompt and careful, this defalcation would not have taken place. The report of Daulat Ram appears to be correct that Ram Lal and Mr. Daly are responsible for all this. Mr. Daly has been let off with no action having been taken against him except a formal explanation. I am also of opinion that not only Mr. Daly but other clerks who were charged with the supervision of this work must have been taking share out of the defalcations. Hence I am of opinion that the two accused deserve some consideration on that score, as they are out of lot of persons who were participating in the profits of these defalcations. Ram Lal is a young man with some education. It is just possible that he may be a mere tool in the hands of Mr. Daly.

It will be seen that in the passage, above cited the learned Magistrate finds.

(a) that Daly was guilty of gross negligence in the discharge of his official duties ;

(b) that Daly was a partner with Ram Lal and Muhammad Said in appropriating the amount which they had received by cheating the Salt Department ;

(c) that it was possible that Ram Lal was a tool in the hands of Daly ; and

(d) that "other clerks" of the Salt Department, whose duty it was to supervise this work must have been sharing the proceeds of these defalcations.

The petitioner Daly objects that during his lengthy examination as a witness no questions were put to him by counsel for either party or by the Court suggesting that he was guilty of any or all of the charges in (a), (b) or (c) above, nor was any other opportunity afforded to him to explain away these allegations against him and that he should not have been condemned unheard in this manner. The Government of India support this prayer of Daly and further object that the remarks in (d) against the "other clerks" of the Salt Department whose names are not even mentioned in the judgment or the evidence, are absolutely unwarranted and ought to be expunged. The learned Magistrate, in his explanation, adheres to his former opinion and states that the remarks made by him in his judgment in the passage complained of are fully justified.

I have carefully considered the reasons given by the Magistrate in support of his conclusion and have gone through the voluminous oral and documentary evidence on the record. Before giving my findings on the contentions raised in the petition, I think it necessary to refer to the principles which this Court has to bear in mind in dealing with applications by witnesses and persons other than the parties to a litigation for expunction of remarks made against them in judgments of Subordinate Courts. The power of this Court to expunge passages from judgments delivered by itself or by Subordinate Court, is undoubted. The Chief Court of the Punjab exercised this power in various cases, see for example Nur Din v. Emperor (1), Gopal Singh v. Emperor (2), Modi Shah v. Emperor (3), In re Malik Umar Hayat Khan (4), and Naha v. Emperor (5). Similarly in other provinces Courts in the exercise of their revisional jurisdiction directed the expunction of remarks from judgments in appropriate cases Ma Kya v. Kin Lat Gyi (6) Emperor v. Thomas Pellako (7), Baroda Nath v. Karait Sheikh (8) and Lachchu v. Emperor (9). A discordant note was, however, struck by the Allahabad Court in Emperor v. C. Dun (10), where a Division Bench held that the powers of a High Court were restricted to making an amendment of an effective order of the Court below and not of expunging passages which did not commend themselves to it. The matter has, however, been now put beyond controversy by the legislature by the enactment of S 561-A, Criminal P. C, wherein it is provided :

> Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or affect the inherent power of the High Court to make such orders as may be necessary to give effect to any order under the Code, or to prevent abuse of the process of any Court or otherwise to secure the ends of justice.

Since this amendment was made in the Code of 1923, the Allahabad Court also has entertained and granted applications for expunction of remarks. In A. I. R. 1927 All. 193, it was held that the High Court has inherent power to order deletion of passages, which are either irrelevant or inadmissible and which adversely affect the character of persons before the Court. Similarly the Lahore High Court in Amar Nath v. Emperor (11) and Benarsi Das v. Emperor (12) expunged remarks made in judgments of lower Courts.

This jurisdiction, which undoubtedly exists in this Court is, however, of an extraordinary nature and has to be exercised with great care and caution. As pointed out by the learned Chief Justice in A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 382.

> The power to expunge a portion of a judgment delivered by a competent Court, is intended for cases of exceptional circumstances and should be exercised sparingly.

On the one hand it has to be borne in mind that in weighing evidence and arriving at conclusions on questions of fact, lower Courts have to review the conduct of witnesses with reference to particular indicants and at times have to adjudge generally on the veracity or otherwise of such persons and in doing so they have often to make remarks which reflect adversely on their character. It is of the utmost importance to the administration of justice that Courts should be allowed to perform their functions freely and fearlessly and without undue interference by this Court. At the same time it is, as remarked by Clark, C. J., in Nur Din v. Emperor (1), equally > necessary that the right of Magistrates to make disparaging remarks on persons who appear, or are named, in the course of a trial, is one that should be exercised with great reserve and moderation, especially where the person disparaged has had little or no opportunity of explaining or defending himself.

If the conduct of the witness appears to the Judge to be suspicious or otherwise not above-board, he has the right and the duty to test his evidence by putting questions to him. But before he is justified in commenting adversely upon a witness' evidence he must establish the particular fact warranting such criticizm by proper evidence in Court and not on conjectures or by reference to materials which are not properly on the record: Amar Nath v. Emperor (1). Again it is well settled that a Magistrate should not in his judgment > make observations prejudicial to the character of a person, who is neither a witness nor a party to the proceedings and who has no opportunity of being heard: Benarsi Das v. Emperor (12).

Bearing in mind these principles, I have to see if the petitioners have made out a case for the expunction of the passages complained of. Now as to the remarks in the Magistrate's judgment against the the "other clerks" of the Salt Department, I must say at once that there was absolutely no justification to suggest that they were taking any share out of the defalcations of which Ram Lal, Muhammad Said or both were guilty. There is no indication in the judgment as to who these "other clerks" are, nor is there anything on the record to establish what their duties were. These clerks were not examined at the trial and had no opportunity of explaining any suspicions that might have existed against them. I have carefully examined the record and fail to find any warrant for this wholesale condemnation of a section of the clerical establishment of the Salt Department of Khewra. I would, therefore, direct that the passage in the learned Magistrate's judgment relating to the "other clerks" be expunged.

The aspersions against the petitioner are of a twofold nature : firstly it is stated that he was grossly negligent in the discharge of his duties ; and secondly, that he was a partner with Ram Lal in appropriating the amount which had been received from the treasury by double payment and that Ram Lal convict was in all probability a mere tool in his hands I have examined the evidence of Daly, of P. W. 1 Pitt who was the Assistant General Manager and of other witnesses produced by the prosecution and the defence and have failed to find anything to indicate that Daly was a partner with Ram Lal or Muhammad Said in these defalcations or that he was taking a share from them out of their ill-gotten gains. Daly was in the witness box for a number of days and was crose-examined at great length. No questions were put to him by either counsel or by the Court from which it could be inferred that he was privy to Muhammad Said receiving the double payment or to Ram Lal allowing Muhammad Said to do so. There is, again, nothing to indicate that Ram Lal was a mere tool in the hands of Daly. In these circumstances I am of opinion that there was no justification for holding Daly to be guilty of the charge of receiving a portion of the amount in question or of Ram Lal being a mere tool in his hands. The remarks relating to these two matters must, therefore, be expunged from the judgment.

As to the charge of gross negligence on the part of Daly, however, I am of opining that there was sufficient material on the record, from which the Magistrate could infer that Daly was neglecting his duties. In the first place there is the evidence of Daulat Ram (P. W. 3), a clerk in the Salt Department, who seems to have first discovered the double payment and who after auditing the accounts, made a report on which an enquiry was started resulting in the prosecution of Ram Lal and Muhammad Said. This report was put in by the prosecution and formally proved at the trial. In this report Daulat Ram had stated that the defalcations were due to the negligence of Ram Lal and Daly. Secondly, we have the documentary evidence in Exs. P. A/1 P. B., the voucher P. C. and the receipt P. J./1, all of which are duly attested by Daly and should have satisfied himself that double payment was not being made for a single supply. The learned Government Advocate has argued that it was really the duty of P. W. 1, Pitt; who was at that time the Assistant General Manager of the Salt Mines at Khewra, to check the bills and to see that double payments were not made and that the blame, if any, attaches to Pitt rather than to Daly. I see, however, no force in this contention and am not prepared to endorse the view that the real person to blame was P. W. 1, Pitt. Ex. P. J., the voucher for Rs. 1,639-3-7, which includes the double payment in question seems to me to put the matter beyond all doubt. The case for the prosecution was that this quantity of 96 maunds, 17 seers included the 15 maunds 13 seers which had already been paid for and which ought not to have been included again in this voucher. Daly admittedly was in charge of the powder that was actually received, and I can find no justification for his signing this bill without satisfying himself that the whole of this quantity had been actually received and had not yet been paid for. In his statement as a witness Daly admitted his signatures on this voucher. This payment of the sum of Rs. 1,008-1-7, after it had been passed was made in the presence of Daly and the receipt (Ex. P. J.) was also taken by him. From the materials on the record I cannot see that the inference drawn by the Magistrate that Daly was grossly negligent in the discharge of his duties could not possibly have been drawn. I can only order the expunction of these remarks, if I come to the conclusion that they were wholly unwarranted by the materials on the record and this I am unable to do. I cannot, therefore, accept the prayer for holding that the passage imputing negligence to Daly should be expunged.

The result is that I direct that from the judgment delivered by Lala Sita Ram in the aforesaid case the following passages be expunged:

Not only that I am convinced that Mr. Daly also was a partner along with them.

Mr. Daly has been let off with no action having been taken against him except a formal explanation. I am also of opinion that not only Mr. Daly but other clerks who are charged with the supervision of this work must have been taking share out of the defalcations. Hence I am of opinion that the two accused deserve some consideration on that score, as they are out of a lot of persons who were participating in the profits of these defalcations. Ram Lal is a young man with some education. It is just possible that he may be a mere tool in the hands of Mr. Daly.

The rest of the judgment will stand.

(a) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 54—Onus to prove preference is on the person who challenges the alienation.

The onus is on the person challenging an alienation under S. 54, Provincial Insolvency Act, to prove that it was made with the dominant view of giving the particular creditors a preference over others. [P 744 C 2]

* (b) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 54—To constitute "preference" payment must be "voluntary."

A mere payment of a debt by a debtor in imminent expectation of bankruptcy is not by itself sufficient to prove the intention to give preference. The word "preference" involves and imports a free choice and it is necessary to prove that the debtor's act was "voluntary" and not due to extraneous influence such as pressure or threats from creditors : 130 *P. Bhide, J.—Four transfers of house property made by one Khem Chand within three months before the presentation of a petition for his being declared an insolvent have been cancelled by the District Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, under S. 54, Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920. Two out of these transfers were made in favour of the appellant Seth Ram Chand. One was a transfer of mortgage rights for Rs. 900, while the other was a sale of a house for Rs. 2,000. Two out of the issues framed by the District Judge were as follows :

(1) Was the debtor insolvent at that time (i.e., at the time of making the alienations in dispute) ?

(2) If so were the alienations in suit made in good faith and for valid consideration ?

He found the issue against Seth Ram Chand and annulled the transfers. From this decision Seth Ram Chand has appealed.

It will appear from the issues as given above that the learned District Judge considered proof of the mere fact that the alienor was insolvent at the time of making the alienations to be sufficient to shift the onus to the alienee of proving that the alienations were not made with the intention of giving fraudulent preference. He has based this view on the authority of Labhu Ram v. Puran Chand (1). This appeal came up at first before my learned brother Tek Chand, J., who thinking that an authoritative decision on the question of onus in such cases was necessary referred it to a Division Bench.

We have heard arguments at length on the question of onus. There seems consensus of authority in England as well as in India that the initial onus is on the person challenging an alienation under S. 54, Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, to prove that it was made with the dominant view of giving the particular creditors a preference over others. This point was not disputed before us and it does not appear that the view taken in Labhu Ram v. Puran Chand (1), was different in this respect. As stated in the quotation from Halsbury's Laws of England given in Labhu Ram v. Puran Chand (1),

The intention or view to prefer the creditor as the causa causans of the debtor's conduct is the cardinal point round which the whole question turns. If that intention be shown not to have existed. it is of no importance that the creditor had knowledge of the debtor's insolvency or that the debt was not due ; nor for this purpose is it true that the debtor must be taken to have intended the natural consequences of his act.

The crucial question as regards the onus, however, is : what are the facts which are prima facie sufficient to make out the requisite dominant intention and shift the onus to the respondent in such cases ? In two of the English cases cited in Labhu Ram v. Puran Chand (1), Vaughan Williams, L. J. appears to have laid down that , if a man on the eve of bankruptcy makes a payment to a particular creditor, the presumption immediately arises that he makes that payment with the dominant view of giving a preference to that creditor over his other creditors.

In other words, the fact that the debtor was insolvent and knew that he was insolvent, when he made the payment in dispute, was considered sufficient to shift the onus to the respondent to prove that the payment was not made with a view to prefer him (1901) 1 K. B. 717 and (1897) 2 Q. B. 16. But the decision in Labhu Ram v. Puran Chand (1), does not appear to be really founded on any presumption based merely on the fact that the debtor was insolvent when he made the payment. The learned Chief Judge, Sir Henry Rattigan, after quoting the passage from Halsbury's Laws of England referred to above remarked as follows :

> Speaking generally, I think the authorities support the view that the words "with a view of giving such creditors a preference over the other creditors," bear the same meaning that the word "voluntarily" was construed to have in the old Bankruptcy Act in England and that a Court is justified in holding that the payment to a creditor made by a person, who at the time of such payment is unable to pay his debts, must be taken as a payment with a view to prefer that creditor, if it established that the payment is made of the debtor's own accord not in the ordinary course of business and without any sort of pressure being brought to bear upon him.

The learned Chief Judge himself found in that case that Umrao Singh, the debtor was not only hopelessly bankrupt at the time of payment but made the payment of his own accord and without any sort of pressure being brought upon him. The findings arrived at in Labhu Ram v. Puran Chand (1) cannot, therefore, be said to support the proposition that the mere fact that a payment or alienation was made at a time when the debtor was insolvent is sufficient to raise the presumption that it was made with the dominant view of giving him preference. This appears to have been realized by the reporter who introduced the word "voluntary" in the headnote to that ruling on the question of onus which runs as follows :

> Held, also, that if such a "voluntary" payment is made to one creditor within three months of the debtor being adjudged insolvent the onus of proving that the payment was not made to give him a preference is on the creditor concerned : 1 K. B., p. 717 and 2 Q. B., p. 16.

If the word "voluntary" is to be read into the dicta of Vaughan Williams, L. J., the law on the question of onus would appear to be correctly stated, but without that qualification the wide proposition enunciated by him does not appear to be supported by other English authorities. The dictum of Vaughan Williams, L. J., in 1897 2 Q. B. 16 was not followed by Wright J., in in re Laurie (2), and by Younger J., in Bulteel and Colmore v. Trustee in Bankruptcy of Parker and Bulteel (3), and by Pollock, M. R. in in re Cohen (4). In the leading case, Sharp v. Jackson (5), which came up before the House of Lords Lord Halsbury quoted with approval the following remarks of Lord Esher :

> The doctrine with regard to fraudulent preference is well known. The question whether there has been fraudulent preference depends not merely upon the fact that there has been a preference but also on the state of mind of the person who made it. The question is whether in fact he had the intention to prefer certain creditors. It has been argued that the debtor must be taken to have intended the natural consequences of his act. I do not think that is true for this purpose.

To the same effect are the dicta in re Cohen (4) in which the question was recently considered and it was held by the majority of Judges (Pollock, M.R., dissenting) that when a bankrupt in imminent expectation of bankruptcy voluntarily pays a particular creditor with the result of giving him a preference in fact and the reason for such payment is unexplained prima facie the case of fraudulent preference is established. Pollock, M. R, went further and was of opinion that even if a payment is found to be voluntary and to have been made in imminent expectation of bankruptcy it would not be sufficient to establish prima facie fraudulent preference and that some further affirmative evidence was required as regards the intention to give preference. But even leaving aside the latter view it seems clear from the above that the mere payment of a debt by a debtor in imminent expectation of Bankruptcy is not by itself sufficient to prove the intention to give preference. The word "preference" involves and imports a free choice as pointed out by Lord Macnaghten in Sharp v. Jackson (5), and it is therefore necessary to prove at least that the debtor's act was "voluntary" and not due to extraneous influences such as pressure or threats from creditors. The findings in Labhu Ram v. Puran Chand (1), on which the decision in that case is based, are in accord with this view.

I am of opinion that in view of the authorities discussed above the issue framed by the learned District Judge cannot be considered to be correct. I would recast the issues under discussion as follows :

1. Was the debtor Khem Chand unable to pay his debts as they became due at the time he made the transfers in dispute?
2. Did he make the aforesaid transfers with a view to give the transferee a preference over other creditors?

Advocate High Court
Jammu & Kashmir

The evidence on the record does not appear to be sufficient for determination of the above issues. This was conceded by the learned counsel for both the parties and in view of the fact that the onus of proving the intention of giving preference has now been placed on the Receiver who is seeking to avoid the transfers It seems fair i cremand the case to enable the parties to produce their evidence on the above issues. The whole case is practically being re-opened. I, would, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the order of the learned District Judge and remand the case for a fresh decision. As the appeal has been accepted on a point of law which is not free from difficulty, I would leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Second Appeal No. 3151 of 1927, Decided on 3rd May 1928, from decree of Addl. Judge, Kangra, D/- 29th August 1927.

Jai Lal, J.—A suit for the recovery of Rs. 713-8-0 was instituted by Pandit Kirpa Ram against Mian Udham Chand on 29th January 1926. The description of the defendants, as it appears from the copy of the judgment of the trial Court, is as follows:

Mian Udham Chand, deceased son of Ram Dayal, represented by his sons Bhagat Chand, Sant Chand adults, Sakt Chand minor through Bhagat Chand, caste Rajput Katoch of Barwan, etc.

It appears that after the suit had been instituted against Udham Chand, it transpired that he had died and consequently on 18th June 1926 an application was filed by the plaintiff to bring his legal representatives, his sons, on the record. The persons proposed to be made the legal representatives appeared and pleaded to the plaint on its merits and also contended that Udham Chand had died before the institution of the suit and that in any case an application to bring the legal representatives on the record was made after the expiry of the period provided by the Limitation Act for the purpose.

The trial Court framed issues on all the points raised by the legal representatives and in its judgment of 7th March 1927, gave findings on all such issues but dismissed the suit on the ground that the same had abated.

On appeal, the Additional Judge of Kangra held that Udham Chand had died some time in January, may be on 30th or 31st January, and therefore, the application to bring the legal representatives on the record was barred by time.

He further opined that the plaintiff should have taken action under O. 22, R. 9, Civil P. C., to have the abatement set aside and that this not having been done by him, the order of abatement could not be questioned on appeal. The plaintiff appeals to this Court.

Order 22, R. 4, Cl. (3), Civil P. C., provides that where on the death of a sole defendant an application to make his legal representives a party to the suit is not made within the time limited by law, the suit shall abate as against the deceased defendant. It has been held by this Court that no formal order giving effect to an abatement is necessary to be recorded by the Court, but that the abatement takes place automatically on the failure of the plaintiff to bring on the record the legal representatives of the deceased defendant within the time prescribed by law. O. 22, R. 9 then provides that where a suit abates or is dismissed under O. 22, the plaintiff may apply for an order to set aside the abatement or dismissal, and if it is proved that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from continuing the suit, the Court shall set aside the abatement or dismissal upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit. It is further provided that the provisions of S. 5, Lim. Act, apply to applications made to set aside the abatement or dismissal.

In the case before, me, abatement took place long before the application of the 18th June 1926, was made by the plaintiff. No order of abatement had been formally recorded by the trial Court and it was not necessary that it should have been done. The abatement had taken place as a matter of course. The application, therefore, made in June 1926 must be deemed to be an application under O. 22, R. 9, to set aside an abatement which had already taken place. In A.I.R. 1924 Lah. 424 it was held that an application made after the expiry of the time limited by law to bring on the record the legal representatives of the deceased defendant should be treated as an application to set aside an abatement under O. 22, R. 9. To the same effect is Lachmi Narain v. Mahomed Yusuf (1). The respondent's counsel, however, relies on A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 474 in which it was held that though an application purported to be under O. 22, R. 4, may in particular cases be treated as one in substance under O. 22, R. 9, still where there is no assertion that there has been a delay due to reasonable causes and also where in fact there could be no reason for the applicant to ask for an excuse of the delay because the applicant thought that there had been no delay, it was not possible to treat the application as one under O. 22, R. 9. It is to be observed that under O. 22, R. 9 the application is to set aside the abatement and though, as a matter of practice, the applicant should state in the application that he was prevented by some sufficient cause from continuing the suit, it is not legally necessary that he should do so. All that is needed is that he should satisfy the Court that there was a sufficient cause.

In the present case it is rightly contended by the appellant's counsel that sufficient cause is contained in the findings of the Courts below as to circumstances under which Udham Chand died. This, however, is not a point on which I need express any definite opinion at this stage. In my opinion an application made to bring on the record the legal representatives of a deceased defendant after the time limited by law should ordinarily be treated as an application under O. 22, R. 9 and granted on proof of sufficient cause for the delay. To an application made after the expiry of the period of limitation O. 22, R. 4, can have no application because that rule can only relate to an application made within the time limited by law. It is true that in the present case the plaintiff did not allege in the application of 18th June 1926, that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from making the application earlier. This in my opinion was not strictly speaking necessary. Moreover, his main attempt was to meet the plea of the alleged legal representatives that Udham Chand had died before the suit was instituted. I hold, therefore, that the Additional Judge should have treated the application of 18th June 1926 as an application under O. 22, R. 9, Civil P. C., and proceeded with the appeal accordingly. I accept this appeal and setting aside the decree of the Additional Judge remit the case to him with direction to dispose of the appeal in accordance with law. The costs will abide the result.

First Appeal No. 2335 of 1923, Decided on 11th April 1928, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 12th July 1923.

Judgment.—There are two cross appeals (No. 2335 of 1923, Bar Dukan v. Gopal Singh, and No. 2570 of 1923, Gopal Singh v. Bar Dukan) arising out of the same judgment which disposed of the two suits, one brought by Bar Dukan and the other by Gopal Singh and may be conveniently disposed of together. The plaintiff brought a suit claiming a sum of Rs. 5,666-10-0 on the allegation that he was a commission agent ; that the defendant had dealings with him from 7th October 1917, up to 2nd April 1922, that during this period the defendant had purchased various commodities for the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 83,762-8-0, that out of this sum the defendant had paid Rupees 78,095 and that a sum of Rs. 5,666-10-0 was due to the plaintiff from the defendant. The plaintiff further alleged that he gave repeated notices to the defendant demanding the amount due by him, but the defendant refused to pay the amount due to the plaintiff. Hence the claim.

The defendant in his written statement raised various pleas, some of which were purely technical and the other amounted to a denial of the plaintiff's claim and in fact a substantial sum was claimed from the plaintiff by the defendant. The pleadings are, as is usual in these cases, obscure and do not give an indication as to what were the respective cases of the parties.

The trial Court framed certain issues and appointed one Lala Bal Kishan Munim, commissioner to examine the accounts. The said commissioner went through the accounts and submitted a report dated 29th November 1922. Both parties filed objections to the report of the commissioner, and the Subordinate Judge, after cancelling the issues, which he had already settled in the case, framed fourteen issues which are printed at p 153 and again in the body of the judgment at pp. 175 and 176 of the paper book. These issues arose out of the objections of the parties to the commissioner's report. A good deal of the procedure adopted by the trial Court in this case appears to have been irregular. but the parties accepted it and in fact acted upon it and so no more need be said on the subject. The Subordinate Judge discussed all these issues seriatim and in the end granted a decree for a sum of Rupees 1,876-10-6 only to the plaintiff, namely Bar Dukan, and dismissed the rest of the claim. The cross suit brought by the defendant was dismissed. No appeal was filed against the dismissal of the suit which Gopal Singh had brought against the Bar Dukan. Both parties, however, filed appeals against the decree in the suit filed by Bar Dukan, the plaintiff, attacking the decree in respect of the parties as to which his claim had been dismissed and the defendant Gopal Singh challenging the amount for which the plaintiff's claim has been decreed.

I propose to deal with the findings of the Court below on each of the issues and shall in this way dispose of the subject-matter of the two cross-appeals.

(The judgment then dealt with issues 1 to 8 and affirming the findings of the Court below proceeded with issue 9). Issue 9 is the most important of all these issues. It refers to 51 bales of empty bags. The plaintiff had purchased 52 bales of empty bags for the defendant and had spent a sum of Rs. 10,160 from his pocket in paying their price. The plaintiff served a notice (Ex. P-16) dated 2nd August 1920, upon the defendant and claimed that a sum of Rs. 8,720 was due from the defendant to him and that fifty-two bales of bags purchased for the defendant were lying at his shop. The plaintiff, therefore, demanded the sum due to him and in the alternative suggested that if the amount were not paid within a week the bales lying in the plaintiff's shop would be sold and the sale proceeds would be credited to the defendant's account. The defendant replied on 7th August 1920, and forbade the plaintiff from selling the goods because a certain sum of money was due to the defendant from the plaintiff firm and that unless an account was made up the plaintiff was not authorized to sell or otherwise dispose of the goods. This letter is maked as Ex. P-17 and makes it clear that the plaintiff, who was the commission agent for the defendant, was not authorized to sell the bales lying with him. More than eighteen months after, on 8th March 1922, the plaintiff sent a registered notice (Ex. P-8) through his pleader to the defendant. In this notice the plaintiff stated that a sum of Rs 11,674 was due by the defendants to the plaintiff and called upon him to pay up the amount due and also to remove the 51 bales of bags. It was further stated that the plaintiff was not prepared to keep the aforesaid bales any longer. The defendant was called upon to pay the amount within two days and to remove the bales failing which the plaintiff would sell the bales at the market rate. The Court held that this notice was not pr ved, and, therefore, the plaintiff was not authorized to sell the bales and that under these circumstances the plaintiff was liable to pay to the defendant Rs. 1,821-7-3, being the difference between the price actually realized by the plaintiff from the sale of the 51 bales of bags at the rate of Rs. 41-8-0 per hundred bags and the rate which prevailed on 31st May 1922, as deposed to by Panna Lal (P. W. 7). This finding is challenged in both the appeals. The plaintiff-appellant says that this sum should be wiped out and that he should be given a decree for a sum of Rs. 1,864, while the defendant claimed that this sum awarded by the Court below should be further increased. The question is whether the notice Ex. P-8 dated the 8th March 1922, sent by the plaintiff was actually sent by the plaintiff and received by the defendant.

We find an acknowledgment receipt dated the 10th March 1922, which shows that the notice was sent by a registered letter No. 92 addressed to Bhai Gopal Singh, defendant of the firm of Messrs. Gopal Singh Mangal Singh, Lyallpur. It is signed by one Bulaqi Ram. We also find a copy of the telegram sent by S. Iqbal Singh, the plaintiff's pleader, on the 11th March 1922. This telegram contains a peremptory demand of Rs 11,674-8-0 from the defendant and further says that the 51 bales of bags could be delivered on payment of the full amount and that otherwise they would be sold at the market rate and credited to the defendant's account. There are entries in the plaintiff's account books in the defendant's khata which show that on this date a registered letter was sent to the defendant. In the same account the cost of the telegram sent through Sardar Iqbal Singh to the defendant is also entered. The presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act, is in favour of the plaintiff. The defendant had been examined as plaintiff's witness in the case and was asked questions about the notices. His replies are not at all convincing and leave an impression upon one's mind that he was withholding the correct information from the Court. I may also point out that para. 2 of the plaint refers to these notices, and the corresponding para. 2 of the written statement meets the allegations in the plaint on this subject in a very evasive and disingenuous manner. On the whole, I do not think that the learned Judge of the trial Court was justified in holding that the plaintiff has failed to prove the notice relied upon by him. The plaintiff has, at any rate, made out a good prima facie case which the defendant, who never entered into the witness-box in support of his defence, has completely failed to rebut. This being so, the plaintiff, who had spent a large sum of money on the purchase of these bales of bags and in spite of repeated notices was not receiving his money from the defendants, was justified in selling the goods and crediting the sale proceeds to the defendant's account. An agent, pure and simple, may not be justified in selling his principal's goods without his authority. But the position of the plaintiff was different. He had spent a large sum of money from his own pocket in purchasing the goods on the defendant's behalf and was in the position of a tacit pledgee and could recover as much of his outlay as possible by selling the goods which were in his custody. The case decided by a Bench of this Court in Alliance Bank of Simla v. Ghamandi Lal Jaini Lal (1), lends support to this contention. Furthermore, paras. 372 (2) and 374 in Story's well-known work on Agency are also very instructive on this point. I, therefore, accept the plaintiff-appellant's contention and reversing the finding of the Court below as regards the sum of Rs. 1,821-7-3, for which the

(1) A. I. R. 1917 Lah. 409=8 Lah. 373.

Court had held the plaintiff liable, give him a decree for Rs. 1,864 against the defendant.

The parties were agreed before us at the time of the arguments that Rs. 1,864 would be added to the amount decreed to the plaintiff in case his contention in this Court prevailed. (The judgment then dealt with the remaing issues and concluded) The net result is that the plaintiff's appeal would be decreed to the extent of a further sum of Rs. 1,864. This sum shall be added to the sum of Rs. 1,876-10-6 already decreed to him, thus bringing the total to Rs. 3,740-10-6. The plaintiff's appeal is, therefore, allowed to this extent only. The rest of his appeal is dismissed. He is admittedly accountable to the defendant for the price of one bale of bags. The plaintiff shall be entitled to interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum up to the date of realization. The cross-appeal filed by the defendant (2570 of 1923) necessarily fails except as regards one odd bale and is hereby dismissed with costs. The parties to the plaintiff's appeal (No. 2335 of 1923) would pay and receive costs in proportion to their success and failure.

(a) Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 53—The expression "voluntary transfer" is not limited to any particular form of alienation.

Section 53 does not limit the expression "voluntary transfer" to any particular form of alienation of the property by the insolvent. The expression covers all sorts of devices to deprive creditors of the benefit of the property of the insolvent. [P 750 C 2]

(b) Provincial Insolvency Act, S. 53—Transaction evidenced by decree passed on confession of judgment by insolvent is voluntary.

Hargopal—for Appellants.

Shamair Chand and Qabal Chand—for Respondent.

Jai Lal, J.—One Chaman Lal was adjudicated an insolvent and the Official Receiver assumed charge of his estate. An application was then made by the Official Receiver, under Ss. 53 and 4, Provincial Insolvency Act, to have a certain transaction entered into by the insolvent with the appellant annulled. The transaction in question was a reference to arbitration of a so-called dispute about certain property between the insolvent and his two sons. The award of the arbitrator thereon was to the effect that property of the insolvent was subject to a charge of Rs. 4,000 in favour of his sons and subsequently decree was passed on confession of the insolvent in favour of his sons on the basis of such an award. It was alleged by the Official Receiver that the whole transaction was fraudulent, fictitious and collusive. I am not at this stage concerned with the allegations of the parties as to the nature of this transaction on its merits. The Senior Subordinate Judge has held that he was not competent to entertain the application as the transaction referred to above did not amount to a "transfer" as that term is used in S. 53, Insolvency Act, and has consequently dismissed the petition.

On appeal, the learned District Judge has held that such a transaction is a voluntary transfer and that the same could be attacked by means of an application under S 53, Insolvency Act.

The only point raised on this second appeal before me on behalf of the appellants, who are the sons of the insolvent, is that the transaction mentioned above, is not a voluntary transfer and cannot therefore be made the subject of an application under S. 53. In my opinion S. 53 does not limit the expression "voluntary transfer" to any particular form of alienation of his property by the insolvent. The expression is wide enough to cover all sorts of devices that may be practised or suffered by the insolvent to deprive the creditors of the benefit of his property. It consequently covers the transaction with which we are concerned in this case. It does not cease to be a voluntary transaction because it is evidenced by a decree passed on a confession of judgment by the insolvent.

I dismiss this appeal with costs.

Judgment.—The three appellants in this case have been convicted by the learned Magistrate as follows : Dosa and Kalu under S. 366 and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment with three months' solitary confinement and Mithu under S. 368 and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment with three months' solitary confinement.

The facts of the case as fully given in the judgment of the learned Magistrate and from the prosecution evidence are that : Dosa and Kalu together with another brother Mathela joined in abducting Mt. Fatima, who is a girl of about 15 or 16 years old, from her village at a time when she went to fetch water. Having thus abducted her she was taken to the house of Mithu who is a brother-in-law of Dosa, etc. There she was confined against her will as is proved by the evidence of P Ws. Nos. 9 and 10. The story of the girl as to the abduction is corroborated by Mehra P. W. No. 2 and the fact that it was against her will, is proved by the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 9 and 10 and others. The learned counsel has candidly admitted that he has little to say as regards the guilt of the accused and has only pressed before me the legal point that the joint trial of the three appellants under Ss. 366 and 368 was not legal under the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. Kushai Malik v. Emperor (1) is a direct authority against him and I, therefore, hold that there is no force in this contention.

Counsel has next pressed the question of sentence before me but this is a bad case of abduction of a young girl who further alleges that she was raped and though the appellants have not been charged with it, there is nothing very improbable in her story. I, therefore, consider that the sentence on Dosa and Kalu is fully deserved and I dismiss their appeals.

As regards Mithu, I see no reason why he should have a sentence of solitary confinement and I accept his appeal to the extent that while maintaining the conviction and sentence of two year's rigorous imprisonment, I direct that he shall have no solitary confinement.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 402 of 1928, Decided on 22nd June 1928, Civil P. C., S. 10—Suitstayed under S. 10—The Court has no jurisdiction to fix a further date for appearance unless moved.

Once a Court has made an order under S. 10 staying the proceedings in a suit, it has no jurisdiction to fix further dates for the hearing of the suit unless moved to do so by either party. [P 752 C 2]

Judgment—A suit for recovery of compensation for loss of goods was instituted by Bawa Fakir Singh, against the Secretary of State in the Court of Small Causes at Lahore, but on an objection by the defendant to the jurisdiction of the Court the plaint was returned for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiff thereupon instituted two suits for the same account : one in the Court of Small Causes at Jullundur and the other in the Court of Small Causes at Gujranwala, apparently on the same date. On an objection being raised on behalf of the defendant, the Secretary of State, in the Gujranwala Court the proceedings were stayed under S. 10, Civil P. C. which prohibits the trial of two suits simultaneously on the same cause of action and between the same party. The order staying the suit was passed by the Judge, Small Cause Court on 16th November 1927 ; at the end of the order a direction was added that " the case to come up on 20th December 1927. " Counsel for parties appeared on 20th December 1927 and informed the Court that the case at Jullundur was still pending. The 17th January was the next date fixed which was changed to 20th January on an application by the parties. On the 20th counsel again imparted the same information to the Court with the result that the 14th March was fixed as the next date. On that date there being no appearance on behalf of the plaintiff the suit was dismissed by the learned Judge Small Cause Court.

In the meantime the hearing of the suit in Jullundur continued and it appears that an objection was taken on behalf of the defendant to the jurisdiction of that Court also, but on the ground that a previously instituted suit was pending in the Court at Gujranwala. An issue in a comprehensive form was, however, framed by the Court " whether the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. " After some witnesses had been examined the plaintiff filed an application in this Court stating that he admitted the validity of the objection as to the jurisdiction and wanted his plaint to be returned to him for presentation to the proper Court. This prayer was granted and the plaint was returned to him for presentation to the proper Court.

An application was thereupon filed before the Judge, Small Cause Court, Gujranwala, for restoration of a suit dismissed by him in default on the 14th March. This application was dismissed as barred by time. The present petition was then filed by the plaintiff for revision of the order of the Judge at Gujranwala, and it is directed both against the order dismissing the suit by default on the 14th March and the order rejecting the subsequent application to set aside the dismissal for default.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, who appeared on behalf of the respondent, objects that no application for revision of the order dismissing the application to restore or review the order of the 14th March lies, and that in any case the order of the Court passed was perfectly justified. I do not propose to discuss this aspect of the case because in my opinion the order dismissing the suit by default cannot be sustained in law.

Once a Court has made an order under S. 10, Civil P. C., staying the proceedings in a suit it has no jurisdiction to fix further dates for the hearing of the suit unless moved to do so by either party. The later order of 16th November 1927 is in direct contravention of the main order staying the suit. If on, the other hand, the Court had fixed a date merely in order to enable the plaintiff to inform it as to the stage at which the previously instituted suit was on a particular date then the date fixed cannot be held to be a date for the hearing of the suit. In either case if the plaintiff did not appear on the date fixed by the Court, the suit could not be dismissed. Ordinarily it is the business of the plaintiff to move the Court in which the subsequently instituted suit is pending to pass proper orders, after the proceedings in the previously instituted suit have come to an end. If the Court finds that it is necessary to obtain further information about the other suit it must call upon the plaintiff to appear before it on a date fixed by it and then to proceed in accordance with law. Till a date is fixed for the hearing of the suit I am unable to see that the provisions of O. 17, Civil P. C., under which alone an order like the one passed on 14th March 1927, could have been passed, could come into operation.

I, therefore, hold that the order dismissing the suit by default was illegal in this case and as, under the circumstances disclosed, if sustained, it will deprive the plaintiff of his right to prosecute his remedy in a civil Court, I feel fully justified in setting aside that order in exercise of my revisional jurisdiction.

I accept this petition, set aside the order of dismissal of the suit by default of the 14th March and direct the Judge, Small Cause Court, Gujranwala, to restore it to its original number and to proceed with it in accordance with law. The conduct of the plaintiff in this case is not such as to entitle him to any costs of these proceedings. There is therefore no order as to costs.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 2567 of 1927, Decided on 9th March 1928

(a) Civil P. C., Sch. 2, para. 8—"making the award" includes its announcement and filing in Court—Date fixed for filing an award—Award not ready—Extension of time granted—Award filed bearing a date a day previous to the date originally fixed—Award was held to be valid.

The expression "making the award" includes the announcement of the award and the award cannot be deemed to have "been made" till it is announced and one way of announcing it is by filing in Court. [P 755 C 1]

A suit was referred to arbitration and a certain date was fixed for the filing of the award. The arbitrator asked for an extension of time as his award was not ready by that date. Court extended the period to another date. Award was filed on this date but it bore a date a day previous to the date originally fixed. It was contended that the award was ready on the date on which it was signed and, therefore, the extension of time was illegal and the award was invalid.

Held: that the award is not final till it has been promulgated either by its being filed in Court or by its being announced to the parties and hence the extension of time was proper and the award was valid: 49 I. C. 522 and 59 P. R. 1907 (F. B.), Foll. [P 754 C 2]

Though an order of remand should properly be under R. 25, but if it is actually made under R. 23, an appeal does lie from such an order. [P 753 C 2]

(c) Civil P. C., S. 105—Order setting aside an award amounting to irregularity—It can be taken as a ground in appeal.

Order setting aside an award though not appealable can be taken as a ground in appeal if it amounts to a defect or irregularity affecting the decision of a case: A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 465, Dist: A. I. R. 1921 Lah. 145, not Foll. [P 754 C 1]

Judgment.—Two suits were instituted for possession of land. They were both referred to arbitration. The 10th April 1923 was finally fixed as the date for the filing of the award. On that day the arbitrator represented to the Court that his award was not ready and, therefore, he asked for an extension of time for the filing of the award. The Court thereupon fixed the 18th April to enable the arbitrator to file the award. On that day the award was filed by the arbitrator but it was dated 9th April 1923, i. e., a day previous to the date on which the extension for filing the award was granted by the Court.

An objection was thereupon taken to this award by one of the parties that it was invalid, having been made after the date fixed by the Court for filing it. The precise form in which the objection appears to have been taken was that the award having been signed on 9th was complete on that date, and, therefore, the Court was not competent to give an extension of time for filing it. There were other objections to the award, but the trial Judge set it aside merely on the ground that the extension of time given on 10th April was illegal and, therefore, the award filed after that date was invalid. The Court thereupon proceeded to decide the case on its merits and finally decreed the suits. The defendants presented two appeals against the decrees of the trial Court to the District Judge who has held that the award was not invalid on the ground mentioned above and has remanded the case to the trial Court to decide the other objections taken to the award.

A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondents that this appeal does not lie because the trial Court had not decided the suits on a preliminary point only but had decided them on their merits, and, therefore, a remand under O. 41, R. 23 could not have been made. The remand on the face of it is not one under O 41, R. 25, though probably that was the proper rule under which it should have been made. It is in the form of a remand under O. 41, R. 23. No doubt a Court is competent to make a remand under its inherent powers, but apparently in this case the Court did not purport to do so. I hold, therefore, that an appeal lies to this Court because the remand purports to be one under O. 41, R. 23 and I overrule the preliminary objection.

On the merits the first contention of the counsel for the appellants was that an appeal did not lie to the District Judge on the ground that the award had wrongly been set aside by the first Court. It may be mentioned that a petition for revision was filed in this Court against the order of the trial Court setting aside the award but it was dismissed as incompetent. The learned District Judge has held that an appeal lay to him under

S. 105, Civil P. C, which provides that no appeal shall lie from any order made by a Court in the exercise of its original or appellate jurisdiction: but, where a decree is appealed from, any error, defect or irregularity in any order, affecting the decision of the case, may be set fourth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal. The learned District Judge has held that the order setting aside the award was a defect or irregularity affecting the decision of the case and, therefore, the ground could be taken in the appeal before him from the decree of the trial Court.

In this view of the learned District Judge I agree. The appellant's counsel based his contention on Sundar Singh v. Nighaiya (1). In that case an ex-parte decree had been set aside by the trial Court and finally the suit had been dismissed. The plaintiff appealed against the decree and raised among others the ground that the ex-parte decree had been wrongly set aside by the trial Court. It was held that this objection could not be taken under S. 105, Civil P. C. because the setting aside of the ex-parte decree was not an order affecting the decision of the case. Obviously there is a distinction between the reported case and the present case In setting aside the ex-parte decree the trial Court did not in any way enter into the merits of the case and the order did not, therefore, in any way affect the decision of the case by the trial Court at the later stage. On the other hand, the proceedings relating to the setting aside of the ex-parte decree were separate and independent of the adjudication of the dispute on its merits. Here the case is quite different. The award decided the dispute between the parties in a particular manner and the essential question before the Court is whether it is the award that should be taken as the decision between the parties or the decree of the trial Court which takes no notice of the award. The validity of the award, therefore, is essentially a question which affects the decision of the present case.

Another case which was relied upon by the learned counsel was a judgment of a Judge in Chambers of this Court in Budhu Ram Honda Ram v. Ramzan (2). That case is certainly a direct authority in favour of the appellant's contention, but with great respect I am unable to agree with the view taken by the learned Judge in that case. There is no real discussion of the point involved and for reasons which I have already given I am unable to follow that case. I hold, therefore, that an appeal lay to the learned District Judge.

The next question is whether the award was invalid on the ground that it was dated 9th April whereas an extension of time for making it was given by the trial Court on 10th April. A number of authorities were cited by counsel for the appellant in support of the contention that the award made under the circumstances was invalid. The learned District Judge has noticed them in detail in his judgment and it is not necessary for me to examine them again. I agree with the conclusion of the District Judge that all those authorities are distinguishable from the facts of the present case. It is quite a different thing to extend the time when an award has actually been made and filed in Court after the time originally fixed. In such a case it has been held that the Court has no jurisdiction to extend the time if the award has actually been filed in Court after the time originally fixed by the Court has expired. In the present case on 10th April the arbitrator had represented to the Court that his award was not ready and on that assumption the Court had granted an extension of time. It cannot, therefore, be said that on the facts as they were represented to the Judge his order extending the time was illegal. The learned counsel for the appellant admitted that even assuming that the award was actually signed on 9th April by the arbitrator it was open to him to alter it or to write another award. He admitted that an award is not final till it has been promulgated either by its being filed in Court or by its being announced to the parties. Till this is done it is open to the arbitrator to change his views.

What apparently happened in this case is this ; though the arbitrator had actually signed the award on 9th, still apparently he was doubtful whether his conclusions were the correct ones. He was, therefore, reconsidering the situation. This he was entitled to do, and therefore, he asked for an extension from the Court. He finally decided that his view was the correct one and omitted to alter the date on the award and filed it in Court on 18th, i. e., within the extended time fixed by the Court. I am unable to see any objection to this. Babu Lal v. Badri Lal (3), a judgment of a Division Bench of the Patna High Court, directly bears on the point. There it was held that until an award is communicated to the parties, there is nothing to prevent an arbitrator from changing his mind. He cannot be said to be functus officio until the pronouncement is actually made, and even if he has signed the award, this does not preclude him from further considering the matter. In Gokul Chand v Rahman (4) it was held that an award made and signed before the date fixed by the Court but filed after the date so fixed is valid. Applying this view to the present case, even if the extension granted by the Court was illegal the award was signed before the date originally fixed, i. e., 10th April, and was, therefore, valid though filed after such date. It would be observed that Sch. 2, Civil Procedure Code speaks of time to be fixed by the Court for the "making" of an award by the arbitrator, except that para. 8 provides that where the arbitrators or the umpire cannot "complete" the award within the specified time the Court may extend the time either before or after the expiration of the date fixed for the "making" of the award. That under para. 15 an award may be set aside, inter alia, if it has been made after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court. The question is what is the meaning of the expression "making the award."

(1) A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 466=6 Lah. 94.
(2) A. I. R. 1921 Lah. 145.

In my opinion it includes the announcement of the award and the award cannot be deemed to have "made" till it is announced and one way of announcing it is by filing it in Court, and, therefore, the Court is competent to extend the time if the award has not been filed in Court or announced to the parties even if the arbitrator has finally made up his mind how to decide the dispute and even if he has recorded his views and signed such record. I hold, therefore, that there is no force in this appeal and I dismiss it with costs. This order will also cover the connected appeal.

Second Appeal No. 3110 of 1927, Decided on 3rd May 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 15th August 1927.

(a) Limitation Act, S. 12—Judgment passed on review not giving all facts of the case and modifying a portion of first judgment—The two judgments are really one—Appellant must file copies of both—Appellant is entitled to deduct time spent in obtaining copies also of first judgment.

Where the judgment passed on review by the trial Court does not give all facts of the case but is merely supplementary to the first judgment, inasmuch as it modifies a portion of the first, it is necessary for the appellant to file copies of both the judgments, as the two must be regarded as one judgment, and the appellant is entitled to deduct time spent in obtaining copies of the first judgment also and not only of the second. [P 756 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 47, R. 7—R. 7 limits the grounds on which an order granting review can be attacked—Appellate Court is not entitled to set aside decree passed on review merely on ground that no sufficient ground for review was made.

Rule 7 limits the grounds on which an order granting an application for review can be attacked in appeal and the object of the rule is to confine the applicant to those grounds: 22 Cal. 984, Foll.; and A. I. R. 1922 P. C. 112, Dist. [P 756 C 2]

Khurshid Zaman—for Appellant.
Shamair Chand—for Respondent.

Judgment.—A suit for recovery of money and possession of property as a mortgagee was filed by the plaintiff, the appellant before me, against the respondent. It was first dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the same was barred by time. Then an application for review of the decree of the Subordinate Judge was filed in this Court by the plaintiff on the ground that his conclusion of the question of limitation was erroneous, inasmuch as he had failed to take into consideration an article of the Indian Limitation Act, which applies to the case. The Subordinate Judge after notice to the defendant held that his conclusion holding that the suit was barred by time, was erroneous and was made in ignorance of the provisions of the article concerned. He consequently granted the application for review and finally decreed the plaintiff's suit. Against this decree the defendant filed an appeal in the Court of the Additional District Judge of Hoshiarpur.

A preliminary objection was taken before the lower appellate Court by the plaintiff that the appeal was barred by time. This objection was overruled by him and the appeal accepted on the ground that the Subordinate Judge had granted the application for review in contravention of the provisions of O. 47, R. 1, which prescribes the ground on which an application to review a judgment can be entertained. He further held that the decree passed on review by the Subordinate Judge under such circumstances was null and void and, accepting the appeal, set aside that decree. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from the decree of the Additional District Judge. The first point raised is that the appeal before the Additional District Judge was barred by time. I am unable to agree with this contention. What happened is this. The first defendant first obtained copies of the judgment and decree passed against him on review by the Subordinate Judge. He then applied for a copy of the original judgment of the Subordinate Judge. It was conceded before the lower appellate Court that the defendant was entitled to deduct the time spent by him in obtaining the copy of the judgment and the decree passed after the application for review had been granted. But it was contended that he was not entitled to deduct the time spent in obtaining the copy of the original judgment which was reviewed. The Additional District Judge did not give effect to this contention and held that the defendant was entitled to deduct the period spent by him in obtaining both sets of copies. In my opinion the learned Judge below was correct in this conclusion.

The appellant's counsel before me has cited some authorities which lay down that an appellant to this Court is not entitled to deduct the time spent in obtaining copies of the judgment of the trial Court in a second appeal, but only the period spent in obtaining copies of the judgment and decree appealed against, that is, the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court. This view is based on the provisions of S. 12, Lim. Act, which expressly provides that in calculating the time for appeal the appellant is entitled to deduct the time spent in obtaining copies of the judgment and decree appealed against. It has consequently been held that the Court is not entitled to extend the operation of that section, though by a rule made by this Court it is necessary to file a copy of the judgment of the trial Court. The present case, however, is quite different. Here the two sets of judgments, that is, the one passed before the application for review and the second passed after the application for review had been granted are really one judgment. The second judgment does not give all the facts of the case. They are given in the first judgment and the second judgment merely is supplementary to the first inasmuch as it modifies a portion thereof. In the second judgment reference is expressly made to the first judgment to the effect that full facts are discussed therein. In my opinion, therefore, it was necessary in this case for the appellant to file the copies of both the judgments as these two really are one judgment from which an appeal is made. I hold, therefore, that there is no force in the first ground of appeal that the appeal in the Additional District Judge's Court was barred by time.

I, however, consider that the next contention of the appellant's counsel has force. It is that the Additional District Judge was not competent to accept the appeal from the decree passed on review of judgment on the ground that no sufficient ground for review had been made out as O. 47, R. 7, Civil P. C., limits the grounds on which an order granting an application for review can be attacked on appeal, whether in an appeal from the order granting the application for review or from the decree passed subsequent to such an order. Under that rule an order of the Court granting an application for review may be objected to on the ground that the application was:

(a) In contravention of the provisions of R. 2;

(b) in contravention of R. 4, or

(c) after the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed therefor and without sufficient cause.

The same rule further provides that such objection may be taken at once by an appeal from the order granting the application or in any appeal from the final decree or order passed or made in the suit.

The respondent's counsel says that this rule is an enabling rule and is not intended to confine the appellant to the grounds mentioned therein, because he contends the word " only " does not appear in that rule. But in my opinion that rule read as a whole does limit the appellant to the grounds mentioned therein and the object of the rule is to confine an appellant to the grounds mentioned therein, otherwise the rule has no meaning. This view finds support from Baroda Churn Ghose v. Gobind Prosad (1) and Chhaju v. Neki (2), relied upon by the respondent's counsel, has no bearing on this case, because that case relates to an appeal heard by their Lordships of the Privy Council against a decree passed on review of judgment, and though they entertained grounds attacking the order granting application for review, which were not confined to O. 47, R. 7; but their Lordships were not in any way controlled by the provisions of that rule. My conclusion, therefore, is that the Additional District Judge was not entitled to set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge passed on review merely on the ground that the same was a nullity as the application for review could not be granted under O. 47, R. 1.

The grounds mentioned in Rr. 2 and 4, O. 47 on which an appeal can be entertained are, where a Judge other than the one who passed the original decree grants the application for review thereof or where notice has not been given to the opposite party or where application has been granted on the ground of discovery of new matter or evidence under certain circumstances mentioned in R. 4. None of these apply to the present case. I, therefore, accept this appeal set aside the decree of the District Judge and remand the case to him with direction to hear the appeal from the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge on its merits. The Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal shall be refunded to the appellant. The other costs will abide the result.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 64 of 1928, Decided on 13th June 1928, for transfer of the case.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 526 — Complainant exempted from personal appearance on certain dates, while accused ordered to furnish bail on his coming late on account of the missing of the train—This does not amount to a sufficient ground for transfer.

A Magistrate allowed exemption to the complainant in a case under S. 500, I. P. C., from personal appearance in Court on certain dates, while he ordered the accused, who was late in coming to Court by reason of having missed the train, to furnish bail instead of a personal recognizance. The accused asked for a transfer under S. 526.

Held: that the matter of exemption and order for security are matters within the judicial discretion of the Magistrate and that there was no sufficient ground for an apprehension in the mind of a reasonable man that the Magistrate was baised against him. [P 758 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 526—Atmosphere causing apprehension of improper interference with justice is a good ground for transfer.

The trial of a case should be in an atmosphere which does not create even a suspicion that there has been or is likely to be an improper interference with the course of justice. Order.—This is an application under S. 526, Criminal P. C., for transfer from the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Fazilka, of a criminal case under S. 500, I.P.C., instituted against the petitioner by the respondent, in respect of an article headed "Riasat Jalalabad ke halat" printed in a newspaper of which the petitioner is said to be the printer, publisher and editor. Several grounds are urged in the application, in respect of which I have heard counsel for the petitioner and for the Crown and the complainant at length and have examined the affidavits and the counter-affidavit filed before me and the remarks of the learned Magistrate thereon.

It is first urged that the Magistrate has been purposely delaying the disposal of the case, with a view to harass the petitioner. But the Magistrate has explained that most of the adjournments were due to the heavy arrears in his Court, and that he had naturally to give preference to chalan cases pending before him over this case. I accept this explanation and overrule this contention.

Next it is contended that the Magistrate had on one occasion made certain objectionable and disaparaging remarks against the petitioner in open Court and on another occasion offered a chair to the complainant, while the petitioner and his counsel were standing. Both these allegations are denied by the complainant and the Magistrate and I hold them unproved.

Stress is next laid on the fact that while the Magistrate had been indulgent enough to the complainant to exempt him from personal appearance in Court on certain dates, when on a later date the petitioner was late in coming to Court by reason of having missed the train, he ordered the petitioner to furnish bail for Rs. 1,000 instead of a personal recognizance of Rs. 500. But both these were matters purely within the judicial discretion of the Magistrate and cannot, in my opinion, afford grounds for an apprehension in the mind of a reasonable man that the Magistrate is biased against him. I do not consider that the grounds mentioned above individually or collectively are sufficient to justify a transfer.

There is, however, one matter which has emerged from the affidavit and the counter-affidavit and which stands on an entirely different footing. As pointed out above, the article which is the basis of the prosecution is headed "Riasat Jalalabad ke halat" and the alleged defamatory statement relates to the complainant's failure to perform his duties as the medical officer-in-charge of the State hospital. Among the principal witnesses for the prosecution are the manager of the Court of Wards and other officers of the Jalalabad (Mamdot) Estate. In these circumstances the Magistrate should have kept himself as much aloof from the estate and its officials as possible. It is, however, admitted that during his frequent visits to Ferozepore he puts up at the Mamdot house and occasionally holds his Court there. At one hearing (15th March) he had fixed this very case for hearing at the Mamdot house. The Magistrate appears to have done all this in the ordinary course of things and I am sure, he is not in fact influenced in any way there against the petitioner. But I consider this circumstance sufficient to establish a connexion between him and the complainant and his supporters which might justify a reasonable apprehension in the petitioner's mind of partiality towards the complainant. In my opinion this fact brings the case within the rule laid down by Lush, J., in the well-known case of Sargeant v. Dale (1), which has always been regarded as embodying the principles on which the High Courts in India deal with applications under S. 526. Reference may in this connexion be made to the following observations of Lord Hewart, C. J., in The King v. Sussex Justices Ex parte McCarthy (2):

> The trial of a case should be in an atmosphere which does not create even a suspicion that there has been or is likely to be an improper interference with the course of justice. * * * A long line of cases shows that it is not merely of some importance but is of fundamental importance that justice should not only be done but should manifestly be seen to be done.

This has again been emphasized in the recent case of Rex v. Ex parte Parkins (3). See also the decisions of our High Court in Sardari Lal v. Emperor (4) and Amar Singh v Sadhu Singh (5). The case must, therefore, be transferred to another Court. Accordingly I withdrew it from the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Fazilka, and remit it to the Criminal Revn. No. 1675 of 1927, Decided on 9th January 1928, reported by Dist. Magistrate-Gurgaon, on 11th October 1927.

Arms Act, S. 14—License for a full sized gun—Possessing half barrel gun is an offence.

Where a license granted relates to a full-sized gun, the person holding such a license cannot keep a half-barrel gun under it.

N. C. Mehra—for Petitioner.

Order.—The petitioner was convicted under S 19 (1), Arms Act, in the following circumstances: He had a license for a half-barrelled gun. On 20th November 1926, he applied for a license for a full sized gun This was granted on 8th February 1927. He deposited the license for the half-barrelled gun in the District Magistrate's Court, but failed to deposit the gun itself. An order was issued by the District Magistrate and duly served on the accused asking him to deposit his half-barrelled gun as its license had been cancelled. The petitioner was personally served but failed to deposit the gun and was accordingly challaned under S. 19, Arms Act. The accused admits the fact but stated that he thought he could keep his half-barrelled gun under his new license for a full sized gun. He was sentenced to a fine of Rs. 25 or in default to suffer one month's rigorous imprisonment. The proceedings have been forwarded for revision by the District Magistrate on the ground that under S. 14, Arms Act the petitioner was entitled to keep a full sized gun and, therefore, did not exceed the extent of the license by keeping a half-barrelled gun. The form of the license, however, clearly contains a description of the weapon kept and a half-barrelled gun cannot be described as a full barrelled gun. I, therefore, consider that there is an offence.

The next point urged is that the offence is only technical and the sentence of Re. 1 would be sufficient. There would have been great force in this contention if the accused had not been personally served and ordered to deposit his gun with the District Magistrate. If he chose to take the risk of interpreting the law as he thought it should be or was, he must suffer the consequence. However, the accused is an ignorant man and his gun has been confiscated and I think that a fine of Re. 1 with one day's rigorous imprisonment in default will meet the ends of justice and I order accordingly.

Criminal Misc. Appln. No. 88 of 1928, Decided on 22nd June 1928, for quashing the proceedings for warrant of petitioner's arrest.

(a) Criminal P. C. Ss. 476 and 195—Sections refer to the "Court" and not to the "Judge" or "Presiding Officer" of the Court.

Sections 195 and 476, Criminal P. C., make reference to the "Court" and not to the "Judge" or even the "Presiding Officer" of the Court. It is clear that, whether the Judge or the presiding officer is the same or a different person, the Court remains the same and it is the Court that is competent to make the complaint. [P 761 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., O. 20, R. 20—Proceedings arising out of an application to obtain a copy must be deemed to be pending before the Court which decided the case—Application made to an official to grant a copy must be deemed to have been made to the Court.

Under O. 20, R. 20, it is the duty of the Court which has decided a case to give a copy of the judgment and the decree to the parties on application, and such an application, has to be made to that Court. The proceedings arising out of an application to obtain a copy therefore must be deemed to be pending before that Court. It is open to the Court to delegate its functions to somebody else and the official to whom such functions are delegated really exercises them on behalf of the Court and acts as its ministerial officer. He is the custodian of the records of the Court on its behalf and therefore any application made to that official must also be deemed to have been made to the Court. [P 761 C2]

Order.—The facts of this case are peculiar. On 7th June 1926 the petitioner Rawa Faqir Singh, who is an advocate of this Court, instituted a suit in his personal capacity in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, 4th Class, of Amritsar for the recovery of Rs. 800 against one Mr. Grosse. A decree was granted in his favour for Rs. 160 on 13th December 1926. The petitioner apparently decided to appeal against the decree dismissing a large portion of his claim. Such an appeal should ordinarily have been filed within 30 days; but this was not done. It is alleged that on 31st January 1927, he filed an application for a copy of the judgment and the decree in the case. An examination of the application shows that it was addressed to the officer in charge of the Copying Department of the Amritsar District and the signature of the petitioner bears the date of 4th January 1927. It appears that the Registrar of the Small Cause Court at Amritsar is the officer-in-charge of the Copying Department, and incidentally it happened that the same officer, that is to say, the Subordinate Judge, 4th Class, who decided the suit in question, exercised the powers of the Registrar, Small Cause Court.

After the application of the copies had been presented a clerk in the office of the Registrar wrote an order to the effect that the copy applied for may be granted. This order bears the date of 7th January 1927. It was placed before the Registrar for signature on 31st January 1927, along with other papers. The suggestion of the prosecution is that there was collusion between the clerk and the petitioner and a wrong date had been written on the order under the expectation that the Registrar would not notice the date and would sign the application in ordinary course. Admittedly application for copies made on 7th January 1927, would have enabled the petitioner to file an appeal within limitation, but an application made on 31st January would have the contrary effect. The Registrar, however, noticed the wrong date and held a departmental enquiry with the result of which we are not concerned.

On 9th March 1928 the police appealed to the District Magistrate for permission to investigate this matter, alleging that an offence under S. 468, I P. C., had been committed by the petitioner. This permission having been granted investigation was taken up by the police and the petitioner was arrested and sent up for trial under S. 463, I. P. C., the warrant for his arrest having been issued on 26th March 1928. Up to that stage no complaint had been filed against the petitioner in respect of this matter by any competent Court. Indeed it does not appear that the attention of the Court was drawn by the police to the necessity of a complaint. After the proceedings had been instituted in the Court of the Magistrate, however, whether on the objection of the petitioner or for some other reason the police moved the Court of the Subordinate Judge 4th Class, and the Registrar of the Small Cause Court to file a complaint against the petitioner. It may be mentioned that the Presiding Officer who originally decided the suit and before whom the application for the copies was placed for signature had in the meantime been transferred and another officer, Lala Guru Datt, had succeeded him, consequently it was Lala Guru Datt who was approached by the police to file a complaint and he did so on 14th April 1928, as Subordinate Judge, 4th Class, and Registrar, Small Cause Court.

An appeal against the filing of the compliant was preferred by the petitioner to the District Judge of Amritsar who by his order of 2nd June 1928, directed the withdrawal of the complaint of 14th April 1928. This order is based on two grounds: first that the offence concerned came to the knowledge of Lala Guru Datt in his executive capacity as the officer in charge of the Copying Department, and that "he could not act as a judicial officer under S. 476, Criminal P. C." The other ground was that the form of the complaint was incorrect. A reference to the grounds of appeal to the District Judge shows that the first ground was that the Subordinate Judge and the Registrar, Small Cause Court, was not competent to file the complaint.

The learned counsel for the petitioner explains that what his client meant was that the complaint should have been preferred by the Presiding Officer before whom the application for copy was put up for signature and not by his successor. But this is not what appears to have been argued before the District Judge, and whether there is any force in this contention of the learned counsel on its merits or not, it is quite clear that the ground taken up before the learned District Judge was that the Subordinate Judge 4th Class, and the Registrar, Small Cause Court, as such was not competent to file a complaint, but that he could do so only in his executive capacity. I may mention at this stage that a complaint is necessary under S. 195 (1) (c), Criminal P. C., only if the offence is committed in connexion with proceedings pending in a Court and not before an "executive officer" and therefore if the present contention of the petitioner is correct as to his object in raising the first ground before the District Judge, then no complaint under S. 195 would be necessary.

It appears that subsequent to the withdrawal of the complaint in pursuance of the order of the District Judge, Lala Guru Datt has filed another complaint whether in his personal capacity or as an officer in charge of the copying department does not appear from the present record as that complaint is not before me.

The present petition is by Bawa Faqir Singh, praying that the proceedings against him, which were started on the report of the police, be quashed. From what I have stated above it seems to me that the position taken up by the petitioner is curious, to say the least of it, and this matter I will have to consider when deciding whether I should exercise my discretionary jurisdiction in his favour.

It is now contended before me that the prosecution under S. 468, I. P. C., could not be instituted against the petitioner except on a complaint made under S. 476, Criminal P. C., by the Court before whom the proceedings in respect of the application were pending. The learned counsel for the petitioner concedes that such Court is the Court of the Subordinate Judge, 4th Class and the Registrar, Small Cause Court. He, however, about the end of his arguments, made a half-hearted attempt to urge when it was pointed out by the learned counsel for the Crown that as a matter of fact a complaint had been made by the Subordinate Judge, 4th Class, and the Registrar, Small Cause Court, and was withdrawn on his objection that such officer had no jurisdiction, that the complaint should have been filed by the Presiding Officer of the Court before whom application for copy was placed for signature and not by his successor in office. No authority was cited in support of this contention and Ss. 195 and 476, Criminal P. C, make reference to the "Court" and not to the "Judge" or even the "Presiding Officer" of the Court. It is clear that whether the Judge or the Presiding Officer is the same or a different person, the Court remains the same and it is the Court that is competent to make the complaint. There is, therefore, no force in this contention of the learned counsel.

As there has been a good deal of controversy on the subject between the parties before me, it would be better if I gave a finding as to the necessity of a complaint by the Court and as to the Court which should file a complaint in a case like this.

Under O. 20, R. 20, Civil P. C. it is the duty of the Court which has decided a case to give a copy of the judgment and the decree to the parties on application and such an application has to be made to that Court. The proceedings arising out of an application to obtain a copy therefore must be deemed to be pending before that Court. It is open to the Court to delegate its functions to somebody else and the official to whom such functions are delegated really exercises them on behalf of the Court and acts as its ministerial officer. He is custodian of the records of the Court on its behalf and therefore any application made to that official must also be deemed to have been made to the Court.

In the present case no question arises even of such delegation because the application was made to the officer-in-charge of the Copying Department who happened to be also the Presiding Officer of the Court which decided the suit. Even if it be held that the application was made and was put before the official concerned as a Registrar of the Small Cause Court who ex-officio was in charge of the Copying Department, then the Registrar was acting as a ministerial officer of the Court concerned, and in that capacity he did not exercise any executive functions in the matter of granting of the copies but the judicial functions of the Court concerned under O. 20, R. 20, which are subject to the control of the superior Courts. I, am therefore, clear that the offence, if any, committed by the petitioner was committed in connexion with proceedings in a Court and consequently a complaint was necessary by virtue of Ss 195 and 476, Criminal P. C. I also hold that the only Court competent to file a complaint was the Court of Subordinate Judge, 4th Class. or the Court to which such Court is subordinate.

In view of what I have stated above and the peculiar attitude taken up by the petitioner in this case, I do not think I would be justified in exercising my discretionary jurisdiction by quashing the proceedings in this case. Whatever might have been said about the action taken by the police initially, it appears that if proper proceedings are not now pending in the Court of the Magistrate, it is due to the self-contradictory attitude taken up by the petitioner. It is open to him to raise any objection that there may be as to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate before him, and, as I am not at present cognizant of the exact proceedings that are being taken against the petitioner or of the nature of the complaint that now has been made against him, I do not feel justified in quashing such proceedings. I dismiss this petition.

Judgment.—The parties are Kambohs residing in Amritsar city. The dispute is about a house left by one Mian Singh, father of the plaintiff who is his daughter. The defendants are near collaterals of the deceased. The daughter plaintiff claimed to be entitled to succeed to the house on the ground that the family was governed by Hindu law and that the property was self-acquired property of her deceased father.

The trial Court held that the daughter was entitled to succeed, because the house was not ancestral landed property and, therefore, the entry in the Riwaj-i-am did not apply to this case. It relied on Gujar v. Sham Das (1), Achha v. Gaman (2) and Mahomed Hayat Khan v. Sandhe Khan (3).

On appeal by the defendants collaterals, the learned District Judge held that Mahomed Hayat Khan v. Sandhe Khan (3) governed the case and that even under the general customary law daughters could succeed to it in preference to collaterals.

The defendants have come on second appeal, having obtained a certificate from the learned Additional District Judge. On behalf of the appellants it has been contended that there are rulings of this Court namely, A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 142, Labh Singh v. Mt. Mango (4), Nadhen Singh v. Mt. Rajo (5) of which A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 142 relates to Kambohs wherein it was held on the authority of this very Riwaj-i-am that daughters are excluded from succession even to self-acquired property. Reference is also made to a judgment on the record by the then District Judge Mr. Brasher subsequently referred to in A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 142.

On behalf of the respondent it is contended that the Riwaj-i-am does not apply to urban house property and for this reliance has been placed on Mahomed Hayat Khan v. Sandhe Khan (3) Ghulam Mahomed v. Bhura (6) and civil appeal No. 2206 of 1922, a Division Bench ruling. All these cases, however, refer to the question of the onus in view of the general custom as regards urban house property not connected with ancestral land which had been alienated by the then proprietor. Questions of alienation and questions of succession are different, and I am unable to see that the Riwaj-i-am does not apply to all property of all kinds whether situate in a town or whether situate in a village. The distinction about the right to alienate ancestral moveable obviously does not apply to a question of succession. The point, however, is not entirely free from difficulty, and it has also been contended that the Riwaj-i-am with reference to this particular question has not been placed on the record. However, the Riwaj-i-am is given in detail in Labh Singh v. Mt. Mango (4), and it should be a mere piece of formality to require that the appellant should put the Riwaj-i-am on the record before referring to it. The Riwaj-i-am obviously was in the minds of all the parties and no prejudice is caused to the plaintiffs, because, as pointed out by the trial Court, it had warned the parties to produce all the evidence necessary on the point. I, therefore, hold that this argument and the judgment of the District Judge based on Mahomed Hayat Khan v. Sandhe Khan (3) have no force in face of the Riwaj-i-am.

It is next contended that it has been proved that Mian Singh, the deceased father, had settled in Amritsar and followed the occupation of trade and had presumably given up the customs of Kambohs who follow agricultural pursuits and therefore, the Riwaj-i-am did not govern him. I have been through the evidence on the record and it is clear to me, as held by the trial Court, that there is no good evidence to show that the father of Mian Singh ever resided in Amritsar. There is evidence to show that Mian Singh himself resided at Amritsar where he carried on trade in cows and buffaloes. There is evidence, however, also to show that originally he lived in Bharu village and that even after taking up residence in Amritsar he took land on lease for the purposes of cultivation at village Bharu and at village Sultan-wind. The trial Court accepted this evidence as more reliable than that produced by the plaintiff, and I see no reason to dissent from that finding. I, therefore, hold that it is not proved by the plaintiff on whom the onus lay in the circumstances that Mian Singh had abandoned the customs governing the Kambohs of villages, for the customs, if any, governing the Kambohs of Amritsar or the personal law of the parties if that is followed by the Kambohs who have been long residents in Amritsar.

For these reasons, I accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. In the circumstances, I leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Note.—I must note that I declined to allow counsel for the respondents to contend that the Riwaj-i-am unsupported by instances opposed to the general custom did not shift the onus in view of Labh Singh v. Mt. Mango (4) and Jugal Das v. Mt. Jasodhan Bai (7).

[P 764 C 1]

N. C. Pandit—for Appellants.
Mukand Lal Puri—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The only question which is raised in this second appeal before me is the question of limitation. In the trial of the case an objection was raised by the defendant that the plaintiffs' suit was barred by time. The trial Court framed an issue on the question of limitation and placed its burden on the defendant, and finally held in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed the suit. On appeal by the defendant the District Judge held that the burden of proving that the suit was within time was on the plaintiffs. He, however, considered that as both the parties had led evidence on the question of the plaintiffs' age which was the determining factor on the question of limitation, the wrong allocation of the burden of proof by the trial Court was immaterial and therefore declined to remand the case as prayed for by the plaintiffs and proceeded to decide the question of limitation on the evidence which was already on the record and thereupon held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that their age was such as to entitle them to claim that the suit was within limitation.

Before me it is contended that the burden of proof lay on the defendant. I am unable to agree in this contention. It was for the plaintiffs to establish that their suit was within limitation. Normally it would have been barred by time, but for the alleged minority of the plaintiffs. I consider, therefore, that the view of the District Judge that the burden of proof lay on the plaintiffs is correct.

I am not, however, prepared to agree with the learned Judge that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a remand after he had changed the burden of proof. The counsel for the respondent has cited certain authorities in support of the District Judge's view that where parties have led evidence on a particular issue, the wrong allocation of burden of proof does not entitle the party on whom such burden of proof is subsequently placed to claim a remand. This rule, in my opinion, cannot be held to be inflexible, but its applicability must depend upon the facts of each particular case, the nature of the point involved and of evidence given by both parties. There may be cases where the person on whom the burden of proof lay gave evidence in support of his allegations which on the face of it is of no value and the other party did not consider it necessary to take up the time of the Court by producing the whole of the evidence which he could produce to rebut the allegations of the other side. In this case, in my opinion, the plaintiffs did not produce the whole of the evidence which they could produce if the burden of proof had initially been placed upon them. I consider, therefore, that they are entitled to an order of remand

I accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the District Judge and remand the case to the trial Court with directions to take evidence of the parties on the question of limitation assuming that the burden of proving that the suit is within time is on the plaintiffs and then to decide the suit on its merits. The costs of the proceedings hitherto taken will abide the result. The Court-fee on the memorandum of appeal will be refunded to the appellants.

Second Appeal No. 2425 of 1927, Decided on 16th May 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Delhi, D/- 12th April 1927.

Punjab Courts Act, S. 42—Course of appeal is determined by the original character of the plaint—Civil P. C. S. 102.

The course of appeal is determined by the character of the plaint as originally made and is not affected by the plaintiff subsequently dropping or being unable to seek relief with regard to a part of his claim : A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 440 and 22 M. L. J. 47, Rel. on.

A plaintiff sued a defendant for ejectment. But later he withdrew his prayer for ejectment and confined his claim merely to recovery of rent, the amount of which was below Rs. 500/- It was contended that no second appeal could lie from the decision in that case because after the withdrawal of the prayer for ejectment the suit assumed a character of a small cause.

Held : second appeal would lie. [P 765 C 2]

Bishan Narain—for Appellant.
Muhammad Amin and Nanwa Mal—Respondents.

Judgment.—The relevant facts relating to the dispute, which has given rise to this second appeal, appear to be as follows :

Muhammad Ahmad, respondent was the original owner of a house which he sold to the plaintiff Benarsi Das in 1921 and of which he became the tenant under the vendee for the date of the sale. The house was actually in the possession of Muhammad Hussain and Muhammad Akbar respondents, who were originally tenants under Muhammad Ahmad and who after the sale continued to occupy it as his sub-tenants. Muhammad Ahmad made default in payment of rent to Benarsi Das who had from time to time to sue him for recovery thereof. All these suits except the one relating to rent from 26th July 1923 to 18th February 1924 were decreed. In that suit Muhammad Ahmad pleaded that rent up to 15th January 1924 had been paid to the plaintiff and in support of his contention produced a receipt by plaintiff giving him a complete discharge up to that date. He also stated that the two sub-tenants Muhammad Hussain and Muhammad Akbar had attorned direct to the plaintiff. The Judge, Small Cause Court, held the payment proved and dismissed the suit on 26th March 1924.

Shortly afterwards, the plaintiff relying on the defence of Muhammad Ahmad sued Muhammad Hussain for ejectment and recovery of rent from 8th January 1924 to 30th August 1924. Muhammad Hussain pleaded that no pivity of contract existed between him and the plaintiff and that he along with Muhammad Akbar was holding the house under Muhammad Ahmad. On this Muhammad Ahmad and Muhammad Akbar were impleaded as defendants. The trial Court upheld Muhammad Hussain's plea that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between him and the plaintiff and dismissed the suit as against him and Muhammad Akbar, but passed a decree for Rs. 115-8 against Muhammad Ahmad alone. It may be mentioned that during the pendency of this suit the plaintiff had sold the house to Muhammad Hussain and had made a statement that in view of this sale he could not get any relief by way of ejectment as originally prayed and that that part of his claim might be dropped.

On appeal by Muhammad Ahmad the learned Additional District Judge was of opinion that the decision of the Small Cause Court Judge dated 26th March 1924, though "not strictly" operating as "res judicata" was on general principle a bar to the plaintiff's claim against Muhammad Ahmad, and that for this reason and also because Muhammad Ahmad had not been originally impleaded as a defendant no decree could be passed against him. He further held that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the plaintiff and Muhammad Hussain, and accordingly he accepted Muhammad Ahmad's appeal and dismissed the suit in its entirety. Benarsi Das has come up in second appeal to this Court.

A preliminary objection is raised by Mr. Nanwa Mal on behalf of Muhammad Ahmad respondent that as the plaintiff had before the decision of the suit by the trial Court, withdrawn his prayer for ejectment and had confined his claim merely to recovery of rent, the amount of which was below Rs. 500, no second appeal lies under S. 42, Punjab Courts Act. In my opinion this objection has no force and must be overruled. In Ganapa Putta v. Hammad Saiba (1) and Cheriyonni v. Nherapoyill (2), it was held, under somewhat similar circumstances, that the course of appeal is determined by the character of the plaint as originally made and is not affected by the plaintiff subsequently dropping or being unable to seek relief with regard to a part of his claim. I agree with this view of the law, and hold that the second appeal is competent.

Coming now to the merits, the plaintiff-appellant is not entitled to go behind the finding of fact concurrently arrived at by both the Courts below that no privity of contract existed between him and Muhammad Hussain or Muhammad Akbar, and I cannot interfere with the dismissal of the suit as against them.

As to Muhammad Ahmad, I am, however, of opinion that the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge cannot be sustained. The decision of the Judge, Small Cause Court, dated 26th March 1924, is admittedly not res judicata under S. 11, Civil P. C. But it has been held to be a bar to the trial of the issue relating to the rights of the plaintiff and Muhammad Ahmad, under the general principles of res judicata. That decree, however, really proceeded on the finding that payment of rent, up to 15th January 1924 had been proved and the receipt produced by Muhammad Ahmad was genuine. There was no well-considered decision on the question of the termination of the relationship of landlord and tenant between plaintiff and Muhammad Ahmad and any remarks incidentally made therein by the Judge, Small Cause Court, cannot operate as a bar to that point being re-agitated in this suit. After going through the record I agree with the finding of the trial Court that Muhammad Ahmad continued to be the tenant of the plaintiff and was bound to pay the rent.

(1) A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 440=49 Bom. 596.
(2) [1911] 22 M. L. J. 47=13 I. C. 174=(1911) 2 M. W. N. 587.

There is no force in the further argument of the learned District Judge that in the plaint as originally lodged no relief had been claimed against Muhammad Ahmad. He had been impleaded subsequently on Muhammad Hussain's objection and a decree could be passed against him on the finding that he was still the tenant of the house under the plaintiff.

I cannot, however, see how the plaintiff could be granted a decree for rent from 8th January 1924 to 18th February 1924, for which his suit has been, rightly or wrongly, dismissed by the Judge, Small Cause Court.

The result is that I accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court and in lieu thereof pass a decree for Rs. 98 as rent from 19th February 1924 to 13th August 1924 in favour of the plaintiff against Muhammad Ahmad defendant. The suit against Muhammad Hussain and Muhammad Akbar is dismissed.

Muhammad Ahmad must pay the costs of the appellant throughout.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 755 of 1927, Decided on 28th Nov. 1927, from order of Addl. D. J. Lahore, D/-26th Feb. 1927

(a) Execution—Suit for declaring execution proceedings null and void does not lie until the decree itself is set aside.

No Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit to declare proceedings in execution of a decree passed by a competent Court null and void so long as the decree itself is not set aside either on appeal or in a regular suit on the ground of fraud under conditions under which the law allows such a decree to be so challenged. [P 768 C 1]

(b) Decree—Setting aside—Suit does not lie to set aside a decree on the ground of its being wrong—Appeal is the remedy.

A party to a decree is not entitled to maintain a suit to have the decree set aside on the ground that it was wrong. His remedy is to have it set right in appeal: 41 Cal. 990 and 43 Cal. 217, Rel. on. [P 768 C 2]

(c) Civil P. C., S. 104 (2)—Suit dismissed on a preliminary ground—Case remanded in appeal—Appeal preferred on the remand order—Appeal was held competent as the order of the trial Court was not one rejecting the plaint.

A suit was filed for declaring ineffectual certain execution proceedings. It was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that plaintiff having preferred no appeal from the decree, the present suit was not maintainable. On appeal by the plaintiff the District Judge held that the suit was maintainable and remanded the case under O. 41, R. 23. Against this order of remand a miscellaneous appeal under O. 43, R. 1 (u), was preferred by the defendant. It was contended that the order passed by the trial Court was really one rejecting the plaint, that the appeal to the District Judge by the plaintiff must be considered to have been filed under O. 43, and no further appeal lay against the order of the District Judge as laid down in S. 104, Cl. (2).

Held: that the order of the trial Court was not one rejecting the plaint, under O. 7, R. 11, but was clearly one dismissing the suit on a preliminary point and the appeal preferred by the plaintiff himself to the District Judge was filed not under O. 43, Civil P. C., but under S. 96 against the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge and therefore the appeal was competent. [P 768 C 1]

Dittu Mal and his son Chhajju Mal who was a minor at that time. On 8th April 1922 Dittu Mal acting for himself and as the guardian of his minor son Chhajju Mal executed a deed transferring these mortgagee rights to Bhai Amar Singh, appellant. On 2nd January 1924 Bhai Amar Singh instituted a suit for recovery of the money due to him on foot of the deed, dated 8th April 1922 and impleaded as defendants the original mortgagors Salig Ram and Sham Das and their mortgagees Dittu Mal and Chhajju Mal. In these proceedings Dittu Mal was originally shown as the guardian ad litem of his minor son Chhajju Mal. He however, refused to act and later on the ahlmad of the Court was appointed as his guardian ad litem. On 28th August 1927 a preliminary decree was passed in favour of Bhai Amar Singh recoverable from the house property mortgaged. Against this preliminary decree an appeal was preferred to the District Judge by Dittu Mal and by his son Chhajju Mal through the ahlmad of the Court of Bawa Jhanda Singh who had been appointed as guardian ad litem in the Court below, and Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, advocate, was engaged to argue this appeal on behalf of both appellants. Among the grounds urged before the learned District Judge was the non-liability of the minor Chhajju Mal on foot of the mortgage-deed which purported to have been executed by Dittu Mal for himself and his minor son Chhajju Mal. On 24th January 1925 the learned District Judge, Mr Rangi Lal, affirmed the preliminary decree passed by Bawa Jhanda Singh against all the defendants including Chhajju Mal minor with a slight modification which is not material for the dispute now before me.

Shortly afterwards, on 16th June 1925 Chhajju Mal who had by this time become a major instituted a suit for a declaration that the preliminary decree passed against him by Bawa Jhanda Singh on 28th August 1924 had been fraudulently obtained and was not binding on him. This suit was dismissed on 21st August 1925 on the ground that the preliminary decree passed by Bawa Jhanda Singh had merged in the decree passed by Mr. Rangi Lal and that, therefore, no suit was competent to have that decree set aside. An appeal against this decision filed by Chhajju Mal was also unsuccessful.

The decree-holder then took proceedings to have the preliminary decree made final. Chhajju Mal filed a number of objections against the decree being made final, pleading, inter alia, that the preliminary decree had been passed against him in proceedings in which he was not properly represented and that his father had been colluding with the decree-holder. These objections were heard and overruled by Mr. Muhammad Akbar, Subordinate Judge, on 12th November 1925 it being held that such objections could not be taken in proceedings to have the preliminary decree made final but that the remedy of Chhajju Mal (if any), was by way of a suit. A final decree was accordingly passed against all the judgment-debtors including Chhajju Mal on 12th November 1925. No appeal was filed by Chhajju Mal against this decree.

The decree-holder then started proceedings to execute his decree with a view to realize the amount that had been found due to him and prayed for sale of the mortgaged property. But before much progress could be made in those proceedings Chhajju Mal instituted another suit on 18th March 1926 giving the history of the previous litigation and praying that a declaratory decree may be granted in his favour against the defendants holding that whatever proceedings have been taken on the application dated 1st January 1926 in execution, on the basis of preliminary and final decrees are null and void and ineffectual on the rights of the plaintiffs and the person and property of the minor are not liable for the payment of the decree in file No. 5/1924.

It will be seen that the prayer in the plaint did not ask for the setting aside either of the preliminary or the final decree on the ground that fraud had been committed by the decree-holder against the plaintiff in proceedings prior to and terminating with the final decree but all that was sought to be declared ineffectual against the plaintiff was the proceedings that had been taken in execution of the final decree above mentioned.

This suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge (Lala Pars Ram) on two grounds: firstly, that the preliminary decree could not be challenged in face of the dismissal of the plaintiff's previous suit on 21st August 1925; and, secondly, that the plaintiff having become a major at the time when proceedings for passing the final decree were going on and having unsuccessfully filed objections to the decree being made final and having preferred no appeal therefrom the present suit was not maintainable. On appeal by the plaintiff the Additional District Judge, Lahore, held that the suit was maintainable and remanded the case under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., for disposal on the merits.

Against this order of remand a miscellaneous appeal under O. 43, R. 1 (u) has been preferred by the defendant Bhai Amar Singh. A preliminary objection is taken by Mr. I. C. Chopra against the maintainability of this appeal on the ground that the order passed by the trial Court (Lala Pars Ram) was really one rejecting the plaint, that the appeal to the Additional District Judge, by the plaintiff must be considered to have been filed under O. 43 and no further appeal to this Court lies against the order of the District Judge as laid down in S. 104, Cl. (2), Civil P. C. In my opinion there is no force in this objection. The order of the trial Court was not one rejecting the plaint, under O. 7, R. 11, but was clearly one dismissing the suit on a preliminary point and the appeal preferred by the plaintiff himself to the Additional District Judge was filed not under O. 43, Civil P. C., but under S. 96 against the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge. I must, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection and hold that the appeal is competent.

On the merits both counsel have addressed me at length and after giving full consideration to their arguments I am of opinion that the decision of the learned District Judge cannot be sustained As already pointed out the present suit is not one by the plaintiff to have the preliminary or the final decree set aside on the ground of fraud but the prayer is to have the proceedings started on 1st January 1926 to execute the final decree declared null and void. It is obvious that no Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit to declare proceedings in execution of a decree passed by a competent Court null and void so long as the decree itself is not set aside either on appeal or in a regular suit on the ground of frand under conditions under which the law allows such a decree to be so challenged. The plaintiff's suit must, therefore, fail on this short ground.

I do not, however, wish to rest my decision on a mere technicality. Mr. I. C. Chopra has contended that in the body of the plaint the plaintiff-respondent had stated that the proceedings terminating in the preliminary decree were tainted with fraud and that though the last paragraph of the plaint is not happily worded, it must be taken to mean that the plaintiff really wanted to have the decrees set aside on the ground of fraud perpetrated on him by his father during his minority in collusion with the decree-holder. But as already pointed out the plaintiff had become a major at the time when the proceedings to make the preliminary decree final were going on and had actually appeared in Court and raised the very same objections on which he now bases the present suit. Mr. Muhammad Akbar, Subordinate Judge, who was properly seized of the case, gave a decision on those objections on 12th November 1925. Whether that decision was right or wrong it is not for me now to decide. The plaintiff does not allege that any fraud was perpetrated in the proceedings pending before Mr. Mohammad Akbar. Even if we were to suppose that the order passed by him was wrong the remedy of the plaintiff was to have it set right in appeal. He certainly is not entitled to maintain a suit to have the decree set aside on the ground that it was wrong. If any authority were needed for this proposition, reference may be made to the judgments of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Nanda Kumar v. Ram Jiban (1), and Kusadhaj Bhakta v. Broja Mohan Bhakta (2), in which the question has been discussed at length. I am, therefore, of opinion that the Subordinate Judge had come to a correct conclusion and had rightly dismissed the suit. Accordingly I accept the appeal, set aside the decision of the learned Additional District Judge and restore that of the trial Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit. The appellant will get his costs in all Courts.

Agha Haidar, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought for damages for a libel published in the issue of a certain newspaper called the Akali, dated 6th April 1921. The defendants to the suit are Narindar Singh, the alleged publisher, Abdur Rahman, the alleged printer, and Pratap Singh, the alleged editor of the said newspaper. The rest of the defendants 4 to 15, were, according to the plaintiff, members of the Managing Committee and proprietors of the Akali Newspaper. Narindar Singh and Pratap Singh were confined in jail at the time of the institution of the suit and did not put in appearance in the case, nor filed any written statement, and the suit against them proceeded ex parte. Abdur Rahman the printer only put in a written statement, and as regards para. 2 of the plaint which contained the allegation that Narindar Singh, defendant 1, was the publisher, Abdur Rahman, defendant 2, was the printer and Pratap Singh defendant 3 was the editor, he pleaded that the said paragraph was correct in so far that on the date in question Narindar Singh was the publisher, Pratap Singh was the editor and he (Abdur Rahman) was the printer. As to the rest of his pleas we are not concerned in the present appeal.

About the time of the publication of the alleged libel there was a movement for reform among a certain section of the Sikhs in respect of the Gurdawaras. The Akalis represented the reform party and were trying to take possession of the Sikh Gurdawaras with a view to manage them according to their own ideas. Matters came to a head in the disturbances which took place on 20th February 1921, when a number of Sikhs lost their lives within the precincts of the Gurdawara at Nankana. The history of this unrest and its tragic end need not be recapitulated here, as it is given in full detail in the judgment of a criminal appeal, delivered by this Court aud printed in Mahant Narain Das v. Emperor (1). As already stated, the alleged libel, according to the plaintiff was published in the issue dated 6th April 1921, of the newspaper called the Akali. It made a number of charges of negligence and carelessness against the plaintiff in that it was stated that the plaintiff did not take sufficiently prompt and vigorous steps in order to prevent the bloodshed at the Nankana Gurdwara. The statement, however, with which we are concerned in the present appeal, is to be found at p. 5 of the printed paper book and is also embodied in Cl. 3 (b) of the plaint. It runs as follows:

> It is a general rumour that Mahant Narain Das made Mr. King his own by some secret means, and for this reason Mr. King used to back the Mahant and for this very reason gave the letter to faithless Kartar Singh Bedi, otherwise what need had Mr. King in becoming a legal adviser of the Mahant. There is no doubt that there is something wrong in the matter. It may be that we might fail to prove it, but we are convinced that Government officials had a hand in the Nankana Tragedy.

This extract, according to Mr. King, contained innuendoes suggesting that he (Mr. King) had accepted a bribe or illegal gratifications from Mahant Narain Das, and that as a consequence of this act he secretly helped the Mahant in breaking the law and thus aided and abetted the person who brought about the massacre of the Sikhs at Nankana. Mr. King, who was a senior distinguished member of the Civil Service and at the time occupied a high and responsible position of the Commissioner of Lahore Division naturally resented this statement and brought the present suit, as already stated, on 12th July 1921. The trial Court held that Mr. King had been negligent in the performance of his duties, that this interference was neither unreasonable nor unfair, and that the defendants, therefore, did not exceed the bounds of fair comment in publishing a statement to this effect. It, however, held that the passage reproduced in para.3 (b) of the plaint was libellous. This point which was in fact conceded by counsel for the defendants in the Court below was not seriously urged by counsel for the appellants before us. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit as regards defendants 4 to 15. He, however, decreed the plaintiffs' claim and awarded him the substantial sum of Rs. 8,000 against defendants 1, 2 and 3 with proportionate costs. Mr. King has not filed any appeal as regards the dismissal of his claim against defendants 4 to 15, nor has he challeged by way of cross appeal or objections the amount of damages awarded to him by the Court below.

The appeal in this Court purports to have been filed on behalf of three persons namely, Narindar Singh, Partap Singh and Abdur Rahman, by Mr. Sant Singh, vakil for the appellants. The late Mr. M. S. Bhagat signed the memorandum of appeal for the said Vakil, Mr. Sant Singh. On a reference to this vakalatnama filed with the memorandum of appeal in this Court, we find that Mr. Sant Singh was engaged to appear only for and on behalf of Narindar Singh and Partap Singh. At the time of the argument Mr. Amar Nath Chona asked that he was appearing on behalf of Abdur Rahman, but as there was no proper presentation of the appeal on behalf of Abdur Rahman, Mr. Amar Nath Chona had no locus standi to represent him. Accordingly as no appeal on behalf of Abdur Rahman is legally before us, we have no alternative except to dismiss the appeal so far as he is concerned.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri appeared for the other two appellants, namely, Narindar Singh and Partap Singh, the alleged publisher and editor respectively, of the newspaper Akali. He raised two points: (1) that there was no evidence that Narindar Singh was the publisher and Partap Singh was the editor of the newspaper in question on the date on which the alleged libel was supposed to have been published in the Akali newspaper; and (2) that the amount of damages was excessive.

As regards (1) it may be noted that in dealing with the liability of defendants 1 to 3 the learned Subordinate Judge has disposed of the matter in a somewhat perfunctory manner. He says that > it is admitted by defendant 2 namely Abdur Rahman, that he is the printer and defendants 1 and 3 are the publisher and the editor respectively, and the liability of all these is indisputable.

This is a very unsatisfactory way of dealing with an important point in the case. Now, so far as defendant 1, namely Narindar Singh, is concerned, there is no satisfactory evidence on the record that he was the publisher of the newspaper Akali on 6th April 1921. A copy of a newspaper, which purports to be the Akali of 6th April 1921, is on the record, but neither is it exhibited, nor have the requirements of O. 13, R. 4, Civil P. C., been complied with in respect of the same. Beyond the fact that this particular document contains words indicating that its publisher was a person named Narindar Singh we know nothing. Reference has been made to the statement of one Lala Mehar Chand (P. W. 1) in order to show that defendant 1 was the publisher of the newspaper Akali dated 6th April 1921. This evidence, in our opinion, is wholly inadequate to prove that defendant 1 Naraindar Singh, was in reality and in fact the publisher of the newspaper, a copy of which containing the libel in question is on the record. We could not trace Ex. P. 1 to which reference is made in the evidence of this witness. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is entirely erroneous when he tries to prove the liability of defendants 1 and 3 from the plea contained in the written statement of Abdur Rahman. This statement may be evidence against Abdur Rahman, but it cannot in any way touch defendants 1 and 3. Abdur Rahaman has not appeared as a witness in the case at all and defendants 1 and 3 had no opportunity of .cross-examining him. In any case this admission in his pleadings is not tantamount to proof of the facts stated therein and is certainly no evidence against his co-defendants. If any authority were needed for this elementary proposition it is to be found in Aumirto- lall Bose v. Rajoneekant Mitter (2) where at p. 219 it is laid down that an admission, or even a confession of judgment, by one of several defendants in a suit, is no evidence against another defendant. Mr. Noad, the learned Government Advocate who conducted the case on behalf of Mr. King, the plaintiff, in the trial Court and appeared for him in this Court as well, referred to O. 8, R. 5, Civil P. C, and boldly urged that the allegations contained in the plaint about defendant 1 being the publisher and defendant 3 being the editor, such allegations not being denied specifically or by necessary implication by the said defendants, may be taken to have been admitted by them. The whole of his argument on this part of the case is met by the case reported in J. B. Ross & Co. v. C. R. Scriven (3) where three learned and distinguished Judges laid down that O. 8, R 5, of the Code did not apply to a case where the defendant had not put in any written statement at all and further that the verification of the plaint was not evidence on which a suit could be decreed whether the adversary did or did not appear.

Mr. Noad also relied upon O. 9, R. 11, Civil P. C., and argued that, according to this rule, the suit had been rightly decreed against defendants 1 and 3. O. 9, R. 11, cannot possibly be invoked in support of the proposition urged by Mr. Noad and need not be discussed any further.

As regards Partap Singh, the alleged editor, there is no evidence whatsoever, on the record that he was the editor of the Akali on the date of the publication of the libel. Even the copy of the newspaper, which is placed on the file, unexhibited and unendorsed as it is, does not contain any reference to Partap Singh much less to his being the editor of the newspaper. Reliance was placed on the statement of D. W. 1 namely Sardar Buta Singh, which is to be found at p. 18 of the printed paper book in order to prove that Partap Singh was the editor of the Akali on 6th April 1921. This witness in cross-examination stated that Mangal Singh, the former editor of the Akali, and Partap Singh, his successor, stated to him that one Sundar Singh was the proprietor of a certain newspaper. We know nothing whatsoever about the period of which this witness is speaking. This witness, therefore, does not help the plaintiff in any way.

Thus there is no evidence on the record to establish the liability of defendants 1 and 3 who are not proved to have been the publisher and the editor respectively of the newspaper Akali on the date in question. In this connexion it would be useful to refer to the statement of Mr. King who gave evidence in the case on his own behalf. He stated that he did not know when the articles were published and as to who were at the time its proprietors and editor This is very clear and in conjunction with what has been stated above, completely destroys the plaintiff's case as against defendants 1 and 3.

It may be noted that at the time of argument Mr. Noad explained to this Court and pointed out that in the trial Court his attention was only concentrated upon defendants 4 to 15 whose liability he was trying to establish and that he did not take particular care to prove the allegations of the plaintiff as regards defendants 1, 2 and 3. In the end he asked this Court that the case should be remanded and further opportunity be given to establish the case against defendants 1 and 3 by proving that they were respectively the publisher and the editor of the offending newspaper on the date in question. With the conduct of the case by Mr. Noad in the trial Court we are not concerned, but certainly we are not prepared to give the plaintiff at this late stage a fresh opportunity of proving his case against defendants 1 and 3 and thus treat what had happened in the trial Court more than five years ago as something in the nature of a preliminary canter.

Having regard to the view taken by us on the first point raised by the learned counsel for the appellants, it is not necessary for us to go into the question as to whether the amount of damages awarded by the Court below is excessive or not.

The result is that there being no proper appeal on behalf of Abdur Rahman, the decree passed by the lower Court against him will stand and his appeal is dismissed. The appeal of Narindar Singh and Partap Singh is allowed and the decree of the trial Court passed against

(a) Civil P. C., O. 38, R. 5 — Property already disposed of cannot be attached—Property to be attached should be specified with an estimated value thereof—Property of defendant is contemplated and not of the parties jointly.

Rule 5 contemplates attachment of property which the defendant is about to dispose of or remove from the jurisdiction of the Court and not of the property already disposed of. It requires the applicant to specify the property to be attached and the estimated value thereof and security can only be taken for producing and placing at the disposal of the Court such property or the value of the same or such portion thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree. The rule contemplates attachment of property belonging to defendant and not of property belonging jointly to parties.

Order.—This is an application under O. 38, Rr. 1, 2 and 5 and S. 151, Civil P. C., for security being taken from respondent for satisfaction of any decree that may be passed against him.

The application relates to a suit for accounts and partition of property, which was instituted as long ago as 1909. On 15th March 1914, a preliminary decree was passed by the trial Court, which was subsequently set aside by this Court, but eventually restored by the Privy Council on 2nd January 1924. The case having been sent to the trial Court once more for the passing of a final decree, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge held that the applicant was entitled to an account up to the date of the final decree and not merely up to 15th May 1914, the date of the preliminary decree. From this decision the respondent has filed an appeal which is pending in this Court and proceedings have been stayed with respect to the taking of accounts subsequent to 15th May 1914.

The present application is mainly based on the grounds that the respondent is deliberately delaying the proceedings, withholding account books, and that with the intention of delaying execution of any decree that may be passed against him, he has disposed of all the assets of the shops, converted them into cash, and removed the same along with the account-books to the Jaipur State. These allegations are supported by an affidavit. The respondent has filed a counter-affidavit in which he has denied the allegations, though he has admitted that the business was closed and the goods were sold. He, however, alleged that this was done as the business was being carried on at a loss and debts had to be paid. The respondent denies that any goods or money relating to the joint family partnership is now in his possession.

A preliminary objection has been raised that no application under O. 38, Rr. 1, 2 or 5 or under S. 151, Civil P. C., is maintainable on the grounds mentioned above. Arguments have been addressed at some length and after considering them, I am of opinion that this objection must prevail. Rr. 1 and 2, O. 38, Civil P. C., are clearly irrelevant and this was conceded. As regards R. 5 of the same order, it seems to me that the rule really contemplated attachment of property which the defendant is about to dispose of or remove from the jurisdiction of the Court. In the present instance, the allegation is that the respondent has already disposed of the property and removed it from the jurisdiction of the Court. The rule requires the applicant to "specify the property to be attached and the estimated value thereof"; and security can only be taken for producing and placing at the disposal of the Court such property or the value of the same or such portion thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree. In the present instance, the applicant has not specified any property and has applied generally for security being taken for satisfaction of any decree that may be passed against the respondent. No such application seems to me to fall within the scope of O. 38, R. 5, Civil P. C. It has also been held in Damodar v. Panna Lal (1), that the rule contemplated attachment of property belonging to the defendant and not of property belonging jointly to the parties. In the latter case, the proper remedy according to the above ruling is to apply for the appointment of a Receiver under O. 40. An application for appointment of a Receiver was a apparently made when an appeal was pending in this Court in 1917, and it was only by an agreement between the parties that the appointment of the Receiver was eventually kept in abeyance and security was taken from the respondent pending decision of appeal: vide order of Shah Din, C. J., dated 30th March 1917.

The learned counsel for the applicant urged that security should at any rate be taken under S. 151, Civil P. C., but was unable to cite any authority to support his contention. The Code provides for security for satisfaction of decree being taken in certain cases only. There was a remedy open to the applicant, viz., the appointment of a Receiver pending final decision of the suit, but the applicant did not avail himself of it at the proper time. In these circumstances, I do not think S. 151, Civil P. C., can be resorted to to support the present application.

I accordingly dismiss the application, but in view of all the circumstances make no order to costs.

Judgment.—Mt. Raj Devi a Khatri widow, who was a teacher in the Municipal Girls School at Sialkot, died leaving some money in the Municipal Provident Fund. The plaintiff, the Dev Samaj, Lahore, through its Secretary, Lala Janki Das, applied to the Municipal Committee for payment of the amount to her credit in the Provident Fund on the ground that the Samaj in question was a nominee of the deceased. As there was no written nomination paper the Committee directed the plaintiff to produce a succession certificate. This was applied for, while at the same time the brother of Mt. Raj Devi's husband and her brother's son, defendants 1 and 2, also applied for succession certificates. The certificate was granted to defendant 1. Before he could draw the money from the Municipal Committee the plaintiff instituted the present suit for a declaration that the Samaj was entitled to recover the Provident Fund money in that it was the nominee and in that this nomination amounted to a will in favour of the Samaj. There was no plea taken that, apart from the nomination, there was an oral will, indicating clearly that the money was to go absolutely to the Samaj as a bequest. Defendant 1 pleaded that the plaintiff was not nominated by the deceased. He further pleaded that if she did nominate the plaintiff as an heir she had no right to do so. Another plea taken was a will set up by one of the defendants in his own favour.

The trial Judge held that there was evidence of nomination of the plaintiff by the deceased, but that such nomination could not be regarded as a will or as a gift or as a trust. Without deciding therefore, issues 2 and 3 he dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs. On appeal the learned District Judge held that the nomination of the plaintiff amounted to a will and that the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to the money subject to the decision of issues 2 and 3. The appeal was accordingly accepted and the suit remanded for decision on the remaining issues. Against this decision defendant 1 has appealed.

It has been clearly held in A. I. R. 1924 Sindh, p. 57 that a nomination, like the present, of a person to receive Provident Fund money from a Corporation was not a will, a gift or a trust in favour of the nominee and that on the subscriber's death the Fund formed part of his undisposed of estate. It is unnecessary to repeat the elaborate reasons given in the judgment in question with which I respectfully agree. The object of the nomination system is merely to designate some person to whom the Provident Fund money due to the subscriber may be paid on her death and who can give a valid acquittance. The Calcutta case reported in Kalisadhan Mitra v. Prafulla Chandra (1) does not help the plaintiff, for in that case the declaration filed purported to be a will and to dispose of the money absolutely in favour of a nominee. I have, therefore, no hesitation in accepting the appeal and in dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout. I might note that it was unnecessary for the trial Court to issue an injunction upon the Committee not to pay the money in this case till the decision of the suit ; for the plaintiff was amply protected by the security given in the succession certificate proceedings, while it is the right of the person holding a succession certificate to draw the money for which the certificate has been granted.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 1876 of 1927, Decided on 21st May 1928, from order of Addl. District Judge, Delhi, D/· 24th April 1927.

C., O.* 41, R. 23 — Suit for compensation for non-delivery against railway—Trial Court dismissing suit for want of "wilful neglect" leaving undecided question of damages—Lower appellate Court holding that "wilful neglect" was proved and remanding on question of damages—Remand is under O. 41, R. 23, and not under S. 151.

A Railway Company was sued for compensation for non-delivery of consignment. The trial Court dismissed the suit on a preliminary point, on the finding that there was no "wilful neglect" on the part of the Railway Company and left undecided the issue as to the question of damages. On appeal the lower appellate Court held that "wilful neglect" was proved and remanded the case.

C. H. Carden Noad—for Appellants.

Kishen Dyal—for Respondent.

Bhide, J. — This is a second appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of Rs. 1,300 as compensation for non-delivery of a consignment booked from Howrah to Delhi. The consignment was booked under risk-note B. The trial Court held that plaintiff has failed to prove that the goods were lost owing to "wilful neglect" on the part of the defendant Railway Company and on this finding dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned District Judge held that "wilful neglect" on the part of the Railway Company was established inasmuch as the goods were sent in a wagon which was sealed only with tin shackles but not locked. The appeal was accordingly accepted and the case remanded to the trial Court for disposal of issue relating to the question of damages, which had been left undecided by that Court. From this decision, defendant has filed an appeal.

On behalf of the respondent three preliminary objection: were raised firstly that the appeal was not properly instituted inasmuch as it was presented by the Government Advocate without any power of attorney from the Railway Administration; secondly, that the remand by the lower appellate Court was under S. 151, Civil P. C., and not under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., and hence no appeal lay; and lastly that no second appeal was competent as the finding on the question of "wilful neglect," which is sought to be agitated in this appeal, was one of fact.

There is no force in any of these contentions. The East Indian Railway Company which was the original defendant has now come under State management. According to Cl. 6, S. 3, Railways Act, the expression "Railway Administration" in the case of a State managed railway includes the "Government." The present appeal has been preferred by the Government Advocate on behalf of the Government as the successor of the East Indian Railway Company. The Government Advocate is ex-officio Government Pleader for the whole of this province and under R. 2, O. 27, Civil P. C., all Government pleaders are authorized to act for Government as their "recognized agents" without any power of attorney : vide Notification 22963 dated 10th December 1917, in the Punjab Gazette dated 14th December 1917.

The second contention viz., that the order of remand was under S. 151, Civil P. C., does not appear to be correct. The suit had been dismissed by the trial Court on a preliminary point on the finding that there was no "wilful neglect" on the part of the Railway Administration and the issue as to the question of damages had been left undecided. The lower appellate Court held that "wilful neglect" was proved and remanded the case for disposal on the remaining issue on which no finding had been given by the trial Court The remand was obviously under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C, though the order and the rule have not been specifically mentioned.

The last preliminary objection was that the finding on the question of "wilful neglect" by the lower appellate Court was one of fact and hence no second appeal lay. This contention does not seem sound. "Wilful neglect" is not a concrete fact which can be proved by direct evidence, but is a matter of inference and the term has a special significance in law. The finding is based on certain facts and the question for determination is whether those facts are sufficient to establish "wilful negligence" in law. It is well established that the proper legal effect of proved facts is a question of law (cf. Nafar Chandra v. Shukur Sheikh (1).

Coming to the merits of the case : the learned Government Advocate has argued that the learned District Judge's view that the fact that the wagons were merely sealed and not locked amounts to "wilful neglect" is not correct and that the plaintiff has failed to prove that there was any "wilful neglect" on the part of the railway in the proper sense of that expression Mr. Kishen Dyal, on behalf of respondent, on the other hand, contended, that it was incumbent on the railway to prove in the first instance that the goods were lost, and, that until and unless such loss was established, the respondent could not be called upon to prove that the loss was due to wilful neglect on the part of the railway. It appears that the trial Court had first framed an issue on this point, viz : "'Were the goods lost in transit"—the burden of proof being laid on the defendant railway. Later on, however, the Court cancelled this issue in view of certain rulings, which were to the effect that it is not necessary for the railway to prove loss in such cases and that an allegation or admission of loss is sufficient. The learned District Judge also upheld this decision on the authority of A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 596.

It has been strenuously argued by Mr. Kishen Dyal, that the ruling A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 596 does not lay down correct law.

The interpretation of the word "loss" as used in Ch. 7, Railways Act, and the risk-notes has been the subject of considerable divergence of judicial opinion and the question is one of some difficulty. The judgment of the learned Judge who decided A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 596 purports to follow Hill Sawyers and Co. v. Secy. of State (2), a Full Bench decision of this Court. As regards certain other authorities to the contrary which were cited before him, he considered that they were no longer good law in view of the decision of the House of Lords in Smith v. G. W. Ry. Co. (3). He also cited A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 40, a ruling by the learned Chief Justice of this Court in support of his view.

As regards the case Smith v. G. W. Ry. Co. (3), it may be pointed out at once that it is easily distinguishable from the present case, inasmuch as the plaintiff himself in that case admitted the loss of the goods and the only question for consideration was whether the railway was bound to account for the loss in such circumstances : vide judgment of Lord Wrenbury at the end of that case. It was held that the railway was not bound to account for loss in the circumstances and that the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove wilful neglect on the part of the railway. The same appears to have been the position in A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 40, which follows Smith v. G. W. Ry. Co. (3).

The Full Bench ruling Hill Sawyers and Co. v. Secy. of State (2), in which it was held that the word "loss" as used in Ch. 52, Railways Act, includes loss to the owner is undoubtedly in favour of the appellants, but the case dealt with therein was one under S. 80, Railways Act, and related to "misdelivery" of goods. As pointed out by Fforde, J. in a recent Division Bench case Haryana Cotton Mills Co. v. B. B. & C. I. Ry. Co. (4) it cannot be taken to be binding so far as a case of "non-delivery" is concerned, the remarks therein relating to cases of wrongful detention being in the nature of obiter dicta. In Haryana Cotton Mills Co. v. B. B. & C. I. Ry. Co. (4) the plaintiff's claim was based on alleged "non-delivery," but it was held that this did not amount to an "allegation" of loss within the meaning of S. 77, Railways Act. The present case stands practically on the same footing. The plaintiff in the present case did not allege or admit that the goods were lost. No doubt there has been loss to the owner owing to non-delivery, but the question is whether this is the sense in which the word "loss" can be said to be used in risk-note B, under which the railway administration is seeking protection.

It seems scarcely possible that the word "loss" could have been used in this sense in the risk-note. The object of the risk-note is to limit the liability of the railway as a bailee as laid down in Ss. 151, 152 and 161, Contract Act : vide S. 72, Railways Act. The words "loss, destruction and deterioration" have been used in Ss. 152 and 161, Contract Act, and appear to have been taken therefrom in S. 72, Railways Act, and from the latter in the risk-notes issued under that section. Ss. 152 and 161 must therefore be looked to for guidance as to the correct interpretation of the word "loss" as used in the risk-note under consideration.

Section 152, Contract Act, is as follows :

> The bailee in the absence of any special contract, is not responsible for the loss, destruction or deterioration of the thing bailed, if he has taken the amount of care of it described in S. 151.

The word "loss" appears to be clearly used here in the sense of something that happens to the goods, as distinct from any loss or injury sustained by the owner It certainly could not be the object of this section to lay down that provided the bailee takes as much care of the goods as laid down in S. 151, he will not be liable to the bailor for loss sustained by him on account of non-delivery of the goods.

Section 161 runs as follows :

> If, by the default of the bailee, the goods are not returned, delivered or tendered at the proper time, he is responsible to the bailor for any loss, destruction or deterioration of the goods from that time.

This section speaks of "any loss, destruction or deterioration" of the goods from the time that the goods are not returned, delivered, or tendered. This also seems to indicate clearly that the "loss" contemplated is something distinct from non-delivery and takes place subsequently.

(2) A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 1=2 Lah. 133 (F.B.).
(3) [1922] 1 A.C. 178.

The net result of S. 152 and S. 161 appears to be that up to the time for delivery, the bailee is protected against loss, destruction and deterioration of the goods, provided he takes as much care of them as a prudent man would of his goods in the same circumstances. But if delivery is not made at the proper time by any default of the bailee, then the bailee will be responsible for any loss, destruction or deterioration taking place thereafter, no matter whether he has or has not taken adequate care of the goods. Neither of these sections appears to deal with loss sustained by the owner by "non-delivery" as such. The duty of a bailee to return the goods at the proper time is laid down in S. 160, Contract Act, and a suit based on "non-delivery" is really based on a breach of the duty as laid down in that section. But S. 160 is not mentioned in S. 72, Contract Act, and it would, therefore, appear that a Railway Administration is not entitled to limit its liability under that section by any agreement embodied in a risk-note.

A suit based on "non-delivery" must therefore be distinguished from a suit based on "loss, destruction, or deterioration" of the goods. Incidentally it may be pointed out that in the Limitation Act also these are treated as distinct classes of suits and are included in separate articles : vide Art. 30 and Art. 31, Sch. 1, Lim Act. The word "loss" has a double significance as pointed out in Haryana Cotton Mills Co., v. B. B. & C. I. Ry. Co. (4), and this appears to have led to some confusion. The word "loss" may mean disappearance or passing out of control, or the injury resulting therefrom to the owner.

However, the juxtaposition of the words "loss, destruction, and deterioration" is significant and seems to indicate clearly that the word "loss" is used in the risk-note in the former sense. If the word "loss" were intended to include "loss to the owner," the words "destruction" and "deterioration" would be redundant, as "loss" in that sense would necessarily result from any destruction or deterioration of the goods.

For the above reasons, it seems to me that when the plaintiff sues on the allegation of the "non-delivery" only, and has not admitted loss of the goods, the Railway Administration, must first of all prove that there has been "loss" of the goods, so as to bring their case within the scope of the special contract embodied in the risk-note and when this is done the onus will shift to the plaintiff to prove that the loss was due to "wilful neglect" on the part of the railway or its servants, etc., according to the terms of the risk note. The burden as regards the proof of loss will, of course, usually be light and formal evidence on the point may be sufficient to shift the onus to the plaintiff. At the same time the matter is of some importance from the plaintiff's standpoint as he will be able to cross-examine the witnesses produced by the railway and may be able to elicit facts showing "wilful neglect" on the part of the railway or its servants.

The above view is amply supported by a number of recent decisions of most of the High Courts in India : see e. g., E. I. Ry. Co. v. Jogpat Singh (5), Gopi Ram Behariram v. Agents E. I. Ry. & O. and R. Ry. (6), G. I. P Ry Co. v. Jesraj Patwari (7), Ganesh Das Bisheshwar Lall v. E. I. Ry. Co. (8), Puran Das v. E. I. Ry. Co. (9), A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 95, Secy. of State v. Jiwan (10), E. I. Ry. Co. v. Kishan Lal Tirkha Mal (11), E. I. Ry. Co. v. Makhan Lal Bindeshri Prasad (12) A. I. R. 1925 All. 675, A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 745 ; A. I. R. 1923 Nag. 223.

In my judgment, the trial of the issue as to whether the goods were lost in transit, which was framed but subsequently cancelled by the trial Court, was necessary on the pleadings of the parties in this case. I would, therefore, accept this appeal, set aside the decree of both the Courts below and remand the whole case to the trial Court under O. 41, R. 23, Civil P. C., for being tried de novo in the light of the above remarks. Parties will be at liberty to produce any evidence they desire upon issues 3, 4 and 5, which alone now remain for decision. Stamp

Ghulam Mohi-ud-Din—for Appellants.

Moti Sagar—for Respondent.

Agha Haidar, J.—The facts necessary for the decision of this appeal are given in the judgment of the learned Single Judge of this Court, dated 16th April 1828, and need not be recapitulated here at any length. The parties have been engaged in an unfortunate litigation which, after varying fortunes, terminated for the time being with the order of the Privy Council, dated 21st November 1922, Under this order the suit of Khawaja Hamid (plaintiff) was decreed and decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab, dated 2nd January 1917, with certain exceptions, which are not material for the purposes of the present appeal, was set aside and in lieu thereof it was declared that the plaintiff was the sajjadanashin and a decree was granted for delivery of possession to him of the wakf properties in suit and furthermore an injunction was granted restraining the respondent 1, namely, Khawaja Mahmud, from interfering with the management of the wakf properties by the appellant namely, Khawaja Hamid, or with the exercise by him of his rights and duties as sajjadanashin. There are certain other provisions in this decree, but we are not concerned with them. The successful plaintiff, namely, Khawaja Hamid, took out execution of his decree, and the litigation arising out of these execution proceedings was fought out up to the Letters Patent Bench of this High Court and ended in favour of the decree-holder. The last order of the High Court is dated 19th March 1925.

On 29th November 1926 the plaintiff Khawaja Mahmud and others instituted a suit out of which the present appeal has arisen. With the merits of this suit we are not concerned at this stage and any observations which we might make are not intended in any way to affect or influence the normal course of this suit. It is necessary, however, for the disposal of the present appeal to refer to the reliefs claimed by the plaintiffs in the present suit. Para. 9 of the plaint runs as follows:

> It is, therefore, prayed that a declaratory decree in favour of the plaintiffs against the defendant may be passed in the following manner:
>
> (a) That the plaintiffs have got a right to enter the khankah and its compound freely without any restriction and at all times in order to view the tombs of their holy ancestors, and while sitting there to derive spiritual benefits by means of darud, wazaif and prayers and giving away of alms,
>
> (b) that during the month of Holy Muharram they should perform the customary rights of using flowers and sandalwood ; and
> (c) that, after their death, they may be buried inside the mausoleum and in the precincts thereof close to the tombs of their ancestors, and that a temporary injunction may be granted restraining the defendant from preventing the plaintiffs from exercising the above rights at any time.

Soon after filing the plaint, the plaintiffs made an application for a temporary injunction in which, with the obvious exception of the general relief and the prayer for permanent injunction, the other reliefs in the plaint are copied out verbatim. But unfortunately the affidavit filed along with the application for temporary injunction is worthless and cannot be looked into. The application, however, unsupported as it is by a proper affidavit, is wholly insufficient to justify the Court in granting the extraordinary relief by way of temporary injunction in terms of the prayer asked for in the suit itself. The learned District Judge dismissed the application holding that there was no material before him on which he could properly grant the injunction prayed for. The learned Judge of this Court, however, has accepted the plaintiffs' appeal and granted, with certain restrictions, the injunction prayed for. He has held that in the circumstances a temporary injunction may be granted to the plaintiffs against the defendant restraining the latter from preventing the plaintiffs from entering the rouza at all times one hour before sunrise up to 11 p. m. except at such times as the present defendant may fix for praying his own customary devotions at the shrine aforesaid.

Both parties were dissatisfied with this decision, and the plaintiffs and the defendant both filed appeals against it under the Letters Patent. Counsel for the plaintiffs frankly admitted that the injunction granted by the learned Judge was "unworkable." This is our view also, as it seems extremely difficult to carry out the terms of the injunction with any degree of exactitude. During the course of his judgment the learned Judge has made the following observation:

There is no material on the record before me, and none has been pointed out by counsel for either side, as to what happened during the period from 1911 to the time when the present suit was lodged. But in all the circumstances of the case, I consider I am entitled to presume that the present plaintiff continued to claim this right and in all probability exercised it with occasional hindrance from the present defendant.

In our judgment, having regard to the absence of proper materials on the record an injunction should not have been granted on the basis of mere presumptions and probabilities. The position of a sajjadanashin is well understood and has been recently clearly defined by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sri Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (1), the relevant portion being printed at pp. 511 and 512 The defendant Khawaja Hamid has been declared the sajjadanashin of the shrine and there cannot be any manner of doubt that he is fully entitled to exercise his right and to perform his duties as such sajjadanashin without any let or hindrance At the same time one of his duties no doubt is to give facilities to the devotees of the shrine to enter its precincts as well as the holy of holies at all reasonable hours, so that they may be able to perform their spiritual rites and other devotions in the customary manner. We have no doubt whatsoever that at any rate in his own interest Khawaja Hamid would not deny to the plaintiffs their right as devotees of the shrine, so long as they do not in any way trespass upon his privileges and authority as sajjadanashin. We tried, during the course of the hearing of the appeal, to see if some amicable and mutually convenient arrangement could be arrived at while this fresh litigation was pending, but the parties were in an extremely unreasonable mood and offers on both sides were made only to be immediately withdrawn. The fact, however, remains that the defendant Khawaja Hamid has secured a decree from the highest tribunal in his favour appointing him the sajjadanashin of the shrine, and the plaintiffs have not been able to satisfy us that a temporary injunction should be granted to them in the terms set out in their application.

Under these circumstances we allow the Letters Patant Appeal No. 113 of 1928, set aside the order of the learned single Judge of this Court and restore that of the trial Court. Under all the circumstances of the case and having regard to the attitude adopted by the parties, we make no order as to costs.

The Letters Patent Appeal No. 108 of 1928 filed on behalf of Khawaja Mahmud was not pressed by his learned counsel and we dismiss it. The parties would bear their own costs.

In the tribe of Niazi Pathans of Isa Khel in the district of Mianwali, if a person dies sonless leaving him surviving several brothers, some of whom are of full blood and others are of half blood, then the brothers of full blood succeed to his property to the exclusion of his half-brothers: A. I. R. 1916 P. C. 129 and 8 P. R. 1892, Rel. on. [P 784 C 2]

An admission on a pure question of law is not binding upon a party, but the question whether a particular custom does or does not prevail in any particular tribe is a matter on which the tribesmen themselves are in the best position to pronounce an opinion and a question of succession based upon custom does not stand on the same footing as the question of law. Agha Haidar, J.— I am indebted to the learned counsel for the parties for a full argument on the points which arose in this appeal.

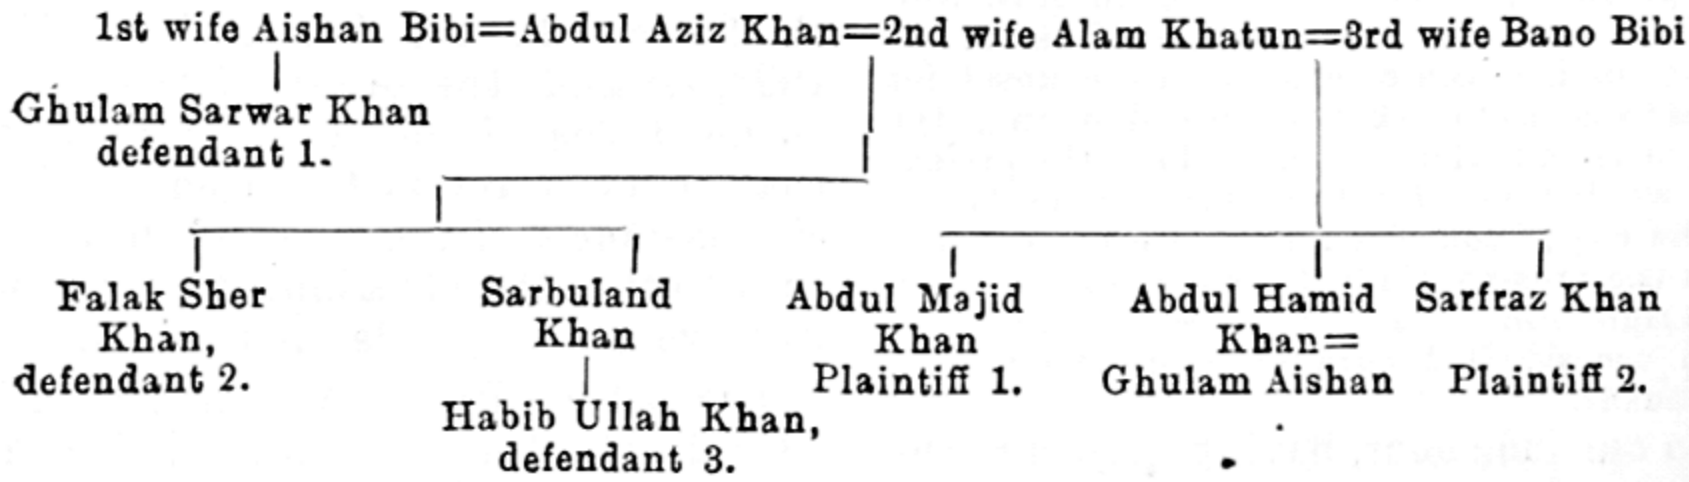
The following pedigree table is important for understanding the facts of this case:



The parties are Niazi Pathans of Isa Khel in the district of Mianwali. Abdul Hamid Khan died childless some time in 1919, and his widow, Mt. Ghulam Aishan, died soon after. Abdul Hamid Khan left property in eleven villages. On his death mutation of names took place in favour of his full brothers, namely, Abdul Majid Khan, plaintiff 1, and Sarfraz Khan, plaintiff 2, in all the villages except Jalalpur in respect of which, on the objection of the defendants mutation was effected in favour of all the brothers of the deceased in equal share. The defendants also succeeded, on review, in obtaining mutation in respect of the villages Kalvanwala, Chhina Paura and Kas Umar Khan in the names of all the surviving brothers of the deceased in equal shares.

The plaintiffs thereupon instituted the present suit for a declaration to the effect that, according to the tribal custom, they, as full brothers, succeeded to the property of their deceased brother, Abdul Hamid Khan, and that the defendants, who were only the half-brother of the propositus, had no right to succeed. The suit relates to mauzas Jalalpur, Kalvanwala, Chhima Paura and Kas Umar Khan. The plaintiffs have produced a number of witnesses in support of the custom. Beyond the evidence of one or two witnesses, who quote some instances in support of the custom, the oral evidence on the whole is not of much value. But the plaintiffs mainly rely upon the Riwaj-i-am of 1878 and also upon instances supplied by certain mutations as well as decisions given by the civil Courts. They further rely upon admissions made from time to time by the various defendants, after the death of Abdul Hamid Khan, in various mutation proceedings. There is also an agreement, Ex. P. 4, dated 31st March 1921, in which Falak Sher Khan, defendant 2, has admitted the plaintiffs' claim on the basis of the family custom. The defendants, on the other hand, place reliance upon the Riwaj-i-am of 1908. They further pleaded that they had never made the admissions relied upon by the plaintiffs, and that in fact they were not even present when these admissions are supposed to have been made. They have also produced a number of witnesses in support of the custom upon which they (the defendants) rely. As regards the agreement P-4, dated 31st March 1921, they pleaded that it was obtained by the exercise of undue influence. It may be noted that no evidence has been led in support of the plea of undue influence. In fact beyond the bare statement of Falak Sher Khan given by him on 16th May 1922, that the agreement was got executed by the exercise of undue influence, there is no other evidence in support of this plea. This statement, I need hardly observe, is no evidence in the case against the plaintiffs, as they had no opportunity of cross-examining Falak Sher Khan when he made it. The trial Court decreed the plaintiffs' claim, holding that the custom relied upon by the plaintiffs had been proved. The defendants have come up to this Court in appeal.

As already stated, the plaintiffs rely upon the Riwaj-i-am prepared at the first regular settlement of the year 1878. It is marked as Ex. P-9 and is printed at pp. 58-60 of the record. It recites the "old custom" that if a man dies leaving him surviving sons by different wives and one of these sons dies without any male issue, then the uterine brothers are entitled to inherit his property. Thus the brothers descended from the same father but from a different mother do not inherit. There is a rider added that > if in a family half-brothers have greater influence and power than brothers born of the same mother, succession has taken place contrary to the above custom in that family.

But it is pointed out that these cases where all the brothers have succeeded in equal shares are exceptional. Then a number of instances are cited in support of the general custom, that the full blood excludes the half blood among brothers.

In the second settlement of the district in the year 1908 a Riwaj-i-am was prepared by Pandit Hari Kishan Kaul, Settlement Collector, Mianwali, which records that, among Isa Khel Pathans, full brothers and half brothers succeed equally. No instances are cited. It is further recorded that > the Jats also state the same custom, but several instances have been quoted amongst them in which full brothers have succeeded to the exclusion of half brothers.

The net result is that the Riwaj-i-am of 1878 records a general custom in which the full blood, excluded the half-blood though there are certain indications in the document showing that there have been a few departures from the settled rule of succession incorporated therein. It should further be noted that the Riwaj-i-am of 1878 specially refers to the Niazi Khel tribe to which the parties belong. In the Riwaj-i-am for the year 1908, although it is mentioned that among the Isa Khel Pathans full brothers and half-brothers succeeded equally, signs are not wanting that in the neighbouring tribe of Baluchis Awans and Jats, this custom was not universally accepted, and these communities, according to the Riawaj-i-am, were equally divided on this question, successions having taken place both ways.

The Riwaj-i-am, according to the leading case on the subject reported in Beg v. Allah Ditta (1), is the most important document as it is a record of the customs prevailing among the particular communities with which it deals. It, however, raises only a presumption in favour of a particular custom, that presumption being subject to rebuttal.

In Rahiman v. Bala (2), it is laid down that the production of a later Record-of-Rights containing entries opposed to the earlier one would no doubt be some proof of a change, but there would then merely be a balance of evidence on either side, and it could not be said that the later record destroyed or abrogated the earlier one. Now, as already stated, the Riwaj-i-am of the year 1878 contains an old and well-established custom supported by a number of instances, though it refers to some unspecified aberrations from the general rule.

The Riwaj-i-am of 1908, though clear as regards the Isa Khel Khans, contains internal evidence that, so far as other communities similarly circumstanced, were concerned the custom was not by any means settled and was in fact in a state of flux.

We have now to see how far the plaintiffs have succeeded in rebutting the evidence, such, as it is, supplied by the Riwaj-i-am of the year 1908 in support of the custom on which the defendants rely. As stated above the whole controversy reduces itself to the question of rebuttal.

Now, besides the Riwaj-i-am of 1878, we have a number of instances supplied by mutations and judicial decisions.

The earliest of these is Ex P. 18 dated 9th June 1873. Its importance lies in the fact that it is of a date prior to that of the Riwaj-i-am of the first settlement of the year 1878. It is laid down in that judgment that the general custom prevailing in the tribes of Isa Khel, etc., branches of Niazi, is that if a man dies sonless after his marriage his heritage goes to his real brother only. This custom is in accordance with the Mahomedan law and worth being enforced. It is further laid down that when no particular custom is proved to be prevalent, the question should be decided with reference to the general custom governing the Niazi tribe and Mahomedan law according to which, after the death of a brother his real brother (as contradistinguished from a half-brother) succeeds to his property. There is no doubt that under the Mahomedan law uterine brothers exclude brothers of half-blood by the same father in succession to their deceased brother who dies childless. This being the personal law of the parties, it is not unnatural that it should influence the customary rule of succession among these Pathan tribesmen.

The next important decision is Ex. P. 15 dated 31st October 1914. The parties in this case were the Niazi Pathans of Isa Khel and the dispute was between the full blood and half blood, as in the present case. Issue 1 was :

> Are the defendants not entitled to inherit the land in dispute according to the rule of succession and it was held that this issue must be decided in favour of the plaintiffs, in that the defendants being half-brothers could not get a share equal to that of the full brothers. The Riwaj-i-am of 1878 was referred to as suporting the plaintiffs' claim.

Then we come to an important decision, Ex. P. 14, dated 28th August 1920, in which there were cross pre-emption suits and Sarbuland Khan and Abdul Majid Khan were arrayed on opposite sides. The suit arose out of a sale effected by Sarfaraz Khan. Abdul Majid Khan, plaintiff in one of these suits, alleged that he being the full brother of the vendor succeeds to the exclusion of Sarbuland Khan who is only a half-brother. On the pleadings of the parties an issue was raised :

> Issue No. 3.—Whether the plaintiff in each case has got a right of pre-emption superior to the vendees and the rival pre-emptor.

The suit brought by Abdul Majid Khan failed on the question of waiver; but it is important to note that the Subordinate Judge in his judgment adverted to the admission made by Sarbuland Khan in the mutation proceedings to which a reference shall presently be made and held that "it goes against him to a very high degree." It was further held that the contention of Abdul Majid Khan that his right was superior as a brother of the whole blood was strong.

Copies of certain other mutation orders had been placed on the record by the plaintiffs; but they need not be discussed as they seem to be based upon a misapprehension of the terms of the Riwaj-i-am on which they ostensibly rely. In the same manner the two orders passed by Mr. Thevaskis, Collector of Mianwali, dated 11th March 1921, and the 21st March 1921, respectively, may be ignored since they are mutually destructive in that they lay down contradictory views and cannot, therefore, be treated as instances in favour of either party.

I may also refer to Ex. P. 11 which is a judgment delivered by a Bench of two learned Judges of this Court, and is dated 17th February 1922. The case came from Mianwali in second appeal. The parties were Jats, and, as already mentioned, half of these people dissented from the general rule of succession promulgated in the Riwaj-i-am of the second settlement of 1908. In that case, as in the present case, the plaintiffs claimed to inherit from their deceased uterine brother to the exclusion of their half-brothers by a different mother. Their Lordships observed :

> In view of the fact that in 1878 the custom by which the whole blood excluded the half blood was emphatically affirmed and that in 1908 the assertion that the custom had been reversed was found to be not in accordance with facts, have the defendants established that the old custom has become obsolete, and the learned Judges answer the question by observing that > no custom has the force of law unless it is ancient and certain and that the custom recited by the plaintiff was in full vogue in 1878 and has been observed since that date in several contested cases, and they were therefore unable to hold that the defendants have succeeded in establishing that the old custom is obsolete.

They, accordingly, upheld the custom relied upon by the plaintiffs and decreed their claim. This case has an important bearing upon the point before me and goes a long way to support the plaintiffs' contention in so far as it is based upon the Riwaj-i-am of 1878, reinforced by the instances mentioned above.

But the most important evidence of rebuttal on which the plaintiffs rely is supplied by at least five admissions made by the defendants on various occasions in which they unequivocally expressed their assent to the custom on which the plaintiffs based their claim.

(i) On the 9th December 1919, in the mutation proceedings of mauza Sarkia (Ex. P. 2) Falak Sher Khan stated:

The custom prevailing amongst us, the Khans, is that if there are brothers from one and the same mother and one of them dies sonless, his heritage goes to his own brothers from the same mother.

He further said:

Amongst us Ghulam Sarwar is from one mother and Muhammad, Sarbuland and I are from another mother, while Abdul Majid Khan, Abdul Hamid Khan and Sarfaraz Khan were from the third mother. On this statement it was ordered that entry as to the heritage be made in favour of Abdul Majid Khan and Sarfaraz Khan in equal shares.

(ii) A similar admission was made in the mutation proceedings of mauza Kacha Nur Zaman Shah (Ex. P-22) on the same date by Ghulam Sarwar Khan and Falak Sher Khan who stated:

The custom prevailing in our family is that if a son of a step-mother dies sonless, his heritage does not devolve upon the sons of his step-mother. Hence the estate in question may be entered in the names of Abdul Majid Khan and Sarfaraz Khan in equal shares.

Accordingly an entry was made in the names of Abdul Majid Khan and Sarfaraz Khan in equal shares.

(iii) Again, on the 27th February 1920, Ghulam Sarwar Khan, in the mutation proceeding relating to Mauza Chhina Paura (Ex. P-3), stated:

According to our custom and usage real brothers on mother's side have a right. Hence we, the other brothers, have no right.

It was ordered by the revenue Court that Abdul Majid Khan and Sarfaraz Khan be shown as reversioners in equal shares in place of Mt. Ghulam Aishan Bibi, the deceased widow of Abdul Hamid Khan.

(iv) On the 27th January 1920, Sarbuland Khan and Falak Sher Khan in mutation proceedings relating to mauza Isa Khel (Ex. P-1) made a similar statement, and the revenue officer accordingly made an order that the names of Abdul Majid Khan and Sarfaraz Khan may be entered in equal shares in respect of the property of the deceased Abdul Hamid Khan.

(v) There is an application by way of supplementary statement in certain partition proceedings relating to mauza Kas Umar Khan (Ex. P. 10) made by Falak Sher Khan and Ghulam Sarwar Khan on the 12th December 1919, the relevant portion of which runs as follows:

As to the land sought to be partitioned, Abdul Hamid Khan died sonless. Thereafter his widow, who succeeded to his property, died. Now, according to our custom, the share of Abdul Hamid Khan devolves upon Abdul Majid Khan and Sarfaraz Khan who are his real brothers from his mother. They are step-brothers of both of us. According to our custom step-brothers on the mother's side cannot get a share of their sonless brother by the same father.

It is important to note that two of these statements containing admissions by one or more of the defendants were made in connexion with two of the villages, namely, Kas Umar Khan and Chinna Paura, which are in dispute in the present suit, and all of them were made sometime either in 1919 or in 1920 after the death of Abdul Hamid Khan when the rights of his reversioners had materialized, so that whatever statements the defendants made, were against their own interest. In this connexion the agreement dated 31st March 1921, (Ex. P-4) may be adverted to in which Falak Sher Shan, defendant 2 reiterated the custom on which the plaintiffs rely in the following terms:

Mutation in respect .of lands have also been effected in their (the plaintiff's) favour. The reason is that the custom prevailing in our family is that the heritage of a deceased brother devolves upon his brothers from the same mother and that his stepbrothers do not get anything. I admit the said custom of my own accord and declare that it is correct. Mutation in respect of the land situate at mauza Jalalpur has been wrongly effected in my favour and in that of my other stepbrothers. I have no objection if the said mutation entry is rectified and my name is struck off. According to the principles of justice, I have no right in the said land.

No doubt an admission cannot be treated as an estoppel and it is always competent to the person who makes an admission against his own interest, to come forward and to explain to the Court the circumstances under which he had made the admission and to give his reasons why it is not binding upon him. But if an admission against his own interest is made in unequivocal terms by a party in respect of a matter in which he is directly conferred and he omits to give any explanation, then that admission can certainly be used against him, for, as has been laid down by the highest authority, a man's admission, if unexplained, is the best piece of evidence against him. Instead of offering any explanation of their admissions the defendants have not even ventured to enter into the witness box. All that they have done is that they have raised an extremely dishonest plea in para. 6 of their written statement wherein they state:

that the mutations of the aforesaid villages were not made in their presence, nor did they admit the rights of the plaintiffs.

This plea remains unsupported by any evidence whatsoever. On the other hand, we have the evidence of Chaudhri Khushi Muhammad, Naib Tahsildar, who very clearly states that all these statements were made in his presence and that he personally knew Sarbuland Khan who was a Sub-Registrar, Ghulam Sarwar Khan who was a Zaildar, and Falak Sher Khan who also held some such appointment. We have no reason whatsoever to doubt the veracity of this witness who is a Revenue Officer and occupies a responsible position. This plea itself sufficiently discredits the defence put forward by the defendants.

I may further note that it was strongly urged by counsel for the appellants that an admission on a question of law is not binding on a party, and that the question of succession in the present case although based upon custom, stands on the same footing as a question of law, and, therefore, the admission made by the defendants cannot be held binding upon them. I am prepared to concede that an admission on a pure question of law is not binding upon a party; but the question whether a particular custom does or does not prevail in any particular tribe is a matter on which the tribesmen themselves are in the best position to pronounce an opinion. When questions relating to tribal customs have to be determined, the parties try to secure the evidence of the members of that tribe and even of people living in its neighbourhood, as regards the existence or non-existence of the custom. The people of a particular community are the best and most trustworthy repositories of the traditions which go to constitute a particular custom prevailing in that community and their evidence, therefore, is of very great moment.

In the present case no one could have been in a better position to speak about the existence or non-existence of the custom relied upon by the plaintiffs than the persons belonging to the plaintiffs' family himself, namely the defendants. The defendants, who are not ignorant rustics but men of intelligence who occupy a certain position in their society, made these admissions deliberately when matters had come to a head on the death of Abdul Hamid Khan. The irresistible inference is that they spoke the truth while making those admissions and had no intention of contesting settled facts. Apparently some evil-disposed persons have induced them to put forward a false claim and they are now seeking to resile from what they had solemnly stated in the various proceedings before the revenue authorities.

The defendants produced a certain amount of oral evidence of the usual type. The witnesses do not quote any instances. The defendants have also relied upon para. 26, Rattingan's Digest of Customary Law, 10th edn.; but there is nothing in that paragraph which militates against the position taken up by the plaintiffs. As already stated, the Riwaj-i-am of 1908 raised a presumption, and in my opinion the plaintiffs have sufficiently rebutted the presumption thus raised against them.

On a consideration of the evidence on both sides I feel satisfied that the plaintiffs have succeeded in establishing the custom that in the tribe of Niazi Pathans of Isa Khel in the District of Mianwali, if a person dies sonless leaving him surviving several brothers, some of whom are of full blood and others are of half blood, then the brothers of the full blood succeed to his property to the exclusion of his half-brothers.

In this view I would affirm the decree of the Court below and dismiss the defendants' appeal with costs.

First Appeal No. 807 of 1922, Decided on 30th April 1928, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Hissar, D/- 4th January 1922.

(a) Pre-emption—Joint sale deed—No specification of shares to be taken by vendees nor a specification of the amount to be paid by them—Plots not of equal quality—Transaction was held to be indivisible—Association of strangers in the plot could not defeat the rights of plaintiffs to pre-empt them.

In case of sale of certain plots there was neither a specification of the shares to be taken by the vendees in the property nor a specification of the amounts to be paid by them. The deed specified only the area sold to each of the vendees, but made no mention of the price to be paid by him. All these plots were not of the same quality; and some of the vendees were strangers.

Held: that the price to be paid by each of the vendees was not a matter of mere calculation and must not be deemed to be proportionate to the area to be taken by him. Therefore the proprietors having associated strangers with them in the purchase could not defeat the rights of the plaintiffs to pre-empt them.

A decree passed after the death of a party to the suit or appeal is not an absolute nullity. Such a decree is not void nor is it open to collateral attack but it is erroneous and liable to be set aside. The mistake can be rectified if the Court sets aside the proceedings taken after the death of the deceased party and directs that the case be retried in the presence of his legal representative from the stage which it had reached immediately before the date of the death. This procedure places all the parties to the litigation in the same position in which they would have been if the legal representative had been impleaded at the proper time. 33 Mad. 167, Rel. on. [P 786 C 2]

Mehar Chand Mahajan and J. N. Aggarwal—for Appellants.

Moti Sagar, Kishen Dayal and M. L. Puri—for Respondents.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On 11th June 1919, Mrs. Ruby Williams sold 2,801 bighas and 16 biswas of land, in the village Raman, the Hissar district, to 96 persons for Rs. 26,000. Four suits of pre-emption were brought in respect of the sale, three by certain proprietors in the village and the fourth by occupancy tenants. All these suits have been decreed by the trial Judge who has directed the property to be divided among three sets of proprietors in proportion to the areas owned by them in the village. In the event of their default, the occupancy tenants would be entitled to pre-empt the property on payment of the price mentioned the sale-deed.

The vendees have appealed to this Court, and Mr. Moti Sagar for the respondents raises the preliminary objection that Puran, one of the occupancy tenants in whose favour a joint decree for pre-emption was granted by the Subordinate Judge, died more than a year ago, and that his legal representatives have not been brought on the record. These facts are not contested by Mr. Mehr Chand for the appellants, and there can be no doubt that, as Puran was one of the joint decree-holders in the suit brought by the occupancy tenants, the appeal has abated in so far as it affects the decree passed in the suit brought by the occupancy tenants.

Coming now to the appeal against the proprietors : we are asked by the learned counsel for the appellants to hold that the sale sought to be pre-empted was a divisible transaction, and that the document embodying the sale should be treated as evidencing 96 sales in favour of 96 vendees. The learned counsel consequently argues that, as some of the vendees were themselves proprietors in the villages, they were entitled to defeat the suits for pre-emption in so far as the areas sold to them were concerned, and that they were not affected by the rule which lays down that a pre-emptor by associating with himself a stranger in the purchase reduces himself to the status of that stranger and loses his preferential right to purchase the property. Our attention has been invited to a large number of rulings bearing upon the vexed question of whether the mere specification in the sale-deed of the shares of the vendees in the property sold is sufficient to make the transaction a divisible one, or whether it is necessary that there should be a specification of not only the shares to be taken by the vendees, but also of the amounts to be respectively paid by them. The Allahabad High Court has taken the view that a specification of the share of each vendee in the property sold makes the transaction a divisible one, but this rule has not been adopted by the Punjab Chief Court. It is, however, unnecessary to choose between the rival views, because a perusal of the sale-deed in the present case shows that there is neither a specification of the shares to be taken by the vendees in the property nor a specification of the amounts to be paid by them. The deed specifies only the area sold to each of the vendees, but makes no mention of the price to be paid by him. There can be no doubt that all these plots were not of the same quality, and it cannot, therefore, be said that the price to be paid by each of the vendees was a matter of mere calculation and must be deemed to be proportionate to the area to be taken by him. In these circumstances the transaction must be held to be an indivisible one, and the proprietors having associated strangers with them in the purchase cannot defeat the rights of the plaintiffs.

Nor do I think that the vendees have succeeded in establishing their plea of waiver. The witnesses produced by them seek to prove that, on 24th May 1919, the property was sold by a private auction, and that all the villagers including the plaintiffs, were present at the time of the auction, and that some of the plaintiffs actually took part in counting the money paid by the vendees to the vendor. The evidence relied upon in support of the plea of waiver is vague and inconclusive, and I do not think that it can be reasonably held that the defendants have succeeded in proving any act or omission on the part of the plaintiffs such as would amount to a complete waiver of their right of pre-emption.

Mr. Mehr Chand for the appellants also contends that Nathu, son of Ram Dial, one of the vendees, died before the institution of the suit, and that his representative was never brought on the record. This contention proceeds upon a misapprehension of facts. A perusal of the record shows that Nathu died after institution of the suit, and that an application to implead his son as his legal representative was duly made by the plaintiffs and granted by the Court.

It appears that another vendee, Chuni Lal by name, died on 8th July 1921, during the pendency of the suit in the trial Court; and that his legal representative was not brought on the record. The learned counsel for the appellants urges that the failure of the plaintiffs to implead the legal representative resulted in the abatement of the suit. It is, however, clear that the decrees granting pre-emption was made by the trial Judge on 4th January 1922, before the expiry of six months (which was the period applicable at that time to an application to implead the legal representative of a deceased defendant) from the date of the death of Chuni Lal and it cannot be said that the suit had abated as against the deceased. The decree was, no doubt, passed against the defendants, one of whom had died before the date of the decree, and the question for consideration is whether it should be treated as a nullity.

I do not think that the decree can be treated as a nullity in the sense that it can be ignored altogether. As pointed out in Goda Coopooramier v. Soondarammall (1), a decree passed after the death of a party to the suit or appeal is not an absolute nullity. Such a decree is not void nor is it open to collateral attack, but it is erroneous and liable to be set aside.

The mistake can be rectified if the Court sets aside the proceedings taken after the death of the deceased party and directs that the case be retried in the presence of his legal repesentative from the stage which it had reached immediately before the date of the death. This procedure places all the parties to the litigation in the same position in which they would have been if the legal representative had been impleaded at the proper time.

In the case before us we find that, on 21st June 1921, after the defendants had produced the whole of their evidence, Chuni Lal absented himself from the Court, with the result that the trial Judge passed an order that ex-parte proceedings be taken against him. As stated above he died on 8th July 1921, but neither the Court nor the plaintiffs were aware of his death, and the trial proceeded in ignorance of that fact. It is, however, admitted that the only evidence recorded after 8th July 1921 was that produced by the plaintiffs on the question of waiver; but neither party has placed any reliance upon that evidence. Indeed, the evidence adduced by both the parties on this question is wholly unsatisfactory, but the issue must be determined against the defendants on the short ground that it was their duty to establish the plea of waiver and, as they have failed to discharge the onus, it is unnecessary to refer to the evidence of the witnesses examined by the plaintiffs. It is obvious that the failure of the plaintiffs to implead the legal representative of the deceased in the trial

(1) [1910] 33 Mad. 167=3 I. C. 739=6 M.L.T. 271.

Court has not caused any prejudice to him.

It is to be observed that Chuni Lal's legal representative has since been brought on the record, and he is one of the appellants before us. In Brij Indar Singh v. Kashi Ram (2), the representatives of a deceased party were impleaded in the appellate Court, but their Lordships of the Privy Council held that > the introduction of a plaiptiff or a defendant for one stage of a suit is an introduction for all stages.

It is, therefore, unnecessary to remand the case to the trial Court for impleading the legal representative of Chuni Lal who is already on the record, and it would be a useless formality to record in his presence the evidence of the plaintiffs' witnesses which evidence does not, in any way, affect the decision of the Court on the issue of waiver and has not been relied upon by the plaintiffs themselves.

The object of setting aside a judgment pronounced against the party who died before the verdict is to give his representative an opportunity to resist the claim of the opposite party. In this case, the deceased along with the other defendants had already produced his evidence, and it would be an act of supererogation to remit the case to the trial Court which would only prolong litigation, but could not affect the decision of the case in the slightest degree.

For the foregoing reasons I dismiss the appeal with costs.

 Criminal P. C., S. 476—No complaint by Court is necessary in respect of abettors of the offence.

There is nothing to prevent the trial of an abettor of an offence committed by a party to a proceeding in Court, without a complaint by the Court under S. 476, 32 All. 74 ; 15 C. W. N. 565 ; and A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 510 ; Rel. on ; 12 Bom. L. R. 383, Diss. from. [P 791 C 2]

Mehar Chand Mahajan — for Petitioner.

Abdul Rashid and Ahmad Hassan—for the Crown.

Jai Lal, J.—This case has come before me on a petition under Ss. 491, 439 and 561-A, Criminal P. C., and S. 107, Government of India Act, made on behalf of Bewa Fakir Singh, an advocate of this Court, who is in custody of the police in connexion with a criminal case instituted against him under Ss 468 and 417, I. P. C., on a police challan.

The remedy provided by S. 491, i. e., the issue of a writ of habeas corpus, being of an exceptional nature, and as, on an examination of the application and the affidavit filed in support thereof, I considered that the petitioner could, if necessary, obtain adequate relief from this Court in exercise of its powers of revision under S. 439 Criminal P. C. I directed that notice of the application should issue to the Government Advocate. The case has now been fully argued before me on both sides and I have decided not to proceed under S. 491 but to take cognizance of the matter in exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of this Court under S. 439.

The petitioner is, as I have already stated, an advocate of this Court and in that capacity he was acting as counsel for one Devi Ditta, a judgment-debtor in a decree in favour of Mt. Massan granted by the Court of Small Causes at Lahore. Mt. Massan had Devi Ditta arrested and also had his property attached in execution of that decree. It is alleged by the prosecution that in order to deprive Mt. Massan of the benefit of her decree an application was filed in the Court of a Subordinate Judge on behalf of one Allah Ditta to file an award alleged to have been given on a reference made by Allah Ditta and Devi Ditta awarding about Rs. 5,900 to Allah Ditta against Devi Ditta. The petitioner acted as counsel for Allah Ditta in these proceedings and obtained a decree on the basis of the award against Devi Ditta. An application was then made by him on behalf of Allah Ditta for transfer of the proceedings relating to the execution of the decree of Mt. Massan and Allah Ditta to the same Court. It appears that finally the decree of Mt. Massan was purchased by Devi Ditta. It may be mentioned that the decree in favour of Mt. Massan was against one Indar Singh and Devi Ditta as principal and surety respectively.

It is alleged on behalf of the prosecution that all these proceedings relating to the reference of the alleged dispute between Allah Ditta and Devi Ditta, the application to file the award and subsequently the proceedings relating to the execution of the decree were bogus and fraudulent. It is further alleged that Allah Ditta never engaged the petitioner; he had no dispute with Devi Ditta and did not refer any dispute to arbitration and that the whole affair was manipulated by Fakir Singh and Devi Ditta in consultation with each other; and that the signature of Allah Ditta was forged on the various documents.

An incomplete challan under S. 468/417, I. P. C. was presented by the police against Fakir Singh and Devi Ditta in the Court of the Additional District Magistrate, Lahore, and the accused were arrested thereon. An objection was raised on behalf of the accused that they could not be prosecuted without the complaint of the Subordinate Judge in whose Court proceedings were taken. The Additional District Magistrate has avoided giving any decision on this objection and has postponed the case several times. In the meantime on the application of the police the Subordinate Judge has directed the filing of a complaint against Devi Ditta.

I am not concerned at this stage with the truth or otherwise of the allegations made by the prosecution against the petitioner. The only point before me is whether having regard to Ss. 195 (1) (c) and 476, Criminal P. C., a criminal case could be instituted against the petitioner without a complaint of the Court in which the proceedings in connexion with which the alleged offences were committed were taken. The petitioner's counsel has strenuously urged that the entire criminal proceedings are mala fide and that the conduct of the Additional District Magistrate, in whose Court the case is pending, has been very unfair to his client, the petitioner. But I am not concerned with this matter at this stage as it does not relate to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate.

Section 195 (1) (c), Criminal P. C., provides that no Court shall take cognizance of any offence described in S. 463, or punishable under Ss. 471, 475 or S. 476, I. P. C., when such offence is alleged to have been committed by a party in any proceedings in any Court in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such proceedings except on a complaint in writing of such Court or some other Court to whom such Court is subordinate.

The contention raised on behalf of the petitioner is twofold: (1) The section prohibits the trial not only of the parties but of the abettors and conspirators as well when the offence has been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court and, therefore, that even if it be held that Allah Ditta did not instruct Fakir Singh to take any proceedings on his behalf it was Devi Ditta who did so and Devi Ditta being a party to the proceedings the petitioner who is alleged to have abetted or conspired with him was also protected from prosecution except on the complaint of the Court concerned; and (2) that in any case according to the allegations made by the prosecution Fakir Singh was in fact a party being the principal offender and not a mere abettor, and the other persons formally named in the proceedings were either merely his tools or their names were entered without their knowledge or consent. This second contention need not detain us long. It is quite clear that the parties mentioned in the proceedings were Allah Ditta and Devi Ditta and in the eye of the law the principal offender, if at all, was Devi Ditta and the petitioner merely abetted the commission of the offence. He was neither a party to the proceedings nor was he the principal offender in the strict legal sense.

The case for the Crown, on the first contention is that S. 195 (1) (c) affords protection against prosecution, except upon the complaint of the Court concerned, to the parties to the proceeding and not to others, i. e, not to the abettors or conspirators. Several authorities were cited before me on both sides. On behalf of the Crown reliance was placed on Ghansham Singh v. Emperor (1). In that case it was held that the offences in respect of which S. 195 (1) (c) requires sanction must be offences committed by the parties to the proceedings in a Court and that there was no need of sanction to institute a criminal case against persons who were not parties to any proceedings. From the report of the case, however, it appears that there were no proceedings taken in any Court in respect of the document concerned in that case. The authority is not, therefore, directly in point.

In Debi Lal v. Dhajdhari Goshami (2), however, a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court, following Ghansham Singh v. Emperor (1), held that sanction of Court for prosecution in respect of documents produced in Court is necessary only when the offence, whether the offender is the principal or is an abettor, is committed by the parties to the proceedings and that no sanction was necessary to prosecute an attesting witness to a document proved to be forged. The facts in that case were somewhat similar to the facts of this case. It was alleged that a forged will had been brought into Court and the question was whether the attesting witness who was held to have abetted such forgery by affixing his signature could not be prosecuted without the sanction of the Court. It was held that the sanction of the Court was not necessary under the circumstances.

On the other hand the petitioner's counsel strongly relied upon Narayan Dhonddev, In re (3) which is a judgment of a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court. That case also related to a will alleged to be forged which had been produced in Court, and the question arose whether sanction of the Court was necessary in order to prosecute the attesting witness. With regard to the contention that the protection afforded by S. 118. (1) (c), Criminal P. C,. is limited to the parties to the proceedings in Court the learned Judges remarked as follows :

> Now if this plea were to be allowed it is manifest that the only result would be to allow the opponents to go behind this Court's order revoking the sanction, and by this device to institute that very prosecution which this Court has already restrained from proceeding. It seems to us that we cannot lend ourselves to proceedings of this character and that we must give effect to the order already made by this Court and must hold that the revocation of the sanction carried with it as a necessary consequence the termination of the prosecution of the petitioners. We do not find that there is any serious difficulty in coming to this view which accords, we think, with the provisions of S. 195 (1) (c), Criminal P. C., for, as we read that section the word "offence" occurring as the third word in the clause is designedly used in a somewhat abstract manner. It is the "offence" in itself, not any particular offender's offence which the section aims at and that is in accordance with S. 40, I. P. C., where offence is defined as the thing made punishable by the Code. In other words, the clause deals with the case where there is a substantive offence committed by a party to a suit. If that condition is realized then the clause enacts that no Court can take cognizance of "such offence." In this case "such offence" would mean the offence generally of forgery, and it seems to us that if the criminal Court were to try Lakshmi Bai's abettors under S. 467, it would in fact be taking cognizance of the offence as those words are used in the clause and that is the action which is specially forbidden. This reading of the section appears to us to involve no undue-straining of the language and to give a more reasonable interpretation than is arrived at by the rival construction, for, upon that construction while the prosecution of the main offender could not be instituted without a sanction, any minor aiders or abettors or accessories of his could be prosecuted without a sanction. That, we think is hardly a result likely to have been contemplated, and we observe that sub-S. (5), S. 195 appears to lend countenance to the view which we have adopted.

In this connexion reference may also be made to the remark made by the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in Bhau Vyanktesh Chakorker, In re (4) on p. 614 (of 49 Bom.) which is as follows :

> We think that S. 195 (c) is wide enough to include any document produced or given in evidence in the course of a proceeding whether produced or given in evidence by the party who is alleged to have committed the offence or by anyone else, and that the intention of the legislature in the framing of the section, as it stands now, was to give authority only to the Court in which a proceeding was pending to file a complaint in respect of documents which were produced or given in evidence before it. If there had been any intention to limit the provisions of the section to a document produced or given in evidence by a party to the proceeding, then it would have been a simple matter to insert words to make that intention clear.

The remarks also tend to support, though not directly, the view taken in Narayan Dhonddev, In re (3). At the same time the learned Judges quoted, apparently with approval, the contrary view of the Patna High Court taken in a case cited by them. In A. I. R. 1927 Nag. 14, it was held that a Court has power to direct the prosecution of a person for forgery committed in respect of proceedings in Court whether that person is a party to these proceedings or not. A Division Bench of this Court has taken the same view in Emperor v. Bal Mukand (5). In this case there are some remarks in the body of the judgment which appear to be in conflict with Narayan Dhonddev In re (3), but the point was not directly before the learned Judges. It is not necessary for me to mention the other cases cited as in my opinion they do not directly bear on the question before me, which is whether the Court is prohibited to take cognizance of the "offence" or of "the offence as against the party to the proceedings."

It is conceded that this Court has jurisdiction to quash the proceedings at this stage if it is satisfied that it is necessary to do so in the interests of justice, but it is contended that this should be very rarely done It is true that the power should be very rarely exercised by the Court, but this is a case in which the question of the jurisdiction of the trial Magistrate is involved, and I consider that it is a fit case in which the revisional jurisdiction of this Court should be exercised by quashing the criminal proceedings started against the petitioner without the complaint of the Subordinate Judge if such complaint was necessary.

It will thus be observed that though I have not been able to discover any authority of this Court which fully covers the present case Narayan Dhonddev, In re (3) is directly in favour of the petitioner while in Debi Lal v. Dhajdhari Goshami (2) the opposite view has been taken The wording of S. 195 (1) (c) is capable of lending support to either interpretation. The question is whether the word "offence" used at the commencement of the section is qualified by the words "committed by a party to any proceeding" as used after the word "offence" used later in the same section. It may be argued with equal plausibility that a Magistrate is prohibited from taking cognizance of an offence irrespective of the parties by whom it is committed provided one of the offenders is a party to the proceedings. On the other hand it can be argued with equal force that the protection afforded by S. 195 (1) (c) was intended to be given only to the parties to the proceedings though it appears to me to be anomalous that in certain cases the Court may decline to file a complaint aginst the party i. e. the principal while a private individual may be able to prosecute the abettors of such a party.

I consider that having regard to the conflict that exists in the cases already mentioned and to the importance of the question involved the case should go to a Division Bench for decision of the point involved. I refer the case to a Division Bench accordingly. A very early date will be fixed. I may mention that the amendment made to Ss. 195 and 146, Criminal P. C., in 1923 has not altered the situation so far as the present question is involved, and though in the judgments quoted the expression "sanction" is used under the present law it would be substituted by a "complaint."

Dalip Singh, J.—The facts of this case are sufficiently given in the order of the learned Judge referring the point for decision by a Division Bench and need not, therefore, be recapitulated.

The question is whether S. 195 (1) (c), Criminal P. C., prohibits the trial not only of the parties but of the abettors and conspirators as well when the offence has been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court without a complaint by the Court, and, therefore the learned Magistrate at present trying the case has no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence, if any, committed by the petitioner.

It may be mentioned here that the learned Judge referring the case decided that the present petitioner was not a party to the proceedings and that he had merely abetted the commission of the offence, if any. We, therefore, declined to allow counsel for the petitioner to argue that the petitioner was really a party in these proceedings, and the only question before the Division Bench is the question as stated above. Two views have been generally adopted in the various Courts. It is unnecessary to go through all the rulings on the point, more especially as they have been dealt with at length by the Division Bench which decided Criminal Appeal No. 1359 of 1927.

(5) A. I. R. 1928 Lah 510.

Emperor v. Bal Mukand (5). The chief ruling expressing one point of view may be taken to be in Govinda Iyer v. Emperor (6). In that ruling it was pointed out that S. 476, Criminal P. C., referred to and incorporated the conditions laid down in S 195 and that it was only with reference to the offences specified in S. 195 with all the qualifications mentioned in that section that the procedure prescribed by S. 476 applied. The view briefly then is that excepting cases covered by S. 195 the Court has no power to adopt the procedure prescribed in S. 476. The other view is most clearly stated in the Division Bench ruling of our Court already referred to namely, Emperor v. Bal Mukand (5) In that it is pointed out (and if I may say so with all respect I entirely agree) that S. 190 is a section conferring powers on Magistrates to take cognizance of all offences under certain conditions. These wide conditions are in the case of certain offences limited by certain other sections which lay down that cognizance shall not be taken of these offences except on a complaint by a particular person or possibly under a particular procedure.

It is therefore, clear that the general policy of the Code is that Magistrates should take cognizance of all offences by whatever means brought to their notice and it is only in certain cases that the power of the Magistrate to take cognizance of offences is limited. S. 195, therefore, in my opinion, is a section limiting the right of the Magistrate to take cognizance of an offence and must, therefore, contrary to the contention of the counsel for the petitioner, be strictly construed. Emperor v. Bal Mukand (5) lays down therefore that while in the case of a party to a proceeding S. 195 (1) (c) bars cognizance of the offence except on the complaint of the Court, there is nothing to prevent a Court or the presiding officer of the Court from bringing an offence to the cognizance of another Magistrate by making a complaint to him, and such Magistrate is not debarred from taking cognizance of the offence by reason of the fact that except for such complaint by the presiding officer of the Court, the offence has not been brought to his notice at all.

Counsel for the petitioner has contended that the words "by any party" in S. 195 (1) (c) should be construed as meaning anybody who has made an appearance in Court. He conceded that this would include witnesses. Now, there is plenty of authority both of this Court and of other Courts that a witness is not within the meaning of the words in S. 195 (1) (c) : see Wazir Ali v. Mahbub Ali (7) and Debi Lal v. Dhajdhari Goshami (2). Moreover. it seems to me that the construction contended for would make the words "by any party" without meaning altogether and they might just as well have been omitted from the section. This construction would, therefore, be contrary to the ordinary canons of construction and should not be adopted unless the Courts were otherwise compelled to adopt it.

Counsel contended that it would be extremely anomalous that an actual party should only be prosecuted on the complaint of a Court, whereas a person merely abetting the offence could be prosecuted on a complaint by a private individual. I do not see any great anomaly in the matter myself, but even supposing there is some anomaly that would not justify the Court in departing from a number of rulings laying down a certain construction, and if I may with all respect say so, a natural construction, and adopting a construction which would make the words of no meaning whatsoever. Counsel relied on Narayan Dhonddev, In re (3) for the proposition that at any rate abettors of a party committing an offence could not be tried except on a complaint by the Court concerned. No doubt that ruling supports him, but with all respect to the learned Judges who decided that case I am unable to agree with the reasoning given by their Lordships. It seems to me that the correct view is laid down in Ghansham Singh v. Emperor (1) and Debi Lal v. Dhajdhari Goshami (2) and in our own ruling Emperor v. Bal Mukand (5) and there is nothing to prevent the trial of an abettor of an offence committed by a party to a proceeding in Court without a complaint by the Court under S. 476, Criminal P. C.

I would, therefore, hold that this petition fails and the Magistrate is competent to take cognizance of the offence alleged against the petitioner.

Second Appeal No. 2744 of 1927, Decided on 13th March 1928, from decree of the Addl. Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 18th July 1927.

Limitation Act. Arts. 120 and 32—Suit for removing encroachment on a public road is governed by Art. 120 and not Art. 32.

Judgment.—This was a suit for a mandatory injunction directing defendants to remove an encroachment alleged to have been made by them on a public road in a village abadi by erecting "tharas" thereon. The defendants resisted the suit, pleading inter alia limitation and absence of specific damage. The trial Court found the issues in favour of the plaintiffs and decreed the suit, and the decision was affirmed on appeal by the learned District Judge. Defendants have filed a second appeal.

The only two points argued in appeal were that the suit was not maintainable as there was no allegation in the plaint about special damage and that the suit was time barred. As regards the first point: it appears that there was an allegation of special damage in the amended plaint inasmuch as the plaintiffs alleged that the passage encroached upon was the only way to their houses and they were put to special inconvenience. The matter was put in issue (issue 2) and decided in favour of the plaintiffs and this finding of fact cannot be challenged. As regards limitation: the Courts below have applied Art. 120. Lim. Act, but it is contended on behalf of the appellants that the proper article applicable was Art. 32 of that Act. Reliance has been placed in this respect on A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 653. This ruling, no doubt, appears to be in favour of the appellants. On behalf of the respondents it is urged that this ruling does not lay down correct law. The present case is, however, distinguishable in so far as the encroachment is on public road; and not on the 'property' of any particular person or persons. If any member of the public having a right of way were to be held to be entitled to sue in such a case within two years of the encroachment coming to his knowledge, limitation will practically be reduced to a nullity. There are several authorities in which in the case of suits for injunction of this type Art. 120 has been held to be applicable: see e. g, Achar Singh v. Badhawa Singh (1), Lal Singh v. Hira Singh (2) and Nur Mahomed v. Gauri Shankar (3). Following these authorities I hold that Art. 120 was properly applied to the present suit.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Arjan Das—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Plaintiff 1 is the half-brother of plaintiffs 2 and 3. Plaintiffs 2 and 3 are minors while plaintiff 1 is a major. On 30th September 1924 the two mothers of the plaintiffs executed a mortgage of the plaintiffs' land in favour of defendants 3 and 4. The amount was Rs. 6,250. The plaintiffs brought the present suit against their mothers and the mortgagees for a declaration that the mortgage in question, which was entered into during their minority on their behalf, was ineffectual and void as their mothers were not their legal guardians and the mortgage was not effected for their benefit. Issues were framed and the suit was adjourned for evidence. In the meantime, on 14th January 1927, a compromise was written in the village by which plaintiff 1 for himself and on behalf of his two half-brothers withdrew from the suit on the condition that parties should bear their own costs. On the next date of hearing, namely, 22nd February 1927, the defendants put this compromise into Court. Plaintiff 1, however, pleaded that he had signed a blank sheet of paper at the instance of one Kale Khan who said that a deed of lease was going to be executed. The trial Court framed two issues on this question :

(1) Whether Abdul Ghani agreed to withdraw the suit of his own free will.

(2) Whether the withdrawal is binding upon him and his minor brothers.

It held that the compromise was entered into by plaintiff 1 of his own accord and that there was no coercion, undue influence or fraud. It was conceded before the trial Court that the two minor plaintiffs were not bound by the compromise. The trial Court refused to record the compromise even as against plaintiff 1 on the ground that the contract of mortgage was indivisible and that a mortgage could not be set aside as against two persons when it remained valid as against one. Against this decision the mortgagees have appealed.

Two points were raised before me by counsel for the respondents, which were not taken in the Court below. The first was that the compromise was an agreement requiring a stamp of Re. 1. No objection having been taken on this ground in the trial Court it cannot now be raised before me under S. 36, Stamp Act. The second was that the compromise was a document requiring registration under S. 17, Registration Act, as it declared a right in immovable property of a value of more than Rs. 100 in favour of the mortgagees and that as the document was not registered it could not be proved under S. 49, Registration Act. There is no authority directly in point. It was held in Bhana v. Guman Singh (1) that an agreement by which reversioners agreed not to enforce their rights to sue for a declaration that a gift of property in the possession of a Hindu widow made by the widow was not binding upon them was not a document which was compulsorily registrable under S. 17, Registration Act. In Gulab v. Mehndi (2) it was held that an agreement given by the brother of an alienor not to contest any alienation which his brother might make in future as to one-half of his land did not require registration. These cases do not cover the present one, but it seems to me that all that plaintiff 1 agreed to in this document was not to sue for a declaration that the mortgage entered into on his behalf by his mother was not binding upon him. That seems to me not to be a document requiring registration under S. 17, Registration Act. The mortgage was already in existence and the agreement was simply one to withdraw from the suit to have it set aside I therefore overrule this objection of the respondents.

On the merits it is quite clear Abdul Ghani entered into the compromise of his own free will

(1) [1918] 40 All. 384=
J. 191.

(2) A. I.R. 1922 La

the writer of the document, and Thakar Singh, one of the witnesses, have given evidence that he understood what he was doing and that he signed it after it had been written. Kale Khan further stated that the intention was that plaintiff 1 should not appear on the date fixed for hearing and thus allow the suit to be dismissed in default. The story of plaintiff 1 that he signed a blank paper on which a lease was going to be written is most improbable. Plaintiff 1 is a lambardar and the document was written in his own village. Plaintiff 1 first stated that he could not read and could only sign his name but he had to admit that he could read and write to some extent. There is no evidence in his favour except his own statement and the decision of the trial Court that he entered into the agreement willingly is correct.

There remains the question whether the compromise can be enforced against plaintiff 1 though it is invalid as against his two minor brothers. Here also there is no direct authority, but some of the cases come very near to the present one. In Jamabai v. Vasantrao (3) a compromise had been made on behalf of a minor without compliance with the requirements of S. 462, Civil P. C., 1882, as to obtaining leave of the Court. In accordance with this compromise a joint bond was executed on behalf of the minor and another person. It was held that it could be executed against the other obligee though it was not enforceable against the minor as the compromise under which it was entered into was not enforceable against him. The plea advanced in that case amounted to this: that one of two promisors could plead the minority and consequent immunity of the other as a bar to the promisee's claim against him. This was held to be a plea which had to be rejected. This ruling was followed in Sain Das v. Ram Chand (4). The case most similar to the present is Gulab Dai v. Vaish Motor Co (5). In that case the plaintiffs were a lady suing for herself and as guardian of her minor son. The lady's father was acting as agent for both the plaintiffs. He entered into a compromise on their behalf and a decree passed in terms of it. The sanction of the Court to the compromise on behalf of the minor had not been previously obtained and it was not proved that the compromise was for the benefit of the minor. It was, therefore, held that as regards the minor plaintiff the compromise was totally ineffective. It was further held that as regards the adult plaintiff it still remained to be decided whether her father or the vakil engaged in the case had any authority to enter into a compromise on her behalf. The case was remanded for this purpose. This meant that a partial compromise involving one out of two plaintiffs was held to be possible, and in the present case I hold that a partial compromise is not illegal.

The proposition that a mortgage is indivisible is one enuring for the benefit of the mortgagee and it may be waived by him. The mortgagor cannot take advantage of this principle. No difficulty will arise if it is held that the mortgage is effective as against the interests of plaintiff 1 in the land though it may later be held not to affect the interest of plaintiffs 2 and 3 and their share of the land. Further, O. 23, R. 3, Civil P. C., allows for the recording of a compromise adjusting a suit in part by a lawful compromise.

I therefore accept this appeal and order the compromise to be recorded so far as the interests of plaintiff 1 are concerned and a decree to be passed in accordance therewith. This means that the suit is dismissed so far as plaintiff 1 and his share of the land are concerned. The suit, so far as plaintiffs 2 and 3 are concerned, will, however, proceed. The appellants will get their costs in this Court from plaintiff 1.

Second Appeal No. 17 of 1928, Decided on 8th June 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 31st October 1927.

Limitation Act, Art. 32—Art. 32 does not apply where the person proceeded against has no other right than a right in common with the general public to pass over it.

Article 32 can properly be applied only where the person proceeded against had, before the perversion in respect of which he is being sued took place, a right to "use the property for specific purposes" peculiar to himself. Niaz Muhammad—for Appellants.

Niamat Rai—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The appellants are proprietors of village Mansowal in Garhshankar tahsil of Hoshiarpur District. A certain area of land in the village, admittedly the property of the appellants, was recorded as a public thoroughfare. The respondents, who are occupancy tenants in the village, have appropriated parts of this thoroughfare by erecting huts, etc., upon it. The appellants sued for an order against the respondents to remove the erection or put the appellants in possession, alleging that the respondents had put up the huts, etc., four years previously. The respondents pleaded that they had acquired a prescriptive title in the site by adverse possession. The trial Court found that the respondents had taken possession of the site in 1921 and that the suit was not barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge accordingly gave a decree in the plaintiffs' favour in the form of a perpetual injunction against the obstruction of the thoroughfare by the respondents. The respondents appealed. The District Judge confirmed the finding that the respondents had taken possession in 1921, but holding that the suit was barred by Art. 32, Lim. Act, he accepted the appeal and dismissed the suit.

Against this judgment the proprietors have appealed. Mr. Niaz Muhammad, who has argued the appeal, relies upon Achar Singh v. Badhawa Singh (1) and Masharaf Ali v. Iftikhar Hussain (2) in support of his contention that Art. 32 is not applicable to a suit of this kind. For the respondents Mr. Niamat Rai refers to Bishambar Sahai v. Janki Das (3) and Ghulam Muhammad v. Abdul Satar (4) in support of the view adopted by the lower appellate Court.

I have referred to these and other rulings on the subject of the application of Art. 32. It is not easy to derive from these authorities any clear principles on which the applicability of Art. 32 has been determined in cases resembling the one now before me. I note, however, that the view expressed in Bishambar Sahai v. Janki Das (3) was subsequently dissented from by a Division Bench of the Allahabad Court in Mohan v. Bishambar Sahai (5). There can be no doubt that Art. 32 can properly be applied only where the person proceeded against had, before the perversion in respect of which he is being sued took place, a right to "use the property for specific purposes." Can it be said that in this case the defendants had a right to use the site in suit for specific purposes? I think not. They could pass over the land, but as individuals or members of the community they had no specific right of any kind peculiar to themselves, nor had they any rights in the land under colour of which they could set up obstructions on the public thoroughfare. The case appears to resemble closely in its nature the case Achar Singh v. Badhawa Singh (1) in which Art. 32 was not held to govern limitation. This decision has recently been followed by a learned Judge of this Court in Gurdit Singh v. Hari Singh (6), a case apparently on all fours with the present case.

My present opinion is that Art. 32 was not intended to apply to a case in respect of land in which the person proceeded against had no other right than a right in common with the general public to pass over it. This view does not I think conflict with the existing decisions. My conclusion is that the article applicable in the present case was and that the suit was wrongly by the learned Additional Dist

v.

Bahadur—Accused—Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 755 of 1927, Decided on 1st December 1927, from an order of Sess. Judge, Rawalpindi, D/- 23rd April 1927.

(a) Penal Code, S. 84—Mere want of motive for the crime is not sufficient to base an inference of unsoundness of mind—Onus is on the accused to prove that he was incapable of knowing the nature of his act.

In the absence of other evidence mere want of motive for the crime is not sufficient to base an inference of unsoundness of mind for the purposes of a defence under S. 84. The onus is upon the accused to prove that he was suffering from such disability as is indicated in S. 84. [P 798 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., Ss. 464 and 465—Magistrate is not under duty to order a medical inquiry upon a defence of insanity—Unsoundness of the accused must first be inquired into if he appears to be incapable by reason of mental infirmity of taking his trial.

There is no provision of law in India making it incumbent upon a Magistrate to order a medical enquiry upon mere defence of insanity. It is only in cases where the accused appears to be incapable, by reason of mental infirmity, of taking his trial that this issue of insanity must be tried before the trial for the offence is proceeded with. [P 798 C 2]

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Nihal Singh—for Respondent.

Fforde, J.—Bahadur has been tried by the learned Sessions Judge of Rawalpindi for the murder of Mt. Amrit Kaur and Teja Singh, two children aged seven and four years respectively. The defence [illegible] that at the time the murders [illegible] acquitted Bahadur was insane. [illegible] Sessions Judge has accepted [illegible] and acquitted the accused. [illegible] now appeals against this [illegible] contending that Bahadur [illegible] been convicted of murder [illegible] sentenced to death. The sole question arises for determination in [illegible] is whether or not Bahadur [illegible] the time when he killed Mt. [illegible] Kaur and Teja Singh knew that [illegible] was doing was either wrong or contrary to law. The circumstances of the crime are not disputed and may be stated very shortly.

Mt. Maya Devi was living alone with her two children at Turkwal while her husband was carrying on a shop keeping business at Kohala. On the morning of 6th February 1927, while Mt. Maya Devi was absent from the house to answer a call of nature, Bahadur entered the room where the two children were, armed with a heavy stick, closed the door by a chain, and then proceeded to batter the small boy to death. The crying of the children brought neighbours upon the scene. The daughter in the meantime had managed to unhitch the chain and was attempting to open the door when Bahadur struck her. A man called Shahana, who had come on the scene on hearing a clamour finding that Bahadur was inside the room and was refusing to allow anyone to enter, procured a thorn bush, forced the door open and with the thorn bush in front of him proceeded to drive the accused back. The accused in the meantime struck blows with his stick at the thorn bush and, while being forced gradually back, tripped over a charpoy and fell to the ground. Shahana then snatched the stick from his hand and grappled with him. Other persons came into the room and helped in securing the culprit. By this time the boy was dead, but the little girl was still alive and died shortly afterwards of her injuries. The fact, as I have briefly narrated them, are not disputed.

Counsel for the accused urges that the circumstances of the murder, the fact that no motive for the crime has been proved, and the evidence of two witnesses of certain eccentric conduct on the part of the accused some months prior to the crime, and the further fact that the accused had at one time, not very remote, received some injuries to his head, all go to prove that the accused at the time he committed the act in question was incapable of knowing that he was doing wrong. This is the view which the learned Sessions Judge has adopted; but in my judgment it is a view which cannot reasonably be held on the facts of this case.

Where an accused person relies upon S. 84, I. P. C., to escape the legal consequences of his act, the onus is upon him to prove that he was, at the time when the act was committed, by reason of unsoundness of mind, incapable of knowing its nature that what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law. That onus may be discharged by producing evidence as to the conduct of the accused shortly prior to the offence and his conduct at the time or immediately afterwards, also by evidence of his mental condition, his family history., and so forth. If contemporaneous acts of his are proved to have been of such a nature as to indicate that he was quite incapable of forming rational views, that would be a strong element to show that at the time of the crime in question he was not capable of knowing that it was a wrongful act. In the present case, however, no evidence has been produced or any contemporaneous acts of the accused. Nothing has been told us of his behaviour during the days immediately preceding the crime, but some evidence has been produced by which it is sought to prove that he behaved with remarkable eccentricity some time prior to the event in question.

The two witnesses, who have been called to prove this matter, are Nazra and Jahana. Nazra states that the accused had received serious injuries in his head in a fight and had been laid up for several months as a result of these injuries, that, after he had risen from his sickness, he had a drum beaten in the courtyard of his house, a large number of people had collected and he went about carrying a tray with Rs. 100 in it stating that anyone who had beaten him could help himself to the money. According to this witness he also got a mirasi to stand on the roof of his house, beat a drum and give a challenge to all people who owned bullocks to bring their animals and have a fight with his cattle. This witness says that nobody accepted this challenge, because everyone knew that the accused was insane. This witness also says that a day prior to the present crime the accused went into mosque wearing cattle bells round his neck and that people kept him under control as he was mad. This witness gives the date of the first two incidents as five or six days before the murder and he states that the fight resulting in the injuries to his head occurred a year ago.

The next witness, Jahana, says that the fight took place in April of last year, (i. e. 1926), that the accused was ill for some months as a result of the injuries to his head and did not return to his work when he recovered. He says that a few days before the crime two maulvis had visited the village, which attracted a large crowd of people from the Jhelum, Rawalpindi and Attock Districts and that Bahadur went to the mosque wearing bullock bells round his neck and created a disturbance. This witness also refers to the incident of the drum beating and the challenge to the owners of cattle and says it took place five or six days before the murder.

In regard to this evidence I may say, first of all, that the first witness admits that he is a collateral of the accused and the second witness admits that the accused is his son-in-law. Although the circumstances, which these witnesses depose to as showing the insanity of the accused, are alleged to have been of widespread notoriety, not a single independent witness has been produced to corroborate these two persons in respect of the matters which they have alleged. It seems incredible that, if on the day prior to the crime, the accused had entered a public place of worship in a fantastic manner, as he is alleged to have done, causing a public disturbance not a single person should have been available to give evidence of this fact. According to Jahana also, the incident of the drum beating took place five or six days before the occurrence. In respect to this no person from the neighbourhood has been called to give evidence on this matter. In my judgment the evidence of these two witnesses is not worthy of any credit whatsoever, and I cannot help expressing some surprise that it should have been treated seriously by the learned Sessions Judge.

Another matter which the learned Sessions Judge has relied upon as evidence of insanity is that > the accused behaved like a mad man when he was caught in the house of his victims as he rained a shower of blows on the thorn bush with which he was being pushed back.

It seems to me that the accused in striking at this thorn bush did what a normal person would do who was trying to resist capture and who was being assulted in such a manner. The learned Sessions Judge has also considered the evidence upon the head injuries to the accused. There is no doubt that there-is a scar on the accused's head showing that some time back he had received a fracture of the skull. But, apart from the evidence of his two relatives, there is nothing to show that these injuries to the head had resulted in any untoward act on the part of the accused or had incapacitated him in any way whatsoever.

The fourth matter relied upon by the learned Sessions Judge as evidence of insanity is the absence of motive for this crime. I may say that the motive alleged by the prosecution, sought to be proved by the mother of the children and by one Gurdial Singh, is not very satisfactory, inasmuch as Gurdial Singh's account of a complaint made to him by Mt. Maya Devi does not tally with the story which she herself has given. It may be that the accused had been importuning Mt. Maya Devi to become his paramour, as she alleged, but I am not satisfied that she did complain of this matter to Gurdial Singh before the crime in question. It must be borne in mind that this kind of conduct towards a married woman, who was living apart from her husband, is not a circumstance which a woman is likely to talk about, and, although it is quite possible that she is speaking the truth that the accused did molest and importune her, I am not satisfied that she complained of these acts to Gurdial Singh. However, even accepting the learned Sessions Judge's view that no motive for the crime has been proved, that in itself—the mere absence of motive—is not a sufficient ground upon which mania may be inferred. There is no doubt that the fact that a murder has been committed in a particularly brutal and purposeless way for no motive whatsoever, is a circumstance which may be taken into consideration, together with other material, to enable a Court to decide whether or not the crime in question was committed at a time when the accused person was in such a state of mind that he was incapable of knowing the nature of his act. As I have said in the absence of other evidence mere want of motive for the crime is not sufficient to base an inference of unsoundness of mind for the purposes of a defence under S. 84, I. P. C.

Mr. Nihal Singh has argued that the learned committing Magistrate should have ordered an investigation into the state of the accused's mind as soon as the defence of insanity was raised. For this contention I can find no authority. S.469, Criminal P. C., provides that when an accused person appears to be of unsound mind at the time of inquiry or trial, and the Magistrate is satisfied from the evidence given before him that there is reason to believe that he committed an act which, if he had been of sound mind, would have been an offence, and that at the time of the commission he was, by reason of unconsciousness of mind, incapable of knowing the nature of the act or that it was wrong or contrary to law, the Magistrate must proceed with the case and commit the accused for trial to the Court of Session or High Court, as the case may be There is no provision of law in India making it incumbent upon a committing Magistrate to order a medical inquiry upon a defence of insanity. It is only in cases where the accused appears to be incapable by reason of mental infirmity, of taking his trial, that this issue of insanity must be tried before the trial for the offence is proceeded with. That is provided by Ss. 464 and 465, Criminal P. C.

In the present case it was not suggested that the accused was insane either at the time he came before the committing Magistrate, or before he took his trial before the Sessions Judge, or at any period in the interval. His whole case is that he was suffering from such a condition of mind at the time of the crime that he was not capable of knowing the nature of his act or that what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law. The learned committing Magistrate refused an application by counsel for the defence to hold an inquiry as to the state of the mind of the accused person. The committing Magistrate in rejecting this application expressed his view that the accused was sane at that time, and upon that view the committing Magistrate had no alternative but to proceed in accordance with the provisions of S. 469, Criminal P. C. The learned Sessions Judge seems to think that there has been some dereliction of duty on the part of the committing Magistrate in not ordering a medical inquiry. This view of the learned Sessions Judge is, in my opinion, entirely contrary to the statutory provisions. The learned Sessions Judge also seems to have been of opinion that it was for the Crown to establish the sanity of the accused; but he does not seem to have realized that the onus was upon the accused to prove that he was suffering from such disability as is indicated in S. 84, I. P. C. The learned Sessions Judge says that it may be argued that the fact that he was insane when he committed the murders has not been proved conclusively but still there remains the doubt that he may have been mad at the time. This is not a kind of doubt of which the accused may be given the benefit. In order to come within the provisions of S. 84, I. P. C., the accused must not leave the condition of his mind at the time of the commission of the offence in doubt, but must satisfy the Court that it was such that he was incapable of knowing the nature of his act or that what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law. This, in my judgment, he has wholly failed to establish.

I am satisfied from the admitted facts of this case from the fact that the accused selected a time when the mother was absent from the house to batter to death these two unfortunate children; the fact that before starting upon his crime he chained the door from inside to prevent anyone entering; the fact that he went to the scene having armed himself with a dang; and the fact that when he was interrupted in the course of its perpetration he resisted capture that he knew perfectly well—that he was doing a wrongful act. Under these circumstances I am satisfied that the decision of the learned Sessions Judge is clearly erroneous, and I would accordingly accept the appeal for the Crown, set aside the verdict of acquittal, convict the respondent under the provisions of S. 302, I. P. C., of the murders of Mt. Amrit Kaur and Teja Singh and sentence him to death.

If it may now be the case that before the sentence is executed it appears to the jail authorities that the accused is insane, I have no doubt that proper steps will be taken to inquire into his mental condition. This is a matter, however, for the Local Government and not for this Court.

Judgment.—The facts of this case are that in the suit which was brought on a mortgage on 8th October 1925, an order for issue of summons was passed on 9th October 1925. From the record it is difficult to ascertain on what date the summonses were issued, but the date of the return of the summons was 14th November 1925. On that date the Court ordered that dasti summons should be given to the plaintiff. On the same date the plaintiff put in an application stating that the defendant, who was alleged in the plaint to be residing at Chak No. 163, Montgomery District, was avoiding service of summons and could not be served except by substituted service. On that date the Court ordered substituted service by advertisement in the Tribune, and fixed 7th January 1926, as the date of the next hearing. On 7th January 1926 ex-parte proceedings were ordered and a preliminary decree was passed. On 8th July 1926, a final decree was passed, without notice to the defendant and without any written application, on an oral application by counsel for the plaintiff. On 30th November 1926, a written application was put in for the final decree. On 22nd December 1926, an application for execution was put in. A house situate in Bhalwal, district Sargodha, was sold on 11th February 1927. On 10th March 1927 an application was put in to set aside the ex-parte decree. Notice issued to the parties, and the defendant produced three witnesses who show, and this is not contested before me, that the defendant resides in Chak No. 153 and not in Chak No. 163, that he left Bhalwal when he was five or ten years old, that he goes to Bhalwal where he still has some business occasionally and that his mother lives in the house at Bhalwal, that he does not know English and that the Tribune does not reach his chak and is read by nobody in his chak. The defendant went into the withess-box himself and stated that he had only come to know of the ex-parte decree on 4th or 5th March 1927, when he had come to Bhalwal.

The plaintiff produced two witnesses, One nawab and one himself, to prove that in the Jeth of the year previous the defendant had come to Bhalwal and had asked the plaintiff not to take out execution of his decree and had promised payment of the sum due. Now, Jeth would fall in June and as the final decree was not passed till 8th of July 1926, the story is obviously false, and I do not believe a word of it, though it seems to have appealed to the learned Judge who dealt with this application and dismissed it.

It is obvious that a wrong address was given concerning the defendant and that substituted service was ordered on what I can only describe as extremely insufficient material, certainly not complying with O. 5, Rr. 19 and 20, Civil P. C. The whole proceeding seems to me to be extremely suspicious and seems to have been a device of the plaintiffs to secure an ex-parte decree. Counsel for the plaintiff respondent cites A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 507 and A. I. R. 1925 Lahore 639. In this case the learned Judge who ordered ex-parte proceedings and who dismissed the application to set aside the ex-parte decree was the same. He has not found that he was satisfied that the provisions of O. 5, Rr. 19 and 20, had been satisfied before the issue of the order for substituted service. There is nothing on the record to show me that those provisions were satisfied and there is much on the record which leads me to suspect the contrary. I, therefore, do not think that these rulings apply to the present case.

I accept the appeal and set aside the ex-parte decree, both preliminary and final, and direct the Court to proceed with the suit afresh. The plaintiff will pay the costs of the defendant. In the circumstances I also refuse the prayer of the counsel for plaintiff-respondent that the defendant do deposit the principal sum due under the mortgage deed.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 151—Item wrongly included in costs payable by decree—It is open to the party aggrieved to point out mistake to Court and claim correction of decree. (Obiter).

When a decree is framed by the Court in pursuance of a judgment and certain costs are included in that decree as payable by one party to the other, if any item is wrongly included in the costs so payable it is open to the party aggrieved to point out the mistake to the Court and to claim that the decree should be amended by making the necessary correction. (b) Civil P. C., S. 35—Witnesses brought by a party at his expense from their place of residence and got served at the place of suit—Court satisfied that expenses were reasonable—Court is entitled to include expenses in costs.

Defendant's witnesses who were residents of R were brought by him at L, the place of suit, and he got them served at L with a summons. The defendant satisfied the Court that he had brought the witnesses at L from R and had paid their expenses and that the expenses were reasonably incurred.

Section 35 confers ample powers on the Court to direct in what manner the costs are to be paid. The charges incurred in procuring the attendance of witnesses, whether such witnesses are summoned through the Court or not, are to be considered as included in the term "costs". [P 801 C 2]

Chandra Gupta for Fakir Chand—for Petitioners.

Anant Ram for Edmunds—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a petition for revision of an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, wherein he rejected the application for amendment of decree presented by the petitioners.

It appears that a suit was instituted by the petitioner against the respondent which was fixed for hearing on the 22nd December. On 21st December, the defendant applied that three of his witnesses be summoned and paid the necessary process-fee for the service of the summons on them, but did not actually deposit in Court the expenses for the appearance of the witnesses. The Court directed the summonses to issue, but expressly laid down that it would be for the defendant to see that they were served and that the Court would not grant any further adjournment if the summonses be not served. The witnesses who were to be summoned were residents of Rawalpindi. They were actually served in Lahore on 22nd and their expenses from Rawalpindi to Lahore were paid by the defendants' counsel and receipts thereof by the witnesses are endorsed on the back of summonses served on them. When, however, the case came up for hearing only one of these witnesses was actually examined by the defendant as the plaint was returned for presentation to the proper Court, the Judge, Small Cause Court, not having considered necessary to record the statement of the remaining witnesses of the defendant. The Court, it may be mentioned, while returning the plaint has passed an order that the plaintiff should pay the costs of defendant. A petition for revision against the order returning the plaint made in this Court was dismissed in limine. In that petition no question as to the correctness or otherwise of the amount awarded against the plaintiff was raised. Then the plaintiff made an application to the Judge, Small Cause Court, praying that the decree prepared be amended by excluding the costs paid to the three witnesses who had been served for the 22nd in the manner already stated by me. This application, the Judge of the Court, below, dismissed mainly on the ground that such an application was not competent.

I do not propose to decide the point whether or not such an application is competent, for it seems to me that on the merits the petitioner has no case, though it seems to me that when a decree is framed by the Court in pursuance of a judgment and certain costs are included in that decree as payable by one party to the other if any item is wrongly included in the costs so payable it is open to the party aggrieved to point out the mistake to the Court and to claim that the decree should be amended by making the necessary correction, and, therefore, I am not disposed to agree with the conclusion of the Judge, Small Cause Court, that the application was not competent in his Court.

On the merits, however, the petitioner has no case. His only ground of objection is that the witnesses having been served actually in Lahore their expenses from Rawalpindi to Lahore could not be debited against him. But it was not necessary for the defendant to serve the witness in Lahore at all. If he satisfied the Court that he had brought the witnesses from Rawalpindi and has paid their expenses and the Court was further satisfied that such expenses were reasonably incurred, it was entitled to include such expenses in the costs of the party who has incurred them.

There is no force in the contention of the counsel for the petitioner that it is only the expenses of the witnesses who have been summoned through the Court first, that can be included in the costs of the party. S. 35, Civil P. C., confers ample powers on the Court to direct in what manner the costs are to be paid and to which of the parties, and the instructions of this Court (Vol. I) on p. 96 clearly provide that charges incurred in procuring the attendance of witnesses whether such witnesses were summoned through the Court or not, are to be considered as included in the term "costs".

I do not understand the case of the petitioner to be that those costs were not, as a matter of fact, actually incurred by the defendant or that the witnesses did not come from Rawalpindi. All that he says is that his client is not liable to pay them because the witnesses were served in Lahore and also because two of them were not actually examined by the Court. But I have already stated that these two witnesses were not examined in Court, because the Judge did not consider it necessary to record any further evidence of the defendant who had actually incurred expenses in procuring the attendance of these witnesses. In any case a mistake on this point by the trial Court is hardly a ground for revision. I, therefore, hold that there is no force in this petition on its merits and I dismiss it with costs.

Judgment.—These two appeals can be conveniently disposed of in one judgment. The Imperial Bank obtained in the first case a decree against Bishen Singh .Budh Singh on 14th August 1925. They took out execution against the judgment-debtors and the bank agreed to give three months time to the judgment-debtors on Ram Singh standing surety. A translation of the security bond is given in the judgment of the trial Court. After three months the decree-holder took out execution of the decree on 14th November 1925 against the judgment-debtors and also against the surety Ram Singh. After various happenings, which are not necessary to go into, it was pleaded by Ram Singh that under the terms of the bond given by him the immovable property could not be attached in execution. The trial Court held that S. 145, Civil P. C., did not apply, but it held that it had inherent jurisdiction to proceed against the property of Ram Singh, and it gave no decision on issue 3 as to Ram Singh being estopped from taking the present plea.

In the second case the Imperial Bank had obtained a decree against Bishen Singh-Budh Singh and others, and having taken out execution, the execution was stayed on Ram Singh standing surety. A similar plea having been taken by Ram Singh, the Court held that S. 145, Civil P. C., did not apply and the decree-holder would, ordinarily speaking, have been obliged to bring a separate suit to enforce the mortgage created by the security bond, but that Ram Singh was estopped from taking the plea because of his silence and acquiescence in execution proceedings for nearly one and a half years which conduct had placed the bank at a disadvantage against the judgment-debtors. It, therefore, disallowed the objection in both cases.

In the view that I have now taken of the law, it is unnecessary to go into the various arguments that have been urged before me. It has been contended in the first case that the translation of the bond is incorrect and that it should read:

> My immovable property shall be liable to the decree-holder for the decretal amount and costs, instead of as given in the judgment of the trial Court. It has been contended that where there is a named obligee in the bond, and the bond does not make the surety personally liable but only makes immovable property liable, then the remedy is by way of a separate suit and not either under S. 145 or under the inherent jurisdiction of the Court.

It has been contended in the second case that there is no question of estoppel in the matter at all. In reply on behalf of the respondents it has been contended firstly that the translation of the security bond in the first case is correct and that there is no named obligee in the bond, and therefore, though S. 145 does not apply, the Court had inherent jurisdiction to execute against the immovable property. It has been contended in the second case that there was inherent jurisdiction in the case to proceed against the property and that there was an estoppel. It was not contended that the matter was res judicata. I can briefly dispose of the question of estoppel by stating that I fail to see how there can be any estoppel on a point of law going to the jurisdiction of the Court, and that I would uphold the appellant's contention on this point. It was contended on behalf of the respondent that if inherent jurisdiction had been exercised, no appeal lay because the appeal by the surety is only provided by S. 145 which does not apply. In reply to this it was contended that if no appeal lay, this Court should exercise revisional jurisdiction because the point involved was a question of jurisdiction and moreover the appellant had no other remedy, or if a remdy by way of a separate suit, it was a troublesome and expensive remedy. On this point too I hold that if inherent jurisdiction had been exercised no right of appeal seems to be given by the Code and there being no inherent right of appeal, the appeal would be incompetent. But I would certainly hold in such an event that this Court should interfere in revision on the point because of the reasons given by counsel for the appellant.

However, I am not deciding the case on this point, but on different point which I shall now proceed to state. The relevant ruling on the point is Raj Raghubar Singh v. Jai Indra Bahadur Singh (1), a Privy Council ruling. In that case their Lordships of the Privy Council held that in a case where there was no named obligee in the bond, the Court had inherent jurisdiction to sell property hypothecated for the due performance of an appellate decree the appeal at the time of the security bond being pending. Now it has been contended by the counsel for the appellant that what their Lordships meant was that in case there is a personal liability, S. 145, Civil P. C. applies. If there is no personal liability and no named obligee, then the Court has inherent jurisdiction to sell the property. But if there is a named obligee, then the remedy is by way of separate suit and neither S. 145 applies nor is there any inherent jurisdiction to sell the property. On the other hand, it has been contended that the meaning of their Lordships was that where there is no personal liability, S. 145 does not apply and the Court will always have an inherent jurisdiction to sell property, were it not for the terms of S. 99, T. P. Act, which now corresponds to O. 34, R. 14, Civil P C. Therefore, in the provinces where the Transfer of Property Act applies, by virtue of O. 34, R, 14, a separate suit is necessary in the case of a named obligee ; but where, as in the Punjab, the Transfer of Property Act does not apply the Court has inherent jurisdiction to sell the property whether there is or is not a named obligee in the bond.

After considering the matter, I have come to the conclusion that the second view is the correct view. O. 34, R. 14, Civil P. C., expressly does not apply to the Punjab and in Raj Raghubar Singh v. Jai Indra Bahadur (1) the reference to S. 99 can only be made intelligible so far as I can see, with all due deference to their Lordships of the Privy Council, by reading it as a reference to S. 99, T. P. Act. This being so it would follow that their Lordships of the Privy Council were dealing with the difficulty created by that section. It is a well-known principle of law that the inherent jurisdiction of the Court cannot override a statutory provision. But where there is no statutory provisions to bar the inherent jurisdiction of the Court, I fail to see why the inherent jurisdiction of the Court should be limited to the case of of an obligee not being named in the bond. It is contended that the reason for invoking the inherent jurisdiction is the fact that otherwise there would be no remedy in the case where an obligee was not named in the bond; and there is force in this contention. It seems to me, however, anomalous to hold that a Court has inherent jurisdiction to sell property hypothecated where there is no named obligee, and no jurisdiction to sell it, where there is a named obligee. After all inherent jurisdiction must be based on some principle and not the mere absence of a remedy. It seems to me that the reason for the principle is that the Court has stayed its hands because of certain undertakings, and, ordinarily speaking, it must be for the Court itself to give the remedy that follows when the condition on which it stayed its hands is not fulfilled. I would, therefore, hold in both of these cases that in the Punjab there is inherent jurisdiction in the Court to proceed against the property whether an obligee is or is not named in the bond and therefore both these appeals fail and are dismissed. As the appellant had good reasons for coming to this Court in appeal, I would make no order as to costs which will be borne by the parties themselves throughout.

First Appeal No. 2094 of 1923, Decided on 19th June 1928, from decree of 1st Class Sub-Judge, Delhi, D/- 29th June 1923.

Railways Act, S. 72—Conversion.

Ordinarily a refusal to deliver goods amounts to a conversion though a qualified, reasonable and justifiable refusal may not : A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 471 and A. I. R. 1925 All. 656, Rel. on. [P 805 C 2] 62 bags out of 64 bags of sugar of plaintiff's consignment arrived but he was repeatedly refused delivery. As the market rate was falling, he served the railway company with a notice claiming the value of the consignment from the railway. But after the receipt of the notice the railway notified plaintiff that 62 bags of his were lying undelivered at his risk incurring demurrage charges and if they were not removed within ten days the consignment would be auctioned as unclaimed property. Bags were accordingly auctioned and the plaintiff sued the company for the value of sugar and interest.

Addison, J.—A Calcutta firm consigned 128 bags of sugar from Kiddarpore Docks to Delhi-Shahdara railway station. As 64 bags were for Babu Ram and 64 for Banwari Lal there were separate risk-notes and railway receipts. The risk-notes for each lot were on forms A and B. The two lots were loaded in the same wagon and dispatched On 8th October 1920 Banwari Lal went to Delhi-Shahdara station and found that the goods had arrived. He paid Rs. 245-10-6 for the freight of his lot and commenced to load. Before he had finished it was discovered that only 111 bags out of the two lots had arrived, that is, there were 17 short. It was further discovered that Banwari Lal's lot had been loaded in the middle of the wagon and that there were only 49 bags out of his lot of 64, that is, there were 15 short. Babu Ram's lot had been loaded at each end of the wagon. 62 bags out of his 64 had arrived, that is, two short. Banwari Lal insisted that he was entitled to take away his complete number of 64 bags and, when this was refused the bags which he had already loaded were unloaded. Babu Ram came on 19th October 1920, that is, the next day, for his lot, and was prepared to take away the 62 bags of his consignment which had arrived, but apparently on account of the frivolous demand made by Banwari Lal he was not allowed to do so Finally the railway auctioned the sugar of both consignments on 17th May 1921, and on 6th June 1921 Babu Ram sued the railway company for Rs. 6,472, being Rs. 6,172, the purchase price and Rs. 300 interest. Later, he admitted that he had made a mistake of Rs. 30 in his calculations and reduced his claim to Rs. 6,442. The trial Court disallowed interest but decreed the sum of Rs. 6,142 with proportionate costs. Against this decree the railway company have appealed.

The trial Court held that 62 bags of Babu Ram's consignment arrived, that he was willing to accept delivery of this number, and that, when finally the railway company offered him this number on 30th November 1920 after the market had fallen very considerably, he was justified in refusing to take them. This amounted to a finding of conversion of the goods by the railway. It was further held that wilful neglect by the railway in respect of the two bags which were lost had been established. In this way the full purchase money was decreed.

On the evidence it is clearly established that 62 bags of Babu Ram's consignment arrived and that he was refused delivery on 9th October 1920 when he was willing to take the 62 bags which arrived. On the same day he at once telegraphed to the Traffic Manager asking him to order delivery to be made to him. Further, when a Traffic Inspector was sent to settle matters, Babu Ram was still willing on 26th October to take the 62 bags of his consignment, though even then the market was falling. All this was admitted by the learned counsel whc appeared for the appellant. On 1st November 1920 Babu Ram served the railway company with a notice to the effect that he had repeatedly been refused delivery, that the market rate was falling and that he claimed the value of the consignment from the railway. It was, not, however, till 30th November 1920 that the railway notified Babu Ram that 62 bags of his were lying undelivered at his risk since 8th October 1920 incurring demurrage charges, and that if they were not removed within ten days the consignment would be auctioned as unclaimed property. This was certainly a curious letter to send, seeing that it was entirely the fault of the railway who refused to allow Babu Ram to remove his bags. The railway put all the blame on him and even indicated that demurrage would be charged. On this date the market rate had fallen by Rs. 8-8-0 a maund as admitted by the Traffic Inspector in his letter dated 30th November 1920

The correspondence continued in an attempt to settle the dispute and it is clear from the letters which passed that Babu Ram took the more moderate and proper attitude He telegraphed on 5th May 1921 that he was still willing to take the 62 bags if the railway did not charge demurrage. By this time, however, the railway appears to have taken up the untenable position, not now held by it, that each consignee was entitled to 55½ bags and on 12th May 1921 it wrote to Babu Ram, only offering him 55½ bags. It is impossible to understand how the railway came to take up this position as, in no circumstances could half of one bag belong to one consignment and half to the other. Besides the evidence is clear that 62 bags of one consignment and 49 of the other arrived, as found by the trial Court. This is, indeed, the position taken by the railway.

In spite of the above facts, it was strenuously contended on behalf of the railway that Babu Ram was bound to take delivery of the 62 bags on 30th November 1920 when the offer of 62 bags was made by the railway who, however, at the same time claimed demurrage, though delivery had been refused by them from 8th October to that date, during which interval the market had been steadily falling. As against this it was argued that the railway was guilty of conversion of 62 bags by refusing to give them to Babu Ram throughout October and that Babu Ram was justified in giving the railway notice on 1st November that he would sue it for the value of the goods if the sum claimed was not paid. It is the railway's case that 62 bags of his consignment did arrive. In these circumstances the railway had no right to refuse delivery in October to Babu Ram merely because Banwari Lal wrongly claimed 64 bags. The claim of Banwari Lal was frivolous and should have been ignored by the railway. Haryana Cotton Mills Co., Ltd. v. B. B. & C. I. Ry. Co. (1), is a somewhat similar case. In it the railway had failed to deliver machinery handed over to it for conveyance and was sued for the value of the goods. In reply the railway pleaded that the goods were now ready for delivery without alleging that they had ever gone astray. It was held that as the railway company had not lost the goods, but had been guilty of a detention coupled with neglect or refusal to deliver them up after demand made, that refusal or neglect amounted to conversion and that the plaintiffs were entitled to the full price of the goods as damages. Another somewhat similar case is G. I. P. Ry. v. Radhe Mal-Manni Lal (2). In it the consignment was for nine bags. Seven bags arrived along with two of another consignment. Delivery of seven bags of the consignment proper was twice refused by the station master but on two subsequent occasions the railway asked the plaintiffs to remove the seven bags which were theirs. The plaintiffs refused to do so and the bags were auctioned. It was held that the railway company after refusing to deliver the seven bags retained them at their own risk and the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the market value of the goods and not merely the price which they had realized at the auction.

Generally speaking, a refusal to deliver goods amounts to a conversion though a qualified, reasonable and justifiable refusal may not. On the railway's own case it had no right of any kind to refuse delivery to Babu Ram. Its refusal to deliver was neither reasonable nor justifiable. In my judgment this case is governed by the authorities already mentioned, with which I am, with respect, in full agreement. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal in respect of the 62 bags of the consignment which arrived at Delhi-Shahdara, and delivery of which was refused by the railway.

As regards the two bags which were lost it was argued that there was no evidence of wilful neglect, and that the railway company was, therefore, not liable. It is correct that there is no evidence to establish wilful neglect on the part of the railway. As against this it was argued on behalf of Babu Ram that the risk-note B was invalid as it bore date 28th September 1920, whereas the railway receipt was dated 29th September 1920 and it thus could not afford immunity to the railway from its liability as bailee in case the goods were lost. In this respect reliance was placed on a decision of a learned Judge in Chambers: E. I. Ry. v. Jot Ram-Chandra Bhan (A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 162). The argument turns on the fact that the risk-note B commences as follows :

> Whereas the consignment of 64 bags white sugar . . . . for which I/we have received receipts No. of same date is charged at a special reduced rate . . . . I/we, the undersigned do, in consideration of such low charges agree etc.

The form has to be approved by the Governor-General-in-Council and the words "of same date" do occur in it. Whether these words are an essential part of the form : see Ardeshir Lhikaji v. Agent, G. I. P. Ry. Co (3), or merely descriptive and whether the plaintiff can be heard when he alleges that the risk-note is invalid when his cause of action is based on the railway receipt which clearly mentions that the goods were being carried on risk-notes A and B by reason of which a much reduced rate of freight was being charged [see E. I. Ry. Co v. Ram Chabila Prasad (4)] are questions which need not be discussed now. This point was not taken in the trial Court but was only raised before us in the appeal. If it had been taken at the trial it would have been possible for the railway to show that the risk-note was given to it on 29th September and that there was a clerical error as regards the date of the risk-note. I would decline, therefore, to allow this new case to be set up as it would be most inequitable to do so. The result is that the plaintiff is not entitled to anything for the two bags lost, and the appeal must succeed in this respect. The amount decreed must, therefore, be reduced by the sum of Rs. 192.

For these reasons I would accept the appeal to the extent of reducing the sum decreed to Rs. 5,950 with costs to the plaintiff on that amount in both Courts.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order made by the Senior Subordinate Judge of Sialkot under S. 25, Guardians and Wards Act, directing that Mt. Akhtar Begam, a minor girl found by him to be 12 years of age, to be returned to her father Abdul Hamid Khan.

The facts found are that the girl is residing with Wazir Khan and his wife Mt. Hussain. She has been brought up by them since she was about four or five years of age. It appears that Wazir Khan and Abdul Hamid Khan were neighbours in Sialkot and an affection sprang up between Wazir Khan and Mt. Hussain and the girl Akhtar Begam. The result was that she began to live with these two persons in consequence of which her parents expressly agreed that she should reside with and be brought up by the appellants. The mother of the girl subsequently died and her father has married another wife. They had then to leave Sialkot owing to the exigencies of service and the girl was left with Wazir Khan and his wife at Sialkot. It thus appears that for at least seven or eight years the girl has remained with the appellants and the father has taken practically no interest in her welfare.

It has been found that during this time the father visited his daughter only three times and did not contribute a single pie towards her maintenance. It also appears that the appellants looked upon the girl as their own daughter and have brought her up in a manner which perhaps the father would not have been able to do. Both the parties are Pathans and follow the same faith. The application under S. 25, was made on the ground that the father apprehended that the appellants were likely to marry her against his wishes. This has been found by the learned Judge to be wrong. At the same time, it is a fact that the question of the girl's marriage is likely to arise very soon, and as she is nearing the age of puberty under her personal law.

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge considers that it is not desirable that she should reside with the appellants who admittedly are Namahrams, that is to say, they are outside the degree of relationship within which marriages between Mahomedans are prohibited. It is on this ground alone that the learned Judge below has passed the order appealed against.

An attempt was made to settle the matter amicably, as it was eminently a matter for settlement between the parties. But unfortunately after the terms of the compromise had been settled there was some hitch and the negotiations fell through. It becomes necessary, therefore, for me to give my own decision in the case. The matter has caused me considerable anxiety as whatever decision I may give is bound to cause pain to the party against whom the decision will be. On the one hand it is quite clear that if the girl has to leave the present custody and to go to live with her father especially with a stepmother, it will cause her great pain at any rate at the commencement. Similarly, it will be a great disappointment to the appellants who have for eight years brought her up as their own daughter and have relied upon the expectation created by the respondent in their mind that their custody of the girl will never be interfered with. On the other hand, the father is the natural and legal guardian of her daughter and very strong reasons must be found to deprive him of his undoubted right.

I do not propose to discuss the various cases that were cited at the Bar. It appears that where the father owing to a change of religion has allowed the children to remain with persons who profess a different religion and has allowed the children to be brought up in the faith of such persons, then the Courts have declined their custody to the father. These considerations do not apply in this case. It is probable that the girl will not receive the same care with the father as she has done while living with the appellants, who were in a position to devote undivided attention to her comfort and welfare, while the father and the stepmother of the girl have other children to look after. But then it cannot be held that the father will not look after the interest of the girl or that he has any other motive, the application for her custody except the welfare of the daughter according to his own judgment. The girl is not likely to be worse off than she would have been if she had originally remained with her father.

It has been held that a natural and a legal guardian is not ordinarily entitled to divest himself of the responsibility imposed upon him by law and to transfer it to another person, and that if he has transferred such liability to another person, there is nothing to debar him to revoke such transfer unless the Court is satisfied that by his conduct he has debarred himself from revoking such authority and such conduct must have a direct effect for the welfare of the minor: see as to this A. I. R. 1926 All. 687, a case which fully applies to the facts of the present case.

After a careful consideration of this case, I have arrived at the conclusion that no good reasons are shown to enable me to set aside the well-considered judgment of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge. I am constrained under the circumstances to dismiss this appeal, but leave the parties to bear their own costs. The minor will return to her father the respondent, forthwith.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 288 of 1927, Decided on 23rd June 1928, from order of the Addl. Judge, Amritsar, D/- 29th October 1926.

Civil P. C., S. 48—Execution application pending for a long time due to no fault of decree-holder—Another application filed to supplement list of properties to be attached 12 years after date of decree—Second application is in substance a fresh execution application and is barred by time.

A decree was passed on 13th June 1904. The last application for execution was presented on 16th April 1913 when the decree-holder applied for execution by attachment and sale of a garden and certain agricultural land. He tried to have the garden and the agricultural land sold, but on the judgment-debtor's representation that she was a member of an agricultural tribe it was held that these properties could not be sold. The decree-holder then tried to have a temporary alienation of the land effected but the executing Court refused the prayer. It was finally held by a Full Bench that civil Courts had the power to order a temporary alienation of the land of the judgment-debtor. In accordance with that decision steps were taken to effect a temporary alienation and on 2nd October 1923 the Collector sanctioned the temporary alienation of these lands. On 18th November 1925 the decree-holder presented an application in the executing Court stating that the lands of the judgment-debtor which he had attached had not been sold for no fault of his, that the amount which he is likely to get by the temporary alienation of the lands would not be sufficient to meet his demands and that certain other properties of judgment-debtor be attached and sold and the sale proceeds applied towards the satisfaction of his decree. It was argued that the application made on 18th November 1925 was not a fresh application for execution but was really a continuation of the application of 1913 which was still pending and which had kept the decree alive and that this application should be treated to be supplementary to the substantive application for execution filed in 1913.

Held: that the second application was in substance a fresh application to proceed against properties which had not been included in the former application and was barred by time, having been filed after 12 years from the decree: *A. Order of Reference

Tek Chand, J.—This second appeal arises out of proceedings in execution of a decree, which was passed in favour of the appellant on 13th June 1904. The last application for execution was presented on 16th April 1913, when the decree-holder applied for execution by attachment and sale of a tawela, a garden and certain agricultural land. Of these properties the decree-holder was able to sell only the tawela from which he realized Rs 475 on 14th October 1925. He originally tried to have the garden and the agricultural land sold, but on the judgment-debtor's representation that she was a member of an agricultural tribe it was held that these properties could not be sold. The decree-holder then tried to have a temporary alienation of the land effected, but the executing Court refused the prayer. The matter ultimately came before a Full Bench of this Court, when it was held that civil Courts had the power to order a temporary alienation of the land of the judgment-debtor :-See Sardarni Datar Kaur v. Ram Rattan (1). In accordance with that decision steps were taken to effect a temporary alienation and on 2nd October 1923 the Collector sanctioned the temporary alienation of these lands for 15 years at the rate of Rs 500 per year to take effect from Kharif 1929.

On 18th November 1925 the decree-holder presented an application in the executing Court stating that the lands of the judgment-debtor, which he had attached, had not been sold for no fault of his, that the amount realised by the sale of the tawela and that which he is likely to get by the temporary alienation of the lands would not be sufficient to meet his demands, and that two houses belonging to the judgment-debtor in mauza Atari, be attached and sold and the sale proceeds applied towards the satisfaction of his decree. This application was not filed on the form prescribed in O. 21, R. 11 and did not purport to be a fresh application for execution. The houses were accordingly attached, but the judgment-debtor at once objected urging that the houses were not included in the list of the properties attached to the application filed on 16th April 1913, that the present was a fresh application for execution of the decree and having been filed more than 12 years after the date of the decree was time barred. The objection was upheld by the executing Court and the houses released from attachment. The decree-holder's appeal to the District Judge having been unsuccessful he has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

Mr. Harcharn Das Kumar argues that the application to attach the houses made on 18th November 1925 was not a fresh application for execution, but was really a continuation of the application of 1913, which was still pending and which had kept the decree alive. It was admitted that the two houses had not been included in that application, but it was urged that as execution could not be successfully taken against the properties sepcified in that application by reason of causes for which the decree-holder was in no way responsible, it was open to him to ask the Court to proceed against other properties and that this application should be treated to be supplementary to the substantive application for execution filed in 1913 In support of this contention a number of authorities have been cited. In Gnanendra Kumar Rai v. Shayama Sunder Jen (2) an application was originally made to proceed against certain properties, but on an objection taken by the judgment-debtor it was discovered that execution could not legally proceed against those properties. The decree-holder accordingly made an application requesting the Court to accept a further list of properties and prayed that execution should proceed by attachment and sale of these properties. It was held by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court that in such circumstances the decree-holder could not be confined to the properties he had originally specified, but that it was open to him to ask the Court to proceed against the properties specified in his further and supplementary list. The same view was taken by another Division Bench of the same Court in Mohini Mohan Sirkar v. Navadwip Chandra Biswas (3), where it was decided that where, in an application for execution of a decree made in accordance with law, execution cannot be successfully taken against the properties specified in the application by reason of causes for which the decree-holder was in no way responsible he should not be confined to the properties first specified but it is open to him to ask the Court to proceed against other properties specified in his further supplementary list. The former of these rulings has been followed in two cases by the Patna High Court in Ram Sumran Prasad v. Ram Bahadur (4) and Ghanrasi Mahasarick v. Bhagan Sahu (5). In each of them the decree-holder was allowed to file supplementary lists of properties to be attached. The Madras High Court, in Mangamma Nayakuralu v B. M. Ramdasappi Nayanimavary (A. I. R 1925 Mad. p. 981) has also taken the same view. For the respondent the only authority cited is a Single Bench decision, Haru v. Gurcharn (6). The facts of that case were, however, totally different and the point now urged was neither raised nor discussed in that judgment. The trend of judicial authority seems to be in favour of the view propounded on behalf of the appellant, but as no authoritative ruling of this Court has been brought to my notice and as the question is of considerable importance I think it necessary to refer this case to a larger Bench.

A further question to be considered is whether the rulings above cited (if they lay down sound law) would govern a case like the present in which a temporary alienation of the land of the judgment-debtor has been ordered, but where the amount payable to the decree-holder therefrom has yet to be realized.

Accordingly I refer this case for decision to Division Bench. The office is directed to fix an actual date of hearing before a Division Bench within two months from this date. No paper book need be printed. Two typed copies of the judgments, and the grounds of appeal and the referring order should be prepared.

Judgment

Tek Chand, J.—The facts of this case are given in defail in my order dated 8th December 1927, and it is not necessary to recapitulate them here. Briefly it may be stated that on 13th June 1904, the appellant obtained a money decree against the respondent recoverable from the estate of her deceased husband. The last application for execution was made on 16th April 1913 and is still pending in the executing Court. The prayer made in this application was for realization of the decretal amount by sale of a tawela, a garden and certain agricultural land. After lengthy litigation a temporary alienation of the agricultural land for a period of 15 years beginning with the kharif of 1929 has been sanctioned and the tawela sold. Against the sale of the tawela objections have been filed by the judgment-debtor and are still pending.

While these proceedings in connexion with the application for execution dated 16th April 1913 were going on, the decree-holder applied on 18th November 1925, praying that as the land and garden which he had attached in 1913 could not be sold for no fault of his, and as the amount which is likely to be realized by the temporary alienation of the agricultural land and the sale of the tawela will be wholly insufficient to discharge the decree, he be allowed to attach and sell certain other house property belonging to the respondent's husband. This application was not made in the form prescribed for applications for executions in O. 21, R. 11, but purports to be an application merely asking for permission to file a supplementary list of properties against which execution proceedings, which had been started on 15th April 1913 and which were still pending before the Court, should be continued. The judgment-debtor objected that the application was in reality a fresh application for execution and having been made more than 12 years after the date of the decree was time barred. This objection has been upheld by both the Courts below and the decree-holder has preferred a second appeal to this Court.

The question for decision is whether the application of the 18th November 1925 is a fresh application for execution or is a continuation of the application of 1913, which is still pending and which has kept the decree alive. For the appellant reliance is placed on a decision of the Calcutta High Court reported as Ghanendra Kumar Rai v. Shayama Sunder Jen (2) which has been followed in several rulings of that and other High Courts and which at first sight supports his contention. On a closer examination of the facts of those cases it appears, however, that the rule laid down therein is not applicable to this case.

In Ghanendra Kumar Rai v. Shayama Sunder Jen (2) the decree was passed in November 1911, the last application for execution made on 23rd November 1914, and the application to file a supplementary list of properties was presented in January 1915. This last application was, therefore, made within 12 years of the decree and was not barred under S. 48, Civil P. C. There was thus no legal bar against its being treated as a continuation of the application for execution made on 23rd November 1914. This case was considered and distinguished in Hayatunnessa v. Ajhia Khatun (7), where it was held that the decree-holder cannot be allowed by an application, made after the expiry of the period of limitation for execution of the decree, to add other properties to the list given in his original application presented within the period of limitation. In that case the decree had been passed on 4th July 1908 and an application for execution had been presented on 20th June 1920. While proceedings started on this application were going on, the decree-holdder on 21st August 1920 applied for permission to be allowed to add certain other properties to the list given in his original application. It was held that the application could not be treated as a continuation of the application of 20th June 1920, and having been made more than 12 years after the date of the decree must be rejected as time barred. Ohiduddin v. Emperor (8) was distinguished on the ground that in that case the application to add to the list of the properties mentioned in the original application was made within 12 years of the decree. The other rulings cited by the appellant's learned counsel are Mohini Mohan Sirkar v. Navadvip Chandra Biswas (3), Ram Sumran Prasad v. Ram Bahadur (4), and Chanrasi v. Bhagan Sahu (5). and A. I. R. 1925 Mad. 981. The facts of all these cases were substantially similar to those of Ganendra Kumar Rai v. Shayama Sunder Jen (2) and in each of them the subsequent application had been made within 12 years of the passing of the decree. For this reason the rule laid down therein is inapplicable to the case before us.

(7) A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 131=50 Cal. 743,

In this case the decree was, as already stated, passed in 1904 and the last application for execution made in 1913. The present application asking for permission to file a supplementary list of the properties against which the decree-holder wanted to proceed was not made till the 18th November 1925, which is more than 21 years after the date of the decree. If the contention of the appellant in a case like this were accepted, the clear provisions of S. 48 will be rendered nugatory. The application in question was in substance a fresh application to proceed against properties which had not been included in any of the former applications, and is barred by time.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed, but the parties shall bear their own costs in this Court.

Bhide, J.—I agree.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 482 of 1928 in Civil Appeal No. 2663 of 1927, Decided on 14th June 1928, from order of 1st Cl. Sub Judge, Lahore, D/- 10th June 1928.

Civil P. C., S. 47—Application to set aside dismissal of previous execution application but without stating provisions of law under which it was made—Application dismissed as being "informal"—Order of dismissal is not appealable—Failure to treat such application amounts to failure to exercise jurisdiction under Civil P. C., S. 115.

Certain decree-holder made an application to the execution Court for setting aside an order dismissing a previous application for execution without stating under what provisions of the law such application was being made. The execution Court dismissed the application holding the same to be an "informal" application. The decree-holder appealed under S. 47, Civil P. C.

Held: that the order appealed against was not an appealable order and hence no appeal could lie. [P 812 C 2]

Held: further that in such cases Court should look to substance rather than to form and that the application ought to have been treated as one for review and that in not doing so the Court failed to exercise jurisdiction which was vested in it by law within S. 115.

Judgment. — The Lahore Electric Supply Co. Ltd., obtained a decree against the respondent for a sum of over Rs. 16,000 from the Court of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Lahore. The defendant preferred an appeal to this Court, but it was dismissed in default on 8th December 1924. An application was made to have the order of dismissal set aside. This application was also dismissed on 24th March 1925.

On 27th August 1926 the decree-holder filed an application to execute the decree in the Court of Lala Hardial, Subordinate Judge, 1st Class. In this application it was stated that an appeal had been preferred by the judgment-debtor to the High Court, but that it had been finally dismissed on 24th March 1925. The office reported that the decree of the trial Court was passed in 1920 and the application appeared to be time barred. The decree-holder's counsel was directed to show that the application was within time. On 11th January 1927, the application was dismissed as time barred, it being remarked that the counsel for the decree-holder had not "referred to any authority showing the case to be within time."

On 8th February 1927 the decree-holder made an application to have the previous order of 11th January 1927 set aside, it being stated that a copy of the judgment of the High Court dismissing the appeal was being filed which would show that the application for execution was not time barred. It was not stated under what provision of the law this application had been made. Along with the application a copy of the order of a Division Bench of this Court, dated 8th December 1924, dismissing the judgment-debtor's appeal with costs was filed. On this Lala Hardial recorded an order on 5th March 1927 stating that from the copy produced the application appeared to be within time and that notice should issue to the opposite party to show cause why the application for execution be not treated as having been filed within time. The judgment-debtors were not served and the case had to be adjourned on several occasions. In the meantime Lala Hardial was transferred and was succeeded by Lala Diwan Chand, before whom the case was laid on 10th June 1927, in the presence of the counsel for the decree-holder, the judgment-debtor being absent. The learned Judge dismissed the application, holding that the previous order of 11th January 1927, had neither been appealed against nor had an application for review thereof been filed. He considered that the application of 8th February 1927, was an "informal" application to have the previous order of 11th January set aside on which no action could be taken.

Against this order an appeal under S. 47, Civil P. C., has been preferred by the decree-holder to this Court. Mr. Carden Noad, on behalf of the respondent, raises a preliminary objection that the appeal is not competent. After hearing both counsel I am of opinion that the objection must be sustained. The order under appeal is not such an order as would be appealable to this Court against which an appeal would lie under S. 47. I, therefore, hold that the appeal is not competent.

In the memorandum of appeal the decree-holder's counsel had stated that in case no appeal lies, the memorandum may be treated as a petition for revision. This prayer is opposed by Mr. Carden Noad; but after hearing him at length I am of opinion that the learned Judge of the lower Court (Lala Diwan Chand) has not appreciated the real nature of the application of 8th February 1927, and has erroneously declined to exercise jurisdiction which was vested in him by law. I. therefore, treat the petition as one for revision and proceed to decide it as such.

It is no doubt true that the application of 8th February 1927 is not described as an application for review, but, as has been pointed out already, no provision of the law under which it was made was mentioned in it. If the learned Judge had any doubt as to the nature of the application the proper course for him to follow was to call upon the petitioner to state definitely under what order and rule of the Code it had been made He should not have dismissed it merely because it was an "informal application." The operative part of the application leaves no doubt as to its real nature. It is described as an application to set aside the order of 11th January 1927, which had held the petition for execution to be time barred. With the application the petitioner had filed a certified copy of the judgment of the High Court dated 8th December 1924 to show that the execution proceedings had been commenced within time. The application was in substance one for review of the previous order and ought to have been heard and disposed of as such. The learned Government Advocate is unable to argue that this is not so. As has been pointed out in Abdul Rahman v. Shahana (1), the Court in such cases should look to the substance rather than the form of the applications. I, hold that the application of 8th February 1927 was one for review in which the Judge who had passed the previous order (Lala Hardial) had already issued notice to the opposite party to show cause why his previous order should not be set aside. His successor, Lala Diwan Chand, should have treated the application as one for review and disposed of it as such. In refusing to do so, he has clearly failed to exercise a jurisdiction which was vested in him by law.

Accordingly I accept the petition for revision, set aside the order of the lower Court and remit the case to him for disposal in accordance with law. It should be clearly understood that I am not expressing any opinion on the merits of the application. Whether or not the grounds disclosed in the application are sufficient to justify a review is a matter which will be decided and disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge after hearing both parties. Court-fee on appeal shall be refunded; other costs shall be costs in the cause.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 568 of 1928, Decided on 8th June 1928, from order of Sess. Judge, Lahore, D/- 28th February 1928.

Penal Code, S. 160—Section postulates commission of definite assault or breach of peace.

Accused was quarrelling with a debtor. There was no evidence of exchange of blows. The lower Court convicted accused because the accused was quarrelling with his debtor in the public street and but for police intervention there was danger of breach of peace.

Held: that whatever offence the accused might have committed he was not within the purview of S. 160, as the section postulates the commission of a definite assault or breach of peace. [P 813 C 2]

Hakumat Rai—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—One Ganesh Das, son of Devi Ditta Mal Khatri of Lahore city, has been convicted, at a summary trial, of an offence under S. 160, I. P. C. and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 30. The record being summary is necessarily meagre but, in my judgment, such as it is, it does not warrant the conclusions arrived at. An "affray" is defined in S. 159, I. P. C., in the following terms:

> When two or more persons, by fighting in a public place disturb the public peace, they are said to commit an affray and S. 160 prescribes the punishment for the commission of an affray. In my judgment the section postulates the the commission of a definite assault or breach of the peace. The record of the evidence in this case shows that Ganesh Das was having a "quarrel" with one of his debtors. No witness says that any blows were exchanged, and the finding of the Magistrate is that Ganesh Das and Karam Chand were quarrelling in the public street over money matters and that but for police intervention there was danger of breach of peace. Whatever offence Ganesh Das may have committed it is not one within the purview of S. 160, I. P. C.

I therefore accept this petition, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fine, if paid be refunded.

Evidence Act, S. 115—Plaintiff allowed to amend plaint on payment of costs—Defendant accepting payment cannot challenge the order in appeal.

A party who has adopted an order of the Court and acted under it cannot after he has enjoyed a benefit under the order contend that it is valid for one purpose and invalid for another. [P 814 C 2]

Defendants resisted the suit for rendition of accounts filed by the plaintiffs, pleading inter alia that no suit for accounts was maintainable on the facts alleged. The trial Court upheld that plea and dismissed the suit. On appeal the Court agreed with the trial Court that a suit for accounts was not maintainable on the facts alleged, but allowed the plaintiffs to amend the plaint on payment of Rs. 150 as costs to the defendants, and remanded the case for retrial. The defendants took the costs but filed a second appeal from the order of remand.

Judgment.—This was a suit for rendition of accounts. Plaintiffs alleged that they had been appointed treasurers for the Multan District by the defendants and that they had deposited Rs. 25,000 with the defendants as security. The appointment was subsequently cancelled and Rs. 20,000 were refunded. Plaintiffs claimed the balance with interest, but framed the suit as one for accounts on the ground that the defendants claimed certain deductions on account of payments made by them on behalf of the plaintiffs.

Defendants resisted the suit, pleading inter alia that no suit for accounts was maintainable on the facts alleged. The trial Court upheld that latter plea and dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge agreed with the trial Court that a suit for accounts was not maintainable on the facts alleged, but allowed the plaintiffs to amend the plaint on payment of Rs. 150 as costs to the defendants and remanded the case for retrial.

The defendants have filed a second appeal from the order of remand. A preliminary objection is raised that the appeal is not competent, as the appellants have acquiesced in the order passed by the learned Additional Judge by accepting the costs awarded to them. The following authorities have been cited in support of this contention : Mani Lal v. Harendra Lal Roy (1), Banku Chandra v. Marium Begam (2), and Ramaswami Chettiar v. Chidambaram Chettiar (3).

It is not disputed that the costs were deposited by the plaintiffs and were paid to the appellants on their counsel's application before the filing of the present appeal. There was no protest of any kind on the part of the appellants in accepting the costs.

(2) [1917] 21 C. W. N. 232=37 I. C. 804.
(3) A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 1009.

In Mani Lal v. Harendra Lal Roy (1) the learned Judges referred to Tinkler v. Hilder (4) and other English authorities and laid down that the principle to be deduced from the authorities was that a party who has adopted an order of the Court and acted under it cannot after he has enjoyed a benefit under the order contend that it is valid for one purpose and invalid for another. In the circumstances of that particular case, the learned Judges held the principle to be inapplicable as the appellants had practically been compelled to accept the costs. But it was observed that the case would have been different if the costs had been ordered to be deposited in Court and then the appellants had taken them of their own accord.

In the present case the appellants' counsel applied for payment of the costs which had been deposited and thus adopted and took benefit of one part of the order. The costs had been granted on account of the privilege of amendment given to the other side and not merely for an adjournment.

The principle laid down in Mani Lal v. Harendra Lal Roy (1), was followed in Banku Chandra v. Maniram (2) and also Ramaswami Chettiar v Chidambaram Chettiar (3). The facts of the latter case were practically on all fours with the present case.

The learned counsel for the appellants relied on Raghu Mal v. Bandu (5), in which it was held that an appellant who has obtained and executed a decree in respect of a part of his claim is not precluded from prosecuting an appeal with respect to the rest of his claim. This ruling is clearly distinguishable as the appellants in executing such a decree are only reaping a benefit which they would be entitled to in any case. There is therefore no reason in equity in such circumstances why they should not be allowed to prosecute their appeal with respect to the rest of their claim : cf. Jogesh Chandra v. Fazar Ali (6).

The learned counsel for the appellants referred me to Ghulam Mahomed v. Mehta Chandra (7), but this point was not discussed therein.

Second Appeal No. 2757 of 1927, Decided on 22nd June 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Lahore, D/- 22nd August 1927.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Father—Money decree against father is binding on son unless debt is immoral or illegal.

A money decree against the father of a joint family in satisfaction of debt not incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose is binding on the son : A. I. R. 1924 Oudh 394 and A. I. R. 1925 All. 180, Ref. [P 815 C 2]

Where a mortgage decree provides for the recovery of the balance due from the mortgagors if the mortgaged property was found insufficient to discharge the decretal amount there is a declaration in the decree that a debt is due from the mortgagor to the mortgagee for which mortgagor's son can be made liable. [P 816 C 1]

Fakir Chand and Parkash Chandra—for Appellant.

Durga Das—for Respondents.

Dalip Singh, J.—In this case Thakar Das and Nathu Mal, sons of Badri Mal, mortgaged a house and agricultural land to defendant 3, Diwan Krishan Kishore, on 10th June 1921, for a sum of Rs. 7,000. Defendant 3 obtained a preliminary decree on 7th March 1924 for sale of the mortgage properties and for recovery of any balance due from the mortgagors personally if the sale proceeds were insufficient to satisfy the mortgage amount. It may be observed here that the mortgage contained a clause for personal liability of the mortgagors and the plaint also contained a prayer for a personal decree against the mortgagors. The decree was in the usual form under O. 34 for sale. The decree was made final on 23rd December 1924, though it seems that no formal decree-sheet was drawn up.

The plaintiffs are the minor sons of Thakar Das and Nathu Mal, who are impleaded as defendants 1 and 2. The plaintiffs sue for a declaration that the mortgage was not for any family benefit, or for any antecedent debt, and that the decree obtained by defendant 3 for sale of the mortgaged property is not binding on them, and they ask for a perpetual injunction restraining defendant 3 from executing his decree against the properties. The plaintiffs claim to be members of a joint Hindu family with defendants 1 and 2, and allege that the properties mortgaged belong to the joint Hindu family. Various defences were raised by defendant 3 which are all concluded by findings of facts and which are not contested before us. It was held by the trial Court that the plaintiffs are members of a joint Hindu family along with defendants 1 and 2, that the land in suit was the property of the joint Hindu family and that the mortgage in suit was not executed for valid necessity or to pay any antecedent debt, or for the family benefit, but that the debt was not incurred for any illegal or immoral purpose. Upon these findings the trial Court held that the properties were liable to be sold in execution on the authority of A. I. R. 1924 Oudh 394 and Gajadhar Pande v. Jadubir Pande (1).

On appeal the learned Additional District Judge held that the plaintiffs were entitled to challenge the mortgage decree obtained by defendant 3 against defendants 1 and 2, and that on the findings of facts the mortgage did not bind the plaintiffs, and he, therefore, gave the plaintiffs a decree against defendant 3 for the declaration and the injunction sought for. Defendant 3 has come in second appeal.

Now it is settled law that an alienation made without valid necessity is not binding on the members of the joint Hindu family. It is also settled law that the sons of a Hindu father are bound to discharge their father's debts and that the whole of the joint family property may be sold in execution of a decree obtained against the father. The point is perfectly clear as regards a money decree. The only point, therefore, that arises in this case is whether any distinction can be drawn between a mortgage decree and a money decree. It is conceded that if a money decree had been obtained the suit of the plaintiffs would have failed. Now in the circumstances of this case, as has been pointed out, the decree does provide for the recovery of the balance of the money due from the mortgagors if the mortgaged property is insufficient to discharge the decretal amount. It seems to me, therefore, that in a mortgage decree of this kind there is a declaration that a debt is due from the defendants to the mortgagee. In Hindu law all that is necessary is that there should be a debt due from the father, and the fact that a debt is due is explicit in the mortgage decree obtained. I would, therefore, dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—I concur. The appeal is accepted and the suit brought by the plaintiffs is dismissed with costs

Letters Patent Appeal No. 347 of 1925, Decided on 28th March 1928, from judgment of Dilip Singh, J., reported as A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 641.

Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 2 (3)—Consent decree—Judgment-debtor leasing his land in lieu of amount due to decree-holder and agreeing to be personally liable in case of failure to execute lease—Decree-holder applying for recovery of money alleging failure by judgment-debtor to execute lease—Court can adjudicate that judgment-debtor had complied with the condition in the decree.

A consent decree was passed between the plaintiff and the defendant, by which the defendant agreed to grant, and the plaintiff agreed to take, in lieu of the amount found to be due to the latter from the former, and the costs of the suit, a lease of the defendants' land for a term of 20 years. In the event of non-compliance with this clause of the decree within one year, the decree-holder was entitled to recover the money from the judgment-debtor. Decree-holder applied for the recovery of the money from the judgment-debtor alleging that the judgment-debtor failed to execute the lease. This allegation was controverted by the judgment-debtor.

Held: that O. 21. R. 2, sub-R. (3), Civil P. C., did not preclude the Court from adjudicating upon the contention that the judgment-debtor had complied with the condition mentioned in the decree as the rule had no application to such a decree. [P 816 C 2]

Judgment.—On 16th February 1923 a decree was passed in favour of the appellants in accordance with the terms of a compromise arrived at between the parties. The relevant portion of the decree may be shortly stated: The defendants agreed to grant, and the plaintiffs agreed to take, in lieu of Rs. 5,218 the amount found to be due to the latter from the former, and the costs of the suit, a lease of the defendants' land for a term of 20 years. In the event of non-compliance with this clause of the decree within one year, the decree-holders were entitled to recover the money from the judgment-debtors.

On 11th February 1925 the decree-holders made an application asking for the recovery of the money from the judgment-debtors, and in that application they stated that the latter had not complied with the clause of the decree requiring them to execute a lease in favour of the former and to deliver possession of the property to them. This allegation was controverted by the judgment-debtors, and the question for consideration is whether O 21, R. 2, sub-R. (3), Civil P. C., precludes the Court from adjudicating upon the contention that the judgment-debtors had complied with the condition mentioned in the decree.

Now, the terms of the decree make it clear that the personal liability of the judgment-debtors does not arise unless they fail to execute the lease in favour of the decree-holders and to give possession to them of the land covered by the lease. In other words, there is only a conditional liability to pay the money, and the decree-holders are not entitled to rely upon Cl. 1 of the decree unless it is shown that the judgment-debtors have failed to perform the obligation imposed upon them by Cl. 1. To such a decree O. 21, R 2 (3), Civil P. C., has absolutely no application.

The judgment of the single Judge is accordingly affirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

First Appeal No. 2804 of 1923, Decided on 1st November 1927, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Delhi, D/- 12th November 1923.

* Contract Act, S. 73—Sale of goods—Contract providing penalty for failure to accept draft or making payment at maturity—Failure to take delivery of goods on intimation of arrival—Seller can claim difference between contract price and that on date of default.

In a contract for purchase of goods it was provided that in the event of the purchaser failing to accept the draft on presentation or failing to pay at maturity the seller could sell the goods on the account of the purchaser who was liable for any deficiency and that in case of need, seller's invoice could be taken in lieu of draft. The contract did not provide any special penalty for failure to take delivery after intimation of arrival. The invoice was sent. This was followed by an intimation of arrival and on receipt of this intimation a breach took place.

Held: that under S. 73 the vendor was entitled to damages as represented by the difference between the two prices, the contract price and the price on the date of default.

Sardha Ram and Jagan Nath Bhandari—for Appellants.

Kishen Dayal and Shamair Chand—for Respondent.

Harrison, J.—Plaintiff in this case, one Kidar Nath of the firm of Ram Chand Kanyaya Lal brought this suit against the firm of Narinjan Das Naini Mal claiming damages for non-acceptance of certain goods. The main fact that the defendant had refused to take delivery of the goods was admitted. The plaintiff contended that, in the first place, he was entitled to damages on the basis of a resale under S. 107, Contract Act. If this were decided against him he claimed to be entitled to the same damages in virtue of the terms of the contract, and, as a last resort, that he was entitled to the difference between the contract price and the price on the date of default.

It was found that he was entitled to no damages under the first head as there had been no appropriation, that there was no difference, on which damage could be assessed under the third head, and that under the second head he was entitled to his relief on the strength of the terms of the contract. A decree was given for Rs. 6,523-1-9 instead of Rs. 6,548 the amount claimed.

On appeal only two points were pressed: it was contended that the condition that the terms of the office of Gordhan Das Ram Gopal were binding upon both parties did not include the addition to the printed form which was made by Messrs. Gordhan Das Ram Gopal, because of the difficulties experienced during the war in shipment and delivery of goods and which extended the period of grace from ten days to two months.

We have no hesitation in finding that this clause, which was deliberately added, is as much part of the terms of the firm of Messrs. Gordhan Das Ram Gopal as any other, and we agree with the reasoning of the lower Court on which it has come to this conclusion.

The second point was that the wording of the contract does not provide for nor authorizes resale of the goods under any circumstances. The words are as follows:

3, should I (we) fail to accept the draft on presentation and (or) fail to pay at maturity, I (we) hereby authorize you or your agents to sell the goods by public auction or private sale when and where you like after having given me (us) ten days' notice of your intention to do so and I (we) bind myself (ourselves) to make good to you any loss or deficiency sustained through my (our) draft including all charges and interest at 6 per cent per annum. I (we) waiving all claims to profit should there be any. In case of public auction printed notices of sale to be distributed in the Delhi market at least ten days before sale.

This clause is to be read with Cl. 1 which runs as follows:

1. I (we) hereby agree to purchase from you the undermentioned goods at the limits and terms stated below and for reimbursement I (we) authorize you or your correspondents to draw upon me (us) at 30 days' sight with all relative shipping documents attached for payment. In case of need sellers' invoice to be taken in lieu of draft which drafts I (we) engage and bind myself (ourselves) to accept on presentation and pay at maturity notwithstanding any objection, I (we) may have regarding or on account of any variations whatever from terms of the indent, such objection to be settled by arbitration as provided for below. If draft is paid before maturity a rebate of interest is to be granted at the rate of 6 per cent per annum. Draft to be made payable at.

Clause 3 deals with the consequences of default. In the event of the purchaser failing to accept the draft on presentation or failing to pay at maturity the seller is authorized to sell the goods on the account of the purchaser who is liable for any deficiency.

The question is what interpretation is to be placed on the word "to accept the draft on presentation and fail to pay at maturity." The trial Court has found and counsel for the respondents supports the finding that these words are to be read as covering the subsequent failure to take delivery on the goods being offered. He relies on the passage in the first clause. "In case of need, sellers' invoice to be taken in lieu of draft," and he argues that the presentation of the invoice is merely an alternative for the presentation of the draft and that the same result must be taken to flow from the failure of the purchaser to take delivery in accordance with such invoice. He would have us read the words "fail to pay at maturity" as covering and including such failure. In interpreting a document of this nature we are precluded from going beyond the clear wording of the terms and conditions entered therein. It is not open to us to put an equitable interpretation on the agreement or to say that it is only right the purchaser should be penalized for refusing delivery even more than for refusing to accept the draft. In this case, owing to the fact that neither of the parties was the shipper nor the first purchaser, there is no question of presenting a draft. The invoice was sent. This was followed by an intimation of arrival and it was on receipt of this intimation that a breach took place in accordance with the terms of the contract. Ex P-1, the written contract, does not provide any special penalty for a breach under these circumstances and the only consequences, which can flow are those provided in the Contract Act. Under S. 107, if there had been appropriation, the seller is entitled to dispose of the goods. As there was no appropriation he was not entitled to do so. Under S. 73, he was entitled to damages as represented by the difference between the two prices and he has not shown that there was any such difference. He is, therefore, entitled to no damages at all and we must accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. As defendant put forward a large numer of pleas which he has been unable to prove, we order that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1228 of 1928, Decided on 14th July 1928, from order of 1st Class Magistrate, Sheikhupura, D/- 23rd May 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 145—Applicability.

Section 145 applies only to disputes about actual physical possession and not to disputes about joint possession. [P 819 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 145—Civil Court giving joint possession to petitioners and opposite party—Appeal to Privy Council pending—Opposite party applying for partition—Revenue officer effecting partition—Partition proceedings quashed by Financial Commissioner directing status quo ante to be restored—Order not obeyed—Magistrate attaching whole property under S. 145—Proceedings of Magistrate are without jurisdiction and must be quashed.

The civil Court decreed joint possession to the petitioners and the opposite party, an appeal against which decree was pending before the Privy Council. The opposite party applied for partition which was made by a revenue officer and possession of portion of the land was given to the opposite party. The partition proceedings were subsequently quashed by the Financial Commissioner who directed that the statu: quo ante be restored. The Collector, however, did not wish to do so and at his instance the Magistrate attached the whole of the land and appointed a receiver under S. 145, holding that there was a dispute about the whole area :

Order.—Let notice issue to the other party. The Government Advocate has been told that Crown representation is necessary. Let a very early date be given, say in the second week of the vacation. All the records should be sent for.

In the meantime I have been moved to suspend at once the order attaching 15,173 kanals and 14 marlas of the petitioners' land, the crops thereon, etc., under S. 145 (4), Criminal P. C., and appointing a manager thereof. The order appears to be uncalled for and illegal. No emergency seems to have arisen, as litigation has been going on for eight years. The opposite party have succeeded in getting a decree for 200 ghumaons out of the total area and this decree is under appeal to the Privy Council. The opposite party applied to the revenue authorities to be put in possession of this area in certain so-called partition proceedings. It is alleged that it was held that the old field numbers could not be identified with the present ones and an area of 288 ghumaons, (i. e., 88 ghumaons in excess) was given instead, at a place alleged to be nowhere near the proper place.

These partition proceedings have been completely quashed by the revenue Courts of the Commissioner and Financial Commissioner and the Collector was directed to restore matters to the status quo ante. He has purported to do so, but held that the opposite party was in joint possession with the petitioners by reason of their being cosharers, and a Magistrate, 1st Class, has taken proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., against the petitioners. The Magistrate first held that he could not appoint a receiver under S. 146 (2), Criminal P. C., as Rahmat Ali of the opposite party had been given possession and was in possession of the 288 ghumaons, while the petitioners were in possession of the rest of the land. Proceedings there ended, but only for a short time. The same Magistrate passed a fresh order under S. 145, Criminal P. C , on 23rd May 1928, stating that there was an immediate danger of a breach of the peace due to disputed possession of land, and he ordered it to be attached under S. 145 (4), Criminal P. C., and later he appointed a manager. This time he attached all the land of the petitioners amounting to about 2,000 ghumaons out of which, of course, the opposite party will be entitled, on a proper partition effected by the revenue authorities, to possession of 200 ghumaons somewhere in the area, subject to the appeal to the Privy Council. Admittedly the petitioners were in possession of all of it till the opposite party was put in possession of 288 ghumaons in 1927 by the Collector whose proceedings have, however, been completely and finally quashed by the Financial Commissioner. Even now it is clear that, when the Magistrate passed his order, the petitioners were in physical and legal possession of the whole area except the 288 ghumaons, wrongly given by the Collector to the opposite party, and which he was directed to return to the petitioners, though this had not actually been done, Rahmat Ali still asserting that he was in possession of the 288 ghumaons. As he has been lawfully ordered to surrender that possession and does not wish to do so, it is he and he alone who appears to be in the wrong and no question apparently arises under S. 145, Criminal P. C. Further, the opposite party are actually suing for mesne profits, thus showing that they never had possession till wrongly given possession of 288 ghumaons by the Collector.

Lastly, S. 145 is concerned solely with the fact of actual physical possession and any question as to whether possession is on behalf of others or in one's own right is quite irrelevant. In these very exceptional circumstances, and as there appears to have been a very grave miscarriage of justice, the criminal law apparently being set in motion to help the opposite party and to overawe the petitioners, I think that this is a proper case for me to take action immediately especially as it is stated that the cattle of the petitioners are now unable to get food. The manager is said even to be selling the petitioners' old stacks of bhusa (fodder), while the petitioners have to buy fodder for their cattle. I accordingly suspend for the time being the appointment of a manager or receiver as regards all the land except the 288 ghumaons wrongly given by the Collector to the opposite party in the so-called partition proceedings, as they retained that area to the end in spite of the orders of the Financial Commissioner and Commissioner and I direct the Magistrate to see that, with the exception of that area, the manager, do forthwith and without fail surrender all the rest of the land to the petitioners. At the hearing the opposite party will be given an opportunity to urge that the manager should be re-appointed, but this concession must not be treated as allowing the trial Magistrate to keep the manager on till the hearing. The manager must at once hand over all the land except the 288 ghumaons demarcated and defined in the partition proceedings, to the partitioners. Any questions as to his remuneration can be settled later and if there is any dispute as to the 288 ghumaons, I direct that the whole area be handed over.

The district authorities have an easy remedy in their hands, if they do as a fact apprehend a breach of the peace. The only persons, who apparently contemplate such a breach, are the original petitioners, who do not wish to lose the 288 ghumaons which have been ordered in due course of law to be taken back from them, and action can be taken against them, if necessary, under S. 107, Criminal P. C., and against any others who are proved to be contemplating a breach of the peace. This order must be comunicated at once to the Magistrate concerned.

Judgment.—My order dated 23rd June 1928, will be read as part of this order. That order has been carried out, and the Magistrate has removed the manager from possession of 15,173 kanals 14 marlas of land, except the 288 ghumaons which for the time being were allowed in my last order to remain with the manager.

I have now heard counsel and am clear that the proceedings of the Magistrate are without jurisdiction and must be quashed. The civil Court gave the opposite party joint possession of 15,173 kanals 14 marlas the opposite party's share of which amounted only to 288 ghumaons. It would appear that, having done this, the executing Court did all it could. It was then for the opposite party to apply to the revenue officials for the partition of their share of the land and they did so. They were successful at first in getting a specific area of 288 ghumaons separated off by the revenue officials, and possession of this area was given to them. The head of the Revenue Department, however, namely, the Financial Commissioner, revised these orders and completely quashed the partition proceedings, directing that the status quo ante should be restored. This meant that the petitioners before me should have been restored to their previous physical possession of the 288 ghumaons by the Collector in obedience to the order of the head of the department, which order could be passed under the provisions of the Punjab Revenue Act. The Collector does not appear to have wished to do so, and it was at his instance that the Magistrate took action under S. 145, Criminal P. C. In the course of the proceedings the Magistrate not only attached the 288 ghumaons, which had been separated from the rest of the area in the abortive partition proceedings, but the whole area of 15,173 kanals 14 marlas, holding that there was a dispute about the whole area. There is ample authority for the proposition that S. 145 applies only to disputes about actual physical possession and not to disputes about joint possession. The actual physical possession of the whole area was with the petitioners up to the time that 288 ghumaons were given by the Collector to the opposite party and all the land except the 288 ghumaons was in the actual physical possession of the petitioners at the time the order was passed. No question, therefore, can arise about any portion of the land except possibly the 288 ghumaons. Even this latter area has been ordered to be restored by competent authority to the petitioners, so that there is no dispute as to who is entitled to its possession. The proceedings, therefore, regarding the whole area were without jurisdiction. I accept the petition, set aside all the proceedings and orders of the Magistrate, 1st Class, and direct that they should end. The manager should now be directed to give up possession of the 288 ghumaons as his appointment automatically comes to an end. I have already indicated at the end of my first order the remedy in the hands of the district authorities if they do, as a fact, apprehand a breach of the peace.

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Rattan Lal for B. R. Puri and Nanak Chand—for Respondent.

Agha Haidar, J.—This is an appeal by the Local Government under S. 417, Criminal P. C., against the order passed by a Magistrate, 1st Class, acquitting the respondent, Ram Rang, of an offence under S. 420, I. P. C.

Ram Rang carries on the business of a Sahukar at Maghiana. According to the prosecution, Mehr Nur Muhammad, a Zamindar of Mauza Qaim Bharwana, met the accused Ram Rang on 27th January, 1927 corresponding to 15th Magh, Sambat 1983 in Maghiana bazar, and asked him if he could advance a loan of Rs. 1000 to him. Ram Rang agreed to advance the money and told Mehr Nur Muhammad to come to his shop the next morning. Mehr Nur Muhammad accompanied by Abdulla, a servant of his father and one Ahmad, tailor, went to Ram Rang's shop and asked for the loan. Ram Rang said that he was not prepared to advance a sum of Rs. 1,000 only, but that he would like to lend a sum of Rs. 2,000. He put forward the further condition that Mehr Nur Muhammad should accept liability for a sum of Rs. 2,500, and write out and sign an entry to this effect. This extra sum of Rs. 500 was to be made up in this way : Rs. 480 on account of interest for one year at the rate of Rs. 2% per mensem; and Rs. 20 as chilkana, total Rs. 500; Mehr NurMuhammad fell in with the proposal and agreed to take Rs. 2,000 in cash and to write a nawan in Ram Rang's bahi for Rs. 2,500 as detailed above. These terms being settled, one Wazir Chand Khatri, who was staying with Ram Rang at his shop, was asked to write out the entry embodying the terms of the contract entered into between the parties. This Wazir Chand is a native of village Chela which is at a distance of ten kos from Maghiana and had come to give evidence in Court on behalf of Ram Rang on 27th January 1927, and had stayed for the night. When Wazir Chand made the requisite entry and was about to put down 16th Magh, Sambat 1983, at the end of the entry, Ram Rang told him to antedate it by putting the date 15th Magh, Sambat 1983 Mehr Nur Muhammad at first demurred at this, but Ram Rang said that, as he had put the money aside for Mehr Nur Muhammad the day before, he was entitled to calculate interest from that date. Mehr Nur Muhammad accepted this position and agreed to the date 15th Magh, Sambat 1983, being entered in the nawan. This entry was followed by a short memorandum in Urdu in the handwriting of Mehr Nur Muhammad himself in which he accepted liability for Rs. 2,500, and put down 15th Magh Sambat 1983, as the date of the memorandum. After these preliminaries had been gone through Mehr Nur Muhammad naturally demanded the money from Ram Rang. Ram Rang said that he would go to the town in order to fetch the money. Mehr Nur Muhammad, however, insisted upon the money being paid before Ram Rang left the shop and in the alternative he asked Ram Rang to give the bahi to him until the money was actually paid.

Upon this Ram Rang refused to give the money to Mehr Nur Muhammad and stated that he had already paid the money on the 15th Magh as entered in the nawan. This gave rise to a serious altercation between Mehr Nur Muhammad and Ram Rang, with the result some slight violence was used by Ram Rang in trying to turn Mehr Nur Muhammad out of his shop. Mehr Nur Muhammad held his ground and dispatched Abdullah, his father's servant, to make a report to the Superintendent of Police. All this took place somewhere between 9 and 10 a. m. on 28th January 1927. Abdullah went to the office of the Superintendent of Police and in his absence the Deputy Superintendent of Police issued orders to his subordinate police officers with the result that Ladha Ram, head constable (P. W. 8) went to Ram Rang's shop along with Abhulla at about 12 a. m. or a little later. In the meantime a number of people had assembled at the shop of Ram Rang and Ladha Ram took possession of the bahi and went along with Ram Rang, Mehr Nur Muhammad and some of the witnesses to the Sadr police station. There Mehr Nur Muhammad lodged the First Information Report, Ex P. B. The police, after investigation, challaned the case, which, as already stated, resulted in the acquittal of Ram Rang.

A number of witnesses have been examined on behalf of the prosecution and the complainant Mehr Nur Muhammad, has himself gone into the witness box and submitted himself to a very lengthy and searching cross-examination. The case, in our opinion, depends mainly upon the evidence of Wazir Chand, the scribe of the entry. The presence of this witness at the time of making the entry is admitted by both the parties and the sole question is whether he wrote out the entry in question on 15th or 16th Magh, Sambat 1983. In our opinion, the learned Magistrate was in error in adversely criticizing the evidence of this witness. In the first place, he makes out Wazir Chand as being on inimical terms with Ram Rang, having regard to certain alleged disputes between Ram Rang's family and the ancestors of Wazir Chand. Most of these disputes are stale, as they relate to the time of Wazir Chand's grandfather. Wazir Chand is a young man of 24. and cannot be expected to know much about the hostilities, which according to Ram Rang, existed between his family and that of Wazir Chand. The fact, however, remains that Wazir Chand had admittedly given evidence on behalf of Ram Rang in a civil case on 27th January 1927, and had been staying with him. At that time of the year the weather would be bitterly cold and after the Court hours not much of the daylight would be left. Wazir Chand's house is at a distance of ten kos (roughly speaking about 15 miles) from Maghiana, though the Magistrate wrongly put it at a distance of about eight miles only. It does not seem probable that he would march off to his home late in the afternoon of the short and cold wintry day at the end of January. It seems more probable that he stayed for the night at Maghiana as he himself states, intending to start for his home the following morning. This being our view, we do not see any force in the Magistrate's observation that Wazir Chand "gives no reason whatsoever for his staying a day over at Maghiana."

The Magistrate further observes that, if the story for the prosecution were true and a document with a wrong date had been executed and contrary to its terms no money had in fact passed, then it was the civic duty of Wazir Chand to inform the police or some other authorities of what had taken place, and that, as he himself was involved in the affair, he should have done this to clear himself. According to the evidence for the prosecution, no crime had been committed. The principal contracting parties, namely Ram Rang and Mehr Nur Muhammad, were present and the date had been entered with their knowledge and consent and no duty was cast upon Wazir Chand to approach the police or any other authorities about the matter. It is further stated that Wazir Chand was not eaxmined by the police till after five or six days of the occurrence, and, therefore, some sinister influences were brought to bear upon him by the prosecution. Wazir Chand was not cross-examined as regards this delay, and the Sub-Inspector who conducted the investigation, was not asked to explain the delay.

In any event, having regard to the circumstances of the case, we do not see any good reason for disbelieving the evidence of Wazir Chand who was apparently on friendly terms with Ram Rang, seeing that he had given evidence on his behalf and was admittedly staying at his house. The probabilities are that Wazir Chand was an unwilling witness and required a certain amount of persuasion before he could be induced to give evidence in support of the prosecution.

The learned Magistrate refers to a Full Bench decision of the Lahore High Court Ram Chand v. Chhun-un-Mal (1), where the rule as to the burden of proof is laid down as regards the consideration for a document which bears the signature of the executant. That case undoubtedly is an authority for the legal proposition which it enunciates ; but it has nowhere been laid down that the mere signing of a particular entry raises an irrebuttable presumption of law against which no evidence can be adduced by the maker of the signature. In the present case there is ample evidence on the record to show that the entry in the bahi was, as a matter of fact, made on 16th Magh, and that by the consent of the parties the document was antedated by a day. We may observe that the entry, Ex. P. A, is written on a stray paper which purports to be p. 45 of a bahi, but the bahi itself from which it is supposed to have been detached is not before us. It would have been much more satisfactory, from the point of view of the defence, if a rokar bahi had been forthcoming showing that on 15th March, Sambat 1983, a sum of Rs. 2,000 had been paid to Mehr Nur Muhammad by Ram Rang.

The trying Magistrate, while referring to Ex. P C., the application made by Abdullah to the Superintendent of Police, Ex. P B., the first information Report made by Mehr Nur Muhammad, and the statement of Mehr Nur Muhammad in Court, characterizes them as three different versions of the prosecution story. This is a mistake. There are no three versions at all. The broad features of the story for the prosecution are the same with slight variations of an unimportant character in these documents, and the statement made in Court by Mehr Nur Muhammad while he was being examined and cross-examined by counsel is necessarily fuller and more detailed. It is, therefore, misleading to call the statements embodied in Exs. P B., P C. and the statement of Mehr Nur Muhammad as a witness as so many different versions of the prosecution story.

The Magistrate has made a serious mistake which to a very great extent vitiates his judgment. While criticizing the evidence which Ladha Ram constable gave in Court, he rejects it by making a reference to the "karrawai police." This procedure is wholly illegal, and the Magistrate ought to have known that standing by themselves the police proceedings are not substantive evidence in the case and cannot be used in order to test the correctness of the statements made by witnesses on oath before the Court. Under S. 162, Criminal P. C., the entries made in the police diaries can be used only for the limited purpose of contradicting the evidence of the witnesses for the prosecution and only when such entries have been duly proved.

In the same way the statement of Ram Ditta Mal, P. W. 3, is held by the Magistrate as "not worthy of credit," simply because the Magistrate on a reference to the police diaries detected some discrepancies between the statement which he had made before the police and his evidence before the Court. Even the provisions of S. 145, Evidence Act, have not been complied with in the case of this witness, in that he was never confronted with his previous statement.

Hussain Din (P. W. 6) and Hakim Nur Din (P. W. 7) have been similarly discredited by the Magistrate, although in none of these cases the entries in the police diaries have been duly proved.

These illegalities must have influenced to a considerable extent the mind of the Magistrate in arriving at the decision.

The learned counsel for the defence tried to justify the procedure adopted by the Magistrate by a reference to S. 172, Criminal P. C. That section has nothing whatever to do with the objection which has been taken to the proceedings of the Magistrate, and Dal Singh v. Emperor (2) is a clear authority against this contention.

A number of witnesses have been examined by the accused in his defence. They may be divided into three groups. Group No. 1 consists of witnesses who give a good character to the respondent and depose to his fair dealings by saying he had never cheated them. This kind of evidence is from its nature worthless because every wrongdoer had a good character until he forfeited it by committing an offence.

The second group consists of witnesses who depose that the accused paid the money to Mehr Nur Muhammad on the 15th Magh Sambat 1983. Among these witnesses Kesar Das (D. W. 1) is a tenant of the brother of the accused and does not even remember when the police came to the spot. Fateh Chand (D. W. 6) is an unsatisfactory witness. In his examination-in-chief he says that there was a row in Ram Rang's baithak but in his cross-examination he says there was no row in the baithak of the accused. He finishes his evidence by saying that his son is a copartner in a shop with the accused's own brother. He says that he came to know after eight or ten days that the police had come. He denies all knowledge of the chalan. No reliance can be placed upon the evidence of such a witness. The evidence of Kishen Chand (D. W. 3) definitely goes against the defence put forward by the accused. To begin with, the accused is the son of this witness's aunt. He says that, on 27th January 1927, at 9 a. m., he went to his house from the post office where he is employed and saw Kesar Das, Fateh Chand, Wadhawa Ram and Mehr Nur Muhammad at the house of the accused which adjoins his own house and that money was lying there, and that Ram Rang, accused, asked Mehr Nur Muhammad to take Rs. 2,422. He says that when he went to his house in the evening he learnt that trouble had arisen between Ram Rang and Mehr Nur Muhammad and that the matter had been made over to the police. Now, this last observation could only refer to the happenings on 28th January 1927, and the witness had unwittingly told the truth while under cross-examination. He is an intelligent young man, 31 years old and is employed as a clerk in the post office at Maghiana. There is no suggestion that he was a hostile witness or had been won over by Mehr Nur Muhammad and thus made to give false evidence against his own cousin, the respondent. We may observe that counsel for the accused realized that the witness had fallen into the trap and tried in re-examination to retrieve the situation. But the Court disallowed the question which was sought to be put to the witness in the hope that he would correct himself. The evidence of this group of witnesses does not carry any conviction to our minds, and we refuse to accept it.

The third group of witnesses have attempted to prove that Wazir Chand was not at Maghiana on the 16th of Magh, Sambat 1983 but had left in the afternoon of the 15th and that on the 16th he was at his home at Chela. We have examined this evidence and, without discussing it in detail, we are satisfied that it is worthless.

We have given this case our careful consideration and are satisfied that the trying Magistrate has committed illegalities in testing the veracity or otherwise of some of the witnesses for the prosecution who have been discredited by references to documents which were not legal evidence. The Magistrate has also refused to accept the evidence of Wazir Chand on insufficient grounds and has on the whole, approached the case from a wrong point of view. We are satisfied that the main story put forward on behalf of the prosecution is suffiiently established by the evidence on the record, and that the guilt of the accused has been established beyond reasonable doubt.

We, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the order of acquittal passed by the trying Magistrate and, convicting the respondent Ram Rang of an offence under S. 420, I. P. C., sentence him to rigorous imprisonment for six months.

Second Appeal No. 1944 of 1926, Decided on 21st October 1927, from decree of Dist. Judge, Karnal, D/- 31st March 1926.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 50—Mere hearsay evidence about relationship of parties is not admissible.

Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Appellants.

Shamair Chand—for Respondent No. 3.

Judgment.—In this case the plaintiffs sued to set aside an alleged adoption claiming that they were reversioners in the fifth degree and setting out a pedigree table. The trial Court held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that they were related to the defendants and therefore they had no locus standi to sue. The learned District Judge also came to the same conclusion on appeal. The District Judge, however, rejected the evidence of seven witnesses on the ground that it was inadmissible as hearsay. This rejection forms the main ground for the second appeal.

Counsel for the appellants, in his opening argument contended that these statements were admissible under S. 32 (5), Evidence Act. He did not press his plea that they were also admissible under S. 32 (6), and obviously they are not within the latter clause. They also are not admissible under S. 32 (5) because the conditions necessary for the applicability of S. 32 (5) have not been proved and under S. 104 it lay on the appellants to prove those conditions. Counsel for the appellants, however, subsequently contended that the statements were relevant under S. 50, Evidence Act. He relied on the following rulings: Debi Pershad v. Radha Chowdhrain (1), Sabz Ali v. Khair Muhammad (2) and Mi Me v. Me Shwe Ma (3), all Privy Council cases also; on Ram Krishna Iyer v. C. Vengammal (4), a Division Bench ruling of the Madras High Court. In reply counsel for the respondents relied on Shafiqunnissa v. Sabban Ali Khan (5) with respect to S. 32 (5). As regards S. 50, he contended that it had never been urged in the Courts below and that, at any rate, even under S. 50 the matter was doubtful, and, therefore, this Court should not interfere in second appeal. Had it been any question other than a question under the Evidence Act, and I had found myself in doubt as to whether the law propounded by the learned District Judge was right or wrong, I would have accepted this argument of the counsel. But I am unable to do so on a question of evidence because it is a principle of law that if it is doubtful whether evidence is admissible or inadmissible, then the benefit must be given in favour of the admissibility of the evidence. However, on reading through these statements I find that S. 50 cannot be said to apply in the circumstances of this case. The witnesses give no pedigree table, but state vaguely that they are related to the parties and, therefore, know that the parties are related in the fifth degree. As regards their personal knowledge they refer to their previous conduct in attending certain ceremonies described as oos moos. What oos moos is, is not clear, but the evidence to my mind itself shows that the attendance of persons other than relatives is possible at these ceremonies, and, therefore, the conduct of these persons in attending these ceremonies does not show that they are relatives of the parties, or that they had any special means of knowledge. When asked how they knew the relationship of the parties they all relied on the fact that bhats at these ceremonies used to recite the pedigree table of the parties and hence they knew the relationship. At best this evidence would only prove some kind of relationship between the parties and would not prove agnatic relationship. I, therefore, consider that the statements are not admissible even under S. 50, Evidence Act for the only purpose for which they would be of any use to the present appellants, namely, in proving agnatic relationship. Even if I am wrong on this point I have read the whole of the evidence given both by the plaintiffs and by the defendants and I agree with the trial Court in holding that the plaintiffs have failed to prove the pedigree table propounded by them or their agnatic connexion with the defendants.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

First Appeal No. 180 of 1923, Decided on 26th October 1927, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Gurdaspur, D/- 13th November 1922.

Suits Valuation Act, S. 11 — Objection to jurisdiction.

The defect of jurisdiction on territorial or pecuniary ground should not render proceedings in a case abortive if such objection was not taken at the earliest opportunity and there has Badri Das and Kidar Nath Chopra — for Appellant.

Moti Sagar and Mehr Chand Mahajan —for Respondents.

Agha Haidar, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for dissolution of partnership and rendition of accounts. A preliminary decree was passed as long ago as 5th July 1920, and the present appeal is from the final decree.

It appears that on 28th October 1916, three persons, namely, Ganga Ram, now represented by plaintiffs 1 and 2, Fakir Chand, plaintiff 3, and Budha Mal, defendant, entered into a partnership for dealing in building materials, etc. The present suit with a valuation of Rs. 1,100, was brought on 1st August 1919 by the plaintiffs, and, as already stated, a preliminary decree was passed which declared the shares of the parties to be one-third each. It was further decided that the partnership included a certain liquor business as well. The suit seems to have been instituted originally in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gurdaspur. On 2nd August 1919 the Senior Subordinate Judge made an order to the effect that the plaint be made over to the Court of Maulvi Barkat Ali, Subordinate Judge.

Ultimately the trial of the case was held by Mr. Ram Kanwar, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, who passed the preliminary decree on 5th July 1920. An appeal was lodged by the defendant in the Court of the District Judge against that decree. This appeal was dismissed. In the meantime, on 7th July 1920, the learned Subordinate Judge of the Second Class, Mr. Ram Kanwar made an order appointing Pandit Bishambar Nath, Pleader, as a commissioner for examining the accounts. On 3rd May 1921 the commissioner submitted his report; therein he arrived at a sum of Rs. 14,369-15-9 which was to be distributed as net profits between the three partners.

It appears that on receipt of this report Mr. Ram Kanwar, Subordinate Judge, submitted the case to the District Judge for transfer to the proper Court having jurisdiction, because he considered that he could not grant a decree for a sum which was beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction. The case was accordingly transferred to the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge on 22nd June 1921.

Objections were filed against this report by the defendant Budha Mal on 25th August 1921, in which, among other things, it was urged that the case was not triable by the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge and that all the proceedings taken in the Court of Lala Ram Kanwar were null and void and that the case should be tried de novo. On 19th October 1921 this objection was again repeated under the heading of "preliminary objections" where we find the plea of jurisdiction taken in a more crystallized form. It runs as follows:

The late presiding officer of the Court had no jurisdiction to hear the case. For this reason this case has been made over to this Court.

2 All the previous proceedings are null and void according to law, proceedings should be taken de novo.

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge overruled these objections by an order dated 30th November 1921. He ultimately came to the conclusion that the total amount of profits of the partnership amounted to Rs. 15,619-12-9 which was distributable among the parties in certain specified sums according to their respective shares.

The defendant has come up in appeal to this Court, and his learned counsel has repeated with considerable earnestness the plea of jurisdiction. He also urges that the defendant was entitled to more interest on his outlay. He further pleaded that the total figure arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge should be reduced by a sum of Rs. 6,263-9-6, which, according to the defendant, represented the expenses which had been incurred in the partnership but which had not been taken into account by the commissioner.

As to the plea of jurisdiction, as already stated, the suit was valued at Rs. 1,110. No objection whatsoever was taken by the defendant to this figure, with the result that the parties proceeded to trial and ultimately a preliminary decree was passed. In appeal against the preliminary decree no such objection was taken. In the course of argument it was faintly suggested by the learned counsel for the appellant that, as a result of the commissioner's report, the preliminary decree had also become a nullity. Ultimately, however, he seems to have dropped this contention and concentrated his attack upon what took place in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Class, immediately after the preliminary decree was passed. He pleaded that the appointment of the commissioner was without jurisdiction and consequently the whole of the proceedings, including the commissioner's report, should be discarded. He relied upon a ruling reported as Radha Kishan v. Kidar Nath (1). That case, however, is quite different from the present case and does not support the contention of the appellant. In that case a suit was instituted in the Court of the Munsif for dissolution of partnership and accounts. The Munsif, in order to ascertain whether the suit was within his pecuniary jurisdiction, issued a commission for the examination of account books. As a result of this commission the Munsif came to the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction to try the suit. The Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, before whom the case ultimately came for disposal, refused to treat as evidence in the case the proceedings taken by the Munsif with the object of ascertaining whether the subject-matter of the suit was cognizable by him.

On the facts the learned Chief Judge held that the findings of the Munsif could not be treated as a finding on the merits. He further held that the proceedings before the Munsif were coram non judice so far as the eventual decision of the liability of the parties was concerned and that under the circumstances the order of the Subordinate Judge was correct. It may be noted that this case purports to follow Prabhakarbhat v. Vishwambhar Pandit (2), a ruling which was delivered at a time when the Suits Valuation Act (7 of 1887) had not been placed upon the Statute Book. Mr. Moti Sagar, on behalf of the respondents, relied upon S. 11, Suits Valuation Act, and quoted the Full Bench decision reported as Sardar Khan v. Mt. Aisha Bibi (3). The provisions of S. 11, Suits Valuation Act, are clear and provide a complete answer to the appellant's contention. As already stated no objection was taken as regards pecuniary jurisdiction as required by S. 11 (a), Suits Valuation Act. And if the argument were open to the appellant that after the passing of the preliminary decree and the receipt of the commissioner's report such objection was raised, the answer is supplied by S. 11 (b) and (2), Suits Valuation Act, for it has not been even suggested that the undervaluation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits. I may quote here the following sentence from the Full Bench judgment and report as Sardar Khan v. Mt. Aisha Bibi (3):

> The object of the legislature in both cases is the same namely that the defect of jurisdiction on territorial or pecuniary ground should not render proceedings in a case abortive if such objection was not taken at the earliest opportunity and there has been no consequent failure of justice.

I may also refer to Khudaijatul Kubra v. Amina Khatun (4) and the observations at p. 125 of the report. The inanity of the objections raised by the defendant would further appear from the fact that the commissioner, Pandit Bishambar Nath, had been appointed by the Court with the consent of parties, and even in the objection (dated 25th August 1921) to the commissioner's report the defendant himself asked for the retention of the commissioner, Pandit Bishambar Nath.

I accordingly overrule the plea of jurisdiction raised by the appellant. (The judgment then dealt with the details of accounts and interest and the appeal was partly allowed.)

was beaten by A when he was attaching property in its execution. Thereupon, the civil Court reported the matter to the police who challaned A under Ss. 332 and 394, I. P. C. The Magistrate found these offences not proved, but he convicted A under S. 186.

Report. — The Senior Subordinate Judge, Hissar, wrote a robkar to the Superintendent of Police, Hissar, on 7th June 1927, Ex. (P E) intimating that it had been brought to his notice by Zahid Hussain, process-server, that he attached some property of Sheoji, judgment-debtor in execution of a warrant at village Kharar on 5th June 1927, but that Sheoji, his wife Mt. Darkan and his daughter Mt. Manbhari forcibly snatched the property from him and gave him a beating with shoes and lathis. The Senior Subordinate Judge requested the Superintendent of Police to enquire into the matter through the Sub-Inspector and take proper action.

As a result of the police enquiry, Shoeji, his wife and daughter were challaned, under Ss. 332 and 394, I.P.C., but the Magistrate held that no attachment of any property had in reality been effected, that Sheoji and his daughter were not even present at the time of the alleged occurrence, and that all what happened was that Mt. Darkan abused the process-server and said that she would not allow him to attach the cattle. He, therefore, discharged Sheoji and his daughter Mt. Manbhari, but convicted his wife Mt. Darkhan under S.186, I.P.C., and sentenced her to pay a fine of Rs. 20, noting also in his judgment that she pleaded guilty to the charge.

It is clear that no prosecution in respect of an offence under S. 186, I. P. C., can be instituted except on the complaint in writing of the public servant concerned or of some other public servant to whom he is subordinate, vide S. 195 (1) (a), Criminal P. C. Now, there was no complaint in this case as defined in S. 4 (h), Criminal P. C., by either the process-server or the Senior Subordinate Judge. The former presented a report of the occurrence on the back of the warrant to the civil Court, and did not make any allegation either orally or in writing to a Magistrate and the Senior Subordinate Judge merely reported the matter to the police. Neither this, nor the police challan did, of course, constitute a complaint. The result thus is that the Court took cognizance of the case without jurisdiction and the conviction cannot stand.

All what the Magistrate finds is that Mt. Darkan abused the process-server and said that she would not let him attach the cattle. Now the word "obstruction" as used in S. 186 means "physical obstruction," i. e., actual resistance or obstacle put in the way of a public servant. The word implies the use of criminal force, and it appears that mere threats or threatening language would seem to be insufficient: vide Emperor v. Gajadhar (1) and Aijaz Husain v. Emperor (2). No offence had thus been committed and the conviction was improper on this ground as well. It is said that the accused pleaded guilty, but a reference to her statement before the framing of the charge shows that all what she admitted was that she told the process-server that she would not let him attach cattle till the arrival of her husband. Besides, the plea of guilty does not avail, when the offence in question had not been committed in the eye of the law.

For the above reasons, I forward the proceedings to the High Court with the recommendation, that the conviction may be set aside. The fine has already been paid and an order for its refund may kindly be passed.

Order.—For the reasons recorded by the learned Sessions Judge I set aside the conviction and the sentence, and direct that the fine, if realized, be refunded to the petitioner.

Misc. First Appeal No. 2550 of 1927, Decided on 2nd June 1928, from order of Sr. Sub-Judge, Delhi, D/- 8th August 1927.

Execution — Decree binding — Executing Court can decide whether Court passing decree had jurisdiction.

No doubt executing Court cannot question the validity or legality of a decree if there is a decree in existence. But it must be able to decide whether a decree exists at all and therefore where the Court has no inherent jurisdiction to pass the so-called decree, the decree has no real existence in law and the executing Court within those narrow limits can decide whether the decree was passed by a Court which, for lack of inherent jurisdiction, could not pass such a decree; for that point settles the question as to whether there is an existing decree upon which the executing Court can take action: A. I. R. 1925 Cal. 907 (F. B.), Rel. on. [P 830 C 2]

A prior mortgagee brought suit on his mortgage. He impleaded, besides the mortgagors, the puisne mortgagees. By means of a compromise, certain property belonging to the mortgagors was to be considered as sold to the plaintiff for a certain sum. Out of this sum, plaintiff was to pay the amount due to puisne mortgagees. It was stipulated that the puisne mortgagees were to recover the same from the plaintiff by execution or by a fresh suit. Until payment, the property of the plaintiff was to remain charged with the sum fixed for payment to him. A decree was accordingly passed in terms of the compromise. Plaintiff did not pay. Thereupon the puisne mortgagees put in an application for a final decree. It was contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to pass the final decree in their favour because it had passed a decree originally embodying the terms of the compromise against them.

Held: that it would be placing altogether too narrow a construction on the decree to hold that it was only passed against the mortgagors and the fact that it was stipulated that the puisne mortgagees could take out execution of this decree or bring a new suit tended to support the view that the decree was meant to be in their favour against the plaintiff. [P 831 C 1]

Sardha Ram—for Appellant.
Shamair Chand—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Rup Narain and Shiba Mal brought two suits on mortgages. They impleaded besides the mortgagors, Hukam Chand and Jagadhar Mal in both suits as puisne mortgagees. The total amount due on the two mortgages was about Rs. 3,44,000. The amount due to Hukam Chand and Jagadhar Mal was about Rs. 60,000. By means of a compromise, certain property belonging to the mortgagors was to be considered as sold to the plaintiff, and others for Rs. 4,04,000. Out of this sum the vendees were to pay Rs 60,000 due to Hukam Chand and Jagadhar Mal. It is stipulated in the compromise that the various vendees were to pay certain sums according to their shares to the puisne mortgagees. 8 annas per cent per mensem was fixed as interest if the sum was paid within one year and Re. 1 per cent per mensem was fixed as interest if the sum was not so paid. It was also stipulated that the puisne mortgagees were to recover the same from the vendees by execution or by fresh suit. Until payment the share of each vendee was to remain charged with the sum fixed for payment by him. Rup Narain did not pay his ¼th share. On 12th May 1927, the puisne mortgagees put in an application for a final decree. On 9th June 1927, the final decree was ordered to be passed and on the same date the puisne mortgagees applied for execution of the decree. The executing Court thereupon directed the property falling to the share of Rup Narain to be sold and from that order Rup Narain has appealed.

It has been contended that S. 47, Civil P. C, does not apply and therefore no appeal lies, because the appellant never appeared in the lower Court at all. But I do not see that the absence of the appellant in the lower Court takes away his right to appeal, and the order presumably does fall within S. 47 because it relates to the discharge of the decree by the sale of the property. I, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection that no appeal lies.

It has been contended in appeal that the Court had no jurisdiction to pass the decree at all, because it had passed a decree originally embodying the terms of the compromise against the defendants The present respondents were defendants in the previous suit and therefore no decree was passed in their favour. This being so, it is contended that the Court was functus officio and could not pass a final decree in their favour. In fact, there was no room or scope for a final decree at all, the suit having been finally concluded by the decree passed on the compromise.

On the other hand, for the respondents it is contended that the executing Court had no jurisdiction to go into the question at all as to whether the decree which was finally passed was rightly passed or not passed. It has been contended that the preliminary decree embodies the terms of the compromise and therefore is a decree against the present appellant. It has also been contended that rightly or wrongly the Court passed a final decree against the present appellant and therefore the executing Court cannot question the validity of that decree. On the other hand, it has been contended for the appellant that Gorachand v. Prafulla Kumar (1) and Mir Mahomed Khan v. Surjan Mal & Co. (2), show that the executing Court can question the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the original decree where there is a lack of inherent jurisdiction. On the other hand, counsel for the respondents contends, firstly, that Gorachand v. Prafulla Kumar (1) lays down wrong law and that Mir Mahomed Khan v. Surjan Mal & Co. (2), is only obiter dictum, and that the rulings Labh Singh v. Ram Lal (3), Zamindar of Ettiyapuram v. Chidambaram Chettiar (4), Hari Govind v. Narsingh Rao (5), Sheo Pat Rai v. Warakchand (6), Ratnaswami Chetti v. Ratnamal (7), Kali Pada v. Hari Mohan (8), and Budha Mal v. Rallia Ram (9), show that the executing Court cannot question the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the original decree.

In my opinion, the executing Court has jurisdiction to question the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the original decree, where there is a question of lack of inherent jurisdiction to pass the decree. The reasoning to me seems quite apparent. It is clear that the executing Court would have to decide the question of fact whether a decree existed or did not exist. Now, a decree may not exist because in fact there is no decree or the decree may not exist because in law there is no decree. It is clear, so far as I can see, that there is no difference in principle between the non-existence of a decree as a question of fact and the non-existence of a decree as a question of law. Of course the executing Court cannot question the validity or legality of a decree if there is a decree in existence. But it must be able to decide whether a decree exists at all and therefore where the Court has no inherent jurisdiction to pass the so called decree, the decree has no real existence in law, and the executing Court within those narrow limits can decide whether the decree was passed by a Court which for lack of inherent jurisdiction could not pass such a decree; for that point settles the question as to whether there is an existing decree upon which the executing Court can take action. I would, therefore, hold that Gorachand v. Prafulla Kumar (1), (Full Bench) was rightly decided so far as its principle is concerned without necessarily holding that all the illustrations that it gives are correct or complete.

It has been contended by Mr. Shamair Chand, secondly, that even if Gorachand v. Prafulla Numar (1), is correct in law the inherent jurisdiction is limited to territory, value, person or subject-matter as regards lack of jurisdiction. In my opinion there are only illustrations of lack of inherent jurisdiction and are not complete and exhaustive. For instance, if the Court had heard an appeal where there was no right of appeal, the Court would have lack of inherent jurisdiction to hear the appeal. I do not mean, of course to hold that, where the Court had wrongly decided that it had jurisdiction to hear the appeal or that an appeal lay, such a case would be a case of lack of inherent jurisdiction but where the matter had escaped notice, this would be an instance of lack of inherent jurisdiction. At the same time, this question must be confined to the competency of the executing Court to decide the existence of the decree and not its legality or validity.

It remains therefore to decide whether in the present case there was inherent lack of jurisdiction to pass either the original decree or the final decree by the Court or whether this is a case where there may have been material irregularity or illegality in the exercise of jurisdiction but not a case of lack of inherent jurisdiction.

I am of opinion that the first decree passed by the Court was in essence intended to be against the present appellant. Although the decree on its face is against the defendants in that suit and the present appellant was not a defendant yet the decree embodies the terms of the compromise in it, and the present appellant, by virtue of the sale to him of the mortgagor's rights, stood in the position of the mortgagor as well as in the position of the plaintiff, and therefore the decree against the defendants bound him as a legal representative of those defendants. It will be placing altogether too narrow a construction on the decree to hold that it was only passed against the mortgagors and the fact that it was stipulated that the present respondents, the puisne mortgagees, could take out execution of this decree or bring a new suit tends to support the view that the decree was meant to be in their favour against the present appellant.

It has been contended that had there been such a decree, there could not be a fresh suit, but I think that these words are mere words of surplusage to provide for the case if the Court refused to pass a decree in terms of the compromise because the subject-matter of the compromise was not within the scope of the suit. However, be this as it may, I further consider that the Court which passed the decree rightly or wrongly construed the decree as a preliminary decree and having so construed it proceeded to pass a final decree. It has been contended firstly that this decree was passed without notice to the present appellants. The record has not come and I am unable to determine whether the present appellants did or did not have notice. It seems to me to make no difference for this would only make it a case of irregularity or illegality in the exercise of jurisdiction. Secondly it has been contended that the Court was functus officio after passing the first decree and therefore had no inherent jurisdiction to pass the final decree. The question whether the decree passed was a final decree disposing of the suit or was only a preliminary decree was for the Court to decide and if rightly or wrongly it decided that it was a preliminary decree that would be only illegality or irregularity in exercise of jurisdiction but not lack of inherent jurisdiction. Therefore the executing Court could not question the validity of the decree passed.

I must therefore hold that this appeal must fail. As the point is by no means free from difficulty I, leave the parties to bear their own costs.

First Appeal No. 1149 of 1924, Decided on 8th February 1928, from decree of Senior Sub Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 12th January 1924.

Specific Relief Act, S. 42—Spes successionis.

A declaratory suit with respect to a spes succesionis is not maintainable : 4 Lah. 106, Foll. : 39 Mad. 634 (P. C.), Rel. on. [P 832 C 1]

Niaz Muhammad—for Appellant.

Ghulam Mohy-ud-Din—for Respondents.

Bhide, J.—The facts alleged by the plaintiff in the plaint were briefly as follows : Wali Dad, father of the plaintiff, and his two brothers, named Khera and Faujdar, were granted one square of land each in the Lyallpur colony in the early days of the settlement. Shortly afterwards, Khera and Faujdar died and the squares allotted to them were granted by Government to Wali Dad. Wali Dad subsequently acquired occupancy rights in respect of the three squares. About 11 or 12 years before the suit Wali Dad died and the land left by him was mutated in the name of his widow Mt. Aishan Bibi, defendant 1. Mt. Aishan Bibi subsequently wanted to make a gift of the whole land in favour of her daughter, the plaintiff, and applied for sanction, but the application was resisted by defendants 2 to 4, who are collaterals of Wali Dad, on the ground that they were entitled to succeed to the property of Wali Dad on the death of Mt. Aishan

Bibi. Sanction was accordingly refused and thereafter the plaintiff instituted the present suit for a declaration that she and not the defendants were entitled to succeed to the property left by Wali Dad on the death of defendant 1. Defendants 2 to 4 resisted the suit on various grounds, pleading inter alia that two out of the squares belonged to Khera and Faujdar and were inherited by Wali Dad. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge held that the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed to the squares inherited by Wali Dad from his brothers and granted the declaration prayed for in respect of the remaining land only. From this decision the plaintiff has appealed.

It seems to us that the present appeal must fail, both on account of the form in which the relief was asked for as also on the merits. The plaintiff merely sued for a declaration that she was entitled to succeed to the property in suit after the death of defendant 1. This was in effect a suit for a declaration, not with respect to an existing right, but with respect to spes successionis. It is well settled that a suit of this kind is not maintainable vide: I. L.R. 4 Lah. 106 and I. L. R. 39 Mad. 634 (637) (P. C.) The learned counsel for the appellant himself conceded this point, but wanted permission to amend the plaint. He was, however, unable to state definitely in what form relief could be asked on the allegations as stated in the plaint. It seems to us that the suit is bound to fail on those allegations. According to the plaint it was Wali Dad, who acquired occupancy rights in the whole of the land in suit. It is vaguely stated in the plaint that Wali Dad died 11 or 12 years before the suit. The suit was instituted on 14th November 1923. It would thus appear that Wali Dad must have died some time about 1911 or 1912. It was stated by counsel for the appellant that Wali Dad actually died after Act 5 of 1912 came into force. Assuming this to be correct, succession would be governed by S. 20 of that Act. Under that section the plaintiff, who is married, does not appear to have any right of succession at all. It was suggested by the learned counsel for the appellant that the plaintiff could be nominated as the successor of Wali Dad by the Collector under Cl. (e) of S. 20; but it is obvious that the plaintiff cannot claim any declaration at present on the mere possibility of such nomination being made in the future.

There is neither an appeal nor cross-objections on behalf of the respondents and in the circumstances the decree of the lower Court cannot be varied; but it seems to us perfectly clear that the plaintiff's claim in appeal must fail. We accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Misc. First Appeal No. 849 of 1927, Decided on 26th January 1928, from order of 1st Class Sub-Judge, Jhang, D/- 25th February 1927.

(a) Contract Act, S. 243—Son of a deceased partner admitted to share in the partnership decree—He does not thereby become a partner.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal and Mukand Lal Puri—for Appellants.

Nand Lal and A. R. Kapur—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The firm Lal Singh-Amir Singh obtained a decree against the firm Dhanna Singh-Diwan Singh on 1st July 1925. Execution of the decree was taken out and on 23rd April 1926 Diwan Singh pleaded an adjustment of the decree by payment to one Gopal Singh. Gopal Singh is admitted to be the son of Lal Singh, a deceased partner of the firm Lal Singh-Amir Singh. Dhanna Singh and Diwan Singh are real brothers of Lal Singh. The Court below held that Gopal Singh was one of the six partners of the decree-holders' firm. This was based largely on the admission of counsel for the decree-holder. I have read the statement in which the alleged admission was made. I find no such admission. In the first sentence the words are Gopal Singh pisar Lal Singh zarur hai and not Gopal Singh pisar Lal Singh hissadar hai as counsel for the respondent would have me read it, and the words are too clearly written for any dispute on the point. There is a dot which could not possibly occur in the word "hissadar" and if the word were "hissadar" either an alif or a dal is missing. I, therefore, hold that the word is "zarur".

The next portion of the statement on which reliance is placed reads as follows: Digree haza ke chhe dar hain. Assuming that the word dar is a miswriting for "hissadar" the fact that Gopal Singh is admitted to be entitled to a share in the decree assets does not mean that it is admitted that he was a partner in the firm because even as the son of a deceased partner he would be entitled to realize his share of whatever assets came to the hands of the partnership as partnership property. Further, it is in evidence and admitted that Lal Singh died in 1921. There is nothing to show that there was any contract by which the firm was to continue in spite of the death of one of the partners. Therefore, presumably, the firm dissolved on the death of Lal Singh and there is nothing to show that Gopal Singh was continued as a partner or taken into the firm after the death of Lal Singh. Gopal Singh was a minor up to 1921 and it is difficult for me to see how he could be a partner in the firm before the death of Lal Singh, the firm not being a joint Hindu family firm. However, be that as it may, I hold that it is not proved that Gopal Singh was a partner in the firm of Lal Singh-Amir Singh. It is further not proved, as was contended by counsel for the respondent in the alternative, that he was an agent for the purpose of receiving this debt on behalf of the firm. It is also, so far as I am aware, clear law that the son of a deceased partner cannot give a complete discharge of a debt due to the partnership.

Counsel for the respondent took some preliminary objections which were overruled by me without calling on counsel for the appellant. One was that the case was not in execution of a decree between parties and, therefore, no appeal lay under S. 47. Secondly, that as Gopal had been held to be a partner of the firm, a right had been declared in his favour and, therefore, ad valorem Court-fee was payable. Valliappa Chetty v. Rangaswamy Naicker (1) was cited by counsel in support of this second proposition, but neither point seems to me to arise. The question here is simple, whether the decree has been adjusted or not, and the decree-holder can surely appeal when it is held that it has been adjusted, and it is obviously also a question arising in execution.

The appeal is accepted; the case will be remanded to the Court below for disposal according to law. The appellant will have his costs throughout.

Ruchiram-Sukha Nand—Defendant—Appellant.

v.

Charan Das—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Misc. Second Appeal No. 2774 of 1927, Decided on 14th March 1928, from order of Dist. Judge, Gurdaspur, D/- 9th August 1927.

Limitation Act, S. 89 — Termination of agency—Last transaction in 1918—Accounts not rendered—Suit for accounts brought in 1924—Suit is out of time.

Plaintiff had certain transactions in cotton, wheat, etc., with three different firms, which acted as his agents for the purpose. The last date of the transactions was 19th May 1918. Thereafter no transaction took place, but accounts were not rendered. Subsequently the three firms were merged in the defendant firm; and the latter firm was sued for accounts by the plaintiff as the representative of the three firms in 1924.

Held: that the period of limitation began to run from the date of the last transaction and hence the suit was out of time: 39 Mad. 376, Rel. on; 26 Cal. 715 and 12 All. 546, Dist.

[P 834 C 1]

Anant Ram—for Appellant.

Judgment.— This appeal has been heard ex parte as the respondent failed to appear in spite of service.

The suit out of which this appeal arises purported to be one for rendition of accounts. Parties were agreed that limitation for such a suit is governed by Art. 89, Lim. Act. That article lays down that time will begin to run when the account is, during the continuance of the agency, demanded and refused, or, where no such demand is made, when the agency terminates. It is admitted that there is no proof of any demand having been made or refused in this case. Consequently limitation will run from the time the "agency" terminated.

The plaintiff's allegations were that he had certain transactions in cotton, wheat, etc., with three different firms, which acted as his agents for the purpose. The last date of the transactions was 19th May 1918. Thereafter no transaction took place, but accounts were not rendered. Subsequently the three firms are said to have merged in the defendant firm Ruchi Ram-Sukha Nand and hence the latter firm was sued for accounts by the plaintiff as the representative of the said firms. The trial Court held that the period of limitation began to run from the date of the last transaction and hence the suit, which was instituted on 10th June 1924, was out of time. The suit was accordingly dismissed. The learned District Judge held on appeal that there was nothing to show that the agency had come to an end and hence held the suit was within time. He accordingly remanded the case for redecision.

Defendant has filed a second appeal. It seems to me that the learned District Judge's finding that the agency has not terminated has been based on a misconception of the facts of the case. It was nowhere alleged by the plaintiff, that the three firms referred to above or the defendant firm in which these firms merged were his general agents. The agency was apparently confined to particular transactions and in the absence of any allegation to the contrary, must be taken to have terminated with the last transaction: cf. S. 201, Contract Act. It was for the plaintiff, in these circumstances to show that the agency still subsisted, but he has failed to show this.

It has been no doubt laid down in W. R. Fink v. Buldeo Das (1) and Mitthu Lal v. Kishan Lal (2) that the agency subsists till accounts are rendered, but this view has been dissented from in Venkatachalam Chetti v. Narayanan Chetti (3) and for good reasons.

The learned District Judge has not proceeded on the ground that the agency subsisted, because accounts had not yet been rendered and hence I do not think it necessary to discuss these rulings.

In my opinion the presumption made by the learned District Judge, that the agency subsisted is not justified by the pleadings or any evidence on the record. The agency must be taken to have terminated when the business of the agency was transacted. This happened over three years before the suit. The plaintiffs tried to bring the suit within time by proving an acknowledgment of liability contained in a postcard dated 5th November 1921. This card was not proved. Moreover it appears to contain no specific reference to the liabilities in dispute.

I accept the appeal (ex parte) with costs, set aside the order of the learned District Judge and restore the order of the trial Court.

First Appeal No. 1347 of 1923, Decided on 18th April 1928, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Delhi, D/- 12th May 1923.

(a) Contract Act, S. 51—Control of the requisite goods or capacity to deliver them to the purchaser when called upon to do so is sufficient to prove readiness and willingness on the part of sellers.

In order to prove readiness and willingness on the part of the sellers, it is sufficient to show that on the due date they had control of the requisite goods or capacity to deliver them to the purchaser when called upon to do so. [P 836 C 1]

(b) Contract Act, S. 73—Measure of damages.

The measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the date of the breach. [P 837 C 1]

Jagan Nath Aggarwal and Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Appellants.

Sardha Ram and Jagan Nath Bhandari—for Respondents.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On 14th August 1918, the defendants, Rattan Lal-Sultan Singh contracted to purchase from the plaintiffs Bishan Sahai-Bhagwan Das twenty-five bales of Ratnam's mulls at a certain price per piece. The goods were to be shipped in August, September and October 1918, and on their arrival at Delhi the sellers were required to send patterns and invoices to the buyers who promised to accept the goods on payment of the price thereof. It appears that sixteen bales arrived at Delhi in January 1919, but the buyers did not accept for the reasons to be discussed hereinafter. Thereupon, the sellers brought an action for damages for the breach of the contract and obtained from the Subordinate Judge a decree for Rs. 11,970 with interest thereon at six per cent per annum from the date of the suit upto the date of realization.

The decree in favour of Bishan Sahai-Bhagwan Das was made by the trial Judge on 12th May 1923, but was attached on 13th June 1923, by a firm known as Narain Das-Jaini Mal in execution of their decree against Bishan Sahai-Bhagwan Das. On 14th June 1923, the judgment-debtors Ratan Lal-Sultan Singh preferred the present appeal to the High Court, and on 20th March 1925, Narain Das-Jai Mal were impleaded as respondents to the appeal under O. 22, R. 10, Civil P. C.

Mr. Jagan Nath for the appellants asked us to give effect to a compromise alleged to have been made on 26th October 1924, by which Bishan Sahai-Bhagwan Das agreed to receive Rs. 2,900 from the judgment-debtors in full satisfaction of their claim. It is admitted that Narain Das-Jaini Mal were not a party to the alleged compromise, and, as they had attached the decree before the date of the compromise, they could not be adversely affected by any transaction entered into by Bishan Sahai-Bhagwan Das. The learned counsel for the appellants urged that on 5th December 1924, the compromise was placed before the Court executing the attached decree, and that that Court made an order certifying the adjustment of the decree. It is, however, clear that the order was passed in the absence of the attaching decree-holders who were not even aware of the alleged settlement or the proceedings takne to get the satisfaction of the decree recorded by the Court. Now O. 21, R. 53, sub-R. (6) provides that no payment or adjustment of the attached decree made by the judgment-debtor in contravention of the order of attachment, either through the Court or otherwise, shall be recognized by any Court so long as the attachment remains in force. It is doubtful whether the settlement of the claim was a bona fide transaction, but it is absolutely clear that the alleged settlement cannot bind the attaching creditors who were the persons vitally interested in the result of the appeal.

Coming now to the merits of the appeal, we find that 25 bales of mulls, with which we are concerned in the present case formed part of 100 bales which Ratnam had contracted to sell to the firm of Jawala Dutt-Ram Kanwar and out of which the latter firm promised to sell 25 bales to Narain Das-Jaini Mal. Narain Das-Jaini Mal in their turn agreed to sell the bales to Bishan Sahai-Bhagwan Das, and it is in respect of these 25 bales that Bishan Sahai-Bhagwan Das made the contract with Ratan Lal-Sultan Singh which is the subject of the dispute between the parties.

The learned Subordinate Judge holds that, while 16 bales forming part of the shipments of August and September 1918, arrived at Delhi within a reasonable time, the remaining goods were unduly delayed, and that the buyers were not bound to accept them after the expiry of the due date for delivery. The learned Judge has accordingly held the buyers liable for the breach of the contract in respect of only 16 bales, and has assessed damages on the basis of the difference between the contract price and the market rate on the date of the breach.

It is contended on behalf of the defendants that the sellers were not ready and willing to perform their part of the contract, and they are not, therefore, entitled to recover any damages from the buyers. Now, it is beyond dispute that seven bales arrived at Delhi on 4th January 1919, and nine bales on 11th January 1919; and that all these bales were lying in the godown of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China. The evidence on the record shows that the sellers sent to the buyers patterns and copies of invoices, and that the latter were unwilling to accept the goods owing to the prices having fallen since the armistice in October 1918. As stated above, there was a chain of sellers and buyers in respect of these goods, and it appears that each firm while anxious to enforce their claim qua sellers, did not wish to discharge their obligations as purchasers. It was for this reason that though the plaintiffs, Bishan Sahai-Bhagwan Das, asked the defendants to accept the goods, they wrote to their own sellers Narain Das-Jaini Mal denying their liability to take delivery owing to the delay in the arrival of the goods at Delhi. This correspondence was obviously inspired by a desire to get some concessions from the sellers, but was never intended to be taken seriously. We have, however, the undoubted fact that on 21st January 1919, when the defendants had directed their bankers King, King & Co. to pay for the goods, the plaintiffs, accompanied by Jugal Behari, the cashier of King, King & Co , Ratnam and the representatives of the firms Jawala Dutt-Ram Kanwar and Narain Das-Jainl Mal, went to the office of the Chartered Bank in order to get the goods from the bank and deliver them to Jugal Behari, but they reached there after 3 p. m. when the bank ceased to do business. The plaintiffs accordingly asked Jugal Behari to come on the following day to take delivery and also took the precaution of sending a telegram in the afternoon to King, King & Co., and a letter on the following day asking them to pay for the goods and take delivery on 22nd January. The sellers, however, declined to accept the goods and made various execuses to account for their denial.

It has been repeatedly held that, in order to prove readiness and willingness on the part of the sellers, it is suffieient to show that on the due date they had control of the requisite goods or capacity to deliver them to the purchaser when called upon to do so. The evidence produced by the parties shows that the sellers were in a position to fulfil their part of the bargain, and the contract was broken by the buyers.

It is to be observed that the plaintiffs were to deliver 16 bales to the defendants on account of the first two shipments; but it appears that, while there were two separate invoices for two instalments of seven bales each, the remaining two bales formed part of six bales for which there was a third invoice. It is argued that the plaintiffs could not deliver the full quantity of the goods on 21st Jannary without meeting the drafts for all the three invoices comprising 20 bales, and that they had not sufficient funds to pay the entire amount due on the three drafts. This contention rests upon the assumption that none of the four firms, namely Ratnam & Co , Jawala Dutt-Ram Kanwar, Narain Das-Jaini Mal and Bishan Das-Bhagwan Das, who had all consented to obtain the goods from the bank in order to deliver them to the defendants, could pay the small sum which represented the difference between the amouut due on the drafts and the price payable by the defendants for 16 bales, or get credit for that sum from the bank. There is no warrant for this assumption, and there can be little doubt that, if the defendants had shown willingness to receive the goods on payment of the price, the firms mentioned above would not have experienced any difficulty in satisfying the claim of the bank and getting the goods delivered to the defendants. The truth of the matter is that, as the performance of the contract involved a heavy loss to the buyers, they were trying to find some excuse in order to avoid the transaction.

Mr. Jagan Nath for the appellants also invites our attention to the stipulation in the contract which provided for the delivery of 25 bales in three instalments and argues that, as the amount of each instalment was not specified in the indent, the presumption is that they were to be of equal quantities. He accordingly contends that the first instalment should have been of not less than eight bales, but, as only seven bales were offered in respect of that instalment, the tender of the goods made by the sellers was invalid. No such objection was, however, raised when the invoices were sent to the defendants, and even, according to their own version, they were ready to accept on 21st January 1919, 16 bales in respect of the two instalments.

There can be little doubt that, after the infructuous visit of Jugal Behari to the Chartered Bank on that day, the buyers made it absolutely clear that they were not going to accept the goods, and the mere fact that the sellers did not show sufficient diligence in asserting their claim after the breach cannot be treated as an acquiescence on their part in the cancellation of the contract by the buyers.

The Subordinate Judge has rightly held that the defendants failed to perform their part of the bargain, and they are, therefore, liable to pay damages to the plaintiffs. It is common ground that the measure of the damages is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the date of the breach. No definite date was fixed by the parties for the performance of the contract; but the delivery of each instalment was to be made at Delhi on the arrival of the goods. It appears that there was some delay in dispatching the goods of the first instalment from Calcutta to Delhi, but this delay cannot be treated to be an unreasonable one. The goods admittedly reached Delhi on 4th and 11th January 1919, and the defendants could have taken delivery at once if they had shown their willingness to do so. The date of the delivery appears, however, to have been postponed to 21st January 1919, when the defendants broke the contract. The damages have, therefore, been rightly assessed on the basis of the market price on that date. The evidence, however, shows that there was little or no variation in the price of the goods in the first three weeks of January, and it is, thorefore, immaterial whether the 21st January or any earlier date in that month is to be taken as the due date for the purpose of determining the amount of damages.

The trial Judge has awarded interest on the sum adjudged to the plaintiffs at six per cent. per annum from the date of the institution of the suit upto the date of payment. This award is in accordance with the law enacted by S. 34, Civil P, C., and cannot be open to any reasonable objection.

For the foregoing reasons I concur in the conclusion reached by the trial Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 2915 of 1926, Decided on 21st May 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Amritsar, D/- 4th Oct. 1926.

(a) Civil P. C., S. 100—Whether facts established amount to "wilful neglect" is a question of law—Railways Act, S. 72.

"Wilful neglect" is a matter of inference from facts proved and the question whether the facts established amount to "wilful neglect" is a question of law : A. I. R. 1918 P. C. 92, Foll. [P 838 C 1]

(b) Railways Act, S. 72 — Wilful neglect—Merely sealing the waggon and not locking it does not amount to wilful neglect in the absence of proof that practice of sealing waggons was an inadequate safeguard.

Where it is not proved that the practice of sealing waggons in vogue had been an inadequate safeguard or that a system of locking waggons was known to be a necessary precaution in the case of a train travelling over a long distance and yet was deliberately and intentionally not adopted by the railways, the mere fact that the wagons were only sealed and not locked does not amount to wilful neglect on the part of the railway company : (Case-law Considered). [P 838 C 1 ; P 840 C 1]

(c) Railways Act, S. 72 — "Wilful neglect" defined.

A person is said to be guilty of wilful neglect when he intentionally and of set purpose does something which ought either to be done in a different manner or not at all, or omits to do something which ought to be done : 9 S. L. R. 177 and A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 24, Foll. [P 838 C 2]

(d) Evidence Act, S. 57—It is unfair to take judicial notice of thefts on railways.

It is obviously unfair to the railway company to take judicial notice of thefts on the railways. It is for the plaintiff asking for damages to prove "wilful neglect" on the part of the defendant railway. If he wishes to rely on the occurrence of thefts and inadequacy of the method of sealing waggons, it is for him to lead evidence on the point : A. I. R. 1926 All. 641, Rel. on. [P 839 C 2]

(e) Railways Act, S. 72—Risk-note—Consignee must prove that loss was due to railway's misconduct.

The explanation of the loss is often within the exclusive knowledge of the railway company, and to compel the trader to prove that it was due to wilful misconduct on the part of the railway company's servants, is to call upon him to establish something which it may be almost impossible for him to prove. None the less, that is the burden that he undertakes in chosing to send the goods under a risk-note and at reduced rate : H. C. Smith, Ltd. v. G. W. Ry. Co. (1922) 1 A. C. 178, Foll. [P 840 C 1]

Moti Sagar and W. Chandra Dutta—for Respondent.

Bhide, J.—Out of a consignment of 17 blocks of tin booked from Howrah to Amritsar in the name of the plaintiff only nine blocks were delivered to him at Amritsar, the rest having been lost in transit. The plaintiff sued the railway administrations concerned for the value of the missing blocks. The defendants admitted the loss, but claimed protection under Risk-note B. The suit has been decreed by the Courts below on the finding that the loss of the goods was due to "wilful neglect" on the part of the defendants. From this decision the defendants have appealed.

The main contention urged by the learned Government Advocate on behalf of the appellants was that the facts proved in this case do not amount to "wilful neglect" within the meaning of that term in Risk-note B. On behalf of the respondents a preliminary objection was raised that the finding as regards "wilful neglect" being one of fact cannot be challenged in second appeal. We are unable to uphold this objection. "Wilful neglect" is a matter of inference from facts proved. The term has a special significance in law as established by judicial decisions and the question for consideration is whether the facts established in this case amount to "wilful neglect" in law It is well settled that the legal effect of proved facts is a question of law, vide inter alia Nafar Chandra Pal v. Shukur Sheikh (1).

We accordingly overrule the preliminary objection.

Coming to the merits of the case, it is necessary to clear the ground by stating at the outset the facts found by the learned District Judge, which in his opinion amount to "wilful neglect". The learned District Judge found that there is no definite evidence to show how the goods were lost. The wagon in which the tin blocks were sent was, however, not locked but only sealed. The sealing consisted in passing a piece of string through the hasp on the door of the waggon, knotting it, pressing some tin round the knot to prevent its loosening and sealing the ends of the string. The main point for consideration according to the learned District Judge was whether the sealing of the waggon door in this manner was sufficient to exculpate the defendants from the charge of wilful negligence. Considering that the waggon had to travel over a very long distance from Howrah to Amritsar, and that there were no special watchmen employed, he came to the conclusion, that the defendants were guilty of wilful neglect, in sending the waggon without being locked. In support of his finding he relied on the following rulings of the Allahabad High Court: B. N. W. Ry. Co. v. Haji Mutsaddi (2), A. I. R. 1925 All. 172, and A I. R. 1925 All. 562.

Before proceeding to discuss whether the above facts, as found by the learned District Judge, amount to "wilful neglect", it is necessary to consider first of all the exact significance of that expression. In Jagannath Baij Nath v. Secy. of State (3), a Single Bench decision of this Court, Campbell, J., followed a definition of that term as given by the Judicial Commissioner, Sind, in Firm of Daulat Ram v. Secy. of State (4), which was as follows:

> A person is said to be guilty of wilful neglect when he intentionally and of set purpose does something which ought either to be done in a different manner or not at all, or omits to do something which ought to be done.

This definition is in accord with a recent pronouncement by their Lordships of the Privy Council. In Ardeshir Bhikaji v. Agent G. I. P. Ry. Co. (5) their Lordships adopted Lord Russell's interpretation of the expression "wilful neglect" in R. v. Senior (6) in which it was taken to mean that > the act is done deliberately and intentionally and not by accident or inadvertance, but so that the mind of the person who does the act goes with it.

The question for decision in this appeal, therefore, is whether the failure to lock the waggon in which the plaintiff's goods were placed amounted to "wilful neglect" in the above sense in the circumstances of the case. In none of the cases relied upon by the learned District Judge is there any discussion as to the meaning of the term "wilful neglect" and hence it is not clear, what meaning was attached to it by the learned Judges who decided those cases. But the rulings are clearly distinguishable on facts. In B. N. W. Ry. Co. v. Mutsuddi (2), which was followed in the other two cases the facts found were that the waggon was not properly fastened, that the means used by the railway for fastening the doors were quite ineffective and that thefts were constant. The learned Judges remarked :

> Now if the railway company had knowledge as we assume from the finding of the Court below it had, that the fastening of the doors of the waggons were absolutely insecure and ineffective and that constant thefts were taking place, it was their duty to see that these fastenings were made more secure so that goods of consignors might be carried over the line with reasonable security.

No such evidence was produced in the present case. There was no evidence of any thefts, nor was any attempt made to prove that the method of sealing the doors was quite ineffective, and that other means were necessary to ensure the goods being carried over the line with reasonable security. The other two rulings relied upon by the learned District Judge are similarly distinguishable. In A. I. R. 1925 All. 172 there was evidence to show that ten cases of breaking of seals were being reported every month. In A I. R. 1925 All. 562 also there was evidence of prior thefts.

Certain other rulings were cited by the learned counsel for the respondent before us in support of the learned District Judge's decision, but these are also distinguishable on the same ground. In all these rulings, the occurrence of frequent thefts on the railway is emphasized and inference of " wilful neglect" is drawn from the inadequacy of the method of sealing of waggons known to the railway on account of thefts, vide inter alia Bindraban v. G. I. P. Ry. Co. (7), Abdul Karim v. Secy. of State (8), and Mathra Prasad v. G. I. P. Ry. Co. (9). As remarked in Bindraban v. G. I. P. Ry. Co (7) :

> As an abstract proposition, it is impossible to lay down that a more failure properly to secure waggons always amounts to wilful neglect or that the mere sealing of waggons necessarily excludes wilful neglect. Every case must depend on its own circumstances.

Where a railway company chooses year after year merely to seal waggons in spite of repeated thefts when the sealing has been proved by the thefts to be an inadequate safe-guard, the continuance of that inadequate method may show neglect on their part amounting to wilful and determined neglect not to avail themselves of any other measures that may be open : vide Mathra Prasad v. G. I. P. Ry. Co. (9). But no evidence of this description has been produced in the present case and it will therefore serve no useful purpose to discuss these rulings. It was urged by the learned counsel for the respondent that we should take judicial notice of the occurrence of thefts on the East Indian Railway from the reported cases cited before us. As to this point, it may be noted at the outset that the goods had to pass over two railways, and it has not been proved that the loss took place wholly on the East Indian Railway. But even apart from this, I find myself in accord with the view taken by the Mukerjee, J., on this point in Baldeo Sahai v. B. B. & C. I. Ry. Co (10), in which the learned Judge refused to take any such judicial notice and remarked that he was not aware of a single case in which judicial notice of such thefts had been taken. It would be obviously unfair to the defendants to take any such judicial notice of thefts on the railways. It was for the plaintiff to prove "wilful neglect" on the part of the defendant railways. If he wished to rely on the occurence of thefts and the inadequacy of the method of sealing waggons, it was for him to lead evidence on the point. If he had done so, the defendants would have been in a position to rebut that evidence.

It has been contended by the learned Government Advocate, that thefts on the defendant railways are not only not common, but are, in fact negligible in comparison with the volume of traffic carried by the railways, that the method of sealing waggons has not been proved by of experience to be inadequate, and that there is no warrant for the assumption that a system of locking (which is bound to entail an enormous amount of expenditure) will be of any substantial advantage. Attention was invited in this connexion to the fact that the Judicial Commissioner's Court in Oudh has frequently held that the practice of sealing waggons was the usual one and does not show any wilful neglect, vide Bhagai Ram v. B. N. W. Ry. (11) and Rohilkand Kumaon Ry v. Gawri Lal (12). If the plaintiff had led evidence as regards the occurrence of thefts, defendants might have been in a position to produce evidence in rebuttal in support of the above contention.

As stated already all that the learned District Judge has found in this case is that the wagons were merely sealed and not locked, although the train had to travel over a long distance and no special watchmen were employed. It seems impossible to draw from these facts alone any inference of "wilful neglect" as interpreted by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ardeshir Bhikaji v. Agent, G. I. P. Ry. Co. (5). There is nothing on the record to show that the practice of sealing waggons in vogue had been proved to be an inadequate safe guard or that a system of locking waggons was known to be a necessary precaution in the case of a train travelling over a long distance and yet was deliberately and intentionally not adopted by the railways.

It was finally urged that it will be almost impossible for a plaintiff to prove "wilful neglect" in the above sense in any case. But it must be remembered that the plaintiff has himself chosen to send the goods under the special contract embodied in Risk-note B, at "Owner's risk", and reduced rates. The following remarks of Lord Buckmaster in H. C. Smith Ltd. v. G. W. Ry. Co. (13), in connexion with similar provisions in the Risk-note in that case are noteworthy.

> It is in my opinion a clause which throws upon the trader, before he can recover for any of the goods, the burden of proving in the first instance that the loss sustained arose from the wilful misconduct of the company's servants. It is perfectly true that this results in holding that the apparent protection afforded to the trader is really illusory; it practically gives him no protection at all, for it is often impossible for a trader to know what it is that has caused the loss of his goods between the time when he delivered them into the hands of the railway company's servants and the time when they ought to have been delivered at the other end of the journey. The explanation of the loss is often within the exclusive knowledge of the railway company, and for the trader to be compelled to prove that it was due to wilful misconduct on the part of the railway company's servants, is to call upon him to establish something which it may be almost impossible for him to prove. None the less, that is the burden that he has undertaken.

I accordingly hold that that the learned District Judge's finding on the question of "wilful neglect" cannot be sustained. I would, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit, but in view of all the circumstances leave the parties to bear their costs.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 177 of 1928, Decided on 28th March 1928, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge., Amritsar, D/- 9th January 1928.

Penal Code, Ss. 116 and 161—Abetment of bribing Head Constable of Police—First and not second part of S. 116 applies.

Where a person is accused of abetment of bribing a Head Constable of Police, the first part of S. 116 is applicable and not the second part as an offence under S. 161 is not cognizable by the police and is not one, the commission of which it is the duty of the head constable to prevent. [P 841 C 1]

Brij Lal—for Petitioners.

Judgment. — This is a petition for revision directed against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Amritsar, dismissing the petitioners' appeal against their conviction under Ss. 161/116 I. P. C.

The facts found are that Muhammad Ali, Head Constable of Police, while investigating a case of burglary received information that some wood which had been stolen from the Canal Department some time previously was in possession of one Thakar Singh, carpenter. He, therefore, sent for Thakar Singh and made enquiries from him and was told that one Chanchal Singh had given the wood to Thakar Singh. Consequently enquiries were made from Chanchal Singh.

When such enquiries were being made, the petitioners, Puran Singh and Mala Singh both tendered a bribe of Rs. 93 to the Head Constable with a view to drop the matter against Chanchal Singh. The Magistrate and the Sessions Judge have found the above facts to have been proved by the evidence on the record and though an attempt was made by the learned counsel for the petitioners to show that the evidence as against Puran Singh is not good, I am not prepared to differ from the conclusion of the Courts below.

The petitioners have been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year each and this petition has been admitted for consideration of the question whether the first or the second part of S. 116 applies. If the first part applies then the maximum sentence that could be awarded to the petitioners was nine months. Under the second part it may amount to eighteen months. The first part of S. 116 provides that whoever abets an offence punishable with imprisonment shall, if that offence be not committed in consequence of the abetment, and in the absence of an express provision to the contrary in the Indian Penal Code, be punished with imprisonment provided for that offence for a term which may extend to one-fourth part of the longest term provided for that offence. The second part of this section provides that if the abettor or the person abetted is a public servant whose duty it is to prevent the commission of such offence the abettor shall be punished with imprisoment for a term which may extend to one-half of the longest term provided for that offence.

The question, therefore, is whether in the present case Muhammad Ali, Head Constable, was a public servant whose duty it was to prevent the commission of an offence under S. 161, I. P. C. An offence under S. 161 is not cognizable by the police and no provision of law has been brought to my notice that it was the duty of the Head Constable to prevent the commission of such an offence. Under the circumstances it is the first part of S. 116 that is applicable to the facts of this case, and, therefore, accepting the petition, I reduce the sentence awarded to the petitioners to what they have already undergone. They will be discharged from their bail bonds.

First Appeal No. 2272 of 1925, Decided on 12th March 1928 from decree of 1st Cl. Sub-Judge, Lahore, D/- 31st August 1925.

(b) Damages—There is no preliminary decree in suits for damages.

A preliminary decree which is followed by a final decree is unheard of in suits for breach of contract claiming damages. [P 842 C 1]

(c) Civil P. C., S. 2 (2) —Suit for damages—Agreement by parties to determine damages themselves — Judgment before ascertaining damages—Case is not finally and completely disposed of—Appeal against decree is premature.

In a suit for damages parties agreed to calculate the damages themselves but before they determined them, a judgment was passed without the amount of damages being ascertained. The defendants field an appeal.

Held : that the appeal was premature, as the suit had not been finally and completely disposed of by the Court below and consequently there was no decree against which an appeal could be filed. [P 843 C 1]

Moti Sagar and Jai Gopal Sethi—for Appellants.

Badri Das and J. L. Kapur—for Respondent.

Agha Haidar, J. — The plaintiff brought this suit against the defendants on the allegation that the defendants had undertaken to supply him with quotations in respect of certain sugar transactions and that the defendants were guilty of breach of contract as a result of which the plaintiff suffered loss. The plaintiff accordingly claimed a tentative sum of Rs. 5,100 as damages. He accordingly prayed that :

a decree may be passed against defendants severally and jointly for Rs. 5,100 or such sum as may be found due on examination of the defendants' book and record.

I may note here that the plaint is a very inaritistically drawn up document which is not easy to understand. The written statement is not better ; but for the purposes of this appeal it is not necessary to discuss the pleadings at length.

The Subordinate Judge, First Class, fixed four issues in the case and recorded findings on three of them, namely, issues 1, 2 and 3. As regards issue 4, namely : "To what relief is the plaintiff entitled ?", the Subordinate Judge refers in his judgment (p. 46 of the printed paper-book Part 1) to an agreement arrived at between the parties before him according to which the parties had expressed their willingness to calculate the damages themselves. Before the parties had determined the amount of damages the Subordinate Judge concluded his judgment in these words :

I accordingly give plaintiff a decree in terms of my findings noted above with costs. The amount of damages will be fixed in the final decree as soon as the calculations are put in by the parties.

This document is dated 31st August 1925. Below this are the following words. "Announced. Plaintiff and the clerk of the defendants' counsel present." I may here observe, parenthetically, that the Subordinate Judge, First Class, ought to have known that the Code of Civil Procedure does not recognize the status of a counsel's clerk, and he ought not to have further disfigured his already unsatisfactory judgment by making a reference to the counsel's clerk as the individual in whose presence he announced his judgment. Below this quotation the following words appear over the signatures of the Subordinate Judge:

The calculations tc be put in on 10th October 1925.

There is a document printed at p. 47 of the paper-book which bears the heading and, after giving the designation of the Court, the number of the suit, and the names of the parties with the amount of the claim runs as follows :

" simple money decree "

This suit coming on this day for final disposal before me in the presence of plaintiff and Mr. Jiwan Lal, advocate for the plaintiff, and Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi for the defendant, it is ordered that a decree be given to the plaintiff with costs in terms of my findings in the judgment. The amount of damages will be fixed in the final decree as soon as the calculations are put in by the parties.

This document bears the same date as the last order passed by the Subordinate Judge.

Now, the whole procedure adopted by the Subordinate Judge in the present case shows deplorable ignorance of the elementary principles of law. The parties are agreed before us that the present suit is one for damages for breach of contract and a perusal of the pleadings which are not by any means intelligible, also point in the same direction. There are certain well-known suits in which the Court passes a preliminary decree which is followed by a final decree, but a preliminary decree, which is followed by a final decree is unheard of in suits for breach of contract claiming damages. There is only one decree in such suits, and if the plaintiff succeeds, the decree mentions the amount of damages awarded to him and the costs if any, allowed to him by the Court. No question of preliminary and final decree arises. In this view the Subordinate Judge was wrong in passing, what he considers to be a preliminary decree in the suit. He ought to have waited till the parties, according to their mutual agreement, had calculated the amount of damages, and then he should have decided the case once and for all. The so-called decree is a document which on the face of it is meaningless and contrary to law as it does not contain a word about what the Judge had decided in his judgment. It simply says that :

a decree be given to the plaintiff in terms of my findings in the judgment.

This is a very unsatisfactory way of drawing up a decree. Moreover, this document refers to "the amount of damages" which have not yet been ascertained and which would form the subject-matter of future adjudication after the parties have filed their calculations. Such an imperfect and incomplete document cannot be called a decree. The whole thing shows colossal ignorance of all the recognized canons of procedure relevant to such cases. It appears that some clerk has written out on the ordinary printed form of a money decree the substance of the Subordinate Judge's interlocutory order as he understood it, but this would not make it a decree from which an appeal is allowed by law. I may note that the so-called decree is signed by another Subordinate Judge and not by the Judge who passed the orders dated 31st August 1925.

The defendants have filed an appeal to this Court. The memorandum of appeal contains no less than fourteen grounds but curiously the real vices in the procedure adopted by the Subordinate Judge have not been specifically dealt with in the grounds of appeal, and in para. 4 the so-called decree has been criticized in very mild terms as being merely vague and indefinite and its patent irregularities have not even been hinted at.

The question as to what should be done by this Court in this appeal is a difficult one to decide. There is no doubt, however, that the suit has not been finally diposed of, as the all-important question of the amount of damages claimed by the plaintiff has not yet been decided. In fact the document itself points out to certain steps which will have to be taken before the suit would be finally disposed of. Therefore, without expressing any opinion whatsoever upon the conduct of the suit in the Court below and the findings on issues 1, 2 and 3 recorded by the trial Judge, I would simply hold that the appeal is premature, that the suit has not yet been finally and completely disposed of by the Court below and that there is consequently no decree against which an appeal could be filed. Under these circumstances, I would hold that no appeal lay and dismiss the appeal but, having regard to the document, called a "simple money decree" at p. 47, which must have misled the defendants-appellants, with the result that they filed the appeal to this Court, I would make no order as to costs The result is unfortunate but inevitable and is due entirely to the erroneous procedure adopted by the Subordinate Judge.

A copy of this order should be sent to the Subordinate Judge whereever he is posted at present for his perusal.

Criminal Revn. No. 46 of 1928, Decided on 20th April 1928, reported by Dist. Magistrate, Montgomery, on 20th December 1927.

Criminal P. C., S. 439 — Order accepting withdrawal of complaint under S. 161, Penal Code, is not revisable.

Order of a Magistrate allowing a complainant to withdraw a case under S. 161, amounts to an acquittal and can be appealed against by the Local Government. It cannot therefore be interfered w th in revision. [P 843 C 2]

Abdul Rashid—for Respondent.

Report.—This is a case under S. 161 against Ishar Singh, Head Constable. I sent for the file under S. 435, Criminal P. C. I sent for the accused Ishar Singh through the Superintendent of Police. Isbar Singh replied that he could not attend as certain circumstances did not allow him to leave his post. I consider, however, that he could have come if he had wished. He has been given an opportunity to attend. I, therefore, proceed without him. The prosecution story is that Ishar Singh went to a village to investigate a case. He arrested one Hassu on suspicion, and finally said he would release him on receiving his haq of Rs. 15. The Rs. 15 was paid and Hassu was released. There are a number of witnesses, who say they were present at the time, and others who say they were present a few days later, when the Superintendent of Police was on tour and Hassu went to complain to him. Ishar Singh is said to have told Hassu not to report the matter on which condition he wouid return the Rs. 15. The witnesses include a Zaildar, and one or more lambardars The case was first heard by Diwan Khan Chand, who framed a charge and heard some of the re-cross-examination. He was then transferred and the case went to Sayad Qasim Ali Shah. The accused asked for a de novo trial. The file then shows that Hassu appeared and told the Court that he could not proceed with the case as his witnesses would no longer support him. The Magistrate then accepted a withdrawal of the case and acquitted the accused. It is clear that such a withdrawal is illegal and that the Magistrate could not pass orders without deciding on the merits of the case. The prosecution witnesses should clearly have been summoned; if they contradicted their former statements, they would have been liable for perjury for either the one statement or the other. In cases of this sort where a public official is accused of corruption, and a charge has been framed against him, it is very desirable that a proper decision should be reached on the merits of the case. I, therefore, consider that the case is of sufficient importance to send up on revision. I accordingly send the file to the High Court for orders with the recommendation that a re trial be ordered.

Order.—The learned counsel for the Crown admits that, though the order of the trial Magistrate is open to objection, the District Magistrate cannot ask this Court to set it aside on revision, as the order in question amounts to an acquittal, and the Local Government is competent to prefer an appeal against acquittal. Accordingly, I decline to accept the recommendation made by the District Magistrate.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 472 of 1928, Decided on 18th May 1928, from an order of Sess. Judge, Karnal, D/- 3rd December 1927.

(a) Penal Code, S. 494—Accused marrying a woman having husband—Accused is guilty—Penal Code makes no distinction between void and invalid marriages.

The word "void" which occurs in S. 494 is not used in the technical sense in which it is used in the Mahomedan law. Penal Code makes no distinction between a void and an invalid marriage and the term "void" used therein covers marriages of both classes. [P 844 C 1, 2]

A Mahomedan was prosecuted for bigamy. The accused knew of the former marriage of the woman married by him. It was argued that the marriage with the accused being only invalid and not void under Mahomedan law, the accused could not be said to have committed bigamy.

Held ; that the accused was guilty. [P 844 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 403—Magistrate, acquitting an accused, under S. 498 not competent to try him under S. 494—He can be tried under S. 494 subsequently.

Where a person is acquitted under S. 498, Penal Code, by a Magistrate, who was not competent to try him under S. 494, he can subsequently be tried under S. 494, and the finding of the former Magistrate is not binding on the Magistrate trying him under S. 494. [P 844 C 2]

Muhammad Amin Khan—for Petitioners.

Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The learned counsel for the petitioners does not now contest the finding that Abdul Ghafur, petitioner, knew of the former marriage of the woman married by him. But he points out that the Mahomedan law makes a distinction between a void and invalid marriage and argues that the marriage with a woman, who is the wife of another man being invalid and not void according to the Mahomedan law, the petitioner Abdul Ghafur, who married such a woman, could not be said to have committed on offence under S. 494 read with S. 109, I. P. C. There is no force in this argument, because the word "void" which occurs in S. 494 is not used in the technical sense in which it is used in the Mahomedan law. The Indian Penal Code makes no distinction between a void and an invalid marriage and the term "void" used therein covers marriages of both classes.

One other point taken is that as the petitioner had previously been acquitted of a charge under S. 498, I. P C., he could not subsequently be convicted under S. 494 of the Code. But the case under S. 498 was tried by a Magistrate of the Second Class who was not competent to try a case under S. 494; so the Magistrate who did so was not bound by the finding of the former Magistrate.

The only other point taken was that the sentences that have been passed upon the petitioners are excessive. The sentence in the case of the female petitioner appears to be so, and I reduce it to simple imprisonment for six months. I see no reason for reducing the sentence of Abdul Ghafur. The petition is accepted to the extent stated above.

Criminal Revn. No. 1862 of 1927, Decided on 10th February 1928, reported by Sess. Judge, Karnal, on 11th November 1927.

Criminal P. C., S. 439—High Court can interfere with acquittals where injustice is caused.

High Court has jurisdiction to interfere with acquittals in revision, though this is not encouraged, where serious injustice has been caused by an error of law. [P 845 C 2]

Where the accused were acquitted on account of wrong appreciation of a point of law with the result that an assault on an officer of Court, while on duty, had been allowed to go unpunished, the acquittal was set aside. [P 845 C 2]

Public Prosecutor—for Petitioner.

Kahn Chand for Amin Lal—for Respondent.

Report.—Surja Mal, Mahajan of Panipat, obtained a money-decree against Data Ram, Lodha of Panipat and in execution of this decree he took out a warrant of attachment against Data Ram. Gita Ram and Shakur Ali process-servers went to Data Ram's place on 2nd January 1927, to execute this warrant.

A quantity of hemp was lying just outside the house of Data Ram. At the instance of the decree-holder, the process-servers proceeded to attach this hemp, but they were resisted by Data Ram and Amin Lal, who not only abused the process-servers, but assaulted them as well. The District Magistrate on the recommendation of the Senior Subordinate Judge, ordered the trial of Data Ram and Amin Lal under Ss. 183 and 186, I. P. C. The case was sent for trial to the Court of Qazi Fazal Ilahi, Tahsildar, Panipat, exercising powers of a Second Class Magistrate, who acquitted the accused on 31st May 1927.

Surja Mal, decree-holder, has filed a petition for revision of the above order.

The trial Magistrate has held that the process-servers were resisted by Data Ram and Amin Lal, but notwithstanding this finding the learned Magistrate has acquitted Data Ram and Amin Lal on the ground that the hemp sought to be attached had already been sold by Data Ram to Puran Chand Mahajan whose servant had come at the time of attachment to take delivery of the hemp, and that for this reason Data Ram and Amin Lal had the right to prevent the bailiffs from attaching the property.

This defence was never raised by Data Ram and Amin Lal during the course of the trial. It was a defence made out for the accused persons by the trial Court and it was based on some evidence which had come on the record from the prosecution side. Assuming that the hemp sought to be attached had been sold to Puran Chand, who had sent his man to take delivery thereof, the fact cannot be denied that delivery had not yet been given to Puran Chand through his servant. The property was still lying at Data Ram's place Then there is no evidence on the record that this property had, as a matter of fact, been sold to Puran Chand. Data Ram and Amin Lal should have left it to Puran Chand to object to the attachment after it had been made and should not have resisted the execution of the warrant. The question of title was not to be determined by the executing bailiffs on the spot. The learned Additional Sessions Judge, who first heard the petition for revision, was of the opinion that any resistance to the bona fide performance of duty would be punishable in law. I agree with this view. Judgment-debtors cannot take it upon themselves to decide whether or not a certain property in their possession sought to be attached by the decree-holder should be attached or should not be proceeded against. So long as the property is in their possesssion they have no right to offer resistance to the attachment thereof.

In my opinion the respondents, Data Ram and Amin Lal, have been acquitted on insufficient grounds. They never put up the defence in the trial Court that they had sold the property to Puran Chand or that the property was no longer in their possession. They simply pleaded that they did not offer any resistance to the attachment. This defence was discredited by the trial Court which should not have created a line of defence, which was not taken up by the respondents.

I would, therefore, refer the case for the orders of the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court with the recommendation that the wrong order of acquittal passed by the Magistrate be set aside.

Order.—The learned Sessions Judge has given good reason why this revision should be accepted. This Court has jurisdiction to interfere with acquittals in revision though this is not encouraged. Where serious injustice has been caused by an error of law it should do so. In this case the Magistrate obviously erred in his appreciation of the law, with the result that an assault on the civil officers of the Courts, acting in exercise of their duty, has been allowed to go unpunished. It is imperative that such officers should be protected in proper cases. As Government did not appeal, the Sessions Judge took the only course open to him. This is, in my opinion, an exceptional case. I accept the reference for the reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge, set aside the acquittal of the respondents, and direct them to be re-tried by a First Class Magistrate at headquarters to be nominated by the District Magistrate.

First Appeal No. 127 of 1923, Decided on 26th April 1928, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Delhi, D/- 9th December 1922.

Contract—Construction—Indent form making seller liable for damages caused by non-shipment—Sellers must request for an extension of time if goods are shipped late.

The plaintiff indented on the defendants some piecegoods. The indent forms provided that should the goods of the contract or any portion of them not be shipped by the specified time the contract for the quantity so delayed shall at our (buyers') option if exercised within three days be either cancelled without an allowance or such extention of time as you (sellers) may ask for shall be granted by us at the allowance as specified,

Held: that if the goods are shipped late and that is a matter within the knowledge of the sellers, the sellers must on pain of damages ask for an extension of time and unless they made a request plaintiff could not exercise their option: A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 557; Dist. [P 847 C 1]

Raj Narain, Sardha Ram and Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Appellants.

Moti Sagar, Nanwan Mal and Kishen Dial—for Respondents.

Johnstone, J.—The plaintiffs indented on the defendants for 31 cases of piece goods, of three different kinds, shipments for each kind of goods to be in two lots, June and July 1920 shipments. The contracts were made on 3rd November 1919 on the usual printed forms of the Delhi Piecegoods Association and contained the following written agreement:

We agree to accept the goods without any allowance or without requiring any certificate of the cause of delay if shipped late up to two months from extreme date of shipment.

The numbers of the indents were 322, 291 and 298. The defendants made delivery of portions of each kind of goods and the plaintiffs' suit was for damages for non-delivery of two cases under first indent, ten cases under the second indent and 11 cases under the third indent. The total claim, including interest, amounted to Rs. 13,896-6-9.

The defendants preferred several pleas against the claim and issues were framed on the parties' pleadings. Of those issues the majority was decided in the plaintiffs' favour, but the trial Court held that the plaintiffs' claim for damages was barred under Cl. 8 (b) of the indent forms. The quantum of damages was not determined, and the suit was dismissed by reason of the interpretation placed on Cl. 8 (b) just mentioned.

It will be seen from the preceding observations that the whole case hinges on the proper interpretation of Cl. 8 and for the sake of convenience I quote that clause and its sub-Cls. (a) and (b):

Should the goods of a contract or any portion of them not be shipped by the specified time the contract for the quantity so delayed shall at my (our) option if exercised within three days either be cancelled without an allowance or such extension of time as you may ask for shall be granted by me (us) at allowance as under, otherwise the goods shall be cancelled.

For cotton goods (goods on which 3½ per cent. import duty is charged):

If shipped one month or under later than the time specified the total allowance to be 1½ per cent.

If over one month but not more than two months 2½ per cent.

If over two months but not more than three months 3½ per cent.

If over three months later than the time specified 7½ per cent.

For woollen and other goods. (Goods on which 7½ per cent., import duty is charged):

The allowance in the first instance not to exceed ...			2½ per cent.

second	...	...	4 do.
third	...	...	5 do.
fourth	...	...	7½ do.

(a) All the allowance before mentioned shall be calculated on the sale price of the contract and any larger or subsequent allowance for late shipment whether expressly named above or the subject of a separate agreement shall be in substitution of and not in addition to any smaller allowance or any allowance previously granted.

(b) In case of non-shipment within six months from extreme date of shipment excepting when non-shipment is due to cause as stated below I (we) hold you responsible to pay me (us) whatever damages may be assessed by arbitration as provided for below, provided that in case of non-delivery or non-shipment a claim will be time-barred if not made within eight months from extreme date of shipment.

Sub-clause (c) refers to delay on account of storms, fires, war and so forth and has no concern with the facts of the present suit.

Various interpretations of these terms have been suggested in the course of arguments, but after a careful consideration of the terms we have no hesitation in assigning the following meaning to them.

It is necessary for our purpose first to interpret sub-Cl. (b). That sub-clause refers to cases of non-shipment within six months from the extreme date of shipment (subject to exceptions not relevent to our enquiry). It provides that the sellers are liable to damages and that the damages are to be assessed by arbitration as provided in Cl. 15, subject to the condition that the buyers make their claim within the specified time. As I shall show, this sub Cl. (b) does not apply to the facts before us for the reason that this is not a case of non-shipment later than six months from the extreme date of shipment allowed by the contracts.

I turn now to the first part of Cl. 8. Here we are concerned with delay in shipment not exceeding six months. In such cases allowances, at percentage varying with the degree of lateness are provided for. If the goods are shipped late—and that is a matter within the knowledge of the sellers—the sellers must ask for an extension of time. The buyers receive this request for extension and then they can exercise an option. Their option is: (a) to cancel the contract within three days and get no allowance, or (b) within three days to allow an extension and by doing so get the allowance provided for in the second part of the main clause. If the events mentioned above do not happen, then "the goods shall be cancelled." The primary duty rests with the sellers who, as soon as they realize that the goods are shipped late, must ask for an extension. If they do not perform that primary duty they are liable for damages.

It was argued on behalf of the defendants that the sellers need not ask for an extension and that damages can only be claimed if the goods are shipped more than six months late. But with neither those propositions can I agree, for they both conflict with the clear provisions of Cl. 8.

The shipments were of June and July 1920 and consequently the dates within which the goods had to be shipped were 10th July and 10th August, the usual ten days' grace being allowed. The manuscript terms of the contracts have been interpreted by both parties as extending the extreme dates of shipments by two months. It is admitted before us that the actual dates of shipment of the disputed cases were as follows :

Indent No. 322 6th November 1920.
Indent No. 291 1st lot 27th November 1920.
2nd lot 3rd January 1921.
Indent No. 293 1st lot 10th November 1920.
2nd lot 29th November 1920.

From these dates it is apparent that the goods were shipped within six months of the proper dates and, therefore, as I have pointed out above, Cl. 8 (b) of the indent forms could not apply.

The shipments were, however, all made late and the main question was whether the defendants had asked for extension of time. It is proved on the record, vide p. 13 of the printed book, that the defendants were aware of the delay in shipments as early as the end of August 1920. They took no action, however, until their sending of invoices to the plaintiffs in December 1920 and January to March 1921. The invoices contain foot-notes regarding the charging of interest and godown rent and so forth, but nowhere is there any request either in the invoices or in the covering letters for an extension of time. Nor was it pleaded by the defendants that they had asked for an extension. The plaintiffs returned the invoices and refused to accept the goods. It is true that before the plaintiffs did this they sent the invoices to their buyers, but that circumstance does not affect the justice of their claim against the defendants It was contended for the defendants that the mere sending of an invoice (though even the allowance due under Cl. 8 was not noted thereon) was equivalent to a request for extension of time, but that contention cannot be accepted. Reliance, too, was wrongly placed on Mansa Ram v. Mangalsain (1) and Prag Das v. Muni Lal A. I. R. 1927 Lahore 557, for in both of those cases a request for extension of time was made expressly or impliedly and was made before the due date. I am not prepared to hold that the mere sending of invoices was an express or implied request to the plaintiffs to exercise the option allowed to them under Cl. 8. The plaintiffs were justified in declining to accept the invoices, and the fact that they afterwards demanded a survey and so forth, apparently under the impression that the shipments were more than six months late, does not alter the fact that the defendants had already broken the contract and were liable in damages for non-delivery.

The trial Court observed that, but for its interpretation of Cl. 8 of the indents it would have held the plaintiffs to be ready and willing to perform their part of the contracts. On this subject I have no doubt. Ranbir Singh plaintiff went into the witness box and explained that during 1920 his firm had taken delivery from the defendants of goods worth between Rs. 2½ lakhs and Rs. 3 lakhs and that his firm had a large deposit in hand with the defendants. That statement was not rebutted and I am satisfied that readiness and willingness were proved.

The quantum of damages has not been assessed by the Court below and the case must be remanded for a decision on that point. I would accept this appeal for the reasons given above and direct the Senior Subordinate Judge to come to a finding on the sixth issue. The stamp on appeal shall be refunded and other costs shall follow the event.

Insolvency proceedings were started at Rawalpindi and subsequently at Delhi at the instance of the debtor and the Delhi creditors respectively. The Delhi creditors of the debtor had not only to realize a much larger sum than his Rawalpindi creditors, but had also to contest an alienation made by him. The Rawalpindi creditors agreed to accept part payment of their debts out of the sale-proceeds of the debtors' property situated at Rawalpindi :

Sardha Ram, Shiv Narain, Nanak Chand, Gobind Ram Khanna and Shiv Ram—for Respondents.

Order.—It appears that the brothers Kedar Nath and Sheo Parshad, proprietors of the firm "Mul Chand-Ganga Bishan" of Delhi belong to Rawalpindi, but they have long been established at Delhi. They carried on business at Delhi, Rawalpindi, Amritsar and Karachi and had creditors in all these places. On 17th April 1926, they lodged an insolvency petition at Rawalpindi. On 2nd June 1926, one of their creditors applied to the insolvency Court at Delhi for their being adjudged insolvents. The Rawalpindi insolvency Court made an interim order appointing a Receiver. The debtors applied to this Court praying that the case against them pending at Delhi be transferred from that Court to the Court of the District Judge of Delhi or to the Court at Rawalpindi. This petition is opposed by all the creditors of Delhi except three. Mr. Sardha Ram and Mr. N. C. Pandit who appear on behalf of the opposing creditors of Delhi urge that proceedings should continue in both the Courts as provided in S. 36, Provincial Insolvency Act, and that it should be left to those Courts to decide which of them should ultimately annul the order of adjudication that it might pass to enable the other Court to carry on the insolvency proceedings. Further they urge that the Rawalpindi creditors having made a compromise with the debtors are not interested like the creditors of Delhi to exert themselves to get at every available property belonging to the debtors and to contest the alienations made by them. Mr. Gobind Ram Khanna who appears for the three non-opposing creditors of Delhi desires that the proceedings at Rawalpindi should continue. Pandit Sheo Narain who appears for the Rawalpindi creditors urges, on the other hand, that the Rawalpindi Court which commenced the proceedings earlier should be given preference and should be allowed to continue them and that the Delhi Court should be directed to stay its proceedings. In support of his contention he cites In re Aranvayal Sabhapaty Moodliar (1) and In the matter of William Watson (2). In the former case a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court came to the following conclusion :

It appears to us that it would not be just or equitable to allow the proceedings in both

(1) [1897] 21 Bom. 297.
(2) [1904] 31 Cal. 761=8 C. W. N. 553.

Courts to go on concurrently. This would lead to most undesirable conflict of jurisdiction ; and as the proceedings in Madras were prior in time, and all the assets of the insolvent are vested in the Official Assignee there, this Court ought to yield to the prior claim of the Court at Madras. The best course, we think, under the circumstances will be to stay the proceedings here till further orders of the insolvent Court, leaving the Bombay creditors to take such steps in Madras as they may be advised to take. This may appear to be hard upon them, but it would be equally hard on the Madras creditors to be compelled to take steps in Bombay, ...

The following were the conclusions inter alia arrived at in the Calcutta cases :

The insolvency Courts in India have a discretion in making an adjudication order notwithstanding the existence of a prior adjudicating order in another country ; provided the conditions of the Insolvency Act are satisfied and there is no valid reason to the contrary. The presence of large assets within the jurisdiction of those Courts is a strong circumstance in favour of making such an order.

The different High Courts in India exercising concurrent jurisdiction should also be guided by the above mentioned rule, but where there is a conflict, having regard to questions of convenience, one Court should yield to another as it may not be just or equitable to allow the proceedings in all the Courts to go on concurrently.

But in the present case the debtors owe to the Delhi creditors Rs. 97,334-4-3, while to the Rawalpindi creditors they owe only Rs. 40,961-11-3. Further the debtors own very valuable properties at Delhi and it is stated that they have alienated the main portion thereof to a relative of theirs. Thus the Delhi creditors have not only to realize a much larger sum than the Rawalpindi creditors, but have also to contest an alienation made by the debtors. Further, it is clear that the Rawalpindi creditors are not concerned in taking a keen interest in the proceedings affecting the Delhi property and debts due to the Delhi creditors. They have already made a compromise with the debtors and agreed to accept part payment of their debts out of the sale-proceeds of the debtors' property situated at Rawalpindi. Having regard to the peculiar circumstances of this case it would be proper to allow the proceedings to continue in both the Courts leaving it to them to decide ultimately which of them should annul the order of adjudication that it might make. The debtors' application, is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

* Civil P. C., Sch. 2, para. 21 (2)—Decree not in accordance with award—Whole case cannot be re-opened in appeal.

Although a person can appeal against the decree passed on an award, so far as it is in excess of or not in accordance with the award, he is not entitled to re-open the whole case and to address on all other questions which were raised before the lower Court. [P 850 C 1]

Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand Mital—for Appellant.

Madan Gopal and Jagan Nath Aggarwal—for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gujranwala.

It appears that during the pendency of the suit in his Court the dispute was referred by the parties to arbitration. The award of the arbitrator was that the defendant should hand over to the plaintiff a certain factory within a specified time and on his failure to do so he should pay to the plaintiff Rs. 13,000. Objections were taken to the award by the appellant which were finally decided against him ; but the Senior Subordinate Judge being of the opinion that the time for handing over possession of the factory having expired on the date when he decided the case, the only practicable course was for him to grant the plaintiff a decree for Rs 13,000 and costs. It is against this decree that the defendant appeals. The only ground on which an appeal in a case like this is entertainable is that the decree is in excess of or not in accordance with the award. There is no doubt that the decree in this case technically is not in accordance with the award which provided that the defendant shall give possession of the factory to the plaintiff before a certain date and on failure to do that shall pay Rs. 13,000. The Senior Subordinate Judge has not incorporated the first condition in his decree and to that extent his decree cannot be substained.

We are, however, unable to agree with the learned counsel for the appellant and because he can appeal against the decree, so far as it is not in accordance with the award, he is entitled to re-open the whole case and to address us on all other questions which were raised before the Senior Subordinate Judge. His attack must be confined to the legality of the decree as compared with the award.

We accept this appeal and in place of the decree passed by the Senior Subordinate Judge we direct that a decree be passed to the effect that the defendant shall give possession of the factory mentioned in the award of the arbitrator to the plaintiff within the time fixed by the arbitrator and on his failure to do so shall pay Rs. 13,000. In other words the decree shall be in accordance with the award irrespective of the consideration that the date fixed by the arbitrator for the giving possession of the factory had expired on the date of the decree. Under the peculiar circumstances of the case we leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Criminal Revn. No. 1764 of 1927, Decided on 20th January 1928, reported by Sess. Judge, Dera Ghazi Khan, on 15th October 1927.

Criminal P. C., S. 526 (8)—Intention notified to the Court for transfer of a case—Reasonable postponement must be granted—Proceedings after refusal are unwarranted and ought to be set aside.

When an accused notifies to the Court before which his case is pending, his intention to make an application under S. 526, Cl. (8), for a transfer of his case, it is the duty of the Magistrate to grant adjournment. The Magistrate has no power to proceed with the hearing of the case until a reasonable postponement has been granted. All the subsequent proceedings after his refusal are unwarranted by law and ought to be set aside. [P 580 C 2]

Report.—The petitioner is a process-server attached to the Court of Khan Bahadur Sardar Mir Dost Muhammad Khan, Honorary Subordinate Judge and Magistrate at Rojhan. A complaint was filed against him in that Court under S. 161, I. P. C, for having accepted illegal gratification in the discharge of his duties as a process-server. Notice of this charge was served on accused on 18th June last. The petitioner appears to have instructed Lala Parma Nand, Advocate, on the same day to file a petition for transfer of the case which was presented by him on 20th June to the District Magistrate at Dera Ghazi Khan. On 19th June, when the case was taken up for hearing by the Honorary Magistrate, the accused intimated that he had submitted an application for the transfer of his case from that Court and prayed that proceedings be stayed. The Honorary Magistrate refused to do so and proceeded to record evidence. The petitioner has been convicted and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 40.

Undes S. 526, Cl. (8), when an accused notifies to the Court before which his case is pending his intention to make an application under that section in respect of his case, it is the duty of the Magistrate to grant an adjournment, and it has been held in numerous cases that a Magistrate has no power to proceed with the hearing of the case until a reasonable postponement has been granted. All the subsequent proceedings after the refusal are unwarranted by law and ought to be set aside: Sohoni's Code of Criminal Procedure, Edn. 12, p. 1117.

The Court of the Honorary Magistrate is situated at a distance of 110 miles from the headquarters. The petitioner could not leave that place without permission which was not granted, and consequently, he had no reasonable opportunity for getting his case transferred.

I recommend that the proceedings be quashed, the conviction set aside and a retrial ordered.

Order.—For reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge I quash the trial of Ghulam Rasul under S. 161, I. P. C., set aside his conviction and order his retrial before a Magistrate at headquarters to be nominated by the District Magistrate. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1884 of 1927, Decided on 4th May 1928, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Lyallpur, D/- 24th August 1927.

Punjab Restriction of Habitual Offenders Act (5 of 1918), Ss. 3 and 7—Order under this Act can be substituted by District Magistrate in appeal by an order under S. 110, Criminal P. C.

The Restriction of Habitual Offenders Act only provides for a higher penalty for offenders who are found to be incorrigible.

A District Magistrate in appeal has jurisdiction to substitute an order under S. 110, Criminal P. C., for that passed by the trial Magistrate restricting a certain person proceeded against under the Restriction of Habitual Offenders Act, [P 851 C 1, 2]

Abdul Qadir for M. Sleem— for Petitioner.

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This order will dispose of Criminal Revisions Nos. 1884 and 1885 of 1927.

The proceedings were started against the petitioners in both cases on notices being issued calling upon them to show cause why their movements should not be restricted under Act 5 of 1918 (Restriction of Habitual Offenders Act). The trial Magistrate passed orders against the petitioners restricting their movements to their village for a period of eighteen months. On appeal the learned District Magistrate was of opinion that the petitioners were not incorrigible habitual offenders, and that in the circumstances disclosed on the record the proper order was to bind them down under S. 110, Criminal P. C. He, accordingly, ordered that if the appellants furnished security in Rs. 5,000 each, together with two sureties each, to be of good behaviour for a period of eighteen months from the date of the Magistrate's order, the order restricting them to their village for that period would be cancelled. Accordingly the petitioners furnished security as directed, and the District Magistrate cancelled the order restricting them to their village.

The petitioners have now come up on revision to this Court and Sir Abdul Qadir on their behalf has contended that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to substitute the order under S. 110 for that passed by the trial Magistrate restricting them to their village I am, however, of opinion that this contention is devoid of all force. A reference to the provisions of Act 5 of 1918 shows that the procedure to be followed in proceedings under that Act is the same as that described for action under S. 110, Criminal P. C., and that the evidence required to justify the passing of an order under both provisions of the law is also the same. The Act provides for a higher penalty for offenders who are found to be incorrigible. I, therefore, can find no irregularity in the procedure adopted by the learned District Magistrate, nor can I see that he has done anything which would indicate that any prejudice was caused to the petitioners. I, therefore, overrule this objection. Sir Abdul Qadir has also attacked the findings of the Magistrate on the merits and has argued that the evidence does not justify the petitioners being put on security. The District Magistrate has, however, written a careful judgment and has discussed the evidence in detail and I see no reason to interfere with his finding on the revision side. I dismiss both the petitions.

Raj Krishna for Govt. Advocate— for the Crown.

Judgment.—Three persons, namely, Fazla alias Phalla, Muhammad Din and Muhammad have been convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., and have been sentenced to transportation for life. They have appealed.

The case for the prosecution is that about a year ago a lady named Mt. Fatima, the sister of Muhammad and daughter of Kamman, was enticed away by Ali, son of Jalal, deceased. She lived with Ali for several months but on the intercession of the brotherhood, she returned to her parents. A day before the alleged occurrence she was again enticed away by Ali. On the day of the occurrence Jalal came to know that Fazla, Muhammad Din and Muhammad, along with another person, with whom we are not concerned, were cutting his green wheat crop in his field. He went accompanied by his brother Allah Din and remonstrated. On this the three appellants made a murderous attack upon him which resulted in the fracture of a number of his ribs and other injuries. In fact, according to the medical evidence he received more than 13 injuries. The eyewitnesses to the occurrence are two persons, namely, Lal Khan and Karam Din. Lal Khan went immediately to make the first information report at the nearest police station which is at a distance of about five miles from the scene of the occurrence. Jalal was removed to the hospital and his condition was so serious that his dying declaration was recorded by the Sub-Inspector. This dying declaration was followed by another dying declaration before a Magistrate. The subject-matter of these two dying declarations is very much the same, and in these declarations Jalal makes it perfectly clear that he was attacked by the three appellants before us. Jalal died ten days after his injuries. A post mortem examination was held and we have the evidence of Dr. S. Sadiq that the deceased died of multiple injuries and pneumonia which was incidental to the injuries.

On the evidence of the eyewitnesses, there can be no manner of doubt that the accused did, as a matter of fact, mercilessly assault the deceased with lathis. The question which requires our consideration is as to what offence has been committed. It was argued by the counsel for the appellants that the deceased died of pneumonia, and, therefore, it cannot be said that death was the direct result of the injuries which he had received at the hands of the appellants. Our attention has been invited by the Public Prosecutor to at least one reported case, namely, Nuro v. Emperor (1), which lays down very clearly that if a person received grievous injuries and is detained in hospital, and as a result of those injuries pneumonia supervenes and the victim dies, then the perpetrators of the attack upon him are guilty of murder. There is a very informing passage in Russell on Crimes, Vol. 1, p. 651, which also supports the contention put forward on behalf of the Crown. Under these circumstances the guilt of the appellants comes within the provisions of S. 302, I. P. C. Whatever might have been the grievances of the appellants against Ali, the son of Jalal, they had no excuse whatsoever for attacking Jalal. Under these circumstances, the convictions and sentences seem to be appropriate and we accordingly dismiss the appeal.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 214 of 1926, Decided on 23rd April 1928, from order of District Judge, Gurdaspur, D/- 2nd November 1925.

Court-fees Act, S. 7 (5) (d)—Claim for possession of land—Buildings on land not claimed—Jurisdiction of Court and amount of the Court-fee stamp are determined by its market value irrespective of buildings—Suits Valuation Act, S. 8.

Where the claim in a suit is for possession of the land and not of the buildings on the land, it is the market value of the land, having regard to its nature at the time of institution of the suit irrespective of the buildings, that determines the jurisdiction of the Court, and the amount of the Court-fee stamp payable on the plaint is also to be calculated on the same.

Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Petitioners.

Faqir Chand—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The petitioners obtained the usual decree for declaration that an alienation of the land in suit would not affect their reversionary rights except to the extent of Rs. 105 which was held to be the consideration for necessity for the alienation paid by the alienee. After the death of the alienor the present suit was instituted for possession of the same land. It is described as a suit for redemption on payment of Rs. 105. But, in my opinion, the suit should be for possession of the land on payment of Rs. 105 by virtue of the decree obtained by the plaintiffs.

It appears that after the decision of the first suit the property was sold by the then vendee to another person who put up rather valuable buildings thereon. The present suit was instituted in the Court of a Subordinate Judge of the Second Class, but the plaint was returned by the Judge on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit because the value of the structure put by the defendant far exceeded his jurisdiction, the learned Judge also directed the plaintiffs to pay Court-fee stamp on the value of the building constructed by the defendant and also of the land. The plaintiffs appealed to the District Judge from this order, but the learned Judge also agreed with the trial Court.

In my opinion the view of the Courts below is erroneous. In a suit like the present it is the market value of the land that determines the jurisdiction of the Court, and the amount of Court-fee stamp payable on the plaint is also to be calculated on the same. So far as the buildings are concerned the plaintiffs are entitled to ignore them leaving it to the defendant to remove them or to claim such remedy as he may be advised to claim in respect thereof. Their claim is for possession of the land and not of the buildings with the land. The market value of the land is to be determined under the provisions of the Court-fees Act and the Suits Valuation Act having regard to its nature at the time of the institution of the suit irrespective of the buildings. The respondents' counsel concedes that this is the correct view of the matter.

I accept this petition, set aside the orders of both the Courts below and return the case to the trial Court with directions to proceed with it in accordance with law with due regard to the observations made above. The defendant will pay the plaintiffs' costs in both the Courts below. I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 488—Application under, —Husband not refusing notice — Ex-parte proceedings are not justified.

In proceedings for grant of maintenance, the Magistrate is not justified in proceeding ex parte against the husband when circumstances show that there was no refusal of acceptance of service of notice by him. [P 854 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 488—Jurisdiction—Husband resident of X district—Wife residing with her father in Y district—Last visits of husband to his wife in her parents' house when he lived there—Wife's petition for maintenance in a Court in Y district can be entertained.

A husband was a resident of X District and the father of his wife resided in Y district. The husband paid some visits to her in her parents' house and those were the last occasions when the husband and the wife lived together, after which the wife made an application for grant of maintenance in a Court in the Y district.

Held : that it must be taken that the husband last resided with his wife in her parents' house and therefore the Court in the Y district had jurisdiction to entertain the petition. [P 854 C 1]

V. N. Sethi—for Respondent.

Order.—Mt. Sakina presented an application for grant of maintenance against her husband Allah Ditta under S. 488, Criminal P. C. Notice was issued to the husband but was returned with a report that he had refused to accept service. It appears that the notice was alleged to have been tendered to Allah Ditta in the house of Mt. Sakina's father where the lady herself resided, the suggestion being that he had gone on a visit to his wife there. The Magistrate accepting this report as true proceeded ex parte against the husband and made an order of maintenance fixing Rs. 10 as the monthly allowance.

The Sessions Judge of Gujranwala has reported this case with the recommendation that the proceedings under S. 488 be quashed on the grounds :

(1) That the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to entertain the petition ;

(2) that the Magistrate was not justified in proceeding ex parte against Allah.

Ditta because in the opinion of the learned Judge, the report on the summons that he had refused to accept the same was false ;

(3) that it had not been established that he had neglected or refused to maintain his wife ; and

(4) that the amount fixed was excessive.

I do not propose to deal with the last two grounds because, in my opinion, the second ground in support of the learned Sessions Judge's recommendation is sound. I agree with him that the circumstances show that there was no refusal of acceptance of service of notice by him.

With regard to the question of jurisdiction : it appears that the husband is a resident of the Jhelum District and the father of Mt. Sakina resides in the Gujrat District. The learned Sessions Judge is prepared to accept the allegation of the wife that the husband paid some visits to her in her parents' house, but he is not prepared to hold that this amounts to his having resided with her in her parents' house. This view, in my opinion, is erroneous. If it is true that the husband paid some visits to his wife in her parents' house, and those were the last occasions when the husband and the wife lived together then it must be held that the husband last resided with his wife in her parents' house, and consequently the Courts in the Gujrat District would have jurisdiction to entertain the petition.

I consider, therefore, that, while the Magistrate had jurisdiction to entertain the petition, he was not justified in proceeding ex parte against Allah Ditta, and, therefore, I set aside his order and remit the case to him to hear the application for maintenance after due notice to the respondent Allah Ditta.

A minor principal is not bound by the acts of his agent unless the latter be his legally constituted guardian and even then under certain specified circumstances. [P 854 C 2]

(b) Contract Act, S. 184—Minor can be appointed agent so as to bind principal—Capacity of principal to contract determines its binding nature.

A minor can be appointed an agent so as to bind the principal and it is the capacity of the principal to enter into a contract which determines the binding nature or otherwise of the contract. [P 854 C 2, P 855 C 1]

Anant Ram Khosla—for Appellant.

Judgment. — Parkash Chand, the plaintiff who is a minor, is the owner of a firm called Kanhaya Lal Ram Sarup, which has recently been started on his behalf. It is not, therefore, his ancestral business. One Ram Kishen, who also apparently is a minor, was the manager of this firm and in that capacity he entered into two contracts on behalf of the firm with Messrs. Strauss and Co., Ltd., of Karachi. The plaintiff instituted a suit for a declaration that Ram Kishen had no authority to bind the minor by entering into those contracts. This suit has been dismissed both by the trial Court and the District Judge ; by the latter on the ground that the relief claimed is an equitable one and since in this case it is obviously not equitable it cannot be granted.

The question whether the contracts are or are not advantageous to the minor does not, in my opinion, arise in this case. No authority is needed for the proposition that a minor is incapable of entering into a valid contract either personally or through an agent and that the only person who can bind a minor is his legally constituted guardian and that also under certain specified circumstances. This case has not been fought on behalf of the defendants on the ground that Ram Kishen was acting under the authority of a legally constituted guardian of the minor or even that there was any such guardian of the minor. It is indisputable that what a minor cannot himself do he cannot do through an agent. At the same time it is immaterial in this case whether the agent, Ram Kishen, was a minor at the time when he entered into the contract, because a minor can be appointed an agent so as to bind the principal without incurring any personal liability and it is the capacity of the principal to enter into a contract which determines the binding nature or otherwise of the contract.

As in the present case the minor was not capable of entering into the contracts, his agent Ram Kishen was subject to the same incapacity in the matter of making a contract enforceable against the principal. The contracts in suit, therefore, are void and must be declared as such.

I accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the Courts below and decree the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Vasheshar Nath—for Appellant.

Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On the night of 28th/29th October 1927 Narain Singh, an Arora of Chicho-ki-Mallian in the district of Sheikhupura, and his wife, Mt. Amar Kaur, were brutally assaulted, while they were sleeping on the roof of their house. The medical evidence shows that the husband sustained six incised wounds including fatal injuries on the neck; and that the wife received four incised wounds on the head and other parts of the body. To these injuries the victims succumbed almost instantaneously.

Now Jagat Singh, a son of the victims, deposes that on the night in question he was sleeping on a charpoy at a short distance from his parents, and that at about midnight he woke up on hearing the sound of blows being struck. He then saw one or two persons standing near the bed of his father, and he recognized one of them to be Kartar Singh. He also saw the prisoner Harnamun striking Mt. Amar Kaur with a hatchet. The witness, thereupon, raised an alarm. While the person or persons who were seen standing near the bed of Narain Singh, managed to make good their escape; Harnamun was arrested after he had jumped on to the roof of the shop of one Mela Ram and ultimately into the lane near the house of one Isa Teli. In the lane the arrest was made by Nawab Teli with the help of his nephew Sardara and one Ahmad Din.

The evidence of Nawab, Sardara and Ahmad Din leaves no doubt that Harnamun, when arrested by them, was holding a hatchet which was besmeared with blood, and that his hands and feet as well as his garments were stained with blood. The Imperial Serologist discovered human blood not only on the hatchet, which was recovered from the prisoner on the night in question, but also on the shirt and two chadars which were removed from his person. It is to be observed that the prisoner has not been able to impeach the impartiality or the veracity of these witnesses who have absolutely no motive for fastening a false charge upon him. Indeed, he admits that on the night in question he was arrested by the above-mentioned witnesses, but explains that the arrest was made when he was running through the lane. It appears that he lives in a house which is at some distance from the lane where the arrest was made, and it is not explained why he happened to be in the lane in the dead of the night and why he was running away.

The direct evidence given by Jagat Singh, corroborated, as it is, by the testimony of the disinterested witnesses, Ahmad Din, Nawab and Sardara, and reinforced by the recovery of the hatchet and the garments which were found to be stained with human blood, leaves no doubt whatsoever that the convict participated in the assault which resulted in the death of Mt. Amar Kaur. It appears that he had no motive for causing the death of either Mt. Amar Kaur or her husband Narain Singh, but it is beyond dispute that he is a sepi (partner in cultivation) of one Kartar Singh, who was apparently not on good terms with Narain Singh. Be that as it may, the evidence summarized above makes it absolutely clear that the prisoner, either alone or in concert with one or more persons, committed the murder; and that he has been rightly convicted under S. 302, I. P. C.

The question of sentence, however, requires careful consideration. On the one hand we have the facts that the prisoner is responsible directly for the murder of Mt. Amar Kaur and constructively for that of Narain Singh, and that the double murder was committed after premeditation and in cold blood. On the other hand the medical evidence shows that he is a boy of about 17 years of age. I am not prepared to assent to the proposition that youth alone constitutes such an extenuating circumstance as would justify the imposition of the lesser penalty prescribed by the law. We have, however, in this case, the additional circumstance that the prisoner had no personal enmity with either of the victims, and that he was probably a tool in the hands of their enemies like Kartar Singh who has been acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge. Having regard to all the relevant circumstances I am of opinion that the extreme penalty of the law should not be exacted in this case. I, accordingly, accept the appeal so far as to reduce the sentence of death to one of transportation for life.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 2102 of 1927, Decided on 20th April 1928, from order of Sess-Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 12th December 1927.

Criminal P. C., S. 139-A—Order under S. 133—Denial of the existence of public right—Provisions under S. 139-A are mandatory—The Magistrate is not to see the sufficiency but reliability of evidence in support of the denial.

Where an order under S. 133 is made and the person proceeded against denies the existence of any public right, the Magistrate must first look to a finding under S. 139-A whether there was any reliable evidence in support of such denial. Where there is any reliable evidence the Magistrate must stay proceedings. If he finds, however, that there is no such evidence he can then proceed under S. 137. It is not the duty of the Magistrate to come to a finding whether the evidence is in his opinion sufficient to support the case. All he has to see is whether there is any reliable evidence in support of the denial of any public right. If there is, the Magistrate must stay his hand till the other side has gone to a civil Court.

Fakir Chand—for Petitioners.

Jagan Nath—for Respondent.

Judgment.—One Mohammada applied to a Magistrate, First Class, under S. 133, Criminal P. C., that the petitioners in this Court should be directed to remove the obstruction erected by them in a public way or show cause why this should not be done. The petition was referred to the Naib-Tahsildar for report, on receipt of which the Magistrate, on 3rd October 1926, issued notice to the petitioners to remove the obstruction or to show cause. When the petitioners appeared, certain witnesses on behalf of Mohammada were examined, but only one on behalf of the petitioners. Thereafter, on 19th July 1927, the Magistrate by order directed the petitioner to clear away the obstruction from the public way within ten days. Against this order a revision petition was preferred in the Court of the Sessions Judge. The learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that a proper opportunity had not been given to the present petitioners to present their case and he directed the Magistrate that the petitioners should be given an opportunity to produce their evidence, documentary and oral, in support of their allegations and that thereafter the record of the case should be sent back to his Court for disposal. Accordingly, the present petitioner examined certain witnesses and proved certain documents before the Magistrate who returned the record to the Sessions Judge. On receipt of the record the learned Sessions Judge, without considering the evidence which he had ordered to be recorded as the petitioners had not been given an opportunity to produce it, dismissed the revision petition apparently on the ground that the matter had finally to go to a civil Court and it did not much matter which of the parties had to institute the suit. The petitioners have now applied to this Court on the revision side.

It is not disputed before me that this case has not been properly heard by the Magistrate. Both he and the learned Sessions Judge seem to have neglected entirely the provisions of the new S. 139-A, Criminal P. C., which enacts that when an order is made under S. 133 for the purpose of preventing obstruction to the public in the use of a way the Magistrate shall question the respondent as to whether he denies the existence of any public right in respect of the way. If the respondent does so the Magistrate shall, before proceeding under S. 137 or under S. 138, Criminal P. C., enquire into the matter. It is further enacted that if in such enquiry the Magistrate finds that there is any reliable evidence in support of such denial he shall stay the proceedings until the matter of the existence of such right has been decided by a competent civil Court, while if he finds that there is no such evidence he shall proceed as laid down in S. 137 or S. 138, as the case may require. In the present case nothing like this was done. The Magistrate proceeded entirely under S. 137 and decided the case without first coming to a finding under S. 139-A whether there was any reliable evidence in support of such denial. Where there is any reliable evidence the Magistrate must stay proceedings. If he finds, however, that there is no such evidence he can then proceed under S. 137. I might note in this connexion that it is not the duty of the Magistrate to come to a finding whether the evidence is in his opinion sufficient to support the case of the respondents, that is, the present petitioner before me; all he has to see is whether there is any reliable evidence in support of the denial of any public right in respect of the way. If there is, the Magistrate must stay his hand till the other side has gone to a civil Court.

With these remarks I accept this petition, set aside the orders of the Courts below and direct the Magistrate to proceed as laid down in S. 139-A, Criminal P. C., and as explained above. The evidence already recorded before the Magistrate and by order of the Sessions Judge can stand, but additional evidence can be produced.

First Appeal No. 2728 of 1923, Decided on 11th April 1928, from a decree of 1st Cl. Sub-Judge, Lahore, D/- 21st/24th August 1923.

Contract Act, S. 74—Entire principal to be paid in default of any instalment—Bond providing interest at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of execution—Plaintiff claiming that rate only from the date of default—Interest was held not penal, the rate being ordinary.

Interest which is payable after default, no interest being payable until default, may be treated as a penalty if the rate of interest charged is exhorbitant. [P 858 C 1]

The bond provided that the entire principal was to be paid in case of default of payment of any instalment and though it stipulated interest at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of execution of the bond, the oreditor claimed that rate only from the date of default.

Held: that interest at that rate from the date of default was not penal the rate being the ordinary rate. [P 858 C 1]

Tirath Ram and Amar Nath Monga—for Appellants.

Amar Nath Chopra and Maya Das—for Respondents.

Judgment.—In this case the plaintiffs sued the defendants on a bond alleged to be executed by the father of the defendants and the defendants on the 19th November 1927. The said bond, the execution of which was admitted by the defendants, contained a condition for payment of the principal due by instalments. It also provided that in case of default of payment of any instalment the entire amount of debt found due at the time of default was to be paid at once and further that the executants would pay interest at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the execution of the bond. Upon this bond, therefore, the plaintiffs prayed for a decree for Rs. 13,664 and future interest at the rate of Rs. 6 per cent. per annum from the date of institution of the suit till realization and for costs.

The defendants raised the plea that the interest was penal and that the claim included an enormous amount of interest.

The trial Court framed two issues : (1) Is the interest penal? and (2) To what amount is the plaintiff entitled? On the first issue it held that though admittedly default had been made, the stipulation to pay interest at 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the execution of the bond upon default was penal and, therefore, it allowed the plaintiffs the principal amount of Rs. 6,100 and only half the amount of interest, namely, Rs. 3,782. The plaintiffs were given a decree for Rs. 9,882 with costs in proportion and no future interest was allowed.

The plaintiffs on appeal urge that they should be allowed interest from the date of default at the rate agreed upon between the parties and that this term of the contract was not penal. Plaintiffs-appellants' counsel has referred us to S. 74, Contract Act and the commentary of Mr. Pollock at p. 429, 5th Edition. We agree generally with the view expressed by the learned author that though the rulings of the Court have not always been consistent on the point, the general principle seems to be that interest which is payable after default, no interest being payable until default, may be treated as a penalty if the rate of interest charged is exorbitant. In the particular case before us the rate of interest on the present bond, which is made up of previous bonds, is 2 per cent. per mensem, and the evidence led by the defendants themselves shows that 2 per cent. per mensem was the ordinary rate of interest in these suits. As the plaintiffs-appellants are not claiming interest from the date of the execution but only from the date of default, it beomes unnecessary to decide that question. We hold on the facts of this case that the plaintiffs-appellants are entitled to the enhancement of Rs. 3,000 claimed by them in this appeal.

We accordingly accept the appeal and increase the amount of Rs. 3,000. We further consider that future interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum should be allowed to the appellant from date of suit till realization. The appellants will have the costs of this appeal.

Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand—for Appellant.

Ram Lal—for the Crown.

Broadway, J.—Des Raj, son of Jowahar, a Jat of Mouza Chiri in the Rohtak District, has been convicted of having caused the death of Mt. Pato and her boy, Jage Ram, aged five years, and, under S. 302, I. P. C., has been sentenced to death. He has appealed and the case is also before us under S. 374, Criminal P. C., for confirmation of the death sentence.

According to the prosecution the appellant is said to have murdered Mt. Pato and her little boy on 5th September 1927, the motive being pure greed as the unfortunate woman was wearing a few ornaments and was a total stranger to Des Raj. Having murdered the mother and child he is supposed to have buried them in the field of a relative of his named Dharam Chand. This Dharam Chand, on the evening of 6th September 1927, was sitting outside his house smoking with a man named Nahna when, after the night had fallen, he noticed the appellant pass in front of his house with a kassi in his hand and a basket on his head. Dharam Chand, who is a cousin of the appellant and is a Sarbrah Lambardar, suspected that Des Raj was up to some mischief, as he looked on him as a bad character. He accordingly with Nahna proceeded to follow him. He saw Des Raj go to his (Dharam Chand's) field and begin digging in a Khand or water course there. Presently they saw him dig out of the earth the body of a child and put it in a gunny bag. Upon this they approached and seized him. They also noticed that there was a larger grave which contained the body of a grown-up person. According to Dharam Chand he and Nahna, his companion, questioned Des Raj, who, after some prevarication admitted that he had killed the woman and the child in order to rob them of their jewelry and that he had buried the bodies in the field and had come this night in order to dig up the corpses and place them further away, preferably within the area of the neighbouring village. Dharam Chand fell in with the idea and made the suggestion that, in order to make things quite certain, it would be as well to take the bodies away to a considerable distance.

Leaving Des Raj and Nahna on the spot he returned to the village promising to bring a bullock cart in order to dispose of the corpses properly. On arriving at the village he collected the lambardars and choukidars telling them that he had something of importance to convey to them, and when they came out of the village he told them that Des Raj had committed the double murder. The party then went to the field, and, on seeing people coming instead of bullock cart, Des Raj attempted to run away but was pursued by Dharam Chand and Nahna and brought back. It is said that, at the instance of the lambardars and sufaidposh, Des Raj admitted his guilt and stated that he had got the jewelry, some in his own house and some deposited or pawned with Kanaya goldsmith. Dharam Chand was sent off to make a report and after he had gone the lambardars took Des Raj to the village where he produced from his house certain articles of jewelery which the lambardars made him replace and closing the door placed a guard on it. He then took them to the shop of Kanaya goldsmith and got him to produce a hasli. This hasli was also left with Kanaya who was directed to replace it in his shop and the shop was guarded. Des Raj was then taken back to where the corpses were and there kept till the arrival of the police. Subsequently the police recovered from his house the articles of jewelry that were there and from Kanaya goldsmith the hasli referred to above.

The appellant denied all knowledge of these articles of jewelry and states that he knows nothing about them. The husband and brother-in-law of the unfortunate woman have sworn that these ornaments belonged to Mt. Pato. I see no reason to doubt the correctness of this identification and hold that they have been properly identified as the property of the murdered woman Mt. Pato.

It is clear that, owing possibly to his relationship with the appellant, Dharam Chand has somewhat trimmed his evidence in favour of the appellant. Having adhered to his statement as made at the police station, when he made the first information report, in his cross-examination, he boldly admitted that a few weeks before he had been assaulted by his cousin, the appellant, although that assault appears to have led to no complaint of any kind. He also admits that he had been followed to where the bodies were discovered by one Ram Chand Khati and further that this Ram Chand Khati had informed him that the bodies were there on the morning of 6th September 1927. Ram Chand has been produced as a witness for the defence and his statement has only to be read for it to be realized that he is an unmitigated lair. The whole story told by him is false from beginning to end. Similarly Dharam Chand has admitted in his cross-examination that the wife of his half brother Sartu for whom he is acting as sarbrah lambardar was suspected of having a liason with the appellant, a statement that is to my mind clearly false.

There is ample evidence on the record to show that the appellant knew where the bodies of these murdered persons were. There can be no doubt to my mind that he also knew that murder had been committed. The fact that he removed the jewellery which was subsequently produced and identified as belonging to the deceased woman is also an important piece of evidence against him. These pieces of evidence, however, do not, in my judgment, establish his guilt under S. 302, I. P. C., and as I consider that it would be not safe to rely on the confessions to the lambardars, zaildars and suffaidposh, his conviction under S. 302, I. P. C., cannot be maintained. On this record it is unsafe to rely on the confessions, because as is usual in extra-judicial confessions of this kind, it is almost impossible to ascertain the exact words used by the person confessing. In the present case the lambardars, etc., have frankly admitted that the confession made to them was made by the appellant on their definitely promising immunity if he made a clean breast of the affair. Whether or not, therefore, the confessions are inadmissible in evidence (as would appear to be indicated by the decision of a Division Bench of this Court in Qutb Ali v. Emperor (1), they are not of such a nature as entitled them to any weight. At the same time there can be no doubt the appellant has committed an offence under S. 201, I. P. C., and as the offence which he knew to have been committed was punishable with death, I would alter the conviction from S. 302 to one under S. 201, I. P. C., and sentence him to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. I would therefore accept the appeal to this extent, the sentence of death not being confirmed.

Agha Haidar, J.—I agree. In my opinion the evidence on the record is not sufficient to establish the offence under S. 302, I. P. C., against the appellant. The case appropriately comes under S. 201, I. P. C., and I agree with the order passed by my learned brother.

Second Appeal No. 1439 of 1923, Decided on 9th March 1928, from decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Ferozepore, D/- 12th May 1923.

Punjab Tenancy Act, S. 53, Cls. (1) (2) (3)—Agreement to sell occupancy holding to a stranger—Notice of sale served on the landlord—Period fixed by Revenue Officer to pay price—Landlord not paying price but privately purchasing the holding after that period—Such sale is voidable at the instance of the purchaser.

A tenant who had agreed to sell his occupancy holding to a stranger served a notice on his landlord as required under Cl. 2 of S. 53. But instead of taking this opportunity to purchase the holding, the landlord privately purchased the holding from the tenant after the expiry of the period fixed by the Revenue Officer for paying the price. The purchaser sued to enforce the specific performance of the contract of sale.

Held: that he was so entitled as the sale to the landlord was voidable at his instance

Faqir Chand—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This was a suit to enforce specific performance of a contract to sell an occupancy holding. The tenant duly executed and registered the agreement and in accordance with its terms took action under S. 53, Punjab Tenancy Act, and served upon his landlords through a Revenue Officer, a notice of his intention to sell. Though the tenant had contracted to sell the holding for Rs. 600 the Revenue Officer fixed its value at Rs. 879-6-0 The landlords appealed against the order but the appeal was dismissed. They failed to deposit in the Court the price thus fixed, but after the expiration of the period within which they had to deposit the money they privately purchased the occupancy rights from the tenant himself. The plaintiff to whom the tenant had contracted to sell contended that he (tenant) was bound by his contract to sell the holding to him as the landlords had lost their right to purchase it and that the sale to them was consequently void as against him. This contention did not find favour with the trial Court but was accepted by the learned District Judge and the landlords have appeared in this Court in second appeal.

We are of opinion that the view taken by the learned District Judge is correct. By virtue of Cl. (1), S. 53, Punjab Tenancy Act, an occupancy tenant has the right to sell his holding to a stranger if his landlord should fail to purchase it when given an option to do so in accordance with Cls. (2) and (3) of that section. In the present case the landlords did not avail themselves of the opportunity thus given to them and the tenant was then competent to sell the holding to the plaintiff in fulfilment of the contract made with him. By selling it to the landlords he broke that contract and as the landlords had notice of that contract the sale to them was voidable at the instance of the plaintiff.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1982 of 1927, Decided on 13th March 1928, from order of Sess-Judge, Ferozepore, D/- 14th November 1927.

Punjab Excise Act (1 of 1914), S. 61 (2) (b)—Owner of a neglected garden open to public charged for cultivating hemp—Growth of hemp spontaneous—No secrecy observed—Owner cannot be so convicted.

Where there was spontaneous growth of hemp in a neglected garden open to the public and no attempt at secrecy was made,

Bevan Petman and Bhagat Ram Puri—for Petitioner.

Anant Ram Khosla—for the Crown.

Judgment.—One Hans Raj, Banker, Mill Owner and Municipal Commissioner of Ferozepore, was sent up for trial under S. 61, Excise Act, for having cultivated hemp in his garden just outside Ferozepore City. An excise party went to this garden on 25th April 1927, and cut some six maunds of hemp which was growing in different places there. The Magistrate who tried the case framed two charges one under S. 61 (2) (b) of the Act for cultivating hemp and one under S. 61 (1) (a) of the Act for possession of an excisable article.

As regards cultivation the Magistrate said that the quantity was so large that it could hardly be concluded that the hemp was of spontaneous growth. Later on he said that the hemp plants must have been allowed to remain there intentionally, while his final conclusion was that they had been cultivated. He next held that the petitioner, the owner of the garden, had nothing to do with the cultivation and was not guilty of an offence under S. 61 (2) (b) of the Act. As, however, it was his duty to see that his mali and Beldar did not cultivate any objectionable article or cleared away any objectionable article when it grew and as the petitioner had not seen to this, he, as owner of the garden must be held to be in possession of the growing hemp plants and was thus guilty of a technical offence under S. 61 (1) (a) of the Act. For this offence he sentenced him to pay a fine of Rupees 300.

On appeal the Sessions Judge, set aside the conviction under S. 61 (1) (a) of the Act but convicted the petitioner under S. 61 (2) (b) of the Act for cultivating the hemp. The operative part of his judgment is as follows :

I reject all the grounds of appeal tending to dispute cultivation of hemp in appellant's garden. Even if hemp were of spontaneous growth in Ferozepore its preservation in such quantities in a garden which as it grows vegetables would normally be weeded amounts to cultivation.

The judgment is very brief and does not touch the voluminous evidence on the record. The garden is about seven ghumaons in size and from the evidence it is clear that it is neglected like the gardens of most Indians. A mali and some Beldars do look after it. It is full of trees the fruit of which is leased out each year. Only in one plot does it appear that vegetables were grown. It was watered but the fruit trees required watering. A fruit garden, as this is, is not usually carefully weeded. It is clear that the petitioner stays away from Ferozepore for long periods both in the cold and hot weather. It is also in evidence that this garden is open to the public and the public walk in it. Further, the principal places where the hemp was growing are near one of the two entrances. It is obvious from this description that no attempt at secrecy was made.

Further there is very good evidence on the record that the hemp plant grows in large quantities apparently spontaneously in and about Ferozepore Cantonment and City. Certain photographs of growing hemp plants have been put in. Photograph D. C. taken near the Cantonment Railway Station shows a growth of hemp plants which would lead any person looking at it to think that these plants were cultivated though they are growing on waste land. Other two photographs show very fine hemp plants growing in the middle of vegetable fields. Captain G. S. Gill, I. M. S, has stated that he saw 50 or 60 such plants in the garden of the bungalow of the Deputy Commissioner two years ago. This gentleman was brought up in Ferozepore and has deposed that he used to go to the petitioner's garden when he was a boy some 15 years ago. He recollects that at that time the garden in question had much hemp growing in it. In these circumstances it appears to me a legitimate conclusion that the hemp found in the petitioner's garden by the excise party was of spontaneous growth. It was growing in a neglected garden open to the public and has always grown there. It may be that during the watering of the fruit trees or the small vegetable plot some water benefited these hemp plants which sowed themselves from year to year, but I do not think that that amounts to cultivation. The raid took place on 25th April last and when a Magistrate went there on 10th June he found the plants again beginning to grow.

I am in entire agreement with the Magistrate that even if the mali and Beldars had cultivated these plants, there was nothing to show that the petitioner had any hand in this. When the Excise party went to his garden he at once told them that there could be nothing wrong as he had seen plants of a similar nature growing in many other places and gardens. He offered to take the excise party to these places but they declined to go. This conduct of his tends to show his innocence and not his guilt. In my judgment, therefore, it must be held that the plants in question grew spontaneously and that in any case the petitioner had nothing to do with their cultivation. It may be the case that he was negligent in not recognizing these plants and having them weeded out of his garden, but that would not make him guilty of the offence of cultivating them.

I accept his petition and set aside his conviction and sentence. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Gokal Chand Narang—for Appellant.

Muhammad Monir—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge, Attock, sanctioning the prosecution of Lala Hukam Chand, contractor, under S. 193, I. P. C,, in respect of a statement made by him as a witness in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Pindigheb, on 11th January 1926. The portion of the statement which has been made the basis of the complaint ran as follows :

The debt due on both the bonds has been paid now. Yaran and Nur Khan received Rs. 100 from Shera by means of this receipt Ex. D-2 * * * Receipt mentioned above is dated 18th May 1925 (equivalent to 5th Jeth 1982).

The learned Judge was apparently of opinion that the statement of Lala Hukam Chand that the receipt Ex. D-2 was written on 18th May 1925, in lieu of Rs. 100 was false and that the receipt was as a matter of fact a forgery. This view was based on a statement made by Lala Hukam Chand in the course of his deposition that two bonds for Rs. 200 and Rs. 80 respectively were executed by Shera on the same day. It appears that the bonds bore date 8th Har 1982, corresponding to 22nd June 1925, while the receipt is dated 5th Jeth 1982 corresponding to 18th May 1925. The receipt and the bonds were, therefore, obviously not executed on the same day. The witness at first made an incorrect statement in this respect, but when cross-examined he corrected himself and deposed that the documents were not executed on the same day. In the circumstances I do not think that the portion of the deposition of Lala Hukam Chand which has been made the basis of the complaint could sustain any conviction. That portion had been subsequently corrected by the witness, and there is, vide inter alia, Queen v. Kally Churn Gangooly (1), In re Pandu Namaji Gavande (2) and Queen v. Niruni (3), ample authority for the proposition that in such circumstances no sanction for prosecution should be granted. The learned counsel for the Crown also did not oppose this appeal.

I accordingly accept the appeal, set aside the order sanctioning the prosecution of the appellant and direct that the complaint instituted in pursuance of the sanction shall be withdrawn.

Criminal P. C., Ss. 424 and 367—An appellate Court should write such a judgment which can be followed without reference to the judgment of the trial Court.

It is the duty of an appellate Court not only to examine the evidence but also to write a judgment affording a clear indication that the appeal has been properly tried and the points urged by the appellants have been duly considered and decided. An appellate Court fails in the discharge of the duty imposed upon it by law if it writes a judgment which cannot be followed without a reference to the judgment of the trial Court. [P 863 C 2]

Lal Chand Mehra—for Petitioners.

Khurshaid Zaman for Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment. — The three petitioners Mansa Singh, Qadir Bakhsh and Ghulam were sentenced under S. 411, I. P. C., to certain terms of imprisonment by a Magistrate of the First Class. They appealed against their convictions and sentences but the appeal against their convictions was dismissed by the learned Sessions Judge, though it was accepted by him to the extent of reducing the sentences of imprisonment to one year's rigorous imprisonment each. Against this decision they have preferred this revision petition.

The judgment of the learned Sessions Judge has been attacked on the ground that it does not satisfy the requirements of S. 367, Criminal P. C., the provisions of which are, under S. 424 of the Code, applicable to the judgment of an appellate Court. It is not necessary for such a Court to write a long and elaborate judgment, but as laid down in Dalip Singh v. Emperor (1) it is clearly its duty not only to examine the evidence but also to write a judgment affording a clear indication that the appeal has been properly tried and that the points urged by the appellant have been duly considered and decided. An appellate Court fails in the discharge of the duty imposed upon it by law if it writes a judgment which cannot be followed without reference to the judgment of the trial Court. In the present case the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge cannot be followed without reference to the judgment of the trial Court. It does not appear from it that the appellate Court appreciated the points for decision and considered the evidence.

In these circumstances I accept the petition, set aside the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge and return the appeal of the petitioners to him to be decided in accordance with law.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 31 of 1928, Decided on 13th April 1928, from an order of the Dist. Magistrate, Guragaon, D/- 31st August 1927.

Criminal P. C., S. 107—Two parties taking different sides—Order under S. 107 must clearly state risk or reasons for thinking that there is danger of breach of peace.

The mere fact that two parties had taken different sides in Municipal politics is not sufficient for an order being passed on the members of those parties under S. 107 without stating the risk or reasons which exist for thinking that there was a danger of the breach of the peace between the two parties. [P 864 C 1]

Edmunds for Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The seven petitioners, who are Hindu residents of Faridabad, a town in the Gurgaon District, were ordered on 21st June 1927, to execute bonds with one surety each to keep the peace for one year under S. 107, Criminal P. C. Their appeals were dismissed by the District Magistrate, and their petition for revision was admitted by a learned Judge of this Court with the following remarks:

Is there a judgment or an order intelligible to any but residents of Faridabad?

I have now heard the learned counsel appearing for the petitioners and for the Crown.

It is certainly the case that there is no proper judgment or order by the District Magistrate disposing of the appeals. Nothing appears in it from which the conclusion could be properly drawn that there was a danger of a breach of the peace on the part of the petitioners. Fourteen persons on the one side and six on the other, were placed on security. It does appear, however, from this judgment that in Municipal affairs certain members of the two parties placed on security were taking different sides, and the District Magistrate was of opinion that, in order to end this unseemly struggle, it would be taking too big a risk to let any of them go free. What the risk was is not stated, or what reasons there were for thinking that there was a danger of the breach of the peace between the two parties.

I have looked at the evidence in the case and the order of the Magistrate. It does appear that one day there was an altercation between several Musalmans in the presence of the Tahsildar. Apart from that event, there is no evidence that there was any danger of breach of the peace. The mere fact that two parties had taken different sides in Municipal politics is not sufficient for an order being passed under S. 107, Criminal P. C.

In these circumstances I do not consider it necessary to send the case back for the District Magistrate to write a proper order. Only three months remain before the year will expire. I accept the petition and set aside the order directing the seven petitioners to furnish security under S. 107, Criminal P. C.

The assessee was held by the Income-tax Officer to be a resident of British India and was assessed under S. 23 (4) on his failure to comply with the terms of notice under S. 22 (4). Order.

Harrison, J.—The Income-tax Officer of the Hazara Circle, in the North-West Frontier Province, in a considered order, held that one Bhagat Duni Chand was a resident of British India and carried on business at Haripur in the Hazara District. He thereupon served him with a notice under S. 22 (4) of the Act and, as he failed to comply with the terms of the notice, he made an assessment under S. 23 (4) to the best of his judgment. From that assessment Bhagat Duni Chand appealed to the Assistant Commissioner and took the ground that he was not a resident of British India. The Assistant Commissioner, holding that no appeal lay from an assessment under S. 23 (4). dismissed the appeal. The Commissioner, in his turn, dismissed the application for review and, holding that no point of law arose, refused to take action under S. 66 (2) when asked to do so.

Before us it is urged that Bhagat Duni Chand was entitled to an adjudication by the Assistant Commissioner as to whether or not he is a resident of British India in the sense in which the words are used in the Act. Counsel for the Crown has relied on Benarsi Das v. Commissioner of Income-tax (1), but this ruling in our opinion does not advance the position at all. Granted that a man is an assessee and liable, therefore, to pay tax, and action is taken under S. 23 (4), the matter is ended and he cannot challenge the correctness of the assessment or any other question incidental thereto. The question still remains whether he is or is not liable at all. We, therefore, direct the Commissioner to refer the question of law with his opinion thereon, the question being was the Assistant Commissioner bound to decide whether Bhagat Duni Chand was or was not a resident of British India or does the proviso to S. 30 bar an appeal on the question of liability to assessment when action has been ostensibly taken under S. 23 (4).

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1292 of 1927, Decided on 25th April 1928, from an order of Sess. Judge, Delhi, D/-5th July 1927.

Penal Code, Ss. 500 and 501—Communal tension in tense—Article calculated to stir up communal feelings—Editor should be severely dealt with—But editor a tool in hands of proprietor bearing ill-will towards complainant and writing the article—Lenient view in awarding punishment should be taken though the fact that editor is a dummy editor is no ground by itself for reducing sentence.

An editor of a newspaper who at a time of intense communal tension first publishes a false and fabricated account of an innocent social function in terms calculated to stir up communal feelings and then maliciously and incorrectly gives out that the false information on which the publication was based, had been supplied by a person who had in fact never done so, cannot be lightly dealt with. But where the editor is a mere tool in the hands of a proprietor who bears ill-will towards the complainant, and the proprietor admits that he wrote the article, lenient view should be taken in awarding punishment, though the mere circumstance that such an editor is not the writer of the article or is a dummy editor is no ground by itself for reduction of the sentence. [P 867 C 2]

Aziz Ahmad—for Petitioner.

Shamair Chand—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner Aziz Ahmad, Aziz Akbarabadi, Editor of a Vernacular newspaper called the "Muballigh," published at Delhi, has on a complaint filed by one Qazi Habib-ud-Din, Watch and Spectacles Merchant, Fatehpuri, Delhi, been convicted under Ss. 500-501, I. P. C., and sentenced to undergo simple imprisonment for three months and to pay a fine of Rs. 500 out of which (if recovered) Rs. 200 is to be paid to the complainant as compensation. The appeal to the Sessions Judge having been unsuccessful, a petition for revision has been preferred to this Court. The complainant Qazi Habib-ud-Din has also filed an application for enhancement of the sentence.

The relevant facts are as follows:

There is at Delhi an Association of Watch Merchants called the West End Watch Traders' Syndicate, the members of which belong to both the Hindu and the Mahomedan communities. In 1926 one Lala Bhana Mal was the President of the Syndicate, Muhammad Yusuf (P. W. No. 3) the Secretary and the complainant Habib-ud-Din one of the members. On 29th August 1926, a dinner party was given on behalf of the Syndicate, at which the members and some other guests were entertained. An account of this entertainment appeared in the leaderette in the "Muballigh," dated 1st September 1926, headed "West End Syndicate, Delhi, and Muhammadans" in which it was stated that before the party sat down for dinner the floor of the room had been plastered with cowdung, puja performed by a Brahmin and water sprinkled on the food which was subsequently served both to Hindus and Mahomedans. It was stated that this had been purposely done with a view to surreptitiously make the Mahomedan guests eat food which had been so "defiled" by a Hindu priest and thus to injure their religious sentiments. The Syndicate at once challenged the accuracy of this report and the Secretary, Muhammad Yusuf (P. W. No. 3) wrote to the Proprietor and Editor of the "Muballigh" stating that it was wholly untrue that the floor had been plastered with cowdung or that a Brahmin had performed puja or sprinkled water on the eatables. He called upon the newspaper to contradict the news, and to disclose the name of the informant.

Advocate High Court Jammu & Kashmir

In response to this communication, another note appeared in the "Muballigh" of 9th September 1926, in which it was stated that the earlier note had been written and published on information supplied by the complainant Qazi Habib-ud-Din, who was a member of the Syndicate and who had also secured from a learned Maulvi a fatwa declaring that it was sinful for a Mahomedan to take food "defiled" in the manner mentioned above. It was stated that Habib-ud-Din had made over this fatwa to the Editor at the time when he gave the information and had also given him to understand that several Mahomedans who had partaken of the feast were thinking of expiating their sin by killing a number of cows and distributing their flesh among the poor. A few days after the publication of this article the complainant Qazi Habib-ud-Din served the petitioner with a notice stating that he had been wrongly and maliciously accused of having been the informant of the false account of the entertainment which had appeared in the paper and that if amends were not made within a certain specified time legal action would be taken against him. No reply having been given, the complainant on 8th October 1926, lodged a complaint under Ss. 500-501, I. P. C., against Aziz Ahmad, petitioner, the Editor of the newspaper, with the result that he has been convicted and sentenced as above. Before me the first point urged on his behalf is that the trial is vitiated by the failure of the learned Magistrate to examine all the witnesses whom the petitioner had summoned and whom he wanted to produce. The learned Sessions Judge has in his judgment described in detail the proceedings, which took place on each hearing and I do not think it necessary to repeat them here. After carefully examining the record I am of opinion that the learned Magistrate showed much indulgence to the petitioner in the matter of producing his evidence, and gave him all reasonable facilities to do so, but the petitioner adopted dilatory tactics to unnecessarily prolong the decision of the case. At first he filed a very long list of witnesses, then he absented himself twice without sufficient cause, later on he failed to deposit the diet money for the witnesses and ultimately on 6th June he stated that he did not press for a further adjournment to have the witnesses served. In these circumstances he can have no legitimate grievance against the procedure adopted by the Magistrate and accordingly I overrule this contention.

On the merits the petitioner's counsel has conceded that the account of the entertainment which appeared in the "Muballigh" of 1st September 1926, to the effect that on the occasion of the feast the floor was plastered with cowdung or that a Brahmin recited prayers or sprinkled water on food which was served to the Mahomedan guests, is a pure fabrication and that, as a matter of fact, nothing had been done at or before the entertainment to which objection could be taken either by Hindus or Mahomedans. He, however, urged that it had been proved that the article in the newspaper was based on information supplied by the complainant Qazi Habib-ud-Din. At the trial the complainant went into the witness-box and denied having ever had any talk with the editorial staff or the management of the "Muballigh" on the subject or having directly or indirectly sent any message to them relating to that entertainment. He was subjected to an unnecessarily lengthy and harassing cross-examination by the petitioner's counsel, but nothing was elicited to indicate that the complainant's denial was false. The petitioner produced the fatwa Ex-D-A and alleged that the first part of it containing the "statement of facts" had been written at the complainant's instance by Muhammad Din, D. W. 11, who works at his shop, and that the answer was in the handwriting of the Maulvi. Muhammad Din, however, denied having written any portion of Ex. D-A or having given it to the petitioner and the Maulvi was not produced as a witness. Reliance was next placed on a sentence in the statement of Muhammad Yusuf where he stated that the complainant had once told him that at the entertainment, puja had been performed and food "defiled" in the manner described in the article served to Mahomedan guests. This Muhammad Yusuf has, however, been proved to be inimical to the complainant and the lower Courts have righty rejected his testimony. It must, therefore, be held that there is no reliable evidence on the record to show that the article in question was based on information supplied by the petitioner

There is a good deal of evidence on the record to establish that the relations between the complainant and Muhammad Ishaq, proprietor of the "Muballigh" were not cordial. They had been friends at one time but seem to have fallen out on account of the failure of the complainant Habib-ud-Din to accede to Mahammad Ishaq's request to falsely implicate certain innocent persons before the Magistrate who was trying the cases arising out of the Hindu-Mahomedan riots at Delhi. In view of the strained relations between the complainant and Muhammad Ishaq the article imputing the false information to him cannot but be held to be malicious.

Again it is fully proved that the issue of the "Muballigh" of 9th September 1926, containing the offending article was "hawked about" in the locality in which the complainant's shop is situate and a number of posters (e, g., Exs. P. W. 4/1 and P. W. 4/2) denouncing the complainant as the person from whom the false account of his entertainment had originated were circulated and pasted on the street walls of Delhi. The complainant has also led evidence to show that as a result of the article in question, he had lost the confidence of both the Hindu and Mahomedan members of the Syndicate who regarded him as a promoter of class-hatred and a person who gave out false news with a view to create feelings of enmity between the watch merchants of Delhi belonging to the two communities who had so far lived in peace and harmony. On these facts there can be no doubt that the article in question is a gross and scandalous libel maliciously published with a view to injure the reputation of the complainant and that the petitioner has been rightly convicted under S. 500/501, I. P. C.

The Editor of a newspaper who at a time of intense communal tension first publishes a false and fabricated account of an innocent social function in terms calculated to stir up communal feelings and then maliciously and incorrectly gives out that the false information on which the publication was based had been supplied by a person who had in fact never done so, cannot be lightly dealt with and I would have been prepared to accept the petition for enhancement of the sentence filed by the complainant had it not been for the fact fully established on the record that the petitioner was a mere tool in the hands of the proprietor Hakim Muhammad Ishaq, who bore ill-will towards the complainant and who as D. W. 4 has admitted on oath that it was he who had written the article in question. From the evidence it is clear that he is the real Editor of the paper and that the petitioner Aziz Ahmad is only a "dummy" who has merely lent his name as the editor, printer and publisher. The mere circumstance that the petitioner is not the writer of the article or is a "dummy" editor is of course, no ground by itself for reduction of the sentence. Ordinarily a person who, for monetary or other consideration, allows himself to be used as a "blind" for concealing the identity of the "real" editor and thus assists the latter in deceiving the public and defeating the law cannot be heard to argue in mitigation of his guilt, that he was a mere figure head and must bear the full consequence of his acts. In this case, however, the circumstances are such that a lenient view must be taken. There is no doubt that the complainant knew from the beginning that the real offender was Muhammad Ishaq and that it was he who had defamed him with a view to satisfy his malice. But for some reason best known to himself, the complainant did not choose to proceed against him. In those circumstances I am of opinion, that the ends of justice will be amply met by reducing the sentence of imprisonment to the period (of about five weeks) which the petitioner had already undergone when I released him on bail. But the sentence of fine and imprisonment in default must stand and so also the order directing that out of the fine (if paid) Rs. 200 will be paid to the complainant as compensation. With this modification the petition is dismissed.

The application for enhancement of the sentence filed by the complainant necessarily fails and is also dismissed.

Criminal Appeal No. 1485 of 1927, Decided on 12th June 1928, from order of 1st Cl. Magistrate, Amritsar, D/- 10th October 1927.

Penal Code S. 304—Person charged under S. 304—Offence prima facie culpable homicide amounting to murder—Case ought to be committed to the Sessions.

Where a person is attacked and killed, it must be decided whether the assailant is guilty of culpable homicide and, if so, whether the culpable homicide amounts to murder or not. If it were found that the offence committed is culpable homicide but it does not amount to murder, it must be further made clear whether the offence falls under part 1 or 2, of S. 304. Where the offence committed is prima facie one of murder, the Magistrate empowered under S. 30 has no jurisdiction to try it, but he must commit the accused to the Sessions.

Carden Noad—for Appellant.

Muhammad Munir, Khurshaid Ahmad and Shamsher Chand—for Respondents.

Zafar Ali, J.—The case for the prosecution was that Bhagat Singh, deceased, and his cousin Arur Singh, and Budh Singh were sleeping one night in a field of melons when three men came to steal melons. By the barking of the dog Bhagat Singh and his companions awoke, and the thieves ran away. Soon after that seven men turned up and challenged Bhagat Singh, etc. One of them, namely Buta, was armed with a barchhi, another Manga had also a barchhi, and Chainchal Singh was carrying a gandasa. The culprits attacked Bhagat Singh and Budh Singh and injured both. Bhagat Singh succumbed to his injuries on about the third day.

Buta, Manga and Chainchal Singh were sent up by the police for trial under S. 304, I. P. C, and a Magistrate empowered under S. 30, Criminal P. C, to try all offences not punishable with death, tried them and convicted two of them under S. 304 and acquitted the third, namely Manga. The two convicts have appealed separately one through counsel and the other through the jail authorities, and the Government Advocate has applied on behalf of the Local Government for a fresh trial on the ground that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case, the offence committed being prima facie culpable homicide amounting to murder. Further the Government Advocate appeals against the acquittal of Manga.

From the medical evidence it appears that the deceased bore no less than 13 injuries out of which five were incised wounds. One of these incised wounds was on the right shoulder 6" × 2" and 1", cutting the scapula bone. There was another incised wound on the posterior auxillary of the right side deep to the ribs. The right 3rd, 4th and 5th ribs were fractured under this wound. Having regard to the nature of the injuries and the circumstances under which they were inflicted we come to the conclusion that the assailants were triable for murder. It is contended on behalf of Chainchal Singh that the application for revision being a belated one this Court should not exercise its powers of revision which are after all discretionary. Further it is argued that as the object of the Crown is to have the sentences enhanced a retrial should not be ordered. Thirdly, it is argued that it will not be possible to hold that any one of the accused was guilty of murder because it cannot be decided which of the several assailants inflicted the fatal injury. Of these contentions No. 3 does not appear to be well founded, and the rest must not be allowed to prevail under the circumstances of the present case.

It may be observed that the Magistrate did not apply his mind to appreciate the nature of the case, and proceeded to convict under S. 304 without realizing the gravity of the act done by the culprits and stating whether it fell under part 1 or part 2, S. 304. When a person is attacked and killed, it must be decided whether the assailant was guilty of culpable homicide and, if so, whether the culpable homicide amounted to murder or not. If it were found that the offence committed was culpable homicide but that it did not amount to murder, it must further be made clear whether the offences fell under part 1 or part 2, S. 304, I. P. C.

As the case was prima facie one of murder and the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try it, we accept the application for revision as well as the appeal by the Local Government against the acquittal and we set aside the convictions as well as the acquittal and order the Magistrate to commit the c se to the Court of Sessions under S. 302, I. P. C.

We must not be understood to have decided that all or any one of the accused committed murder or that the evidence on the record is sufficient to prove murder. All that we have decided is that this was prima facie a case of murder, and should have been committed to the Court of Sessions.

Second Appeal No. 893 of 1922, Decided on 3rd December 1926, from decree of Dist. Judge, Ludhiana, D/- 24th January 1922

Civil P. C., O. 22, R. 4 (3)—Appeal by donees from a decree in favour of reversioners disputing the gift—One of the reversioners dying in the meanwhile—His legal representative not brought on record—Whole appeal abates.

Donees appealed from a decree passed in favour of reversioners, disputing the gift. During the pendency of the appeal, a reversioner died and no application was made to implead his legal representative within the prescribed period of limitation.

Zafarullah Khan—for Appellants.

Ghulam Rasul—for Respondents.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On 4th January 1919, one Jhanda made a gift of certain landed property to defendants 2 to 4. Nine persons, who claim to be Jhanda's reversioners, thereupon, brought a suit for a declaratory decree that the gift should not affect their rights of inheritance on the death of Jhanda. Their suit was decreed by the trial Court, and that decree was confirmed by the District Judge. The donees preferred a second appeal to this Court, and during the pendency of the appeal two of the plaintiffs-respondents, namely, Dulla and Wazir, died; and no application to implead their legal representatives was made within the prescribed period of limitation.

The question for determination is whether the appeal has abated. It is to be observed that the deceased plaintiffs had obtained a decree which enabled them or their legal representatives to obtain possession of their share of the gifted land on the death of Jhanda, and it is admitted that Jhanda has since died. It is clear that the right to sue does not survive against the surviving respondents and that under O. 22, R. 4, sub-R (3), Civil P. C., the appeal has abated as against the deceased respondents. It is, however, contended by the learned counsel for the appellants that, as the suit was one of a representative character, the death of these two persons should not make any difference because the remaining plaintiffs-respondents represent the whole body of reversioners. As pointed out above, the deceased respondents or their heirs, in pursuance of the decree obtained by them, are entitled to recover from the donees their share of the estate, and we see no reason why they should be deprived of the fruits of their victory. The judgment of a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Wali Muhammad v. Barkhurdar (1) lays down a rule which, in our opinion, applies to this case.

The next question is whether the partial abatement of the appeal results in the abatement of the appeal as a whole. Now, there is ample authority for the view that the Court should not be called upon to make two contradictory decrees in the same litigation, which would be the result of allowing the appeal as against the remaining respondents and not disturbing the decree of the lower appellate Court as against the deceased respondents. The same view has been taken in Wali Muhammad v. Barkhurdar (1).

We accordingly hold that the whole of the appeal has abated. The appellants must pay the costs incurred by the respondents in this Court.

Custom (Punjab)—Arains of Sande Kalan—Sister excludes uncle.

Ghulam Mohi-ud-Din and Muhammad Hussain—for Appellant.

Tirath Ram and Gopal Chand—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The dispute in this case relates to the property of one Mehraj Din, an Arain of the Nain got, resident of Mauza Sande Kalan, who died childless and wifeless on 1st June 1904, leaving him surviving an infant sister, Mt. Jhandi, aged one year, and an uncle Chiragh Din defendant 1. Before the revenue authorities rival claims to his estate were put forward on behalf of Chiragh Din, and Mt. Jhandi, but the mutation was sanctioned in favour of the former and since then he has been in possession. On 18th May 1921 Mt. Jhandi who was still a minor brought this suit (through her maternal grandfather Shahab-ud-Din as next friend) for recovery of Mehraj Din's property and other cognate reliefs alleging that according to the custom prevailing among the parties she was entitled to succeed to the estate of her deceased brother to the exclusion of his uncle Chiragh Din.

Chiragh Din denied that by custom, sisters excluded uncles and also pleaded that he had planted a garden at a considerable cost and rebuilt a house, and that in the event of the plaintiff's suit being decreed he was entitled to compensation for these improvements. Several issues were framed, the first of which is the only one material for our present purposes. This issue runs as follows :

Is plaintiff entitled by custom to succeed to her brother Mehraj Din in preference to her uncle Chiragh Din, defendant?
Onus probandi on plaintiff.
Or the uncle excludes the sisters ?
Onus probandi on defendant.

The Subordinate Judge (Pandit Omkar Nath Zutshi) who framed the issues was transferred after he had recorded a part of the evidence and the case was decided by his successor Lala Kanshi Ram. He held that the burden of proving the custom set up by the plaintiff was on her and as she had failed to discharge it, he dismissed the suit without deciding the other points arising in the suit. She has appealed and we have examined the record carefully and heard both counsel at length.

It may be stated at the very outset that the learned Subordinate Judge, who decided the case was in error in supposing that on the issue as framed the onus lay entirely on the plaintiff. The form of the issue leaves no doubt that it was intended to keep the onus open and to call upon both parties to prove their respective contentions. Neither party seems to have raised any objection at the time, probably owing to the fact that the entries in the riwaj-i-ams of 1891—94 and 1911—14 did not agree with regard to the rights of sister to succeed to the estate of a childless brother. In the riwaj-i-am prepared by Mr. Bolster in the current settlement (1911—14) it is stated in answer to question 71 that the rights of sisters are similar to those of daughters as defined in answers to question 61. The answer is supported by two instances, both of Arains, in one of which the sister is recorded as having been preferred to her male cousin and in the other she is said to have excluded collaterals in inheritance of ancestral property. In answer to question 61 it is stated that among Arains in the proximity of Lahore (villages of Harbanspura, Salamatpura, Mahmud Buti, Kotli Abdul Rahman, Fateh Garh, Baghbanpura, Mian Mir, Ganj, Tajpura, Dogaich, Shadipur, Babu Sabu, Bhadru, Kot Kamboh, Jhugian Nanga, Saidpur and Kot Kanjri) daughters of a sonless proprietor exclude his agnates. In the Appendix to this riwaj-i-am at pp. 28 to 30, and pp. 11 to 12 numerous instances, supported by references to mutations, are mentioned in which daughters and sisters had succeeded to the exclusion of collaterals amongst Arains in various parts of the Lahore and Sharakpur tahsils. It will thus be seen that the entries in this riwaj-i-am are very much in favour of the custom set up by the plaintiff.

In the riwaj-i-am of 1891—94 it is stated (p. 10) that among Rajputs, Dogars and Arains a daughter or sister succeeds to the property if there is no male collateral nearer related than in the fifth generation.

No instances are given in support of this entry; in the preface it is stated by the compiler, Mr. G. C. Walker, that the information on which the riwaj-i-am was based was meagre and inadequate.

The riwaj-i-am prepared in 1868 is silent as to the rights of sister, but it is stated that among Arains a daughter succeeds to the estate of her sonless father in the presence of collaterals.

It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant that in view of the entry in the latest and more carefully prepared riwaj-i-am (1911—14) the initial presumption is in favour of the custom set up by her and that the onus ought to have been placed upon the defendant-respondent to prove the contrary. On the other hand, the respondent's learned counsel urged that as succession to Mehraj Din opened out in 1904 the onus ought to be regulated according to the entries in the riwaj-i-am of 1891—94, and it lay on the plaintiff to affirmatively establish that by custom she had a right to succeed. After fully considering the arguments of the learned counsel, I am of opinion that in view of the conflict in the riwaj-i-am the learned Subordinate Judge (Pandit Omkar Nath Zutshi) followed the proper course in keeping the onus open and calling upon both parties to prove their respective contentions. I shall, therefore, proceed to examine the evidence led by each party and then to see how the balance turns.

The plaintiff claims that the balance of judicial instances is decidedly in her favour. She relies, first, on Zainah v. Amir (1), which was a case among Ghelan Arains of the neighbouring village of Babu Sabu, in which the learned Judges of the Chief Court in their first order referred to two cases decided by subordinate Courts in 1856 and 1869 respectively in both of which sisters had succeeded their brothers in preference to uncles, but with a view to have the matter investigated further, they remanded the case. On remand a very full enquiry into the custom of the Arains of the Lahore District appears to have been made by Mr. W. A. Harris, District Judge, whose report dated 20th December 1889 (Ex. P-24) is printed at p. 1 of the supplementary paper-book. He recorded his finding in favour of the sisters and this finding was accepted by the learned Judge of the Chief Court who held that by the custom prevailing among the Arains of Lahore District a sister excluded collaterals wholly from inheritance to her childless brother.

The plaintiff has further produced copies of judgments of two cases decided by Lala Udai Ram, Munsif, in 1910 (Exs. P-25 and P-22), the parties to which were Arains of Mauzas Faizpur Khurd and Faizpur Kalan respectively. In both these cases sisters succeeded to the exclusion of near collaterals. The decision in the second of these cases was affirmed on appeal by the Divisional Judge and a revision to the Chief Court was unsuccessful (Ex. P-21).

In another case (Ex. P-20) the parties to which were Arains of Muaza Salamatpur, the Chief Court refused to interfere on revision with the decision of the lower appellate Court affirming the trial Court's decree in favour of the sister. All these instances support the plaintiff's case and there are also observations in favour of the sister's right to succeed in 190 P. R. 1888 and Khazan Singh v. Khushal Singh (2) though the questions actually decided in those cases were different.

The plaintiff further relies on Ex. P-23, which is a judgment by Mr. Tapp, Munsif, 1st Class, Lahore, dated 5th April 1904, and in which there are remarks in favour of the sister's right to succeed. But as the property in dispute in that case was non-ancestral, it is not of much value as an instance. As against these not a single judicial instance has been brought to our notice on behalf of the defendant-respondent.

Coming now to mutations, we find that many instances are given in pp. 27 to 41 of Appendix to the Riwaj-i-am of 1911-14 showing that daughters and sisters exclude collaterals. The parties to a large number of these mutations were Arains; and of them those from Mauzas Nainsukh, Jai Moosa, Muzang, Nawankot, Kot Khoja Said, Khairpur Khurd, Pukki Thatti, Khairpur Kalan, Nawan Kot, Sande Kalan and Babu Sabu are of particular value. In some of them it is not stated whether collaterals were alive, but in most of them it is specifically recorded that the female heirs succeeded in preference to male collaterals. The respondent's counsel argued that in the list of villages mentioned in answer to question 61 of the Riwaj-i-am of 1911-14 the villages Sande Kalan and Nawan Kot are not mentioned, and, therefore, it should be concluded that the custom of these villages is different from that of the village named. But this contention is sufficiently disposed of by the entries in the Appendix, where we find instances of other villages in which the custom is exactly the same. It follows, therefore, that this list is not exhaustive but is merely illustrative of the villages situate in the proximity of Lahore in all of which the custom among Arains is more or less similar. This evidence is supplemented by further instances supported by mutation entries in which the sister was successful: see Ex. P. 27 (Sande Kalan); Ex. P. 29 (Bhogiwal); Ex. P. 30 (Sande Kalan), Ex. P. 35 (Kot Khawaja); and Ex. P. 36 (Nawan Kot).

The respondent has produced a number of mutation entries, some of which no doubt show that the estate of a childless Arain was taken by the collaterals as against the sisters. But in most of them (e. g. Exs D. 3, D. 4 and D 8) the sisters did not appear before the mutating officer and orders were passed ex parte. Some of them, like D. 13., are too recent and may yet be contested; while the remaining ones are irrelevant as in them the deceased person had left both a brother and a sister and the former excluded the latter.

The oral evidence cited by both parties was not of much value, except in so far as it was supported by the mutations already referred to, and I do not think it necessary to discuss it.

In deciding this issue, it must be borne in mind that among Arains generally and particularly among those of the Lahore District female relations occupy a much more favourable position, than among the other agricultural tribes of the central districts of the Punjab. In most of the Lahore villages a daughter succeeds in preference to a brother or an uncle to the ancestral property of her sonless father; and the entry in the latest Rawaj-i am is to the effect that in the villages in the proximity of Lahore the right of the sister and the daughter are the same.

Mr. Tirath Ram for the respondent urges, however, that the custom of the Arains of the villages situate in the neighbourhood of the town of Lahore is irrelevant as the parties to this litigation originially belonged to Mauza Nainsukh, which is situate across the river in the Sharakpur tahsil and where the custom is different. In support of his contention he relies upon certain observations of Plowden, J., in Chiragh Din v. Mamman (3), and on the fact that a part of the property in dispute in this case is similar in Mauza Nainsukh. There is, however, no evidence that the ancestors of this family ever lived at Mauza Nainsukh and if so, at what time they migrated to Sande Kalan. Further we have not been referred to any instances or other evidence, to the effect that the custom of the Arains of Mauza Nainsukh is different from that of Arains resident in the other Arain villages on both sides of the river; on the other hand we find at p 28 of Mr. Bolster's Riwaj-i-am that in Mauza Nainsukh itself an Arain daughter succeeded in 1898 in preference to a nephew. In my opinion this contention is devoid of force and should be overruled.

Mr. Tirath Ram next referred to a remark in the statement of Jamal Din (P. W. 8), Lambardar of Mauza Sande Kalan, but this remark obviously relates to a case where the deceased had left a brother and a sister and the brother had succeeded to the exclusion of the sister. There is no dispute as to the right of the brother to succeed in such circumstances, and this matter has no bearing on the question to be decided in this case.

After fully considering the evidence on the record I am of opinion that the custom is as recorded in the Riwaj-i-am of 1911-14 and it must be held that among Arains of Mauza Sande Kalan a sister excludes the uncle in succession to the ancestral estate left by her childless brother. The finding of the lower Court to the contrary cannot therefore be sustained.

I would accordingly accept the appeal; set aside the decree of the lower Court and remand the case under O. 41, R. 23, for decision of the remaining points. Court-fee on appeal shall be refunded; other costs shall be costs in the cause.

Moti Sagar and Nawal Kishore—for Appellants.

Badri Das and Jiwan Lal Kapur—for Respondents.

Zafar Ali, J—This was a suit for the recovery of mortgage money. According to the mortgage-deed bearing date 9th December 1906, the properties mortgaged were six shops and houses situated in Amritsar, and the mortgage was with possession for a sum of Rs. 30,000. But on the very date of the mortgage the plaintiffs-mortgagees granted a lease to the mortgagors allowing them to remain in possession of the properties as tenants on a monthly rent of Rs. 187-8-0, which was equal to the interest at the stipulated rate of ten annas per cent, per mensem. In 1910 the mortgagee sued to recover rent, and obtained a decree for Rs. 5,350 on account of rent up to 7th June 1910, and Rs. 577 as costs of the suit. On 12th February 1912, the mortgagors, in pursuance of an agreement with the mortgagees, sold off two of the houses for Rs. 16,500 and paid this amount to the latter in reduction of the mortgage debt. Rs. 444 more were realized by the mortgagees in execution of the decree for rent on 28th March 1914. On the date of the institution of the present suit, i.e., on 17th November 1916, the mortgagees claimed Rs. 31,059-3-0 as per detail below:

1.	Rs. 30,000	Principal.
2.	Rs. 5,350	The rent decreed.
3.	Rs. 577	Costs of the suit for rent.
4.	Rs. 3,787-8-0	Interest from the 7th June 1910 to 12th February 1912.
5.	Rs. 8,288-11-0	Interest from the 12th February 1912, to 17th November 1916, (the date of institution of the present suit).
	Total...Rs. 48,003 3-0

Deducting from the above the total of the two sums received by them i., e., Rs. 16,500 and Rs. 444, the plaintiffs claimed the balance, Rs. 31,059-3-0. The defendants pleaded inter alia that the suit was barred by the provisions of O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. C. This plea found favour with the trial Court who dismissed the suit. On appeal by the plaintiffs a Division Bench of this High Court came to the conclusion that O. 2, R. 2, was not applicable and remanded the case for decision on the merits by order dated 27th November 1922.

Nearly a year later, i. e., on 25th November 1923, four of the mortgagors who had one half share in the properties mortgaged entered into a compromise with the mortgagees according to which the latter received from the former Rs. 16,000 in cash and hundis in satisfaction of half the mortgage debt then due and released one of the mortgaged houses in their favour. The remaining mortgagors pressed the original pleas, viz.: (1) that by a mutual settlement verbally made on 12th February 1912, the mortgagees had agreed to accept Rs. 35,500 in full satisfaction of the mortgage debt then due, and to charge interest at As. 7-6 per cent per mensem after that date, that Rs. 16,500 having been paid, the balance due was Rs. 19,000 only; and (2) that the plaintiffs had failed to give them credit for the sum of Rs. 300 which was paid to them on 17th March 1910.

With regard to the alleged oral agreement, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge of the Court below characterized the evidence produced in support of it as "flimsy, vague and indefinite," and further maintained that no oral agreement modifying the terms of the contract which was reduced to writing and registered could be proved. In respect of the item of Rs. 300 the learned Senior Subordinate Judge held that as the mortgagors had failed to claim credit for it in the suit for rent they could not be permitted to claim it in the present suit. Having arrived at these findings he granted the mortgagees a decree for Rs. 22,500 and costs in the terms of O. 34, R. 4, Civil P. C.

The contesting mortgagors appeal and on their behalf we have heard Mr. Moti Sagar. He has taken us through all the evidence bearing on the alleged oral agreement, and after a careful consideration of it we come to the conclusion that it is really vague and inconclusive. We do not, however, consider it necessary to review it here because we are of opinion that the alleged oral agreement could not be proved. In Mallapa v. Matum Nagu Chetty (1), a Full Bench of the Madras High Court decided that a subsequent oral agreement to take less than is due under a registered mortgage-bond is an agreement modifying the terms of a written contract, and if it has to be proved, oral evidence is inadmissible under S. 92, prov. 4, Indian Evidence Act. This ruling was followed by a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court in Jagan Nath v. Shankar (2), where it was held that oral evidence was inadmissible to prove discharge of the mortgage debt under S. 92, prov. 4, Evidence Act, 1872. Mr. Moti Sagar frankly concedes that these rulings are in point and that he is unable to say anything against them. But he lays claim to interest on the sum of Rs. 444 and further claims the item of Rs. 300 with interest, and lastly he urges that the mortgagors were liable to pay only half the costs of the suit. As regards the item of Rs. 444 it is clear that it was paid towards rent or interest and, therefore, the mortgagors are not entitled to any interest on this amount. We must allow the item of Rs. 300 with interest because it was admittedly received by the mortgagees and they have failed to account for it. With regard to costs we see no reason why the appellants should be made to pay full costs while the mortgagees press their claim for half the mortgage money as against them.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and modify the decree of the Court below only so far as to give the mortgagors credit for Rs. 300 plus interest thereon from the date of payment, and to allow the plaintiffs half the costs incurred by them in the trial Court. In this Court the parties shall bear their own costs.

Civil Revn. Petn. No. 189 of 1927. Decided on 20th June 1928, from decree of 4th Class Sub-Judge, Pakpattan, D/- 9th November 1926.

Civil P. C., Sch. 2, para. 14—Award granting some reliefs claimed by plaintiff but saying nothing as to others—The undecided matters cannot be deemed to be decided against plaintiff.

Where the award grants only some reliefs claimed by the parties, but is silent as to the others, it cannot be held that the undecided matters must be deemed to have been decided against plaintiff. [P 875 C 1]

Anant Ram Khosla—for Petitioner.

Bashir Ahmad—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff instituted a suit for the issue of a perpetual injunction against the defendant, claiming a number of other reliefs in respect of several alleged illegal acts of his. The suit was by consent of parties referred to an arbitrator who delivered an award granting to the plaintiff some of the reliefs claimed by him but saying nothing with regard to the others. The plaintiff objected to the award on various grounds, one of them being that the award was incomplete as the arbitrator had failed to give any finding in respect of some of the acts complained of, in regard to which also a perpetual injunction was claimed. The learned Subordinate Judge has overruled the objection, holding that the points not decided by the arbitrator must be considered to have been decided against the plaintiff.

The plaintiff has preferred a petition for revision to this Court, urging that either the award should be set aside as being incomplete and invalid. or, in any case, it should be remitted back to the arbitrator for decision on the points left undetermined.

Mr. Bashir Ahmad for the respondent admits that the arbitrator has not specifically decided several of the points raised by the plaintiff in his plaint, but urges that the order of the lower Court is not open to revision and cites several authorities in support of his contention.

In my opinion the learned Judge of the Court below has acted with material irregularity in not remitting the award to the arbitrator on the erroneous ground that if an arbitrator does not decide some of the points referred to him, he must be deemed to have decided them against the party who had urged them. I can find no warrant for this proposition and in my judgment the order of the trial Court filing the award is vitiated by this unwarranted assumption.

I do not, however, see any ground for setting aside the award as prayed by the petitioner. The proper course is to direct the lower Court to remit the award to the arbitrator under para. 14, Sch. 2 for determination of the matters left undecided. I accordingly accept the petition for revision and remit the case to the lower Court for disposal in accordance with the foregoing remarks. Costs shall follow the event.

First Appeal No. 157 of 1923, Decided on 12th June 1928, from decree of Sr. Sub-Judge, Lahore, D/- 18th December 1922.

(a) Hindu Law—Widow — Alienation such as a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate—Bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate when he is not a party to it.

The power of a widow to charge an estate not her own is under the Hindu law a limited and qualified power. It can only be exercised rightly in case of need or for the benefit of the estate. But where in a particular instance the charge is one which a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate, the bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted or the benefit to be conferred upon it, in the particular instance is the thing to be regarded. But it must be remembered that according to this principle it is only the bona fide lender who is protected. But, if that danger arises from any misconduct to which the lender is or has been a party, he cannot take advantage of his own wrong to support a charge in his own favour against the widow grounded on a necessity which his own wrong has helped to cause: 6 M. I. A. 393 (P. C.), Foll. [P 877 C 1, 2]

(b) Hindu Law—Widow—Sale to pay sum due on a mortgage—Vendee's failure to prove the fact that he made inquiries as to the genuineness or good faith of the transaction—Omission is the strongest indication of the absence of good faith on his part.

In the case of alienation by a widow the onus lies heavily on a vendee to prove that a certain mortgage transaction for discharge of which the sale is effected, is a genuine and bona fide one and the discharge of this debt constitutes legal necessity. [P 878 C 1]

Where a vendee fails to prove what inquiry was made and how he was satisfied as to the genuineness or good faith of that transaction, though the fact was peculiarly within his knowledge, this omission must be taken as the strongest indication of the absence of good faith on his part: A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 230, Foll. [P 878 C 2]

(c) Hindu Law—Widow—Necessity—Pilgrimages to places like Benares, Muthra, Bindraban, etc., do not constitute a valid necessity for alienation.

According to Hindu Law only those pilgrimages which conduce to spiritual welfare of the husband constitute a valid necessity for an alienation by a widow. A pilgrimage to Gaya for performance of the husband's Shradha has been held to constitute such necessity but not pilgrimages to places like Benares, Muthra, Brindaban, etc.: A. I. R. 1924 All. 902 and 3 C. W. N. 544, Ref. [P 878 C 2, P 879 C 1]

(d) Hindu Law—Widow—Balance from income after paying interest payable on previous mortgage of property sufficient for her maintenance—Sale of property is not for necessity.

Where the balance from the income from the property after paying interest payable on a previous mortgage is sufficient to maintain a Hindu widow, the sale of that property by her is not for necessity: A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 37, Expl. and Dist. [P 879 C 2, P 880 C 1]

Bhide, J.—The pedigree-table of the parties concerned in this appeal is as follows:

S. Ratan Singh.

Mul Singh=Mt. Bhagwan Devi (Deft. 2).	Tulsa Singa (Plff. 1).	Kirpa Singh (Plff. 2).
Narain Das=Mt. Sohan Devi (Deft. 1). (died on 31st December 1911.)

On 31st March 1919 Mt Sohan Devi, widow of Narain Das, and Mt. Bhagwan Devi, his mother, sold an ihata containing some 10 kothris to defendants 3 and 5 for a sum of Rs. 18,000. Plaintiffs sued for a declaration that this sale was without necessity and should not affect their reversionary rights. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has granted the declaration subject to payment of Rs. 13,500 to the vendees before obtaining possession. From this decree defendants 3 to 5, the vendees, have appealed.

The details of the consideration for the sale according to the sale-deed were as follows:

	Rs.
(a)	13,943	for payment to Mr. Lal Chand, a prior mortgagee.
(b)	2,630	for payment to Dharm Chand, another prior mortgage.
(c)	427	for payment to Sohan Singh on account of a hundi.
(d)	600	for expenses in connexion with pilgrimages.
(e)	400	for expenses in connexion with the sale-deed.
Total	18,000

As regards item (a), it is alleged that although a sum of Rs. 13,943 was due to Mr. Lal Chand, a remission of Rs. 443 was secured by the vendees in the interests of the vendors and the latter sum was actually paid to the vendors. A receipt by the vendors for this sum has been produced but there seems to be no satisfactory evidence in support of this allegation. Prima facie it seems unlikely that the vendees would have cared to intercede on behalf of the vendors for such a remission or that Mr. Lal Chand would have granted it merely at their intercession. It has not been shown that a sum of Rs. 13,943 was actually due to Mr. Lal Chand on the footing of the mortgage. Mr. Lal Chand, when he was in the witness-box, was not questioned about the alleged remissions and merely stated that a sum of Rs. 13,500 was paid to him as shown in the endorsement on Ex. D-1. No other evidence has been produced in support of the alleged remission and the vendees have not even cared to go into the witness-box to depose to it. In view of all these facts the learned Senior Subordinate Judge's finding that only a sum of Rs. 13,500 has been proved to have been paid on account of the mortgage in favour of Mr. Lal Chand seems to be amply justified.

The main items in dispute, however, are items (b), (c) and (d). Item (e) relating to expenses in connexion with the sale can only be allowed if the sale is upheld, but not otherwise.

As regards item (b), it appears that in 1912, i. e., shortly after the death of Narain Das, the Amritsar Distillery Co. sued defendants 1 and 2 and Jai Chand, a brother of defendant 1, for recovery of Rs 1,752-3-6 due on account of the price of liquor purchased by Narain Das for his liquor shop. The suit was decreed against defendant 1 and her brother Jai Chand. The latter was held liable to the extent of the assets of the deceased in his hands, as it was found that he had taken possession of the stock of liquor left in the shop of Narain Das and had carried on the business under a license obtained in his own name. The decree was purchased by one Umrao Singh who took out execution and attached the immovable property of Narain Das, which was already under mortgage with Mr. Lal Chand. To save this property from sale, the widows Mt. Bhagwan Devi and Mt. Sohan Devi are alleged to have effected a second mortgage of the property on 20th February 1916 in favour of Dharm Chand, father of Mt. Sohan Devi for a sum of Rs. 2,000. It appears that the bulk of the amount secured by the above mortgage, viz, about Rs. 1,958 was actually paid in Court in satisfaction of the decree (vide receipts at pp. 63—64 of the printed paper-books). But the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has disallowed this item on the ground that the liquor left in the shop when Narain Das died was worth about Rs 3,467-8-6 and that Jai Chand could not be allowed to take this liquor and get the widows to pay for it to the distillery. He also found that the widows must have obtained considerable cash on the death of Narain Das, as he had received Rs. 4,000 in cash only about three months before his death on the mortgage effected in favour of Mr. Lal Chand (vide item (a) above). The learned counsel for the appellants on the other hand points out that Mt. Bhagwan Devi has deposed that the liquor shop was being carried on at a loss even during the life of Narain Das and that a loss of Rs 2,000 was sustained in that business. The account books of the shop were, however, not produced before the Court and consequently there is no satisfactory evidence on the record to show the exact financial position of this business at the death of Narain Das. But it has been contended on behalf of the appellants, that even if there was some mismanagement at the time, the mortgagee cannot be prejudiced thereby as he had only to see the actual necessity for the loan at the time it was advanced. Reliance has been placed in this respect on the following passage in the leading case of Hunooman Pershad Panday v. Mt Babooee Mundraj Kunweree (1) at p. 423:

> The power of the manager of an infant heir to charge an estate not his own is under the Hindu law a limited and qualified power. It can only be exercised rightly in case of need or for the benefit of the estate. But where in a particular instance the charge is one which a prudent owner would make in order to benefit the estate, the bona fide lender is not affected by the precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted or the benefit to be conferred upon it in the particular instance is the thing to be regarded.

It has been urged that the above principle governs the present case also and that inasmuch as the mortgage in favour of Dharm Chand was made to prevent an impending sale of the property in execution of a decree, the mortgage should be held to be for legal necessity. This contention does not seem to be sound. It is true that the above mentioned principle laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Hunooman Pershad Panday v. Mt. Babooee Mundraj Kunweree (1) has been held to be applicable to the case of alienations by widows (vide para. 634 at p. 923, Mayne's Hindu law and Usage, edn. 9); but it must be remembered that according to that principle it is only the bona fide lender who is protected.

The following remarks of Lord Justice Knight Bruce, in connexion with the danger to the estate which justifies alienation, which are to be found in continuation of the passage in Hunooman Pershad Panday v. Mt. Babooee Mundraj Kunweree (1) at p. 423 quoted above, are noteworthy in this connexion.

> But, of course, if that danger arises or has arisen from any misconduct to which the lender is or has been a party, he cannot take advantage of his own wrong to support a charge in his own favour against the heir grounded on a necessity, which his own wrong has helped to cause.

The crucial point for decision, therefore, is whether Dharm Chand, the mortgagee was acting bona fide. As stated already he is the father of Mt. Sohan Devi. It was he who was apparently looking after her affairs ever since the death of Narain Das. Mt. Bhagwan Devi (defendant 2), has admitted in her statement as a witness that Narain Das had invested Rs. 6,000 in a gunny-bag shop. He had also a liquor shop. It is clear from the mortgage-deed in favour of Lal Chand, that Narain Das had received Rs. 4,000 in cash only about three months before his death. No attempt has been, however, made to show what happened to the stock in the two shops or the sum of Rs. 4,000. The financial condition of Narain Das at his death was a matter within the knowledge of the alienors and Dharm Chand, but they have refrained from producing reliable evidence on the point. The financial condition could easily have been disclosed by the account books of Narain Das but these have been withheld. It has been mentioned above that the Amritsar Distillery Co., obtained a decree against Jai Chand, brother of Mt. Sohan Devi, on the ground that he had taken possession of the stock of liquor in the shop. But Mt. Bhagwan Devi has denied that Jai Chand had anything to do with the shop or that any decree was passed against Jai Chand. Jai Chand himself was not produced as a witness and Dharm Chand although he appeared as a witness gave no evidence about the financial condition of the shops.

The decree in favour of the Amritsar Distillery Co., was passed jointly against Mt. Sohan Devi and Jai Chand in February 1913. It is significant that Jai Chand did not pay even a portion of the decretal amount and that a mortgage was effected in favour of his father Dharm Chand in order to pay it off. The decree was only for Rs. 1,705-7-6. It is difficult to believe in view of the facts stated above that Narain Das could not have left enough cash even for the payment of this amount. The fact appears to be that on the death of Narain Das the management of the affairs of the family fell into the hands of Dharm Chand and his son Jai Chand and they exploited the situation to benefit themselves. The widows being in a helpless condition were probably unable to protect their interests. It appears further that after the death of Narain Das their relations with the plaintiffs became strained (vide evidence of Mt. Bhagwan Devi) and this fact also may have induced them to connive at the doings of Jai Chand and Dharm Chand. Be that as it may, the fact remains that on the one hand a decree had been passed against Jai Chand for the price of liquor supplied to Narain Das on the ground that he had taken possession of the stock of liquor on the latter's death, while on the other hand a mortgage of the widow's property was created in favour of Dharm Chand to pay off the very same decree In these circumstances, Dharm Chand cannot be held to be a bona fide lender within the meaning of the rule laid down at p.423 in Hunooman Pershad Panday v. Mt. Babooee Mundraj Kunweree (1). If there was any mismanagement, it was he who was responsible for it and hence he cannot be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong.

The alienation being by widows the onus lay heavily on the defendants to prove that the mortgage transaction in favour of Dharm Chand was a genuine and bona fide one and the discharge of this debt constituted legal necessity. In view of the facts discussed above, I feel no hesitation in holding that this burden has not been discharged. The position of the vendees cannot be any better than that of Dharm Chand in respect of this mortgage. It was incumbent on them to show that they acted in good faith in accepting Dharm Chand's mortgage as a genuine charge on the estate. They were no strangers to the family. Ghulam Muhammad, vendee had been a tenant of defendants 1 and 2 for about ten years: vide evidence of Moti Ram D.W. 2. The mortgage in favour of Dharm Chand who was the father of Mt. Sohan Devi and was himself looking after her affairs should have at once aroused the vendees' suspicions and put them on enquiry. The vendees have entirely failed to prove that any bona fide enquiry was made by them. They have not even ventured to go into the witness-box and depose what enquiry, if any was made, and how they were satisfied as to the genuineness or good faith of this mortgage transaction, though the fact was peculiarly within their knowledge. In view of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gurbakhsh Singh v. Gurdial Singh (2), this omission must be taken as the strongest indication of the absence of good faith on their part.

The next two items do not require much discussion. A sum of Rs. 400 is said to have been borrowed from Sohan Singh on a hundi for expenses in connexion with the "Sudh" ceremony of Narain Das. It seems strange that Sohan Singh should have been willing to lend this sum to the widows on a mere hundi (which was not even stamped) when Dharm Chand himself found it necessary to take security for his own loan. This Sohan Singh is a neighbour of the widows and the money is alleged to have been repaid to him, not by the vendees themselves, but through Dharm Chand. It is not shown that the "Sudh" ceremony was performed or that it required anything like the sum of Rs. 400. In the agreement of sale dated 26th March 1919, which was executed by the widows prior to the execution of the sale-deed in favour of defendants 3 to 5 this loan was not mentioned. In view of all these facts it must be held that neither the genuineness nor the necessity of this loan has been proved.

Lastly, we have the item of Rs. 600 alleged to have been taken for pilgrimages to holy places. In connexion with this item, it must be remembered that, according to Hindu law, only those pilgrimages, which conduce to the spiritual welfare of the husband constitute a valid necessity for an alienation by a widow. A pilgrimage to Gya for performance of the husband's Shraddha has been held to constitute such necessity, but not pilgrimages to places like Benares, which have no concern with the spiritual welfare of the husband : cf. Darbari Lal v. Gobind Saran (3) and Hari Kissen Bhagat v. Rajrang Sahai (4). In the present instance, Mt. Sohan Devi has deposed that the money was borrowed for visiting sacred places like Mathra, Bindraban, Rikhikesh, and Badri Narain, but it has not been shown that the proposed pilgrimages were according to Hindu religion believed to be conducive to the spritual welfare of the deceased. Apart from this, it appears that the lady had visited the sacred places even before the sale and the necessity of a second visit had not been explained. Her statement about the visit to these places after the sale is extremely vague and it seems very doubtful if the pilgrimages were undertaken at all. These pilgrimages again are not mentioned in the agreement of sale dated 26th March 1919 referred to above. This item also, like the preceding one, appears to be fictitious.

It will thus appear that the only item which could be held to constitute valid necessity according to law was that of Rs. 13,500 paid to Lal Chand. It was urged that a sale can be upheld even if necessity for a considerable portion of the purchase money is not established, provided that the sale itself was necessary. This contention is supported by a recent Privy Council ruling Srikishan Das v. Nathu Ram (5). But in the present instance it cannot be said that the sale of the property was necessary as the only item for which necessity is proved is that of Rs. 13,500. The interest payable to Mr. Lal Chand came to only Rs. 62-8-0 per mensem while the income from the property in the shape of house rent appears to have been about Rs. 100 per mensem. Mt. Sohan Devi has made vague and conflicting statements about the income and estimated it at Rs. 48 or Rs. 49 to Rs. 60. Mt. Bhagwan Devi puts the rent at approximately over Rs. 60 and Dharm Chand also estimates at Rs. 60 or Rs. 65. But no attempt has been made to prove the total income from rent at the date of sale, by producing the rent deeds of the tenants who occupied the property about that time. Dharm Chand himself admittedly collected the rent, and it should have been perfectly simple for him to produce definite documentary evidence on the point in the shape of the rent deeds and his accounts. But no such evidence has been produced. A few isolated rent deeds of the years 1912, 1915, and 1917 were produced, but most of them have not been proved. Even if they had been proved they could not show the total income from rent about the time of the sale. The plaintiffs on the other hand have produced some of the tenants as their witnesses and their evidence shows that the income from the property must have been a good deal more. Daulat Ram (P. W. 8), who is related to the plaintiffs as well as to Mt. Sohan Devi and who was himself a tenant in one of the ihatas, estimates the rent of the ihata sold at Rs. 80 and gives certain details of rent paid by different tenants, in corroboration of his statement. Besides this ihata, the defendants had admittedly another ihata and two shops in Anarkali, which also fetched rent. Daulat Ram alone was paying Rs. 20 per mensem as rent. The fact that Daulat Ram was a tenant in this ihata and used to pay Rs. 20 as rent is admitted by one of the defendant's own witnesses Umar Din, D. W. 1. Umar Din deposes that a European lady and a Bania also occupied part of the ihata. The rent paid by these tenants is not mentioned ; but the fact that a European lady was living in the ihata suggests that the property was in a decent condition and must have fetched good rent. Even Moti Ram D. W. 2, a Khatri who occupied some kothris in the ihata paid as much as Rs. 32 per mensem.

In view of the above facts it will not be, I think an exaggerated estimate to take the average income from rent of the property to be at least Rs. 100 per mensem. With this income the widows could not have had difficulty in paying the interest on the mortgage in favour of Lal Chand which amounted to only Rs. 62-8-0 per mensem and maintaining themselves. It has been also shown above that the widows must have obtained considerable cash and moveable property on the death of Narain Das, which has not been accounted for, and this must have been available to meet emergencies, periodical expenses of repairs of the houses etc.

(3) A. I. R. 1924 All. 902=46 All. 822.
(4) [1909] 13 C. W. N. 544 = 1 I. C. 434 = 9 C. L. J. 458.
(5) A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 37 = 49 All. 149 = 54 I. A. 79 (P.C.).

It seems, therefore, clear that no necessity for the sale arose in connexion with the mortgage in favour of Mr. Lal Chand and this was the only debt for which legal necessity was established. I would, therefore, uphold the decision of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Ram Chand Manchanda and Ishar Das—for Appellant.

Ram Lal and Sant Ram—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This judgment will dispose of Criminal Appeals Nos. 122, 127 and 166 of 1928, which have been preferred against convictions by the Special Magistrate at Gurdaspur in connexion with one of what are known as the Gurdaspur Treasury defalcation cases. The three appellants are Bawa Indar Singh (Treasurer), Ram Kishan (Cashier) and Kahan Chand (assistant dealing with stamps). These there perscns used to work in the treasury rooms, Indar Singh in the front room and the other two in a side room. At the back of the front room is the treasury proper protected by double locks

Briefly stated, the case for the prosecution is that these three appellants committed criminal misappropriation of Rs. 13,856-4-0, the sum of Rs. 13,715-12-0 having been embezzled in respect of Court-fee stamps and the sum of Rs. 140-8-0 having been embezzled in respect of non-judicial stamps. That there was a shortage to the extent stated is a fact which is not challenged and which is proved.

Until 15th December 1926 Lala Kesho Das was the Treasury Officer. Lala Narsingdas (P. W. 1) had been doing six weeks' treasury training up to that date and on 16th December he took over charge of the duties of Treasury Officer. He noticed that the stock of Court-fee stamps in the single lock was of the value of about Rs. 20,000 and he considered that the balance was unduly large : similarly the stock of non-judicial stamps was of the unnecessarily high value of about Rs. 4,000. Ordinarily the balance in the single lock should be the amount required for transactions for one month and it is in his evidence that the normal demand for Court-fee stamps in a month was of the value of Rs. 10,000. He is said to have questioned the treasurer about the balance and to have been told that the Divisional Treasurers had given security for Rs. 1,00,000 and could therefore keep stamps in the single lock up to the value of Rs. 50,000. On one or two occasions after taking over charge he permitted further withdrawals of stamps from the double lock, but gave a direction that the single lock balance must be reduced.

On 19th January 1927 Lala Narsinghdas announced his intention of checking the stamps in the single lock and was asked by Kahan Chand, appellant, who had been on leave for two days, to defer the checking for one day. Indar Singh, appellant is said to have supported Kahan Chand's request. The check was accordingly made the next day and it transpired in the course thereof that a serious shortage existed. The various incidents that occurred during the check are given in detail by the Magistrate in his judgment. Here it is sufficient to observe that the Treasury Officer had Kahan Chand arrested on that day and reported the shortage to the Deputy Commissioner, who released Kahan Chand on bail and directed a further check to be made. Kahan Chand was re-arrested on 23rd January and next day Lala Narsingdas lodged a first information report with the police. Investigation proceeded, and on 28th January, both Ram Kishan and Indar Singh were placed under arrest. At the trial Kahan Chand confessed to the defalcations and implicated the other two appellants.

In order to understand how the embezzlements are said to have been committed, I shall begin by explaining briefly the method in vogue of buying stamps from the Treasury, it being premised that only licensed vendors can purchase from the Treasury. The purchaser first fills in a chalan, showing the denominations of stamps required and the value thereof. The chalan is presented to the Treasury receipt clerk (in the Treasury office); the receipt clerk initials the chalan in token of the payment to be made being a payment towards an authorized head of receipts. The purchaser then takes the chalan and his money to the cashier in the Treasury (e.g. Ram Kishan appellant) and presents both, but from the cash tendered he deducts a certain sum as commission. The cashier enters in the receipt register the full amount of the cash tendered and in the disbursement register the amount paid back or deducted as commission. The commission entry is initialed and then the chalan is passed on to the assistant dealing with stamps (e.g. Kahan Chand, appellant), who issues the stamps to the purchaser. The chalan is returned to the purchaser, who is expected to hand it back to the treasury office.

Such is the proper practice, with one variation, namely, that if the licensed vendor is a paid servant of the Divisional Treasurers then the Treasurer himself keeps the commission and accounts for it to his employers. The theory of the prosecution is that the proper practice was departed from thus : (a) the cash received from the purchaser of the stamps was not credited to Government in the receipt register; and (b) the chalans were not handed back to the purchasers. The method of embezzlement is simple enough and the only difficulty that the culprit or culprits would have to face is that, the stamps having been duly issued to the purchasers, there would be a shortage of stamps in the single lock. In order to conceal the shortage the culprit or culprits would have to keep a very large book balance of stamps in the single lock for if they did not do so a sudden large demand for stamps could not be met. It is contended on behalf of the prosecution that this is what was actually done by appellants ; and further that, in order to defeat a checking of the stock of stamps, sheets of stamps of low denomination were placed in the middle of bundles of sheets of stamps of high domination, so that a mere counting of the sheets (without regard to the value of the stamps in those sheets) would inflate the total value. This latter contention is admittedly borne out by the facts on the record, for, at ths time of checking, sixty sheets of one-anna Court-fee stamps were found in the middle of the sheets of eight-annas stamps.

In the course of evidence that will be discussed later there are certain statements which would not be intelligible without a brief word of introduction as to the machinery for distributing stamps throughout the district. As has been remarked, only licensed vendors may buy stamps from the Treasury, and they are of two kinds, namely (a) paid servants of the Divisional Treasurers, in which category are, e g., Amar Nath and Mulkh Raj (P. W. 4 and P. W. 8), and (b) ordinary licensed vendors, who themselves earn commission on sales, e. g. Charanjit Singh and Harcharan Das (P. W. 18 and P. W. 34), of Sri Gobindpur and Fatehgarh respectively. The main distinction between the two classes of licensed stamp vendors is that the one class is paid by the Divisional Treasurers while the other class earns income from the commission on the sale of stamps. Of the former class of vendors the control was principally in the hands of the Treasurer, who could get them appointed or dismissed through his influence, the latter class had nothing to do with the treasurer. It is, in consequence, argued with much force that the former class would be willing to oblige the treasurer in various ways, and this circumstance will be important when certain evidence on the record comes to be examined.

The vendors keep registers showing the denominations of all non-judicial stamps, but with regard to Court-fee stamps they are required to maintain an account of stamps only of the value of Rs. 20 and upwards. The differentiation as between non-judicial and Court-fee stamps needs no explanation, but we know that Harcharan Das (P. W. 24), though not obliged to do so, kept a private bahi containing an account of all his transactions. The differentiation alluded to above is important for the purposes of the prosecution in two ways : (a) because embezzlements would be less easily detected in respect of Court fee stamps of low denomination and actually the main shortage is in Court-fee stamps of eight annas, one rupee and five rupees; and (b) because it is impossible for the prosecution to trace the stamps with regard to which embezzlement was committed: the objection that the prosecution has not produced the best material evidence being rightly met by the reply that any evidence of this kind, if produced, would certainly be false. It has also been contended by Mr Ram Lal on behalf of the Crown that Court-fee stamps of small value are more frequently indented for and more readily sold and that during a check by the Treasury Officer he is not required under the rules personally to count stamps of small denominations (vide Lincolin's Stamp Law and Practice, p 263, foot-note). All these circumstances would, it is urged, tend to a centralizing of misappropriations in Court-fee stamps of low denominations.

Two other general observations may be made at this stage. The method of withdrawal of stamps from the double lock to the single lock needs no comment, but on such occasions the Treasurer necessarily participates and is, as it were, fixed with the knowledge of the balance in the single lock at the time of withdrawal of stamps from the double lock. The matter is noteworthy in so far as the case against Indar Singh appellant is concerned. The other observation is this, that if the theory of the prosecution is correct, then the appellant Ramkishan must have played a leading part in the embezzlement, for it was he who received the cash tendered by licensed vendors when they came to purchase stamps.

There is a very large volume of documentary and oral evidence in this case and the learned counsel have taken me carefully through the depositions of the witnesses and the many exhibits produced at the trial. I have also had the advantage of seeing a model of the Treasury prepared on behalf of the Crown, and of hearing able arguments by counsel.

It is in the nature of a case of this kind that the prosecution cannot show, and cannot be expected to show, all the individual acts of embezzlement committed. There is no record of the embezzlements and persons engaged in a course of misappropriations would naturally avoid keeping any record. What the prosecution has, therefore, mainly devoted its energies to is the proving that the appellants put back money into the single lock and did other things in order to cover up the traces of their misappropriation. The object of the delinquents was to reduce the shortage and the heavy book balance and that object could be achieved by: (a) importing stamps into the treasury from outside and (b) getting wholly fictitious or partly fictitious chalans prepared and crediting the cash to Government but without issuing any stamps. Such gratuitous presents to Government, it is contended, would be themselves evidence of guilt.

Of replenishment of the stock and of repayments to Government in cash many instances have been cited in the course of the prosecution evidence but before dealing with them I shall mention direct evidence of permanent or temporary embezzlement. In the former class we have three instances shown in P. A. 196, record of stamp transactions of Charanjit Singh (P. W. 18). He used to make his purchases from Batala and Gurdaspur. The Batala transactions are in order, but on three occasions he bought stamps from Gurdaspur and made entries in his register : and yet there is in the treasury books no record of such stamps being issued and no receipt entry for the cash paid by him. In some other cases he was obliged to accept stamps of denominations different from those indented for by him. There is no reason to doubt the correctness of Charanjit Singh's account and it is thus shown that three sums were embezzled on three different dates. Another instance of a permanent embezzlement is shown by the books of Harcharan Das (P. W. 34). He indented for stamps worth Rs. 145-8-0 and the chalan thereof was accidentally found during the investigation. He had received the stamps and paid the cash, but the treasury receipt register is silent. A temporary embezzlement is proved in this way : Harcharan Das indented for a stamp of Rs. 80 and had actually to pay Rs. 76, he being entitled to Rs 4 as commission. The treasury receipt register shows a receipt of Rs. 80 and a disbursement of Rs. 4 on a date considerably later than the day on which Harcharan Das actually received the stamp. If things had been done properly that would have been impossible. Charanjit Singh and Harcharan Das are both corroborated by other witnesses and I have no hesitation in accepting their evidence as true.

It has been urged that the evidence just referred to is not relevant because it deals with acts done before 1925. Some authority was cited on this point, e. g., Empress v. M J. Vyapoory Moodaliar (1) and Amrita Lal Hazara v. Emperor (2). As a matter of fact, one or two of the instances quoted did take place in 1925 and with regard to the earlier instances the evidence adduced is evidence of a system, in which there is a common link between the acts of 1924 and those of 1925. Moreover, it was necessary for the prosecution to rebut, by anticipation, the probable plea of mistake or innocent condition of mind, and in those circumstances I would hold that the evidence to which allusion has been made is admissible under S. 15, Evidence Act.

The appellants are said to have employed several devices for covering up their tracks One of these methods was to induce friends to present wholly fictitious or partly fictitious chalans. These which have been numbered in the series of Z, were prepared by Amar Nath and Mulkh Raj. They are fourteen in number and many of them show unmistakably that alterations have been made. This point need not be laboured. In some cases, notwitstanding the change in the total, the amount of commission was not altered. The receipt register entries are generally by Ram Kishan and the initialing of the commission entries by Indar Singh. In some instances Nanak Chand (P. W. 20) wrote a portion or the whole of the entries in the Court-fee stamp register. It was contended for the Crown that he filled in only the unimportant columns and that therefore he cannot be regarded as an accomplice, the important columns being filled in by Kahan Chand and thus the incriminating portions of the entries being concealed from Nanak Chand. That may be true in some instances in this series, but it is certainly not true of all, and I consider that it is not improbable that Nanak Chand had some inkling of what was being done. His evidence is full of contradictions in details, but the main consideration is that the gist of his evidence is corroborated by the documents on the record. The same remark applies to the testimony of Amar Nath and Mulkh Raj.

A considerable amount of argument has been focussed on these two witnesses and it will be convenient at this stage to examine their credibility. These men were both suspended, but were subsequently reinstated : their houses were searched. They belong to the same dramatic club as Kahan Chand and there is said also to be some connexion between them in respect of a partnership in some vegetable business. It was also urged that they had not volunteered information and had, when examined at the trial, expanded their evidence so as to incriminate Indar Singh and Ram Kishan. As to the suspension and reinstatement of Amar Nath and Mulkh Raj, it is obvious that those events were not the work of Indar Singh and Ram Kishan. Their suspension was ordered by the district authorities and their reinstatement was, no doubt, due to the facts that nothing incriminating was found when their houses were searched : also possibly because other men were not available. The connexion through the dramatic club was of the slightest, as the evidence shows, and the partnership affair is nebulous. The contention that these two, Amar Nath and Mulkh Raj at first did not incriminate Indar Singh and Ram Kishan is incorrect : a perusal of their statements taken under S. 164, Criminal P.C., belies the contention, which is, it may be observed, quite inconsistent with the defence theory regarding their reinstatement. They did not volunteer information for the obvious reason that they depended ou the good will of Indar Singh : and it was only when they were confronted with particular documents that they found themselves compelled to make admissions against their patron, Indar Singh. Taking everything into consideration., I would hold that they were not biased in favour of Kahan Chand or inimical to Indar Singh and Ram Kishan ; further that they cannot be regarded as accomplices of the two latter appellants. I would note too that if Amar Noth and Mulkh Raj are to be regarded as quasi accomplices, their testimony is corroborated amply by documentary evidence.

This digression has been necessitated by the lengthy arguments addressed by learned counsel on the credibility of the two witnesses mentioned. I now resume the examination of other documents exhibited by the prosecution. From the evidence of four branch postmasters it is proved that Rs. 100 were repaid to Government on 1st September 1926 although no stamps were issued to them. The documentary evidence of this is contained in the P. W. series of exhibits. Ex. P D and P E have a peculiar significance when read with other evidence in the case. By these two chalans Rs. 900 were paid into the treasury on 19th January 1927, an important date, in view of the fact that the Treasury Officer had intimated on that day his intention of checking the single lock balance. With P D and P E we must take the four exhibits dated 19th January 1927 in the P V series each for Rs. 25 making up a total repayment of Rs. 1,000 on that day. The four witnesses of these four exhibits are branch postmasters of villages and they have proved that they sent no money orders to reach the Gurdaspur treasury on 19th January. Their evidence has not been rebutted.

There is a direct connexion between this repayment of Rs. 1,000 and the roznamcha of Indar Singh. According to the defence Indar Singh had a private account with Kahan Chand, who is said to have banked with him. On 19th January 1927 there is an entry of a "withdrawal" of Rs. 1,000 by Kahan Chand. The account begins in April 1925 and shows deposits and withdrawals totalling about Rs. 6,900 on each side, there being a final balance of Rs. 94 in Kahan Chand's favour. Now, Kahan Chand's financial position has never been sound and it is incredible that he could, for instance, have honestly deposited about Rs. 1,500 with Indar Singh during May 1925, (as the account shows) or deposited Rs. 4,000 on one day in the following month. It is manifest that the whole account is a bogus one, in the sense that Kahan Chand, if he made the deposits, did so with money dishonestly acquired. The explanation offered by the defence with regard to the Rs. 1,000 is preposterous that Ram Piari, Indar Singh's daughter, had lent Kahan Chand Rs. 1,000 on a promissory note without security and received back payment from Kahan Chand by the Rs. 1,000 which Kahan Chand withdrew from his account with Indar Singh on 19th January. It is a logical inference and Kahan Chand supports the proposition that this sum of Rs. 1,000 was a part of his payment to Government against the defalcations.

The P Y series of exhibits prove the replenishment of stock in the single lock by direct methods. The evidence has not been seriously challenged and is accepted as true. In this category also fall exhibits P R and P S relating to the acquisition of stamps worth Rs. 360 and Rs. 180 respectively. The story is told by Nathu Ram (P. W. 5), Brij Lal (P. W. 6), Amar Nath (P. W. 7), and Nanak Chand (P. W. 20). I have considered this evidence and am of opinion that, even if the veracity of Nanak Chand is doubted, the other witnesses prove the truth of this part of the case. The episode of Brij Lal's bicycle journey to Gurdaspur has been ridiculed by the appellant's learned counsel on what I consider insufficient grounds.

Another transaction in the case deserves notice. It is evidenced by the mortgage deed P T executed by Kahan Chand in favour of Gopal Singh, natural son of Indar Singh. I have heard much argument on this subject and am satisfied that the consideration mentioned in the deed is fictitious. The defence theory was that two promissory notes, which form part of the consideration, were genuine, but the statements of Muhammad Raza and Mohammad Mohsin (P. W. 22 and P. W. 23) contradict the theory. These witnesses have been criticized as being hostile to Indar Singh, but I see no reason to hold that view. Gopal Singh is undoubtedly a benamidar mortgagee. The delay in securing the original mortgage deed from Gopal Singh is of no importance; it was a registered deed and if Gopal Singh had failed to produce the original the prosecution would probably have been entitled to lead secondary evidence. The delay is accounted for by the fact that a shortage was discovered in the double lock part of the treasury and a fresh investigation had to be undertaken. The fictitious nature of the transaction is deposed to by Kahan Chand.

It is now time to examine the statement made by Kahan Chand during the trial. The learned counsel for the defence have taken up two inconsistent positions with regard to this statment. On the one hand it was argued that the statement amounted to an unqualified confession and that therefore Kahan Chand should have been forthwith convicted and sentenced and removed from the dock. On the other hand, it has been argued with equal seriousness that the statement did not amount to a confession and that the Court was not justified in taking it into consideration against the other appellants under S. 30, Evidence Act.

The statement of Kahan Chand has been read and commented on minutely. I have no hesitation in holding that it amounts to a confession of guilt. It was criticized on the ground that Kahan Chand assumed a minor part in the affair of the embezzlement but that arose from the nature of the case. He confessed to a minor part because he was the least of the three actors in the drama. Had he confessed to the principal part, he would obviously have been lying. He has, however, admitted his guilt both then and subsequently, even in his appeal from prison.

It was argued that Kanhzya v. Emperor (3) supports the view that Kahan Chand's confession is inadmissible against the other two appellants, but that case dealt with a Sessions trial and a distinction has been drawn between warrant cases and Sessions trials in Fakhr-ul-Din v. Emperor (4). This authority I must follow in preference to Emperor v. Mahadeo Prasad (5), where a different view is taken. Kahan Chand, it should also be noted, wished to produce evidence in mitigation of sentence and the action of the Magistrate in not convicting and sentencing him forthwith was not irregular.

A certain amount of argument has centred round the conduct of Kahan Chand. It is not denied that at first he tried to conceal the shortage and then after his second arrest made a volte face. This tergiversation is attributed to his helping, and being well treated by the police. I have no doubt that the true explanation is that he knew that he was hopelessly involved and consequently was prepared to show up everything in order to mitigate his own punishment. I see no reason, however, to suppose that he implicated the other two appellants falsely. Indeed his confession has been largely corroborated by unimpeachable oral and documentary evidence. It was in the light of the evidence on the record impossible for him to have committed the misappropriations unaided.

Much capital has been made out of the fact that Kahan Chand was kept, and asked to be kept, in police custody after the other two had been arrested; but, as Mr. Ram Lal has pointed out, Kahan Chand was in the judicial lock-up for 37 days before he made his confession at the trial. He had made no statement under S. 164, Criminal P. C., and there was no reason for the recording of such a statement in his case. Another objection taken by the learned counsel for the defence was that the trial Magistrate made an improper use of S. 27, Evidence Act. There is force in this objection, for Kahan Chand's "information" to the police during the investigation has not been proved. The matter is not of much importance for the fact remains that the police were enabled to discover some documentary evidence, more speedily than they would otherwise have done, by the help of Kahan Chand. His confession has elucidated the value of such documentary evidence, which is also deposed to by independent witnesses.

On behalf of Indar Singh it was further contended that the first information report (dated 24th January 1927) in no way implicated him, although later on the Treasury Officer attributed to Indar Singh conduct not mentioned in that report. The report was made against Kahan Chand, who was the first and most obvious suspect. At that time the Treasury Officer did not have reason (rightly or wrongly) to think that Indar Singh had taken part in the embezzlement. It was, therefore, not only superfluous but undesirable that he should drag in the name of Indar Singh when he was reporting against Kahan Chand. The further information which the Treasury Officer gave at the trial is not inconsistent with the first report made to the police and a first report is never per se the statement of a case for the prosecution. The contention made on Indar Singh's behalf has no force.

The trial Magistrate framed charges in the alternative against the three appellants, and it has first been urged on their behalf that the charges are not intelligible. Indeed, it was even contended that the stamp case and the currency notes cases should not have been split up. I can find no force in this contention, for it implies that the Magistrate should have framed more complicated charges than those which he did frame. It is settled law that a general deficiency charge is regular. Now since the embezzlements were, in the nature of things, kept secret it was impossible to find out all the individual acts of misappropriation. The first part of the charge must, however, be deemed to be wrong because, although a total deficiency is alleged, no misappropriations are alleged to have taken place during the year preceding January 1927. On the other hand, I find no fault with the second portion of the charge, the facts in which are corroborated by Kahan Chand. It is clear that during 1924, for instance, any sums misappropriated were made good and that the real permanent misappropriations were done in 1925. The second portion of the charge refers to repayments made by the appellants to Government, and although the mention of repayments was not really a part of the charge, it cannot reasonably be argued that the appellants were in fact misled by the mention of those repayments. The evidence led by the prosecution pointed to and proved repayments and, if anything, the appellants were in a better position to meet the charge, if they could do so by evidence. I am satisfied that the criminal breach of trust did actually occur in the year 1925 and that some repayments were made in 1925, 1926 and the beginning of 1927.

It has been suggested that the shortage may have been due to extraneous causes, e. g., accident or mistake, and that all that Indar Singh and Ram Kishan incurred was a civil liability: in short, that a criminal act or series of criminal acts was not the only possible cause of the shortage. The evidence led by the prosecution amply rebuts such a suggestion. The guilt of the three appellants is the only conclusion that can be reached when all the circumstantial evidence, read with the confession of Kahan Chand, is examined and viewed in a reasonable light.

I have omitted in this judgment a few minor points which do not appear to me to have much value in the case., e g., the security bond of Indar Singh, the plus and minus memoranda and so forth. Nor have I thought it necessary to discuss with great minuteness all the arguments bearing on the credibility or otherwise of individual witnesses. I have, I think, discussed those points, both for and against the appellants, which have a real importance in deciding their guilt or innocence. It is proved that the three appellants combined together in committing the misappropriations, and the convictions of all three are accordingly maintained.

It was in the last report contended that the sentences imposed by the Magistrate are too severe, but such a contention loses sight of the positions of trust held by the appellants and also of the magnitude of their operations. The sentences are not, in my opinion, excessive.

The appeals are dismissed.

v.

Abdul Hamid—Plaintiff—Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 2667 of 1927, Decided on 29th February 1928, from order of Dist. Judge, Jullundur, D/- 21st February 1927.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, Art. 35 (2)—Suit to recover certain articles or their value which was less than Rs. 500—Allegations that defendant was disposing of them to the plaintiff's prejudice, and that the defendant held them in trust for the plaintiff—Allegations amounted to criminal misappropriation—Claim is not small cause.

In a suit to recover certain ornaments and household goods, the value of which was less than Rs. 500, the plaintiff alleged that after his father's death, his mother took away the above articles belonging to the plaintiff and handed them over to defendant 2 whom she had remarried, and both were disposing of these articles to the prejudice of the plaintiff. It was further alleged that the articles were with the mother in trust for the plaintiff.

Held : that the allegations amounted to a charge of criminal misappropriation, if not criminal breach of trust, and the suit was therefore excepted from the cognizance of a Small Cause Court under Art. 35 (2).

Faqir Chand—for Appellants.

Nand Lal—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The respondent instituted a suit against the appellants for the return of certain ornaments and household goods or their value, Rs. 376. It was alleged by the plaintiff that defendant 1 was his mother and that after the plaintiff's father's death, she remarried defendant 2 and, with the abetment of the latter, took away the ornaments and household goods belonging to the plaintiff and handed them over to defendant 2, and that both were disposing of these articles to the prejudice of the plaintiff. It was alleged that, as a matter of fact, the articles were with defendant 1 in trust for the plaintiff.

The trial Court dismissed the suit. The Senior Sub-Judge on appeal has decreed the suit against both the defendants. Defendant 1 first admitted the claim of the plaintiff in writing, but subsequently alleged that she had been made to sign the admission by fraud of the guardian of the plaintiff. The Senior Subordinate Judge, however, has held that this allegation of defendant 1 has not been established and that she actually admitted the plaintiff's claim voluntarily. With regard to defendant 2 the learned Judge has given no finding whatsoever whether he had taken possession of or had disposed of any of the ornaments or household goods belonging to the plaintiff, nor any finding as to the value thereof. He has accepted the appeal of the plaintiff and decreed the suit against both the defendants. This second appeal has been presented by the two defendants.

A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondent that the suit being of the nature of a small cause suit and its value being less than Rs. 500 no second appeal lies in this Court, but, having regard to the allegations made in the plaint, it seems to me that the suit is excepted from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court by Art. 35 (ii), Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, which excepts from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court a suit for compensation for an act which is, or, save for the provisions of Ch. 4, I. P. C., would be an offence punishable under Ch. 17 of the said Code In my opinion the allegations made in the plaint amount to a charge of criminal misappropriation, if not criminal breach of trust, against the two respondents. I, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection.

On the merits the appellant Mt Rajji, who was defendant 1 in the trial Court, having admitted the plaintiff's claim, is not entitled to appeal from the decree passed against her on her own admission. Her appeal, therefore, is hereby dismissed with costs.

With regard to Abdul Ghani, appellant, defendant 2, in my opinion the Senior Subordinate Judge has not given a proper decision. He has not decided whether this appellant received the property belonging to the plaintiff-respondent and if he received it what was the value of such property. I consider that under the circumstances, the case must be remanded to the learned Judge with direction to submit a finding to this Court on the points mentioned above. The remand is under O. 41, R. 25, Civil P. C. Report within two months.

Bhide, J.—This was a suit by a society called the Anjuman Muhafiz Aukaf (Society for the protection of religious endowments) and two Mahomedan residents of Delhi for a declaration that two hujras, three shops and five houses described in the plaint were attached to a mosque named Sheikh Masita situated in that city, and for certain other reliefs. The facts alleged briefly were that the shops and hujras formed a part of the mosque and were wakf property. One of the shops with a balakhana was constructed along with the mosque in the year 1864 under the supervision of Kadar Bakhsh who was its "Mutwalli". The other two shops were originally bath-rooms and had been converted later into shops. As regards the houses it was alleged that these had been sold to the mosque in the year 1910 by Mt. Sakina Jan and Ibrahim. Since the year 1917, the defendants, who are mostly descendants of Kadir Bakhsh (vide pedigree-table attached to the plaint), asserted themselves to be the owners of the above property and made collusive alienations thereof amongst themselves to the prejudice of the rights of the plaintiffs and other Mahomedans. The plaintiffs therefore sued for the aforesaid declaration and the following reliefs in addition, viz.

(1) that the defendants be ousted from the property in dispute and that it may be ordered to be given back for the purposes of "wakf";

(2) that the plaintiffs may be awarded possession in the interests of the mosque;

(3) that a decree for Rs. 1,000 on account of mesne profits for three years and also for future profits till delivery of possession be passed in favour of the plaintiffs.

A preliminary objection was raised by the defendant that the suit was not maintainable owing to want of sanction under S. 92, Civil P. C., but the Court decided that the declaratory relief at any rate did not require any sanction under that section and the suit was therefore allowed to proceed with reference to that relief though without any amendment of the plaint (vide p. 152 of the printed record). On merits the defendants admitted that the hujras were attached to the mosque but denied that the shops and the houses were wakf. As to the houses their allegations were to the following effect: Kadar Bakhsh gifted three houses to the mosque as "wakf" in 1889 (vide p. 118 of the printed record). After the death of Kadar Bakhsh one of these houses was sold as it was sold by his son Ali Hassan to one Ramu Mal for Rs. 4,000 on the 8th December 1910. Out of the sale proceeds, the five houses now in dispute were purchased by him on the same date. The sale-deeds were executed in favour of the mosque because the house, out of the sale proceeds of which these houses were purchased, was believed at the time to be validly gifted to the mosque as "wakf." Later on in the year 1912, Dr. Muhammad Wazir and others instituted a suit for an account of the income and expenditure and prices of the properties sold and purchased by Ali Hasan as also for an account of the other properties mentioned in the plaint which included the three shops now in dispute. The suit was tried by the District Judge of Delhi, who held the "wakf" made by Kadar Bakhsh in 1889 to be void for uncertainty and dismissed the whole suit. This decision was upheld in appeal by the Divisional Judge and on second appeal by the Chief Court, Punjab, (vide pp. 84,115,94 of the printed record). As the "wakf" of the house sold to Ramu Mal was declared to be void the houses purchased with sale proceeds thereof could not be treated as "wakf" property. Defendants, therefore, claimed to be fully entitled to treat the houses as private property and contended that the alienations thereof were valid. The defendants also pleaded that the question whether the shops and the houses were wakf property arose in the previous suit by Dr. Wazir Ali and others, and as that suit was dismissed, the decision operated as res judicata.

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge found the issues in favour of the plaintiffs and granted them the declaratory relief prayed for. The other reliefs were refused to them, but the decree directed that defendants be ejected from the properties in suit for the benefit of the mosque and that a sum of Rs. 1,000 be paid by the defendants as mesne profits. An enquiry was also ordered to be made as to profits subsequent to the institution of the suit.

From this decision, defendants have appealed. The main contentions of the learned counsel for the appellants were as follows:

(a) The suit should have been dismissed for want of sanction under S. 92, Civil P. C.

(b) The question whether the shops and houses in dispute were "wakf property" was res judicata.

(c) It has not been proved that the shops are wakf property.

(d) That the house in dispute, having been purchased out of the sale-proceeds of the house sold to Ramu Mal, could not be treated as wakf property as the wakf of the house sold to Ram Mal was itself declared to be void.

As regards the first point there is no doubt that no sanction under S. 92, Civil P. C. was necessary for a suit for a mere declaration that the property in dispute was wakf and that the alienations thereof were void: vide inter alia Miran Bakhsh v. Allah Bakhsh (1). The order of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge dated 15th January 1921 (at pp. 151-2 of the printed record) shows that the suit was really allowed to proceed with respect to this relief only. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge, however, apparently thought that it was open to him to pass a decree for possession and mesne profits in favour of the mosque, though these reliefs could not be granted to the plaintiffs owing to want of sanction under S. 92, Civil P. C. A decree for ejectment of defendants and mesne profits was accordingly passed for the benefit of the mosque. The learned counsel for the plaintiffs-respondents did not attempt to support this decree. It does not appear that the plaintiffs had ever asked for any relief in this form. The "mosque" not being a party to the suit the decree seems clearly unsustainable and cannot stand in this respect in any case It was conceded that the plaint should have been formally amended but as the parties really proceeded to trial on the question of "declaration" only, the absence of a formal amendment does not seem fatal to the suit. The learned counsel for the plaintiffs formally withdrew before us the prayer for the other reliefs in the plaint and the suit will be deemed to have been for the aforesaid declaratory relief only.

The next point for decision is that of res judicata. In October 1912, Dr. Muhammad Wazir and others instituted a suit, with the sanction of the Collector obtained under S. 92, Civil P. C., for an account of the income and expenditure and prices of the properties sold and purchased as also for account relating to other property mentioned in paras. 1, 3, 6, 7 of the plaint in that suit. It was stated in these paras. that three houses had been dedicated by Kadar Bakhsh to the mosque as wakf by a deed dated 16th December 1889. Later on, Kadar Bakhsh was alleged to have executed a will on 22nd October 1901 by virtue of which he entrusted the aforesaid three houses, along with certain shops mentioned in the will, to the trustees mentioned therein. After the death of Kadar Bakhsh, Ali Hassan, his son, who was managing the property sold one of the houses with the permission of the trustees as it had become dilapidated, to one Ramu Mal for Rs. 4,000, and purchased some other property with the sale proceeds. He, however, failed to render account to the trustees of these transactions and also of the total income and the expenditure of the wakf property. Ali Hassan was alleged to be misappropriating the income of the wakf property and the plaintiffs therefore prayed that he may be required to furnish an account of the income and expenditure of the properties as stated above. Ali Hassan resisted the suit, pleading inter alia, that the wakf of the houses was unlawful and the shops were not attached to the mosque and had never been dedicated as wakf. The Court found the wakfnama executed by Kadar Baksh in 1889 to be void for uncertainty and the will to be spurious. On these findings, the whole suit was dismissed (vide judgment at pp 84-94 of the printed record). The decision was upheld by the Divisional Judge on appeal and a second appeal to the Chief Court also failed (vide judgment at pp. 115-118 and p. 94 of the printed record).

It seems perfectly clear that it was finally decided in the above suit that the wakf of the three houses dedicated by Kadar Baksh to the mosque in 1889 was void. The house sold to Ramu Mal was one of these houses and hence it must be held to have been finally decided that this house was not wakf. But the suit was not confined to the above houses only. It was stated in the plaint that one of these houses had been sold in 1910 and that certain other property was purchased with the sale proceeds. It was also alleged that Ali Hassan had failed to give an account not only of the sales and purchases but also of the income and expenditure of the whole of the wakf property. It is not disputed that the five houses now in dispute were purchased in 1910 with the sale-proceeds of the house sold to Ramu Mal. The plaintiffs asked in the previous suit an account of the income and expenditure of the property purchased as well as the property sold. It must be remembered in this connexion that the property purchased had already been in possession of Ali Hassan for about two years before the suit was instituted. It seems, therefore, clear that the plaintiffs in the previous suit did ask for an account of the houses now in dispute. This necessarily implied that the plaintiffs looked upon these houses also as wakf property. If there were any doubt on this point, it will be removed by a reference to the grounds of second appeal in the Chief Court in that suit in which it was distinctly alleged that the properties purchased were also wakf (vide clause (d) of ground No. 1).

The shops now in dispute were also included in the property which was the subject-matter of the previous suit. In para. 3 of the plaint it was distinctly alleged that the shops were attached to the mosque and had been made over to the trustees by the will dated 2nd October 1901. A reference to the will (vide p. 99 of the printed record) shows that the shops were described therein as having been already dedicated as wakf. The plaintiffs asked for an account of the shops mentioned in para. 3 of the plaint on the ground that they were wakf property. Ali Hassan, on the other hand, denied that the "shops" were wakf.

It is thus clear that the question whether the houses and shops now in dispute were wakf property was directly and substantially in issue in the previous suit also. It seems equally clear that these houses and shops were held not to be wakf property as the suit was dismissed in its entirety. It is true that no distinct finding was recorded that the shops and the houses now in dispute were not wakf; but this finding was necessarily implied by the final decision. If any part of the property had been found to be 'wakf' the plaintiff would obviously have been entitled to an account of that property at any rate. It is, therefore, clear that the Court did not hold any of the properties in that suit to be wakf. The finding that the wakfnama was void was apparently held to be sufficient to dispose of the question of the houses sold as well as purchased. As regards the dedication of the shops, reliance was placed by the then plaintiff only on the will of the year 1901 and this will having been found to be spurious, the shops were considered not to be "wakf."

The matter did not rest with the decision of the trial Court. An appeal was lodged in the Divisional Court and it was contended that the trial Court had not decided all the necessary issues. But this contention was not accepted and it was held that the District Judge had decided all the issues necessary at the time and that he was justified in refusing to undertake the administration of the institution. The grounds of appeal urged before the Divisional Court were re-considered by the Chief Court and the decision of the Divisional Court was upheld. It is thus clear that the Divisional Court as well as the Chief Court held that the dismissal of the whole suit was justified.

In view of the dismissal of the whole suit, there is, I think, no escape from the conclusion that the houses and shops now in dispute were held not to be "wakf" property. For the purposes of res judicata a finding by necessary implication is no less potent than an express finding on a particular point : cf. Ram Krishna v. Vithal Ramji (2), Apurba Krishna v. Parmanik (3). I have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that the above matter was heard and finally decided in the former suit.

It was, however, urged on behalf of the plaintiffs-respondents, that the former suit was not between the same parties and that the parties were not litigating under the same title. Now, the former suit was of a representative character and was instituted on behalf of all the Mahomedans interested in the alleged wakf property. The present suit is also of the same type. Plaintiffs in the two suits must, therefore, be held to be identical for the purposes of S. 11, Civil P. C. (cf. Expl. vi, S. 11, Civil P. C.). The contention that the defendants are not the same and are not litigating under the same title has also no force. It is true that the defendants Ali Hassan and others in the former suit were alleged to be trustees, while the defendants in the present suit are alleged to be trespassers. But the finding in the former suit was that the property in dispute was not wakf. It follows, therefore, that it was found that Ali Hassan and others were not in fact "trustees". Ali Hassan was litigating in the former suit as a private person, so far as the shops and houses now in suit are concerned, as he denied that these were wakf. The defendants in the present suit include two sons of Ali Hassan (defendants 6 and 7) as well as certain other persons to whom he sold some of the houses in dispute. These persons at any rate are certainly representatives of Ali Hassan for the purposes of S. 11, Civil P. C. Hence it seems clear that the decision in the previous suit operates as res judicata so far as these defendants are concerned.

It is true that, in the present suit, there are also some other defendants, who cannot be said to be "claiming under" Ali Hassan, e. g , defendants 1, 4, 9, 11, etc. These persons were not parties to the previous suit and hence the decision in the former suit regarding the shops and houses now in dispute cannot operate as res judicata under S. 11, Civil P. C , qua these defendants. But this fact will not, I think, affect the final decision in the circumstances of this case. For, when the decision in the previous suit as regards the shops and houses not being wakf property operates as res judicata and binds some of the defendants, the finding cannot be otherwise in respect of any other defendant. Waki according to Mahomedan law means permanent dedication of any property for religious, pious, or charitable purposes When property is dedicated by way of wakf, the ownership is deemed to be transferred from the dedicator to Almighty God and all proprietary rights of men are thenceforth extinguished in the property (vide para. 157, Mulla's Principles of Mahomedan Law, 6th edition). It follows from this that no person can have private rights of ownership in wakf property and conversely that if any person is found to have such rights in any property it could not be held to be wakf.

In the present instance, it has been found above that as a result of the decision in the former suit, the shops and houses in dispute cannot be held to be wakf so far as those of the defendants, who are representatives of Ali Hassan, are concerned. In other words, these latter must be held to be entitled to treat the shops and houses as their private property. Consequently, the property cannot be held to be "wakf" even as against the other defendants (The judgment then discussed the evidence and finding that the property was not wakf proceeded.) On the above findings, I would accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit except as regards the two hujras. As to the latter, the declaration granted by the Senior Subordinate Judge will be maintained, but the relief as regards possession and mesne profits granted in favour of the mosque must be cancelled. In view of all the circumstances in connexion with the wakf I think the parties might be left to bear their own costs throughout.

Judgment.—On the death of Captain Sardar Jiwan Singh, Sunder Singh, one of his sons, filed an application on behalf of himself and his minor brother named Karam Singh for a succession certificate in respect of a sum amounting to Rs. 50,000 deposited by his father in the Bank of Bengal (now Imperial Bank of India). Subsequently an objection having been raised on behalf of the minor brother the applicant confined his application to his own share in the aforesaid deposit and on 25th July 1920, he was granted a succession certificate in respect of Rs. 25,000 out of Rs. 50,000 in Pass Book Deposit with the Imperial Bank of India, Lahore. When Sunder Singh applied to the Bank it was discovered that the Bank really held Government promissory notes and War Bonds on behalf of the late Captain Sardar Jiwan Singh and there was only a sum of about Rs. 10,000 in the current account on account of the interest on the securities. The Bank refused to pay anything to the applicant unless he obtained a succession certificate in respect of the Government securities, etc., and also an order from Court about the distribution of the securities between the applicant and his brother. Sunder Singh then made an application to the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, for amendment of the above certificate as required by the Bank, but the application was rejected. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge held that (I) the applicant must file a separate application in respect of the promissory notes and War Bonds, etc; (II) and that he had no jurisdiction to make any order about the division of the securities between the two brothers. Sunder Singh has applied for revision of this order.

The main point for decision is whether a succession certificate can be amended in the manner required by the applicant. The applicant's contention is that the description of the debt given in the original certificate was not correct and that this was due to the fact that he had not been able to obtain accurate information about the nature of the debt. This contention appears to be correct in so far as the Pass Book Deposit in the present case turns out to be only about Rs. 8,000 while the rest consists of promissory notes and securities. What is the proper remedy of the applicant in such circumstances? There is no doubt that he can get an extension of the certificate in respect of the promissory notes and War Bonds under S. 376, Indian Succession Act (corresponding to S. 10 of the old Succession Certificate Act) But the applicant wishes the description of the debt as given in the original certificate to be corrected. For this there appears to be no specific provision in the Act.

If the applicant applies for extension of the certificate, he will of course have to pay extra Court-fee and he will suffer loss owing to the fees which he has already paid in respect to the Pass Book Deposit. The description 'Pass Book Deposit' is not accurate; but it may be taken to cover the current account, for practical purposes. The applicant was apparently entitled to Rs 5,000 out of this deposit while he has paid Court-fees on Rs. 25,000, i. e., for Rs. 20,000 i. e., Rs. 400 more than he need have paid. This is apparently the reason why this application is being pressed. I am inclined to think that this Court could exercise its inherent power if all that was required was in reality correction of a misdescription; but the amendment sought in the present instance in this case seems to go much further. It will appear from the application dated 31st October 1926, that the applicant prays the Court to correct the entry in Col. 4 of the succession certificate changing Pass Book Deposit to current account dues and amount due on security deposits as under (giving details of the securities) as the Court thinks proper should be transferred to the applicant's name. In other words, the applicant wishes the Court to allot specific securities to him and detail them in the certificate. The securities are of different dates and denominations, and division thereof is clearly beyond the province of a Court granting a succession certificate. I am, therefore, of opinion that the applicant's prayer cannot be granted. The applicant can seek the remedies suggested in the learned Senior Subordinate Judge's order; if so advised. I may note, however, that it is doubtful whether the the order of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge granting a succession certificate with respect to the applicant's share was in accordance with law. There is a conflict between the decision of the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts on the point, vide inter alia, Annapurna Dasya v. Nalini Mohan Das (1) and Sughra Begam v. Mohammad Mir Khan (2), but the Allahabad decisions seem to have found favour with the learned Judges of the Punjab Chief Court who decided Kishore Chand v. Nihal Devi (3). The certificate alread granted has, however, not been challenged by any rival claimant and I need not discuss the point further as it is not necessary for the disposal of the application for amendment of the certificate.

I reject the application, but in view of all circumstances leave the parties to bear their costs.

(a) Custom (Punjab)—A gift of a portion of his estate by a Sayyad of the village Khai of Lyallpur District to his daughter in the presence of sons is valid.

The custom amongst the Sayyads of Dipalpur tahsil is as follows: The father is competent to gift some of his land to his daughters during his lifetime without the consent of his collaterals or sons, while in the absence of sons he can gift the whole. Further, the father can gift his whole estate as his daughter's dower in the absence of sons and in the presence of sons he can grant a portion of his estate as her dower without the consent of anyone. This customary law is equally applicable to the Sayyads of the village Khai in Saundari tahsil of the Lyallpur District. [P 895 C 1]

Addison, J.—The plaintiffs are the minor sons of Haji Shah who, on 24th September 1909, gifted one-fourth of his ancestral holding in village Khai in the Lyallpur District to his unmarried sister Mt. Sahib Nishan, defendant 1, and another one-fourth to his two daughters, defendants 2 and 3, who were then unmarried though they married later. The daughters were by one wife and the sons by another. Haji Shah died some six years before the suit was instituted. According to the plaint, the parties are Sayyads who came from village Sher Garh in the Montgomery District and who follow customary law. It was claimed that Haji Shah had no power under custom to make these gifts. It was stated that the defendants were asked to surrender the land. Defendant 3 assented and returned to them her one-eighth share. She was, however, impleaded as a pro forma defendant in the present suit which the plaintiffs thereafter brought for recovery of the one-fourth share with the sister and of the one-eighth share with the other daughter. The contesting defendants pleaded that they were governed by Mahomedan law and that they depended for their livelihood not only on agriculture but on piri Muridi. They denied that they came from Sher Garh originally and stated that they had lived at village Khai from olden times. It was further claimed that, even if parties were governed by customary law, the gift of such a small area of land in favour of a daughter and an unmarried sister was permissible. On the pleadings only one issue arose, whether parties were governed by custom and, if so, what was the custom amongst them regarding the power of gift of a part of the ancestral property by a proprietor having male issue when the gift was made in favour of the daughters and a sister.

The trial Judge held: (1) that it was not proved that the parties came originally from Sher Garh; (2) that they followed the customs of their own village Khai and not Mahomedan law; (3) that under custom the gift to the daughter was warranted; but (4) that there was no power of gift in favour of the sister. He accordingly decreed possession of the sister's share of one-fourth of the holding, but dismissed the suit for possession of the one-eighth share of the daughter, defendant 2. Against this decision the sister and plaintiffs have preferred appeals.

After the institution of her appeal the sister died and no attempt has been made to bring her legal representatives on the record. In fact these representatives would appear to be the plaintiffs. The result is that the appeal of the sister has abated. That order has been made in her appeal. As regards the plaintiffs' appeal the application to bring the legal representatives of Mt. Sahib Nishan on the record was not brought within time, but she was merely a pro forma defendant, as she was not interested in that appeal which attacked only the finding regarding the daughter. Further, the appellants were themselves her legal representatives. For these reasons there was no necessity to bring her legal representatives on the record and consequently there was no abatement of this appeal

This was admitted by the learned counsel appearing for the daughter.

I agree with the trial Court that the evidence does not establish that Nadir Shah, who purchased this village and founded it at a time when it was waste land, came from Sher Garh. The pedigree table of Khai shows that he came from village Jhakkar in Tahsil Montgomery of the Montgomery District (Ex P. 8 at p. 23 of the paper-book). Haji Shah is a grandson of this Nadir Shah. In face of this document, the unsatisfactory oral evidence cannot be accepted. For example, plaintiffs' fourth witness admitted that Sher Garh Sayyads and Khai Sayyads meet as far back has Daud and not nearer and that he could not give the number of degrees. The Sher Garh Sayyads are Karmanis and and so are those of Khai but this does not mean that those at Khai came from Sher Garh. There are Karmanis in many other places in different districts, for example, Saidan Shah, Minchinabad (Bahawalpur State), Shah Satar (Multan District) Kotli Piranwali (Jhelum District), Lahore City, etc., To say that all these descended from one Sayad Daud, whose date has not been even fixed, does not establish the proposition contended for. The pedigree table, p. 7 is not proved, nor is it known from where it was taken. The pedigree-table, p. 9, has not been proved nor is it certified that it is a copy of the Shajra-nasab of Sher Garh village. It was prepared by a patwari of that village who has stated at the end of a note on the table that he had gone through the documents held by Rahmat Ali, hence the pedigree table was prepared and supplied to the appellant. This patwari did not appear in the witness-box. In these circumstances this document is not proved, nor does it establish that the Nadir Shah, mentioned in it, was the founder of Khai. Further the document, Ex. D 9, at p. 81 of the paper book gives the 14 villages to which Sayyads of Sher Garh, which is in the Dipalpur tahsil, of Montgomery, went to, and Khai is not one of them. In these circumstances I have no hesitation in holding with the trial Court that it has not been proved that Nadir Shah came from Sher Garh.

Khai itself used to be in the Montgomery Tahsil of Montgomery District, though it is now in the Saundari Tahsil of Lyallpur District. In the Settlement of 1857, when Nadir Shah was the sole proprietor, he stated as regards the custom relating to alienation that he had full powers of alienation (Ex D. 4). In the settlement of 1872 it is recorded in the Riwaj-i-am of Tahsil Dipalpur (D. 9) that daughters do not succeed by inheritance, but that a proprietor could give a share to his daughter's issue equal to that of a son. The Sayyads of Sher Garh alone objected to this assertion of custom. No instances were given but as will appear later, this is not important. It was also stated that, though daughters were not heirs, they could be given the whole estate in the absence of male issue and instances of this were given. It is clear therefore that all the Sayyads of Dipalpur tahsil are governed by custom and that in it there is a very large power of alienation in favour of daughters amongst these Sayyads. Again, in the Riwaj-i-am of 1872 of Montgomery tahsil, in which Khai was then situated (D. 7), the custom amongst the Sayyad tribe is as follows: The father is competent to gift some of his land to his daughters during his lifetime without the consent of his collaterals or sons, while in the absence of sons he can gift the whole. Further, the father can gift his whole estate as his daughter's dower in the absence of sons and in the presence of sons he can grant a portion of his estate as her dower without the consent of anyone The statement of customary law, prepared by the revenue authorities is thus entirely in favour of a gift of a portion of his estate by a father to his daughter in the presence of sons. In the present case, defendant 2 has received 1¼ share out of some 18 or 20 squares and that is not excessive The oral evidence is not convincing and I have no doubt that the Riwaj-i-am, though no instances are given must prevail. The Riwaj-i-am of Montgomery tahsil (D. 7) is signed by three of the sons of Nadir Shah, namely, Fazal Shah, Zaildar, Hassan Bakhsh and Sayyad Muhammad lambardar, who was the father of Haji Shah.

It is now too late in the day to contend that a Riwaj-i-am without instances is of little evidentiary value. In circumstances similar to the present it was held in Ata Mahomed Khan v. Jiwani (1) that a mere entry of the custom in the Wajib-ul-arz without instances would be sufficient to shift the onus to near collaterals. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Beg v. Allah Ditta (2) laid down that in such cases the onus would be on the persons contesting the custom. It was held in Labh Singh v. Mt. Mango (3) that in view of the Judicial Committee's clear exposition of the law recorded in the case last mentioned it could not be said to be an established rule that a statement in a Riwaj-i-am opposed to general custom and unsupported by instances possessed little evidentiary value. An entry therein of a special custom was prima facie proof of that custom and placed the onus of rebuttal on the party disputing the correctness of the entry. I might add that the custom in the present case is not of a very special character as the district is Montgomery where custom is largely influenced by Mahomedan law and daughters are favoured to an extent unknown in the central districts of the Punjab. Lastly, the same principle was followed in Labha Ram v. Raman (4).

For the reasons given it is clear that the parties follow custom and that a gift, such as the present was, could be made under the custom applicable to the parties to a daughter by the father in the presence of male issue. I would dismiss the appeal with costs

Civil Ref No 7 of 1928, Decided on 19th May 1928, made by the Assistant Collector, 1st Grade, Jullundur.

(a) Punjab Tenancy Act (16 of 1887)—S. 77 (3) Cl. (g)—Scope—Suit by occupancy tenant for possession of land encroached upon by cosharer landlord—Suit lies in civil Court, S. 77 (3), Cl. (g) being no bar.

Section 77 (3), Cl. (g) refers to suits brought by a tenant against the landlord and does not refer to suits brought by a tenant against persons other than the landlord.

An occupancy tenant brought a suit against a co-sharer landlcrd for possessicn of land encroached upon by the latter.

Held : that the suit would lie in a civil Court because the defendant could not be said to be landlord of the plaintiff. [P 896 C 1, 2]

(b) Punjab Tenancy Act (16 of 1887), S. 100 —Cases of doubtful jurisdiction may be tried by civil Courts unless parties raise the question and unless the point is absolutely settled by rulings of Punjab High Court—High Court can set the irregularity right.

Under Punjab Tenancy Act the question cf jurisdiction is frequently of a very complicated nature and no possible harm is done by trying a suit of doubtful jurisdiction unless the parties raise the question of jurisdiction and unless the point is absolutely settled by rulings of the Punjab High Court, because under S. 100 the High Court can always order the decree to be recorded as a decree of whatever Court was in its opinion competent to try it.

Order.—This is a reference from the Court of the Assistant Collector, First Grade, Jullundur. The facts are as follows :

The plaintiff, alleging himself to be an occupancy tenant of certain land bearing Khasra No. 1345/248-249, area 4 kanals 11 marlas, sued for possession of 11 marlas out of the said land alleging that the defendant had taken possession of the same on a recent encroachment. It does not appear from the plaint that the defendant is the landlord of the plaintiff qua this land. However, from the written statement it appears that the plaintiff is an occupancy tenant under the defendant and others, and reference is made to para. 1 of the petition of plaint presumably to the fard mentioned in that paragraph. The fard shows that the plaintiff is an occupancy tenant under the defendant and others. The suit is, however, only against the defendant. The suit was filed in a civil Court which returned the plaint to the plaintiff for presentation to a competent Court. It was then presented to the Assistant Collector, who has referred the case on the ground that the present suit is brought under S. 77 (3), Cl. (g) of the Tenancy Act, against the landlord, and having been brought more than one year after the date of the dispossession the suit does not lie in a revenue Court.

It seems to me that S. 77 (3), Cl. (g), Tenancy Act, refers to suits brought by a tenant against the landlord and does not refer to suits brought by a tenant against persons other than the landlord. Now the landlord in this case, so far as I can make out, is not the defendant alone but the defendant and certain other people. If this is so the suit would lie in a civil Court because the defendant by himself cannot be said to be landlord of the plaintiff. If, on the other hand, qua this land the defendant is the sole landlord then the suit would lie in a revenue Court and the fact that it is barred by limitation in that Court has nothing to do with the question of jurisdiction. For the present, however, I hold that the suit lies in a civil Court subject to any findings that the Court may arrive at with reference to the above remarks. I point out to the civil Court that under this Act the question of jurisdiction is frequently of a very complicated nature and no possible harm is done by trying the suit because under S. 100 the High Court can always order the decree to be recorded as a decree of whatever Court was in its opinion competent to try it. Therefore, unless the parties raise the question of jurisdiction in cases under this Act and unless the point is absolutely settled by rulings of this Court, the Court should proceed to try the suit and dispose of it. It is extremely hard on the litigant that for 11 marlas of land he should be sent alternately by the civil Court to the revenue Court and by the revenue Court to this Court to determine which Court has jurisdiction. The case will be returned, therefore, to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Phillour, for disposal on the merits.

Mukand Lal Puri—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff sued for possession of a house and a courtyard, alleging that he had lent the house five years before the suit to defendants 1 to 3 for their temporary use, and that they had recently taken forcible possession of the courtyard as well. The defendants denied these allegations and pleaded that they had been in possession of the property from the times of their ancestors. The trial Court gave the plaintiff a decree, but the lower appellate Court has dismissed the suit, finding that although the plaintiff was the owner of the house he had not proved that the defendants had borrowed it from him for their temporary use, and had also not proved his possession within 12 years before the institution of the suit.

The plaintiff has preferred a second appeal, and it is contended on his behalf that when it has been found that he is the owner of the property, and the case is one governed by Art. 144 and not by Art. 142, Sch. 1, Lim. Act, the onus is on the defendants to prove 12 years adverse possession, notwithstanding the plaintiff's failure to prove that the defendants were holding as licensees.

This contention is supported by Jaichand v. Girwar Singh (1), but a different view has been taken by this Court in Tota v. Sakolia (2), 116 P. R. 1888 and in Duni v. Maleri Ram (3). In Tota v. Sakolia (2), in which the plaintiff alleged that the defendants had been occupying the house in suit with his permission, it was held that the onus lay on the plaintiff to prove, not only his title, but also that the defendant's possession had either not been adverse at all or, if adverse, had not extended beyond the period within which he was entitled to sue for recovery of possession, and that until the plaintiff discharged that onus the defendant was entitled to rely upon his de facto possession as raising a legal presumption in his favour. So also in 116 P. R. 1888 it was held that the defendant could rely on his long possession as conferring on him an indisputable title which could not be displaced unless the plaintiff could prove, not only his original right of ownership, but also that the possession, which was apparently adverse was in reality permissive. Again in Duni v Maleri Ram (3), it was held that when the plaintiff sues for possession on the ground that he is the owner of the property, and the defendant holds under a lease, if the lease is denied and the plaintiff is unable to prove it, it is necessary for him to prove possession within 12 years of the suit, and the onus is not on the defendant to prove adverse possession.

It is contended for the appellant that such rulings have no authority in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Secy. of State v. C. Rama Rao (4), which was followed in Jaichand v. Girwar Singh (1). But that case was entirely different from the present one, as in the first place the persons in possession of the property were the plaintiffs, who were seeking to establish a title by adverse possession, and in the second place there was no allegation, as there is in the present case, that the possession was permissive. Their Lordships held merely that the onus of establishing title to property, by reason of possession for a certain requisite period lay upon the person asserting such possession. The decision in that case is no authority for the proposition that where the plaintiff alleges that the defendants' possession was permissive and fails to prove his allegation he is nevertheless entitled to a decree on the ground of his ownership unless the defendant is able to prove 12 years adverse possession. If the appellant's contention were to be accepted the anomalous result would follow that a person wishing to recover property of which he had been dispossessed could, by suppressing the fact of his dispossession and falsely alleging that the person in possession of the property had been occupying it with his permission, relieve himself of the burden of proving that he had been in possession within 12 years of the suit and throw on to the occupier the burden of proving 12 years adverse possession.

I hold, therefore, that, on the findings of the lower appellate Court, that the plaintiff had not proved either that the defendants had borrowed the house from him for their temporary residence or that he had been in possession within 12 years, the suit for possession of the house was rightly dismissed.

But the claim to the courtyard stands on a different footing, as the possession of the courtyard, which is a vacant piece of land, is presumed to follow title, and as the title is with the plaintiff it is for the defendants to prove that they had been in adverse possession of the courtyard for 12 years.

I remand the case to the trial Court under O. 41, R. 25, Civil P. C., for enquiry and finding on the question whether the defendants have been in adverse possession of the courtyard for 12 years. The Subordinate Judge should submit his finding through the District Judge, who should give his own finding on the issue.

Held: conviction under S. 363 cannot stand. [P 899 C 1]

Judgment.—One Baz lodged a complaint under S. 498, I. P. C., against Fazal Dad petitioner alleging that he had enticed away his married wife Mt. Musahib Bano for the purpose of having illicit intercourse with her. After the evidence for the prosecution had been recorded, the trial Magistrate framed charges under Ss. 498 and 363, I. P. C., against him and ultimately convicted him of both offences, sentencing him to rigorous imprisonment for two years under each count, the sentences to run concurrently. The conviction and sentences were affirmed on appeal by the learned Sessions Judge.

On revision the first point urged is that the marriage of Mt. Musahib Bano with the complainant has not been proved. But there are clear findings of fact on this point by the Courts below which are supported by evidence and I cannot go behind them.

It is contended that the marriage of the girl with Baz, having been performed by her mother at a time when she was a minor, was voidable at her option, and as there is no proof of consummation after she had attained puberty and she had actually left the complainant, she must be considered to have exercised the option and had ceased to be his wife. But in order to sustain this argument there must be repudiation of the marriage, before the abduction. In other words, the option should have been exercised before the enticement. There is, however, no allegation or proof of a prior repudiation, I must, therefore; hold that the marriage, though voidable, was subsisting at the time of the commission of the alleged offence.

The next point taken is that there is no finding of either of the Courts below that the petitioner knew or had reason to believe that Mt. Musahib Bano was the wife of Baz. It is, no doubt, true that neither the Magistrate nor the learned Sessions Judge has recorded any finding on this essential point, but I have examined the evidence and have no reason to doubt that the petitioner, who lives in a neighbouring village and belongs to the same brotherhood, had the necessary knowledge that the girl had been married to Baz. I hold, therefore, that all the necessary ingredients of an offence under S. 498 have been established. I think, however, that a sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment is excessive. In my opinion the ends of justice will be met by reducing the sentence to rigorous imprisonment for one year.

As regards the conviction under S. 363, the first point to be noted is that it was not stated in the complaint that the girl was a minor nor were the other necessary ingredients disclosed in the evidence led by the prosecution. The learned Magistrate appears to have sue motu framed an additional charge under that section and proceeded to convict the petitioner thereon. After hearing Mr. Shambu Lal Puri for the complainant I am of opinion that the conviction of the petitioner under S. 363 cannot stand.

The result is that the petition for revision is accepted to this extent that the conviction and sentence under S. 363, I.P. C., are set aside but the conviction under S. 498, I. P. C., is maintained and the sentence under that section is reduced to rigorous imprisonment for a period of one year.

Bhide, J.—This was a suit for recovery of Rs. 1,757-14-0, as damages on account of loss of a consignment of 1000. gross match boxes consigned to the plaintiff at Batala by a firm named Abdul Ali-Ibrahim from Bombay. The consignment was sent under risk-note G. The trial Court hald that the defendant railway was protected by the risk-note and was not liable for any damages. On appeal, the learned District Judge found that the risk-note was not duly executed and reversing the decision of the trial Court granted the plaintiff the decree prayed for. From this decision a second appeal has been filed on behalf of the defendant railway.

The main contention of the learned Government Advocate on behalf of the appellant was that the risk-note was duly executed. It appears that Ali Bhai Haptullah, who was an agent of the Bombay firm authorized to sign on its behalf and who delivered the goods to the railway at Bombay, instead of signing his own name and adding that he was signing on behalf of the firm wrote the name of the firm i. e. "Abdul Ali-Ibrahim" on the risk-note The learned District Judge has held on the authority of Mahabasha v. Secy. of State (1) that this was a defect which rendered the risk note void. The facts of that case were no doubt somewhat similar; but this case can, I think, be distinguished on the ground, that evidence has been produced in the present case to show that Ali Bhai Haptullah was authorised to sign and did actually sign the risk-note on behalf of the consignor. Ali Bhai Haptullah himself has appeared in the witness-box and made a statement to this effect and his evidence is corroborated by the two attesting witnesses to the risk-note. It does not appear from the record whether any such evidence was produced in Mahabasha v. Secy. of State (1) The learned Judges who decided that case remarked as follows:

> When the law says 'signed' it means the writing of the name of the person who signs it either by his own hand or by the hand of an agent who must be disclosed and have authority.

In the present instance the signature was made by an agent and it appears from the evidence that the fact that Ali Bhai Haptullah was an agent of the consignor and was signing the risk-note on his behalf and was authorized so to do was disclosed at the time the risk-note was executed. S. 72, Railways Act, lays down that the risk-note should be > signed by or on behalf of the person sending or delivering to the Railway administration the animals or goods.

It seems to me that the requirements of the section were sufficiently complied with in the present case inasmuch as it has been proved that Ali Bhai Haptullah did sign the risk-note on behalf of the consignor.

However, there is another point on which I think this appeal must fail. It appears from the judgment of the learned District Judge that the railway receipt provided for conveyance of the consignment via Sabarmati and Kot Kapura, whereas as a matter of fact the goods were sent via Ludhiana and were destroyed by fire at the latter place. There is ample authority for the contention raised on behalf of the respondent that when goods are consigned to be carried by any particular route any deviation therefrom renders the risk-note invalid: see inter alia (1899) 1 Q. B. 309 and (1921) 3 K. B. 213. This contention was not raised in the Court below, but the facts on which it is based are apparent on the face of the record. No explanation has been offered as regards the deviation of the route. The loss admittedly took place at Ludhiana, which was not on the route agreed upon between the parties. In these circumstances it seems to me that the railway cannot be protected by the risk-note.

The learned District Judge has found that the railway did not take as much care of the goods as they ought to have done as bailees. The plaintiff, is, therefore, clearly entitled to the decree passed in his favour. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal, but in view of all the circumstances leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Mahtab Singh—for Appellant.

Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—In this case five men were committed to the Court of Session for trial on charges under Ss. 302 and 326 read with Ss. 149 and 148, I. P. C. The learned Sessions Judge entirely disbelieved the prosecution version and came to the conclusion that the three out of the five men were not even present at the fight, and that it was a fight between two men on the one side, namely, Narain Singh and Surain Singh accused, and two on the other, namely, Gujjar Singh, deceased, and Mela Singh. He further found that Narain Singh and Surain Singh each recieved 15 blows with a blunt weapon, and that they were justified in the exercise of the right of private defence to attack Gujjar Singh and Mela Singh, who were the aggressors. He acquitted Narain Singh, accused, who had inflicted only one injury with a blunt weapon, but he convicted Surain Singh under S. 304-1, I. P. C., holding that he had exceeded his right of private defence inasmuch as he inflicted four incised wounds. On this point the remarks of the learned Sessions Judge may be quoted here. He says:

I have no doubt that the right of private defence in this case was clearly exceeded by Surain Singh. He had no business to give as many as four cuts including one in the abdomen to Gujjar Singh thereby killing him. After all he was being beaten with sticks. Perhaps he was justified in giving two cuts to Mela Singh in the back as he did. That would have been quite sufficient to disarm both Gujjar Singh and Mela Singh. Even if he would have caused grievous hurts to both of them with the spear that he happened to have at that time, I would have thought he was acting within his right of self defence. But surely to cause as many as six cuts with a spear each deep enough, clearly shows that he was exceeding his proper limit and was striking revengefully.

The Public Prosecutor who appears for the Crown is unable to support this argument of the learned Sessions Judge and he frankly concedes that the man upon whom according to the finding of the learned Sessions Judge lathi blows were being showered was justified in striking with a spear and that he did not exceed his right of private defence. In the words of the learned Sessions Judge:

Narain Singh and Surain Singh had been well beaten by Gujjar Singh and Mela Singh, before the more dangerous weapon was brought into use.

We accept the Public Prosecutor's view of the matter and accepting the appeal we acquit Surain Singh and direct that he be released forthwith.

When a debt is due, which carries interest and moneys are received without definite appropriation on the one side or the other, the ordinary rule is that the money is first applied in payment of interest and then, when that is satisfied, in payment of capital. Judgment*—By virtue of a decree passed in a mortgage-suit a sum of Rs. 1,18,443-14-0 was payable to the plaintiff with interest at six per cent. per annum till realization. The defendant made repayments on various dates, which were appropriated by the plaintiff, first, towards the payment of costs and interest and the balance was deducted from the principal on each occasion. The defendant's contention was that the calculations should have been made as follows : principal and interest due up to date to be added up and then all repayments with rebate thereon from the date of payment at the same rate to be added up and the total of the latter to be deducted from the former. The difference between the two calculations admittedly comes to about Rs. 8,000. The lower Court held that the method of accounting followed by the plaintiff was a proper one and in conformity with the usual practice, and directed that that system should be adopted in enforcing the execution. From this decision the present appeal has been filed.

It is contended for the appellant that the plaintiff was not entitled to adopt the method of calculation referred to above. No argument, however, has been advanced as to why this method should be considered to be opposed to law or equity. On the other hand, Nemichand v. Radha Kishen (1) has been cited on behalf of the respondent which laid down that when a debt is due which carries interest and moneys are received without definite appropriation on the one side or the other, the rule which is well established in ordinary cases is that the money is first applied in payment of interest and then, when that is satisfied in payment of capital. Judgment.—This was a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. The trial Court decreed the suit but on appeal the learned District Judge dismissed it. The plaintiff has come up in second appeal. It is conceded by Mr. Shamair Chand on behalf of the appellant that Courts have a discretion in the matter of granting restitution, but it was contended that the discretion in this case has not been exercised properly. The material findings on which the decision of the learned District Judge was based were that the defendant Mt. Harbans Kaur was married to the plaintiff during her minority when she was about seven ; that the plaintiff being at least about 54 the marriage was an ill-assorted one, that the defendant had never lived with the plaintiff and that the marriage had not been consummated. Following the rule laid down in Kalawanti v. Bukhan (1), he held that the defendant should be allowed freedom of choice in such circumstances and not compelled by a decree of Court to live with the plaintiff.

The learned counsel for the appellant was not able to distinguish the above ruling from the present case, but he relied on Niaz Ali v. Said Jan (2), and urged that Courts are not justified in refusing restitution except on grounds such as cruelty, etc., which would entitle a wife to refuse to live with her husband. The question of the effect of the minority of a girl in a case like the present one when she has been married to a man over 50 years of age, did not, however, arise in that case. In fact, it was found in that case that the defendant had married the plaintiff voluntarily. The ruling relied on by the learned District Judge gives a wider scope to judicial discretion in such matters. The ruling, so far as I am aware, has not been overruled or dissented from as yet and coming from an eminent Judge of the Punjab Chief Court like Sir Donald Johnstone is entitled to weight. The learned Judge not only refused restitution in the particular case but remarked that it was the practice of the Chief Court to refuse restitution in case where a girl is married during minority and refuses to live with her husband before consummation had taken place. His remarks were as follows :

> It seems to me also that the girl must have been under the age of puberty at the time of marriage and this in itself was the main reason why the girl did not accompany her husband to his house. Now the girl having arrived at puberty refuses to consummate the marriage. In these circumstances this Court ordinarily allows the girl freedom of choice. It seems to me, therefore, that in the peculiar circumstances of the case the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree at all.

The present case is, if anything, stronger, because, here there is the additional consideration that the girl was married to a man aged about 50 when she was aged about seven. It is admitted that the marriage was by way of "exchange." Evidently the interests of the girl were ignored.

The learned counsel next contended that the decision of the learned District Judge was opposed to the principles of Hindu law. But it has been pointed out in Bai Jivi v. Narasingh Lal Bhai (3) that while Hindu law lays down the duty of the wife of implicit obedience to her husband, it does not provide any procedure such as compulsion by Courts to force her to return to him against her will. The remedy by way of restitution of conjugal rights has, as a matter of fact, been borrowed from English law.

In view of all the facts of the present case I do not see sufficient justification for my interference in second appeal with the discretion exercised by the lower appellate Court. I accordingly dismiss the appeal but leave the parties to bear their own costs in the circumstances of the case.

Criminal Appeal No. 305 of 1928, Decided on 20th April 1928, from an order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Delhi, D/- 19th January 1928.

Evidence Act, S. 118—Child as a witness—Court should first test his intellectual capacity by putting some simple questions—Brief proceeding should be recorded to that effect—Child if found unable to perceive a particular incident for proof of which he is summoned should not be examined as a witness.

Before examining a child of tender years as a witness, a Court should satisfy itself that the child is sufficiently intellectually developed to comprehend what he has seen and to give an intelligent account of it to the Court, by testing his intellectual capacity, by putting a few and simple and ordinary questions to him and the Court should record a brief proceeding so that the appellate Court may feel satisfied as to the capacity of the child to give evidence. If the Court is of opinion that by reason of tender years and defective or immature understanding the child could not have perceived the particular incident to prove which he is produced as a witness, the Court should not only refrain from administering the oath to him but should also decline to examine him as a witness: 38 All. 49 and 11 C. W. N. 51, Ref. [P 903 C 1, P 904 C 1]

Judgment.—Tulsi alias Abdul Karim has been convicted under S. 380 read with S. 75, I. P. C, and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment, including three months' solitary confinement. Action under S. 565, Criminal P. C., has also been ordered to be taken for a period of three years. He has appealed from the jail in which he is confined.

The facts are very clear and need not be stated in detail as the judgment of the Magistrate is fairly full. Mt. Nani is a sweeper woman. On 2nd January 1928, she had left her house in the afternoon at about 3, leaving behind her niece Mt. Taro (P. W. 2), a girl aged about five years old. As Mt. Nani returned about 5 o'clock she found the accused in her house with a bundle of clothes and two copper vessels in his hands. She raised an alarm and caught hold of the accused. The accused tried to run away but the woman did not let him go. One Shafiq-ud-Din (P. W. 3) happened to be passing by the house of Mt. Nani and had noticed that the accused was in the house carrying a bundle of clothes and two copper vessels. As soon as he heard the alarm he went inside the house and found that the accused had been caught by Mt. Nani. A boy named Muhammad Ahmad (P. W. 5) also happened to be passing by when this incident took place. When he heard this noise he too went inside the house of Mt. Nani and found the accused with the articles of clothing and the copper vessels in his hands. There cannot be any manner of doubt that the evidence given by these witnesses is true and proves the guilt of the accused beyond doubt.

There is one matter to which I wish to invite the attention of the learned Magistrate. He has recorded the statement of Mt. Taro, aged 5, on solemn affirmation. The provisions of S. 118, Evidence Act, are important in this connexion. Before examining a child of tender years as a witness a Court should satisfy itself that the child is sufficiently intellectually developed to comprehend what he has seen and to give an intelligent account of it to the Court. If the Court is of opinion that by reason of tender years and defective or immature understanding the child could not have perceived the particular incident to prove which he is produced as a witnesa, the Court should not only refrain from administering the oath to him but should, also decline to examine him as a witness: [vide Dhani Ram v. Emperor (1) also Sheik Fakir v. Emperor (2)]. On the other hand if the child, though of tender years, is sufficiently intelligent to understand the questions put to him and to give rational answers to those questions then his capacity to give evidence is on the same footing as that of any other adult. But in such cases it would be desirable if the Court, before examining the child as a witness, test his intellectual capacity by putting a few simple and ordinary questions to him and to record a brief proceeding so that the appellate Court may feel satisfied as to the capacity of the child to give evidence.

However, in examining the evidence in the present case, I have not attached any importance to the evidence of Mt. Taro, as I find that the evidence of the remaining witnesses is sufficiently strong and cogent to bring the charge home to the accused.

As to the question of sentence the accused has got four convictions against him and his last conviction was under S. 380 when he was sentenced to 2½ years rigorous imprisonment. I think that the sentence of seven years rigorous imprisonment with three months solitary confinement is too severe. I reduce the sentence to one of four years' rigorous imprisonment. The order under S. 565, Criminal P. C. would stand.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 196 of 1927, Decided on 13th April 1928, from order of Dalip Singh, Judge, D/- 14th November 1927, in Civil Misc. Appeal No. 2763 of 1927.

(a) Letters Patent (Lahore), Cl. 10—Order restricting the passing of a final decree is a judgment.

An order passed in an appeal from preliminary decree restraining the trial Court from passing a final decree during the pendency of the appeal amounts to a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 10 : A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 185, Foll. ; A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 155, Ref. [P 905 C 2]

Moti Sagar and Bishan Narain — for Appellants.

Kishan Dayal and Bhawani Singh Puri—for Respondent.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On the 2nd August 1927, the Subordinate Judge of Delhi granted a preliminary decree for sale on a mortgage effected by the defendant in favour of the plaintiffs. From that decree the defendant preferred an appeal to the High Court, which has not yet been decided. He also made an application that further proceedings in pursuance of the decree be stayed pending the decision of the appeal. This application was granted by Dalip Singh J., and against the order passed by him the plaintiffs have preferred the present appeal under Cl. 10, Letters Patent.

Mr. Kishan Dayal for the defendant-respondent raises the preliminary objection that the order of the learned Judge restraining the trial Court from passing a final decree during the pendency of the appeal does not amount to a "judgment" within the meaning of the aforesaid clause. In support of his contention the learned counsel cites a judgment of the Privy Council in Sevak Jeranchod Bhogilal v. Dakore Temple Committee (1). We are told that that judgment, though delivered in March 1925, has not been reported in any authorized report, and that it is printed in the 49th volume of the Madras Law Journal at p. 25 et seq. The report of the case shows that a scheme for the management of a temple in the district of Ahmedabad was confirmed by the Privy Council, and that the managing committee constituted in pursuance of that scheme was empowered to frame certain rules, which with some modifications were sanctioned by the District Judge. Certain persons appealed from the order of sanction to the High Court, and the High Court treating the order as one passed under S. 47, Civil P. C., heard and determined the appeal. It also granted a certificate to the appellants under S. 110, Civil P. C., that the case was a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council held that the sanction given by the District Judge to the rules did not amount to an order under S. 47, Civil P. C., and that no appeal lay to the High Court from the order granting sanction. Their Lordships, after stating that there was no right of appeal to His Majesty in Council from the judgment of the High Court or from the decree which was drawn up, except on the sole ground that the judgment or the decree was incompetent, observed that the term "judgment" in the Letters Patent of the High Court means in civil cases "a decree and not a judgment in the ordinary sense." They then pointed out that the appeal to His Majesty in Council should not have been admitted, but nevertheless accepted the appeal and set aside the order of the High Court.

Now, the learned counsel on both sides are unable to explain why their Lordships of the Privy Council, after holding that no appeal was competent, not only heard the appeal but accepted it. Mr. Kishan Dayal placed his reliance upon the solitary sentence in the judgment of the Privy Council, which says that the term "judgment" in the Letters Patent of the High Court means in civil cases "a decree and not a judgment in the ordinary sense," and urges that no appeal lies under Cl. 10 from an adjudication unless it amounts to a "decree" as defined by S. 2, Civil P. C. This contention runs counter to the view of all the High Courts in India, which have never placed such a narrow construction upon the term "judgment." It must be remembered that their Lordships of the Privy Council were dealing with Cl. 39, Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court, which provides for an appeal to the Privy Council from a "final judgment, decree or order," and that the clause which gives the right of appeal from a single Judge to a Division Bench makes no mention of the word "final." The Privy Council apparently intended to point out that the word "judgment" as used in Cl. 39 is not to be taken in the sense in which that expression is used in the Civil Procedure Code; where a distinction is drawn between a judgment and a decree. The observations relied upon by Mr. Kishen Dayal may not be free from ambiguity; but there can be no doubt that the expression "judgment" as used in Cl. 10, Letters Patent cannot be held to be synonymous with the word "decree" and that there is no warrant for curtailing the scope of that clause in the manner suggested by him. Indeed, it has been expressly decided by a Division Bench of this Court in The Firm-Badri Das Janki Das v. Mathanmal (2), that an order rejecting an application for staying further proceedings in pursuance of a preliminary decree amounts to a "judgment." In view of this authority, which is admitted to be on all fours with the present case, the preliminary objection must be overruled.

Coming now to the merits, I am not prepared to endorse the proposition that as soon as an appeal from a preliminary decree has been preferred, the trial Court becomes functus officio and has no authority to pass a final decree. It is true that the terminus a quo for the period of limitation prescribed for an application to make a final decree is the date of the preliminary decree made by the appellate Court and not the date of the dsoree of the original Court, which has merged in that of the appellate Court. There is, however, no authority beyond an unreported judgment of the Allahabad High Court in Lalman v. Shiam Singh (3) for the contention that when an appeal has been preferred from a preliminary decree, a final decree can be passed only after the preliminary decree has been confirmed or affirmed by the appellate Court.

It is to be observed that there is a divergence of opinion among the High Courts on the question of whether an appeal against the preliminary decree can be heard when a final decree has in the meanwhile been passed but no appeal has been brought against it. Now, if the final decree passed during the pendency of an appeal from the preliminary decree is altogether ultra vires, then such an invalid document should be altogether ignored and it could not constitute a bar to the hearing of the appeal against the preliminary decree. In that case there should be no difference of opinion on the question stated above.

(2) A.I.R. 1922 Lah. 185.
(3) A.I.R. 1926 All. 291.

While I hold that the mere fact that an appeal from a preliminary decree is pending in this Court does not preclude the trial Court from passing a final decree, I consider that there is no adequate ground for interfering with the discretion of the single Judge who has stayed further proceedings to be taken in pursuance of the preliminary decree.

The affidavit made by the appellants, however, shows that the immovable property in the town of Delhi is depreciating in value, and that if the interest on the amount decreed by the trial Judge accumulates during the period of the pendency of the appeal in this Court, the claim of the mortgagees may not be fully satisfied by the sale of the mortgaged property. The mortgagor should, therefore, be put on terms, and I accordingly allow the appeal so far as to make the order of the single Judge conditional upon the judgment-debtor furnishing satisfactory security for the payment of the amount by which the price realized by the sale of the property may fall short of the sum found to be due to the decree-holders.

I leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Judgment—Ditta has been convicted under S. 201, I.P.C and sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. He has filed an appeal to this Court. Ditta was originally charged under S. 302, I. P. C., but the Sessions Judge has held that the offence under S. 302, I. P. C. has not been proved, and, therefore, he acquitted the appellant of the charge of murder. He has, however, convicted him under S. 201 I. P. C., on the ground that at his instance certain discoveries had been made and that the appellant is, therefore, guilty of having caused the evidence of the commission of the offence of murder to disappear, with the intention of screening the offender.

The learned counsel did not seriously contest the findings arrived at by the learned Judge on the evidence in this case. He made some feeble attempts to throw doubt upon the evidence of the discovery of the articles, namely, the kuppis and the knife, but he realized his difficulty and very properly gave up this line of argument. It may, therefore, be taken that so far as the findings of the learned Sessions Judge in regard to the evidence for the prosecution are concerned they have not been challenged. The judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is very full and, therefore, the facts of the case need not be recapitulated at any great length. For purposes of the present appeal it is only necessary to say that one Khillu Ram left his native village in the morning for the purchase of ghee. He did not return in the evening. The accused Ditta, who had also gone on a similar errand, however, along with another person, returned to the village. Khillu Ram had carried two kuppis with him which were loaded on a donkey. A search was made for Khillu Ram but no trace of him could be found. On the following day the body of Khillu Ram, was discovered at some distance from the ravine which he and the accused had crossed the day before. The kuppis were discovered in a pond at some distance from its bank at the instance of the appellant. In the same manner a knife with which the murder is alleged to have been committed was also found buried in the house of the accused. The Sessions Judge held that it was quite possible on the evidence produced by the prosecution that the murder was committed either by the accused himself or by the accused and his companion who returned with him on the day in question, or it was committed by the accused's companion alone. He, therefore, held that the accused cannot be held guilty of the murder. On the evidence he was, however, satisfied that it was established that the accused produced the kuppis belonging to the deceased and the knife with which the murder was committed. He also believed the evidence, and I think rightly, that the accused stated at the time when he produced these articles that it was he who had hidden them in various places from which they were discovered. They were undoubtedly evidence connected with the murder. On these findings the Sessions Judge convicted the accused under S. 201, I. P. C.

Dr. Muhammad Alam argued that as the accused person was the murderer himself, therefore, he could not be charged under S. 201, I. P. C., and convicted of an offence under it. The fallacy in his argument is that he takes it for granted that the appellant was the murderer of Khillu Ram. As a matter of fact, the Sessions Judge has acquitted the appellant of the charge of murder. The learned counsel relied upon the case of Torap Ali v. Queen-Empress (1) in support of his arguments. That case undoubtedly lays down that when certain accused persons are charged with murder, and also with the offence of causing the disappearance of the corpse of the deceased with the intention of screening the murderer from punishment, and they are ultimately acquitted of the charge of murder on the ground that it was impossible upon the evidence to say which of them caused the death of the deceased their conviction under S. 201 was illegal. This case seems to have been followed in Sumanta Dhupi v. Emperor (2). A similar view was taken by the learned Single Judge in a Nagpur case, Kudaon v. Emperor (3). But the current of decisions so far the Punjab Chief Court is concerned is uniform and is decidedly against the contention put forward by the appellant. In Nasru v. Emperor (4) it was held by a Bench of two learned Judges that where there is clear and independent proof that any person has caused evidence to disappear in order to screen some person or persons unknown, the mere fact that he had been suspected or even tried and acquitted of the principal crime, would not in itself prevent his conviction under S. 201, I. P. C. In another case, Bucha v. Emperor (5), another Bench of the learned Judges held, after discussing a number of cases on the subject, including the case of Torap Ali v Queen-Empress (1) that when an accused person has been acquitted of a charge of committing a crime the fact that he had been suspected and tried of the principal offence would not prevent his conviction under S. 201, if there is clear proof that he has caused the evidence to disappear in order to screen some unknown offender from legal punishment. With this statement of law I entirely agree.

I may further point out that in case of Teprenissa v. Emperor (6) a Bench of two learned Judges held that where, notwithstanding circumstances of grave suspicion, it is impossible on the record, as it stands, to hold that a person is the murderer, or one of the murderers, his conviction under S. 201 is not vitiated by the existence of such circumstances. The learned Judges have tried to distinguish the case of Toray Ali v. Queen-Empress (1). The case of Emperor v. Har Piari (7) is also against the contention put forward on behalf of the appellant. Bucha v. Emperor (5) was cited with approval by a Bench of two learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in Hanmappa Rudrappa v. Emperor (8). To the same effect is a decision Aung Kyaw Zan v. Crown (9) where three learned Judges held that though S. 201, I. P. C.. does not apply to a person who is proved or admitted to be the principal offender, the mere fact that the accused is probably or possibly the principle offender does not prevent his conviction under S. 201, I. P. C, for causing disappearance of evidence of the offence. The learned counsel relied upon a case of the Lahore High Court, Ahmad v. Emperor (10). This case, however, has nothing whatever to do with the contention urged by the learned counsel. There it was held that a person who has been found guilty and convicted of an offence under S. 302 could not at the same time be charged with and convicted of an offence under S. 201. This case, therefore, has no bearing whatsoever upon the point raised by the appellant's counsel.

Lastly, the learned counsel says that the original charge was one under S. 302, I. P. C., and that the trial and conviction of the appellant by the Sessions Judge was illegal as no formal charge had been framed in respect of an offence under S. 201, I. P. C. Having regard to the Privy Council ruling in Begu v. Emperor (11) it is too late in the day to raise this contention seriously. I overrule it.

In my opinion the conviction of the appellant under S. 201 was appropriate and the sentence of seven years imprisonment, which the learned Sessions Judge has passed upon him is by no means excessive and cannot be disturbed.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

Civil Reference No. 9 of 1928, Decided on 18th May 1928, made by Dist. Judge, Jullundur, D/- 8th February 1928.

(a) Punjab Tenancy Act (16 of 1887), S. 77 (3) (n)—A suit envolving the question whether a sale of a right to realize rent by one person to another is valid is triable by a civil Court.

A suit involving the question whether the sale of a right to realize rent by one person to another is valid or not is triable by a civil Court and S. 77 (3) (n) does not bar such a suit because the question whether the relationship of landlord and tenant subsists between the parties or not, does not arise. [P 909 C 1]

(b) Punjab Tenancy Act (16 of 1887), S. 100 —Case of doubtful jurisdiction may be tried by civil Courts unless parties raise the question—High Court can register the decree if necessary as of the right Court.

In cases under the Punjab Tenancy Act the question of jurisdiction is often an extremely complicated one. It is better for the Court in matters of doubt, unless the parties insist, to proceed with the case to give a decree. A decree so given, if subsequently held by High Court to have been given by a Court without jurisdiction, can be registered as a decree of the corresponding Court on the revenue side. [P 909 C 1]

Order.—These two connected suits, Nos. 883 and 888 of 1927 (Civil References Nos. 9 and 11 of 1928) have been referred by the learned Subordinate Judge, through the learned District Judge, Jullundur, to this Court for decision whether the civil or the revenue Courts should take cognizance of them.

The facts are that Mt. Chinti brought a suit for recovery of Rs. 146-2-0 on account of rent of 1/3rd share of land measuring 29 kanals 17 marlas as well as three other cases of a similar nature. She claims to have got a sale-deed from Dwarka Das on 22nd December 1926, of his 1/3rd share in this land together with his right to recover the rent of his share due by the various defendants. One defendant Atra pleaded that the land in respect of the rent whereof the suit had been brought had been sold to him and his brothers thirteen years ago, that Dwarka Das obtained an ex-parte decree in respect of 1/3rd share of the land (it is not stated against whom) but that he did not obtain formal possession thereof and that the said Dwarka Das had no right to realize rent from the defendants because the relationship of landlord and tenant did not subsist. Upon this the Assistant Collector, First Grade, held that the question in the case was whether the sale-deed in respect of the realization of rent was valid and that the evidence, oral and documentary, produced by the plaintiff did not show that Dwarka Das, vendor, had a right to realize rent for the harvest in question from the defendants or that the said sale-deed was valid. He, therefore, thought that the plaintiff, in the first place, should bring a civil suit and prove the sale-deed relating to the realization of the rent to be valid and thereafter she could bring cases in the revenue Courts. All the four suits were consequently stayed and consigned to the record room until the above point was disposed of as the causes of action and the facts of all the four cases were held to be the same. The plaintiff was granted one month's time for filing a civil suit. The plaintiff, accordingly, brought two civil suits for a declaration to the effect that the sale-deed about the realization of rent executed by Dwarka Das in favour of the plaintiff is valid and that the plaintiff can realize the rent.

The learned Subordinate Judge has referred the case on the ground that the question involved is whether the relationship of landlord and tenant subsists between the parties or not and, therefore he was doubtful whether the question set forth above was triable by the civil Court. He does not state what sections of the Punjab Tenancy Act have caused any doubt in his mind and I would point out that in cases under the Punjab Tenancy Act the question of jurisdiction is often an extremely complicated and difficult one. It is better for the Court in matters of doubt, unless the parties insist to proceed with the case, to give a decree, as a decree so given, if subsequently held by this Court to have been given by a Court without jurisdiction, can be registered as a decree of the corresponding Court on the revenue side. However, in the present case I fail to see that any particular section of the Punjab Tenancy Act bars this suit because the question is whether the sale of a right to realize rent by one person to another is valid or not. This has nothing to do with S. 77, Tenancy Act. Once it is found by the Court or not found, as the case may be, that the relationship of landlord and tenant subsists between the parties, a suit for rent would, no doubt, fall under S. 77 (3) (n), but that is a matter which will not arise in the present case. I, therefore, hold that the present suit is triable by the civil Court which wil proceed to try it accordingly.

Order.—Mt. Jannat, the five years old daughter of Jumma, sweeper, employed at Shah Alam railway station, was challaned under S. 130, Railways Act. She was acquitted by the Magistrate, First Class, at Bhakkar, who held that there was no proof against the accused. The proceedings have been forwarded for revision by the learned District Magistrate on the ground that S. 130, Railways Act, is triable by a S. 30 Magistrate because the offence really falls under S. 126.

Against this Emperor v. Dhondya Dudya (1) is clear authority. That ruling goes on to hold that the offence is triable by any Magistrate because of Sch. 2, Criminal P. C. I am unable, however, to follow the reasoning of their Lordships on this point because the offence under S. 130 is punishable neither with imprisonment for less than one year nor with fine. The proceedings, however, would be void under S. 29-B of the new Criminal P. C., to which counsel for the Crown has called my attention. Under this section as far as I can see at present only the District Magistrate would have been empowered to try this offence. However, I have been through the evidence and there is certainly nothing to connect the accused with the offence charged. I, therefore, refuse to order a re-trial. I accept the reference so far as to quash all the proceedings as being without jurisdiction.

Judgment.*—This is a second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Mianwali, whereby he dismissed the plaintiff's suit, The plaintiff and the defendants are joint owners of certain lands. It appears that in the revenue records, the holding of the plaintiff was recorded to be 34 kanals and 7 marlas less than what according to him it should have been. Consequently, the plaintiff instituted a suit, for joint possession of 34 kanals 7 marlas of land and obtained a decree on 16th October 1927. This decree was executed by him and symbolical possession of 34 kanals and 7 marlas of land was given to him by the Court as a result of the execution proceedings and such proceedings were duly consigned to the record room with a note that the decree had been satisfied.

It appears that when the plaintiff attempted to have a mutation of the land effected in his favour in the revenue records an objection was raised by the defendants, judgment-debtors, in the suit already referred to that the plaintiff was not entitled to the land decreed in his favour, and the revenue authorities declined to effect a mutation of names in favour of the plaintiff. The plaintiff thereupon instituted a fresh suit for joint possession of the same land and this suit has been dismissed by the trial Court and on appeal by the District Judge, namely on the ground that the execution proceedings in the previous suit were defective inasmuch as the provisions of law as to the delivery of possession were not complied with by the executing Court because a copy of the warrant of possession was not affixed in some conspicuous place on the property and there was no proclamation by beat of drum.

The judgment of the District Judge shows that there was an order by the executing Court that these formalities should be complied with but the learned Judge holds that there is no evidence that this order was complied with. It has also been held that the judgment-debtor was not actually present when the possession of the joint khata is alleged to have been given to the plaintiff in the execution proceedings.

Now it seems to me that the burden of proving that the formalities required by law were not complied with at the time when formal possession was given to the plaintiff was on the defendant and not on the plaintiff. It must be assumed that a process issued by the Court, which has been accepted by the Court, as having been duly served, was served in the manner provided by law and with all the formalities laid down for the service thereof. The judgment of the District Judge, therefore, cannot be maintained on that ground alone because it proceeds on the assumption that the burden was on the plaintiff to prove that all the requirements of law had been complied with.

I am further of opinion that the order of the executing Court holding that possession of the property in suit had been given to the decree-holder is binding on the parties to the execution proceedings, that is to say, the decree-holder and the judgment-debtors, and it is not open to either of them to question the correctness of that order on the ground of any irregularity in procedure except by way of appeal to the Court competent to hear appeals from the orders of the executing Court. All orders passed in such proceedings are deemed to have been passed in the presence of the parties to the proceedings whether they are actually present before the Court or not and it must be assumed that they had notice of such proceedings. Therefore any objection to the irregularity of such proceedings could be taken in the manner provided by law either before the executing Court itself or by way of appeal from the order of that Court. This view receives support from the observations made by the learned Chief Justice in Juggobandhu Mukerjee v. Ram Chunder Bysack (1) who on p. 588, made the following remark:

> As, in contemplation of law, both parties must be considered as being present at the time when the delivery is made, we consider that as against the defendant, the delivery thus given must be deemed equivalent to actual possession. As against third parties, of course, this symbolical possession (as it is called) would be of no avail; because they are no parties to the proceeding. But if the defendant should after this again dispossess the plaintiff by receiving the rents and profits, we think that the plaintiff would have 12 years for such dispossession to bring another suit: see also a judgment of this Court reported as Jahuri Lal v. Peman (2).

In my view, therefore, as between the parties, it must be held that the decree in the former suit had been duly executed and the plaintiff put in symbolical possession of the property in suit and consequently any fresh invasion or denial of his title to the property gave him a fresh cause of action to establish such right.

(1) [1880] 5 Cal. 584=5 C. L. R. 548 (F.B.).
(2) [1920] 2 L. L. J. 568.

The view of the learned District Judge, therefore, that as the decree was not duly executed it had become incapable of execution by lapse of time and consequently no fresh suit lay is not correct. I accept this appeal and decree the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Son in Punjab is entitled to claim joint possession with father —Custom (Panjab).

[P 912 C 1]

J. N. Bhandari—for Appellant.
Brij Lal—for Respondent.

Judgment—The parties to this case are high caste Hindus and are admittedly governed by Hindu law. The suit was by a son to contest an alienation of ancestral property by father. Originally the plaintiff asked for a declaration that the alienation was null and void and should not affect his rights. Later on, an application was made for permission to add a prayer for possession. Time was given for the purpose, but the amendment was not carried out. The trial Court then came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was bound to sue for consequential relief in the shape of possession and as this was not done the declaratory suit was not maintainable. The suit was accordingly dismissed. From this decision the plaintiff appealed to the District Judge and the Judge has held that in the Punjab a son is not entitled to sue for possession of the family property during the lifetime of the father. The appeal was accordingly accepted and the the suit remanded for disposal on merits. The defendant-vendee has now come up in second appeal and the contention of the learned counsel for him is that the decision of the learned District Judge is not correct and that even in the Punjab a son is entitled to sue at any rate for "joint possession" of the family property although he is not entitled to claim partition of such property during the lifetime of his father. He has cited in support of this argument Amir v. Malik Khan Chand (1) which appears to be clearly in his favour.

The learned District Judge has held that the theory of a son being born with a share in the joint family property does not apply in the Punjab and hence he cannot sue for possession of the joint property during the lifetime of his father. It was, however, pointed out by a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court in Narpat Rai v. Devi Das (2) that the dictum that the theory of a son being born with share in the joint property did not hold good in the Punjab was much too wide and although it appeared in some early rulings of the Chief Court, it could not be held to be authoritative. It is true that in the Punjab a son cannot enforce partition of his share during the lifetime of his father, but it would appear from the Full Bench ruling Hari Kishan v. Chandu Lal. (3) that this is only due to this particular rule of Hindu law being modified by custom. The mere fact that a son cannot enforce partition of his share does not, therefore, justify the conclusion that he has no share in the family property during the lifetime of his father or that he is not even entitled to claim joint possession of the family property along with the other cosharers.

Following the view taken by a Division Bench of this Court in Amar v. Malik Kahan Chand (1) I accept the appeal and restore the order of the trial Court. In view of the conflict of authority on the law point involved I leave the parties to bear their costs thoughout.

Civil P. C., S. 151—High Court can order stay of proceedings under Guardians and Wards Act.

High Court has inherent power to pass an order, to stay proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act, and can disallow the transfer of the custody of the minor to the guardian appointed by the lower Court pending the decision of the appeal to the High Court: 3 *C. Ram Chand Manchanda—for Petitioner.

Order.—A preliminary objection is raised on behalf of the respondent that this Court has no power to stay proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act. But as held in Panchanan Singha Roy v. Dwarka Nath Roy (1) this appellate Court has inherent power to pass such an order which is merely ancillary to the power of hearing the appeal.

In view of the facts of the case, it seems to me desirable that the custody of the minor should not be allowed to be transferred pending decision of the Court. I understand the case is already fixed for the 14th of this month and shall, in the ordinary course, be decided soon.

The order as to stay of proceedings pending decision of the appeal is made absolute, subject to the appellant filing security of Rs. 1,000, with one surety for production of the minor before this or the lower Court when required. The security should be filed within one week (i. e., on or before the 11th instant.)

[P 914 C 2]

F. K. Byrne—for Appellant.

C. H. Carden Noad—for the Crown.

Addison, J.—Gaman, a Kumhar, has been sentenced to death under S. 302, I. P. C., for the murder of Salihon, another Kumhar of the same village, on 9th September 1927. He has appealed and the reference by the Sessions Judge regarding confirmation of the death sentence is also before us.

Three other persons were committed to the Sessions Court along with the appellant, but were acquitted principally on the ground that the medical evidence did not bear out what the witnesses alleged regarding the part played by these three men. These three persons were Bahabal and his two sons Jallu and Maulu. The appellant Gaman is the nephew of Bahabal.

According to the medical evidence there were two severe incised wounds on the head which caused Salihon's death. There was also a contused mark on the upper third of the right arm which could have been caused by a blunt weapon or by a fall. The first information report was made at the police station at 4 p. m. on the same day on which the attack upon the deceased took place. The time of this attack was noon. Rahman is the paternal uncle of the wife of the deceased. He went to the police station to report. What he told the police is in agreement with his evidence in Court. He added that Fazla Chowkidar, Mirza Jat and many others witnessed the occurrence.

There is good evidence to show that Maulu who has been acquitted was employed as a sepi by Mirza, witness, but was dismissed by him some two or three months before the attack. Instead of Maulu, Mirza then employed Salihon, and this fact appears to have been resented by Maulu's family. The Sessions Judge was, however, unable to believe that this motive could have been the root cause of the trouble. In the Punjab I have frequently noticed that much slighter motives than this have led to many a murder.

The immediate cause for the attack is given by Mt. Fatima, the wife of the deceased. She has deposed that she and her husband were going about collecting earthen vessels for the marriage of a Kashmiri in the village. When they passed the house of Jallu they saw the four persons who were tried sitting there. Gaman, appellant, asked her husband what business he had to go past their house. This led to abuse. Gaman got up, chased her husband and struck him with an axe. The other three persons struck him with dangs on the head. When this was going on she was standing in a doorway. This explanation is supported to some extent by Fazla who is the chowkidar of the village. He heard the deceased being abused by Gaman and the abuse being returned He saw the pursuit of the deceased by the four persons and he saw Gaman strike the deceased upon the head with an axe while the others struck him with dangs. Sharfa, dhobi, Muradi, weaver, Mirza Jat, Fazla Masalli, chowkidar, and Rahman, who made the first information report, have all given more or less the same story. The witnesses, except Rahman and Mt. Fatima, are of different castes from the deceased and the appellant, and there is no reason of any kind why they should give false evidence. No enmity or grudge is alleged.

The Sessions Judge, however, has held that Mt. Fatima could not have been there and he has, therefore, found that the immediate cause of the attack cannot be ascertained as she alone says what exactly it was. The Sessions Judge has admitted that the first information report is not substantive evidence. He has however, rejected the statement of Mt. Fatima, though she herself and all the eyewitnesses have stated that she was present at the scene of the occurrence on the ground that her name is not given by Rahman in the first information report in spite of the fact that he has said that the first information report is not substantive evidence. This means that he has used it as substantive evidence. As laid down in Emperor v. Ibrahim (1) which was brought to his notice at the trial and which he was bound to follow, a first information report can only be used to corroborate or contradict, under the provisions of Ss. 157 and 145, Evidence Act, the person who made it. It cannot be used as substantive evidence to contradict other persons. It is difficult to understand how the omission or act of one person can be held to discredit other witnesses. In any case Rahman stated that Fazla, Mirza and others were present. Further, Rahman has explained why he did not specially name Mt. Fatima and his explanation is reasonable. Lastly, it is not necessary that every detail should be given in the first information report. The first information report is merely a statement made to the police, which is not substantive evidence but which can be used to corroborate or contradict the maker of it at the trial. There is nothing in law to the effect that it must give every detail or any detail. It should merely be a statement sufficient to induce the police to leave the police station and investigate the affair. I have gone into the matter in some detail as in spite of Emperor v. Ibrahim (1), published in the authorized reports, this Sessions Judge has not yet understood what is the law on the subject.

I have no hesitation in accepting the evidence of Mt. Fatima, and it clearly establishes the immediate cause of the attack. The evidence of the eyewitnesses shows that it was the appellant Gaman who after abusing the deceased attacked him with an axe and killed him. In spite of the medical evidence there is no reason to disbelieve the eyewitnesses that the three persons who were acquitted were also present, and took some small part in the affair, e. g., there was one lathi mark on the arm of the deceased. Other lathi blows might have fallen upon the turban, or they might have left no mark. It is obvious that the appellant first struck the deceased with his axe and that the part taken by the other three persons present was insignificant. There is nothing to indicate that they knew that Gaman would kill the deceased in this sudden attack.

There is also no reason to doubt the evidence as to the production of the blood-stained axe by the appellant. It has been explained that it was not thought necessary to send it to the Chemical Examiner for analysis of the blood. The Sessions Judge considered that the evidence as to the axe must be false as the axe was not sent to the Chemical Examiner. There is nothing on the record to discredit the evidence, which I accept. It appears to me that it would have been a work of supererogation to have sent the axe to the Chemical Examiner in this case.

There is no doubt of the appellant's guilt. Exception 4 to S. 300, I. P. C., has no application. The only point in the appellant's favour is that the murder was not a deliberate one but occurred suddenly after mutual abuse. The appellant took up on the spur of the moment the weapon and killed the deceased with it. In these circumstances and also because the class to which the parties belong cannot be said to be a turbulent one, I would accept the appeal to the extent of substituting a sentence of transportation for life for the death sentence, that is, I would not confirm the death sentence but would impose the lesser penalty for murder.

Har Gopal and Mukand Lal Puri—for Appellants.

A. R. Kapur—for Respondents.

Judgment.—*On the 8th September 1924, Diwan Singh, Hanu Ram and Asa Nand on behalf of their respective firms referred a dispute which they had in connexion with the working of a factory to the arbitration of two persons. Diwan Singh in the name of his firm applied on the 28th May 1925, under para. 17, Sch. 2, Civil P. C., for the agreement to be filed in Court. This was submitted to by Hanu Ram and Asa Nand. The agreement was accordingly filed in Court and the arbitrators requested to file their award. One of the arbitrators was removed and another put in his place at a later stage of the proceedings. Ultimately the arbitrators filed their award. Only the petitioner Diwan Singh on behalf of his firm objected to it. All the objections were overruled except the second. As regards the second objection the Subordinate Judge, First Class, held that the arbitrators had gone beyond the scope of the agreement in holding that Asa Nand was given up by Diwan Singh and that Diwan Singh had become liable to pay whatever was due on behalf of Asa Nand. For that reason he refused to pass judgment in accordance with the award and dismissed the application. Against this decision the two others interested in the award have preferred this appeal.

It was not contended before me that the decision of the Court below was wrong as regards any of the other objections. This means that the only point before me is whether the petition has been properly dismissed on the second objection. The objection was as follows:

The proceedings of the Court, dated 11th November 1926, releasing Asa Nand were unauthorized. Therefore, in consequence of the absence of Asa Nand and the fact that he took no further part in the case all the proceedings before the arbitrators were void and unauthorized.

At this stage it is necessary to give a brief account of what happened before the arbitrators.

Subsequent to the reference to the arbitrators Diwan Singh, who was the original petitioner and also the only objector to the award, put in an application to the Court on the 9th November 1925, that he had settled with Asa Nand and had become responsible for him and that his name should be struck off the list of defendants. He made a similar application before the arbitrators at the same time. The Court, however, passed no orders on these applications. On the 5th January 1926, Hanu Ram also put in an application to the Court that the plaintiff was not competent to give up Asa Nand. On this also the Court passed no order. Then on the 28th November 1926, Diwan Singh made a similar statement before the arbitrators to the effect that he had settled with Asa Nand and he went on to say that whatever profit and loss there was in the factory in favour of or against Asa Nand he had to get the profit and would stand the loss. On the same date Hanu Ram, who was not a party to the compromise between Diwan Singh and Asa Nand, stated that he would be content with what was decreed to him against Diwan Singh only. Asa Nand also then stated that he had settled with Diwan

* [Letters Patent Appeal No. 65 rejected on 28th March 1928 by Shadi Lal, C. J. and Broadway, J.]

Singh in the above terms. After all this had happened on the same day Diwan Singh made a further statement that he had not given up Asa Nand, nor was he willing to do so, though he admitted that he had taken Rs. 2,950 from Asa Nand. He explained, however, that this was done simply to show that there was a profit in the business and not a loss. This explanation is against the clear tenor of the receipt which is to the effect that he had taken that sum and would be responsible for whatever was due from Asa Nand. Accordingly the arbitrators framed an issue on the point as follows :

> Whether the plaintiff, i. e., Diwan Singh, has not settled with Asa Nand and is Asa Nand now liable to give him account of what is due from him, and whether Diwan Singh can now make this objection when he has given up Asa Nand by his own application dated 9th November 1925.

The arbitrators went into this question and held that Diwan Singh had given up Asa Nand and that he was responsible for whatever was due to Hanu Ram from Asa Nand. They found that Rs. 4,183 were due to Hanu Ram from Asa Nand and Rs. 1,170 from Diwan Singh to Hanu Ram. In consequence of their finding as to the compromise between Diwan Singh and Asa Nand they held that the firm Dhanna Singh-Diwan Singh was liable to pay Rs. 5,353 to Hanu Ram and that a decree for that amount should be passed against Diwan Singh in Hanu Ram's favour.

On the above facts it seems to me that the arbitrators acted within the scope of their authority. It is always possible for two partners to compromise their claims inter se though that compromise would not necessarily bind the other partners. The third partner in this case, namely, Hanu Ram, stated on the 18th November 1926, that he had no objection to a decree being given in his favour against Diwan Singh if Asa Nand was found to owe him anything so that he accepted the arrangement. In these circumstances there was obviously a valid compromise between Diwan Singh and Asa Nand which was accepted by Hanu Ram and the arbitrators had clearly power to give the award in the form they did.

The above is sufficient to dispose of this appeal, but I must also refer to the argument on behalf of the appellant to the effect that objection 2 did not relate to the question that the arbitrators had gone beyond the scope of their authority and that it was, therefore, incompetent for the Court to allow this question to be raised. I think that this contention is sound. Objection 2 relates to the proceedings of the Court dated 11th November releasing Asa Nand and states that they were bila ikhtiar. Now the Court did not release Asa Nand. It passed no orders on the application but left the matter to be dealt with by the arbitrators. The second part of objection 2 is to the effect that in consequence of the action of the Court Asa Nand did not attend and all the proceedings before the arbitrators were void and bila ikhtiar. Asa Nand, however, did attend the proceedings. It seems to me clear, therefore, that objection 2 does not relate to the fact that the arbitrators went beyond the scope of their jurisdiction and no new objection to the award could be put in after the 10 days fixed by law. For this reason also this appeal must be accepted.

In any case, if the Court considered that the arbitrators went beyond the scope of their authority and determined a matter not referred to arbitration it was its duty (see Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, p. 1104, 8th Edn.) to take action under p. 12 or para. 14 (a) of Sch. 2, Civil P. C. It had the award before it which showed that Asa Nand owed Hanu Ram so much and Diwan Singh so much. If it considered that the matter of the compromise to the effect that Diwan Singh would be liable for Asa Nand because he had received Rs. 2,950 from Asa Nand, could be separated from the rest of the award without remitting the award to the arbitrators, it should have taken action under Cl. 12 (a) above referred to and given Hanu Ram a decree against the two persons to the extent of the amounts found due by them. If, however, it thought that the award should go back to the arbitrators because this portion could not be separated from the rest of the award by reason of the fact that Diwan Singh had accepted Rs. 2,950 from Asa Nand it could have sent the award back to the arbitrators for their re-consideration under para. 14 (a) of Sch. 2. There was no reason to refuse at that stage to file the award in Court.

For the reasons given in the first part of this judgment I accept this appeal with costs throughout and order the award to be filed in Court under para. 21 of Sch. 2, Civil P. C. I also pronounce judgment in accordance with the award and direct that upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow.

Criminal Appeal No. 600 of 1928, Decided on 15th September 1928, from order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Hoshiarpur, D/- 24th April 1928.

Penal Code, S. 304 (2)—Death caused by shock due to blows inflicted to drive away evil spirits —Offence falls under S. 302 (2).

Where the accused inflicted many blows on the body of the deceased, and also used kicks in order to drive away an evil spirit, and thereby caused the death the accused is guilty under S. 304 (2), 1 U.B.R. Penal Code 1, Dist.; 3 U. B. R. 54, Foll. [P 917 C 2]

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Most of the facts alleged by the prosecution in the case are admitted by the learned counsel for the appellant to have occurred. That is to say it is not denied that Mt. Paro met her death as the result of injuries inflicted on her at the house of Mt. Naro on 17th January 1928, at Nangal Kalan in the Hoshiarpur District.

The facts are these: Mt. Naro has a shrine in her house and people visit that house and play as being "possessed" by spirits. Mt. Paro came there and began swaying about in front of the shrine. The appellant asked her who she was and she replied that she was a churail from the Mathiana pond. It is in evidence that the remedy applied for such "possessed" persons is to beat them. For the purpose of casting out the evil spirit a chimta (fire tong) was first employed. That proving unsuccessful, recourse was had to a sangal (chain used for flagellation). Many blows were inflicted and kicking was also resorted to. The result of all this was that Mt. Paro, a young woman of "strong stout and well-nourished" body (in the words of the Civil Surgeon of Hoshiarpur) died of shock.

Fortunately tragedies of this kind are rare, but there are some reported cases in the law reports to which my attention has been drawn. Before alluding to them, however, I shall briefly dispose of one or two matters raised by the appellant's counsel. It was urged in the first place that the deceased's father was present at the time, and even that her husband was present. Evidence to that fact was given by Mt. Naro the owner of the shrine, and one other witness, but the father and husband deny that they were present and I have no hesitation in accepting their denial as true. The other matter urged was that the appellant merely resorted to the ordinary procedure in such cases and thought honestly that he was doing the right thing in beating the deceased.

Reliance was placed on the case Nga Po Kyaw v. Emperor (1). In that case a girl had suffered for some years and was taken to a place like the one in this case, in order to be cured. She consented to the treatment and it was held in consequence that the offence committed was one under S. 304-A, I. P. C. The law on the subject was considered in Nga Po Tha v. Emperor (2), and a line of distinction was drawn between cases of consent, as in Nga Po Kyaw's case (1), and cases where no consent was given. It was held that in the latter type of case the offence committed, if death resulted, was under S. 304, part 2, I. P. C. In the appeal before me there was no question of consent and I can find no evidence to that effect. The deceased did not come to be "treated." It is not explained how the deceased's hysteria, if such it was, began; and there is no use to enquire into that matter. The fact remains that the appellants inflicted many blows. The medical evidence gives a long list beginning with nine irregular bruises on the left side of the chest and abdomen; then there were bruises on the left cheek, upper lip, left elbow and right side of the chest. In a case of this kind I consider that the principle laid down in Ngo Po Tha's case (2) should be followed and I maintain the conviction under S. 304, part 2.

(2) [1918] 3 U. B. R. 54=44 I. C. 679=19 Cr. L. J. 375.

I. P. C. The sentence imposed by the Additional District Magistrate is five years' rigorous imprisonmant. It has been contended that the sentence is too severe, but I am not prepared to interfere. It is eminently desirable that tragedies of this nature should not be repeated, and to give a lenient sentence could only encourage others in the belief that the offence is a venial one.

The appeal is dismissed.

Misc. First Appeal No. 3132 of 1927, Decided on 23rd April 1928, from order of Sr. Sub-Judge, Amritsar, D/- 24th November 1927.

Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 90—It is not necessary to enter income of property in proclamation sale —Sale of property for less than its market value is no ground for setting aside the sale unless there is any material irregularity in conducting or publishing sale—Civil P. C., O. 21, R. 66 (2).

There is no provision in the Civil Procedure Code in making it necessary to mention the income of the property in the proclamation of sale and failure to do so does not amount to a material irregularity in conducting or publishing or the sale. Unless there has been any material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, the mere fact that the property has been sold for less than its market value is not a sufficient ground to set aside the sale. [P 918 C 2]

Dev Raj Sawhney—for Appellant.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal, D. C. Ralli and H. C. Kumar for J. G. Sethi— for Respondents.

Judgment.—* In execution of a decree a theatre and certain shops attached thereto, belonging to the judgment-debtor were sold and purchased by the respondent for Rs. 1,30,000. The judgment-debtor objected to the sale on the ground of material irregularity in publishing and conducting the same and consequent loss to him.

The Senior Subordinate Judge has disallowed these objections and confirmed the sale.

This is an appeal by the judgment-debtor. The learned counsel for the appellant has not been able to show that there has been any material irregularity in publishing or conducting this sale. His objection is that the income of the property was not mentioned in the proclamation of sale ; but it appears that the proclamation was prepared in the presence of the judgment-debtor and he did not supply the requisite information. No provision of the Civil Procedure Code has been cited under which this information was to be entered in the proclamation of sale and if the judgment-debtor thought that in his interest, it was necessary to supply this information, he ought to have moved the Court to insert it in the proclamation. I do not think that under the circumstances there is any real grievance on this score.

It is then alleged that the proclamation of sale was not affixed to the property sold nor was there any beat of drum. There is definite evidence supported by reports of the officials concerned that all these formalities were complied with, and I am not prepared to accept as conclusive the statements of some respectable witnesses which are to the effect that they did not see any proclamation of sale or hear any beat of drum. I agree with the conclusion of the Senior Subordinate Judge that there has been no irregularity in publishing or conducting this sale.

It is not necessary for me to give a definite finding on the second point involved whether the property has, as a matter of fact, been sold for less than its market value, but this appears to be the case as the witnesses have given evidence that the property is worth more than what it has fetched ; but the other condition necessary to set aside the sale not having been complied with, the Court below was justified in confirming it.

The sale was fully advertised by means of hand bills distributed in the town of Amritsar. There is no force in the contention of the judgment-debtor that proclamation should have been made in big towns like Bombay or Calcutta. If he considered that such a course was necessary, he should have moved the executing Court before the sale took place or should have himself taken steps to publish the sale in those places. He did nothing of this sort, and I am unable to see that he has any real grievance in the matter. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Misc. Petn. (for review) No. 458 of 1927, Decided on 27th February 1928, from judgment of Harrison and Dalip Singh, JJ., D/- 1st June 1927, in Civil Appeal No. 2440 of 1923.

* Civil P. C., O. 47, R. 1 — Ground for review.

Where a Court fails to apply the law to the facts found and when such an error is apparent on the face of the record, it can be made a ground for a review. Failure of the Court to apply the law of limitation to the facts found is an error apparent on the face of the record : A. I. R. 1922 P. C. 112, Dist. [P 919 C 2]

Sardha Ram—for Petitioners.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal — for Respondents.

Harrison, J.—An application has been made for review of a judgment in appeal Basheshar Lal-Bansi Dhar v. Debi Sahai-Gulzari Mal decided on 1st June 1927. The parties to that case had dealings in piecegoods, and it was admitted throughout that the defendant firm had failed to deliver 15 bales to the plaintiff firm. The only question in dispute was that of the shipments to which these bales belonged. The decision of the trial Court was that 13 should have been of the January shipment and two of the February and damages were granted amounting to Rs. 727-5-6. After hearing the appeal we decided that 9 of the bales fell into the February shipment and 6 into the April. After calculating the rates we increased the damages and allowed a total of Rs. 1,250 as against Rs. 727-5-6.

The ground, on which the review has been presented is that there has been an error on the face of the record in that we failed to apply the natural result of our own finding and to hold that so far as the February shipment was concerned the suit was barred by time, and it is urged that such an error can be agitated on review. Counsel for the plaintiff respondent relies on Chhaju v. Neki (1) where it was held that a Court has no power to order a review upon the ground that the decision was wrong on the merits. That ruling dealt entirely or almost entirely with the third heading under which review is competent namely, "for any other sufficient reason," and it is expressly stated at p. 133 that the first two grounds described in O. 47, R. 1, did not apply to that case. Here it is simply a question of deciding whether the present case falls under the second and whether, as alleged, there has been a mistake or error apparent on the face of the record.

Counsel for the plaintiff contends that a mistake of law does not come within the scope of these words. This is not quite clear, but anyhow it is, we think, rightly contended by the other side that this is not a question of mistake of law for it is not urged that of two possible views the wrong was taken. The error complained of is that the decision having been given the consequences or results of that decision were overlooked and thus the defendants lost the fruits of their victory or partial victory. It is true that counsel for the defendants never raised this question of limitation and, indeed, on his own showing he could have objected to the whole of the decree passed against him by the trial Court on this ground alone ; but as pointed out by him, he was primarily concerned with establishing the incidence of the distribution over the various shipments. Even so, he should, we think, have pointed out that the consequence of a decision which merely modified the view taken by the trial Court without accepting in toto the position put forward by him would be that the claim for an increase in the damages for the February shipment was barred by limitation. The question, therefore, is whether the failure of the Court to apply the Law of Limitation to the facts found, is an error apparent on the face of the record this being not an error of law so much as a failure to apply the law. We are of opinion that it is and that such an error when committed by the Court, and when apparent on the face of the record, can be made the ground for a review. We have offered counsel for the plaintiff an opportunity of a further hearing, but he concedes that once the review is admitted, the mistake is obvious and the petitioner is entitled to have it corrected. We accordingly disallow the amount of increase allowed on account of February shipment, i. e., Rs. 377. The amount of the increase to which the plaintiff-appellant was entitled is Rs. 155.

Counsel applies under S. 152, Civil P. C., to have the decree corrected, the calculation being wrong even on the amount allowed by us originally. We order accordingly. The necessary corrections are to be made in the amounts allowed for stamp and counsel's fee. Under the circumstances of the case we direct that the parties shall bear their own costs of this review.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 974 of 1928, Decided on 22nd September 1928, from order of 1st Cl. Mag , Gujranwala, D/- 30th March 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 562—S. 562 is not applicable to a person tried under Penal Code, S. 307.

As one of the alternative punishments for an offence under S 307, Penal Code, is transportation for life, it is obvious that S. 562 is not applicable, and the accused must be sentenced to rigorous imprisonment and fine. [P 920 C 2]

Anant Ram Khosla—for the Crown.

Jawahar Singh Dhillon—for Respondent.

Judgment. — The respondent Bahawali, barber of Mauza Thatha Manak was tried and convicted by Lala Shankar Das Luthera, Magistrate, 1st Class (with enhanced powers) Gujranwala, of an offence under S. 307, I. P. C. In view of the fact that he was a young man, 15 or 16 years of age, the learned Magistrate directed shat he be released under S. 562, Criminal P. C. on furnishing security for Rs. 1,000 with one surety to keep the peace and to be of good behaviour for three years. The required security was duly furnished.

The Crown has preferred a petition for revision to this Court urging that S. 562, Criminal P. C., does not apply to an offence under S. 307, I. P. C., where hurt had actually been caused, and praying that on the findings of the Magistrate a substantial sentence of imprisonment and fine be passed in accordance with law.

The respondent has appeared in person and is also represented by counsel. He has contested the findings of fact arrived at by the learned Magistrate. But after examining the record I find myself in complete agreement with his view of the evidence. It appears that the respondent proposed marriage to Mt. Bakht Bibi, who is the widowed daughter-in-law of his uncle Nawab (P. W. 1) and is also his father'a sister's daughter. She, however, rejected the proposal. Having been put out by her refusal the respondent on the 28th February 1928 came to Nawab's house armed with a chopper and inflicted three blows upon Mt. Bakht Bibi, on the neck, the shoulder and the right side of the back, breaking the rib underneath. The medical witness P. W. 7 was of opinion that the injuries Nos. 1 and 3 were grievous and No. 2 was simple. The victim Mt. Bakht Bibi remained in the hospital for more than 20 days.

It is no doubt true that Mt, Bakht Bibi, when examined at a late stage of the case, stated that her assailant was one Shahu and not the respondent. But there is no doubt that she is now trying to save the respondent, under pressure from her relations. After carefully examining the record I am of opinion that the conviction under S. 307, I. P. C., is fully justified.

As one of the alternative punishments for such an offence is transportation for life, it is obvious that S 562, Criminal P. C., is inapplicable and the respondent must be sentenced to rigorous imprisonment and fine The respondent gave his age in the lower Court as 15 or 16 years. He appeared before me and seems to be a little older.

Having regard to the serious nature of the attack and also making due allowance for his youth, I am of opinion that the ends of justice will be met by sentencing him to rigorous imprisonment for six months and fine of Rs. 50 or in default further rigorous imprisonment for one month. I order accordingly.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 815 of 1928. Decided on 11th May 1928, from an order of Sess. Judge, Attock, D/- 10th April 1928.

Criminal trial—Evidence—Expert evidence—Opinion recorded in a civil suit—Such opinion is not substantive evidence—Accused not having opportunity to cross-examine expert—It is doubtful whether such opinion is admissible at the criminal trial—Evidence Act, S. 45.

The opinion of an expert which is admissible against an accused is the opinion given by him at the trial. Opinion given for the purposes of a previous suit is not substantive evidence and when the accused has not the opportunity to cross-examine the expert regarding that opinion its evidential value is very little. It is doubtful whether the opinion of an expert recorded for the purposes of a civil suit though proved in a oriminal case is sdmissible at all at the latter trial: A. I. R. 1923 Lah. 622, Ref. [P 922 C 2]

Shambu Lal for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a petition for the revision of the order of the Sessions Judge of Attock upholding the convictions of the petitioners Ganda Mal and Kishen Chand.

It appears that Ganda Mal instituted a suit against one Mt. Misri and another for the recovery of the amount alleged to be due to him on an alleged balance struck in his book for Rs. 32. The defendant Mt. Misri denied that she had thumb-marked the book entry in question. The suit was finally dismissed by the Subordinate Judge, who held the entry to be "fictitious." On an application being made by Mt. Misri to file a complaint against Ganda Mal and his witness Kishen Chand, who had appeared at the trial of the civil suit to depose to the genuineness of the entry, the Subordinate Judge declined to file the complaint. The District Judge on appeal, however, directed that a complaint be filed. Consequently both Ganda Mal and Kishen Chand were tried and convicted by a Magistrate of the First Class, the former under Ss. 467, 471, I.P.C., and the latter under Ss. 471, 109, I. P. C., and the Sessions Judge has dismissed their appeal.

The only point that needed determination was whether the book entry alleged to have been signed by Mt. Misri was a forged document and the only evidence produced on this question by the prosecution is the testimony of Mt. Misri and Lala Diwan Chand of the Finger Print Bureau of Phillaur.

So far as Mt. Misri is concerned she definitely stated that the thumb-impression in question was not hers. She even denied that she ever had any dealings with Ganda Mal. In order to disprove her statement the accused produced some witnesses who alleged that she had put her thumb impressions on various entries in Ganda Mal's books on other occasions. The evidence of these witnesses has not been considered to be reliable by the learned Sessions Judge. Lala Diwan Chand was asked to express an opinion whether the thumb-impression with regard to which evidence had been given by these witnesses tallied with the admitted thumb-impression of Mt. Misri. He stated that three of such thumb-impressions were totally blurred and undecipherable, and, therefore, incapable of comparison. With regard to one of them he stated that it was not clear enough for definite identification, but showed some points of similarity.

Again Mt. Misri stated in cross-examination that no demand in respect of the amount claimed by Ganda Mal had been made from her before the suit was instituted. The Subordinate Judge, who tried the civil suit, however, proved that she had admitted before him that a demand in writing had been made from her before the institution of the suit. The learned Sessions Judge considers that these matters are insignificant and do not materially affect the evidence of Mt. Misri. With these conclusions I am unable to agree.

The case depends almost entirely on the direct evidence of Mt. Misri and if it is found that she had not told the truth in some respects it will be very difficult to base a conviction on her testimony, which is not corroborated by other evidence. The learned Sessions Judge has correctly remarked, apart from the above consideration, that the evidence of Mt. Misri ought not to be accepted without corroboration. Now the corroboration relied upon by the learned Judge is the testimony of Lala Diwan Chand.

It appears that the thumb-impression in question which is marked as Ex. P-1 was sent to the Finger Print Bureau at Phillaur along with the thumb-impression of Mt. Misri taken in Court (Ex.P-2) for comparison and the opinion given by Lala Diwan Chand was that they did not tally. He was not, however, examined as a witness in the civil cases and consequently his opinion was held to be inadmissible in that case. But Lala Diwan Chand was examined as a witness in the criminal case and it transpired at the trial that the thumb-impression on Ex.P-1 had been defaced by the placing of country ink over it. The learned Sessions Judge makes the following remarks with regard to the responsibility for obliterating this impression:

> Who obliterated the marks, or for what reason is not proved or even suggested by the evidence on the record; and no presumption can be made safely upon the subject.

In other words the learned Sessions Judge does not hold the accused responsible for the condition in which the thumb-impression was when produced at the trial of the accused. Lala Diwan Chand was naturally unable to give any opinion whether under the circumstances Exs. P-1 and P-2 as produced at the trial tallied with each other. He, however, deposed that in the civil suit he had given an opinion and at that time the thumb-impressions were capable of comparison and his opinion then was that they did not tally with each other.

Now this opinion of Lala Diwan Chand could not be subjected to cross-examination at the trial owing to the condition in which the thumb impression on Ex.P-1 was. Even if I held that such an opinion is admissible in evidence the value to be attached thereto must be very little.

It was held in Jassu Ram v. Emperor (1) that an opinion given by an expert in almost similar circumstances was inadmissible and I am inclined to agree with that view. The opinion which is admissible against the accused is the opinion given by the expert at the trial. The opinion formed by him before the trial is merely to facilitate the comparison by him of the thumb-impressions in Court and to express a definite opinion at that time may be used for the purposes of corroboration or contradiction of his evidence at the trial. It is not substantive evidence. It is doubtful, therefore, if the opinion recorded for the purposes of the civil suit, though proved in the criminal case, was under the circumstances, admissible at all. But in any case I am definitely of opinion that as the accused had not the opportunity to test his opinion by cross-examination owing to the condition of the thumb-impression the value of such opinion must be held to be very little.

Having regard to the fact that Mt. Misri herself has not told the whole truth with regard to her dealings with Ganda Mal and the corroborative evidence, if admissible, is not conclusive, I think this is not a case in which the conviction of the petitioners can be maintained.

I accept this petition and set aside the convictions of Ganda Mal and Kishen Chand, and giving them the benefit of the doubt, acquit them and direct that they be released from jail forthwith.

Anant Ram and F. K. Byrne—for Appellants.

Nanak Chand and Devi Dayal—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—The plaintiffs' father Dadu owned one-half share in Dall Pathananwali. In 1892 he made an oral gift of one-third of this share (1/6th of the whole) to his wife's brother Jiwan, father of the defendants. In the mutation proceedings (Ex. P. 2) no mention was made whether the gift conveyed the share in the shamilat appertaining to the portion of khewat land gifted. On a partition of the shamilat 180 kanals was allotted to the defendants and in 1920 mutation was duly effected in favour of the defendants. In 1923 the plaintiffs who are the sons of the donor instituted the present suit for possession of this land alleging that the gift of 1892 comprised merely the 1-6th portion in the khata of Dall Pathananwali and that the donee was not entitled to the appurtenant shamilat. The suit has been decreed and the defendants appeal.

It is urged that the onus of proving that the gift in question comprised the proportionate share of the shamilat was wrongly placed by the lower Court on the defendants. In our opinion this contention is devoid of all force. It was laid down by Sir Meredyth Plowden in Fazal Shah v. Sikandar Ali (1) that:

> In the case of a deed of gift where by a share in certain land in a village is gifted to a person, the onus of proving that the deed carries with it, as accessory thereto, a proportionate share of shamilat lies, when the deed is silent upon the subject, upon the person who asserts that the gift operates to grant more than it purports to grant.

It may now be taken as settled law that as the right of a proprietor in the shamilat are not a mere accessory to the land held by him, an alienation of the latter does not ipso facto convey any rights in the former to the alienee. See inter alia Ram Das v. Amir Shah (2), Ahmad v. Ahmad (3), Sultan Ahmad v. Parsa Ram (4), Saleh v. Bakhtawar (5), Shankar Das v. Mali (6), Shahadat v. Ganesh Das (7) and A. I. R. 1923 Lahore 350. In support of his contention Mr. Anant Ram relied principally upon Prem Chand v. Sardara (8) but that ruling was not followed in Ram Das v. Amir Shah (2) and has been expressly dissented from in Saleh v. Bakhtawar (5). It is noteworthy that an earlier ruling of the Chief Court Maluk Singh v. Mahomad (9) in which the contrary view had been taken was not referred to in Prem Chand v. Sardara (8). We are of opinion, that there is no presumption in favour of the shamilat land having been gifted and the onus was rightly laid on the defendants. To discharge this onus the defendants produced two witnesses but their evidence is worthless and was not relied on by counsel.

We have carefully examined the mutation proceedings and they leave no doubt in our mind that the donor had no intention of giving to the donee anything more than one-sixth of the khewat holding of Dall Pathananwali. The donor is recorded as having stated before the deputy superintendent that what he had gifted to the donee was "one-sixth share of the entire khata"; and that he had put the donee in possession of the land gifted. The shamilat land was admittedly banjar at that time and it is not alleged that the donee got possession of it.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiffs' suit was rightly decreed by the lower Court.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Criminal Appeal No. 60 of 1928, Decided on 11th May 1928, from order of 1st Class Magistrate, Hissar, D/- 23rd December 1927.

(a) Criminal trial—Companion cases—Use of evidence in one case, in the other is illegal.

A and B who were differently charged were tried at two separate trials by one Magistrate. The evidence in the two cases was recorded separately but the Magistrate disposed of both the cases by writing one judgment and while discussing the guilt and innocence of the accused in each case, freely relied on the evidence which was led in the cross-case making it impossible to separate as against each accused the legal evidence against him from what had been improperly used as such.

Held: that the procedure adopted was irregular and the conviction based on the judgment of this kind was illegal : A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 26, Rel. on. [P 924 C 2]

Judgment.—The appellants in Criminal Appeal No. 60 of 1928 and appellants in Criminal Appeal No. 218 of 1928 were tried at two separate trials by Chaudhri Jai Narain Singh, Magistrate, 1st Class, (with enhanced\powers) Hissar, the former having been charged under S. 304/147 and the latter under S. 325/147, 149, I. P. C. The evidence in the two cases was recorded separately, but the learned Magistrate "with a view to avoid unnecessary repetition" thought it convenient to dispose of them in one judgment. In his judgment, however, he has while discussing the guilt or innocence of the accused in each case, freely relied on the evidence which was led in the cross-case. A perusal of his judgment indicates that he has treated the evidence in the two cases as if it was evidence on one record and has so mixed up the depositions of the witnesses that it is impossible to say how far the conviction of the appellants in each case is based upon what is legal evidence against them. The procedure adopted by the lower Court in thus mixing up the evidence and disposing of both the cases in one judgment is contrary to the provisions of the Code and is calculated to defeat the very object which the legislature had in view in directing that the accused in cross-cases of this kind should be tried separately. This practice has been condemned by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Madat Khan v. Emperor (1).

Counsel for appellants in both appeals urge that their respective clients have been materially prejudiced by the procedure adopted by the lower Court and that injustice has been done to them. Mr. Nawal Kishore, who appears on behalf of the Crown, is not prepared to deny the correctness of the contention on behalf of the appellants in the two cases. I have been carefully through the judgment to see if it is possible to separate, as against each appellant, the legal evidence against him from what has been improperly used as such, but have come to the conclusion that on the judgment as written it is impossible to do so. The result is that the conviction of the appellants in each case based on a judgment of this kind is illegal and must be set aside and both the cases remitted to Chaudhri Jai Narain Singh, Magistrate, (who is still attached to the Hissar District) to re-hear arguments and to write separate judgments in the two cases with direction that he shall judge of the guilt or innocence of each appellant on the evidence produced against him in the case in which he was charged, carefully avoiding any reference to the evidence recorded in the cross-case. The Magistrate shall fix a very early date for the purpose and decide the cases without any undue delay.

It appears from the judgment that the learned Magistrate has used the first information report, as if it were substantive evidence in the case. It should be borne in mind that such use of the first information report is contrary to law and the Magistrate would be well-advised if he studies the recent reported cases of the Lahore High Court on the point.

For the foregoing reasons I accept this appeal, set aside the conviction and sentences passed against the appellants and remit the cases to the learned trial Magistrate for disposal in reference to the foregoing remarks.

Broadway, J.—The following issue was sent down by a Division Bench of this Court for decision :—

Have the plaintiffs abandoned the Cotillon design as a trade-mark for yarn ?

After recording evidence and hearing counsel, the learned District Judge has reported that he finds that cotton yarn and cotton piece-goods are goods of the same description, and that, as cotton piece-goods have been regularly imported with this particular Cotillon design thereon, no question of abandonment really arises. He has, however, also come to a finding that, assuming that cotton piece-goods and cotton yarn were not goods of the same description, no abandonment has been established The reply on the second question is based on intention which is clearly a question of fact, which as a Court of second appeal we are precluded from examining

It was urged, however, that the conclusion arrived at with regard to the cotton piece goods and cotton yarn being goods of the same description was wrong and that at least a further remand should be ordered. Having regard to the issue that was sent down for trial, I do not think that any further remand is called for. What the learned District Judge has done is to hold that the piece-goods and yarn being goods of the same description, the question of abandonment did not arise at all. On the question of abandonment itself he came to a definite finding and by that finding we are bound.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Criminal trial—Evidence — Identification from voice in pitch dark is not alone sufficient to convict a person.

Desh Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant, Bhagtu, has been sentenced to death by the Additional Sessions Judge of Amritsar under S. 302, I. P. C., for having caused the death of one Inder Singh. He has appealed to this Court, and the record is also before us under S. 374, Criminal P. C., for the confirmation of the death penalty.

The facts of the case may be briefly stated as follows :

The deceased Inder Singh, who was a lambardar was severely beaten on the evening of the 28th July 1927, i. e., somewhere between 9 and 10 p. m. He died on 30th July 1927, in hospital without re-gaining consciousness. The first information report was lodged on 31st July 1927, at the Kathunangal police Station, and on the same date the post-mortem examination of the body of Inder Singh was performed. Inder Singh received terrible injuries, and, according to the medical evidence, there were no less than twenty marks of those injuries on his body.

A number of persons were challaned by the police, but we are concerned only with Bhagtu who has been convicted and sentenced as already stated.

The story of the prosecution is that there was enmity between Inder Singh and two other persons, namely, Kishen Singh and Bawa Singh, and that these two persons opened negotiations with Bhagtu who also had some grievance against Inder Singh. It is said that Kishen Singh and Bawa Singh offered Bhagtu Rs. 600 as remuneration if he could bring about the murder of Inder Singh. According to the prosecution, Bhagtu got together a number of his associates on the evening of 28th July 1927, after he had been given information by Bawa Singh and Kishen Singh that Inder Singh was due to return home late in the evening from Amritsar where he had gone on some business. The party proceeded to the railway station, and, after meeting one or two strangers, came upon Inder Singh who at the time happened to be accompanied by Bur Singh (P. W. No. 9) and Santa Singh (P. W. No. 7). Inder Singh's party was accosted by Bhagtu who was the leader of the alleged gang of murderers and there was exchange of abuse. The story for the prosecution goes on to say that Bhagtu and his companions made a violent attack upon Inder Singh and his party. Santa Singh at once ran away and took shelter in the railway station which was not very far off. Bur Singh (P. W. 9) received some injuries and fell down in some earth pits, while Inder Singh was rendered unconscious as a result of the injuries that he received.

The case really turns up on the evidence of one Baru who has turned approver (P. W. No. 6) and the corroboration, if any which he receives from the statement of Santa Singh and to a certain extent from the evidence of a woman named Mt. Rakhi (P. W. No. 10). Bur Singh frankly admitted that he did not recognize any one among the assailants. Bur Singh has given evidence in support of the story for the prosecution as already narrated above.

The sole question is whether the evidence given by Baru the approver, receives corroboration in material particulars by any other evidence on the record. So far as Mt. Rakhi is concerned her statement is that she visited the house of Bhagtu in the evening, a few hours before the occurrence. She says that she went to demand the price of some oil-seed which she had sold to Bhagtu's wife, and that, while she was there, she saw certain of the accused persons who were discussing the murder of Inder Singh within her hearing. Her evidence was rightly rejected by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, and we are fully satisfied that he was right in the course that he followed.

Now remains the question of Santa Singh's evidence. He says that, while he was running away, he recognized Bhagtu and two other persons, with whom we are not concerned, by their voices. Now if this statement was to be believed then it would not be necessary at all to consider the evidence of Baru, the approver, because that alone would be direct evidence of the complicity of Bhagtu in the murder of Inder Singh. But there are difficulties in the way of prosecution before it can induce this Court to accept the evidence of Santa Singh. Santa Singh, immediately, after the attack of Inder Singh's party commenced, ran away to the railway station for protection, and it does not appear that he mentioned the names of these three persons, whom he has named now, to any one of the railway employees at the railway station, as some of the assailants of Inder Singh. Immediately after the attack he met Banta Singh, lambardar who deposes that he does not know if Santa Singh made any statement to this effect. Besides, to recognize a person in a pitch dark night, as the night in question undoubtedly was, merely by the modulations of his voice is a very risky experiment, and, even if Santa Singh's statement be accepted for what it is worth, it is very difficult to say that this evidence amounts to material corroboration of the testimony of the approver, Baru. In our opinion, Santa Singh does not seem to be a reliable witness and his evidence does not put the case on behalf of the prosecution beyond reasonable doubt. Furthermore, it is possible that Santa Singh might have made an honest mistake when, terror-stricken, he turned tail and fled to the railway station.

Under these circumstances we are not satisfied that the evidence relied upon by the Additional Sessions Judge is sufficient to justify the conviction of Bhagtu for the murder of Inder Singh. We, therefore, allow the appeal of Bhagtu, set aside his conviction and sentence and order that he may be released forthwith.

Raj Krishna—for the Crown.

Moti Sagar—for Respondent.

Facts.—The respondent Khairati Lal, while acting as cashier and accountant in the Delhi branch of the firm of Messrs. Sulzer Bruderer & Co. committed criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum of Rs. 3,949-0-0. Actually, the shortage was Rs. 6,141-0-0 but for the purposes of a single trial the Magistrate charged the respondent in respect of Rs. 3,949 only.

Order of Reference.

The question of sentence was considered by the trial Magistrate who wrote :

The offence under S. 408, I. P. C. is not compoundable and the executing of a pronote by the accused and creating a civil liability on himself does not absolve him of the criminal liabiltty. However, the intention of the prosecution can be inferred from such proceedings. Mr. Stark detected the deficiency on 11th July, entered into a civil contract, received a sum of Rs. 41-0-0 by way of part payment and allowed the accused to continue to handle cash and hold charge of godown up till the 28th August 1926, the day of accused's arrest. All these factors go to show that Mr. Stark did not want anything else from accused but the replenishing of the money found short. Accused is a young man and a first offender. He has lost a good job the like of which he cannot have again. He is described by Mr. Stark himself as a high caste Hindu and of a respectable family. Mr. Stark's negligence in not checking the accounts even once and his loose control over his staff tempted the unlucky accused to misappropriate the money, the responsibility of which he readily took upon himself by executing Ex. P. C. pronote and acting upon it by repaying Rs. 41-0-0 towards it. From this I cannot but conclude that accused's intention to misappropriate the money was temporary. He was responsible for the cash in his charge. He has kept the fair cash account very faithfully and has done no fabrication. All this goes to show that accused was feeling his responsibility and was inclined to admit the misappropriation, if detected before he had made up the deficiency. To his ill-luck some thing prevailed upon Mr. Stark and moved him to launch the present prosecution on 28th August, one and a half month afterwards. I am afraid jail punishment will not have any beneficial effect on the accused because his association with criminals will create criminal tendencies in him. Jail which looks very dreadful to persons of respectable families will no more appear as such to them if once they have been there and associated with criminals whom they cannot avoid. For these reasons I do not propose to send the accused to jail but apply the principle of locus penitentiae to him, and order that he shall be released under S. 562, Criminal P. C., on probation of good conduct on his entering into a bond in a sum of Rs. 5,000 with one surety in order to appear and receive sentence when called upon to do so during a period of two years from this date and in the meantime to keep the peace and be of good behaviour.

There is hardly a word of this with which I agree, except where mere facts are mentioned. To speak of "Mr. Stark's negligence in not checking the accounts even once and his loose control over his staff" as tempting "the unlucky accused to misappropriate the money" is, I maintain, to look at the affair from the wrong point of view. The very fact that the appellant was at once the cashier and the accountant made it all the more incumbent on him to keep a careful watch in the interests of his employers, from whom he gained his livelihood. The executing of the pronote cannot be described as a virtuous act on his part. The Magistrate again, is wrong in concluding that the "accused's intention to misappropriate the money was temporary". I have shown in my judgment in the criminal appeal that the appellant indulged in a prolonged and systematic career of embezzlement, appropriating more and more as time went on and concealing the shortage by false entries whenever he had to hand over charge before going on leave. The fact that Mr. Stark gave him a locus penitentiae has nothing to do with the administration of criminal justice. Mr. Stark was merely compounding a felony, and it cannot with reason be described as the appellant's ill-luck that Mr. Stark should have eventually decided to prosecute.

Khairati Lal is a Brahman, 36 years old. He is described as being of good family. He is a first offender. The Magistrate styles him as a young man, but that is hardly accurate. Even if his birth and status be taken into consideration, it is, I maintain, an abuse of the provisions of S. 562, Criminal P. C., that a crime of this magnitude, extending over so long a period and committed with deliberation and guile, should be treated in the way that it has been treated by the Magistrate. I would press strongly for a substantive term of imprisonment, with or without fine, and I forward the records to the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court for order.

Order of the High Court.—Khairati Lal, a Brahman of Delhi, aged about 36 years, was convicted under S. 408, I.P C., of embezzling Rs. 3,949 while acting as a cashier and accountant of the Delhi branch of a piece goods firm. For reasons given by the Magistrate he was released under S. 562, Criminal P.C., on probation of good conduct on entering into a bond of Rs. 5,000 with one surety for two years. The learned Sessions Judge has dismissed his appeal and has referred the case to this Court for enhancement of the sentence, as in his opinion in this case a substantive term of imprisonment, with or without fine, was necessary.

Khairati Lal joined the firm about 1921. He seems to have started his defalcations in December 1924 and he embezzled the amount mentioned in the charge between that date and October 1925. After the latter date the defalcations continued. They were detected on 11th July 1926. The fair cash book was properly kept but the rough cash book was not in order. Both were kept by Khairati Lal. It was owing to carelessness on the part of manager in not comparing the cash book with the cash balance that the defalcations were possible. When the manager on 11th July 1926, first detected the offence he evidently did not desire to prosecute Khairati Lal. Instead of doing so he got a promissory note for the amount and Kharati Lal in fact repaid Rs. 41 as the first instalment. On 28th August 1925 the manager changed his mind and instituted criminal proceedings. The trial lasted from September 1926 to 22nd February 1927. It was thus nearly a year ago when the order under S. 562, Criminal P. C., was passed.

The learned counsel appearing for Khairati Lal did not contest the finding of the Courts below that he was guilty, but he urged that the discretion vested in the Magistrate should not be set aside at this length of time even though I was of opinion that this was a case in which a sentence of imprisonment should have been passed. It was held in A. I. R. 1925 Oudh 673 that it was not a sufficient ground for interference on revision that a person given the benefit of the section in question was discovered later to be a previous convict. In Abdul v. Emperor (1), the Punjab Chief Court refused to interfere with an order passed under S. 562, in the case of a conviction under S. 457, I. P. C., which was an offence of a serious nature, though at that time S. 457 did not fall within S. 562. In A. I. R. 1925 Bom. 192, a servant who had stolen gold and silver ornaments and who had been convicted under S. 381, I. P. C., was given the benefit of this section and the High Court refused to interfere. The maxium sentence under S. 381 is the same as under S. 408, namely, seven years, while these offences are of a similar nature.

In my opinion this was a serious case. Khairati Lal was in a position of trust and failed therein. The defalcations went over a fairly long period. Nevertheless S. 562 certainly applied in every respect except the circumstances in which the offence was committed. Though these circumstances were such that imprisonment, might well have been given I do not think that it would be proper to interfere with the Magistrate's discretion at this length of time. It would not be in the interests of justice to send him to jail now. The Sind Judicial Commissioners [Emperor v. Mathro (2),] refused to interfere in a case somewhat similar to the present except that in the case before them a great part of the stolen property had been recovered at the instance of the accused, a consideration which they took into account. In this case it is obvious that Khairati Lal wished to repay and started to do so. He also gave a promissory note which was accepted in the first instance. Taking all the above circumstances into consideration though I agree that usually imprisonment should be given in cases of embezzlement, I must decline to interfere in the present case and I direct the records to be returned. The revision petition put in on behalf of Khairati Lal was not pressed and is dismissed.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1154 of 1928, Decided on 5th October 1928, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Ludhiana, D/- 21st May 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 109—Person convicted under S. 411, Penal Code—He cannot be proceeded against for the same incident under S. 109.

Where a petitioner has already been tried and convicted of an offence under S. 411, Penal Code. in respect of any particular incident, he cannot be proceeded against for the same incident also under S. 109, Criminal P. C. The person having already been punished for his act, and there being no other evidence against him, proceedings under S. 109, Criminal P. C., are not justified. [P 929 C 1]

Shuja-ud-Din—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—The facts as found by the learned District Magistrate, are that the petitioner along with one Ganda Singh, was travelling at a high speed on a camel in a village in the Ludhiana District. A head-constable and certain other persons, who happened to be there, stopped the petitioner and his companion and made enquiries from them as to who they were. They being unable to give satisfactory replies to the questions put to them as to their identity, the police arrested them under S 54, Criminal P. C. Subsequently it transpired that the camel was stolen property and the petitioner and his companion were prosecuted under S. 411. I. P. C. and duly convicted. Against his conviction under S. 411, the petitioner preferred a petition for revision to this Court which was dismissed in limine.

Simultaneously with the above proceedings the police started a case under S. 109, Criminal P C., against the petitioner, and the learned trial Magistrate bound over the petitioner for a period of one year in the sum of Rs. 1,000. On appeal the District Magistrate maintained the order reducing the amount of security to Rs 300. From this order the petitioner has preferred this petition for revision to this Court.

A perusal of the police report and the evidence produced in support thereof indicates that the only act urged against the petitioner is the incident mentioned above, namely, his riding the stolen camel with Ganda Singh and being unable to give a satisfactory account of himself when challenged by the police. The question is whether, in view of the fact that the petitioner has already been tried and convicted of an offence under S. 411, I. P. C. in respect of this very incident, he should have been proceeded against also under S. 109, Criminal P. C. In my opinion, S. 109, Criminal P. C., was not intended to cover a case of this kind. The petitioner having already been punished for his act, and there being no other evidence against him, proceedings under S, 109, Criminal P. C., are not justified. The petition for revision is accordingly accepted and the order of the lower Court putting the petitioner on security cancelled.

Second Appeal No. 1649 of 1923, Decided on 14th June 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Karnal, D/- 16th April 1923.

* Civil P. C., S. 11—Res judicata—Competency of the Court to try a suit must refer to jurisdiction of Court when first suit was brought and not when subsequent suit is actually brought.

The reasonable construction of the words "in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit" as used in S. 11, Civil P. C., is that they must refer to the jurisdiction of the Court at the time when the first suit was brought, that is to say, if the Court, which tried the first suit, was competent to try the subsequent suit, if then brought, the decision of such Court would operate as res judicata although on a subsequent date by a rise in the value of the property the said Court has ceased to be a proper Court, so far as the pecuniary jurisdiction is concerned, to take cognizance of a suit relating to that very property. [P 930 C 1]

Shamair Chand and Qabul Chand—for Appellants.

Nanwan Mal and Hem Raj Mahajan—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The village Risalu in the Karnal District is divided into four panas, namely, Pana Bhoj Raj, Pana Indo, Pana Khem Chand and Pana Keshu. The plaintiffs, who are proprietors in Pana Bhoj Raj, have brought the present action for the partition of the village abadi, alleging that they are entitled to 13½ shares out of 42 shares. The Courts below have concurred in holding that the dispute, as to the shares, to which the members of the various panas were entitled, was decided in a previous litigation; and according to that decision the proprietors of the Pana Bhoj Raj could get only nine shares out of 42 shares.

It appears that the previous suit was decided by a Munsif of the First Class who, it is contended, could not take cognizance of the present suit in consequence of the value of the property being more than Rs. 1,000, the pecuniary limit of jurisdiction of a Munsif of the First Class. It is, however, clear that the matter directly and substantially in issue in both the suits was the same, and the mere fact that the property has since risen in value does not prevent the operation of the rule of res judicata. As laid down by the Calcutta High Court in Gopi Nath v. Bhagwat Prashad (1), the reasonable construction of the words "in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit", as used in S. 11, Civil P. C., is that they must refer to the jurisdiction of the Court at the time when the first suit was brought, that is to say, if the Court, which tried the first suit, was competent to try the subsequent suit if then brought, the decision of such Court would operate as res judicata although on a subsequent date by a rise in the value of the property the said Court has ceased to be a proper Court, so far as the pecuniary jurisdiction is concerned, to take cognizance of a suit relating to that very property. Any other construction would reduce the rule of res judicata to an absurdity. Indeed, Mr. Shamair Chand for the appellants concedes that the decision in the previous suit must be held to be binding upon the parties. The proprietors of Pana Bhoj Raj cannot, therefore, get more than nine shares out of 42 shares in the village abadi; and, as the village common land, which is susceptible of partition, has not been completely partitioned, the plaintiffs are entitled to get their share of the property separated from that of the rest of the proprietory body.

The Courts below have dismissed the suit without giving any reason, such as would debar the plaintiffs from getting a partition of such area of the land as was held to be their property according to the previous decision. It is possible that some of the proprietors of Pana Bhoj Raj have already obtained possession on partition of the land to which they were entitled, but upon the record as it stands we are unable to say that none of the plaintiffs are now entitled to claim partition. Nor do the facts on the record enable us to determine the question whether Ramji Lal, who died during the pendency of the suit, was a necessary party and whether the failure of the plaintiffs to implead his legal representatives within the prescribed period has resulted in the abatement of the suit.

We are accordingly constrained to accept the appeal and remit the suit to the trial Court for re-decision with reference to the foregoing remarks. The costs incurred by the parties so far shall be costs in the cause.

Second Appeal No. 108 of 1928, Decided on 14th April 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Jhelum, D/- 20th October 1927.

Civil P. C., S. 100 — Inference drawn from the deed and from other evidence as to the intention of parties to a transaction is a question of fact and no second appeal lies.

Where the question involved (e. g. whether a certain transaction amounts to a sale or a mortgage) is not simply of the proper construction of a document but of inference to be drawn from the deed and from other evidence as to the intention of the parties to the transfer, it is one of fact and cannot be challenged in second appeal: 45 P. Judgment.—This was a pre-emption suit with respect to the mortgage of a house which the plaintiffs alleged to be in reality a sale. The Courts below have found the transaction to be a sale and have granted a decree. The defendants have filed a second appeal. A preliminary objection is raised on behalf of the respondents that the finding of the Courts below that the transaction in question was a sale and not a mortgage is one of fact and cannot be challenged in second appeal. The learned counsel for the appellants, on the other hand, contends that the question is one of law and cites Tikaya Ram v. Dharam Chand (1). A different view has been, however, taken in subsequent rulings, see, inter alia, Ahmad Khan v. Alam Khan (2) and Sunder

Das v. Dhanpat Rai (3). The question involved in the present case is not simply of the proper construction of a document but of inference to be drawn from the deed and from other evidence as to the intention of the parties to the transfer. It is true that the oral evidence has not been relied on but the learned District Judge has taken into consideration the past conduct of the parties relating to the transaction, the market price of the house, etc., in arriving at his conclusion that the transaction was a sale. It was contended further that the learned District Judge should have found that the parties intended at the time when they entered into the transaction that the property should be sold. This point has, however, not been overlooked by the learned District Judge who has referred in this connexion to Bishen Singh v. Paro (4). The finding of the learned District Judge though not explicit in this respect is, in my opinion, tantamount to saying that the parties did intend to enter into a transaction of sale and not of a mortgage. I accordingly hold that the finding is one of fact and cannot be challenged in second appeal.

I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment *—The appellant Mahant Ajudhia Nath and Mahant Prem Nath were sued by the respondents in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Second Class, Gurdaspur, who passed a decree against them for Rs. 1,348-7-0 refusing to pass an order allowing payment of decree to be made by instalments. Ajudhia Nath and Prem Nath appealed to the District Judge at Gurdaspur against the refusal of the trial Court to allow payment by instalments. The learned District Judge following Mohamed Ibrahim v. Subbiah Pandaram (1), a ruling by a Division Bench of the Lower Burma Chief Court, held that no appeal lay against the order refusing payment by instalments, as it formed no part of the decree and had been passed under the provisions of O. 20, R. 11, Civil P. C., and that the Code does not provide for an appeal against an order passed under that rule.

Against this judgment Prem Nath and Ajudhia Nath have come to this Court with a second appeal.

Mr. Shamair Chand who has argued the appeal is unable to cite any authority of any Indian Court in support of his contention that the order appealed against is incorrect in law. It is true that he can point to judgments such as Bhup Chand v. Udhe Ram (2), in which an appeal has been entertained against an order allowing the payment of a decree by instalments. But it is obvious that an order of the latter kind must be incorporated in the decree and form part of it, and appeal will lie against that decree. It seems to me that the language of O. 20, R. 11, Civil P. C., has been intentionally so worded as to make it clear that an order passed under that rule is to be regarded as a matter separate from the decree unless deliberately incorporated by the Court in the decree it passed. My conclusion is that the judgment appealed against is correct and I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 2203 of 1923, Decided on 1st May 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Jhang, D/- 2nd May 1923.

Limitation Act, Art. 125—Widow of person having both mortgagor's and mortgagee's rights allowing herself to be redeemed by non-reversioners — Transaction amounts to alienation within Art. 125.

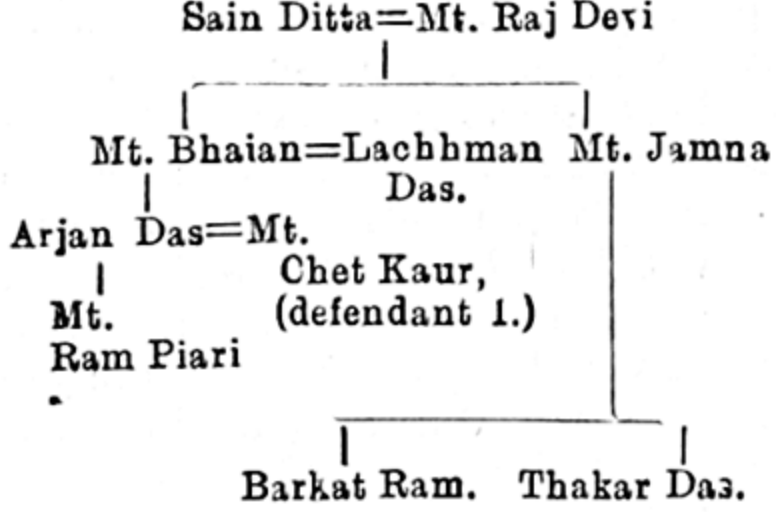
A proprietor of a house which was mortgaged by his predecessor inherited the mortgagee's right also. After his death, his widow allowed the property to be redeemed by persons who were not reversioners.

Held: that the transaction effected by the widow must be treated as an alienation for the purpose of Art 125. [P 932 C 2]

Nanak Chand—for Appellant.

Fakir Chand—for Respondents.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—The following pedigree-table illustrates the facts of this case;



The dispute between the parties relates to a house which originally belonged to Sain Ditta. After his death, his widow Mt. Raj Devi granted a mortgage of the property to her son-in-law, Lachhman Das, on 24th August 1879. In 1885 some of the reversioners of Sain Ditta sold the equity of redemption of the house to one Ganga Ram whose son transferred it on 19th June 1915, to defendants 3 and 4. On the same date the vendees redeemed the property by paying the amount due on the mortgage to Mt. Chet Kuar, the widow of Arjan Das, and obtained possession of it.

The plaintiff, who is a cousin of Arjan Das, has brought the present action impeaching the transaction effected between Mt. Chet Kaur and defendants 3 and 4 and asks for a declaration that the transaction be declared to be void as against him. The Courts below have concurred in holding that the suit is governed by the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 120, Lim. Act, and is consequently barred by time

It appears that, on the death of Mt. Raj Devi, the landed property of her husband was allotted to his daughter Mt. Jamna, and that the house was awarded to Mt. Bhaian. On Mt. Bhaian's death Arjan Das became the proprietor of the house, being the daughter's son of Sain Ditta and the mortgagee rights which he had inherited from his father Lachhman Das, were extinguished. The succession to the estate is, therefore, to be traced from Arjan Das, and there can be no doubt that Sain Ditta's reversioners were not entitled to the property and that defendants 3 and 4, who claim to be their successors-in-interest, had no right to redeem the house from Arjan Das's widow, Mt. Chet Kaur. Mt. Chet Kaur's act in surrendering the house to defendants 3 and 4 amounted to an alienation within the meaning of Art. 125, Sch. 1, Lim. Act. It has been held by the Allahabad High Court in Sheo Singh v. Jeoni (1) that a widow's act in confessing judgment in a collusive suit brought against her, whereby the plaintiff obtained a decree for possession, is an alienation within the contemplation of that article.

Following the judgment in Sheo Singh v. Jeoni (1) we hold that the transaction effected by Mt. Chet Kaur on 19th June 1915, must be treated as an alienation for the purpose of Art. 125. The present action was brought on 15th October 1921; and it is, therefore, clear, that. if Art. 120 governs the suit, it is barred by limitation. It is, however, contended by Mr. Nanak Chand that the action comes within the purview of Art. 125, which applies to a suit brought during the life of a Hindu female by a person, who if the female died at the date of the institution of the suit, would be entitled to the possession of the land, to have an alienation of such land made by the female declared to be void except for her life. Now, the plaintiff, who is a cousin of Arjan Das, is certainly his heir, and would be entitled to the property on the death of his widow, Mt. Chet Kaur, if her daughter Mt. Ram Piari is dead. On the other hand, if Mt. Ram Piari was alive at the date of the institution of the suit, then Art. 125 would not apply, and the suit would be barred by time under Art. 120. The Courts below have not determined the issue of whether Mt. Ram Piari was alive on 15th October 1921, when the suit was instituted and the affidavits filed by the parties are conflicting and do not afford us any assistance in deciding the question. We are, therefore, constrained to remit the issue to the trial Judge with the direction that he should record all the evidence which the parties may wish to produce and return the evidence through the District Judge to this Court together with his finding thereon and the reasons therefor.

(1) [1897] 19 All. 524=(1897) A.W.N. 141.

Civil P. C., O. 6, R. 17—Plaintiff making a definite statement and case proceeding for trial—Amendment resulting in totally different case should not be allowed, especially at a late stage.

The general principle governing amendments is that where a party has made a definite statement upon which the case has gone to trial, leave to amend should not be granted if the effect of the amendment would be that the plaintiff would be making a totally different case to the case pleaded, more especially where an application for amendment is made at a late stage of the proceedings: 11 *M. Fforde, J.—The facts of this case are shortly these:

On 7th September 1888, Mt. Akki, widow of Jaimal Singh, sold certain parcels of land by two registered sale-deeds to the predecessors-in-title of the present defendants. Mt. Akki died some time in April of 1917, and on 3rd April 1923, the reversioners of Jaimal Singh brought a suit for possession of the land sold by Mt Akki on the ground that the sales were ineffective as against the reversioners. In this suit they made the successors in-title of the original vendees defendants.

The suit has been dismissed on the ground that it is barred by limitation under the provisions of Art. 2, Schedule to the Punjab Limitation (Custom) Act 1 of 1920 which provides that a suit for possession of ancestral property which has been alienated, on the ground that the alienation is not binding on the plaintiff according to the custom, cannot be brought after a period of six years from the date of the registration of the deed provided alienation is by a registered deed

Dr. Naurang for the plaintiffs has asked that the plaint be allowed to be amended. In the plaint the plaintiffs pleaded that the land in suit is ancestral. Para. 4 of the plaint is as follows:

The aforesaid land is the plaintiffs' ancestral land and Mt. Akki had no right to sell the same. The sale was without valid necessity, consideration and right and is null and void as against the plaintiffs.

In para. 5 of the plaint the plaintiffs pleaded:

even if the land in dispute is not proved to be ancestral land of the plaintiffs, still Mt. Akki, widow of Jaimal Singh, had no right, according to law and custom, to sell the said land because she was in possession for her lifetime and because the sale was without valid necessity and consideration.

There is no doubt at all on these pleadings that the plaintiffs definitely alleged the land to be ancestral land and para. 5 merely amounts to a plea that admitting for the purposes of this plea, but no further otherwise, that the land is not ancestral, even in that event Mt. Akki had no right to alienate it.

The defendants in paragraph of the jewab dawa plead as follows:

Paragraph 4 with the exception that the land in suit is the plaintiffs' ancestral land is denied.

In other words, the plaintiffs' plea that the land was ancestral is admitted by the defendants and accordingly there was no necessity of any issue upon that point

It is true that in the replication the plaintiffs put in a somewhat ambiguous plea in these terms:

> The sale upon which the defendants depend. is not such a sale which was made by a full proprietor and was in respect of ancestral immovable property and without cancellation of which the plaintiffs cannot bring a suit for possession of the land in question.

There has been a good deal of discussion as to whether the vernacular of the replication has the same meaning as the translation. We are inclined to think that the intention of the Urdu paragraph was the same as appears in the translation, but it does not seem to me to be very material at this stage. The parties had by plaint and defence agreed as to the land being ancestral. At any rate, it was upon this basis that the suit was tried and upon this basis that arguments were addressed to the trial Court. Dr. Naurang says that the plaintiffs' statement that the land was ancestral was made in error, and he urges that this Court should now amend the plaint by permitting the plaintiffs to now say that the land was not in fact ancestral and that the case be then sent for an issue on the nature of the land to be tried.

A good deal of authority has been cited by the learned counsel for the plaintiffs as to the cases in which amendment should be permitted. 11 M. I. A. 487 has been cited in which their Lordships of the Privy .Council stated that amongst ignorant agriculturists strict rules of pleadings should not be enforced. These observations could hardly be applied to the present case as the pleading in question was signed by counsel who could hardly be held to come within that description. The general principle governing amendments is that where a party has made a definite statement upon which the case has gone to trial, leave to amend should not be granted if the effect of the amendment would be that the plaintiff would be making a totally different case to the case pleaded, more especially where an application for amendment is made at a late stage of the proceedings.

The rule of English pleading is referred to in Bullen and Leak's Precedents of Pleadings in these terms:

> Leave to amend may be refused where at the trial or hearing the party seeks to alter the whole nature .of his case by an unexpected amendment which may require futher evidence to be adduced by his opponents.

There is no doubt in the present case that if this amendment were allowed a mass of evidence would have to be produced by the defendants to show what the nature of the land in suit is. Moreover, in the present case the plaintiffs had every opportunity to amend their pleadings when the significance of their statements became apparent in the course of the arguments before the learned trial Judge. The arguments there were directed to this question of limitation, and the character of the land was an essential element in the discussion. I am strongly of opinion that in this case it would be unfair to the defendants to allow the plaint to be amended as requested by Dr. Naurang. This application must, therefore, be refused.

So far as the point of limitation is concerned, I think there can be no doubt that the suit is barred by Act 1 of 1920, and in fact this is hardly contested. In these circumstances, being in agreement with the decision of the learned trial Judge, I see no alternative but to dismiss the appeal with costs.

Judgment.*—This is an appeal from Probate of the Will granted by the learned District Judge of one Sardar

*[No Letters Patent Appeal has been filed from this judgment].

Sochet Singh who was murdered on 12th November 1925. Two of his collaterals were convicted and sentenced to death for this murder.

Sardar Sochet Singh had no widow or children and his nearest collaterals were in the 7th degree. Mutation on his death was sanctioned in favour of his brother's widow Sardarni Har Kaur. She died on 12th March 1926, and the will was then discovered by Amar Singh and Shiv Singh, relatives of Mt. Har Kaur. They state that they found the will in a locked box after the death of Mt. Har Kaur and they handed the will to the Deputy Commissioner on 6th May 1926. The residuary legatee under the will is the Arya Priti Nidhi Sabha, and the Sabha has petitioned for Probate. The respondents are collaterals who raised various objections; but the only two points argued before me in appeal are:

(1) that it is not proved that the will in question was made by the late Sardar Sochet Singh; and

(2) that if made, it was revoked by him.

As regards the first point, counsel contends that no expert witness has proved the handwriting of the late Sardar. The evidence consists of the statement of Kaka who was actually present when the will was made and who alleges that it bears his thumb-mark. He says that the Sardar wrote the whole document in his presence one night about the time of the influenza epidemic. The Sardar enjoined Kaka not to tell any one about the will as the Sardar was afraid of his collaterals. Three persons, Munshi Ram, Pandit Chhaju Ram and Harbans Singh, P. Ws. 10, 11 and 12, have sworn that the handwriting is the handwriting of Sardar Sochet Singh which they knew. The learned District Judge has relied on this evidence, and I see no reason to doubt it.

The learned counsel has also contended that if the Sardar had made this will, he would have told some responsible officials of the Arya Samaj. I see no force in this contention. Secondly, that being an Arya he would not have gifted any portion of the land to a Mahomedan because Aryas and Mussalmans are always at enmity. There is no force in this contention, there being not the slightest evidence to support it. Thirdly, that Kaka knew about the will but did not claim the Rs 5 per month that were left to him under the will. Kaka explains that he was afraid to do so, because he feared for his life at the hands of the collaterals, and seeing that the Sardar was murdered by the collaterals it seems to be a reasonable explanation. Fourthly, it was contended that the Sardar would have deposited the will with the Deputy Commissioner or some other responsible official. There is no force in this contention either. I, therefore, hold that the will was executed by the late Sardar Sochet Singh.

It is next contended that the Sardar made various gifts during his lifetime after the alleged date of the will, and that this shows that he revoked the will. No authority is cited for this proposition nor does it seem to be sound law.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Criminal Appeal No. 442 of 1928, Decided on 26th September 1928, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Kangra, D/- 29th February 1928.

[P 935 C 2, P 936 C 1,2]

D. R. Sawhney—for the Crown.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—The evidence for the prosecution, which has been believed by the trial Magistrate as well as by the learned Judge who has referred this appeal to the Division Bench, leaves no doubt whatsoever that the prisoner Sher Singh, by falsely pretending to be a pensioned Subedar, intentionally deceived the complainant and dishonestly induced him to let the prisoner have on credit certain articles for which he did not intend to pay. The prisoner is, therefore, clearly guilty of the offence of cheating, and the only question on which we are invited to pronounce our opinion is whether he should be punished under S. 417 or S. 420, I. P. C. The matter is important because, while the latter section prescribes a punishment of imprisonment for a term which may extend to seven years, the former makes the offence punishable with imprisonment of only one year and does not, therefore, bring the case within the ambit of S. 75, I. P. C., which empowers the Court to inflict an enhanced punishment upon a previous convict.

It will be observed that S. 415, I P. C., merely defines the offence of cheating, but in order to ascertain the punishment for the offence, we must have recourse to the other sections of the Code. Now, we find that S. 417 contains a general provision which prescribes punishment for the offence of cheating generally, while S. 420 punishes that species of cheating which is accompanied with a transfer of property. The latter kind of cheating is an offence of an aggravated character, and the culprit is consequently liable to a severe punishment.

Section 420, I. P. C., being a special provision, must be treated as an exception to the general rule enacted by S. 417. Similarly S. 418 and S. 419 prescribe penalty for other kinds of aggravated cheating. There is, therefore, no conflict between S 417, which must be confined to cases of simple cheating, and Ss. 418, 419 and 420 which punish cheating of a serious nature. If a case comes within the purview of one of these three sections, the offender must receive the punishment prescribed by it, and he cannot claim that he should receive the lesser punishment provided for by S. 417, I. P. C. It must be remembered that cheating is not the only offence for which different punishments are ordained according to the gravity of the offence committed by the accused. A perusal of S. 378 and other sections following it makes it clear that, while simple theft is punishable under S. 379, theft of an aggravated character is punishable under S. 380, S. 381, or S. 382, if the offence satisfies the requirements of any of these three sections. Another example of the crime, for which a graded punishment is laid down by the Code is dacoity, vide S. 395, I. P. C., (simple dacoity), S. 396, I. P C., (dacoity with murder), and S. 397, (dacoity with an attempt to cause death or grievous hurt).

In the present case the appellant undoubtedly obtained property by cheating, and he was consequently punishable under S. 420, I. P. C. The sentence imposed upon him by the learned District Magistrate is not open to any objection either on the ground of illegality or of severity. The appeal preferred by him is accordingly dismissed.

Judgment *—The appellant obtained a decree for possession of immovable property against the respondent. In execution of that decree possession was actually given to the decree-holder of three fields which had not been decreed in his favour. The present suit was instituted by the judgment-debtor for possession of those three fields. The District Judge has found that the land in suit was not covered by the decree in execution of which possession was actually given to the decree-holder. He has, however, found that as a matter of fact possession was so given. The trial Court dismissed the suit. The District Judge however, on appeal has decreed it merely on the ground that the land in suit was not covered by the decree.

This decree of the District Judge is attacked in this second appeal on the ground that under S 47, Civil P. C., the respondent was not entitled to institute a suit for recovery of the property from the decree-holder possession whereof had admittedly been given to the latter in execution of the decree. I hold that S. 47 clearly bars the present suit Sharfu v. Mir Khan (1) is an authority in support of that proposition.

The respondent then asked me to convert this suit into an application under S. 47, Civil P. C. Having regard, however, to the fact that the present suit was instituted in a different Court to that in which the execution proceedings took place, I have decided not to adopt this course. I leave it to the plaintiff, if so advised, to apply to the competent Court under S. 47, Civil P. C. It will then be for that Court to decide whether benefit should be given to the plaintiff of the provisions of S. 5, Lim Act owing to the pendency of the suit out of which this appeal has arisen.

I accept this appeal, set aside the decree of the District Judge and dismiss the plaintiff's suit but leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit by a landlord to eject his tenants and for recovery of arrears of rent. The suit was dismissed by the trial Court but decreed on appeal by the District Judge The material findings of the learned District Judge were : (i) the tenancy was for an indefinite period and the lease of the year 1890 by which it was created, did not require registration, (ii) that the landlord had a right to eject the tenant in the case of non-payment of rent, but the right had not been exercised and hence the tenancy had not been determined although no rent had been paid for a long period and (iii) that the death of the original tenant who executed the lease of 1890 did not determine the tenancy and that the status of his legal representatives the present defendants was also that of tenants. The learned counsel for the appellants has challenged the correctness of these findings. He has argued in the first place that the lease being for an indefinite period required registration. He has cited Karim Bakhsh-Taj-ud-din v. Natha Singh (1) and Mania v. Lallubhai (2) in support of this contention. The former ruling is distinguishable from Umar Bakhsh v. Baldeo Singh (3) on which the learned District Judge has relied. The latter ruling appears to me to be in point. In Karim Bakhsh Taj-ud-din v. Natha Singh (1) the landlord had no right to eject the tenant so long as he paid his rent monthly. In the present instance, all that the lease says, is that the landlord will be entitled to eject the tenant in the case of non-payment of rent. It does not appear to me to follow from the wording of the lease that the tenant could not be ejected on any ground at all so long as he paid his monthly rent. The other ruling relied upon by the learned counsel is a very brief one. It seems to be opposed to the view taken in Umar Bakhsh v. Baldeo Singh (3). The view taken by the learned District Judge is also supported by a ruling of this Court Attra v. Mangal Singh (4) in which a lease containing similar terms was held to be not compulsorily registrable under S. 17, Registration Act. I accordingly agree with the learned District Judge that the lease was for an indefinite period but did not require registration, as it was not in express terms for a period exceeding one year.

On the above finding it is unnecessary to discuss various authorities cited by the learned counsel which only apply to leases for a fixed period. It is well-established that mere non-payment of rent for a long period does not terminate a tenancy. No other circumstances sufficient to establish determination of the tenancy more than 12 years before the present suit have been proved. The landlord had a right to eject the tenants in the event of non payment of rent, but he did not exercise it. The mere fact that the landlord had such right could not cause a forfeiture of the tenancy, unless and until the landlord chose to exercise that right (cf. S. 111 (g), Transfer of Property Act). It was urged that for the purposes of limitation time runs against a lessor from the date of breach of the conditions of the lease and not from the date when he decides to take advantage of it. Reference was made in this connexion to p. 429 of the Commentaries on the Transfer of Property Act by Shephard and Brown. But the proposition laid down therein has reference to Art. 143, Limitation Act. The learned counsel has himself argued the case on the assumption that it was governed by Art. 139. But even if Art. 143 were to be applied, it would appear from the terms of the lease that the landlord would have a recurring cause of action on the non-payment of rent every month.

It was finally argued that on the death of the original tenant at any rate the tenancy came to an end as the lease was not for a fixed period and was therefore, not heritable. No authority in point was cited in support of this contention. Reference was made to the definition of a lease, but it does not appear to follow therefrom that a lease for an indefinite period is not heritable. S. 111, Transfer of Property Act, also does not lay down that a lease terminates on the death of a lessee. The general rule is that a lease is heritable (c.f. Gour's Law of Transfer in British India, Vol. 3, para. 2804.)

I find no good ground in the circumstances of the case to hold that the tenancy determined on the death of the original lessee. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Appeal No. 2069 of 1927, Decided on 11th September 1928, from decree of Dist. Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 11th April 1927.

Contract Act, S. 8—Surety definitely asking by letter to advance morey—Communication of acceptance not contemplated—Advancement of money itself amounts to acceptance of the proposal of guarantee.

Where a surety definitely asks a creditor by letter to advance money to a debtor upto certain amount and holds himself responsible for that amount, and where the letter does not contemplate any communication of acceptance the advancement of money amounts to acceptance of the proposal and the contract of guarantee is complete: McIver v. Richardson, 1 M. & S. 557, Dist. [P 939 C 1]

Mehr Chand Mahajan—for Appellants.

Govind Ram Khanna—for Respondents.

Judgment.—This was a money suit for recovery of Rs. 540 against one Imam Din and his surety Raghbir Singh. The trial Court passed a decree against both, but on appeal the learned District Judge held that Raghbir Singh's liability as a surety was not established and modified the decree accordingly so as to exonerate Raghbir Singh. From this decision plaintiff has filed a second appeal.

The only point for decision is whether Raghbir Singh was legally liable as a surety for the loan advanced to Imam Din. It is alleged by the plaintiff that the loan was advanced on the basis of a letter given by Raghbir Singh to Imam Din, which was brought to the plaintiff by the latter. The letter ran as follows:

Please pay to my tenant Imam Din whatever money he requires and settle your account every harvest, because he would require money for agricultural and seed purposes. I am responsible for the amonnt borrowed by Imam Din. Please do not pay more than Rs. 500. However as the requirement would be more for potato seed, hence do not pay him more than Rs. 1,000.

The learned District Judge held that this letter contained a proposal which should have been accepted by the plaintiff and that as no acceptance was communicated with in a reasonable time no contract was completed. The contention of the learned counsel for the appellant is that the contract was completed by the performance of the conditions mentioned in the letter, namely, the advance of money to Imam Din. The learned counsel for the respondent on the other hand relied on a ruling McIver v. Richardson (1) quoted in Anson's Law of Contract at p. 31 according to which a contract of guarantee is not complete unless the acceptance of the offer is communicated to the proposer. In that case, however, the surety had only expressed his willingness to guarantee advances made to the debtor. In the present case the terms of the letter are much more explicit. The surety definitely asked the plaintiff to advance the money to his tenant Imam Din from time to time and held himself responsible for any amount so advanced up to Rs. 1,000. The letter does not appear to contemplate any communication of acceptance at all. According to Ss. 7 and 8, Contract Act, it would appear that the performance of the conditions of the letter would in itself amount to acceptance of the proposal in the circumstances of the case. I, therefore, hold that the contract of guarantee was completed by the advances made to Imam Din by the plaintiff.

The learned counsel for the respondent attempted to support the decree of the learned District Judge on certain other grounds. Firstly he contended that all the terms of the proposal were not complied with inasmuch as the plaintiff was asked to settle accounts every harvest, but he failed to do so. It does not, however, appear from the wording of the letter that this was an essential condition of the proposal. The plaintiff was no doubt asked to settle accounts every harvest but the only reason given for this was that the tenant would require money for agricultural and seed purposes. The surety did not say in the letter that unless the accounts were settled every harvest he would not be responsible. The second contention put forward was that there was a material alteration in the document in respect of the date and hence the document cannot be acted upon. It is true that there was a pencil alteration in the date, but the learned District Judge has not been able to find definitely who was responsible for it. In any case he does not consider that the plaintiff was responsible for the alteration. Further it appears to me that the alteration was not material in the circumstances of the case. The alteration was in respect of the date of the letter, but the letter contemplated advances from harvest to harvest and not within any fixed time after the date of the letter.

Lastly it was contended that the contract of suretyship came to an end because the creditor extended time. There is, however, no evidence to show that any extension of time was definitely given by the plaintiff. It is true that the accounts are not shown to have been settled every harvest but this does not necessarily mean that the plaintiff voluntarily gave any extension of time.

After fully considering the facts of the case and the arguments advanced I am of opinion that the contract of suretyship was complete and Raghbir Singh was rightly held liable by the trial Court I accordingly accept the appeal with costs and restore the decree of the trial Court.

Addison, J.—The plaintiff sued his mother for possession of land which came from his maternal grandfather Yara. Yara died in March 1886, and the plaintiff's case was that he made a will in 1881 bequeathing his land to his widow for life and thereafter to the sons of his daughters. The widow of Yara, that is, the grandmother of the plaintiff, remained in possession up to some three years before the suit when she gifted the land to her daughter, the plaintiff's mother, in whose favour it was mutated. Yara had two other daughters but they have had no issue. The collaterals of Yara sued the mother of the plaintiff for possession of the land on the ground that they were the heirs and were entitled to succeed in preference to the plaintiff's mother. They obtained a decree for possession against the mother but did not, however, execute this decree within limitation and when they applied to do so it was held that the execution was barred by time.

The plaintiff's case further was that the will in question had been concealed for some time that Mt. Fatima, his mother's sister at the time of her death gave it to the plaintiff He, therefore, claimed that he was entitled to possession against his mother in accordance with the will as he was the only son of the three daughters of Yara and he also joined the collaterals as defendants in the suit as they had at one time obtained a decree against his mother which they were, however, unable to execute. It was common ground between the parties that they were Qadri Chisties and followed agricultural custom. The collaterals, however, contended that under custom there was no right of will and that, in any case, the plaintiff could derive no benefit under the will as he was not born at the time of Yara's death. They also denied the factum of the will.

Both Courts held that Yara deceased made the alleged will and that under custom he had the power to bequeath his land by a will. The trial Court further found that the will was not invalid under custom for the reason that it was in favour of a person who was alive, and, after her of persons who were not then born but who were born before the first person died. The learned District Judge, however, on appeal, after having upheld the decision of the lower Court that under Customary Law, Yara was competent to make a will devising his property, suddenly went on to decide that under Mahomedan law the will was void as the bequest was made to a child not born. He, accordingly, accepted the appeals of the collaterals and dismissed the suit against them leaving the decree against the mother to stand. Against this decision the minor plaintiff has preferred a second appeal and has also put in a revision petition to the effect that the lower appellate Court should be directed to grant a certificate under S. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act, for further appeal.

The learned District Judge clearly erred in law in holding that in accordance with Mahomedan law, the will could not take effect because the second person to succeed under it was not born at the time of the death of the testator, seeing that both sides claimed that they followed Customary Law. The trial Court held that such a devise was valid under Customary Law and in this connexion discussed certain evidence. The value of this evidence has not been determined by the lower appellate Court and in fact it is not even mentioned by it. In these circumstances the lower appellate Court had certainly no power to assume that the principles of Mahomedan law applied to wills which the testator had power to make under Customary Law merely because the parties were Mussalmans by religion. In this case the power to will is established under Customary Law and obviously the limits to such power should be looked for in Customary Law, at least in the first instance. What should be done if the Customary Law is silent on this point does not arise at this stage and need not be discussed as it may never arise. Both counsel agreed that for these reasons this second appeal must be accepted and the appeal returned to the District Judge to decide the question in the way described. In this view of the case there is no necessity for a certificate under S. 41, Punjab Courts Act. I would, therefore, dismiss the revision petition as being unnecessary but would leave the parties to bear their own costs in it and I would accept the appeal, set aside the order of the District Judge and remand the appeal to him to be decided in accordance with law, as indicated above. Court-fee in this Court will be refunded. Other costs will be in the discretion of the lower appellate Court.

Judgment.—The pedigree-table of the parties in this case is as follows:

[See p. 942 for pedigree-table.]

On 12th July 1924, Lachmi Narain died leaving considerable landed property (about 700 bighas of land, two gardens and houses) in the Ambala District and a house and a commission agency shop at Delhi. In December 1924, Lala Jagan Nath applied for the guardianship of the person and property of his minor children. The application was first instituted in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ambala, but was subsequently transferred to the Court of the District Judge on the application of Mt. Chandrawati, the widow of Lachhmi Narain. Mt. Chandrawati opposed the application of Jagan Nath on the grounds that she was the proper guardian of the minor children and was able to manage satisfactorily the property left by the deceased. The learned District Judge has, however, appointed Jagan Nath guardian of the person of Mt. Rallawati and Mahabir Prashad and of the property of Balkishen and Mahabir Parshad by order dated 10th November 1922. From this order Mt. Chandrawati has appealed.

The two main contentions urged on behalf of the appellant were that no necessity for the appointment of a guardian has been established and that Lala Jagan Nath is, in any case, not a suitable person to be appointed a guardian. As regards the first question, prima facie there are circumstances in this case which indicate the necessity of appointing a suitable guardian for the welfare of the minors. The appellant is a young widow, aged 20 or 21, with little or no education and no experience of business. The deceased has left landed property and a commission agency business, in which a capital of over 2 lacs is said to have been invested. The appellant has some relations who could help her but the evidence on the record shows that they are in straitened circumstances, the whole of their proverty being under mortgage (vide P. W. No. 9). The respondent has besides produced witnesses including near relations of the deceased, who have deposed that Mt. Chandrawati is incapable of managing the property satisfactorily. It is significant that Mt Chandrawati has made no attempt to rebut this evidence by proving that she has made satisfactory arrangements for the management of the property and that the management has been, as a matter of fact, successful during the period of about three years or so that has elapsed since the death of the deceased.

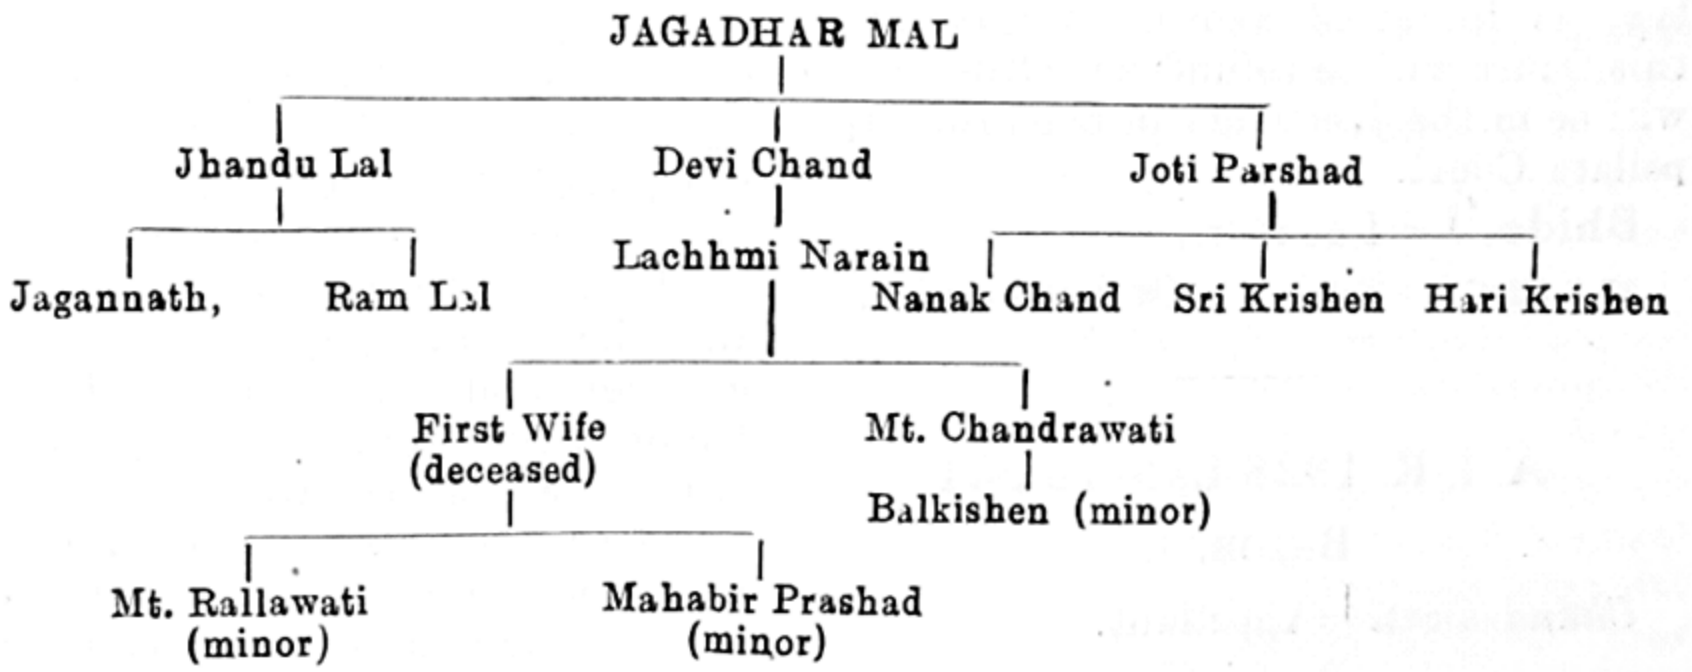
As regards the guardianship of the person of the minors the learned District Judge has only appointed, Lala Jagan Nath to be the guardian of the stepchildren of the appellant. There is some oral evidence on the record about the ill-treatment of these children, which again stands unrebutted.

As regards the litigation with Joti Parshad's sons, one of them, viz., Nanak Chand (P. W. 7). has appeared as a witness on behalf of Jagan Nath and deposed that the suit against Jagan Nath had been filed at the instigation of an enemy and that Jagan Nath is the best person to look after the property of the minors. There is no other evidence on the record with respect to that litigation. It is true that a large sum of money was found to be due to Joti Parshad's sons and was not paid at once, but that may have been the result of circumstances beyond the control of Jagan Nath and not of any mala fides on his part. Lastly the fact that Jagan Nath has a rival business concern cannot by itself be considered to be sufficient to disqualify him for the appointment. The evidence on the record shows that Jagan Nath has advanced large sums of money for repayment of the debts due from the deceased and has also helped in the realization of his debts. Moreover, it must be remembered that his management of the property will now be subject to supervision by the Court and I have no doubt that the fact Jagan Nath owns a rival concern will not be lost sight of in the scrutiny of the accounts from time to time.



The next question for consideration is whether Lala Jagan Nath is a suitable person for appointment as a guardian. It was urged that his application is not bona fide, that he misappropriated the property of the minor sons of Joti Parshad, which led to litigation and finally that he has a rival business concern of his own at Delhi and cannot, therefore, be expected to look after the business of the minors, with due regard to their interests. I do not see any good grounds for holding that the application of Lala Jagan Nath is not a bona fide one. He is a near relative of the deceased and the evidence on the record shows that his relations with the deceased were amicable and that during his last days, the deceased had actually entrusted to him the management of his business. The fact that the application was made in the first instance at Ambala does not indicate any mala fides on his part, as the deceased left considerable landed property in the Ambala District.

The learned counsel for the appellant cited Sarala Sundari Debi v. Hazari Dasi Debi (1), Partab Kaur v. Jawala Shah (2), Deoki v. Bakhat Mal (3) and Sundar Moni v. Bangsidhar Patnaik (4) in support of his arguments. The first ruling seems to have no bearing at all on the facts of this case. In Partab Kaur v. Jawala Shah (2) where the mother was appointed a guardian in preference to an uncle, the latter was found to have been not on good terms with the father of the minor. The minor was, moreover, an infant; the applicant was the child's own mother, and there was no evidence to show that the mother was incapable of managing the property left by the father. In Deoki v. Bakhat Mal (3) it was held that if the mother was actually managing the property satisfactorily no other guardian need be appointed In the present instance, the appellant has carefully refrained from producing any evidence about her management of the property. In Sundar Moni Dasi v. Bangsidar Patnaik (4) it was laid down that it is not an inflexible rule of law that a pardanashin lady should not be appointed guardian of the property and person of a minor. But each case must obviously depend on its circumstances. In the present instance I do not think the appointment of the appellant as a guardian will be in the interest of the minors.

Finally, it was urged that the security ordered to be furnished by Jagan Nath, Rs. 30,000 is inadequate. But there is no evidence on the record to show that the annual income will exceed this amount. I do not think it was necessary to demand security equivalent to the full value of the property left by the deceased. The guardian will, of course, not be able to alienate any property without the sanction of the Court. The Court can, moreover, ask for further security if and when it thinks fit. I see no reason at present to interfere with the discretion exercised by the learned District Judge in this matter.

I dismissed the appeal with costs.

J. N. Talwar—for Appellant.

Judgment.—This appeal was heard ex parte as no one has appeared on behalf of the respondent.

During the course of the execution proceedings two buffaloes, a house, a vacant site, a karah and a belna belonging to the appellant were attached. The appellant objected to the attachment on the ground that the property was exempt from attachment under S. 60, Civil P. C. The objection has been upheld in respect of the house, but has been disallowed by the learned District Judge in respect of the rest of the property. The judgment-debtor has filed a second appeal.

As regards the buffaloes, the learned District Judge has recorded a finding after consideration of the evidence that the animals were not used for agricultural purposes. On the face of this finding no second appeal is competent in respect of the attachment of the buffaloes. With respect to the attachment of the karah and the belna, the learned District Judge remarks that sugarcane was not exempted under the provisions of S 61, Civil P. C., by a notification and that when sugarcane itself was not exempt, the juice of sugarcane or gur manufactured therefrom, could not be exempt and that, therefore, it followed that any machinery for manufacturing gur would also not be exempt. I am unable to see that S. 61, Civil P. C., has any bearing on the point at issue. That section only lays down that the Local Government may by general or special order declare that such portion of agricultural produce or of any class of agricultural produce as may appear to the Local Government to be necessary for the purpose of providing until the next harvest for the due cultivation of the land and for the support of the judgment-debtor and his family shall be exempted from liability to attachment and sale. In the present instance, the point for decision was whether the karah and the sugar-cane were exempt from attachment as implements of husbandry. It has been held by the Bombay High Court in Lakshman Mhasu v. Narhari Dadasi (1) that a charak (sugar-cane press) and a kadhai used by an agriculturist for the purpose of extracting sugar juice from sugar cane from his own field are implements of husbandry within the meaning of Cl. (b), S. 60, Civil P. C. In the present instance also it appears that the press and the karah are used by the appellant for making gur from sugar-cane grown in his own field. I am, therefore, of opinion that these articles were not liable to attachment and sale.

As regards the open site, it appears from the plans on the record that it is of considerable size and separate from the house itself. It does not, therefore, appear to fall within the purview of Cl. (c), S. 60, Civil P. C.

I accordingly accept the appeal (ex parte) only with respect to the attachment of belna and karah and direct their release. Appellant will get one third of his costs.

Civil Mics. Appln. No. 89 of 1927, Decided on 22nd June 1927.

Income-Tax Act, S. 66 (3)—Whether a blank return is a return or not within S. 23 (4) is a question of law—Income-tax Act, S. 23 (4).

The assessee was served with a notice under S. 22 (2) of the Act, calling upon him to furnish a return of income. He signed a prescribed form and, refraining from making any entries in the various columns, wrote the word "blank" against the item "total." This was accompanied by a covering letter, in which it was explained that the assessee carried on no business in the place and received no income at that place, and that the writing of the word "blank" on the prescribed form meant that the assessee had no income of any kind whatsoever.

Held: that the question whether such a return accompanied by such a covering letter was "no return" for the purposes of assessment under S. 23 (4) is one of law which should be referred to the High Court. [P 945 C 1]

Mehr Chand Mahajan — for Petitioners.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal—for Respondents.

Broadway, Ag. C. J.—The firm of Messrs. Rattan Chand-Duni Chand have certain premises in the Guru Bazar in Amritsar. They have also business in Kashmir. They were served with a notice under S. 22 (2), Income-tax Act, calling upon them to furnish a return of their income. They signed a prescribed form and, refraining from making any entries in the various columns, wrote the word "blank" against the item "total." This "return" was sent by them to the Income-tax Officer with a covering letter, in which it was explained that they carried on no business in Amritsar and received no income at that place, and that the writing of the word "blank" on the prescribed form meant that the firm in Amritsar had no income of any kind whatsoever. The Income-tax Officer then issued a notice to this firm under sub-Cl. (4), S. 22, calling upon them to produce all their accounts in connexion with their business. This notice was issued on 15th August 1925, but was not served. A similar notice was issued on 9th September 1925, but was served on a wrong person with the result that another one had to be issued on 12th September 1925, of which service was duly effected. A member of the firm appeared before the Income tax Officer, and there made certain statements to the effect that they kept no accounts of any dealings they might have had in Amritsar and that the main accounts in any case were in Kashmir. After further time had been given by the Income-tax Officer (and it may be that another notice issued calling for account books regarding which there is some question), the Income-tax Officer treated the case as a "no return case" and made the assessment under S. 23 (4). This assessment was appealed against and ultimately taken up to the Income-tax Commissioner who was asked either to review the proceedings or under the provisions of S. 66 (2), Income-tax Act, refer certain questions of law to this Court. The Income-tax Commissioner held that there was no question of law involved which could be referred to this Court, with the result that Messrs. Rattan Chand-Duni Chand have moved this Court for a mandamus under Cl. 3, S. 66.

It appears to me that in the present case one question of law does arise, a question which admittedly forms the basis of all the other points taken by the petitioners in their petition. This question is whether a " return " such as was made in this case namely, the signing of a prescribed form without any date with all the various columns left blank and the word " blank " written against the item " total," accompanied by a covering letter such as has been referred to above is " no return " for the purposes of assessment under S. 23 (4). I think that this question should be referred to this Court and I would direct accordingly. No order as to costs.

The accused had obtained a decree against three judgment-debtors. Two out of them had subsequently applied to be adjudicated as insolvents. The accused got his name entered in the list of creditors and proved his debts against them. He then proceeded against the third and obtained from him a fresh bond. Subsequently the Official Receiver made payment to the accused.

Held : that the receipt of the amount cannot in any way render the accused criminally liable. It is a matter for adjustment in a civil Court. [P 945 C 1]

Judgment.—This is an application under S. 439, Criminal P. C., on behalf of Amar Nath accused, praying that the charges under S. 417/384 framed against him by the Tehsildar-Magistrate of Shakargarh be quashed.

The relevant facts are that Achhru father of Babu Ram, complainant, owed to the petitioner a sum of Rs. 300 on a bond carrying interest at 9 per cent per annum and payable by annual instalments of Rs. 25. Default having been made in paying the first three instalments, Amar Nath instituted a suit for recovery of Rs. 75, the amount of these three instalments, plus Rs. 55 as interest, or Rs. 130 in all, against Achhru and his two sons Relu and Babu. On 6th May 1926, an ex-parte decree for the sum claimed together with Rs. 21-6 costs was passed in favour of Amar Nath against all the three defendants. Some time after the decree-holder, Amar Nath took out proceedings in execution of his decree and got warrants of arrest issued against Relu judgment-debtor only. In the meantime Relu and his father Achhru had applied to the Insolvency Court for being adjudicated as insolvents. In those proceedings Amar Nath appeared and got himself entered in the schedule as a creditor of Achhru and Relu insolvents, to the extent of the amount of the decree aforesaid and the balance due on the original bond. Later on he applied to execute the decree against the third judgment-debtor Babu Ram and a warrant for his arrest was issued. This warrant was executed on 7th November 1927, when a compromise was arrived at between Babu Ram and the decree-holder and a fresh bond for Rs. 155, the amount of the decree, costs of the suit and costs of the execution was executed by Babu Ram in favour of the decree-holder payable by instalments of Rs. 5 per mensem each.

Subsequently, on 20th December 1927, the Receiver, who was administering the estates of Achhru and Relu insolvents, sent by money order the sum of Rs. 41-14-0 to Amar Nath as his pro rata share of the assets of the aforesaid insolvents. The next day, i, e., 21st December 1927, Babu Ram lodged a complaint under S. 417, I. P. C., against the decree-holder Amar Nath alleging that the accused had cheated him by first getting the amount of the decree entered in the schedule of creditors of Achhru and Relu insolvents and then executing the decree against Babu Ram and getting a bond executed by him on 7th November 1927. After recording the evidence of the complainant, the petition-writer and Achhru insolvent, the learned Magistrate framed charges against the petitioner under S. 417/384.

The petitioner has preferred a revision to this Court urging that on the allegations made in the complaint and on the facts as disclosed in the prosecution evidence no criminal offence under Ss. 417/384 or any other section of the Penal Code or any other law has been disclosed and that the proceedings be quashed.

Mr. Devi Dayal for the respondent objects that this Court ought not to interfere on the revision side at this stage. It is, however, well established that the power of this Court to take action under S. 439 by quashing proceedings is undoubted, though such power will be exercised in exceptional cases only. See Emperor v Bishen Das (1), Tahiru v. Jallu (2) and Tarak Singh v. Emperor (3).

Mr. Devi Dayal does not controvert the facts as disclosed above. Now there can be no doubt that on the facts as alleged by the complainant himself, no criminal offence is disclosed and it will be an abuse of the process of the Court to allow the criminal proceedings to continue in a case like this. The petitioner had obtained a decree against three judgment-debtors and if two of them had subsequently applied to be adjudicated as insolvents and the creditor had proved his debt against these two, there was nothing in law to prohibit him from proceeding to recover his decree from the third. The payment by the Receiver was made subsequent to the execution of the bond by Babu Ram, and receipt of this amount cannot in any way render the petitioner criminally liable. It is a matter for adjustment in a civil suit, when the petitioner sues the complainant on the bond.

It is noteworthy that though the complaint was under S. 417 only the learned Magistrate added a charge of extortion under S. 384 also. I cannot see on what grounds such a charge could possibly be supported.

I accept the petition, quash the charges and set aside the proceedings against the petitioner.

Criminal Revision No. 908 of 1928, Decided on 5th July 1928, reported by Addl. Sessions Judge, Lahore.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 537—Cantonment Board lodging a complaint signed by execution officer filing no authority but having power to file such complaint—Affidavit filed in the revision Court showing that he had an authority to do so—Omission to file is curable—Contonment Act, S. 266.

A complaint was lodged by the Cantonment Board, through a Sub-Overseer, signed by the Executive Officer of the Board. The Executive Officer never appeared before the Magistrate. Sub-Overseer did not hold any power of attorney on behalf of the Board. No power of authority was filed to show that the Executive Officer had any authority to lodge such a complaint. On conviction the accused filed a revision. The Executive Officer filed an affidavit that he had an authority to file the complaint.

Held, that failure to file the authority is an omission curable under S. 537; 116 P. L. R. 1907, Foll. [P 947 C 1]

* (b) Criminal P. C., S. 556—Scope.

Cantonment Magistrate can try a complaint lodged by Cantonment Board even though the Magistrate is a member of the Board. [P 947 C 1]

Tulsi Das—for Petitioner.

Ram Lal Anand—for the Crown.

Facts.—The petitioner was convicted by the Cantonment Magistrate under S. 118, Cantonment Act, for having stacked some bricks on the foot-path and was fined Rs. 5. The revision is forwarded to the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court on the following :—

Grounds.—the complaint was lodged by the Cantonment Board, Lahore, through Alaud-Din, Sub-Overseer. It was signed by the Executive Officer of the Cantonment Board. The Executive Officer never appeared before the Magistrate. Alaud-Din does not hold any power-of-attorney on behalf of the Cantonment Board and neither any general or special order on behalf of that body was shown to the Court that the Executive Officer was authorized to prosecute the petitioner.

S. 266, Cantonment Act, clearly provides that no Court shall proceed to the trial of any offence, punishable under this Act, except on the complaint of the Cantonment Authorities or a person authorized by the authorities by a general or special order in this behalf. The Cantonment Authority is defined in S. 2 (5) as a Board and the constitution of the Cantonment Board is given in S. 14. An Executive Officer is not a member of the Cantonment Board. His duties are explained in S. 24 and he is required to perform those duties as the Cantonment Board may impose upon him. His special powers are given in S. 25 and, in my opinion, he too must have a special power-of-attorney from the Board or at least file in Court a copy of a resolution passed by the Board which could entitle him to lodge a prosecution. In this case therefore, the complaint was not launched by a competent person.

It is further brought to my notice that the Cantonment Magistrate who tries this case, was also a member of the Cantonment Board and the learned counsel for the respondent has admitted that this fact by itself excluded the Magistrate to take cognizance of this offence and to try this case. The case should, therefore, be remanded for a fresh trial and should be heard by a Magistrate who is not a member of the Cantonment Board. The Executive Officer would be required by the Magistrate to show him a special or general power of the Board which had authorized him to lodge this prosecution.

Order.—The case was tried without any objection being raised that the Executive Officer had no authority to file a complaint. There is now an affidavit on the record that he had such authority and that the Magistrate and petitioner knew of this. In these circumstances it is too late to say that the authority should have been on the record. At the most it was an omission, curable under S. 537, Criminal P. C., and in any case as no prejudice has been shown, interference by me is unnecessary Ala Dya v. King-Emperor (1).

As regards the second point, there is no force in it. It was admitted that the Magistrate could try the case though a member of the Board. This may have been a ground for transfer at the most, but that was never asked for.

I decline to interfere. Let the records be returned.

Durga Das—for Appellant.

Ram Lal—for Respondent.

Judgment.—In this case four persons applied for probate of the will of Mrs. N. A. Cooper and a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 2895 was paid in for the said probate. The High Court granted the application for probate on 30th May 1924. On 19th July 1926, the Financial Commissioner passed an order under S. 19 (g), Court-fees Act, to recover from the plaintiff a penalty of Rs. 1437-11-0. The Collector in pursuance of this order directed the plaintiffs to remit Rupees 1437-11 within 15 days or steps would be taken to recover the said sum by attachment. Thereupon the plaintiffs, the four executors brought a suit for a declaration to the effect that the order of the Financial Commissioner was ultra vires; that the plaintiffs had paid a full Court-fee stamp as required by law and prayed for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant the Secretary of State, from enforcing the order of the Financial Commissioner.

The trial Court held that the civil Courts had jurisdiction on a plea being taken to that effect and further that the procedure of the revenue authorities was not in accordance with the provisions of law and consequently the order was ultra vires and without authority. It therefore decreed the plaintiff's suit for declaration as prayed for by them. For some reason or other no order as to perpetual injunction was granted It may have been because on the plaintiff's prayer for an ad interim injunction the Government Advocate who appeared on behalf of the Secretary of State had undertaken not to execute the order until the Court passed a decree.

Upon appeal by the Secretary of State, only one of the plaintiffs executors was impleaded. The learned Additional District Judge evidently did not have his attention drawn to this fact at the hearing of the appeal but he noticed in his judgment that only one of the plaintiffs had been made a respondent. He held that the civil Courts had no jurisdiction to go into the question at all and that the order of the Financial Commissioner was not ultra vires on account of failure to follow any procedure because according to him no procedure at all was prescribed by .the Act. The plaintiff, who was the sole respondent before the learned Additional District Judge, has come in appeal and his counsel contends that as a joint declaratory decree had been passed in favour of all the four executors, it was not open to the Secretary of State to implead only one in the appeal to the learned Additional District Judge and that the learned Additional District Judge was therefore wrong in accepting the appeal and dismissing the plaintiffs suit.

In my opinion this contention has force. The only reason for not impleading the other three executors urged before me is that owing to an oversight the names of the other three were omitted from the appeal. The fact, however, remains that if the judgment and the decree of the learned Additional District Judge were allowed to stand, there would be two inconsistent decrees, one holding that the order of the Financial Commissioner was ultra vires and the other holding that it was intra vires, and a long series of decisions have affirmed that the Courts are reluctant to allow any such inconsistency.

Further, the counsel for the appellant has cited Basir Sheikh v. Fazle Karim (1), Jogesh Chandra v. Bama Sundari Debi (2), and Sri Ramchandra Naik v. Hridoy Nath (3), in which it was held that it was not open for a person, who had obtained a joint decree against certain persons, to implead only some of them in appeal and that the fact that he had a right to drop his case against certain of them did not affect the question. The learned counsel for the Crown has contended that if the attention of the learned Additional District Judge had been drawn to the matter he might have taken action under O. 41, R. 20 or O. 41, R. 33, Civil P. C. It is conceded that at the time of the hearing the appeal against the others would have been time barred, and it is well known that O. 41, R. 20 should only be sparingly used in such cases. Secondly, as regards O. 41, R. 33, it has been held that that also should be sparingly used and it is only in cases where full justice cannot be done or where the appeal anyhow reopens the whole of the question decided that the powers given under O. 41, R. 33, should be exercised. In any case this was for the appellate Court to decide and no section has been pointed out to me by which I can now add the other parties as parties to the appeal before the District Judge. The learned counsel for the Crown has asked for a remand for this purpose to the District Judge; but in the circumstances I am not prepared to accede to this request because I consider that S. 19 (g), Court-fees Act does not at all apply to the facts of this case. The contest in this case was as to whether certain property which had been put in Annexure B on the ground that it was trust property was or was not trust property. Section 19 (g), Court-fees Act, has to be read with S. 19 (e) of that Act, the words used being identical, and the sections providing for similar cases. S. 19 (e) shows clearly that it refers to a wrong estimate of the property arising either from a mistake or from the fact that a certain property is not known to have belonged to the deceased. The learned counsel for the Crown contends that the words "not known at the time that some particular part of the estate belonged to the deceased" include both a mistake of fact as well as a mistake of law. If the word "estimate" does really cover both, then similarly the word "estimate" in S. 19 (h) also covers similar mistake and, therefore, the procedure is as prescribed for the revenue authorities where there is contest as to whether there is or is not such a mistake. If, as I am inclined to hold, the question does not at all include mistakes of law as in the present case, the matter is covered by S. 19 (i) and it would be for this Court to have decided before granting probate as to whether the property was or was not rightly included in Sch. B. I am fortified in this by reference to Desu Manavala Chetty, In the matter of (4), where it seems to have been assumed that the question whether a certain property was or was not trust property would come under S. 19 (i) and a general survey of the sections of the Act leads me to the same conclusion. But, be that as it may, in such a case even if the first view is adopted the order of the Financial Commissioner would be ultra vires. I, therefore accept this appeal and restore the decree of the first Court with costs throughout.

First Appeal No. 2444 of 1922, Decided on 11th September 1928, from the decree of the Sr. Sub-Judge, Mianwali, D/- 11th July 1922.

(a) Contract Act, S. 16—Exorbitant rate of interest by itself is not sufficient to infer undue influence.

(b) Contract Act, S. 73—Grain debt—No time fixed for payment—Rate of grain for damages is the rate on date of bond and not date of suit.

It is settled law that the amount due to a plaintiff either on a debt or for damages for breach of contract or in tort, is to be determined according to the rate prevailing at the date when the cause of action arises. Where, therefore, no time for repayment of a grain loan is fixed in the bond, the debt is payable on demand and consequently the quantity of grain secured by the bond must be valued at the rate prevailing on date of bond: A. I. R. 1921 Cal. 239; A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 778, Rel. on. [P 951 C 1]

Jagan Nath Aggarwal and Lal Chand Malhotra—for Appellant.

S. R. Laul and Qabul Chand for Har Gopal—for Respondents.

Tek Chand, J.—On 6th July 1916 the defendants-respondents executed a bond in favour of the plaintiff-appellant acknowledging liability for the sum of Rs. 67 received in cash, 218 maunds and 12½ seers of wheat and a certain quantity of gram (with which we are not concerned in the present litigation) and promising to pay interest at 18¾ per cent per annum on the cash amount and at Sudh Panchanti (37½ per cent per annum) on the grain. No period for the repayment of the loan was fixed.

On 21st March 1922, the plaintiff instituted the present suit admitting that the quantity of gram had been repaid and claiming Rs. 6,000 as due to him as follows:—

		Rs.	a.	p.
(a) Cash : Principal		67	0	0
Interest at 18¾ %		72	0	0
Rs. ...		139	0	0
(b) Wheat Principal 218 Mds. 12½ Seers Interest 470 Mds. 12½ Seers. Total 688 Mds. 25 Seers. at Rs. 9-4-0 per maund which was the market price on the date of the suit; ...		6,369	12	6
(c) Bhusa : 116 maunds at 1 per maund		116	0	0
Rs. ...		6,624	12	6
Remitted		624	12	6
Amount claimed ...		6,000	0	0

The defendants admitted execution of the bond but denied that it had been executed for consideration. They further pleaded that the rate of interest and the other conditions mentioned in the bond were penal and exorbitant and "the same constituted undue pressure." They also alleged certain repayments and stated that nothing was in reality due to the plaintiff.

The learned Senior Subordinate Judge found that the bond was for consideration, that nothing had been proved to have been repaid, but that interest claimed on the quantity of grain advanced was exorbitant. He accordingly allowed interest on cash and grain at a uniform rate of 18½ per cent per annum, and valuing the quantity of wheat thus due at 10½ seers per rupee, the rate prevailing on the date of the bond, granted to the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 1,973-13-3 with proportionate costs. He futher directed that the decretal amount be paid in six half-yearly instalments.

The plaintiff, being dissatisfied with this decree, has preferred a first appeal to this Court and prays that the decretal amount be enhanced to Rs. 6,000, the sum claimed in the plaint.

The case originally came up for hearing before Harrison and Dalip Singh, JJ. who framed the following additional issue and remanded it to the trial Court under O. 41, R. 25, Civil P. C., for enquiry and finding thereon:

Did the plaintiff not exercise undue influence over the father of the defendants and thereby induce him to execute Ex. P-1?

On the case coming up for final disposal before us, it was conceded by both sides, that there was no dispute now relating to the amount of cash advanced and the interest due thereon. The points debated before us are: (a) whether the plaintiff has succeeded in discharging the onus of the issue aforesaid, and if so at what rate should interest be allowed on the quantity of wheat for which liability had been acknowledged by the defendants in the bond and (b) whether the price of the wheat is to be calculated at the market rate on the date of the execution of the bond or on the date of the institution of the suit.

After a careful examination of the evidence led by the parties before and after remand, and, after giving full consideration to the arguments addressed by the learned counsel on both sides, we are of opinion that the plaintiff has succeeded in discharging the onus of the issue and in establishing that no undue influence was in fact exercised by him on the defendants. Both the scribe and the attesting witness gave evidence at the trial and deposed that the transaction was a perfectly straightforward one. The defendants were unable to elicit anything in cross-examination to shake the credit of these witnesses. Except for the small sum of Rs. 67 which was advanced in cash, the rest of the consideration consisted of the grain due on previous dealings between the parties, which were supported either by bonds executed by one or other of the defendants or by entries in the plaintiff's bahis thumb-marked by defendant 1. It was not alleged, much less proved, that any of these prior transactions had been brought about improperly. The rate of interest charged in these anterior dealings is the same as that mentioned in the bond, and there appears to be no reason why the defendants should have agreed to acknowledge and renew their liability so often if the transactions between them and the plaintiff had originally or at any intermediate stage been tainted with undue influence.

It is further significant that none of the defendants went into the witness-box either before or after remand, to depose to the nature of the undue influence alleged to have been exercised upon him or the circumstances in which the bond in question was executed or the previous transactions had taken place. No particulars of the alleged undue pressure were given at the trial or in the arguments before us. Indeed all that was stated in the jawab dawa was that because the rate of interest was exorbitant, the same constituted undue pressure. Now it has been settled by the highest authority that the mere circumstance that a loan has been advanced at a very high or even an exorbitant rate of interest is by itself no ground for inferring undue influence [See Aziz Khan v. Duni Chand (1), Lala Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (2), Raghunath Prasad v. Sarju Prasad (3) and Poosathurai v. Kannappa Chettiar (4)]. Secondly there is ample evidence on the record (see e.g., the statements of P. W. 6 Jetha Nand and P. W. 10, Thakat Das supported by a number of documents) that 37½ per cent is the usual rate charged in this locality on grain transactions. Thirdly, it is significant that the defendants' own witnesses, D. W. 1 Muhammad Hayat, D. W. 2, Faiz Ahmad and D. W. 3, Ghulam Muhammad, admit that the rate normally charged on such transactions is 25 per cent. For the foregoing reasons we must hold that the transaction was not brought about by undue pressure, that the terms of the contract must be given effect to and interest allowed at the rate specified in the bond.

The next question for decision is the calculation of the price of wheat. Both counsel admit that the quantity due is 218 maunds 12½ seers as principal and 470 maunds 12½ seers as interest, as stated already, the point in controversy is whether (as claimed by the plaintiff) the value is to be fixed at Rs. 9 per maund, the rate prevailing in March 1922 when the suit was brought, or (as allowed by the lower Court) at 10½ seers a rupee, the market value of July 1916, when the bond was executed. After fully considering the matter and having regard to the terms of the bond and the averments in the plaint, we are of opinion that the appellant's contention in this behalf must fail. As stated already no time for repayment of the loan had been fixed in the bond. It was a debt payable on demand and consequently, the entire, both cash and grain, became due immediately on the execution of the bond. Indeed, as stated in para. 5 of the plaint itself, the cause of action accrued to the plaintiff on 6th July 1916, the date on which the bond was executed. This being so, it is conceded by Mr. Jagan Nath for the appellant that the principal quantity of wheat secured by the bond must be valued at the rate prevailing on that date. It is settled law that the amount due to a plaintiff either on a debt or for damages for breach of contract or in tort, is to be determined according to the rate prevailing at the date when the cause of action arose. For an application of this principle : see Owners of steamship Celia v. Owners of Steamship Volturno (5), Dakhari Tea Co Ltd., v. Assam-Bengal Ry. Co. Ltd. (6) and Muller Maclean and Co. v. S. M. Ataulla and Co. (7). In this view of the case, there can be no doubt that interest due on the "money-equivalent" of the quantity of grain advanced should be calculated at the rate allowed by us (37½ per cent) but not in grain, valued at the market rate prevailing on the date of suit. We are, therefore, of opinion that the lower Court was right in calculating the value of wheat at 10½ seers per rupee which, according to the Punjab Gazette for 1916, was the rate prevailing in the Mianwali market at the time.

The result is that the plaintiff is entitled to a sum of Rs. 889-7-0 as additional interest on the grain portion of the transaction over and above the amount allowed by the lower Court.

In the grounds of appeal objection was also taken to the lower Court having fixed instalments: but it was stated by Mr. Jagan Nath for the appellant and not denied by Mr. S. R. Laul for the respondents that, though the dates on which the various instalments fell due had passed, not a single pie had been paid so far by the defendants. They having failed to avail themselves of the concession allowed by the lower Court, it is not necessary for us to go into this question. We accordingly accept the appeal in part and pass a decree for is 2,663-4-3 with proportionate costs in both Courts. This amount will bear interest at six per cent per annum from the date of the decree of the lower Court till realization.

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Abdul Aziz and Moti Sagar—for Accused.

Order—Dhana Lal, respondent, was convicted by a Magistrate of the First Class under Ss. 420 and 468, I. P. C, for having cheated the Allahabad Bank Limited and the Central Bank of India Limited in respect of Rs. 34,000. In the case of Allahabad Bank he has been charged and convicted on three counts. In the case of Central Bank of India he has been convicted on one count. The sentence in the Allahabad Bank case in each of the counts is six months' rigorous imprisonment, to run consecutively and in the case of the Central Bank of India he has been awarded a similar sentence. The sentences in both the cases have been ordered to run concurrently. The convict has further been directed to pay fine of Rs. 200 on each count. This fine, if recovered, has been directed to be paid to the banks concerned in the manner mentioned in the judgment of the Magistrate. It is thus to be observed that the substantive term of imprisonment to which the convict has been sentenced is eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment.

An appeal was preferred by the convict to the Sessions Judge of Delhi who affirmed the conviction and dismissed the appeal. At the same time an application was made on behalf of the Crown to enhance the sentence. The learned Sessions Judge has referred the case to this Court with a recommendation that the sentence be enhanced so as to make it at least seven years' rigorous imprisonment.

It appears that before the reference by the Sessions Judge was received in this Court the convict applied for revision of the order of the Sessions Judge affirming his conviction. The petition was dismissed in limine by a learned Judge of this Court. The reference by the Sessions Judge was then placed before me for hearing and a claim was made on behalf of the respondent that he was entitled to show cause against his conviction. It was, however, contended on behalf of the Crown that this right the convict had lost by virtue of the dismissal of his petition for the revision of his conviction in this Court. I referred this question for decision by a Division Bench and the opinion of the learned Judges who heard that reference is that the convict is not entitled to show cause against his conviction. I must, therefore, determine the question of sentence accepting as correct the finding of the Court below that the respondent has committed the offence of which he has been convicted.

It appears from the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge that the convict has been guilty of systematic cheating for a long period and that the total amount in respect of which he has cheated the banks is something like two lacs against which it is alleged by his counsel that he left stationery and other property valued at Rs. 70,000 or Rs. 80,000 which has now deteriorated in value owing to the action of the banks in getting the police to take charge of the same and its consequent deterioration when stored by the police. It is also contended on behalf of the respondent that the time that has elapsed since the commission of the offence and the starting of the prosecution, and also the delay that has occurred in the completion of the trial, during most of which period the petitioner was in custody, should be taken into consideration. Finally the learned counsel cited some authorities of this Court which lay down that this Court will not ordinarily enhance the sentence merely on the ground that if it were seised of the trial of the accused it would have awarded a longer sentence of imprisonment than that awarded by the Magistrate but that this Court will interfere only where the sentence awarded by the trial Court is grossly inadequate.

Counsel for the Crown assents to this proposition and indeed it is not capable of being controverted. I have, therefore, to decide whether having regard to the principles laid down in the various authorities this is a fit case in which the sentence should be enhanced.

The authorities cited were Empress v. Chuni Lal (1), Khana v. Emperor (2) and Emperor v. Khairati Lal (3). It is not necessary for me to refer to these authorities in any detail as they depend on the peculiar facts proved in each. In considering the question whether the sentence awarded by the Magistrate in this case was grossly inadequate, I have to bear in mind the fact that the accused created confidence with the banks in his favour by deceitful means and made them to advance to him large amounts on the security of goods which, as a matter of fact, did not exist. He started bogus firms in different towns to which nominal goods were despatched and railway receipts in respect thereof were discounted by the banks. The accused finally took delivery of the goods himself and again sent them to some other or the same bogus firm and took an advance from the banks against the railway receipts in the same manner. Finally, during the course of similar transactions which continued for a considerable time he cheated the banks to the extent of Rs. 34,000 in connexion with the four transactions alone in respect of which he has been convicted. I have given due weight to the considerations suggested by the respondents' counsel.

I consider that under the circumstances the sentence of six month's rigorous imprisonment on each count and the total imprisonment of eighteen months is grossly inadequate in this case. At the same time in the case relating to the three counts in respect of which he has been convicted for cheating the Allahabad Bank, the learned trial Magistrate could not award a sentence of more than four years' rigorous imprisonment i. e., double the term of imprisonment that a Magistrate of the First Class is ordinarily competent to award. I consider that it is a fit case in which the maximum term that the Magistrate was competent to award should have been awarded. Accepting therefore, this reference I enhance the sentence passed on Dhana Lal in the case relating to the three counts on which he has been convicted for cheating the Allahabad Bank Limited to four years' rigorous imprisonment, and in the case relating to the Central Bank of India Limited to two years' rigorous imprisonment. As directed by the Magistrate the sentence in both the cases shall run concurrently. The sentence of fine is maintained.

Judgment.—The petitioner in this case was convicted under S. 457, I. P. C., and sentenced to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment by the learned Magistrate. On appeal, the learned Sessions Judge reduced the sentence for reasons which are not at all clear to me, to one year's rigorous imprisonment. In revision, I find on the record that one Asmat Ullah, who appeared as P. W. No. 5, was examined as a prosecution witness after the whole of the defence evidence had been recorded. This remarkable procedure seems not to have been objected to by anybody at the time. It is, however, clear that it is contrary to the provisions of the Code, see S 252 et seq. I must, therefore, hold that it vitiates the trial following Abdul Rahman v. Emperor (1) and Subrahmania Ayyar v. King-Emperor (2) Privy Council ruling, where the test laid down is in the case of a procedure prohibited by the Code that it might possibly have occasioned injustice. In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights it is immaterial whether motive of conversion is genuing or a device to have the marriage dissolved. [P 954 C 1, 2]

B. P. Khosla for Ghulam Rasul—for Appellant.

Judgment.— In this case the plaintiff sued the defendant for restitution of conjugal rights. The defendant raised a plea that the marriage had been dissolved by her conversion to Christianity. The trial Court held on the evidence produced that the defendant had been duly converted to the Christian religion and baptized, therefore, her marriage was dissolved, the onus of the issue being on the plaintiff. It, therefore, dismissed the suit.

On appeal the learned Additional District Judge held that the conversion was not a substantial one and was nothing but a trick and. therefore, decreed the suit.

It seems to me that it is not within the province of the Court to enquire into the genuineness or otherwise of the conversion. So long as the defendant has formally renounced her faith in Islam and has gone through the rite of baptizm, the formal recognition of her admission into Christianity, the marriage must be held to have been dissolved according to law, and it is immaterial whether her motive is a genuine conversion, or a device to have the marriage dissolved, so far as I can see.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit. I leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Judgment.—Abdul Rahman, defendant-appellant, carried on business in partnership with Kazim Ali, brother of plaintiffs 1 to 4 and husband of plaintiff 5. The partnership owned considerable cash and immovable property. Kazim Ali died sonless on 15th June 1914. On 11th September 1914, his widow Mt. Allah Rakhi executed a registered deed of relinquishment (Ex. P-1) in favour of Kazim Ali's brothers, plaintiffs 1 to 4 and Nur Ali (since deceased) admitting that she had only one sixth share in the property left by Kazim Ali and that his five brothers owned the remaining five-sixths. Subsequently on 2nd December 1914, a deed of dissolution of partnership was executed between Abdul Rahman on the one side and Nur Ali acting for himself and as the agent of his brothers plaintiffs 1 to 4 and Mt. Allah Rakhi, plaintiff 5, on the other. By this deed the properties belonging to the partnership were divided between the contracting parties, Abdul Rahman being given the southern portion of two houses numbering 317 and 318 situate in Rawalpindi Cantonment and Kazim Ali's heirs being given one-half share of house No. 317 and the eastern portion of house No. 318. This deed was presented for registration by Abdul Rahman, but on objection being raised by Nur Ali registration was refused. Abdul Rahman soon after instituted a suit under S. 77, Registration Act, to have the deed compulsorily registered. This suit remained pending for nearly six years as some of the parties were serving under "war conditions". Eventually on 1st March 1921, the suit was decreed and the document registered on 30th March 1921.

On 28th July 1921, the plaintiffs instituted the present suit for possession of house No. 424 (of which the previous number was 317), alleging that this house had fallen to their share according to the deed of dissolution, but that Abdul Rahman had continued to be in wrongful possession of it as well as of the adjoining house No. 425 (=318 previous number). They also claimed an account of the mesne profits up to the date of the suit and tentatively valued them at Rs. 1,366. In addition to this a prayer was made for mesne profits from the date of suit till realization and costs.

The suit was resisted by Abdul Rahman on various pleas, only two of which are material for the purpose of the present appeal, namely; (1) that plaintiffs 1 to 4 were not the heirs of Kazim Ali in the presence of his widow, and plaintiff 5 had no locus standi to sue and (2) that house No. 424 was not the property of the partnership but had been purchased by the defendant with his own funds and had been in his exclusive possession since 1908. It was also pleaded at a later stage that Kazim Ali was not governed by custom but by Mahomedan law.

The learned Subordinate Judge decided all these points against the defendant and passed a decree for possession of house No. 424/317 together with Rs. 720 as mesne profits up to the date of the institution of the suit. He also directed that this sum of Rs. 720 shall carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit till that of realization, and that the plaintiffs shall further get mesne profits at the rate of Rs. 20 per mensem till the defendant makes over possession of the house to them. Against this decree the defendant has preferred a first appeal to this Court and we have heard Mr. Govind Das on his behalf at length.

The first contention raised is that Kazim Ali, though belonging to the Bhatti caste of Rajput, was a resident of the town of Rawalpindi and was carrying on contract work, and, therefore, must be held to be governed by Mahomedan law and not by custom. After giving full consideration to the arguments of Mr. Govind Das in this behalf, we are of opinion that the lower Court has come to a correct conclusion in holding that the appellant has failed to discharge the onus which undoubtedly lay upon him to prove that Kazim Ali was governed by Mahomedan law. It is admitted that he originally belonged to a village called Bijnial, which is owned almost exclusively by Bhatti Rajputs. The two lambardars of the village belong to the same tribe, and some of the plaintiffs had been actually tilling land. There is evidence on the record that Bhatti Rajputs of this village form a compact village community and have been notified as an agricultural tribe under the Punjab Alienation of Land Act. The mere fact that a certain member of this tribe had given up agriculture as a profession and carried on contract work in the town of Rawalpindi is by itself insufficient to rebut the presumption that he was governed by customary law. The evidence produced by the defendant in support of his contention consists of the oral testimony of a few witnesses, who were unable to cite any instance in which customary law had not been followed. This contention, therefore, fails and is overruled.

Mr. Govind Das next argues that if the parties are governed by custom, plaintiffs 1 to 4, who are the brothers of Kazim Ali, are not his heirs in the presence of his widow Mt. Allah Rakhi, plaintiff 5 and of his daughter who would succeed Mt. Allah Rakhi on her death. Mt. Allah Rakhi, however, has admitted that she owned only one-sixth share in the property in dispute and has relinquished her rights in the remaining five-sixths in favour of the brothers of her husband and there is no dispute between the plaintiffs 1 to 4 and plaintiff 5 inter se as to their respective shares in the property left by Kazim Ali.

Further, it is not necessary to pursue this matter at any length because Abdul Rahman himself had, in the deed of dissolution (Ex. P 6) executed on 2nd December 1904, and registered at his instance after a great deal of litigation in 1921, admitted plaintiffs 1 to 5 and Nur Ali deceased as entitled to the share of Kazim Ali in the partnership property and had entered into a settlement with them as his representatives. The plaintiffs are suing on the basis of this deed and there is no dispute inter se between them as to their respective rights. In these circumstances we are of opinion that the suit has been rightly instituted by plaintiffs 1 to 5 jointly.

Mr. Govind Das has not supported before us the plea which was put forward on behalf of his client in the Court below that the house in dispute belonged exclusively to him, nor has he contended that he had acquired any title in it by adverse possession.

His main contention, however, has been that according to the deed of dissolution the plaintiffs had been given one-half of house No. 424/317 and the eastern portion of house No. 425/318, whereas they had instituted the suit in respect of the whole of No. 424, claiming no share in No. 425. He argues, therefore, that the lower Court should not have passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs in respect of the whole of house No. 424. We find, however, that in the jawabdawa no plea was raised by the defendant that the plaintiffs were entitled only to one-half of house No. 424 and that the suit as to the whole was not maintainable. Nor did the defendant, after the lower Court had passed a decree for the entire house No. 424, raise this point specifically in the grounds of appeal filed in this Court. We cannot, therefore, allow the matter to be agitated for the first time at this stage. The two houses adjoin each other and it is quite possible that some adjustment has been made by the parties as to the portions held by each. It is not shown on the record that house No. 424 is more valuable than house No. 425, the whole of which continues to be owned and possessed by the defendant-appellant, as a result of the decree of the lower Court.

The last point taken is that the lower Court ought not to have allowed interest on mesne profits Rs. 720. The grant of interest on any sum decreed was, however, a matter within the discretion of the lower Court under S. 34, Civil P. C., and we cannot say that this discretion has not been rightly exercised in this case.

Accordingly the appeal fails on all the points and we dismiss it. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case we leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Shuja-ud-Din—for Appellant.

L. C. Mehra—for Respondent.

Judgment. — The plaintiff is the father's sister of the deceased. The defendant claimed to be an adopted son of the deceased and that the deceased made a will in his favour. In a contest for a succession certificate the defendant was successful. The plaintiff then sued him for recovery of the amount on the ground that she was heir, being the father's sister. The Courts below have not believed the defendant's allegations and held that the plaintiff is the father's sister of the deceased and, therefore, his heir. They have, accordingly, decreed the suit and the defendant has preferred this second appeal.

The only question that arises in it is whether the father's sister is an heir according to the Mitakshara School of Hindu law which prevails in the Punjab. According to the books and the reports it is clear that in Bombay and Madras both the sister and the father's sister are female bandhus in Madras and are also heirs in Bombay where the Mayukha prevails, but that where the Benares School of Hindu law is in force neither of these persons is an heir or a bandhu. On this point Mayne's Hindu Law is completely against the father's sister, and the sister and the same view is taken in Mulla's Hindu law. At p. 17 of the latter work only five females according to the Benares School are recognized as heirs, namely, the widow, daughter, mother, father's mother and father's father's mother. The bandhus are given at p. 49. They do include the father's sister's son but not the father's sister or the sister. At pp. 74 and 75, however, it is stated that both these are heirs according to the Bombay and Madras views.

It is true that in Nanak Gir v. Mt. Kishen Kaur (1), it was held that under Hindu law sisters could succeed as bandhus. The same Judges, however, who decided that case held in Tirath Ram v. Mt. Khan Devi (2), that according to the Mitakshara law the plaintiff who was a sister was not entitled to succeed against the defendant who was the daughter's son. The previous ruling was not dissented from but only distinguished. Another Bench of this Court in Mt. Sujan Devi v. Jagiri Mal (3), took the view that the later ruling dissented from the previous ruling though this had not been specifically said. It would appear that the 1919 decision is the only decision which has recognized sisters as bandhus according to the Benares School of the Mitakshara. Only one other ruling need be referred to, that is, Sunder Singh v. Mt. Gurdevi (4). There it was held that the plaintiffs who were the father's sister and her sons were entitled to inherit as bandhus under the Mitakshara School of Hindu law and could therefore contest the alienation. In that ruling, apart from the Madras cases which do not apply Nanhi v. Gouri Shankar (5) was relied upon. It, however, is only an authority for the proposition that the fathers sister's son is a bandhu. This has been settled law for very many years. I do not think that it can be said that the question whether the father's sister was a bandhu was clearly before that Bench and it was unnecessary to decide it as the other plaintiffs who were her sons were clearly bandhus.

For the reasons given I hold that the father's sister is not a bandhu or an heir and she must thus be held to be a total stranger who is not entitled to sue. In these circumstances I accept the appeal and dismiss the suit but I only allow the appellant his costs in this Court. Parties will bear their own costs in the Court below.

Ram Chand Manchanda—for Appellant.

Muhammad Monir—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Two brothers Hayat and Allah Dad jointly owned a house. On 18th June 1900, Allah Dad sold his undivided half-share in it to his son-in-law Mehdi by a registered sale-deed ; but the other brother Hayat continued to be in possession of the whole. Mehdi died a few years later and was succeeded by his son Fateh Muhammad, appellant who was a minor at that time. In 1925 the descendants of Hayat began to rebuild the house and a few months later Fateh Muhammad instituted this suit against the descendants of Hayat, claiming possession of one-half of the house by partition. The defendants denied that Fateh Muhammad, or his vendor Allah Dad had a share in the house, and also urged that the suit was barred by limitation.

Both the Courts below have concurrently found that the house originally belonged jointly and in equal shares to Hayat and Allah Dad and that Allah Dad had validly sold his half-share in it to Mehdi, the father of the plaintiff. But they have dismissed the suit holding it to be barred by time.

On second appeal it was not denied for the respondents that the title in the half-share in question is with the plaintiff. The only point argued was whether the suit is within time.

Now as stated above Hayat and Allah Dad were two brothers, who jointly owned the house, and they being cosharers, Hayat's exclusive possession of it could not, without any overt act, have extinguished the rights of Allah Dad. Therefore, if Allah Dad had been alive he, or if he were dead and his share had descended to his legal heirs, they would still be cosharers in the house and in the absence of any denial of their title at a time beyond twelve years from the suit, their rights would not have become barred. If this be so, I fail to see how the position of a transferee for valuable consideration of Allah Dad's undivided half-share should in the circumstances disclosed on the record be different. From the moment of the sale he stood in the shoes of his transferror and became a cosharer in the house with Hayat. In view of the fact that the sale-deed was duly registered and the vendee was the son-in-law of Allah Dad, Hayat must be fixed with the knowledge of the transfer. He never denied the title of the vendee or his son, the plaintiff, nor did he ever claim the whole house as exclusively his own.

In support of his contention, the respondents' counsel has referred me to a single Bench ruling of this Court reported as Mahadeo Prasad v. Emperor (1) the head-note of which is certainly in his favour. On sending for the record of the case from the office and examining it I find that a Letters Patent Appeal (No. 70 of 1924) was preferred against the judgment of the learned Judge, and was dismissed on the finding separately recorded by the learned Judges of the Letters Patent Bench that the transferror had himself no subsisting interest in the property at the time of the sale. This being so, his transferee could not be in a better position than himself and claim a share in the property. On these facts, the case cited is no authority in support of the respondents' contention. The plaintiff and Hayat being cosharers and no ouster of himself or his transferee having been proved the possession of the respondents must be presumed to be that of the appellant. Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (2). The suit is consequently within time.

For the foregoing reasons, I accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the learned District Judge pass a preliminary decree for possession by partition of one-half share in the house in dispute in favour of the plaintiff-appellant against the defendants-respondents, but leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

The defendants have admittedly rebuilt the house and are entitled to be reimbursed for the amount spent on the plaintiff's half-share. The total cost of these improvements was estimated by the local Commissioner appointed by the Subordinate Judge at Rs. 483-3-0, and this estimate was accepted by both parties as correct. The Court, at the time of passing the final decree, should apportion this sum on the parts of the house allotted to each party and order the plaintiff to pay his proportionate share of the improvements before he can get actual possession of it.

Sardha Ram—for Respondent.

Judgment.—In 1926 Kallu Mal, respondent instituted a suit against Mamman, appellant for ejectment of the latter from a house and for the recovery of the arrears of rent from him on the allegation that he was his tenant. This suit was dismissed as the Court found that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties.

Thereupon the suit out of which this second appeal has arisen was instituted by Kallu Mal for possession of the house and also for recovery of Rs. 25-4-3 as mesne profits calculated at the same rate as the rent was alleged in the former plaint to have been fixed. The trial Court dismissed the suit but the learned District Judge on appeal has decreed it and the defendant has come up to this Court on second appeal.

It is to be borne in mind that in the present plaint also the plaintiff states that the defendant was originally his tenant, and that his cause of action has arisen on the denial by the defendant of his title in the previous suit. The learned District Judge has found, and this finding is not contested before me by either party, that the plaintiff was originally the owner of the house and that the defendant has been in possession thereof for about 30 years. He has reversed the decree of the trial Court on the ground that mere non-payment of rent does not amount to adverse possession and that the respondent's (defendant's) possession has never been more than permissive.

In my opinion the view of the learned Judge is not correct on the facts found by him. It having been found that the relationship of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties and that being the only ground on which the defendant's possession was alleged to have been permissive in its inception, it must be assumed that it was in defendant's own right and, therefore, adverse to the plaintiff. Ordinarily a person in possession of the property must be deemed to be so in his own right unless this presumption can be displaced by proving facts which are sufficient to rebut it.

The counsel for the respondent cited A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 13, A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 70, Bhadrayya v. Jaggaraju (1), Ram Surat Singh v. Badri Narain Singh (2), Dullah v. Mt. Sardarani (3) and Jai Chand v. Giridar Singh (4) and also several other cases all of which, however, are distinguishable from the present case. The cases are clearly distinguishable where the question is whether Art. 142 or 144, Sch. 1, Lim. Act, applies or whether it is for the plaintiff to prove his possession within 12 years of the suit or the defendant has to prove his adverse possersion for more than 12 years. There is further a clear distinction between this case and the cases where the factum of the defendant's possession is in issue or where the Courts have, in the absence of clear proof to the contrary, held that possession must be deemed to be with the lawful owner of the property in dispute. In the present case the defendant is admittedly in possession and the District Judge has found that this possession has continued for about 30 years. The real question to determine, therefore, is the nature of the defendant's possession.

The cases cited are no authority for the proposition that the defendant's possession if proved to have continued for more than 12 years must in every case be deemed to be under the person in whom the title in the property vests. In my opinion if the defendant succeeds in proving his exclusive possession for more than 12 years, he is entitled to a decree unless the plaintiff can prove affirmatively that such possession was derived from him or was with his permission. In this case, therefore, the defendant having proved his possession for more than 30 years and the plaintiff having failed to prove the permissive nature of such possession, the suit should have been dismissed.

I accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the learned District Judge and restore that of the trial Court with costs throughout.

Where a plaintiff is allowed to sue in forma pauperis but is ordered to furnish security on an application by defendant for costs without exceptional circumstances being disclosed, the order for furnishing costs is a material irregularity as virtually he is deprived of the benefit of the order since it is almost impossible to furnish security. Gullu Ram—for Respondent.

Judgment.—The petitioner was permitted to sue in forma pauperis and on the application of the defendant the trial Court directed her to give security for the costs of the defendant under O. 25, R. 1, Civil P. C. This security not having been furnished according to the directions of the Court, her suit was dismissed and an application to restore the same was also dismissed. This petition for revision has been presented by the plaintiff and it is contended on her behalf that the Court is not legally competent to direct a plaintiff, who has been permitted to sue in forma pauperis to furnish security under O. 25, and reliance is placed on Hafizan v. Abdul Karim (1), in which it is laid down that the Court has no power to direct a pauper plaintiff to give security under O. 25, R. 1, Civil P. C, as such an order would practically mean depriving the plaintiff of the benefit of the order permitting him to sue as a pauper. I agree with this last remark. But, as at present advised, I am not prepared to hold as the Calcutta High Court has done, that the Court has no legal power to direct a plaintiff under such circumstances to furnish security. The provisions of O. 25 are wide enough to cover the case of every plaintiff.

In my opinion the view taken by the Rangoon High Court in Ma Saw v. Mg. Shwe Gon (2) is more reasonable. It has been held in that case that except in exceptional cases security should not be taken from a plaintiff, who has been permitted to sue in forma paupris. In the present case no exceptional circumstances have been disclosed to entitle the Court to demand security. The plaintiff applied for permission to be allowed to sue as a pauper because she had no immovable property sufficient to pay Court-fee stamp on the plaint, and ordinarily it would be almost impossible for her to furnish security. The order passed by the trial Court virtually deprives her of the benefit of the order made in her favour under O. 33. The ground mentioned in the order dismissing the application for restoration that the plaintiff's case rested on oral evidence is irrelevant at the present stage. I consider that in this case the Court below has acted with material irregularity in directing the plaintiff to furnish security.

I accept this petition and setting aside the order of the Court below restore the plaintiff's suit to its original number and remand it to the trial Court to proceed with it in accordance with law. There will be no order as to the costs of these proceedings.

Criminal Revn. No. 1580 of 1928, Decided on 19th October 1928, reported by the Dist. Mag., Karnal, D/- 21st August 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 439—High Court can interfere with sentence inflicted by lower Court, if it is manifestly inadequate — Additional sentence can be imposed even though the accused served out the sentence inflicted upon—Conviction under S. 409, Penal Code—Sentence of one day's imprisonment till the rising of Court and fine of Rs. 100 was held inadequate and enhanced.

The Court of revision is slow to interfere, where interference involves the imprisonment of a person already discharged from jail, but that circumstance alone cannot be allowed to operate as an insuperable obstacle to the enhancement of a sentence. The test is that the Court should not interfere if the sentence passed involves substantial punishment, but that it should interfere if the sentence is manifestly inadequate. It is competent to the High Court to impose an additional sentence of imprisonment on revision, even where the accused has served out the sentence of imprisonment inflicted upon him by the lower Court. 7 *P. Facts. — The accused, on conviction by Khan Sahib Chaudhri Miran Bakhsh exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the 1st Class in the Karnal District, was sentenced by order, dated 6th August 1928, under S. 409, I. P. C to undergo simple imprisonment till the rising of the Court and a fine of Rs. 100 or in default to undergo further simple imprisonment for four months.

The facts of this case are as follows:

Shahzad Ahmad, accused, an Assistant Moharir working in Police Station, Smalka, District Karnal, has been charged with committing criminal breach of trust, in taking Rs. 10-8-0, while acting under colour of office on 21st July 1928. Ten full grown camels and three young ones were impounded by Shahzad Ahmad, who released them after recovering Rs. 15. Out of this sum he credited only Rs. 2 as fine and Rs. 1-9-0 as feeding charges. He did this by forging the registers and making false entries, as is fully set out in the judgment of the Magistrate. The accused pleaded guilty and implored for pardon and mercy. He was convicted under S 409, I. P. C. and sentenced to simple imprisonment till the rising of the Court and a fine of Rs. 100.

The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds:

The offence of criminal breach of trust by a Government servant is a very serious one and not one which can be passed over lightly. The sentence in such a case should be deterrent. The sentence imposed in the present case far from being deterrent is, in my opinion, calculated to encourage the commission of similar offence.

The Magistrate has been unduly influenced by the family record of the accused. Considering the family record, I think the offence of the accused becomes all the more glaring and deserving of severe punishment by contrast.

The accused is nearly 29 years of age and has more than four years' service in the police force. Under these circumstances the Magistrate's remarks regarding his age and inexperience are not justified.

The Magistrate attaches undue weight to the fact of admission of guilt by the accused. As a matter of fact the case against the accused was so clear that he had no alternative.

The amount misappropriated is irrelevant; the fact of misappropriation is the important point.

I submit that in the public interest a substantial sentence of imprisonment should be inflicted on the accused.

Order.—The evidence on the record leaves no doubt whatsoever, and indeed it is admitted by the accused himself, that he committed the offence of criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum of money which he had received on behalf of Government in his capacity as an officer-in-charge of a police station. He has accordingly been convicted under S. 409, I. P. C and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 100 and simple imprisonment "till the rising of the Court." The District Magistrate has referred the case to this Court with a recommendation that in view of the serious nature of the offence a deterrent sentence should be imposed.

I have listened to the able arguments advanced by the learned counsel for the convict, and after examining all the facts bearing upon the question of punishment I have reached the conclusion that the sentence passed by the trial Magistrate is manifestly inadequate. It is true that the Court of revision is slow to interfere, where interference would involve the imprisonment of a person already discharged from jail; but, as pointed out by Plowden, J. in Gohar v. Mahammad (1), upon which the learned counsel has placed his reliance, that circumstance alone cannot be allowed to operate as an insuperable obstacle to the enhancement of a sentence. The test laid down in that case is that the Court should not interfere if the sentence passed involves substantial punishment, but that it would interfere if the sentence is manifestly inadequate. Indeed, it has been held by the Bombay High Court in Emperor v. Shankar Narayan (2), that it is competent to the High Court to impose an additional sentence of imprisonment on revision, even where the accused has served out the sentence of imprisonment inflicted upon him by the lower Court.

It is true that the conviction in the present case will entail loss of service, but that is an inevitable result in every case of conviction of a public servant under S. 409, I. P. C. It is to be remembered that the law prescribes transportation for life or imprisonment for ten years as the maximum punishment to be imposed upon an offender of this character. The convict in this case, not only misappropriated the money, but also forged several entries in the registers kept by him, and the conclusion is irresistable that the penalty imposed by the trial-Magistrate is wholly inadequate. Having regard to all the pros and cons of the case I am of opinion that the accused should suffer rigorous imprisonment for a period of one year, and I order accordingly.

It is not the object of the Alienation of Land Act to prevent a non-agriculturist from recovering money due to him from an agriculturist by any legal means in his power. Where, therefore, such a person induces an agriculturist, to pay off a debt due from the debtor agriculturist, and take a mortgage of land from him as security for himself, there is nothing in law to prevent such a course. It is immaterial whether the mortgagee pays in cash or gives his bond, nor has he anything to do with the correctness of the account or real amount due from the debtor beyond what the debtor himself admitted and asked the mortgagee to pay; 119 *P. Judgment.—This was a suit by the reversioners for a declaration that a mortgage for Rs. 500 effected by Mt. Jano, a widow, in favour of Abdul Rahman should not affect their reversionary rights, as it was without consideration and necessity. The defence was that the mortgage was incurred to pay off her deceased husband's debts and thus it was for a necessary purpose. The trial Court dismissed the suit, considering that the defence had been established. The District Judge, on appeal, has decreed the suit, holding that neither necessity nor consideration had been proved on certain findings arrived at by him. Against this decision the mortgagee-defendant has preferred this second appeal.

The learned District Judge stated that a number of points had been brought out in the evidence, though not raised in the pleadings and he summarized them as follows :

(1) The deceased husband of the widow was not the sole debtor of Kaka Singh but he and one Sultan were joint debtors of Kaka Singh. He held that it was for the defence to show that the debts incurred jointly by Buta and Sultan were a valid charge against the estate of Buta alone.

The second point mentioned by the District Judge has no significance and need not be referred to.

The third point was that the principal was only Rs. 350 while the interest amounted to Rs. 142 at the rate of thirty-seven per cent per annum. He thought that such a high rate was more than the customary rate charged in such cases, and that the widow was not acting prudently in acknowledging interest to that extent. The fourth point was that the District Judge thought that the widow might have waited till the rabi crop was cut and paid her husband's debts out of her income. It may be noted that she alleged that, owing to a dispute between the widow and the reversioners, the land had not been watered and there was no crop.

The fifth point was that Mt. Jano as a witness had stated that the mortgage was in favour of Kaka Singh and not in favour of Abdul Rahman, and that, as Kaka Singh was a non-agriculturist, such a mortgage did not appear to be a good one.

Having mentioned the above points as having been brought out in evidence though not raised in the pleadings, the learned District Judge then went on as follows :

> My findings are; (1) that the debts have been proved to be due jointly from Buta and Sultan, so that they are not a charge in full against the estate of Buta, (2) that the circumstances of the mortgage are sufficiently suspicious to warrant my reporting them to the Deputy Commissioner for such enquiry as he may deem desirable. Kaka Singh is an Arora and a non-agriculturist, and though he would be justified in persuading an agriculturist to take up another agriculturist's liabilities the present mortgage is a very doubtful one. On these findings I hold that neither necessity nor consideration have been proved.

Apparently, therefore, the District Judge only came to these two findings mentioned above. I do not understand his second finding. It was held in Haidar v. Fateh Khan (1) that :

> It is not the object of the Alienation of Land Act to prevent a non-agriculturist from recovering money due to him from an agriculturist by any legal means in his power and if such a person can induce an agriculturist to pay off a debt due to him and to take a mortgage of land from his debtor as security for himself, there is nothing in this Act to prohibit such a course. It is immeterial whether the mortgagee pays in cash or gives his bond, nor has he anything to do with the correctness of the account or real amount due beyond what the debtor himself admits and asks the mortgagee to pay for him.

On the record it is perfectly clear that Abdul Rahman is the true mortgagee, and that Kaka Singh is not mortgagee. Abdul Rahman gave a bond to Kaka Singh it is true, but that is nothing, as pointed out in the above ruling. He has paid off part of the bond as admitted by the learned District Judge. The second finding, therefore, of the District Judge amounts to nothing and he erred in law in arriving at it.

The first finding of the District Judge was that the debts were not a charge in full against the estate of Buta as they were jointly incurred by Buta and Sultan. The liability, of each, however, is for the whole amount. This finding is also incorrect in law and cannot be accepted.

If these are the only two findings of the learned District Judge as categorically stated by him at the end of his judgment, it is obvious that this appeal must be accepted. I think it better, however, to discuss some of the other points which, he stated, were brought out in the evidence though not raised in the pleadings, even though they are not stated to be findings.

The first and second of these points are already dealt with when disposing of finding No. 1. Point No. 3 is about interest. It is quite clear that interest on the amount charged is clearly entered in the bond and it cannot be said that the widow was wrong in admitting the interest charged.

The fourth point was that the widow should have waited until the rabi crop was ready. Apart, however, from there being evidence that there was no rabi crop, it is not the duty of a widow to wait until she receives sufficient income to pay off her husband's debts. It might be the case that if the income was sufficient and she was borrowing money for herself an enquiry may be directed as to whether she was entitled to borrow money seeing that the income she was receiving was ample for her ; but, where the husband has left debts, I know of no authority which lays down that the widow is not entitled to acknowledge them and to charge her husband's land with those debts : see in particular the remarks at p. 55 of 17 P. R. 1919 [Mt. Mikor v. Chhaju Ram (2).]

For the reasons given above it is obvious that the learned District Judge erred in law in finding that there was no necessity for the full amount, and that there was no consideration. I, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Judgment.—This appeal relates to a disputed succession to an occupancy holding of .57-14/20 kanals of land, a half-share in which was formerly held by Jiwan defendant. When Dadu, who held the other half died a year before the suit the revenue authorities mutated Dadu's share in the name of his first cousin Jiwan and the plaintiff proprietors then instituted the present suit for possession of Dadu's share on the ground that his rights were extinguished. Two proprietors did not join the suit and were made pro forma defendants. The trial Court, holding that Jiwan had failed to establish that the common ancestor of Jiwan and Dadu had occupied the land, granted the plaintiffs a decree for 14/30 of Dadu's land ; and the remaining 1/30, the share of the pro forma defendants was not decreed. Against that decree Jiwan appealed. The Officiating District Judge took an opposite view and dismissed the suit on 10th August 1927. Thereupon the plaintiffs filed an application for review on the ground that the Officiating District Judge had relied on statements in a record of 1856, which was not part of the record of the suit, and also because they had other documents which rebutted the evidence of the record of 1856. The application came before the permanent District Judge, who rejected it by his order dated 15th November 1927.

The plaintiffs have now instituted a second appeal and have also filed a petition for revision of the order dismissing the application for review. The second appeal was presented on 26th January 1928, and a preliminary objection has been taken by the learned counsel for the defendant Jiwan, that the appeal is barred by time. The plaintiffs had prayed for exemption under S. 5, Limitation Act, on the ground that the period spent by them in prosecuting their application for review should not be counted in the computation of days. For the defendant it was argued that such a period should only be excluded if the grounds for review were reasonable and that three out of the four grounds for review were really grounds of appeal. Reliance was placed on one or two authorities. On the other hand, the application for review was admitted to a hearing and there was a reasonable ground for review inasmuch as the Officiating District Judge had referred to statements that were not a part of the record of the suit. I am satisfied that the plaintiffs prosecuted the application for review bona fide, and Brij Indar Singh v. Kanshi Ram (1), is a clear authority in favour of the plaintiffs. The preliminary objection regarding limitation is accordingly overruled.

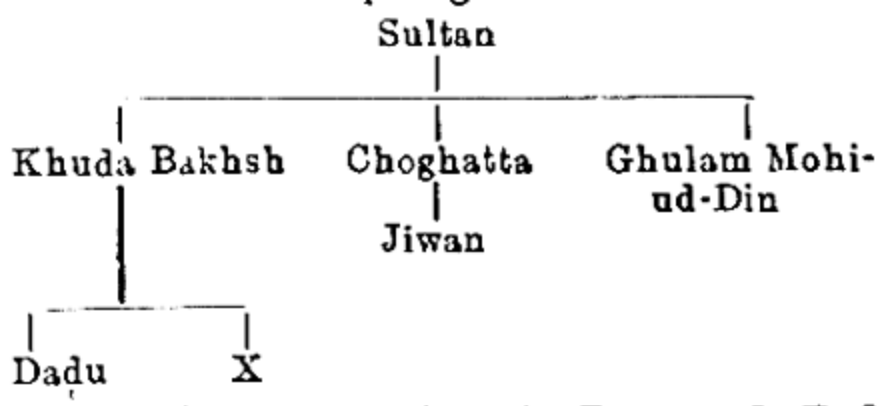
I turn now to the merits of the appeal. Dadu being the last holder, the onus lay on Jiwan defendant to prove that a common ancestor of himself and Dadu had occupied the land. The case for Jiwan is that Sultan, the common grandfather of Jiwan and Dadu, did occupy the land, but the revenue records do not go so far back. The lower appellate Court relied on (a) an order in the record of 1856, and (b) the statements of certain witnesses. Now, neither the order nor the statements are to the effect that the suit land was the subject of occupancy rights; all that they show is that the ancestor of Dadu and Jiwan acquired occupancy rights in some land. Admittedly that land was not the land with which this litigation is concerned and the Officiating District Judge was manifestly wrong in drawing any kind of presumption as he did, from that circumstance.

On the other hand, the same Judge disregarded some documentary evidence, on which the defendant Jiwan had relied. That evidence, according to the defendant's case, raised a presumption in favour of the proposition that the common ancestor occupied the land. It is urged that the defendant cannot in second appeal support the judgment of the lower appellate Court by referring to documents which that Court had disregarded; but I do not consider that that contention has any force, for the defendant raised the matter in his grounds of appeal before that Court.

The first document is a naql az muntakhib asamiwar of 1860 (D-1) which shows that the three sons of Sultan held the suit land in equal shares as occupancy tenants. The second is a copy of the tenqih haquq mazarian of 1880 (d-2): in the column of tenants appear the names of Ghulam Mohi-ud-Din and Choghatta (sons of Sultan) holding one-third each, and of Dadu and another son of Khula Bakhsh (also a son of Sultan) holding the other one-third. The pedigree table is:



The Khasra numbers in D-1 and D-2 correspond. The third document is the misl haqivat jamabandi of 1900 (D-3), the tenants then being Chogatta and Dadu in equal shares; Ghulam Mohi-ud-Din's share went on his death to his widow and thence to the two persons just named. Here again the corresponding khasra numbers have been traced and correspond.

In view of these documents it is urged that the accepted one-step presumption should be applied, and reliance is placed on certain authorities: Soba Singh v. Nand Singh (2), Jivan Singh v. Har Kaur (3) and Palo v. Bawa (4). The principle laid down in those authorities is not overruled in Chandra Singh v. Mt. Banto (5). The point in the present case is that not only does the name of Sultan appear in the pedigree-table but in addition we find that in 1860 the sons of Sultan were in joint possession and held equal shares. The combination of the two facts does raise a presumption in favour of the defendant Jiwan and para. 1 of p. 591 of the last cited authority confirms the view expressed above.

I would hold, therefore, that the common ancestor of the deceased Dadu and Jiwan defendant occupied the land and Judgment.—The main question involved in this case is whether the non-proprietors (kamins) of the village Jhabal Kalan in the Taran Tahsil of the Amritsar District have an unrestricted right to alienate the sites in their possession. The District Judge has answered this question in the affirmative, but has granted a certificate to the plaintiff, the proprietor, and consequently this second appeal has been preferred to this Court.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the general custom being to the effect that the non-proprietors have no right to alienate the sites in their possession, the burden of proving affirmatively that a custom to the contrary existed in this village was on the defendants, the vendees in this case. That is true, but the District Judge has held that the defendants have discharged that burden. In support of his conclusion the learned Judge has relied upon the judgment of Martineau, J., in a previous suit brought by the present appellant against one Jaggu and others in which the same question, as is involved in this case, arose and after considering the entire evidence the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the custom propounded by the vendees had been fully established by the evidence on the record. He cited a large number of instances in which alienation had taken place in the village and had not been objected to by the proprietors.

The learned District Judge on this occasion has made reference in his judgment to other alienations that took place after Martineau J., decided the previous appeal. An objection is taken by the appellant that such instances should not be relied upon because they relate to transactions which took place after the present suit had been instituted. In this contention I do not agree as the instances are important to show that there had been no variation in the custom and strengthen the vendee's case. It is to be observed that one of the cases relates to the attachment and sale of a site held by a non-proprietor in execution of a decree obtained by one of the proprietors. That is a very important factor in determining the custom.

The learned counsel then says that the District Judge did not discuss the important evidence relied upon by his client. He specially refers to the wajib-ul-arz of 1891-1892 in which a custom which is in accordance with the general custom of the province, is recorded. But the wajib-ul-arz of 1911-1912 makes no mention of such a custom.

Another document relied upon is Ex-P-4, which is an order by a Civil Judge dated 14th September 1907 upholding the objection of the proprietors to the attachment of a site belonging to a non-proprietor in execution of a decree. The case, however, does not appear to have gone further and the proceedings in such cases are necessarily summary and much reliance cannot be placed on this instance. The other documentary instances relied upon on behalf of the appellant do not call for any serious notice.

In my opinion the learned District Judge was fully entitled on the material before him to come to the conclusion that a special custom, such as was set up by the vendees in this case, had been established and agreeing with his conclusions, I dismiss this appeal with costs. In view of the above, I do not think it necessary to give any finding on other matters that have been decided against the appellant by the District Judge.

The learned counsel in the end contended that, in any case, decree should have been given to the appellant for possession of a portion of the disputed land, which is not included in the sale-deed and which, it is alleged, the defendants, the vendees, took forcible possession of. But that was not the ground on which the plaintiff originally sought the relief. The plaintiff merely came to the Court on the ground that the non-proprietor was not entitled to sell the land in dispute. I do not, therefore, think that there is any force in this contention of the appellant.

First Appeal No. 436 of 1924, Decided on 11th June 1928, from decree of Sub-Judge, 1st Class, Lahore, D/- 5th January 1924.

* (a) Civil P. C., S. 11, Expl. 4—Validity of will disputed in prior suit—Plea against specific provision of will not necessary in it—Subsequent suit against that specific provision will not be barred by constructive res judicata.

A suit was brought by S against P to recover certain funeral expenses of the testator on the basis of his will which made provision for his funeral expenses. In this suit the validity of the will was disputed. The will also contained a provision for "election" under certain conditions which was now in dispute in another suit brought by P against S.

Held: that in the previous suit the validity of the whole will was in dispute but the specific plea against the provision for election in the will was not necessary in that suit and hence that suit did not operate as constructive res judicata against the present suit. [P 969 C 1]

* (b) Hindu Law—Wills—Bequest of ancestral property not being illegal or against public policy is not void ab initio but only voidable.

The bar to the disposition of ancestral property by will under Hindu law is not based on public policy and cannot be said to be a part of the general law of the country of which ignorance cannot be excused. The question is one of private rights under the personal law of the parties concerned. The bequest of ancestral property therefore not being illegal, is not void ab initio but only voidable: Re Oliver's Settlement, 1 Ch. 191; Re Beale's Marriage Settlement, 1 Ch. 256; Re Wright, 2 Ch. 288; and Re Nash 2 Ch. 450; Dist.: 40 Mad. 1122; 43 Mad. 824; and *A. (c) N. W. F. Province Government Tenant Act (3 of 1893)—Transfer of Abadkari right in land—Subsequent sanction of Financial Commissioner—Transfer is not bad.

Abadkari rights in certain land were granted by Government to a person S. S afterwards relinquished his rights and got the land transferred to his grandson. The transfer was made first and then the application for its sanction was made to the Financial Commissioner and the sanction was acquired.

Held: that the transfer of the Abadkari rights must be deemed to have been completed and become absolute after the sanction of the Financial Commissioner was given., The transfer was not bad because the sanction was not acquired prior to the transfer: 3 P.R. 1916 (Rev.), Dist.; 58 *P. Bhide, J.—The pedigree table of the parties concerned is as follows:

R. B. Gopal Das

R. S. Narinjan Das	R. S. Kishan Das, Plaintiff	Bishan Das	Devi Das

Narinjan Das, Defendant 1.

Narsingh Das, Defendant 2.

On 9th July 1912, Rai Bahadur Lala Gopal Das died at the ripe old age of about 80, leaving a will dated 12th January 1912 by which he made a complete and final disposition of all his property, ancestral as well as self-acquired. The will was apparently carefully drawn up with the help of a lawyer; but soon after his death it became unfortunately the subject-matter of litigation amongst his heirs which, in one form or another has lasted to this day.

The suit out of which the present appeal arises was lodged on 21st April 1921, and was for possession of one-fourth share in certain shops situated at Lahore and Amritsar and a large area of land with a right of occupancy situated in the Jhelum Canal Colony in the Sar-godha District. The parties are Khatris and are governed by Hindu law. There had been disruption of the joint family and plaintiff was living separate from his father for several years before his father's death. The shops in dispute were, however, admittedly ancestral property and had not been partitioned. The land in the Sargodha Canal Colony had been acquired by Rai Bahadur Gopal Das as a grant from Government in recognition of his services. By the will, the shops in dispute were allotted to defendants 1 and 2 who used to live with Rai Bahadur Gopal Das and manage his property and were apparently his favourites. According to Hindu law, Rai Bahadur Gopal Das had no right to make a disposition of the ancestral property by will and he had foreseen the possibility of objections being raised to the will on that ground. But he had made a provision in the will for that contingency by giving a right of "election" to his heirs in the matter, on the lines of what is known in English law as the "doctrine of election." The provision was as follows:

If any of my heirs claims a right in the said property on the ground that it is ancestral property and does not act upon this my will, then the arrangement to be followed shall be this, that he shall have to give back all the self-acquired property to be taken by him as detailed above to my two grandsons Narinjan Das and Narsingh Das and that he shall be entitled to get only his share out of this ancestral property according to Hindu law. My descendants shall have title to my self-acquired property according to the conditions set forth above only in case they abide by my will in regard to this ancestral property and if they challenge my power of making a will with respect to the ancestral property they shall not be entitled to any of my self-acquired property and the will so far as it relates to the self-acquired property bequeathed to them as above shall be considered as cancelled and that property shall also go to my grandsons viz; Narinjan Das and Narsingh Das after my death.

Plaintiff's allegation in the plaint was that the above provision in the will was null and void in law and equity and was not binding on him. He, however, stated in para. 17 of the plaint that if the Court held the provision to be valid and binding, he elected to retain possession of the self-acquired property.

The land in the Sargodha Colony was not mentioned in the will. The defendants pleaded that abadkari rights in this land had been granted to Rai Bahadur Gopal Das in 1905, but the Rai Bahadur relinquished those rights and got the land transferred to defendant 1 with the sanction of the Financial Commissioner. The land was accordingly mutated in the name of defendant 1 on 14th September 1907, and he had been in possession ever since the transfer. Plaintiff disputed the genuineness as well as the validity of this transfer. His contentions were that the transfer had been fraudulently obtained by defendant 1 without the knowledge or consent of Rai Bahadur Gopal Das and was also void as it was not sanctioned by the Financial Commissioner in the manner required by law. A large number of other pleas were raised giving rise to as many as 24 issues, but it is unnecessary to go into them for the purpose of this appeal. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge found the material issues against the plaintiff and dismissed the suit. Plaintiff has appealed and the two main points for decision in appeal may be stated as follows:

(1) Is the provision in the will relating to the disposition of the ancestral property with the option of "election" given to the plaintiff as between the self-acquired and ancestral property null and void and not binding on the plaintiff?

(ii) Was the transfer of the land in the Sargodha Colony in favour of defendant 1 void for any reason and is plaintiff entitled to claim one-fourth share in it?

As regards the first point, it was contended on behalf of the respondents that the validity of the will had already been the subject-matter of litigation between the parties and the matter was therefore "res judicata." It appears that in the year 1916, defendants 1 and 2 sued the plaintiff for recovery of Rs. 737-12-2 on account of his share of the funeral expenses of his father and mother on the basis of a provision in the will to the effect that those expenses were to be shared by his sons and grandsons and were to be a charge on his entire immovable property. In that suit plaintiff pleaded inter alia that the will was the result of undue influence and therefore null and void, but did not specifically raise any objection to the provision in the will now under consideration. The contention of the learned counsel for the respondents is that owing to his failure to raise the objection in the previous suit, plaintiff is now precluded from raising it on account of Expl, 4, S. 11, Civil P. C. This contention does not appear to me to be sound. The claim in the previous suit was confined to a share of the funeral expenses, and that claim could only have been defeated by showing that the will as a whole or at any rate the provision in the will relating to the sharing of the funeral expenses was null and void. The provision with regard to "election" even if it were held to be inoperative, could not have rendered the whole will null and void or affected in any way the claim with regard to the share of the funeral expenses. In the circumstances I feel no hesitation in holding that the matter is not res judicata and the question must therefore be decided on its merits

The doctrine of "election" is an equitable rule of English law. It is now incorporated in Chap. 22, Succession Act, 1925, which applies to Hindus. But even before the doctrine was held to be applicable to Hindu wills: Mangaldas v. Rachhoddas Bhagwan Das (1): That doctrine has been stated by Jarman as follows:

That he who accepts a benefit under a deed or will must adopt the whole contents of the instrument confirming to all its provisions and renouncing every right inconsistent with it. If therefore a testator has affected to dispose of property which is not his own and has given a benefit to the person to whom that property belongs the devisee or legatee accepting the benefit so given to him must make good the testator's attempted disposition; but if on the other hand he chooses to enforce his proprietary rights against the testator's disposition, equity will sequester the property given to him for the purpose of making satisfaction out of it to person whom he has disappointed by the assertion of his rights. (Vide Jarman on Wills Vol. 1, p. 532, 6th Edn.).

It will appear from the above that the option given to the plaintiff in the will in the present case as regards choice between the ancestral and self-acquired property was in conformity with the equitable doctrine of "election" as stated above. The learned counsel for the appellant has not attempted to challenge the applicability of that doctrine to Hindu wills generally but has argued that the doctrine is inapplicable in the present instance, as the provision with regard to "election" is "illegal." In support of this argument he has relied upon the decision of Farwell, J., in Re Oliver's Settlement (2), at p. 167 in which the following passage occurs.

The doctrine of election is a rule of equity by virtue of which the Court of equity compels a recipient of the testator's bounty to confirm to all the legal provisions of the will. It is somewhat startling that this Court should be asked to extend it to illegal provisions, and to apply its doctrines for the purpose of enabling a testator to evade a rule of law founded on public policy. Lord Northington puts it somewhat strongly. After referring to the various attempts that had been made at law to evade the rule against perpetuity, he says: 'It seems to me most surprising, that after these puerile attempts had been made upon the narrow, fettered and technical reasonings of Courts of law, and been rejected and exploded with contempt and derision, that it could ever have entered into the head of man to think, that he could subvert the fundamental principles of property, by the aid of this Court.' And Sir Richard Arden, M. R. in Mainwaring v. Baxter (3) where another attempt at evading the rule against perpetuities was made, said that he adopted Lord Northington's words. Kekewich, J., has said, and it is the basis of his judgment, that it is immaterial whether the appointment fails because it offends some rule of law, or because it offends the construction of the power. With all deference to him, the difference appears to me to be vital. In the one case the testator openly and avowedly breaks the general law, and asks the Court of equity to participate in his legal act by giving effect to it; in the other he merely attempts to exceed the limits set to his power by the donor thereof in the particular case—limits which the donor might have extended without any breach of general law. Thus, limitations which infringe the rule against perpetuity are void on the face of the will but a devise of Blackacre by a testator who has no interest therein is not illegal, nor is it void on the face of the will, but depends on an inquiry into the testator's title.

It is the well-known distinction pointed out by Lord Westbury in Cooper v. Phibbs (3) between the general law of the country, for ignorance of which no one is excused, and private rights which depend on the ascertainment of particular facts.

The contention of the learned counsel for the appellant is that an attempt to dispose of "ancestral property" under Hindu Law is "illegal" in the same sense as an attempt to dispose of property againt the rule of perpetuities under English law. This contention is not, I think, well-founded. The passage quoted above shows that the Court refused to give effect to the doctrine of "election" in Re Oliver's Settlement (2) because the testator had attempted to evade a rule based on public policy.

The learned Judge referred in this connexion to the distinction between :

> general law of the country for ignorance of which no one is excused and private rights which depend upon ascertainment of particular facts.

which was pointed out by Lord Westhury in Cooper v. Phibbs (3) while discussing the maxim "Ignorantia juris non-excusat". The point for decision therefore, is whether the rule according to which a person governed by Hindu Law has no power to dispose of joint "ancestral property" by will falls under the former category. I think it does not. The rule appears to be simply a result of the peculiar nature of joint ancestral property under Hindu Law, according to which the members of the family are coparceners with an undefined interest therein which accrues on birth and passes by survivorship on death. As a matter of fact there does not appear to be any specific rule of Hindu Law prohibiting disposition by a coparcener of joint ancestral property by will. But the very nature of the interest of the coparcener in the property renders such disposition "ultra vires". But apart from this, no principle of public policy or equity appears to be involved in the rule. In fact Courts of justice have stepped in to modify the rigidity of Hindu Law in this respect and although "wills" were originally unknown to Hindu Law, testamentary power to a limited extent has now come to be recognized as a result of judicial decisions of the High Court and the Privy Council (cf. paras 404, 412 and 417 of Mayne's Hindu Law Edn. 9). It is now well-established that a Hindu may bequeath his self-acquired property and if there are no coparceners at all, there would be apparently nothing to prevent him from disposing of even his ancestral property by will : vide Mayne's Hindu Law para. 417, Edn. 9. In a Madras case Appana Patrachariar v. Srinivasa Chariar (4) it has been held on the basis of an obiter dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Brij Raj Singh v. Sheodan Singh (5) (at p. 346) that a disposition of coparcenary property by a Hindu can be upheld if the consent of all the coparceners, being adults has been obtained. This would imply that the disposition is not absolutely void, but only voidable at the instance of other coparceners. The correctness of this decision has been doubted in some subsequent rulings : vide Subba Rami Reddi v. Raman (6) Bhikhabhai Ojhaddas v. Purshottam Girdhar Das (7) ; but howsoever that may be, it seems clear that the bar to the disposition of ancestral property by will under Hindu law is not based on public policy and cannot be said to be a part of the "general law" of the country of which ignorance cannot be excused. The question is merely one of private rights under the personal law of the parties concerned.

The English rule against perpetuities, on the other hand, was evolved by the Courts of equity to frustrate attempts to create unbarrable entails by means of bequests which were opposed to common law and is a part of the general law of England. It is founded purely on public policy. A "perpetuity" said Lord Guildford :

> is a thing odious in law and destructive to the common wealth ; it would put a stop to commerce and prevent the circulation of the riches of the kingdom and therefore not to be countenanced in equity : vide commentary at p. 321 of Gour's Law of Transfer in British India Edn. 5.

When therefore it was found that the doctrine of "election" was being abused to create estates prohibited by law on grounds of public policy, Courts refused to give effect to it.

The case-law in India on the subject of "election" seems to be rather meagre. No ruling of any High Court in India dealing with the precise point raised viz., the scope of the rule laid down in "Re Oliver's Settlement" (2) was cited. That rule appears to have been followed in some later English cases : see e. g., in Re Beale's Marriage Settlement (8), Re Wright (9) and in Re Nash (10). In the first two cases, the doctrine of election came into conflict with the rule against perpetuities as in Re Oliver's Settlement and it was not given effect to. In "Re

Nash" the provision as to "election" came into conflict with another rule of the same category based on public policy the rule against "double possibilities" and was therefore held to be void. It would thus appear that in England the rule laid down in "Re Oliver's Settlement" has been followed only where there the doctrine of election came into conflict with a rule or general law of the country based on public policy. A bequest of "ancestral property", may not be permissible under Hindu law, but as stated already, no infringment of any rule of Equity or public policy seems to be involved. Such a bequest even if it be void, will not therefore be 'illegal" within the meaning of the rule laid down in "Re Oliver's Settlement." The bequest of joint ancestral property by a person governed by Hindu law seems to stand on precisely the same footing as a bequest by a person of property not belonging to him along with his own which is the typical case falling within the scope of the "doctrine of election". The bequest of property belonging to another person is also void in law but not "illegal" in the above sense. I, therefore, hold that the rule in "Re Oliver's Settlement" does not apply to the present case.

It was next urged by the learned counsel for the appellant that the provision in the will with respect to "election" was null and void on other grounds viz., firstly because it was an attempt to divert the order of succession under Hindu Law, secondly because, the provision was opposed to an antecedent recital in the will conferring on the plaintiff absolute ownership in respect of certain self-acquired property of the testator and lastly because the provision was in the nature of what is known in English law as a condition "in terrorem". None of these contentions seems to have any force. The first contention only relates to another aspect of the question whether a Hindu testator is entitled to dispose of ancestral property by will and needs no further discussion. In support of the second contention Mohan Lal v Narian Das (11) was cited as an authority but that ruling appears to have no bearing on the facts of this case. In that case absolute ownership was conferred on a widow in respect of certain property and it was then provided that if she did not alienate the property during her lifetime the property would pass to certain reversioners. It was held that this provision which was in the nature of a gift over of what might remain at the widow's death, was void for uncertainty and therefore inoperative. No such question arises in the present case. The will must obviously be read as a whole and the ownership of the house conferred on the plaintiff in the earlier part of the will must be taken to be subject to the condition that he did not claim any share in the ancestral property bequeathed to defendants 1 and 2. There was no uncertainty in the disposition so far as the testator was concerned, nor could any uncertainty arise by the action of third parties. It was for the plaintiff himself to decide whether he would or would not take the self-acquired property of the testator on the condition specified in the will. Unless he accepted the condition the property could not vest in him at all. No question of "uncertainty" or "divesting" of a "vested" estate appears, therefore, to arise. As to the last contention viz., that the condition was merely "in terrorem" there is nothing in the will to indicate that the condition was inserted merely to "frighten" away objectors and was not really intended to be acted upon. The testator in fact made a suitable provision for the contingency of an objection being raised and this indicates that he really expected the contingency to occur. In Cook v. Turner (12) a condition of this nature was held to be perfectly valid and operative in law. In India also its validity appears to be recognized in S. 131, Succession Act : cf. illustration to that section.

I, therefore, hold that the provisions relating to "election" under discussion is valid and binding on the plaintiff. He has stated in the plaint that if this provision is binding on him he will retain the self-acquired property of the testator which was bequeathed to him and of which he is in possession. Consequently he is not entitled to claim any share in the ancestral property in possession of the defendants.

I now come to plaintiffs's claim to 1/4th share in the land in the the Sargodha Colony. 'Abadkari' rights in this land were granted by Government to Rai Bahadur Gopal Das as a reward for his services in June 1905. On 8th November 1905, an application purporting to be signed by Rai Bahadur Gopal Das was sent to the Financial Commissioner, Punjab, requesting his sanction for the transfer of the land to Narinjan Das, which the applicant desired to make. The Financial Commissioner granted sanction subject to the consent of Narain Das, the eldest son of Rai Bahadur Gopal Das, who would have inherited the land according to the rule of primogeniture which governed succession to the land under Act 3 of 1893 which was then in force. Narain Das consented to the transfer and mutation of the land was eventually sanctioned on 14th September 1907. Ever since that date, the land stood in the name of Narinjan Das and after payment of all the instalments of the nazrana, occupancy rights in the land were also conferred upon him.

The fact that the land had been transferred to defendant 1, was known to the plaintiff, who along with his brother Devi Das had after the death of his father presented an application dated 16th September 1913 to the Financial Commissioner requesting cancellation of the transfer on the grounds that it has been fraudulently obtained by defendant 1 and that in any case it was void 'ab initio' as the consent in writing of the Financial Commissioner had not been obtained before the transfer as required by S. 8 of Act 3 of 1893 : vide pp. 56-58 of the paper book printed on 4th November 1926—hereafter called paper book A. The Financial Commissioner rejected this application on 30th September 1913. The plaintiff's claim to the land in the present suit is based on the same grounds, but plaintiff carefully avoided any reference to the above facts in the plaint as though he were ignorant of them. It was in his 'replication' put in by way of reply to the defendant's pleas that he set up for the first time the plea of fraud; but even in that 'replication' the particulars of the 'fraud' were not stated in very clear terms : vide pp. 130 to 135 of paper book A. The fraud alleged, in substance, however, was that the application dated 8th November 1905, purporting to be signed by Rai Bahadur Gopal Das in which the Financial Commissioner was requested to sanction the transfer of the land to Narinjan Das, was in reality put in by Narinjan Das himself without the knowledge or consent of Rai Bahadur Gopal Das. Rai Bahadur Gopal Das did not know English and was seriously ill at the time. The suggestion was that Narinjan Das had either forged the signature of the Rai Bahadur or obtained it by some misrepresentation.

In support of his plea of 'fraud' plaintiff relies mainly on certain alleged suspicious irregularities in the proceedings in connexion with transfer of the land, e. g., that the application dated 8th November 1905 was not presented at the office of the Financial Commissioner but was handed over to Lala Har Narain, Clerk of the Court to the Financial Commissioner, at the house of the Rai Bahadur, that no statement of the Rai Bahadur was taken down in writing, and so forth. But the proceedings were not of a judicial character and I do not think these so-called irregularities are material. Certain discrepencies in the statement of the witnesses in connexion with the state of the Rai Bahadur's health etc., were commented upon ; but to these also much importance cannot be attached in view of the fact that the witnesses were giving evidence after the lapse of many years. There is nothing on the record to show that Lala Har Narain who was an officer of the standing of an Extra Assistant Commissioner, was interested or was a party to any fraud. The presumption is that the officers concerned satisfied themselves about the genuineness of the application and then passed orders. It was next urged that even after the date of the application, there is nothing to show that the Rai Bahadur ceased to have any connexion with the land. It was pointed out that in March 1906, Rai Bahadur Gopal Das presented an application to the Assistant Colonization Officer declaring one Ali Muhammad to be his agent for the management of the land : vide pp. 42-43 paper book A. But this fact can be easily explained as the land was not mutated in the name of Narinjan Das till September 1907. Plaintiff produced his own brother Devi Das as his solitary witness and the latter has deposed that he saw the produce from the Sargodha land being brought to his father's house even after 1907. But this evidence of an obviously interested witness, even if it was believed, loses its significance as Narinjan Das used to live with Rai Bahadur Gopal Das and look after his affairs in his old age. Lastly it was urged that Narinjan Das had no resources of his own and that as a matter of fact the nazarana and other expenses in connexion with land were paid by Rai Bahadur Gopal Das. Narinjan Das, however, deposed that he had obtained Rs 4,000 from his mother and wife. Moreover, even if he was helped by grandfather with money (as is not unlikely in view of their relation), that fact alone cannot affect the validity of the transfer.

The transfer took place years ago, and was duly given effect to in the Government records. The burden of proof lay heavily on the plaintiff in the circumstances to establish his allegation of fraud by clear and cogent evidence; but he has entirely failed to adduce any such evidence. As a matter of fact, the plea of 'fraud' seems to me to be entirely without any foundation. As has been already mentioned, succession to the land was governed by the rule of primogeniture. The only person to be affected by the proposed transfer was therefore Narain Das, the eldest son of Rai Bahadur Gopal Das. It is significant that the Financial Commissioner sanctioned the transfer only after ascertaining that Narain Das agreed to it. It is true that the plaintiff was not informed but the obvious reason was that he was not interested. It is therefore altogether futile to suggest that there was any fraud, secrecy or underhand dealing in these proceedings. The Rai Bahadur lived for seven years after the transfer. During the course of this period, Narain Das, who had also obtained four squares of land from Government, bequeathed them to his younger son, Narsingh Das, as the eldest son Narinjan Das had already received five squares of his grandfather. In his will dated 29th October 1910 (Paper book A p. 53), Narain Das distinctly refers to the fact that Rai Bahadur Gopal Das had transferred his five squares to his eldest son Narinjan Das. On the death of Narain Das, Narsingh Das presented an application to the Colonization Officer requesting him to transfer his father's four squares to him in accordance with his father's will. On this application Rai Bahadur Gopal Das, made an indorsement as follows :

> Both my grandsons Narinjan Das and Narsingh Das, sons of Narain Das, and Mt. Malan widow of Narain Das have accepted this settlement before me of their own accord. This should now be acted upon : vide pp. 8 and 9—Paper book A.

This is a clear indication that Rai Bahadur Gopal Das was fully aware of the contents of the will of Narain Das and his reasons for transferring his own four squares to his younger son Narsingh Das. But if any further proof of the Rai Bahadur's knowledge of the transfer of his own land to Narinjan Das were needed, it is afforded by his own last will dated 12th January 1912. This document purports to be the 'final and complete' will of the Rai Bahadur and he had made therein detailed disposition of all his moveable and immovable property. But it is significant that in the will there is no reference whatever to the valuable land in the Sargodha Canal Colony. If the Rai Bahadur had not parted with his rights in the land, it cannot be believed for a moment that he would have omitted to mention it in the will. The obvious explanation of the omission seems to be that the Rai Bahadur having transferred the squares to his grandson years ago and the transfer having been given effect to in the Government records and acted upon, he did not even think of referring to it. The transfer had been apparently taken as a settled fact in the family and on the basis of it Narain Das had also transferred his own squares to his younger son. The plaintiff and other sons of the Rai Bahadur had no right whatever to the land under Act 3 of 1893, which was still in force, and the Rai Bahadur could not have even anticipated any possibility of the transfer being questioned by them after the lapse of so many years. But it so happened that just about a month before the Rai Bahadur's death, Act 3 of 1893 was repealed and Act 5 of 1912 came into force. Under the latter Act, the rule of promogeniture was done away with and taking advantage of this fact, the plaintiff seems to have been tempted to set up a claim, which he must have known to be utterly baseless and unjustifiable.

I, therefore, see no hesitation in holding that the land in dispute was actually transferred by Rai Bahadur Gopal Das to defendant 1. The next question for consideration is whether the transfer was valid in law. Narinjan Das defendant when examined as a witness, deposed that the transfer of the land took place on the very day on which the application for permission to transfer was made to the Financial Commissioner i. e., on 8th November 1905. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that as no "previous consent in writing" of the Financial Commissioner was obtained as required by S. 8, Act 3 of 1893, the transfer was void ab initio. Reliance has been placed in this connexion on Vir Singh v. Kala Singh (13) a ruling of the Financial Commissioner, Punjab. That ruling dissents from a ruling of the Punjab Chief Court, in which it was held that a transfer without the written consent of the Financial Commissioner was binding on the parties concerned although it could be avoided by the Government : vide Hussain Khan v. Jahan Khan (14).

In Hussain Khan v. Jahan Khan (14), it was held that the written consent of the Financial Commissioner under S. 8, Act 3 of 1893, was only intended to safeguard the interest of Government as a landlord and that the absence of the written consent of the Financial Commissioner rendered a transfer voidable at the option of Government but not void. In Vir Singh v. Kala Singh (13) on the other hand it was held that a transfer without such consent in writing was void ab initio. In Ganda Singh v. Bata Singh (15), a Division Bench of the Chief Court followed Hussain Khan v. Jahan Khan (14) in preference to Vir Singh v. Kala Singh (13) which dissented from it though without discussion of its reasoning. The latter ruling does not appear to have been as yet expressly dissented from in any subsequent ruling of the Chief Court or this Court, but it may be pointed out that there is a significant difference in the language of S. 8, Act 3 of 1893 and that of S. 19, Act 7 of 1912 which corresponds to it. The latter section expressly lays down that a transfer without the consent in writing of the Financial Commissioner shall be void, while no such words are to be found in S. 8, Act 3 of 1893. However, I consider it unnecessary to discuss the above point further as the present case seems to be clearly distinguishable on facts from Vir Singh v. Kala Singh (13). In the latter ruling the consent of the Financial Commissioner for the transfer was never obtained. In the present case the consent was obtained but the contention of the plaintiff is that it did not precede the transfer and hence the transfer was void. I do not think that there is much force in this contention. The application dated 8th November 1905 makes it clear that even if the transfer was actually made on that dateas stated by Narinjan Das, it must be taken to be provisional and subject to the necessary sanction being granted by the Financial Commissioner. Both the transferrer and the transferee were evidently aware of the fact that the Financial Commissioner's consent was necessary and had been applied for and in the circumstances neither of them could have looked upon the transfer as absolute until the Financial Commissioner gave his consent. The transfer of the "abadkari" rights must therefore be deemed to have been completed and become absolute after the necessary sanction of the Financial Commissioner was given. In this view of the matter, it seems to me that there was no infringement of the provisions of S. 8, Act 3 of 1893 and the fransfer was therefore perfectly valid.

No other grounds of appeal have been pressed.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

v.

Mohindar Singh and others—Judgment-debtors—Respondents.

Civil Revn. No. 432 of 1928, Decided on 10th October 1928, from order of Sm. C. C. Judge, Lahore, D/- 14th January 1928.

(a) Civil P. C., Ss. 55 (4)—Surety undertaking to produce judgment-debtor on date fixed must produce even though decree-holder remains absent—Civil P. C., S. 145.

Where a judgment-debtor is arrested in execution of a decree and he furnishes a security bond whereby the surety accepts his liability to pay the decretal amount on his failure to produce the judgment-debtor in the Court on the day fixed by the Court, the liability undertaken by the surety is not contingent upon the decree-holder's appearance in Court. It is the duty of the surety to produce the judgment-debtor on the date fixed even though the decree-holder remains absent, and if he does not do so, he is liable under the surety bond. [P 975 C 2]

(b) Civil P. C., Ss. 55 (4)—Surety becomes liable where judgment-debtor fails to apply for insolvency within time fixed—Civil P. C., S. 145.

When a judgment-debtor is arrested and states that he is applying to be adjudged insolvent and furnishes a security to appear in Court, the liability of the surety is matured if an application for insolvency is not made within the time given by the Court. [P 975 C 1]

Faqir Singh—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—In execution of a decree obtained by the petitioner against Ahmad Din the judgment-debtor was arrested. He stated that he wanted to apply to be adjudicated an insolvent. Consequently on 26th January 1927, a security bond was given by Mohindar Singh, respondent and another undertaking that within a month from that date the judgment-debtor would apply for being adjudicated an insolvent and would appear in Court when directed to do so and that if he did not so apply or the sureties failed to produce him in Court on the date on which the Court directed him to appear then they would be responsible for the entire decretal amount. This security bond was accepted by the Court and an order was passed on 27th January 1927 that the judgment-debtor be handed over to the sureties who should produce him in Court on 28th February 1927. On this last mentioned date neither the sureties nor the judgment-debtor appeared in Court and the execution proceedings were filed in the absence of the decree-holder. Later, an application was made by the decree-holder for the arrest of the judgment-debtor and for the realization of the security from Mohindar Singh, respondent. An objection was taken by the latter that as the decree-holder failed to appear in Court on 28th February 1927, and the execution proceedings, had, therefore, to be filed, he was absolved from liability. This objection has been accepted by the learned Judge, Small Cause Court.

The decree-holder has presented this application for revision. In my opinion having regard to the express terms of the security bond the view of the learned Judge, Small Cause Court, is erroneous. The sureties undertook that the judgment-debtor would appear in Court and that they would produce him on any date fixed by the Court for the purpose; and as the Court directed them to produce the judgment-debtor in Court on 28th February 1927, it was their duty to produce him and the liability undertaken by them under the security bond was not contingent upon the decree-holder's appearance in Court.

It may incidentally be mentioned that the judgment-debtor did not apply to be adjudicated an insolvent. The consequence was that the liability of the sureties matured before the 28th February 1927.

On both these grounds I am of opinion that the sureties were liable to be called upon to pay the decretal amount by virtue of the security bond.

I accept this petition, set aside the order of the Court below, and remanding the case, direct the lower Court to proceed with the execution of the decree in accordance with law. The petitioner will have his costs against the respondents.

Criminal Misc. Case No. 215 of 1928, Decided on 18th October 1928, for transfer of case.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 526—Magistrate making ill-advised remarks about accused's evidence and holding out threats to accused—Transfer should be ordered although trial has reached advanced stage.

If good grounds for a transfer of a criminal case are made out, the Court ought not to refuse it merely because the case has reached an advanced stage or that the transfer may entail expense and trouble to all concerned. [P 976 C 1, 2]

A Magistrate made certain premature and ill-advised remarks regarding the testimony of certain defence witnesses and held out threats to the accused regarding the sentence and the effect of his application for transfer of a case. From all this it appeared that the attitude of the Magistrate towards the accused was hostile to them; and a reasonable apprehension was created in the mind of the accused that he would not get justice from him. The trial of the case, however, was so far advanced that the entire evidence for the prosecution and the defence had been recorded and a date was fixed for the hearing of arguments.

Held : the case was a fit one for ordering a transfer : Misc. Revn. No. 104 of 1924 ; Misc. Cr. Case No. 78 of 1924, Rel. on. [P 977 C 2]

*(b) Criminal P. C., S. 363—It is one thing to record remark about demeanour of witness and quite another to make or record remark or opinion about substance of deposition of witness—S. 363 makes incumbent on Magistrate the former but it does not entitle him to do the latter.

Although S. 363, makes it incumbent on the Magistrate to record remarks, if any, as he may think material respecting the demeanour of a witness whilst under examination, yet it does not entitle him to make or record any remark about the substance of the deposition of that witness. Because the parties are entitled to claim that, unless expressly provided to the contrary by law, the Magistrate shall not prejudice their cases or form an opinion about the respective merits of their cases or about the depositions of the witnesses till they have been fully and finally presented to the Magistrate by counsel, if any, in their concluding arguments and after the entire evidence has been recorded. [P 978 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 526—In dealing with application for transfer Court has to consider not only whether Magistrate's mind is biased but also and mainly whether applicant has justifiable apprehension that he will not get fair trial.

In dealing with an application for transfer what the Court has to consider is not so much the question whether there has been any real bias in the mind of the presiding Judge against the applicant, but it is the question whether by the remarks of the Judge a reasonable apprehension is created in the mind of the applicant that he would not have an impartial trial : A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 361, Foll. [P 978 C 2]

B. R. Puri—for Petitioner.

C. H. Carden Noad—for the Crown.

Order.—These are four applications under S. 526, Criminal P. C., for transfer of criminal cases pending against the applicants under Ss. 420 and 161/109, I. P. C., in the Court of Mr. P. C. David Special Magistrate of Simla and Delhi. The complaints were instituted at the instance of the Finance Department of the Government of India and the trials are so far advanced that the entire evidence for the prosecution and the defence has been recorded and a date is fixed for the hearing of arguments. One, therefore, feels reluctant to order a transfer which might entail considerable expense and trouble to the Crown, the accused and the witnesses. But if good grounds for a transfer are made out, the Court ought not to refuse it merely because the cases have reached an advanced stage or that the transfer may entail expense and trouble to all concerned.

The accused in these cases are G. J. Piper, Sikandar Lal Puri, and Tara Chand. They all alleged that owing to the attitude taken up by the Magistrate with regard to some of their witnesses and the consequent remarks made and the threats held out by him to the witnesses and the accused, they have reason to apprehend that the Magistrate is prejudiced against them and, therefore, that they do not expect justice in his Court. It is alleged that on 15th September 1928 when Kesar Singh, a defence witness was being examined, the Magistrate told him: tum jhuti gawahi de rahe ho (i. e., you are giving false evidence), that on 21st September 1928, the Magistrate took up a very hostile attitude towards Kirpa Singh, a defence witness and, after recording his statement, said to the defence counsel in open Court : "Do'nt you think he is a liar" and addressing the witness said : tum ne bahut zulm kia hai (probably meaning, "you have done a great wrong"); and finally bewaquf ka bachcha tum jhut bolte ho, bhag jao (i. e., son of a fool, you speak falsehood, run away) and then asked Sikandar Lal accused whether he did not realize his stupidity in bringing such witnesses. On the same day it was found that a defence witness, i. e., the Manager Royal Typewriter Co., Delhi, had not been served, therefore the Magistrate addressing Sikandar Lal said :

> If I find you give up the witness afterwards, I can tell you, I shall double your sentence if I find you guilty. I find that the defence has been playing these tactics and I shall certainly take account of this fact when passing orders.

It is alleged that on this threat being held out, the defence abandoned their remaining witnesses. Then on 24th September 1928, the accused informed the Magistrate that he intended to move this Court for the transfer of the cases from his Court and it is alleged that the Magistrate remarked :

> It is most inconvenient for me. You must remember this is a double edged weapon.

It is on these grounds that the accused apprehend that the Magistrate is prejudiced againt them.

Five affidavits have been filed in support of the above allegations. Two are by the accused Sikandar Lal and Piper ; the remaing three are by Jaswant Singh, an employee in the Legislative Department of the Government of India, Muhammad Zia, an employee of the Finance Department of Government of India and Sulakhan Mal Seth, a Government pensioner of Simla respectively. All these affidavits are identical and fully support the allegations of the accused.

The Magistrate has submitted an explanation. With regard to the incident of 15th September 1928 he states that the allegations are not true "as far as I can remember" ; he says that a note on the record must have been made if he had disbelieved the witness and as this has not been done, it is unlikely that he disbelieved him. In view of the unsatisfactory and vague explanation of the Magistrate as to this incident and having regard to the definite allegations made by the five deponents in their affidavits, I must accept the accused's version to be true.

With regard to the incidents of the 21st and the 24th September, the Magistrate admits that in substance he used the words imputed to him, but he states that in the case of Kesar Singh after he had remarked to the defence counsel "I think you will agree with me that the man is a liar" and after having spoken to the accused Sikandar Lal as alleged he called the witness Kirpa Singh before him after the day's proceedings in the case had been finished with a view to consider the question of making a complaint against him for giving false evidence but on being questioned Kirpa Singh asked for forgiveness, it was then that the Magistrate told him that "it was zulm for him to speak a lie in Court" and it was on this occasion that he called Kirpa Singh a bewaquf ka bachcha "for laying himself open to prosecution in this way."

With regard to the incident relating to the Manager of the Royal Typewriter Co., the Magistrate admits that after some preliminary conversation he pointed out to Puri that out of the 28 witnesses named by him in his list he had been giving up from 1 to 8 at each hearing and this might be considered as savouring of deliberate intent to delay and that, if this were found to be so, no Court could overlook such tactics, but would be bound to take such conduct into account in awarding punishment, if it eventually found the accused to be proved guilty even to the extent of doubling the sentence.

The Magistrate says that this was purely an advice given by him for the petitioners' own good.

Now, with regard to what happened on 29th September 1928 the Magistrate admits that he did observe to the defence counsel that "transfer would be a double-edged weapon in this case." He then goes on to explain what he meant by the "transfer being a double-edged weapon."

It would thus appear that, except with regard to the incident relating to Kirpa Singh, there is no substantial difference as to what was said by the Magistrate on the 21st and 24th September. Even with regard to Kirpa Singh the Magistrate merely differs from the accused as to the occasion on which the words complained of were used by him. I will assume that the version of the Magistrate is substantially correct as to these incidents.

The question then is whether the above facts are sufficient to raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that the Magistrate is prejudiced against them. In A. I. R 1928 Lah. 180 (Gopal Singh v. Emperor) a learned Judge in Chambers of this Court transferred a case on the ground that the Magistrate started proceedings against a witness of the accused immediately after his statement had been recorded and before the case against the accused had been concluded with a view to file a complaint for giving false evidence under S. 476, Criminal P. C. It was held that the action of the Magistrate was likely to create an apprehension in the mind of the accused that he had prejudged the case against him as the action under S. 476 amounted to an expression of opinion that the witness had given false evidence. The learned Judge followed a judgment of a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Ghulam Bari Ghazi v. Yar Ali Khan (1) where a case was transferred from the Court of a Magistrate because he had made a remark at the close of the testimony of a witness as follows :

The witness falters and from his demeanour it appears that he has not told the truth.

Before me reference was also made to a judgment of the Patna High Court in Sheodhari Rai v. Jhingur Rai (2) in which a transfer was ordered because in the course of the examination of the prosecution witnesses, the Magistrate trying the case had made observations which went to show that he was not favourable to the prosecution.

(1) Misc. Revn. No. 104 of 1924.
(2) Misc. Criminal No. 78 of 1921.

It is no doubt true as contended by the learned Governmsnt Advocate, who appeared to oppose the application for transfer, that S. 363, Criminal P. C., makes it incumbent on the Magistrate to record remarks, if any, as he may think material respecting the demeanour of a witness whilst under examination, but in my opinion it is quite a different thing to record a remark about the demeanour of the witness and to make or record a remark or opinion about the substance of the deposition of that witness. The parties are entitled to claim that, unless expressely provided to the contrary by law, the Magistrate shall not prejudge their cases or form an opinion about the respective merits of their cases or about the depositions of the witnesses till they have been fully and finally presented to the Magistrate by counsel, if any in their concluding arguments and after the entire evidence has been recorded. Any opinion formed and expressed by the Magistrate at the earlier stage of the case is bound to be prejudicial to the party concerned. Proceedings under S. 476, Criminal P. C., when they relate to the merits of the statement made in Court by a witness, if started before the close of the case are calculated to seriously affect the case of the party who called him, as they are bound to frighten the remaining witnesses who must assume them as an indication of the treatment that they themselves are likely to receive if they make a similar statement in Court.

I have considered the question whether as the learned Government Advocate urged, these were not really ill-advised and premature observations made by the Magistrate without properly weighing their import and therefore they did not represent his finally considered opinion which would be formed after the arguments of counsel have been heard. The remarks were certainly ill-advised and premature, but I am unable to take the view which the learned Government Advocate wishes me to take of these incidents. It was on more than one occasion that the Magistrate expressed his opinion about the testimony of the witnesses. His threat to the accused regarding the sentence and the effect of his application for transfer is an indication of his attitude towards them which at that stage appears to have become hostile. It is hardly necessary for me to observe that the use of the words "bewaquf ka bachcha" to one of the witnesses by the Magistrate is indefensible but that would by itself be no ground for the transfer of the cases. At the same time it must be taken into consideration along with the other incidents.

So that as it may, even if I assumed that the Magistrate's remarks were hasty and did not represent his real and considered opinion of the case of the accused and that his threats about the sentence were not intended to be made seriously and that by describing an application for transfer as a double-edged weapon the Magistrate meant something else than was understood by the accused, though I feel that I would be assuming too much under all the circumstances disclosed, it is not so much the real mind of the Magistrate that determines the question but it is the impression that is reasonably created in the mind of the accused by the remarks and the conduct of the Magistrate In this respect I cannot do better than quote the following remarks from the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in Amar Singh v. Sadhu Singh (3) :

> It is, at the same time clear that in dealing with an application for transfer what the Court has to consider is not merely the question whether there has been any real bias in the mind of the presiding Judge against the applicant, but also the further question, whether incidents may not have happened which though they may be susceptible of explanation and may have happened without there being any real bias in the mind of the Judge, are nevertheless such as are calculated to create in the mind of the applicant a justifiable apprehension that he would not have an impartial trial. As observed by Lush, J., in Sargeant v. Dale (4), the law has regard, not so much perhaps to the motives which might be supposed to bias the Judge, as to the susceptibilities of the litigant-parties. One important object, at all events, is to clear away everything which might engender suspicion and distrust of the tribunal, and so to promote the feeling of confidence in the administration of justice which is essential to social order and security.

Applying the above test to the facts of this case I have no doubt that the accused have a reasonable apprehension that they will not be fairly dealt with by the Magistrate. They are entitled to claim that if they are found guilty they should be punished for the offence committed by them and having regard to all the circumstances under which it was committed, and they are equally entitled to claim that no extraneous considerations such as their conduct of the defence or the application for transfer made by them should weigh with the Magistrate in judging of their guilt or otherwise and in determining the measure of their punishment. Yet this is the threat that they reasonably apprehend has been held out to them by the Magistrate.

(3) A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 361=6 Lah. 396.
(4) [1877] 2 Q. B. D. 558.

The learned Government Advocate commenced his arguments by stating that the attitude of the Magistrate was in fact unduly favourable to the accused and unfavourable to the prosecution, in so much that in recording the statement of some of the defence witnesses the Magistrate scratched out the statement made by them earlier in the cross-examination when such statements had been contradicted by the prosecution by documentary evidence. As an instance of this he read out the statement of a witness who had made a different statement earlier but when the Crown counsel confronted him with some documents he admitted that what he had stated before was stated under some misapprehension. The Magistrate instead of recording his statement as given later, scratched out the earlier statement and substituted therefor the one made later. This of course is an inexcusable irregularity and no Magistrate who knows his work ought to be guilty of it. The learned Government Advocate stated that those concerned with the prosecution of the cases in the Court below were not satisfied with the conduct of the cases by the Magistrate, and that a transfer would be advantageous to the prosecution but he could not ask for one. The result is that before me both the Government Advocate and the counsel for the accused adversely criticized the impartiality of the Magistrate and his grasp of proper procedure and the correct rule of evidence. The cases are important both from the point of view of the prosecution and the accused and it is desirable that they should be heard by a more competent Magistrate in whom both parties have confidence.

I, however, felt reluctant to transfer the cases at this stage, but Mr. E.R. Puri, who appeared for the applicants, stated that if the cases were transferred, his clients would not ask for de novo trials under S. 350, Criminal P, C., but that they would only ask that two witnesses for the defence be examined, i.e., the Manager of the Royal Typewriter Company and one Mr. N. C. Mehta. This would obviate the difficulty that I felt in transferring these cases at this stage The prosecution is not entitled to claim a de novo trial, but a discretion is given to the Magistrate under S. 350 to act either on the evidence recorded by his predecessor or partly recorded by his predecessor and partly by himself.

In view of what I have stated above, I consider that these are cases in which a transfer is desirable in the interests of justice I have considered the question of the place where the cases should now be heard. The Government of India are about to move to Delhi soon. I think it will, under the circumstances, be convenient and less expensive both to the prosecution and the accused if the cases are heard in Delhi. I accordingly withdraw the cases from the Court of Mr. P. C. David, Special Magistrate, and transfer them to the Court of Mr. P.J. Anderson, Additional District Magistrate, Delhi I do not think that there is any question as to the jurisdiction of Mr. P. J. Anderson to try these cases, but if there is any such question, I have no doubt that the Government will issue the necessary notification conferring the requisite powers on him. With the exception of recording the statement of the Manager Royal Typewriter Company and Mr. N. C. Mehta, if the accused so desire, the Magistrate shall not hold de novo trial at their instance. I do not of course wish to fetter the discretion of the Magistrate under S. 350, Criminal P. C., to recall any witness whose evidence which has already been recorded he may find himself unable to follow or whom he may desire to call or recall.

Moti Sagar—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—The petitioner Banwari Lal was a witness in a civil case, and has been fined Rs. 20 for his failure to attend the Court on the date fixed for the recording of his evidence. The relevant facts may be shortly stated: On 6th January 1928, Banwari Lal appeared in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Delhi in compliance with the summons, but it appears that the Court did not record his evidence on that date and adjourned the case to 18th January 1928. On that date, the witness failed to attend the Court, because he missed the train to Delhi by a few minutes and informed the Court of that fact by a telegram. The Subordinate Judge, however, issued a bailable warrant for his attendance on 10th February 1928, and on that date imposed upon him a fine of Rs. 20 for his failure to appear on 18th Jan. 1928.

The learned Judge has purported to act under O. 16, R. 12, Civil P. C., though he does not expressly say so in his order. It is contended by Mr. Moti Sagar that the order was ultra vires because the Court had not first taken action under O. 16, R. 10. A perusal of that rule shows that where a witness has failed to appear in compliance with the summons issued to him, the Court may adopt one of the two alternatives: (a) It may issue a proclamation as prescribed by sub-R. (2), R. 10 or (b) issue a warrant and also make an order for the attachment of the property of the witness, as laid down in sub-R. (3), R. 10.

Now, in this case a warrant was undoubtedly issued: but, as there was no attachment of the property, it is urged that the failure to comply with that requirement of the law deprived the Court of its jurisdiction to impose a fine under R. 12. A judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Ram Gopal v. Secy. of State (1), which has been followed by that Court in Ashutosh Mullick v. Secy. of State (2), no doubt supports this contention; but the contrary view has been taken by the Madras High Court in Narasayya, Peta, In re (3). As at present advised, I am of opinion that the attachment of the property was not a condition precedent to the infliction of the fine under R. 12, but it is unnecssary to make a final pronouncement on the subject because the merits of the case do not warrant the order passed by the Subordinate Judge.

It will be observed that the law punishes a refractory witness who, without lawful excuse, fails to comply with the summons. But in the case before me, the petitioner's failure to attend the Court was due to an accident. There is no reason to disbelieve his version that he missed the train; and could not, therefore, attend the Court on the date fixed. It is to be remembered that he had appeared in the Court on 6th January 1928, and there is no valid ground for assuming that he did not intend to attend the Court on 18 Jan. 1928. I accordingly accept the application and quash the order imposing fine upon the petitioner.

Second Appeal No. 2727 of 1927, Decided on 26th September 1928.

(a) Easement—Obstruction to light and air—Injunction can only be granted when closure amounts to actionable nuisance—Deprivation of light and air must make the living uncomfortable—Easements Act, S. 15.

Injunction for the protection of the easement of light and air can only be granted when their closure amounts to an actionable nuisance. It is not enough that the light has been reduced. There must be a substantial privation of light enough to render the occupation of the house uncomfortable according to the ordinary notions of mankind and (in the case of business premises) to prevent the occupier from carrying on business as beneficially as before. Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores, (1904) A.C. 179; 8 P.R. 1909; 39 Cal. 59; and *A. The existence of other sources of light should be taken into consideration. Colls v. Home

(b) Civil P. C., S. 100—Finding as to privation of light not inconveniencing user so as to entitle him to injunction, is a finding of fact.

The finding that the privation of light has not resulted in any such appreciable inconvenience as would entitle the user of such light to an injunction is a finding of fact and cannot be challenged in second appeal. [P 982 C 1]

(c) *Specific Relief Act, S.*54—Principle of A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 327 is not necessarily restricted to crowded cities.

The principle laid down in A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 327 (i. e, to issue injunction where pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief, is not restricted necessarily to crowded cities. [P 982 C 2]

(d) Specific Relief Act, S. 54 (c)—Court has discretion to grant injunction—Whether pecuniary compensation is an adequate relief is a crucial point.

The crucial point for determination whether injunction should be granted or not is whether pecuniary compensation would afford adequate relief. Granting of an injunction is discretionary with the Court. [P 982 C 2]

Judgment.—This is a second appeal arising out of a suit for injunction to restrain the defendants from closing up a window (marked A) and ventilators marked "B" and "C" in the southern wall of the second storey of the plaintiff's house. Both the Courts below have concurred in finding that the window and the ventilators had been in existence for over 20 years before the suit and that the plaintiff had acquired a right of easement in respect of them. They have also concurred in finding that the rooms in which the window A and the ventilator "C" are situated are otherwise sufficiently well-lighted and that the plaintiff had not suffered any such appreciable inconvenience as would entitle him to an injunction. As regards the ventilator "B" it has been found that the room in which it is situated has not the advantage of other good sources of light and that the obstruction of this ventilator by the wall erected by the defendant has reduced the light and air in the room so as to make it uncomfortable and dark. The trial Court gave an injunction in respect of this wall. The lower appellate Court, however, following the principle laid down in Mahomed Auzam Ismail v. Jagannath Jamnadas (1), held that award of damages would sufficiently meet the ends of justice and granted plaintiff only a decree for Rs. 250 as damages in lieu of the injunction granted by the trial Court. From this decision plaintiff has appealed and the defendant has filed cross-objections.

The main contentions of the learned counsel for the appellant are as follows:

(1) The Courts below having found that the plaintiff has a right of easement should have granted a decree for injunction in respect of the window as well as the ventilators; (2) The finding of the trial Court as regards the rooms in which the widow A and the ventilator "C" are situated being otherwise well-lighted is vague and that of the lower appellate Court is based on no evidence and is also erroneous according to law; (3) The principle laid down in I.L.R. 3 Rangoon 230 was not applicable to the facts of this case; (4) The damages granted have been arbitrarily assessed and are inadequate.

As regards the first point there seems to be no doubt in view of the principles laid down in the leading English case Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores (2), which have been followed in this country: cf. Vir Bhan v. Ramji Das (3), P. C. Paul v. William Robson (4), and P. C. Ernest Paul v. William Robson (5), that the plaintiff could not be held to be entitled to the injunction prayed for unless the closure of the window and ventilator amounted to an actionable nuisance. It is not enough that the light has been reduced. There must be a substantial privation of light enough to render occupation of the house uncomfortable according to the ordinary notions of mankind and (in the case of the business premises) to prevent the plaintiff from carrying on his business as beneficially as before. In the present case the house in question is used only for residential purposes and both the Courts below have held as regards window A and ventilator "C" that the privation of light has not resulted in any such appreciable inconvenience as would entitle the plaintiff to an injunction. This is a finding of fact and is really not open to challenge in second appeal. But it has been urged that the finding of the trial Court is of an indefinite character and that of the lower appellate Court is based on no evidence. The trial Court's finding is not perhaps as definite as it might have been, but that is not a matter of much importance in view of the fact that the lower appellate Court's finding is definite. The contention that it is based on "no evidence" cannot be upheld. The plan on which the lower appellate Court has relied was certainly a piece of evidence in the case. It shows that the rooms in which the window and ventilators are situated have other sources of light and the lower appellate Court was entitled to take this fact into consideration in coming to a decision as to whether the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction prayed for. It has not been shown that there was other evidence of much importance. The existence of other sources of light is not denied. It has been urged that the light available through other sources cannot be taken into consideration at all. But this contention does not seem to be correct: cf. Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores (2) and Dhunjibhoy Cowasji v. Lisboa (6).

Finally it was urged that the lower appellate Court has erred in law in not considering the question whether the plaintiff has acquired a prescriptive right of easement in respect of the other sources of light, or whether they are liable to be closed at the option of his neighbours. But the plaintiff has in his statement dated 14th May 1926 clearly stated that he has acquired such a right and that none of his neighbours could close his windows or ventilators. I, therefore, do not see sufficient justification in the circumstances of the case to interfere with the finding of fact arrived at by the lower appellate Court.

As regards the ventilator "C", it is true that the case reported in Mahomed Auzam Ismail v. Jagannath Jamnadas (1) relates to a crowded city like Rangoon but I do not think the principle is necessarily restricted to crowded cities.

It has been pointed out in Dhunjibhoy Cowasji v. Lisboa (6) that in this country the grant of injunction in such matters is governed by S. 54, Specific Relief Act, and according to that section a Court may grant an injunction only when pecuniary compensation would not afford adequate relief vide Cl (c) of that section. The crucial point for consideration therefore is whether in the present instance pecuniary compensation will afford adequate relief. In the present case the room in which the ventilator "B" is situated has already another source of light and air. The lower appellate Court has assessed compensation on the assumption that by making structural alterations it will be possible to improve the light further. It was urged in the memo of appeal that it is impossible to make any such alterations, but the point was not pressed in arguments. Besides, it seems from the plan that a portion of this room adjoins an open space and it should be easy enough to construct one or two windows on that side at a moderate cost. In these circumstances I do not see why pecuniary compensation should not be held to afford "adequate relief". It will certainly give plaintiff a chance of improving the light in the room if he cares to do so. In any case, the grant of an injunction being discretionary, the Court is, I think, entitled to take this aspect of the matter into consideration in deciding whether an injunction should issue.

The lower appellate Court has not given any reasons for assessing the compensation at Rs. 250. Apparently no suggestion on this point was made by the parties in that Court and none has been made before me. The assessment of damages in a case of this kind cannot be very exact and a remand at this stage is not likely to serve any useful purpose. The circumstances of the case do not appear to require the award of any heavy damages. It seems easy enough for the plaintiff as stated above to construct one or two windows at a moderate cost in the room so as to provide more air and light for it. I do not consider the amount fixed viz. Rs 250 to be unreasonable or inadequate.

The cross objections filed by the respondents have not been pressed. I dismiss the appeal as well as the cross-objections, but in view of all the circumstances leave the parties to bear their costs.

Second Appeal No. 2846 of 1926, Decided on 13th February 1928.

Judgment.—The following pedigree table is necessary for the appeal:

Mt. Bishni	Mt. Manti	Mt. Bisanti	Labhu
|	Deft. 3	Deft. 2	m. Mt. Dhan Kaur Deft. 1

			Shaman deceased.

The land in dispute was gifted to Mt. Bhagan by her brothers. On the death of her grandson Sahib Ditta it came to Labhu, his only son, to the exclusion of Labhu's three sisters. On Labhu's death it went to his son Shaman. On Shaman's death it was mutated in favour of Shaman's mother, Mt. Dhan Kaur. Thereupon the reversioners, that is, the descendants of the donors, brought a suit for possession of the land against Mt. Dhan Kaur on the ground that she was not entitled to it, having remarried many years before. They failed in their suit because of the existence of Labhu's sisters who were held to be the heirs. Thereupon the present plaintiff Arjan Singh, son of one of the sisters, brought the present suit against Mt. Dhan Kaur for possession of one-third of the land on the ground that she had no right to it as she had remarried long before the death of her son Shaman. The other two sisters of Labhu were impleaded as defendants and supported the plaintiff though they did not themselves sue for possession of their two-thirds share. The Courts below have concurred in decreeing the plaintiff's suit. The District Judge has given a certificate on the following question of custom, namely, whether the mother of the last male proprietor among Jats forfeits her right of succession by her remarriage (prior to the succession opening out) and is excluded from succession by her deceased husband's sister's son. On this certificate this second appeal has been admitted.

A preliminary objection was taken that the appeal was incompetent because in the certificate the words "conflicting and" had been deleted. S. 41 (3), Punjab Courts Act, however, is only to the effect that no second appeal shall lie regarding the validity or existence of any custom or usage unless the Judge of the lower appellate Court has certified that the custom or usage is of sufficient importance and that the evidence regarding it is so conflicting or uncertain that there is such substantial doubt regarding its validity or existence as to justify such appeal. The words as printed in the certificate are "so conflicting and uncertain." This is a mistake. "Or" should have been written instead of "and." The District Judge was, therefore, competent to delete the words "conflicting and" and to grant the certificate that the evidence regarding it was so uncertain, etc. I overrule this preliminary objection.

There is no doubt that if Mt. Dhan Kaur had not remarried before the death of her son she would have been entitled to succeed. There is also no doubt that if Mt. Dhan Kaur is not entitled to succeed then the plaintiff is entitled to possession of one-third and his two aunts to possession of two-thirds. This is because of the well-known principle that there is no reversion to the collaterals of the donor so long as the descendants of the donee, whether in the male or female line, are existing: see Tara v. Tara Chand (1) and Lachhman v. Bhagwan Sahai (2). The real question, therefore, is whether Mt. Dhan Kaur who remarried immediately after Labhu's death long before the death of her son Shaman was entitled to succeed Shaman.

(2) [1911] 68 P. R. 1911=160 P. L. R. 1911=10 I. C. 277=203 P. W. R. 1911.

A Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court held in Mt. Desi v. Lehna Singh (3) that according to custom the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed as mother but as the widow of her husband and further according to custom she was no longer the widow of the father of the deceased as she had remarried before the death of her son and therefore she had no title to the estate in dispute against the reversioners. In the present case the plaintiff is in the same position as a reversioner on account of the special custom of succession regarding gifted land. Before this it had been held in Jai Devi v. Harnam Singh (4) that among Sus Jats of Hoshiarpur by custom a mother is excluded from succession to her son's estate when she has contracted a second marriage before her son's death. In that case no instances could be given on either side but there was oral evidence to that effect. In the case before me there is no oral evidence. In Harnam Singh v. Mohan Kuar (5), a Division Bench of the Punjab Chief Court held, following the last two mentioned rulings, that among Hindu Sikh jats of Ferozepore District a widow having remarried her husband's brother no longer remained the widow of her first husband and consequently after the death without issue of her husband's son she could not succeed to a life interest in her deceased husband's estate in preference to his brother who was the next heir. The principle was again ennunciated that a widow having remarried no longer remains the widow of her first husband. The cases deciding whether or not a widow forfeits her estate upon remarriage after having succeeded to the estate are not in point and need not be referred to.

According to para. 22 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law, the rule is that in default of a male lineal descendant and of a widow the mother of the deceased succeeds to a life interest provided she has not remarried. This general rule of custom is, therefore, in favour of the plaintiff. In remark (1) under para. 22 it is said that she succeeds as the widow of her son's father. In Bissi v. Hira Singh (6) a Division Bench held that the weight of authority was largely in favour of the view that the presumption was that the mother succeeded as widow of her husband and that it was for her to prove that she succeeded as mother of her son. That was a case where the mother remarried after succeeding to the estate but it is important in view of the principle stated above.

For these authorities it follows that the mother succeeds as widow of her deceased husband and not as mother of her son. It cannot be said that a widow who has remarried before the death of her son is any longer the widow of her deceased husband. For this reason in my opinion it must be held that she is not an heir entitled to succeed upon the death of her son. The result is that the plaintiff is heir to one-third and his suit was properly decreed.

The answer to question 42 of the Customary Law of the Ludhiana District is that marriage whether in the family or to a stranger destroys the right of the widow over her first husband's estate, while the answer to question 48 is that the mother has the same rights as the widow I think that the only possible interpretation of this statement of custom is that the mother succeeds as the widow of her first husband and that by remarriage she loses all rights of succession to him. The Customary Law of the Ludhiana District is, therefore, in favour of the view I have taken above.

It was contended on behalf of the appellant that it was for the plaintiff to prove that her remarriage deprived the mother (or widow) of any future rights of inheritance to which she would have been entitled but for such remarriage. It is clear that under Hindu Law a widow who has remarried is not debarred from succeeding to the estate of her son by her first husband. It was further contended that, as a custom to the contrary had not been made out in the present case, Hindu Law should be followed and the suit of the plaintiff dismissed. I have already held that the statement of custom given in the riwaj-i-am of the district is evidence that the mother cannot succeed if she has remarried, and this is also the general rule of custom throughout the province. The contesting defendant, therefore, cannot be allowed to fall back upon Hindu Law.

For the reasons given I dismiss this appeal with costs.
